Tandem quietem magnus excussit timor;
quatit ora et artus horridus nostros tremor 735
pulsatque pectus; continet uocem timor, quam nunc fides pietasque produxit tua.

I.

1. Nisi te, Marcia, scirem tam longe ab infirmitate muliebris animi quam a ceteris uitiiis recessisse et mores tuos uelut aliquod antiquum exemplar aspici, non auderem obuiam ire dolori tuo, cui uiri quoque libenter haerent et incubant, nec spem concepissem tam iniquo tempore, tam inimico iudice, tam inuidioso crimine posse me efficere ut fortunam tuam absolueres. Fiduciam mihi dedit exploratum iam robur animi et magno experimento adprobata uirtus tua.

2. Non est ignotum qualem te in persona patris tui gesseris, quem non minus quam liberos dilexisti, excepto eo quod non optabas superstitem. Nec scio an et optaueris; permittit enim sibi quaedam contra bonum morem magna pietas. Mortem A. Cremuti Cordi parentis tui quantum poteras inhibuisti; postquam tibi apparuit inter Seianianos satellites illam unam patere seruitutis fugam, non fauisti consilio eius, sed dedisti manus uicta, fudistique lacrimas palam et gemitus deuorasti quidem, non tamen hilari fronte texisti, et haec illo saeculo quo magna pietas erat nihil impie facere. 3. Vt uero aliquam occasionem mutatio temporum dedit, ingenium patris tui, de quo sumptum erat supplicium, in usum hominum reduxisti et a uera illum uindicasti morte ac restituisti in publica monumenta libros quos uir ille fortissimus sanguine suo scripserat. Optime meruisti de Romanis studiis: magna illorum pars arserat; optime de posteris, ad quos ueniet incorrupta rerum fides, auctori suo magno inputata; optime de ipso, cuius uiget uigebitque memoria quam diu in pretio fuerit Romana cognosci, quam diu quisquam erit qui reuerti uelit ad acta maiorum, quam diu quisquam qui uelit scire quid sit uir Romanus, quid subactis iam ceruicibus omnium et ad Seianianum iugum adactis indomitus, quid sit homo ingenio animo manu liber. 4. Magnum mehercules detrimentum res publica ceperat, si illum ob duas res pulcherrimas in obliuionem coniectum, eloquentiam et libertatem, non eruisses: legitur, floret, in manus hominum, in pectora receptus uetustatem nullam timet; at illorum carnificum cito scelera quoque, quibus solis memoriam meruerunt, tacebuntur.

5. Haec magnitudo animi tui uetuit me ad sexum tuum respicere, uetuit ad uultum, quem tot annorum continua tristitia, ut semel obduxit, tenet. Et uide quam non subrepam tibi nec furtum facere adfectibus tuis cogitem: antiqua mala in memoriam reduxi et, ut scires hanc quoque plagam esse sanandam, ostendi tibi aequae magni uulneris cicatricem. Alii itaque molliter agant et blandiantur, ego configere cum tuo maerore constitui et defessos exhaustosque oculos, si uerum uis magis iam ex consuetudine quam ex desiderio fluentis, continebo, si fieri potuerit, fauente te remediis tuis, si minus, uel inuita, teneas licet et amplexeris dolorem tuum, quem tibi in filii locum superstitem fecisti. 6. Quis enim erit finis? Omnia in superuacuum temptata sunt: fatigatae adlocutiones amicorum, auctoritates magnorum et adfinium tibi uirorum; studia, hereditarium et paternum bonum, surdas aures inrito et uix ad breuem occupationem proficiente solacio transeunt; illud ipsum naturale remedium temporis, quod maximas quoque aerumnas componit, in te una uim suam perdidit. 7. Tertius iam praeterit annus, cum interim nihil ex primo illo impetu cecidit: renouat se et corroborat cotidie luctus et iam sibi ius mora fecit eoque adductus est ut putet turpe desinere. Quemadmodum omnia uitia penitus insidunt nisi dum surgunt oppressa sunt, ita haec quoque tristitia et misera et in se saeuientia ipsa nouissime acerbitate pascuntur et fit infelicis animi praua uoluptas dolor. 8. Cupissem itaque primis temporibus ad istam curationem accedere; leniore medicina fuisset oriens adhuc restringenda uis: uehementius contra inueterata pugnandum est. Nam uulnere quoque sanitas facilis est, dum a sanguine recentia sunt: tunc et uruntur et in altum reuocantur et digitos scrutantium recipiunt, ubi corrupta in malum ulcus uerterunt. Non possum nunc per obsequium nec molliter adgredi tam durum dolorem: frangendus est.

II.

1. Scio a praeceptis incipere omnis qui monere aliquem uolunt, in exemplis desinere. Mutari hunc interim morem expedit; aliter enim cum alio agendum est: quosdam ratio ducit, quibusdam nomina clara opponenda sunt et auctoritas quae liberum non relinquat animum ad speciosa stupentibus. 2. Duo tibi ponam ante oculos maxima et sexus et saeculi tui exempla: alterius feminae quae se tradidit ferendam dolori, alterius quae pari adfecta casu, maiore damno, non tamen dedit longum in se malis suis dominium, sed cito animum in sedem suam reposuit. 3. Octauia et Liuia, altera soror Augusti, altera uxor, amiserunt filios iuuenes, utraque spe futuri principis certa: Octauia Marcellum, cui et auunculus et socer incumbere coeperat, in quem onus imperii reclinare, adulescentem animo alacrem, ingenio potentem, sed frugalitatis continentiaeque in illis aut annis aut opibus non mediocriter admirandae, patientem laborum, uoluptatibus alienum, quantumcumque inponere illi auunculus et, ut ita dicam, inaedicare uoluisset laturum; bene legerat nulli cessura ponderi fundamenta. 4. Nullum finem per omne uitae suae tempus flendi gemendique fecit nec ullas admisit uoces salutare aliquid adferentis, ne auocari quidem se passa est; intenta in unam rem et toto animo adfixa, talis per omnem uitam fuit qualis in funere, non dico non [est] ausa consurgere, sed adleuari recusans, secundam orbitatem iudicans lacrimas mittere. 5. Nullam habere imaginem filii carissimi uoluit, nullam sibi de illo fieri mentionem. Oderat omnes matres et in Liuiam maxime furebat, quia uidebatur ad illius filium transisse sibi promissa felicitas. Tenebris et solitudini familiarissima, ne ad fratrem quidem respiciens, carmina celebrandae Marcelli memoriae composita aliosque studiorum honores reiecit et aures suas aduersus omne solacium clusit. A sollemnibus officiis seducta et ipsam magnitudinis fraternae nimis circumlucentem fortunam exosa defodit se et abdidit. Adsidentibus liberis, nepotibus lugubrem uestem non deposuit, non sine contumelia omnium suorum, quibus saluis orba sibi uidebatur.

III.

1. Liuia amiserat filium Drusum, magnum futurum principem, iam magnum ducem; intrauerat penitus Germaniam et ibi signa Romana fixerat ubi uix ullos esse Romanos notum erat. In expeditione decesserat ipsis illum hostibus aegrum cum ueneratione et pace mutua prosequentibus nec optare quod expediebat audentibus. Accedebat ad hanc mortem, quam ille pro re publica obierat, ingens ciuium prouinciarumque et totius Italiae desiderium, per quam effusis in officium lugubre municipiis coloniisque usque in urbem ductum erat funus triumpho simillimum. 2. Non licuerat matri ultima filii oscula gratumque extremi sermonem oris haurire; longo itinere reliquias Drusi sui prosecuta, tot per omnem Italiam ardentibus rogis, quasi totiens illum amitteret, inritata, ut primum tamen intulit tumulto, simul et illum et dolorem suum posuit, nec plus doluit quam aut honestum erat Caesare aut aequum saluo. Non desiit denique Drusi sui celebrare nomen, ubique illum sibi priuatim publiceque repraesentare, libentissime de illo loqui, de illo audire: cum memoria illius uixit, quam nemo potest retinere et frequentare qui illam tristem sibi reddidit.

3. Elige itaque utrum exemplum putes probabilius. Si illud prius sequi uis, eximes te numero uiuorum: auersaberis et alienos liberos et tuos ipsumque quem desideras; triste matribus omen occurreres; uoluptates honestas, permissas, tamquam parum decoras fortunae tuae reicies; inuisa haerebis in luce et aetati tuae, quod non praecipitet te quam primum et finiat, infestissima eris; quod turpissimum alienissimumque est animo tuo in meliorem noto partem, ostendes te uiuere nolle, mori non posse. 4. Si ad hoc maximae feminae te exemplum adplicueris moderatius, mitius, non eris in aerumnis nec te tormentis macerabis: quae enim, malum, amentia est poenas a se infelicitatis exigere et mala sua ~non~ augere! Quam in omni uita seruasti morum probitatem et uerecundiam, in hac quoque re praestabis; est enim quaedam et dolendi modestia. Illum ipsum iuuenem, dignissimum qui te laetam semper nominatus cogitatusque faciat, meliore pones loco, si matri suae, qualis uiuus solebat, hilarisque et cum gaudio occurrit.

IV.

1. Nec te ad fortiora ducam praecepta, ut inhumano ferre humana iubeam modo, ut ipso funebri die oculos matris exsiccem. Ad arbitrium tecum ueniam: hoc inter nos quaeretur, utrum magnus dolor esse debeat an perpetuus. 2. Non dubito quin Iuliae Augustae, quam familiariter coluisti, magis tibi placeat exemplum: illa te ad suum consilium uocat. Illa in primo feruore, cum maxime impatientes ferocesque sunt miseriae, consolandam se Areo, philosopho uiri sui, praebuit et multum eam rem profuisse sibi confessa est, plus quam populum Romanum, quem nolebat tristem tristitia sua facere, plus quam Augustum, qui subducto altero adminiculo titubabat nec luctu suorum inclinandus erat, plus quam Tiberium filium, cuius pietas efficiebat ut in illo acerbo et defleto gentibus funere nihil sibi nisi numerum deesse sentiret. 3. Hic, ut opinor, aditus illi fuit, hoc principium apud feminam opinionis suae custodem diligentissimam: ‘usque in hunc diem, Iulia, quantum quidem ego sciam, adsiduus uiri tui comes, cui non tantum quae in publicum emittuntur nota, sed omnes sunt secretiores animorum uestrorum motus, dedisti operam ne quid esset quod in te quisquam reprobaret; nec id in maioribus modo obseruasti, sed in minimis, ne quid faceres cui famam, liberrimam principum iudicem, uelles ignoscere. 4. Nec quicquam pulchrius existimo quam in summo fastigio conlocatos multarum rerum ueniam dare, nullius petere; seruandus itaque tibi in hac quoque re tuus mos est, ne quid committas quod minus aliterue factum uelis.

V.

1. Deinde oro atque obsecro ne te difficilem amicis et intractabilem praestes. Non est enim quod ignores omnes hos nescire quemadmodum se gerant, loquantur aliquid coram te de Druso an nihil, ne aut obliuio clarissimi iuuenis illi faciat iniuriam aut mentio tibi. 2. Cum secessimus et in unum conuenimus, facta eius dictaque quanto meruit suspectu celebramus; coram te altum nobis de illo silentium est. Cares itaque maxima uoluptate, filii tui laudibus, quas non dubito quin uel inpendio uitae, si potestas detur, in aeuum omne sis prorogatura. 3. Quare patere, immo arcesse sermones quibus ille narretur, et apertas aures praebe ad nomen memoriamque filii tui; nec hoc graue duxeris ceterorum more, qui in eiusmodi casu partem mali putant audire solacia. 4. Nunc incubuisti tota in alteram partem et oblita meliorum fortunam tuam qua deterior est aspicias. Non conuertis te ad conuictus filii tui occursusque iucundos, non ad pueriles dulcesque blanditias, non ad incrementa studiorum: ultimam illam faciem rerum premis; in illam, quasi parum ipsa per se horrida sit, quidquid potes congeris. Ne, obsecro te, concupieris peruersissimam gloriam, infelicissima uideri. 5. Simul cogita non esse magnum rebus prosperis fortem se gerere, ubi secundo cursu uita procedit: ne gubernatoris quidem artem tranquillum mare et obsequens uentus ostendit, aduersi aliquid incurrat oportet quod animum probet. 6. Proinde ne summiseris te, immo contra fige stabilem gradum et quidquid onerum supra cecidit sustine, primo dumtaxat strepitu conterrita. Nulla re maior inuidia fortunae fit quam aequo animo.’ Post haec ostendit illi filium incolumem, ostendit ex amisso nepotes.

VI.

1. Tuum illic, Marcia, negotium actum, tibi Areus adsedit; muta personam — te consolatus est. Sed puta, Marcia, ereptum tibi amplius quam ulla umquam mater amiserit — non permulceo te nec extenuo calamitatem tuam: si fletibus fata uincuntur, conferamus; 2. eat omnis inter luctus dies, noctem sine somno tristitia consumat; ingerantur lacerato pectori manus et in ipsam faciem impetus fiat atque omni se genere saeuitiae profecturus maeror exerceat. Sed si nullis planctibus defuncta reuocantur, si sors inmotā et in aeternum fixa nulla miseria mutatur et mors tenuit quidquid abstulit, desinat dolor qui perit. 3. Quare regamur nec nos ista uis transuersos auferat. Turpis est nauigii rector cui gubernacula fluctus eripuit, qui fluuitantia uela deseruit, permisit tempestati ratem; at ille uel in naufragio laudandus quem obruit mare clauum tenentem et obnixum.

VII.

1. 'At enim naturale desiderium suorum est.' Quis negat, quam diu modicum est? Nam discessu, non solum amissione carissimorum necessarius morsus est et firmissimorum quoque animorum contractio. Sed plus est quod opinio adicit quam quod natura imperauit. 2. Aspice mutorum animalium quam concitata sint desideria et tamen quam breuia: uaccarum uno die alteroue mugitus auditur, nec diutius equarum uagus ille amensque discursus est; ferae cum uestigia catulorum consecratae sunt et siluas peruagatae, cum saepe ad cubilia expilata redierunt, rabiem intra exiguum tempus extinguunt; aues cum stridore magno inanes nidos circumfremuerunt, intra momentum tamen quietae uolatus suos repetunt; nec ulli animali longum fetus sui desiderium est nisi homini, qui adest dolori suo nec tantum quantum sentit sed quantum constituit adficitur.

3. Vt scias autem non esse hoc naturale, luctibus frangi, primum magis feminas quam uiros, magis barbaros quam placidae eruditaeque gentis homines, magis indoctos quam doctos eadem orbitas uulnerat. Atqui quae a natura uim acceperunt eandem in omnibus seruant: apparet non esse naturale quod uarium est. 4. Ignis omnes aetates omniumque urbium ciues, tam uiros quam feminas uret; ferrum in omni corpore exhibebit secandi potentiam. Quare? quia uires illis a natura datae sunt, quae nihil in personam constituit. Paupertatem luctum ambitionem alius aliter sentit prout illum consuetudo infecit, et inbecillum inpatientemque reddit praesumpta opinio de non timendis terribilis.

VIII.

1. Deinde quod naturale est non decrescit mora: dolorem dies longa consumit. Licet contumacissimum, cotidie insurgentem et contra remedia efferuescentem, tamen illum efficacissimum mitigandae ferociae tempus eneruat. 2. Manet quidem tibi, Marcia, etiamnunc ingens tristitia et iam uidetur duxisse callum, non illa concitata qualis initio fuit, sed pertinax et obstinata; tamen hanc quoque tibi aetas minutatim eximet: quotiens aliud egeris, animus relaxabitur. 3. Nunc te ipsa custodis; multum autem interest utrum tibi permittas maerere an imperes. Quanto magis hoc morum tuorum elegantiae conuenit, finem luctus potius facere quam expectare, nec illum opperiri diem quo te inuita dolor desinat! ipsa illi renuntia.

IX.

1. 'Vnde ergo tanta nobis pertinacia in deploratione nostri, si id non fit naturae iussu?' Quod nihil nobis mali antequam eueniat proponimus, sed ut immunes ipsi et aliis pacatius ingressi iter alienis non admonemur casibus illos esse communes. 2. Tot praeter domum nostram ducuntur exequiae: de morte non cogitamus; tot acerba funera: nos togam nostrorum infantium, nos militiam et paternae hereditatis successionem agitamus animo; tot diuitum subita paupertas in oculos incidit: et nobis numquam in mentem uenit nostras quoque opes aequae in lubrico positae. Necesse est itaque magis corruamus: quasi ex inopinato ferimur; quae multo ante prouisa sunt languidius incurrunt. 3. Vis tu scire te ad omnis expositum ictus stare et illa quae alios tela fixerunt circa te uibrasse? Velut murum aliquem aut obsessum multo hoste locum et arduum ascensu semermis adeas, expecta uulnus et illa superne uolantia cum sagittis pilisque saxa in tuum puta librata corpus. Quotiens aliquis ad latus aut pone tergum ceciderit, exclama: 'non decipies me, fortuna, nec securum aut neglegentem opprimes. Scio quid pares: alium quidem percussisti, sed me petisti. 4. Quis umquam res suas quasi periturus aspexit? Quis umquam uestrum de exilio, de egestate, de luctu cogitare ausus est? Quis non, si admoneatur ut cogitet, tamquam dirum omen respuat et in capita inimicorum aut ipsius intempestiui monitoris abire illa iubeat? 'Non putauit futurum.' 5. Quicquam tu putas non futurum quod [multis] scis posse fieri, quod multis uides euenisse? Egregium uersum et dignum qui non e pulpito exiret:

Ille amisit liberos: et tu amittere potes; ille damnatus est: et tua innocentia sub ictu est. Error decipit hic, effeminat, dum patimur quae numquam pati nos posse prouidimus. Aufert uim praesentibus malis qui futura prospexit.

1. Quidquid est hoc, Marcia, quod circa nos ex aduenticio fulget, liberi honores opes, ampla atria et exclusorum clientium turba referta uestibula, clarum <nomen>, nobilis aut formosa coniux ceteraque ex incerta et mobili sorte pendentia alieni commodatique apparatus sunt; nihil horum dono datur. Conlaticiis et ad dominos redituris instrumentis scaena adornatur; alia ex his primo die, alia secundo referentur, pauca usque ad finem perseuerabunt. 2. Itaque non est quod nos suspiciamus tamquam inter nostra positi: mutua accepimus. Vsus fructusque noster est, cuius tempus ille arbiter muneris sui temperat; nos oportet in promptu habere quae in incertum diem data sunt et appellatos sine querella reddere: pessimi debitoris est creditori facere conuicium. 3. Omnes ergo nostros, et quos superstitibus lege nascendi optamus et quos praecedere iustissimum ipsorum uotum est, sic amare debemus tamquam nihil nobis de perpetuitate, immo nihil de diuturnitate eorum promissum sit. Saepe admonendus est animus, amet ut recessura, immo tamquam recedentia: quidquid a fortuna datum est, tamquam exempto auctore possideas. 4. Rapite ex liberis uoluptates, fruendos uos in uicem liberis date et sine dilatione omne gaudium haurite: nihil de hodierna nocte promittitur — nimis magnam aduocationem dedi — nihil de hac hora. Festinandum est, instatur a tergo: iam disicietur iste comitatus, iam contubernia ista sublato clamore soluentur. Rapina rerum omnium est: miseri nescitis in fuga uiuere.

5. Si mortuum tibi filium doles, eius temporis quo natus est crimen est; mors enim illi denuntiata nascenti est; in hanc legem genitus <est>, hoc illum fatum ab utero statim prosequabatur. 6. In regnum fortunae et quidem durum atque inuictum peruenimus, illius arbitrio digna atque indigna passuri. Corporibus nostris inpotenter contumeliose crudeliter abutetur: alios ignibus peruret uel in poenam admotis uel in remedium; alios uinciet — id nunc hosti licebit, nunc cui; alios per incerta nudos maria iactabit et luctatos cum fluctibus ne in harenam quidem aut litus explodet, sed in alicuius immensae uentrem beluae decondet; alios morborum uariis generibus emaceratos diu inter uitam mortemque medios detinebit. Vt uaria et libidinosa mancipiorumque suorum neglegens domina et poenis et muneribus errabit.

XI.

1. Quid opus est partes deflere? tota flebilis uita est: urgebunt noua incommoda, priusquam ueteribus satis feceris. Moderandum est itaque uobis maxime, quae inmoderate fertis, et in multos dolores humani pectoris <uis> dispensanda. Quae deinde ista suae publicaeque condicionis obliuio est? Mortalis nata es mortalesque peperisti: putre ipsa fluidumque corpus et causis [morbos] repetita sperasti tam inbecilla materia solida et aeterna gestasse? 2. Decessit filius tuus, id est decucurrit ad hunc finem ad quem quae feliciora partu tuo putas properant. Hoc omnis ista quae in foro litigat, in theatris <plaudit>, in templis precatur turba dispari gradu uadit: et quae diligis, ueneraris et quae despicias unus exaequabit cinis. 3. Hoc uidelicet * * * illa Pythicis oraculis adscripta <uox>: nosce te. Quid est homo? quolibet quassu uas et quolibet fragile iactatu. Non tempestate magna ut dissiperis opus est: ubicumque arietaueris, solueris. Quid est homo? inbecillum corpus et fragile, nudum, suapte natura inerme, alienae opis indigens, ad omnis fortunae contumelias proiectum, cum bene lacertos exercuit, cuiuslibet ferae pabulum, cuiuslibet uictima; ex infirmis fluidisque contextum et lineamentis exterioribus nitidum, frigoris aestus laboris inpatiens, ipso rursus situ et otio iturum in tabem, alimenta metuens sua, quorum modo inopia <deficit, modo copia> rumpitur; anxiae sollicitaeque tutelae, precarii spiritus et male haerentis, quod pauor repentinus aut auditus ex inproviso sonus auribus grauis excutit, sollicitudinis semper sibi nutrimentum, uitiosum et inutile. 4. Miramur in hoc mortem, quae unius singultus opus est? Numquid enim ut concidat magni res molimenti est? odor illi saporque et lassitudo et uigilia et umor et cibus et sine quibus uiuere non potest mortifera sunt; quocumque se mouit, statim infirmitatis suae conscium, non omne caelum ferens, aquarum nouitatibus flatuque non familiaris aerae et tenuissimis causis atque offensionibus morbidum, putre causarium, fletu uitam auspicatum, cum interim quantos tumultus hoc tam contemptum animal mouet, in quantas cogitationes oblitum condicionis suae uenit! 5. Inmortalia, aeterna uolutat animo et in nepotes pronepotesque disponit, cum interim longa conantem eum mors opprimit et hoc quod senectus uocatur paucissimorum <est>

XII.

1. Dolor tuus, si modo ulla illi ratio est, utrum sua spectat incommoda an eius qui decessit? Vtrum te in amisso filio mouet quod nullas ex illo uoluptates cepisti, an quod maiores, si diutius uixisset, percipere potuisti? 2. Si nullas percepisse te dixeris, tolerabilius efficies detrimentum tuum; minus enim homines desiderant ea ex quibus nihil gaudi laetitiaeque perceperant. Si confessa fueris percepisse magnas uoluptates, oportet te non de eo quod detractum est queri, sed de eo gratias agere quod contigit; prouenerunt enim satis magni fructus laborum tuorum ex ipsa educatione, nisi forte ii qui catulos auesque et friuola animorum oblectamenta summa diligentia nutriunt fruuntur aliqua uoluptate ex uisu tactuque et blanda adulatione mutorum, liberos nutrientibus non fructus educationis ipsa educatio est. Licet itaque nil tibi industria eius contulerit, nihil diligentia custodierit, nihil prudentia suaserit, ipsum quod habuisti, quod amasti, fructus est. 3. 'At potuit longior esse, maior.' Melius tamen tecum actum est quam si omnino non contigisset, quoniam, si ponatur electio utrum satius sit non diu felicem esse an numquam, melius est discessura nobis bona quam nulla contingere. Vtrumne malles degenerem aliquem et numerum tantum nomenque filii expleturum habuisse an tantae indolis quantae tuus fuit, iuuenis cito prudens, cito pius, cito maritus, cito pater, cito omnis officii curiosus, cito sacerdos, omnia tamquam properans? Nulli fere et magna bona et diuturna contingunt, non durat nec ad ultimum exit nisi lenta felicitas: filium tibi di immortales non diu daturi statim talem dederunt qualis diu effici <uix> potest.

4. Ne illud quidem dicere potes, electam te a dis cui frui non liceret filio: circumfer per omnem notorum, ignotorum frequentiam oculos, occurrent tibi passi ubique maiora. Senserunt ista magni duces, senserunt principes; ne deos quidem fabulae immunes reliquerunt, puto, ut nostrorum funerum leuamentum esset etiam diuina concidere. Circumspice, inquam, omnis: nullam <tam> miseram nominabis domum quae non inueniat in miseriore solacium. 5. Non mehercules tam male de moribus tuis sentio ut putem posse te leuius pati casum tuum, si tibi ingentem lugentium numerum produxero: maliuolum solacii genus est turba miserorum. Quosdam tamen referam, non ut scias hoc solere hominibus accidere — ridiculum est enim mortalitatis exempla colligere - sed ut scias fuisse multos qui lenirent aspera placide ferendo.

6. A felicissimo incipiam. L. Sulla filium amisit, nec ea res aut malitiam eius et acerrimam uirtutem in hostes ciuesque contudit aut effecit ut cognomen illud usurpasse falso uideretur, quod amisso filio adsumpsit nec odia hominum ueritus, quorum malo illae nimis secundae res constabant, nec inuidiam deorum, quorum illud crimen erat, Sulla tam felix. Sed istud inter res nondum iudicatas abeat, qualis Sulla fuerit — etiam inimici fatebuntur bene illum arma sumpsisse, bene posuisse: hoc de quo agitur constabit, non esse maximum malum quod etiam ad felicissimos peruenit.

XIII.

1. Ne nimis admiretur Graecia illum patrem qui in ipso sacrificio nuntiata filii morte tibicinem tantum tacere iussit et coronam capiti detraxit, cetera rite perfecit, Puluillus effecit pontifex, cui postem tenenti et Capitolium dedicanti mors filii nuntiata est. Quam ille exaudisse dissimulauit et sollemnia pontificii carminis uerba concepit gemitu non interrompente precationem et ad filii sui nomen Ioue propitiato. 2. Putasne eius luctus aliquem finem esse debere, cuius primus dies et primus impetus ab altaribus publicis et fausta nuncupatione non abduxit patrem? Dignus mehercules fuit memorabili dedicatione, dignus amplissimo sacerdotio, qui colere deos ne iratos quidem destitit. Idem tamen, ut redit domum, et inpleuit oculos et aliquas uoces flebiles misit; sed peractis quae mos erat praestare defunctis ad Capitolinum illum redit uultum.

3. Paulus circa illos nobilissimi triumphi dies quo uinctum ante currum egit Persen [incliti regis nomen] duos filios in adoptionem dedit, <duos> quos sibi seruauerat extulit. Quales retentos putas, cum inter commodatos Scipio fuisset? Non sine motu uacuum Pauli currum populus Romanus aspexit. Contionatus est tamen et egit dis gratias quod compos uoti factus esset; precatum enim se ut, si quid ob ingentem uictoriam inuidiae dandum esset, id suo potius quam publico damno solueretur. 4. Vides quam magno animo tulerit? orbitati suae gratulatus est. Et quem magis poterat permouere tanta mutatio? solacia simul atque auxilia perdidit. Non contigit tamen tristem Paulum Persi uidere.

XIV.

1. Quid nunc te per innumerabilia magnorum uirorum exempla ducam et quaeram miseros, quasi non difficilius sit inuenire felices? Quota enim quaeque domus usque ad exitum omnibus partibus suis constitit, in qua non aliquid turbatum sit? Vnum quemlibet annum occupa et ex eo magistratus cita, Lucium si uis Bibulum et C. Caesarem: uidebis inter collegas inimicissimos concordem fortunam.

2. L. Bibuli, melioris quam fortioris uiri, duo simul filii interfecti sunt, Aegyptio quidem militi ludibrio habiti, ut non minus ipsa orbitate auctor eius digna res lacrimis esset. Bibulus tamen, qui toto honoris sui anno <in> inuidiam collegae domi latuerat, postero die quam geminum funus renuntiaturum est processit ad solita imperatoris officia. Quis minus potest quam unum diem duobus filiis dare? Tam cito liberorum luctum finiuit qui consulatum anno luxerat.

3. C. Caesar cum Britanniam peragraret nec oceano continere felicitatem suam posset, audit decessisse filiam publica secum fata ducentem. In oculis erat iam Cn. Pompeius non aequo laturus animo quemquam alium esse in re publica magnum et modum inpositurus incrementis, quae grauia illi uidebantur etiam cum in commune cresceret. Tamen intra tertium diem imperatoria obit munia et tam cito dolorem uicit quam omnia solebat.

XV.

1. Quid aliorum tibi funera Caesarum referam? quos in hoc mihi uidetur interim uiolare fortuna ut sic quoque generi humano prosint, ostendentes ne eos quidem qui dis geniti deosque genituri dicantur sic suam fortunam in potestate habere quemadmodum alienam. 2. Diuus Augustus amissis liberis, nepotibus, exhausta Caesarum turba, adoptione desertam domum fulsit: tulit tamen tam fortiter quam cuius iam res agebatur cuiusque maxime intererat de dis neminem queri. 3. Ti. Caesar et quem genuerat et quem adoptauerat amisit; ipse tamen pro rostris laudauit filium stetitque in conspectu posito corpore, interiecto tantummodo uelamento quod pontificis oculos a funere arceret, et flente populo Romano non flexit uultum; experiendum se dedit Seiano ad latus stanti quam patienter posset suos perdere.

4. Videsne quanta copia uirorum maximorum sit quos non excepit hic omnia prosternens casus, et in quos tot animi bona, tot ornamenta publice priuatimque congesta erant? Sed uidelicet it in orbem ista tempestas et sine dilectu uastat omnia agitque ut sua. Iube singulos conferre rationem: nulli contigit inpune nasci.

XVI.

1. Scio quid dicas: ‘oblitus es feminam te consolari, uirorum refert exempla.’ Quis autem dixit naturam maligne cum mulierum ingeniis egisse et uirtutes illarum in artum retraxisse? par illis, mihi crede, uigor, par ad honesta, libeat <modo>, facultas est; dolorem laboremque ex aequo, si consueuere, patiuntur. 2. In qua istud urbe, di boni, loquimur? in qua regem Romanis capitibus Lucretia et Brutus deiecerunt: Bruto libertatem debemus, Lucretiae Brutum; in qua Cloeliam contempto et hoste et flumine ob insignem audaciam tantum non in uiros transcripsimus: equestri insidens statuae in sacra uia, celeberrimo loco, Cloelia exprobrat iuuenibus nostris puluinum escendentibus in ea illos urbe sic ingredi in qua etiam feminas equo donauimus. 3. Quod tibi si uis exempla referri feminarum quae suos fortiter desiderauerint, non ostiatim quaeram; ex una tibi familia duas Cornelias dabo: primam Scipionis filiam, Gracchorum matrem. Duodecim illa partus totidem funeribus recognouit; et de ceteris facile est, quos nec editos nec amissos ciuitas sensit: Tiberium Gaiumque, quos etiam qui bonos uiros negauerit magnos fatebitur, et occisos uidit et insepultos. Consolantibus tamen miseramque dicentibus ‘numquam’ inquit ‘non felicem me dicam, quae Gracchos peperit.’ 4. Cornelia Liui Drusi clarissimum iuuenem inlustris ingenii, uadentem per Gracchana uestigia imperfectis tot rogationibus intra penates interemptum suos, amiserat incerto caedis auctore. Tamen et acerbam mortem filii et inultam tam magno animo tulit quam ipse leges tulerat. 5. Iam cum fortuna in gratiam, Marcia, reuerteris, si tela quae in Scipiones Scipionumque matres ac filias exegit, quibus Caesares petit, ne a te quidem continuit?

Plena et infesta uariis casibus uita est, a quibus nulli longa pax, uix indutiae sunt. Quattuor liberos sustuleras, Marcia. Nullum aiunt frustra cadere telum quod in confertum agmen inmissum est: mirum est tantam turbam non potuisse sine inuidia damnoue praeteruehi? 6. ‘At hoc iniquior fortuna fuit quod non tantum eripuit filios sed elegit.’ Numquam tamen iniuriam dixeris ex aequo cum potentiore diuidere: duas tibi reliquit filias et harum nepotes; et ipsum quem maxime luges prioris oblita non ex toto abstulit: habes ex illo duas filias, si male fers, magna onera, si bene, magna solacia. In hoc te perduc ut illas cum uideris admonearis filii, non doloris. 7. Agricola euersis arboribus quas aut uentus radicitus auolsit aut contortus repentino impetu turbo praefregit sobolem ex illis residuam fouet et in <locum> amissarum semina statim plantasque disponit; et momento (nam ut ad damna, ita ad incrementa rapidum ueloxque tempus est) adulescunt amissis laetiora. 8. Has nunc Metili tui filias in eius uicem substitue et uacantem locum exple et unum dolorem geminato solacio leua. Est quidem haec natura mortalium, ut nihil magis placeat quam quod amissum est: iniquiores sumus aduersus relictam ereptorum desiderio. Sed si aestimare uolueris quam ualde tibi fortuna, etiam cum saeuiret, pepercerit, scies te habere plus quam solacia: respice tot nepotes, duas filias. Dic illud quoque, Marcia: ‘mouerer, si esset cuique fortuna pro moribus et numquam mala bonos sequerentur: nunc uideo exempto discrimine eodem modo malos bonosque iactari.’

XVII.

1. 'Graue est tamen quem educaueris iuuenem, iam matri iam patri praesidium ac decus amittere.' Quis negat graue esse? sed humanum est. Ad hoc genitus es, ut perderes ut perires, ut sperares metueres, alios teque inquietares, mortem et timeres et optares et, quod est pessimum, numquam scires cuius esses status.

2. Si quis Syracusas petenti diceret: 'omnia incommoda, omnes uoluptates futurae peregrinationis tuae ante cognosce, deinde ita nauiga. Haec sunt quae mirari possis: uidebis primum ipsam insulam ab Italia angusto interscissam freto, quam continenti quondam cohaesisse constat; subitum illo mare inrupit et Hesperium Siculo latus abscidit.

Deinde uidebis (licebit enim tibi audissimum maris uerticem stringere) stratam illam fabulosam Charybdin quam diu ab austro uacat, at, si quid inde uehementius spirauit, magno hiatus profundoque nauigia sorbentem. 3. Videbis celebratissimum carminibus fontem Arethusam, nitidissimi ac perlucidi ad imum stagni, gelidissimas aquas profundentem, siue illas ibi primum nascentis inuenit, siue inlapsum terris flumen integrum subter tot maria et a confusione peioris undae seruatum reddidit. 4. Videbis portum quietissimum omnium quos aut natura posuit in tutelam classium aut adiuuit manus, sic tutum ut ne maximarum quidem tempestatum furori locus sit. Videbis ubi Athenarum potentia fracta, ubi tot milia captiuorum ille excisis in infinitam altitudinem saxis natiuus carcer incluserat, ipsam ingentem ciuitatem et laxius territorium quam multarum urbium fines sunt, tepidissima hiberna et nullum diem sine interuentu solis. 5. Sed cum omnia ista cognoueris, grauis et insalubris aestas hiberni caeli beneficia corrumpet. Erit Dionysius illic tyrannus, libertatis iustitiae legum exitium, dominationis cupidus etiam post Platonem, uitae etiam post exilium: alios uret, alios uerberabit, alios ob leuem offensam detruncari iubebit, arcesset ad libidinem mares feminasque et inter foedos regiae intemperantiae greges parum erit simul binis coire. Audisti quid te inuitare possit, quid abstertere: proinde aut nauiga aut resiste.' 6. Post hanc denuntiationem si quis dixisset intrare se Syracusas uelle, satisne iustam querellam de ullo nisi de se habere posset, qui non incidisset in illa sed prudens sciensque uenisset?

Dicit omnibus nobis natura: 'neminem decipio. Tu si filios sustuleris, poteris habere formosos, et deformes poteris. Fortasse multi nascentur: esse aliquis ex illis tam seruator patriae quam proditor poterit. 7. Non est quod desperes tantae dignationis futuros ut nemo tibi propter illos male dicere audeat; propone tamen et tantae futuros turpitudinis ut ipsi maledicta sint. Nihil uetat illos tibi suprema praestare et laudari te a liberis tuis, sed sic te para tamquam in ignem inpositurus uel puerum uel iuuenem uel senem; nihil enim ad rem pertinent anni, quoniam nullum non acerbum funus est quod parens sequitur.' Post has leges propositas si liberos tollis, omni deos inuidia liberas, qui tibi nihil certi spoponderunt.

XVIII.

18. <Ad> hanc imaginem agedum totius uitae introitum refer. An Syracusas uiseres deliberanti tibi quidquid delectare poterat, quidquid offendere exposui: puta nascenti me tibi uenire in consilium. 2. 'Intraturus es urbem dis hominibus communem, omnia complexam, certis legibus aeternisque deuinctam, indefatigata caelestium officia uoluentem. Videbis illic innumerabiles stellas micare, uidebis uno sidere omnia inpleri, solem cotidiano cursu diei noctisque spatia signantem, annuo aestates hiemesque aequalius[que] diuidentem. Videbis nocturnam lunae successionem, a fraternis occursibus lene remissumque lumen mutuantem et modo occultam modo toto ore terris imminentem, accessionibus damnisque mutabilem, semper proximae dissimilem. 3. Videbis quinque sidera diuersas agentia uias et in contrarium praecipiti mundo nitentia: ex horum leuissimis motibus fortunae populorum dependent et maxima ac minima proinde formantur prout aequum iniquumue sidus incessit. Miraberis collecta nubila et cadentis aquas et obliqua fulmina et caeli fragorem. 4. Cum satiatus spectaculo supernorum in terram oculos deieceris, excipiet te alia forma rerum aliterque mirabilis: hinc camporum in infinitum patentium fusa planities, hinc montium magnis et nualibus surgentium iugis erecti in sublime uertices; deiectus fluminum et ex uno fonte in occidentem orientemque diffusi amnes et summis cacuminibus nemora nutantia et tantum siluarum cum suis animalibus auiumque concentu dissono; 5. uarii urbium situs et seclusae nationes locorum difficultate, quarum aliae se in erectos subtrahunt montes, aliae ~ripis lacu uallibus pauidae~ circumfunduntur; adiuta cultu seges et arbusta sine cultore feritatis; et riuorum lenis inter prata discursus et amoeni sinus et litora in portum recedentia; sparsae tot per uastum insulae, quae interuentu suo maria distinguunt. 6. Quid lapidum gemmarumque fulgor et [inter] rapidorum torrentium aurum harenis interfluens et in mediis terris medioque rursus mari ~terret~ ignium faces et uinculum terrarum oceanus, continuationem gentium triplici sinu scindens et ingenti licentia exaestuans? 7. Videbis hic inquietis et sine uento fluctuantibus aquis innare [et] excedenti terrestria magnitudine animalia, quaedam grauiā et alieno se magisterio mouentia, quaedam uelocia et concitatis perniciores remigiis, quaedam haurientia undas et magno praenauigantium periculo efflantia; uidebis hic nauigia quas non nouere terras quaerentia. Videbis nihil humanae audaciae intemptatum erisque et spectator et ipse pars magna conantium: disces docebisque artes, alias quae uitam instruant, alias quae ornent, alias quae regant. 8. Sed istic erunt mille corporum, animorum pestes, et bella et latrocinia et uenena et naufragia et intemperies caeli corporisque et carissimorum acerba desideria et mors, incertum facilis an per poenam cruciatumque. Delibera tecum et perpende quid uelis: ut ad illa uenias, per illa exeundum est.' Respondebis uelle te uiuere. Quidni? immo, puto, ad id non accedes ex quo tibi aliquid decuti doles! Viue ergo ut conuenit. 'Nemo' inquis 'nos consuluit.' Consulti sunt de nobis parentes nostri, qui, cum condicionem uitae nossent, in hanc nos sustulerunt.

XIX.

1. Sed ut ad solacia ueniam, uideamus primum quid curandum sit, deinde quemadmodum. Mouet lugentem desiderium eius quem dilexit. Id per se tolerabile esse apparet; absentis enim afuturosque dum uiuent non flemus, quamuis omnis usus nobis illorum <cum> conspectu ereptus sit; opinio est ergo quae nos cruciat, et tanti quodque malum est quanti illud taxauimus. In nostra potestate remedium habemus: iudicemus illos abesse et nosmet ipsi fallamus; dimisimus illos, immo consecuturi praemisimus. 2. Mouet et illud lugentem: ‘non erit qui me defendat, qui a contemptu uindictet.’ Vt minime probabili sed uero solacio utar, in ciuitate nostra plus gratiae orbitas confert quam eripit, adeoque senectutem solitudo, quae solebat destruere, ad potentiam ducit ut quidam odia filiorum simulent et liberos eiurent, orbitatem manu faciant.

3. Scio quid dicas: ‘non mouent me detrimenta mea; etenim non est dignus solacio qui filium sibi decessisse sicut mancipium moleste fert, cui quicquam in filio respicere praeter ipsum uacat.’ Quid igitur te, Marcia, mouet? utrum quod filius tuus decessit an quod non diu uixit? Si quod decessit, semper debuisti dolere; semper enim scisti moriturum. 4. Cogita nullis defunctum malis adfici, illa quae nobis inferos faciunt terribiles, fabulas esse, nullas imminere mortuis tenebras nec carcerem nec flumina igne flagrantia nec Obluionem amnem nec tribunalia et reos et in illa libertate tam laxa ullos iterum tyrannos: luserunt ista poetae et uanis nos agitauiere terroribus. 5. Mors dolorum omnium exsolutio est et finis ultra quem mala nostra non exeunt, quae nos in illam tranquillitatem in qua antequam nasceremur iacuimus reponit. Si mortuorum aliquis miseretur, et non natorum misereatur. Mors nec bonum nec malum est; id enim potest aut bonum aut malum esse quod aliquid est; quod uero ipsum nihil est et omnia in nihilum redigit, nulli nos fortunae tradit. Mala enim bonaque circa aliquam uersantur materiam: non potest id fortuna tenere quod natura dimisit, nec potest miser esse qui nullus est. 6. Excessit filius tuus terminos intra quos seruitur, excepit illum magna et aeterna pax: non paupertatis metu, non diuitiarum cura, non libidinis per uoluptatem animos carpentis stimulis incessitur, non inuidia felicitatis alienae tangitur, non suae premitur, ne conuiciis quidem ullis uerecundae aures uerberantur; nulla publica clades prospicitur, nulla priuata; non sollicitus futuri pendet [et] ex euentu semper ~in certiora dependenti~. Tandem ibi constitit unde nil eum pellat, ubi nihil terreat.

XX.

1. O ignaros malorum suorum, quibus non mors ut optimum inuentum naturae laudatur expectaturque, siue felicitatem includit, siue calamitatem repellit, siue satietatem ac lassitudinem senis terminat, siue iuuenile aeuum dum meliora sperantur in flore deducit, siue pueritiam ante duriores gradus reuocat, omnibus finis, multis remedium, quibusdam uotum, de nullis melius merita quam de iis ad quos uenit antequam inuocaretur. 2. Haec seruitutem inuito domino remittit; haec captiuorum catenas leuat; haec e carcere educit quos exire imperium inpotens uetuerat; haec exulibus in patriam semper animum oculosque tendentibus ostendit nihil interesse infra quos quis iaceat; haec, ubi res communes fortuna male diuisit et aequo iure genitos alium alii donauit, exaequat omnia; haec est post quam nihil quisquam alieno fecit arbitrio; haec est in qua nemo humilitatem suam sensit; haec est quae nulli non patuit; haec est, Marcia, quam pater tuus concupit; haec est, inquam, quae efficit ut nasci non sit supplicium, quae efficit ut non concidam aduersus minas casuum, ut seruare animum saluum ac potentem sui possim: habeo quod appellem. 3. Video istic cruces ne unius quidem generis sed aliter ab aliis fabricatas: capite quidam conuersos in terram suspendere, alii per obscena stipitem egerunt, alii brachia patibulo explicuerunt; uideo fidiculas, uideo uerbera, et ~membris singulis articulis~ singula ~docuerunt~ machinamenta: sed uideo et mortem. Sunt istic hostes cruenti, ciues superbi: sed uideo istic et mortem. Non est molestum seruire ubi, si dominii pertaesum est, licet uno gradu ad libertatem transire. Caram te, uita, beneficio mortis habeo.

4. Cogita quantum boni opportuna mors habeat, quam multis diutius uixisse nocuerit. Si Gnaeum Pompeium, decus istud firmamentumque imperii, Neapoli ualetudo abstulisset, indubitatus populi Romani princeps excesserat: at nunc exigui temporis adiectio fastigio illum suo depulit. Vidit legiones in conspectu suo caesas et ex illo proelio in quo prima acies senatus fuit — quam infelices reliquiae sunt! — ipsum imperatorem superfuisse; uidit Aegyptium carnificem et sacrosanctum uictoribus corpus satelliti praestitit, etiam si incolumis fuisset paenitentiam salutis acturus; quid enim erat turpius quam Pompeium uiuere beneficio regis? 5. M. Cicero si illo tempore quo Catilinae sicas deuitauit, quibus pariter cum patria petitus est, concidisset, liberata re publica seruator eius, si denique filiae suae funus secutus esset, etiamtunc felix mori potuit. Non uidisset strictos in ciuilia capita mucrones nec diuisa percussoribus occisorum bona, ut etiam de suo perirent, non hastam consularia spolia uendentem nec caedes locatas publice nec latrocinia, bella, rapinas, tantum Catilinarum. 6. M. Catonem si a Cypro et hereditatis regiae dispensatione redeuntem mare deuorasset uel cum illa ipsa pecunia quam adferebat ciuili bello stipendium, nonne illi bene actum foret? Hoc certe secum tulisset, neminem ausurum coram Catone peccare: nunc annorum adiectio paucissimorum uirum libertati non suae tantum sed publicae natum coegit Caesarem fugere, Pompeium sequi.

XXI.

1. 'Nimis tamen cito perit et immaturus.' Primum puta illi superfuisse — comprende quantum plurimum procedere homini licet: quantum est? Ad breuissimum tempus editi, cito cessuri loco uenienti inpactum hoc prospicimus hospitium. De nostris aetatibus loquor, quas incredibili celeritate ~conuoluit~? Computa urbium saecula: uidebis quam non diu steterint etiam quae uetustate gloriantur. Omnia humana breuia et caduca sunt et infiniti temporis nullam partem occupantia. 2. Terram hanc cum urbibus populisque et fluminibus et ambitu maris puncti loco ponimus ad uniuersa referentes: minorem portionem aetas nostra quam puncti habet, si omni tempori comparetur, cuius maior est mensura quam mundi, utpote cum ille se intra huius spatium totiens remetiat. Quid ergo interest id extendere cuius quantumcumque fuerit incrementum non multum aberit a nihilo? Vno modo multum est quod uiuimus, si satis est. 3. Licet mihi uiuaces et in memoriam traditae senectutis uiros nomines, centenos denosque percenseas annos: cum ad omne tempus dimiseris animum, nulla erit illa breuissimi longissimique aevi differentia, si inspecto quanto quis uixerit spatio comparaueris quanto non uixerit. 4. Deinde sibi maturus decessit; uixit enim quantum debuit uiuere, nihil illi iam ultra supererat. Non una hominibus senectus est, ut ne animalibus quidem: intra quattuordecim quaedam annos defetigauit, et haec illis longissima aetas est quae homini prima; dispar cuique uiuendi facultas data est. Nemo nimis cito moritur, quia uicturus diutius quam uixit non fuit. 5. Fixus est cuique terminus: manebit semper ubi positus est nec illum ulterius diligentia aut gratia promouebit. Sic habe, te illum [ulterius diligentiam] ex consilio perdidisse: tulit suum

6. Non est itaque quod sic te oneres: 'potuit diutius uiuere'. Non est interrupta eius uita nec umquam se annis casus intericit. Soluitur quod cuique promissum est; eunt uia sua fata nec adiciunt quicquam nec ex promisso semel demunt. Frustra uota ac studia sunt: habebit quisque quantum illi dies primus adscripsit. Ex illo quo primum lucem uidit iter mortis ingressus est accessitque fato propior et illi ipsi qui adiciebantur adulescentiae anni uitae detrahebantur. 7. In hoc omnes errore uersamur, ut non putemus ad mortem nisi senes inclinatosque iam uergere, cum illo infantia statim et iuuenta, omnis aetas ferat. Agunt opus suum fata: nobis sensum nostrae necis auferunt, quoque facilius obrepat, mors sub ipso uitae nomine latet: infantiam in se pueritia conuertit, pueritiam pubertas, iuuenem senex abstulit. Incrementa ipsa, si bene computes, damna sunt.

XXII.

1. Quereris, Marcia, non tam diu filium tuum uixisse quam potuisset? Vnde enim scis an diutius illi expedierit uiuere, an illi hac morte consultum sit? Quemquam inuenire hodie potes cuius res tam bene positae fundataeque sint ut nihil illi procedente tempore timendum sit? Labant humana ac fluunt neque ulla pars uitae nostrae tam obnoxia aut tenera est quam quae maxime placet, ideoque felicissimis optanda mors est, quia in tanta inconstantia turbaque rerum nihil nisi quod praeterit certum est. 2. Quis tibi recipit illud filii pulcherrimum corpus et summa pudoris custodia inter luxuriosae urbis oculos conseruatum potuisse tot morbos ita euadere ut ad senectutem inlaesum perferret formae decus? Cogita animi mille labes; neque enim recta ingenia qualem in adulescentia spem sui fecerant usque in senectutem pertulerunt, sed interuersa plerumque sunt: aut sera eoque foedior luxuria inuasit coepitque dehonestare speciosa principia, aut in popinam uentremque procubuerunt toti summaque illis curarum fuit quid essent, quid biberent. 3. Adice incendia ruinas naufragia lacerationesque medicorum ossa uiuis legentium et totas in uiscera manus demittentium et non per simplicem dolorem pudenda curantium; post haec exilium (non fuit innocentior filius tuus quam Rutilius), carcerem (non fuit sapientior quam Socrates), uoluntario uulnere transfixum pectus (non fuit sanctior quam Cato): cum ista perspexeris, scies optime cum iis agi quos natura, quia illos hoc manebat uitae stipendium, cito in tutum recepit. Nihil est tam fallax quam uita humana, nihil tam insidiosum: non mehercules quisquam illam accepisset, nisi daretur ignorantibus. Itaque si felicissimum est non nasci, proximum est, puto, breui aetate defunctos cito in integrum restitui.

4. Propone illud acerbissimum tibi tempus, quo Seianus patrem tuum clienti suo Satrio Secundo congiarium dedit. Irascebatur illi ob unum aut alterum liberius dictum, quod tacitus ferre non potuerat Seianum in ceruices nostras ne inponi quidem sed escendere. Decernebatur illi statua in Pompei theatro ponenda, quod exustum Caesar reficiebat: exclamauit Cordus tunc uere theatrum perire. 5. Quid ergo? non rumperetur supra cineres Cn. Pompei constitui

Seianum et in monumentis maximi imperatoris consecrari perfidum militem? ~Consecratur~ subscriptio, et acerrimi canes, quos ille, ut sibi uni mansuetos, omnibus feros haberet, sanguine humano pascebat, circumlatrare hominem ~etiam illum imperiatum~ incipiunt. 6. Quid faceret? Si uiuere uellet, Seianus rogandus erat, si mori, filia, uterque inexorabilis: constituit filiam fallere. Vsus itaque balineo quo plus uirium poneret, in cubiculum se quasi gustaturus contulit et dimissis pueris quaedam per fenestram, ut uideretur edisse, proiecit; a cena deinde, quasi iam satis in cubiculo edisset, abstinuit. Altero quoque die et tertio idem fecit; quartus ipsa infirmitate corporis faciebat indicium. Complexus itaque te, 'carissima' inquit 'filia et hoc unum tota celata uita, iter mortis ingressus sum et iam medium fere teneo; reuocare me nec debes nec potes.' Atque ita iussit lumen omne praecludi et se in tenebras condidit. 7. Cognito consilio eius publica uoluptas erat, quod e faucibus audissimorum luporum educeretur praeda. Accusatores auctore Seiano adeunt consulum tribunalia, queruntur mori Cordum, ut interpellarent quod coegerant: adeo illis Cordus uidebatur effugere. Magna res erat in quaestione, an mortis <ius> rei perderent; dum deliberatur, dum accusatores iterum adeunt, ille se absoluerat. 8. Videsne, Marcia, quantae iniquorum temporum uices ex inopinato ingruant? Fles, quod alicui tuorum mori necesse fuit? Paene non licuit!

XXIII.

1. Praeter hoc quod omne futurum incertum est et ad deteriora certius, facillimum ad superos iter est animis cito ab humana conuersatione dimissis; minimum enim faecis, ponderis traxerunt. Ante quam obdurescerent et altius terrena conciperent liberati leuiiores ad originem suam reuolant et facilius quicquid est illud obsoleti inlitique eluunt. 2. Nec umquam magis ingenis cara in corpore mora est; exire atque erumpere gestiunt, aegre has angustias ferunt, uagi per omne, sublimes et ex alto adsueti humana despiciere. Inde est quod Platon clamat: sapientis animum totum in mortem prominere, hoc uelle, hoc meditari, hac semper cupidine ferri in exteriora tendentem.

3. Quid? tu, Marcia, cum uideres senilem in iuvene prudentiam, uictorem omnium uoluptatum animum, emendatum, carentem uitio, diuitias sine auaritia, honores sine ambitione, uoluptates sine luxuria adpetentem, diu tibi putabas illum sospitem posse contingere? Quicquid ad summum peruenit, ab exitu prope est. Eripit se aufertque ex oculis perfecta uirtus, nec ultimum tempus expectant quae in primo maturuerunt. 4. Ignis quo clarius fulsit, citius extinguitur; uiuacior est, qui cum lenta ac difficili materia commissus fumoque demersus ex sordido lucet; eadem enim detinet causa, quae maligne alit. Sic ingenia quo inlustriora, breuiora sunt; nam ubi incremento locus non est, uicinus occasus est. 5. Fabianus ait, id quod nostri quoque parentes uidere, puerum Romae fuisse statura ingentis uiri; sed hic cito decessit, et moriturum breui nemo prudens non ante dixit; non poterat enim ad illam aetatem peruenire, quam praeceperat. Ita est: indicium imminētis exiti nimia maturitas est; adpetit finis ubi incrementa consumpta sunt.

XXIV.

1. Incipe uirtutibus illum, non annis aestimare; satis diu uixit. Pupillus relictus sub tutorum cura usque ad quartum decimum annum fuit, sub matris tutela semper. Cum haberet suos penates, relinquere tuos noluit et in materno contubernio, cum uix patrum liberi ferant, perseuerauit. Adulescens statura, pulchritudine, certo corporis robore castris natus militiam recusauit, ne a te discederet. 2. Computa, Marcia, quam raro liberos uideant quae in diuersis domibus habitant; cogita tot illos perire annos matribus et per sollicitudinem exigi, quibus filios in exercitu habent: scies multum patuisse hoc tempus, ex quo nil perdidisti. Numquam e conspectu tuo recessit; sub oculis tuis studia formauit excellentis ingeni et aequaturi auum, nisi obstitisset uerecundia, quae multorum profectus silentio pressit. 3. Adulescens rarissimae formae in tam magna feminarum turba uiros corruptentium nullius se spei praebeuit, et cum quarundam usque ad temptandum peruenisset improbitas, erubuit quasi peccasset, quod placuerat. Hac sanctitate morum effecit, ut puer admodum dignus sacerdotio uideretur, materna sine dubio suffragatione, sed ne mater quidem nisi pro bono candidato ualuisset. 4. Harum contemplatione uirtutum filium gere quasi sinu! Nunc ille tibi magis uacat, nunc nihil habet, quo auocetur; numquam tibi sollicitudini, numquam maerori erit. Quod unum ex tam bono filio poteras dolere, doluisti; cetera, exempta casibus, plena uoluptatis sunt, si modo uti filio scis, si modo quid in illo pretiosissimum fuerit intellegis. 5. Imago dumtaxat fili tui perit et effigies non simillima; ipse quidem aeternus meliorisque nunc status est, despoliatus oneribus alienis et sibi relictus. Haec quae uides circumdata nobis, ossa neruos et obductam cutem uultumque et ministras manus et cetera quibus inuoluti sumus, uincula animorum tenebraeque sunt. Obruitur his, offocatur, inficitur, arcetur a ueris et suis in falsa coiectus. Omne illi cum hac graui carne certamen est, ne abstrahatur et sidat; nititur illo, unde demissus est. Ibi illum aeterna requies manet ex confusis crassisque pura et liquida uisentem.

XXV.

1. Proinde non est quod ad sepulcrum fili tui curras; pessima eius et ipsi molestissima istic iacent, ossa cineresque, non magis illius partes quam uestes aliaque tegimenta corporum. Integer ille nihilque in terris relinquens sui fugit et totus excessit; paulumque supra nos commoratus, dum expurgatur et inhaerentia uitia situmque omnem mortalis aevi excutit, deinde ad excelsa sublatus inter felices currit animas. Excepit illum coetus sacer, Scipiones Catonesque, interque contemptores uitae et ueneficio liberos parens tuus, Marcia. 2. Ille nepotem suum — quamquam illic omnibus omne cognatum est — applicat sibi noua luce gaudentem et uicinorum siderum meatus docet, nec ex coniectura sed omnium ex uero peritus in arcana naturae libens ducit; utque ignotarum urbium monstrator hospiti gratus est, ita sciscitanti caelestium causas domesticus interpres. Et in profunda terrarum permittere aciem iubet; iuuat enim ex alto relictia respicere. 3. Sic itaque te, Marcia, gere, tamquam sub oculis patris filique posita, non illorum, quos noueras, sed tanto excelsiorum et in summo locatorum. Erubescere quicquam humile aut uolgare cogitare et mutatos in melius tuos flere! Aeternarum rerum per libera et uasta spatia dimissi sunt; non illos interfusa maria discludunt nec altitudo montium aut inuiuae ualles aut incertarum uada Syrtium: omnia ibi plana et ex facili mobiles et expediti et in uicem peruii sunt intermixtique sideribus.

XXVI.

1. Puta itaque ex illa arce caelesti patrem tuum Marcia, cui tantum apud te auctoritatis erat quantum tibi apud filium tuum, non illo ingenio, quo ciuilia bella defleuit, quo proscribentis in aeternum ipse proscripsit, sed tanto elatiore, quanto est ipse sublimior, dicere: 2. 'Cur te, filia, tam longa tenet aegritudo? Cur in tanta ueri ignorance uersaris, ut inique actum cum filio tuo iudices, quod integro domus statu integer ipse se ad maiores recepit suos? Nescis quantis fortuna procellis disturbet omnia? Quam nullis benignam facilemque se praestiterit, nisi qui minimum cum illa contraxerant? Regesne tibi nominem felicissimos futuros, si maturius illos mors instantibus subtraxisset malis? an Romanos duces, quorum nihil magnitudini deerit, si aliquid aetati detraxeris? an nobilissimos uiros clarissimosque ad ictum militaris gladi composita ceruice curuatos? 3. Respice patrem atque auum tuum: ille in alieni percussoris uenit arbitrium; ego nihil in me cuiquam permisi et cibo prohibitus ostendi tam magno me quam uidebar animo scripsisse. Cur in domo nostra diutissime lugetur qui felicissime moritur? Coimus omnes in unum uidemusque non alta nocte circumdati nil apud uos, ut putatis, optabile, nil excelsum, nil splendidum, sed humilia cuncta et grauia et anxia et quotam partem luminis nostri cernentia! 4. Quid dicam nulla hic arma mutuis furere concursibus nec classes classibus frangi nec parricidia aut fingi aut cogitari nec fora litibus strepere dies perpetuos, nihil in obscuro, detectas mentes et aperta praecordia et in publico medioque uitam et omnis aevi prospectum uenientiumque?

5. 'Iuuabat unius me saeculi facta componere in parte ultima mundi et inter paucissimos gesta. Tot saecula, tot aetatium contextum, seriem, quicquid annorum est, licet uisere; licet surrectura, licet ruitura regna prospicere et magnarum urbium lapsus et maris nouos cursus. 6. Nam si tibi potest solacio esse desiderii tui commune fatum, nihil quo stat loco stabit, omnia sternet abducatque secum uetustas. Nec hominibus solum (quota enim ista fortuitae potentiae portio est?), sed locis, sed regionibus, sed mundi partibus ludet. Totos supprimet montes et alibi rupes in altum nouas exprimet; maria sorbebit, flumina auertet et commercio gentium rupto societatem generis humani coetumque dissoluet; alibi hiatibus uastis subducat urbes, tremoribus quatiet et ex infimo pestilentiae halitus mittet et inundationibus quicquid habitatur obducat necabitque omne animal orbe submerso et ignibus uastis torrebit incendetque mortalia. Et cum tempus aduenerit, quo se mundus renouaturus extinguat, uiribus ista se suis caedent et sidera sideribus incurrent et omni flagrante materia uno igni quicquid nunc ex disposito lucet ardebit. 7. Nos quoque felices animae et aeterna sortitae, cum deo uisum erit iterum ista moliri, labentibus cunctis et ipsae parua ruinae ingentis accessio in antiqua elementa uertemur.’

I.

1. Saepe iam, mater optima, impetum cepi consolandi te, saepe continui. Vt auderem multa me inpellebant: primum uidebar depositurus omnia incommoda, cum lacrimas tuas, etiam si suppressere non potuissem, interim certe abstersissem; deinde plus habiturum me auctoritatis non dubitabam ad excitandam te, si prior ipse consurrexissem; praeterea timebam ne a me uicta fortuna aliquem meorum uinceret. Itaque utcumque conabar manu super plagam meam inposita ad obliganda uulnera uestra reptare. 2. Hoc propositum meum erant rursus quae retardarent: dolori tuo, dum recens saeuiret, sciebam occurrendum non esse ne illum ipsa solacia inritarent et accenderent — nam in morbis quoque nihil est perniciosius quam inmatura medicina; expectabam itaque dum ipse uires suas frangeret et ad sustinenda remedia mora mitigatus tangi se ac tractari pateretur. Praeterea cum omnia clarissimorum ingeniorum monumenta ad compescendos moderandosque luctus composita euoluerem, non inueniebam exemplum eius qui consolatus suos esset, cum ipse ab illis comploraretur; ita in re noua haesitabam uerebarque ne haec non consolatio esset sed exulceratio. 3. Quid quod nouis uerbis nec ex uulgari et cotidiana sumptis adlocutione opus erat homini ad consolandos suos ex ipso rogo caput adleuanti? Omnis autem magnitudo doloris modum excedentis necesse est dilectum uerborum eripiat, cum saepe uocem quoque ipsam intercludat. 4. Vtcumque conitar, non fiducia ingenii, sed quia possum instar efficacissimae consolationis esse ipse consolator. Cui nihil negares, huic hoc utique te non esse negaturam, licet omnis maeror contumax sit, spero, ut desiderio tuo uelis a me modum statui.

II.

1. Vide quantum de indulgentia tua promiserim mihi: potentior me futurum apud te non dubito quam dolorem tuum, quo nihil est apud miseros potentius. Itaque ne statim cum eo concurram, adero prius illi et quibus excitetur ingeram; omnia proferam et rescindam quae iam obducta sunt. 2. Dicet aliquis: 'quod hoc genus est consolandi, oblitterata mala reuocare et animum in omnium aerumnarum suarum conspectu conlocare uix unius patientem?' Sed is cogitet, quaecumque usque eo perniciose sunt ut contra remedium conualuerint, plerumque contrariis curari. Omnis itaque luctus illi suos, omnia lugubria admouebo: hoc erit non molli uia mederi, sed urere ac secare. Quid consequar? ut pudeat animum tot miseriarum uictorem aegre ferre unum uulnus in corpore tam cicatricoso. 3. Fleant itaque diutius et gemant, quorum delicatas mentes eneruauit longa felicitas, et ad leuissimarum iniuriarum motus conlabantur: at quorum omnes anni per calamitates transierunt, grauissima quoque forti et immobili constantia perferant. Vnum habet adsidua infelicitas bonum, quod quos semper uexat nouissime indurat.

4. Nullam tibi fortuna uacationem dedit a grauissimis luctibus, ne natalem quidem tuum excepit: amisisti matrem statim nata, immo dum nasceris, et ad uitam quodam modo exposita es. Creuisti sub nouerca, quam tu quidem omni obsequio et pietate, quanta uel in filia conspici potest, matrem fieri coegisti; nulli tamen non magno constitit etiam bona nouerca. Auunculum indulgentissimum, optimum ac fortissimum uirum, cum aduentum eius expectares, amisisti; et ne saeuitiam suam fortuna leuiorem diducendo faceret, intra tricesimum diem carissimum uirum, ex quo mater trium liberorum eras, extulisti. 5. Lugenti tibi luctus nuntiatus est omnibus quidem absentibus liberis, quasi de industria in id tempus coniectis malis tuis ut nihil esset [haberes] ubi se dolor tuus reclinaret. Transeo tot pericula, tot metus, quos sine interuallo in te incursantis pertulisti: modo modo in eundem sinum ex quo tres nepotes emiseras ossa trium nepotum recepisti; intra uicesimum diem quam filium meum in manibus et in osculis tuis mortuum funeraueras, raptum me audisti: hoc adhuc defuerat tibi, lugere uiuos.

III.

1. Grauissimum est ex omnibus quae umquam in corpus tuum descenderunt recens uulnus, fateor; non summam cutem rupit, pectus et uiscera ipsa diuisit. Sed quemadmodum tirones leuiter saucii tamen uociferantur et manus medicorum magis quam ferrum horrent, at ueterani quamuis confossi patienter ac sine gemitu uelut aliena corpora exsaniari patiuntur, ita tu nunc debes fortiter praebere te curationi. 2. Lamentationes quidem et eiulatus et alia per quae fere muliebris dolor tumultuatur amoue; perdidisti enim tot mala, si nondum misera esse didicisti. Ecquid uideor non timide tecum egisse? nihil tibi subduxi ex malis tuis, sed omnia coaceruata ante te posui.

IV.

1. Magno id animo feci; constitui enim uincere dolorem tuum, non circumscribere. Vincam autem, puto, primum si ostendero nihil me pati propter quod ipse dici possim miser, nedum propter quod miseros etiam quos contingo faciam; deinde si ad te transiero et probauero ne tuam quidem grauem esse fortunam, quae tota ex mea pendet.

2. Hoc prius adgrediar quod pietas tua audire gestit, nihil mihi mali esse. Si potuero, ipsas res quibus me putas premi non esse intolerabiles faciam manifestum; sin id credi non potuerit, at ego mihi ipse magis placebo, quod inter eas res beatus ero quae miseros solent facere. 3. Non est quod de me aliis credas: ipse tibi, ne quid incertis opinionibus perturberis, indico me non esse miserum. Adiciam, quo securior sis, ne fieri quidem me posse miserum.

V.

1. Bona condicione geniti sumus, si eam non deseruerimus. Id egit rerum natura ut ad bene uiuendum non magno apparatu opus esset: unusquisque facere se beatum potest. Leue momentum in aduenticiis rebus est et quod in neutram partem magnas uires habeat: nec secunda sapientem euehunt nec aduersa demittunt; laborauit enim semper ut in se plurimum poneret, ut a se omne gaudium peteret. 2. Quid ergo? sapientem esse me dico? Minime; nam id quidem si profiteri possem, non tantum negarem miserum esse me, sed omnium fortunatissimum et in uicinum deo perductum praedicarem: nunc, quod satis est ad omnis miseras leniendas, sapientibus me uiris dedi et nondum in auxilium mei ualidus in aliena castra confugi, eorum scilicet qui facile se ac suos tuentur. 3. Illi me iusserunt stare adsidue uelut in praesidio positum et omnis conatus fortunae, omnis impetus prospicere multo ante quam incurrant. Illis grauis est quibus repentina est: facile eam sustinet qui semper expectat. Nam et hostium aduentus eos prosternit quos inopinantibus occupauit: at qui futuro se bello ante bellum parauerunt, compositi et aptati primum qui tumultuosissimus est ictus facile excipiunt. 4. Numquam ego fortunae credidi, etiam cum uideretur pacem agere; omnia illa quae in me indulgentissime conferebat, pecuniam honores gratiam, eo loco posui unde posset sine motu meo repetere. Interuallum inter illa et me magnum habui; itaque abstulit illa, non auulsit. Neminem aduersa fortuna comminuit nisi quem secunda decepit. 5. Illi qui munera eius uelut sua et perpetua amauerunt, qui se suspici propter illa uoluerunt, iacent et maerent cum uanos et pueriles animos, omnis solidae uoluptatis ignaros, falsa et mobilia oblectamenta destituunt: at ille qui se laetis rebus non inflauit nec mutatis contrahit. Aduersus utrumque statum inuictum animum tenet exploratae iam firmitatis; nam in ipsa felicitate quid contra infelicitatem ualeret expertus est. 6. Itaque ego in illis quae omnes optant existimaui semper nihil ueri boni inesse, tum inania et specioso ac deceptorio fucō circumlita inueni, intra nihil habentia fronti suae simile: nunc in his quae mala uocantur nihil tam terribile ac durum inuenio quam opinio uulgi minabatur. Verbum quidem ipsum persuasionem quadam et consensu

ferit: ita enim populus iussit, sed populi scita ex magna parte sapientes abrogant.

VI.

1. Remoto ergo iudicio plurium, quos prima rerum species, utcumque credita est, aufert, uideamus quid sit exilium. Nempe loci commutatio. Ne angustare uidear uim eius et quidquid pessimum in se habet subtrahere, hanc commutationem loci sequuntur incommoda, paupertas ignominia contemptus. Aduersus ista postea conflagam: interim primum illud intueri uolo, quid acerbi adferat ipsa loci commutatio.

2. ‘Carere patria intolerabile est.’ Aspice agedum hanc frequentiam, cui uix urbis immensae tecta sufficiunt: maxima pars istius turbae patria caret. Ex municipiis et coloniis suis, ex toto denique orbe terrarum confluerunt: alios adduxit ambitio, alios necessitas officii publici, alios inposita legatio, alios luxuria opportunum et opulentum uitae locum quaerens, alios liberalium studiorum cupiditas, alios spectacula; quosdam traxit amicitia, quosdam industria laxam ostendendae uirtuti nanta materiam; quidam uenalem formam attulerunt, quidam uenalem eloquentiam. 3. Nullum non hominum genus concucurrit in urbem et uirtutibus et uitae magna pretia ponentem. Iube istos omnes ad nomen citari et ‘unde domo’ quisque sit quaere: uidebis maiorem partem esse quae relictis sedibus suis uenerit in maximam quidem ac pulcherrimam urbem, non tamen suam. 4. Deinde ab hac ciuitate discede, quae ueluti communis potest dici, omnes urbes circum: nulla non magnam partem peregrinae multitudinis habet. Transi ab iis quarum amoena positio et opportunitas regionis plures adlicit, deserta loca et asperrimas insulas, Sciathum et Seriphum, Gyaram et Cossuran percense: nullum inuenies exilium in quo non aliquis animi causa moretur. 5. Quid tam nudum inueniri potest, quid tam abruptum undique quam hoc saxum? Quid ad copias respicienti ieiunius? Quid ad homines inmansuetius? Quid ad ipsum loci situm horridius? Quid ad caeli naturam intemperantius? Plures tamen hic peregrini quam ciues consistunt. Vsque eo ergo commutatio ipsa locorum grauis non est ut hic quoque locus a patria quosdam abduxerit. 6. Inuenio qui dicant inesse naturalem quandam irritationem animis commutandi sedes et transferendi domicilia; mobilis enim et inquieta homini mens data est, nusquam se tenet, spargitur, et cogitationes suas in omnia nota atque ignota dimittit, uaga et quietis inpatiens et nouitate rerum laetissima. 7. Quod non miraberis, si primam eius originem aspexeris: non est ex terreno et graui concreta corpore, ex illo caelesti spiritu descendit; caelestium autem natura semper in motu est, fugit et uelocissimo cursu agitur. Aspice sidera mundum inlustrantia: nullum eorum perstat. <Sol> labitur adsidue et locum ex loco mutat et, quamuis cum uniuerso uertatur, in contrarium nihilo minus ipsi mundo refertur, per omnis signorum partes discurrit, numquam resistit; perpetua eius agitatio et aliunde alio commigratio est. 8. Omnia uoluuntur semper et in transitu sunt; ut lex et naturae necessitas ordinauit, aliunde alio deferuntur; cum per certa annorum spatia orbis suos explicuerint, iterum ibunt per quae uenerant: i nunc et humanum animum, ex isdem quibus diuina constant seminibus compositum, moleste ferre transitum ac migrationem puta, cum dei natura adsidua et citatissima commutatione uel delectet se uel conseruet.

VII.

1. A caelestibus agedum te ad humana conuerte: uidebis gentes populosque uniuersos mutasse sedem. Quid sibi uolunt in mediis barbarorum regionibus Graecae urbes? Quid inter Indos Persasque Macedonicus sermo? Scythia et totus ille ferarum indomitarumque gentium tractus ciuitates Achaiae Ponticis inpositas litoribus ostentat: non perpetuae hiemis saeuitia, non hominum ingenia ad similitudinem caeli sui horrentia transferentibus domos suas obstiterunt. 2. Atheniensis in Asia turba est; Miletus quinque et septuaginta urbium populum in diuersa effudit; totum Italiae latus quod infero mari adluitur maior Graecia fuit. Tuscos Asia sibi uindicat; Tyrii Africam incolunt, [in] Hispaniam Poeni; Graeci se in Galliam inmiserunt, in Graeciam Galli; Pyrenaeus Germanorum transitus non inhiuit — per inuia, per incognita uersauit se humana leuitas. 3. Liberos coniugesque et graues senio parentes traxerunt. Alii longo errore iactati non iudicio elegerunt locum sed lassitudine proximum occupauerunt, alii armis sibi ius in aliena terra fecerunt; quasdam gentes, cum ignota peterent, mare hausit, quaedam ibi consederunt ubi illas rerum omnium inopia deposuit. 4. Nec omnibus eadem causa relinquendi quaerendique patriam fuit: alios excidia urbium suarum hostilibus armis elapsos in aliena spoliatos suis expulerunt; alios domestica seditio summouit; alios nimia superfluentis populi frequentia ad exonerandas uires emisit; alios pestilentia aut frequentes terrarum hiatus aut aliqua intoleranda infelicis soli uitia eiecerunt; quosdam fertilis orae et in maius laudatae fama corruptit. 5. Alios alia causa exciuit domibus suis: illud utique manifestum est, nihil eodem loco mansisse quo genitum est. Adsiduus generis humani discursus est; cotidie aliquid in tam magno orbe mutatur: noua urbium fundamenta iaciuntur, noua gentium nomina extinctis prioribus aut in accessionem ualidioris conuersis oriuntur. Omnes autem istae populorum transportationes quid aliud quam publica exilia sunt? 6. Quid te tam longo circumitu traho? Quid interest enumerare Antenorem Pataui conditorem et Euandrum in ripa Tiberis regna Arcadum conlocantem? Quid Diomedem aliosque quos Troianum bellum uictos simul uictoresque per alienas terras dissipauit? 7. Romanum imperium nempe auctorem exulem respicit, quem profugum capta patria, exiguas reliquias trahentem, necessitas et uictoris metus longinqua quaerentem in Italiam detulit. Hic deinde populus quot colonias in omnem prouinciam misit! ubicumque uicit Romanus, habitat. Ad hanc commutationem locorum libentes nomina dabant, et relictis aris suis trans maria sequebatur colonos senex. 8. Res quidem non desiderat plurium enumerationem; unum tamen adiciam quod in oculos se ingerit: haec ipsa insula saepe iam cultores mutauit. Vt antiquiora, quae uetustas obduxit, transeam, Phocide relictæ Graii qui nunc Massiliam incolunt prius in hac insula consederunt, ex qua quid eos fugauerit incertum est, utrum caeli grauitas an praepotentis Italiae conspectus an natura inportuosi maris; nam in causa non fuisse feritatem accolarum eo apparet quod maxime tunc trucibus et inconditis Galliae populis se interposuerunt. 9. Transierunt deinde Ligures in eam, transierunt et Hispani, quod ex similitudine ritus apparet; eadem enim tegmenta capitum idemque genus calciamenti quod Cantabris est, et uerba quaedam; nam totus sermo conuersatione Graecorum Ligurumque a patrio desciiuit. Deductae deinde sunt duae ciuium Romanorum coloniae, altera a Mario, altera a Sulla: totiens huius aridi et spinosi saxi mutatus est populus! 10. Vix denique inuenies ullam terram quam etiamnunc indigenae colant; permixta omnia et insiticia sunt. Alius alii successit: hic concupiuit quod illi fastidio fuit; ille unde expulerat eiectus est. Ita fato placuit, nullius rei eodem semper loco stare fortunam.

VIII.

1. Aduersus ipsam commutationem locorum, detractis ceteris incommodis quae exilio adhaerent, satis hoc remedii putat Varro, doctissimus Romanorum, quod quocumque uenimus eadem rerum natura utendum est; M. Brutus satis hoc putat, quod licet in exilium euntibus uirtutes suas secum ferre. 2. Haec etiam si quis singula parum iudicat efficacia ad consolandum exulem, utraque in unum conlata fatebitur plurimum posse. Quantulum enim est quod perdimus! duo quae pulcherrima sunt quocumque nos mouerimus sequentur, natura communis et propria uirtus. 3. Id actum est, mihi crede, ab illo, quisquis formator uniuersi fuit, siue ille deus est potens omnium, siue incorporalis ratio ingentium operum artifex, siue diuinus spiritus per omnia maxima ac minima aequali intentione diffusus, siue fatum et immutabilis causarum inter se cohaerentium series — id, inquam, actum est ut in alienum arbitrium nisi uilissima quaeque non caderent. 4. Quidquid optimum homini est, id extra humanam potentiam iacet, nec dari nec eripi potest. Mundus hic, quo nihil neque maius neque ornatus rerum natura genuit, <et> animus contemplator admiratorque mundi, pars eius magnificentissima, propria nobis et perpetua et tam diu nobiscum mansura sunt quam diu ipsi manebimus. 5. Alacres itaque et erecti quocumque res tulerit intrepido gradu properemus, emetiamur quascumque terras: nullum inueniri exilium intra mundum <potest; nihil enim quod intra mundum> est alienum homini est. Vndecumque ex aequo ad caelum erigitur acies, paribus interuallis omnia diuina ab omnibus humanis distant. 6. Proinde, dum oculi mei ab illo spectaculo cuius insatiabiles sunt non abducantur, dum mihi solem lunamque intueri liceat, dum ceteris inhaerere sideribus, dum ortus eorum occasusque et interualla et causas inuestigare uel ocuis meandi uel tardius, <dum> spectare tot per noctem stellas micantis et alias immobiles, alias non in magnum spatium exeuntis sed intra suum se circumagentis uestigium, quasdam subito erumpentis, quasdam igne fuso praestringentis aciem, quasi decidant, uel longo tractu cum luce multa praeteruolantis, dum cum his sim et caelestibus, qua homini fas est, inmiscer, dum animum ad cognatarum rerum conspectum tendentem in sublimi semper habeam, quantum refert mea quid

IX.

1. 'At non est haec terra frugiferarum aut laetarum arborum ferax; non magnis nec nauigabilibus fluminum alueis inrigatur; nihil gignit quod aliae gentes petant, uix ad tutelam incolentium fertilis; non pretiosus hic lapis caeditur, non auri argentique uenae eruuntur.' 2. Angustus animus est quem terrena delectant: ad illa abducendus est quae ubique aequae apparent, ubique aequae splendent. Et hoc cogitandum est, ista ueris bonis per falsa et praeue credita obstare. Quo longiores porticus expedierint, quo altius turres sustulerint, quo latius uicos porrexerint, quo depressius aestiuos specus foderint, quo maiori mole fastigia cenationum subdlexerint, hoc plus erit quod illis caelum abscondat. 3. In eam te regionem casus eiecit in qua lautissimum receptaculum casa est: ne [et] tu pusilli animi es et sordide se consolantis, si ideo id fortiter pateris quia Romuli casam nosti. Dic illud potius: 'istud humile tugurium nempe uirtutes recipit? iam omnibus templis formosius erit, cum illic iustitia conspecta fuerit, cum continentia, cum prudentia, pietas, omnium officiorum recte dispensandorum ratio, humanorum diuinorumque scientia. Nullus angustus est locus qui hanc tam magnarum uirtutum turbam capit; nullum exilium graue est in quod licet cum hoc ire comitatu.' 4. Brutus in eo libro quem de uirtute composuit ait se Marcellum uidisse Mytilenis exulantem et, quantum modo natura hominis pateretur, beatissime uiuentem neque umquam cupidiorum bonarum artium quam illo tempore. Itaque adicit uisum sibi se magis in exilium ire, qui sine illo rediturus esset, quam illum in exilio relinqui. 5. O fortunatiorem Marcellum eo tempore quo exilium suum Bruto adprobauit quam quo rei publicae consulatum! Quantus ille uir fuit qui effecit ut aliquis exul sibi uideretur quod ab exule recederet! Quantus uir fuit qui in admirationem sui adduxit hominem etiam Catoni suo mirandum! 6. Idem Brutus ait C. Caesarem Mytilenas praeteruectum, quia non sustineret uidere deformatum uirum. Illi quidem reditum inpetrauit senatus publicis precibus, tam sollicitus ac maestus ut omnes illo die Bruti habere animum uiderentur et non pro Marcello sed pro se deprecari, ne exules essent si sine illo fuissent; sed plus multo consecutus est quo die illum exulem Brutus relinquere non potuit, Caesar uidere. Contigit enim illi testimonium utriusque: Brutus sine Marcello reuerti se doluit, Caesar erubuit. 7. Num dubitas quin se ille [Marcellus] tantus uir sic ad tolerandum aequo animo exilium saepe adhortatus sit: 'quod patria cares, non est miserum: ita te disciplinis inbuisti ut scires omnem locum sapienti uiro patriam esse. Quid porro? hic qui te expulit, non ipse per annos decem continuos patria caruit? propagandi sine dubio imperii causa; sed nempe caruit. 8. Nunc ecce trahit illum ad se Africa resurgentis belli minis plena, trahit Hispania, quae fractas et adflictas partes refouet, trahit Aegyptus infida, totus denique orbis, qui ad occasionem concussi imperii intentus est: cui primum rei occurret? cui parti se opponet? Aget illum per omnes terras uictoria sua. Illum suspiciant et colant gentes: tu uiue Bruto miratore contentus.'

X.

1. Bene ergo exilium tulit Marcellus nec quicquam in animo eius mutauit loci mutatio, quamuis eam paupertas sequeretur; in qua nihil mali esse, quisquis modo nondum peruenit in insaniam omnia subuertentis auaritiae atque luxuriae intellegit. Quantulum enim est quod in tutelam hominis necessarium est! et cui deesse hoc potest ullam modo uirtutem habenti? 2. Quod ad me quidem pertinet, intellego me non opes sed occupationes perdisse. Corporis exigua desideria sunt: frigus summoueri uult, alimentis famem ac sitim extinguere; quidquid extra concupiscitur, uitiiis, non usibus laboratur. Non est necesse omne perscrutari profundum nec strage animalium uentrem onerare nec conchylia ultimi maris ex ignoto litore eruere: di istos deaeque perdant quorum luxuria tam inuidiosi imperii fines transcendit! 3. Ultra Phasin capi uolunt quod ambitiosam popinam instruat, nec piget a Parthis, a quibus nondum poenas repetimus, aues petere. Vndique conuehant omnia nota fastidienti gulae; quod dissolutus deliciis stomachus uix admittat ab ultimo portatur oceano; uomunt ut edant, edunt ut uomant, et epulas quas toto orbe conquirunt nec concoquere dignantur. Ista si quis despicit, quid illi paupertas nocet? Si quis concupiscit, illi paupertas etiam prodest; inuitus enim sanatur et, si remedia ne coactus quidem recipit, interim certe, dum non potest, illa nolenti similis est. 4. C. Caesar [Augustus], quem mihi uidetur rerum natura edidisse ut ostenderet quid summa uitia in summa fortuna possent, centiens sestertio cenauit uno die; et in hoc omnium adiutus ingenio uix tamen inuenit quomodo trium prouinciarum tributum una cena fieret. 5. O miserabiles, quorum palatum nisi ad pretiosos cibos non excitatur! Pretiosos autem non eximius sapor aut aliqua faucium dulcedo sed raritas et difficultas parandi facit. Alioqui, si ad sanam illis mentem placeat reuerti, quid opus est tot artibus uentri seruientibus? quid mercaturis? quid uastatione siluarum? quid profundi perscrutatione? Passim iacent alimenta quae rerum natura omnibus locis disposuit; sed haec uelut caeci transeunt et omnes regiones peruagantur, maria traiciunt et, cum famem exiguo possint sedare, magno iniritant. 6. Libet dicere: 'quid deducitis naues? Quid manus et aduersus feras et aduersus homines armatis? Quid tanto tumultu discurretis? Quid opes opibus adgeritis? Non uultis cogitare quam parua uobis corpora sint? Nonne furor et ultimus mentium error est, cum tam exiguum capias, cupere multum? Licet itaque augeatis census, promoueatis fines, numquam tamen corpora uestra laxabitis. Cum bene cesserit negotiatio, multum militia rettulerit, cum indagati undique cibi coierint, non habebitis ubi istos apparatus uestros conlocetis. 7. Quid tam multa conquiritis? Scilicet maiores nostri, quorum uirtus etiamnunc uitia nostra sustentat, infelices erant, qui sibi manu sua parabant cibum, quibus terra cubile erat, quorum tecta nondum auro fulgebant, quorum templa nondum gemmis nitebant; itaque tunc per fictiles deos religiose iurabatur: qui illos inuocauerant, ad hostem morituri, ne fallerent, redibant. 8. Scilicet minus beate uiuebat dictator noster qui Samnitium legatos audit cum uilissimum cibum in foco ipse manu sua uersaret — illa qua iam saepe hostem percusserat laureamque in Capitolini Iouis gremio reposuerat — quam Apicius nostra memoria uixit, qui in ea urbe ex qua aliquando philosophi uelut corruptores iuuentutis abire iussi sunt scientiam popinae professus disciplina sua saeculum infecit.’ Cuius exitum nosse operae pretium est. 9. Cum sestertium milliens in culinam coniecisset, cum tot congiaria principum et ingens Capitolii uestigial singulis comisationibus exsorsisset, aere alieno oppressus rationes suas tunc primum coactus inspexit: superfuturum sibi sestertium centiens computauit et uelut in ultima fame uicturus si in sestertio centiens uixisset, ueneno uitam finiuit. 10. Quanta luxuria erat cui centiens sestertium egestas fuit! i nunc et puta pecuniae modum ad rem pertinere, non animi. Sestertium centiens aliquis extimuit et quod alii uoto petunt ueneno fugit. Illi uero tam prauae mentis homini ultima potio saluberrima fuit: tunc uenena edebat bibebatque cum immensis epulis non delectaretur tantum sed gloriaretur, cum uitia sua ostentaret, cum ciuitatem in luxuriam suam conuerteret, cum iuuentutem ad imitationem sui sollicitaret etiam sine malis exemplis per se docilem. 11. Haec accidunt diuitias non ad rationem reuocantibus, cuius certi fines sunt, sed ad uitiosam consuetudinem, cuius inmensum et incomprehensibile arbitrium est. Cupiditati nihil satis est, naturae satis est etiam parum. Nullum ergo paupertas exulis incommodum habet; nullum enim tam inops exilium est quod non

XI.

1. 'At uestem ac domum desideraturus est exsul.' Haec quoque ad usum tantum desiderabit: neque tectum ei deerit neque uelamentum; aequae enim exiguo tegitur corpus quam alitur; nihil homini natura quod necessarium faciebat fecit operosum. 2. Sed desiderat saturatam multo conchylio purpuram, intextam auro uariisque et coloribus distinctam et artibus: non fortunae iste uitio sed suo pauper est. Etiam si illi quidquid amisit restitueris, nihil ages; plus enim restituto deerit ex eo quod cupit quam exsuli ex eo quod habuit. 3. Sed desiderat aureis fulgentem uasis supellectilem et antiquis nominibus artificum argentum nobile, aes paucorum insania pretiosum et seruorum turbam quae quamuis magnam domum angustet, iumentorum corpora differta et coacta pinguescere et nationum omnium lapides: ista congerantur licet, numquam explebunt inexplebilem animum, non magis quam ullus sufficiet umor ad satiandum eum cuius desiderium non ex inopia sed ex aestu ardentium uiscerum oritur; non enim sitis illa sed morbus est. 4. Nec hoc in pecunia tantum aut alimentis euenit; eadem natura est in omni desiderio quod modo non ex inopia sed ex uitio nascitur: quidquid illi congesseris, non finis erit cupiditatis sed gradus. Qui continebit itaque se intra naturalem modum, paupertatem non sentiet; qui naturalem modum excedet, eum in summis quoque opibus paupertas sequetur. Necessariis rebus et exilia sufficiunt, superuacuis nec regna. 5. Animus est qui diuites facit; hic in exilia sequitur, et in solitudinibus asperrimis, cum quantum satis est sustinendo corpori inuenit, ipse bonis suis abundat et fruitur: pecunia ad animum nihil pertinet, non magis quam ad deos immortalis. 6. Omnia ista quae imperita ingenia et nimis corporibus suis addicta suspiciunt, lapides aurum argentum et magni leuatique mensarum orbis, terrena sunt pondera, quae non potest amare sincerus animus ac naturae suae memor, leuis ipse, expeditus, et quandoque emissus fuerit ad summa emicaturus; interim, quantum per moras membrorum et hanc circumfusam grauem sarcinam licet, celeri et uolucris cogitatione diuina perlustrat. 7. Ideoque nec exulare umquam potest, liber et deis cognatus et omni mundo omnique aevo par; nam cogitatio eius circa omne caelum it, in omne praeteritum futurumque tempus inmittitur. Corpusculum hoc, custodia et uinculum animi, huc atque illuc iactatur; in hoc supplicia, in hoc latrocinia, in hoc morbi exercentur: animus quidem ipse sacer et aeternus est et cui non possit inici manus.

XII.

1. Ne me putes ad eleuanda incommoda paupertatis, quam nemo grauem sentit nisi qui putat, uti tantum praeceptis sapientium, primum aspice quanto maior pars sit pauperum, quos nihilo notabis tristiores sollicitioresque diuitibus: immo nescio an eo laetiores sint quo animus illorum in pauciora dstringitur. 2. Transeamus [a pauperibus, ueniamus] ad locupletes: quam multa tempora sunt quibus pauperibus similes sint! Circumcisae sunt peregrinantium sarcinae, et quotiens festinationem necessitas itineris exegit, comitum turba dimittitur. Militantes quotam partem rerum suarum secum habent, cum omnem apparatus castrensis disciplina summoueant! 3. Nec tantum condicio illos temporum aut locorum inopia pauperibus exaequat: sumunt quosdam dies, cum iam illos diuitiarum taedium cepit, quibus humi cenent et remoto auro argentoque fictilibus utantur. Dementes! hoc quod aliquando concupiscunt semper timent. O quanta illos caligo mentium, quanta ignorantia ueritatis * * * exercet, quam uoluptatis causa imitantur! 4. Me quidem, quotiens ad antiqua exempla respexi, paupertatis uti solaciis pudet, quoniam quidem eo temporum luxuria prolapsa est ut maius uiaticum exulum sit quam olim patrimonium principum fuit. Vnum fuisse Homero seruum, tres Platoni, nullum Zenoni, a quo coepit Stoicorum rigida ac uirilisi sapientia, satis constat: num ergo quisquam eos misere uixisse dicet ut non ipse miserrimus ob hoc omnibus uideatur? 5. Menenius Agrippa, qui inter patres ac plebem publicae gratiae sequester fuit, aere conlato funeratus est. Atilius Regulus, cum Poenos in Africa funderet, ad senatum scripsit mercennarium suum discessisse et ab eo desertum esse rus, quod senatui publice curari dum abesset Regulus placuit: fuitne tanti seruum non habere ut colonus eius populus Romanus esset? 6. Scipionis filiae ex aerario dotem acceperunt, quia nihil illis reliquerat pater: aequum mehercules erat populum Romanum tributum Scipioni semel conferre, cum a Carthagine semper exigeret. O felices uiros puellarum quibus populus Romanus loco soceri fuit! Beatioresne istos putas quorum pantomimae deciens sestertio nubunt quam Scipionem, cuius liberi a senatu, tutore suo, in dotem aes graue acceperunt? 7. Dedignatur aliquis paupertatem, cuius tam clarae imagines sunt? Indignatur exul aliquid sibi deesse, cum defuerit Scipioni dos, Regulo mercennarius, Menenio funus, cum omnibus illis quod deerat ideo honestius suppletum sit quia defuerat? His ergo aduocatis non tantum tuta est sed etiam gratiosa paupertas.

XIII.

1. Responderi potest: 'quid artificiose ista diducis quae singula sustineri possunt, conlata non possunt? Commutatio loci tolerabilis est, si tantum locum mutes; paupertas tolerabilis est, si ignominia abest, quae uel sola opprimere animos solet.' 2. Aduersus hunc, quisquis me malorum turba terrebit, his uerbis utendum erit: 'si contra unam quamlibet partem fortunae satis tibi roboris est, idem aduersus omnis erit. Cum semel animum uirtus indurauit, undique inuulnerabilem praestat. Si auaritia dimisit, uehementissima generis humani pestis, moram tibi ambitio non faciet; si ultimum diem non quasi poenam sed quasi naturae legem aspicias, ex quo pectore metum mortis eieceris, in id nullius rei timor audebit intrare; 3. si cogitas libidinem non uoluptatis causa homini datam sed propagandi generis, quem non uiolauerit hoc secretum et infixum uisceribus ipsis exitium, omnis alia cupiditas intactum praeteribit. Non singula uitia ratio sed pariter omnia prosternit: in uniuersum semel uincitur.' 4. Ignominia tu putas quemquam sapientem moueri posse, qui omnia in se reposuit, qui ab opinionibus uulgi secessit? Plus etiam quam ignominia est mors ignominiosa: Socrates tamen eodem illo uultu quo triginta tyrannos solus aliquando in ordinem redegerat carcerem intrauit, ignominiam ipsi loco detracturus; neque enim poterat carcer uideri in quo Socrates erat. 5. Quis usque eo ad conspiciendam ueritatem excaecatus est ut ignominiam putet Marci Catonis fuisse duplicem in petitione praeturae et consulatus repulsam? ignominia illa praeturae et consulatus fuit, quibus ex Catone honor habebatur. 6. Nemo ab alio contemnitur, nisi a se ante contemptus est. Humilis et proiectus animus est isti contumeliae opportunus; qui uero aduersus saeuissimos casus se extollit et ea mala quibus alii opprimuntur euertit, ipsas miseras infularum loco habet, quando ita adfecti sumus ut nihil aequae magnae apud nos admirationem occupet quam homo fortiter miser. 7. Ducebatur Athenis ad supplicium Aristides, cui quisquis occurrerat deiciebat oculos et ingemescebat, non tamquam in hominem iustum sed tamquam in ipsam iustitiam animaduertetur; inuentus est tamen qui in faciem eius inspueret. Poterat ob hoc moleste ferre quod sciebat neminem id ausurum puri oris; at ille abstersit faciem et subridens ait comitanti se magistratui: 'admone istum ne postea tam inprobe oscitet.' Hoc fuit contumeliam ipsi contumeliae facere. 8. Scio quosdam dicere contemptu nihil esse grauius, mortem ipsis potiore uideri. His ego respondebo et exilium saepe contemptione omni carere: si magnus uir cecidit, magnus iacuit, non magis illum contemni quam aedium sacrarum ruinae calcantur, quas religiosi aequae ac stantis adorant.

XIV.

1. Quoniam meo nomine nihil habes, mater carissima, quod te in infinitas lacrimas agat, sequitur ut causae tuae te stimulent. Sunt autem duae; nam aut illud te mouet quod praesidium aliquod uideris amisisse, aut illud quod desiderium ipsum per se pati non potes.

2. Prior pars mihi leuiter perstringenda est; noui enim animum tuum nihil in suis praeter ipsos amantem. Viderint illae matres quae potentiam liberorum muliebri inpotentia exercent, quae, quia feminis honores non licet gerere, per illos ambitiosae sunt, quae patrimonia filiorum et exhauriunt et captant, quae eloquentiam commodando aliis fatigant: 3. tu liberorum tuorum bonis plurimum gauisa es, minimum usa; tu liberalitati nostrae semper inposuisti modum, cum tuae non inponeres; tu filia familiae locupletibus filiis ultro contulisti; tu patrimonia nostra sic administrasti ut tamquam in tuis laborares, tamquam alienis abstineres; tu gratiae nostrae, tamquam alienis rebus utereris, pepercisti, et ex honoribus nostris nihil ad te nisi uoluptas et inpena pertinuit. Numquam indulgentia ad utilitatem respexit; non potes itaque ea in erepto filio desiderare quae in incolumi numquam ad te pertinere duxisti.

XV.

1. Illo omnis consolatio mihi uertenda est unde uera uis materni doloris oritur: 'ergo complexu fili carissimi careo; non conspectu eius, non sermone possum frui. Vbi est ille quo uiso tristem uultum relaxaui, in quo omnes sollicitudines meas deposui? Vbi conloquia, quorum inexplebilis eram? Vbi studia, quibus libentius quam femina, familiarius quam mater intereram? Vbi ille occursus? Vbi matre uisa semper puerilis hilaritas?' 2. Adicis istis loca ipsa gratulationum et conuictuum et, ut necesse est, efficacissimas ad uexandos animos recentis conuersationis notas. Nam hoc quoque aduersus te crudeliter fortuna molita est, quod te ante tertium demum diem quam percussus sum securam nec quicquam tale metuentem digredi uoluit. 3. Bene nos longinquitas locorum diuiserat, bene aliquot annorum absentia huic te malo praeparauerat: redisti, non ut uoluptatem ex filio perciperes, sed ut consuetudinem desiderii perderes. Si multo ante afuisses, fortius tulisses, ipso interuallo desiderium molliente; si non recessisses, ultimum certe fructum biduo diutius uidendi filium tulisses: nunc crudele fatum ita composuit ut nec fortunae meae interesses nec absentiae adsuesceres. 4. Sed quanto ista duriora sunt, tanto maior tibi uirtus aduocanda est, et uelut cum hoste noto ac saepe iam uicto acrius congregiendum. Non ex intacto corpore tuo sanguis hic fluxit: per ipsas cicatrices percussa es.

XVI.

1. Non est quod utaris excusatione muliebris nominis, cui paene concessum est inmoderatum in lacrimis ius, non inmensum tamen; et ideo maiores decem mensum spatium lugentibus uiros dederunt ut cum pertinacia muliebris maeroris publica constitutione deciderent. Non prohibuerunt luctus sed finierunt; nam et infinito dolore, cum aliquem ex carissimis amiseris, adfici stulta indulgentia est, et nullo inhumana duritia: optimum inter pietatem et rationem temperamentum est et sentire desiderium et opprimere. 2. Non est quod ad quasdam feminas respicias quarum tristitiam semel sumptam mors finiuit (nosti quasdam quae amissis filiis inposita lugubria numquam exuerunt): a te plus exigit uita ab initio fortior; non potest muliebris excusatio contingere ei a qua omnia muliebria uitia afuerunt. 3. Non te maximum saeculi malum, inpudicitia, in numerum plurium adduxit; non gemmae te, non margaritae flexerunt; non tibi diuitiae uelut maximum generis humani bonum refulserunt; non te, bene in antiqua et seuera institutam domo, periculosa etiam probis peiorum detorsit imitatio; numquam te fecunditatis tuae, quasi exprobraret aetatem, puduit, numquam more aliarum, quibus omnis commendatio ex forma petitur, tumescentem uterum abscondisti quasi indecens onus, nec intra uiscera tua conceptas spes liberorum elisisti; 4. non faciem coloribus ac lenociniis polluisti; numquam tibi placuit uestis quae nihil amplius nudaret cum poneretur: unicum tibi ornamentum, pulcherrima et nulli obnoxia aetati forma, maximum decus uisa est pudicitia. 5. Non potes itaque ad optinendum dolorem muliebre nomen praetendere, ex quo te uirtutes tuae seduxerunt; tantum debes a feminarum lacrimis abesse quantum  uitiiis. Ne feminae quidem te sinent intabescere uulneri tuo, sed ~leuior~ necessario maerore cito defunctam iubebunt exsurgere, si modo illas intueri uoles feminas quas conspecta uirtus inter magnos uiros posuit. 6. Corneliam ex duodecim liberis ad duos fortuna redegerat: si numerare funera Corneliae uelles, amiserat decem, si aestimare, amiserat Gracchos. Flentibus tamen circa se et fatum eius execrantibus interdixit ne fortunam accusarent, quae sibi filios Gracchos dedisset. Ex hac femina debuit nasci qui diceret in contione, ‘tu matri meae male dicas quae me peperit?’ Multo mihi uox matris uidetur animosior: filius magno aestimauit Gracchorum natales, mater et funera. 7. Rutilia Cottam filium secuta est in exilium et usque eo fuit indulgentia constricta ut mallet exilium pati quam desiderium, nec ante in patriam quam cum filio rediit. Eundem iam reducem et in re publica florentem tam fortiter amisit quam secuta est, nec quisquam lacrimas eius post elatum filium notauit. In expulso uirtutem ostendit, in amisso prudentiam; nam et nihil illam a pietate deterruit et nihil in tristitia superuacua stultaque detinuit. Cum his te numerari feminis uolo; quarum uitam semper imitata es, earum in coercenda comprimendaque aegritudine optime sequeris exemplum.

XVII.

1. Scio rem non esse in nostra potestate nec ullum adfectum seruire, minime uero eum qui ex dolore nascitur; ferox enim et aduersus omne remedium contumax est. Volumus interim illum obruere et deuorare gemitus; per ipsum tamen compositum fictumque uultum lacrimae profunduntur. Ludis interim aut gladiatoribus animum occupamus; at illum inter ipsa quibus auocatur spectacula leuis aliqua desiderii nota subruit. 2. Ideo melius est uincere illum quam fallere; nam qui delusus et uoluptatibus aut occupationibus abductus est resurgit et ipsa quiete impetum ad saeuiendum colligit: at quisquis rationi cessit, in perpetuum componitur. Non sum itaque tibi illa monstraturus quibus usos esse multos scio, ut peregrinatione te uel longa detineas uel amoena delectes, ut rationum accipiendarum diligentia, patrimonii administratione multum occupes temporis, ut semper nouo te aliquo negotio inplices: omnia ista ad exiguum momentum prosunt nec remedia doloris sed impedimenta sunt; ego autem malo illum desinere quam decipi. 3. Itaque illo te duco quo omnibus qui fortunam fugiunt confugiendum est, ad liberalia studia: illa sanabunt uulnus tuum, illa omnem tristitiam tibi euellent. His etiam si numquam adsuesses, nunc utendum erat; sed quantum tibi patris mei antiquus rigor permisit, omnes bonas artes non quidem comprehendisti, attigisti tamen. 4. Vtinam quidem uirorum optimus, pater meus, minus maiorum consuetudini deditus uoluisset te praeceptis sapientiae erudiri potius quam inbui! non parandum tibi nunc esset auxilium contra fortunam sed proferendum. Propter istas quae litteris non ad sapientiam utuntur sed ad luxuriam instruuntur minus te indulgere studiis passus est. Beneficio tamen rapacis ingenii plus quam pro tempore hausisti; iacta sunt disciplinarum omnium fundamenta: nunc ad illas reuertere; tutam te praestabunt. 5. Illae consolabuntur, illae delectabunt, illae si bona fide in animum tuum intrauerint, numquam amplius intrabit dolor, numquam sollicitudo, numquam afflictationis inritae superuacua uexatio. Nulli horum patebit pectus tuum; nam ceteris uitis iam pridem clusum est. Haec quidem certissima praesidia sunt et quae sola te fortunae eripere possint.

XVIII.

1. Sed quia, dum in illum portum quem tibi studia promittunt peruenis, adminiculis quibus innitaris opus est, uolo interim solacia tibi tua ostendere. 2. Respice fratres meos, quibus saluis fas tibi non est accusare fortunam. In utroque habes quod te diuersa uirtute delectet: alter honores industria consecutus est, alter sapienter contempsit. Adquiesce alterius fili dignitate, alterius quiete, utriusque pietate. Noui fratrum meorum intimos adfectus: alter in hoc dignitatem excolit ut tibi ornamento sit, alter in hoc se ad tranquillam quietamque uitam recepit ut tibi uacet. 3. Bene liberos tuos et in auxilium et in oblectamentum fortuna disposuit: potes alterius dignitate defendi, alterius otio frui. Certabunt in te officiis et unius desiderium duorum pietate supplebitur. Audacter possum promittere: nihil tibi deerit praeter numerum.

4. Ab his ad nepotes quoque respice: Marcum blandissimum puerum, ad cuius conspectum nulla potest durare tristitia; nihil tam magnum, nihil tam recens in cuiusquam pectore fuit quod non circumfusus ille permulceat. 5. Cuius non lacrimas illius hilaritas supprimat? Cuius non contractum sollicitudine animum illius argutiae soluant? Quem non in iocos euocabit illa lasciui? Quem non in se conuertet et abducat infixum cogitationibus illa neminem satiatura garrulitas? Deos oro, contingat hunc habere nobis superstitem! 6. In me omnis factorum crudelitas lassata consistat; quidquid matri dolendum fuit, in me transierit, quidquid auiae, in me. Floreat reliqua in suo statu turba: nihil de orbitate, nihil de condicione mea querar, fuerim tantum nihil amplius doliturae domus piammentum. 7. Tene in gremio cito tibi daturam pronepotes Nouatillam, quam sic in me transtuleram, sic mihi adscripseram, ut possit uideri, quod me amisit, quamuis saluo patre pupilla; hanc et pro me dilige. Abstulit illi nuper fortuna matrem: tua potest efficere pietas ut perdidisse se matrem doleat tantum, non et sentiat. 8. Nunc mores eius compone, nunc forma: altius praecepta descendunt quae teneris inprimuntur aetatibus. Tuis adsuescat sermonibus, ad tuum fingatur arbitrium: multum illi dabis, etiam si nihil dederis praeter exemplum. Hoc tibi tam sollemne officium pro remedio erit; non potest enim animum pie dolentem a sollicitudine auertere nisi aut ratio aut honesta occupatio.

9. Numerarem inter magna solacia patrem quoque tuum, nisi abesset. Nunc tamen ex adfectu tuo qui illius in te sit cogita: intelleges quanto iustius sit te illi seruari quam mihi inpendi. Quotiens te inmodica uis doloris inuaserit et sequi se iubebit, patrem cogita. Cui tu quidem tot nepotes pronepotesque dando effecisti ne unica esses; consummatio tamen aetatis actae feliciter in te uertitur. Illo uiuo nefas est te quod uixeris queri.

XIX.

1. Maximum adhuc solacium tuum tacueram, sororem tuam, illud fidelissimum tibi pectus, in quod omnes curae tuae pro indiuiso transferuntur, illum animum omnibus nobis maternum. Cum hac tu lacrimas tuas miscuisti, in huius primum respirasti sinu. 2. Illa quidem adfectus tuos semper sequitur; in mea tamen persona non tantum pro te dolet. Illius manibus in urbem perlatum sum, illius pio maternoque nutricio per longum tempus aeger conualui; illa pro quaestura mea gratiam suam extendit et, quae ne sermonis quidem aut clarae salutationis sustinuit audaciam, pro me uicit indulgentia uerecundiam. Nihil illi seductum uitae genus, nihil modestia in tanta feminarum petulantia rustica, nihil quies, nihil secreti et ad otium repositi mores obstiterunt quominus pro me etiam ambitiosa fieret. 3. Hoc est, mater carissima, solacium quo reficiaris: illi te quantum potes iunge, illius artissimis amplexibus alliga. Solent maerentes ea quae maxime diligunt fugere et libertatem dolori suo quaerere: tu ad illam te, quidquid cogitaueris, confer; siue seruare istum habitum uoles siue deponere, apud illam inuenies uel finem doloris tui uel comitem. 4. Sed si prudentiam perfectissimae feminae noui, non patietur te nihil profuturo maerore consumi et exemplum tibi suum, cuius ego etiam spectator fui, narrabit.

Carissimum uirum amiserat, auunculum nostrum, cui uirgo nupserat, in ipsa quidem nauigatione; tulit tamen eodem tempore et luctum et metum euictisque tempestatibus corpus eius naufraga euexit. 5. O quam multarum egregia opera in obscuro iacent! Si huic illa simplex admirandis uirtutibus contigisset antiquitas, quanto ingeniorum certamine celebraretur uxor quae oblita inbecillitatis, oblita metuendi etiam firmissimis maris, caput suum periculis pro sepultura obiecit et, dum cogitat de uiri funere, nihil de suo timuit! Nobilitatur carminibus omnium quae se pro coniuge uicariam dedit: hoc amplius est, discrimine uitae sepulcrum uiro quaerere; maior est amor qui pari periculo minus redimit.

6. Post hoc nemo miretur quod per sedecim annos quibus Aegyptum maritus eius optinuit numquam in publico conspecta est, neminem prouincialem domum suam admisit, nihil a uiro petit, nihil a se peti passa est. Itaque loquax et in contumelias praefectorum ingeniosa prouincia, in qua etiam qui uitauerunt culpam non effugerunt infamiam, uelut unicum sanctitatis exemplum suspexit et, quod illi difficillimum est cui etiam periculosi sales placent, omnem uerborum licentiam continuit et hodie similem illi, quamuis numquam speret, semper optat. Multum erat, si per sedecim annos illam prouincia probasset: plus est quod ignorauit. 7. Haec non ideo refero ut laudes eius exequar, quas circumscribere est tam parce transcurrere, sed ut intellegas magni animi esse feminam quam non ambitio, non auaritia, comites omnis potentiae et pestes, uicerunt, non metus mortis iam exarmata naue naufragium suum spectantem deterruit quominus exanimi uiro haerens non quaereret quemadmodum inde exiret sed quemadmodum efferret. Huic parem uirtutem exhibeas oportet et animum a luctu recipias et id agas ne quis te putet partus tui paenitere.

XX.

1. Ceterum quia necesse est, cum omnia feceris, cogitationes tamen tuas subinde ad me recurrere nec quemquam nunc ex liberis tuis frequentius tibi obuersari, non quia illi minus cari sunt sed quia naturale est manum saepius ad id referre quod dolet, qualem me cogites accipe: laetum et alacrem uelut optimis rebus. Sunt enim optimae, quoniam animus omnis occupationis expers operibus suis uacat et modo se leuioribus studiis oblectat, modo ad considerandam suam uniuersique naturam ueri auidus insurgit. 2. Terras primum situmque earum quaerit, deinde condicionem circumfusi maris cursusque eius alternos et recursus; tunc quidquid inter caelum terrasque plenum formidinis interiacet perspicit et hoc tonitribus fulminibus uentorum flatibus ac nimborum niuisque et grandinis iactu tumultuosum spatium; tum peragratis humilioribus ad summa perrumpit et pulcherrimo diuinorum spectaculo fruitur, aeternitatis suae memor in omne quod fuit futurumque est uadit omnibus saeculis.

I.

* * * nostrae compares, firma sunt; si redigas ad condicionem naturae omnia destruentis et unde edidit eodem revocantis, caduca sunt. Quid enim immortale manus mortales fecerunt? Septem illa miracula et si qua his multo mirabiliora sequentium annorum exstruxit ambitio aliquando solo aequata visentur. Ita est: nihil perpetuum, pauca diuturna sunt; aliud alio modo fragile est, rerum exitus variantur, ceterum quicquid coepit et desinit. Mundo quidam minantur interitum et huc universum, quod omnia divina humanaque complectitur, si fas putas credere, dies aliquis dissipabit et in confusionem veterem tenebrasque demerget: eat nunc aliquis et singulas compleret animas; Carthaginis ac Numantiae Corinthique cinerem et si quid aliud altius cecidit lamentetur, cum etiam hoc quod non habet quo cadat sit interiturum; eat aliquis et fata tantum aliquando nefas ausura sibi non pepercisse conqueratur. Quis tam superbae impotentisque adrogantiae est, ut in hac naturae necessitate omnia ad eundem finem revocantis se unum ac suos seponi velit ruinaeque etiam ipsi mundo imminenti aliquam domum subtrahat? Maximum ergo solacium est cogitare id sibi accidisse, quod omnes ante se passi sunt omnesque passuri; et ideo mihi videtur rerum natura, quod gravissimum fecerat, commune fecisse, ut crudelitatem fati consolaretur aequalitas.

II.

Illud quoque te non minimum adiuverit, si cogitaveris nihil profuturum dolorem tuum nec illi, quem desideras, nec tibi; noles enim longum esse, quod inritum est. Nam si quicquam tristitia profecturi sumus, non recuso quicquid lacrimarum fortunae meae superfuit tuae fundere; inveniam etiamnunc per hos exhaustos iam fletibus domesticis oculos quod effluat, si modo id tibi futurum bono est. Quid cessas? Conqueramur, atque adeo ipse hanc litem meam faciam: 'iniquissima omnium iudicio Fortuna, adhuc videbaris sinu eum hominem continuisse, qui munere tuo tantam venerationem receperat, ut, quod raro ulli contigit, felicitas eius effugeret invidiam: ecce eum dolorem illi, quem salvo Caesare accipere maximum poterat, impressisti, et cum bene illum undequique circuisses, intellexisti hac parte tantummodo patere ictibus tuis. Quid enim illi aliud faceres? Pecuniam eriperes? Numquam illi obnoxius fuit; nunc quoque, quantum potest, illam a se abigit et in tanta facilitate acquirendi nullum maiorem ex ea fructum quam contemptum eius petit. Eriperes illi amicos? Sciebas tam amabilem esse, ut facile in locum amissorum posset alios substituere; unum enim hunc ex eis, quos in principali domo potentes vidi, cognovisse videor, quem omnibus amicis habere cum expediat, magis tamen etiam libet. Eriperes illi bonam opinionem? Solidior est haec apud eum, quam ut a te quoque ipsa concuti possit. Eriperes bonam valetudinem? Sciebas animum eius liberalibus disciplinis, quibus non innutritus tantum sed innatus est, sic esse fundatum, ut supra omnis corporis dolores emereret. Eriperes spiritum? Quantulum nocuisses! Longissimum illi ingeni aevum fama promisit; id egit ipse, ut meliore sui parte duraret et compositis eloquentiae praeclaris operibus a mortalitate se vindicaret. Quam diu fuerit ullus litteris honor, quam diu steterit aut Latinae linguae potentia aut Graecae gratia, vigebit cum maximis viris, quorum se ingeniis vel contulit vel, si hoc verecundia eius recusat, adplicuit. Hoc ergo unum excogitasti, quomodo maxime illi posses nocere; quo melior est enim quisque, hoc saepius ferre te consuevit sine ullo dilectu furem et inter ipsa beneficia metuendam. Quantulum erat tibi immunem ab hac iniuria praestare eum hominem, in quem videbatur indulgentia tua ratione certa pervenisse et non ex tuo more temere incidisse!’

III.

Adiciamus, si vis, ad has querellas ipsius adulescentis interceptam inter prima incrementa indolem: dignus fuit ille te fratre. Tu certe eras dignissimus, qui ne ex indigno quidem quicquam doleres fratre: redditur illi testimonium aequale omnium hominum; desideratur in tuum honorem, laudatur in suum. Nihil in illo fuit, quod non libenter agnosceres. Tu quidem etiam minus bono fratri fuisses bonus, sed in illo pietas tua idoneam nacta materiam multo se liberior exercuit. Nemo potentiam eius iniuria sensit, numquam ille te fratrem ulli minatus est; ad exemplum se modestiae tuae formaverat cogitabatque, quantum tu et ornamentum tuorum esses et onus: suffecit ille huic sarcinae. O dura fata et nullis aequa virtutibus! Antequam felicitatem suam nosset frater tuus, exemptus est. Parum autem me indignari scio; nihil est enim difficilius quam magno dolori paria verba reperire. Etiamnunc tamen, si quid proficere possumus, conqueramur: ‘quid tibi voluisti, tam iniusta et tam violenta Fortuna? Tam cito te indulgentiae tuae paenituit? Quae ista crudelitas est in medios fratres impetum facere et tam cruenta rapina concordissimam turbam imminuere, tam bene stipatum optimorum adulescentium domum, in nullo fratre degenerantem, turbare et sine ulla causa delibare [voluisti]! Nihil ergo prodest innocentia ad omnem legem exacta, nihil antiqua frugalitas, nihil felicitatis summae potentia summa conservata abstinencia, nihil sincerus et tutus litterarum amor, nihil ab omni labe mens vacans? Luget Polybius, et in uno fratre quid de reliquis possit metuere admonitus etiam de ipsis doloris sui solaciis timet. Facinus indignum! Luget Polybius et aliquid propitio dolet Caesare! Hoc sine dubio, impotens fortuna, captasti, ut ostenderes neminem contra te ne a Caesare quidem posse defendi.’

Diutius accusare fata possumus, mutare non possumus: stant dura et inexorabilia; nemo illa convicio, nemo fletu, nemo causa movet; nihil umquam ulli parcunt nec remittunt. Proinde parcamus lacrimis nihil proficientibus; facilius enim nos inferis dolor iste adiciet quam illos nobis reducet: qui si nos torquet, non adiuvat, primo quoque tempore deponendus est et ab inanibus solaciis atque amara quadam libidine dolendi animus recipiendus est. Nam lacrimis nostris nisi ratio finem fecerit, fortuna non faciet. Omnis aegedum mortalis circumspice, larga ubique flendi et adsidua materia est: alium ad cotidianum opus laboriosa egestas vocat, alium ambitio numquam quieta sollicitat, alius divitias, quas optaverat, metuit et voto laborat suo, alium solitudo [alium labor] torquet, alium semper vestibulum obsidens turba; hic habere se dolet liberos, hic perdidisse: lacrimae nobis deerunt ante quam causae dolendi. Non vides, qualem nobis vitam rerum natura promiserit, quae primum nascentium hominum fletum esse voluit? Hoc principio edimur, huic omnis sequentium annorum ordo consentit. Sic vitam agimus, ideoque moderate id fieri debet a nobis, quod saepe faciendum est, et respicientes, quantum a tergo rerum tristium immineat, si non finire lacrimas, at certe reservare debemus. Nulli parcendum est rei magis quam huic, cuius tam frequens usus est.

V.

Illud quoque te non minimum adiuverit, si cogitaveris nulli minus gratum esse dolorem tuum quam ei, cui praestari videtur: torqueri ille te aut non vult aut non intellegit. Nulla itaque eius officii ratio est, quod ei, cui praestatur, si nihil sentit, supervacuum est, si sentit, ingratum est. Neminem esse toto orbe terrarum, qui delectetur lacrimis tuis, audacter dixerim. Quid ergo? Quem nemo adversus te animum gerit, eum esse tu credis fratris tui, ut cruciatu tui noceat tibi, ut te velit abducere ab occupationibus tuis, id est a studio et a Caesare? Non est hoc simile veri. Ille enim indulgentiam tibi tamquam fratri praestitit, venerationem tamquam parenti, cultum tamquam superiori; ille desiderio tibi esse vult, tormento esse non vult. Quid itaque iuvat dolori intabescere, quem, si quis defunctis sensus est, finire frater tuus cupit? De alio fratre, cuius incerta posset voluntas videri, omnia haec in dubio ponerem et dicerem: 'sive te torqueri lacrimis numquam desinentibus frater tuus cupit, indignus hoc affectu tuo est; sive non vult, utrique vestrum inhaerentem dolorem dimitte; nec impius frater sic desiderari debet nec pius sic velit.' In hoc vero, cuius tam explorata pietas est, pro certo habendum est nihil esse illi posse acerbius, quam si tibi hic casus eius acerbus est, si te ullo modo torquet, si oculos tuos, indignissimos hoc malo, sine ullo flendi fine et conturbat idem et exhaurit. Pietatem tamen tuam nihil aequae a lacrimis tam inutilibus abducat, quam si cogitaveris fratribus te tuis exemplo esse debere fortiter hanc fortunae iniuriam sustinendi. Quod duces magni faciunt rebus adfectis, ut hilaritatem de industria simulent et adversas res adumbrata laetitia abscondant, ne militum animi, si fractam ducis sui mentem viderint, et ipsi conlabantur, id nunc tibi quoque faciendum est: indue dissimilem animo tuo vultum et, si potes, proice omnem ex toto dolorem, si minus, introrsus abde et contine, ne appareat, et da operam ut fratres tui te imitentur, qui honestum putabunt, quodcumque te facientem viderint, animumque ex vultu tuo sument. Et solacium debes esse illorum et consolator; non poteris autem horum maerori obstare, si tuo induleris.

VI.

Potest et illa res a luctu te prohibere nimio, si tibi ipse renuntiaveris nihil horum, quae facis, posse subduci. Magnam tibi personam hominum consensus imposuit: haec tibi tuenda est. Circumstat te omnis ista consolantium frequentia et in animum tuum inquit ac perspicit quantum roboris ille adversus dolorem habeat et utrumne tu tantum rebus secundis uti dextere scias, an et adversas possis viriliter ferre: observantur oculi tui. Liberiora sunt omnia iis, quorum adfectus tegi possunt; tibi nullum secretum liberum est. In multa luce fortuna te posuit; omnes scient, quomodo te in isto tuo gesseris vulnere, utrumne statim percussus arma summisseris an in gradu steteris. Olim te in altiorem ordinem et amor Caesaris extulit et tua studia eduxerunt. Nihil te plebeium decet, nihil humile. Quid autem tam humile ac muliebre est quam consumendum se dolori committere? Non idem tibi in luctu pari quod tuis fratribus licet; multa tibi non permittit opinio de studiis ac moribus tuis recepta, multum a te homines exigunt, multum expectant. Si volebas tibi omnia licere, non convertisses in te ora omnium: nunc tantum tibi praestandum est, quantum promisisti. Omnes illi, qui opera ingenii tui laudant, qui describunt, quibus, cum fortuna tua opus non sit, ingenio opus est, custodes animi tui sunt. Nihil umquam ita potes indignum facere perfecti et eruditi viri professione, ut non multos admirationis de te suae paeniteat. Non licet tibi flere immodice, nec hoc tantummodo non licet; ne somnum quidem extendere in partem diei licet aut a tumultu rerum in otium ruris quieti confugere aut adsidua laboriosi officii statione fatigatum corpus voluptaria peregrinatione recreare aut spectaculorum varietate animum detinere aut ex tuo arbitrio diem disponere. Multa tibi non licent, quae humillimis et in angulo iacentibus licent: magna servitus est magna fortuna. Non licet tibi quicquam arbitrio tuo facere: audienda sunt tot hominum milia, tot disponendi libelli; tantus rerum ex orbe toto coeuntium congestus, ut possit per ordinem suum principis maximi animo subici, exigendus est. Non licet tibi, inquam, flere: ut multos flentes audire possis, ut periclitantium et ad misericordiam mitissimi Caesaris pervenire cupientium [lacrimas siccare], lacrimae tibi tuae adsiccandae sunt.

VII.

Haec tamen etiam nunc levioribus te remediis adiuvabunt; cum voles omnium rerum oblivisci, Caesarem cogita. Vide, quantam huius in te indulgentiae fidem, quantam industriam debeas: intelleges non magis tibi incurvari licere quam illi, si quis modo est fabulis traditus, cuius umeris mundus innititur. Caesari quoque ipsi, cui omnia licent, propter hoc ipsum multa non licent: omnium somnos illius vigilia defendit, omnium otium illius labor, omnium delicias illius industria, omnium vacationem illius occupatio. Ex quo se Caesar orbi terrarum dedicavit, sibi eripuit, et siderum modo, quae inrequieta semper cursus suos explicant, numquam illi licet subsistere nec quicquam suum facere. Ad quendam itaque modum tibi quoque eadem necessitas iniungitur: non licet tibi ad utilitates tuas, ad studia tua respicere. Caesare orbem terrarum possidente impertire te nec voluptati nec dolori nec ulli alii rei potes: totum te Caesari debes. Adice nunc quod, cum semper praedices cariorum tibi spiritu tuo Caesarem esse, fas tibi non est salvo Caesare de fortuna queri: hoc incolumi salvi tibi sunt tui, nihil perdidisti, non tantum siccos oculos tuos esse sed etiam laetos oportet; in hoc tibi omnia sunt, hic pro omnibus est. Quod longe a sensibus tuis pudentissimis piissimisque abest, adversus felicitatem tuam parum gratus es, si tibi quicquam hoc salvo flere permittis.

VIII.

Monstrabo etiamnunc non quidem firmitus remedium sed familiarius. Si quando te domum receperis, tunc erit tibi metuenda tristitia: nam quam diu numen tuum intueberis, nullum illa ad te inveniet accessum, omnia in te Caesar tenebit; cum ab illo discesseris, tunc velut occasione data insidiabitur solitudini tuae dolor et requiescenti animo tuo paulatim inrepet. Itaque non est quod ullum tempus vacare patiaris a studiis: tunc tibi litterae tuae tam diu ac tam fideliter amatae gratiam referrant, tunc te illae antistitem et cultorem suum vindicent, tunc Homerus et Vergilius tam bene de humano genere meriti, quam tu et de illis et de omnibus meruisti, quos pluribus notos esse voluisti quam scripserant, multum tecum morentur: tutum id erit omne tempus, quod illis tuendum commiseris; tunc Caesaris tui opera, ut per omnia saecula domestico narrentur praeconio, quantum potes, compone: nam ipse tibi optime formandi condendique res gestas et materiam dabit et exemplum. Non audeo te eo usque producere, ut fabellas quoque et Aesopeos logos, intemptatum Romanis ingeniis opus, solita tibi venustate connectas. Difficile est quidem, ut ad haec hilariora studia tam vehementer percussus animus tam cito possit accedere: hoc tamen argumentum habeto iam conroborati eius et redditum sibi, si poterit a severioribus scriptis ad haec solutiora procedere. In illis enim quamvis aegrum eum adhuc et secum reluctantem avocabit ipsa rerum, quas tractabit, austeritas; haec, quae remissa fronte commentanda sunt, non feret, nisi cum iam sibi ab omni parte constiterit. Itaque debebis eum severiore materia primum exercere, deinde hilariore temperare.

IX.

Illud quoque magno tibi erit levamento, si saepe te sic interrogaveris: 'utrumne meo nomine doleo an eius qui decessit? Si meo, perit indulgentiae iactatio et incipit dolor hoc uno excusatus, quod honestus est, cum ad utilitatem respicit, a pietate desciscere; nihil autem minus bono viro convenit quam in fratris luctu calculos ponere. Si illius nomine doleo, necesse est alterutrum ex his duobus esse iudicem: nam si nullus defunctis sensus superest, evasit omnia frater meus vitae incommoda et in eum restitutus est locum, in quo fuerat antequam nasceretur, et expers omnis mali nihil timet, nihil cupit, nihil patitur: quis iste furor est pro eo me numquam dolere desinere, qui numquam doliturus est? Si est aliquis defunctis sensus, nunc animus fratris mei velut ex diutino carcere emissus, tandem sui iuris et arbitrii, gestit et rerum naturae spectaculo fruitur et humana omnia ex loco superiore despicit, divina vero, quorum rationem tam diu frustra quaesierat, proprius intuetur. Quid itaque eius desiderio maceror, qui aut beatus aut nullus est? Beatum deflere invidia est, nullum dementia.' An hoc te movet, quod videtur ingentibus et cum maxime circumfusus bonis caruisse? Cum cogitaveris multa esse, quae perdidit, cogita plura esse, quae non timet: non ira eum torquebit, non morbus adfliget, non suspicio lacesset, non edax et inimica semper alienis processibus invidia consectabitur, non metus sollicitabit, non levitas Fortunae cito munera sua transferentis inquietabit. Si bene computes, plus illi remissum quam ereptum est. Non opibus fruatur, non tua simul ac sua gratia; non accipiet beneficia, non dabit: miserum putas, quod ista amisit, an beatum, quod non desiderat? Mihi crede, is beatior est, cui fortuna supervacua est, quam is, cui parata est. Omnia ista bona, quae nos speciosa sed fallaci voluptate delectant, pecunia, dignitas, potentia aliaque complura, ad quae generis humani caeca cupiditas obstupescit, cum labore possidentur, cum invidia conspiciuntur, eos denique ipsos, quos exornant, et premunt; plus minantur quam prosunt; lubrica et incerta sunt, numquam bene tenentur; nam ut nihil de tempore futuro timeatur, ipsa tamen magnae felicitatis tutela sollicita est. Si velis credere altius veritatem intuentibus, omnis vita supplicium est: in hoc profundum inquietumque proiecti mare, alternis aestibus reciprocum et modo allevans nos subitis incrementis, modo maioribus damnis deferens adsidueque iactans, numquam stabili consistimus loco, pendemus et fluctuamur et alter in alterum illidimur et aliquando naufragium facimus, semper timemus; in hoc tam procelloso et ad omnes tempestates exposito mari navigantibus nullus portus nisi mortis est. Ne itaque invideris fratri tuo: quiescit. Tandem liber, tandem tutus, tandem aeternus est. Superstitem Caesarem omnemque eius prolem, superstitem te cum communibus habet fratribus. Antequam quicquam ex suo favore Fortuna mutaret, stantem adhuc illam et munera plena manu congerentem reliquit. Fruitur nunc aperto et libero caelo, ex humili atque depresso in eum emicuit locus, quisquis ille est, qui solutas vinculis animas beato recipit sinu, et nunc libere illic vagatur omniaque rerum naturae bona cum summa voluptate perspicit. Erras: non perdidit lucem frater tuus, sed sinceriores sortitus est. Omnibus illo nobis commune est iter: quid fata deflemus? Non reliquit ille nos sed antecessit. Est, mihi crede, magna felicitas in ipsa necessitate moriendi. Nihil ne in totum quidem diem certi est: quis in tam obscura et involuta veritate divinat, utrumne fratri tuo mors inviderit an consuluerit?

X.

Illud quoque, qua iustitia in omnibus rebus es, necesse est te adiuvet cogitantem non iniuriam tibi factam, quod talem fratrem amisisti, sed beneficium datum, quod tam diu tibi pietate eius uti fruique licuit. Iniquus est, qui muneris sui arbitrium danti non relinquit, avidus, qui non lucri loco habet, quod accepit, sed damni, quod reddidit. Ingratus est, qui iniuriam vocat finem voluptatis, stultus, qui nullum fructum esse putat bonorum nisi praesentium, qui non et in praeteritis adquiescit et ea iudicat certiora, quae abierunt, quia de illis ne desinant non est timendum. Nimis angustat gaudia sua, qui eis tantummodo, quae habet ac videt, frui se putat et habuisse eadem pro nihilo ducit; cito enim nos omnis voluptas relinquit, quae fluit et transit et paene ante quam veniat aufertur. Itaque in praeteritum tempus animus mittendus est et quicquid nos umquam delectavit reducendum ac frequenti cogitatione pertractandum est: longior fideliorque est memoria voluptatum quam praesentia. Quod habuisti ergo optimum fratrem, in summis bonis pone! Non est quod cogites, quanto diutius habere potueris, sed quam diu habueris. Rerum natura illum tibi sicut ceteris fratres suos non mancipio dedit, sed commodavit; cum visum est deinde, repetit nec tuam in eo satietatem secuta est sed suam legem. Si quis pecuniam creditam solvisse se moleste ferat, eam praesertim, cuius usum gratuitum acceperit, nonne iniustus vir habeatur? Dedit natura fratri tuo vitam, dedit et tibi: quae suo iure usa si a quo voluit debitum suum citius exegit, non illa in culpa est, cuius nota erat condicio, sed mortalis animi spes avida, quae subinde, quid rerum natura sit, obliviscitur nec umquam sortis suae meminit, nisi cum admonetur. Gaude itaque habuisse te tam bonum fratrem et usum fructumque eius, quamvis brevior voto tuo fuerit, boni consule. Cogita iucundissimum esse, quod habuisti, humanum, quod perdidisti: nec enim quicquam minus inter se consentaneum est quam aliquem moveri, quod sibi talis frater parum diu contigerit, non gaudere, quod tamen contigerit.

XI.

‘At inopinanti ereptus est.’ Sua quemque credulitas decipit et in eis, quae diligit, voluntaria mortalitatis oblivio: natura nulli se necessitatis suae gratiam facturam esse testata est. Cotidie praeter oculos nostros transeunt notorum ignotorumque funera, nos tamen aliud agimus et subitum id putamus esse, quod nobis tota vita denuntiatur futurum. Non est itaque ista factorum iniquitas, sed mentis humanae pravitas insatiabilis rerum omnium, quae indignatur inde excidere, quo admissa est precario. Quanto ille iustior, qui nuntiata filii morte dignam magno viro vocem emisit: ‘Ego cum genui, tum morituum scivi.’ Prorsus non mireris ex hoc natum esse, qui fortiter mori posset. Non accepit tamquam novum nuntium filii mortem; quid enim est novi hominem mori, cuius tota vita nihil aliud quam ad mortem iter est? ‘Ego cum genui, tum morituum scivi.’ Deinde adiecit rem maioris et prudentiae et animi: ‘et huic rei sustuli.’ Omnes huic rei tollimur; quisquis ad vitam editur, ad mortem destinatur. Gaudeamus [ergo] eo, quod dabitur, reddamusque id, cum reposcemur: alium alio tempore fata comprehendunt, neminem praeteribunt. In procinctu stet animus et id quod necesse est numquam timeat, quod incertum est semper expectet. Quid dicam duces ducumque progeniem et multis aut consulatibus conspicuos aut triumphis sorte defunctos inexorabili? Tota cum regibus regna populique cum [re]gentibus tulere fatum suum: omnes, immo omnia in ultimum diem spectant. Non idem universis finis est: alium in medio cursu vita deserit, alium in ipso aditu relinquit, alium in extrema senectute fatigatum iam et exire cupientem vix emittit; alio quidem atque alio tempore, omnes tamen in eundem locum tendimus; utrumne stultius sit nescio mortalitatis legem ignorare, an impudentius recusare. Agedum illa, quae multo ingenii tui labore celebrata sunt, in manus sume utriuslibet auctoris carmina, quae tu ita resolvisti, ut quamvis structura illorum recesserit, permaneat tamen gratia — sic enim illa ex alia lingua in aliam transtulisti, ut, quod difficillimum erat, omnes virtutes in alienam te orationem secutae sint -: nullus erit in illis scriptis liber, qui non plurima varietatis humanae incertorumque casuum et lacrimarum ex alia atque alia causa fluentium exempla tibi suggerat. Lege, quanto spiritu ingentibus intonueris verbis: pudebit te subito deficere et ex tanta orationis magnitudine desciscere. Ne commiseris, ut quisquis exemplaris modo scripta tua mirabatur quaerat quomodo tam grandia tamque solida tam fragilis animus conceperit.

XII.

Potius ab istis te, quae torquent, ad haec tot et tanta, quae consolantur, converte ac respice optimos fratres, respice uxorem, filium respice: pro omnium horum salute hac tecum portione Fortuna decedit. Multos habes, in quibus adquiescas. Ab hac te infamia vindica, ne videatur omnibus plus apud te valere unus dolor quam haec tam multa solacia. Omnis istos una tecum percussos vides nec posse tibi subvenire, immo etiam ultro expectare, ut a te subleventur, intellegis; et ideo quanto minus in illis doctrinae minusque ingenii est, tanto magis obsistere te necesse est communi malo. Est autem hoc ipsum solacii loco, inter multos dolorem suum dividere; qui quia dispensatur inter plures, exigua debet apud te parte subsidere. Non desinam totiens tibi offerre Caesarem: illo moderante terras et ostendente quanto melius beneficiis imperium custodiatur quam armis, illo rebus humanis praeside[n]te non est periculum, ne quid perdidisse te sentias; in hoc uno tibi satis praesidi, solaci est. Attolle te et, quotiens lacrimae suboriuntur oculis tuis, totiens illos in Caesarem derige: siccabuntur maximi et clarissimi conspectu numinis; fulgor eius illos, ut nihil aliud possint aspicere, praestringet et in se haerentes detinebit. Hic tibi, quem tu diebus intueris ac noctibus, a quo numquam deicis animum, cogitandus est, hic contra fortunam advocandus. Nec dubito, cum tanta illi adversus omnes suos sit mansuetudo tantaque indulgentia, quin iam multis solaciis tuum istud vulnus obduxerit, iam multa, quae dolori obstarent tuo, congesserit. Quid porro? Ut nihil horum fecerit, nonne protinus ipse conspectus per se tantummodo cogitatusque Caesar maximo solacio tibi est? Dii illum deaeque terris diu commodent! Acta hic divi Augusti aequet, annos vincat! Quam diu inter mortales erit, nihil ex domo sua mortale esse sentiat! Rectorem Romano imperio filium longa fide adprobet et ante illud consortem patris quam successorem aspiciat! Sera et nepotibus demum nostris dies nota sit, qua illum gens sua caelo adserat!

XIII.

Abstine ab hoc manus tuas, Fortuna, nec in isto potentiam tuam nisi ea parte, qua prodes, ostenderis! Patere illum generi humano iam diu aegro et adfecto mederi, patere quicquid prioris principis furor concussit in suum locum restituere ac reponere! Sidus hoc, quod praecipitato in profundum et demerso in tenebras orbi refulsit, semper luceat! Hic Germaniam pacet, Britanniam aperiat, et patrios triumphos ducat et novos: quorum me quoque spectatorem futurum, quae ex virtutibus eius primum optinet locum, promittit clementia. Nec enim sic me deiecit, ut nollet erigere, immo ne deiecit quidem, sed impulsus a fortuna et cadentem sustinuit et in praeceps euntem leniter divinae manus usus moderatione deposuit: deprecatus est pro me senatum et vitam mihi non tantum dedit sed etiam petiit. Viderit: qualem volet esse, existimet causam meam; vel iustitia eius bonam perspiciat vel clementia faciat bonam: utrumque in aequo mihi eius beneficium erit, sive innocentem me scierit esse, sive voluerit. Interim magnum miseriarum mearum solacium est videre misericordiam eius totum orbem pervagantem: quae cum ex ipso angulo, in quo ego defixus sum, complures multorum iam annorum ruina obrutos effoderit et in lucem reduxerit, non vereor ne me unum transeat. Ipse autem optime novit tempus, quo cuique debeat succurrere; ego omnem operam dabo, ne pervenire ad me erubescat. O felicem clementiam tuam, Caesar, quae efficit, ut quietiorem sub te agant vitam exsules, quam nuper sub Gaio egere principes! Non trepidant nec per singulas horas gladium exspectant nec ad omnem navium conspectum pavent; per te habent ut fortunae saevientis modum ita spem quoque melioris eiusdem ac praesentis quietem. Scias licet ea demum fulmina esse iustissima, quae etiam percussi colunt.

XIV.

Hic itaque princeps, qui publicum omnium hominum solacium est, aut me omnia fallunt aut iam recreavit animum tuum et tam magno vulneri maiora adhibuit remedia. Iam te omni confirmavit modo, iam omnia exempla, quibus ad animi aequitatem compellereris, tenacissima memoria rettulit, iam omnium praecepta sapientum adsueta sibi facundia explicuit. Nullus itaque melius has adloquendi partes occupaverit: aliud habebunt hoc dicente pondus verba velut ab oraculo missa; omnem vim doloris tui divina eius contundet auctoritas. Hunc itaque tibi puta dicere: ‘non te solum fortuna desumpsit sibi, quem tam gravi afficeret iniuria; nulla domus in toto orbe terrarum aut est aut fuit sine aliqua comploratione. Transibo exempla vulgaria, quae etiam si minora, tamen innumera sunt, ad fastus te et annales perducam publicos. Vides omnes has imagines, quae implere Caesarum atrium? Nulla non harum aliquo suorum incommodo insignis est; nemo non ex istis in ornamentum saeculorum refulgentibus viris aut desiderio suorum tortus est aut a suis cum maximo animi cruciatu desideratus est. Quid tibi referam Scipionem Africanum, cui mors fratris in exilio nuntiata est? Is frater, qui eripuit fratrem carceri, non potuit eripere fato; et quam impatiens iuris aequi pietas Africani fuerit, cunctis apparuit: eodem enim die Scipio Africanus, quo viatoris manibus fratrem abstulerat, tribuno quoque plebis privatus intercessit. Tam magno tamen fratrem desideravit hic animo, quam defenderat. Quid referam Aemilianum Scipionem, qui uno paene eodemque tempore spectavit patris triumphum duorumque fratrum funera? Adulescentulus tamen ac propemodum puer tanto animo tulit illam familiae suae super ipsum Pauli triumphum concidentis subitam vastitatem, quanto debuit ferre vir in hoc natus, ne urbi Romanae aut Scipio deesset aut Carthago superesset.

XV.

Quid referam duorum Lucullorum diremptam morte concordiam? Quid Pompeios? Quibus ne hoc quidem saeviens reliquit fortuna, ut una eademque conciderent ruina: vixit Sextus Pompeius primum sorori superstes, cuius morte optime cohaerentis Romanae pacis vincula resoluta sunt, idemque hic vixit superstes optimo fratri, quem fortuna in hoc evexerat, ne minus alte eum deiceret, quam patrem deiecerat; et post hunc tamen casum Sextus Pompeius non tantum dolori, sed etiam bello suffecit. Innumerabilia undique exempla separatorum morte fratrum succurrunt, immo contra vix ulla umquam horum paria conspecta sunt una senescentia; sed contentus nostrae domus exemplis ero. Nemo enim tam expers erit sensus ac sanitatis, ut Fortunam ulli queratur luctum intulisse, quam sciet etiam Caesarum lacrimas concupisse. Divus Augustus amisit Octaviam sororem carissimam et ne ei quidem rerum natura lugendi necessitatem abstulit, cui caelum destinaverat, immo vero idem omni genere orbitatis vexatus sororis filium successioni praeparatum suae perdidit; denique ne singulos eius luctus enumerem, et generos ille amisit et liberos et nepotes, ac nemo magis ex omnibus mortalibus hominem esse se, dum inter homines erat, sensit. Tamen tot tantosque luctus cepit rerum omnium capacissimum eius pectus victorque divus Augustus non gentium tantummodo externarum, sed etiam dolorum fuit. Gaius Caesar, divi Augusti, avunculi mei magni, nepos, circa primos iuventae suae annos Lucium fratrem carissimum sibi princeps iuventutis principem eiusdem iuventutis amisit in apparatu Parthici belli et graviore multo animi vulnere quam postea corporis ictus est; quod utrumque et piissime idem et fortissime tulit. [Ti.] Caesar patruus meus Drusum Germanicum patrem meum, minorem natu quam ipse erat fratrem, intima Germaniae recludentem et gentes ferocissimas Romano subicientem imperio in complexu et in osculis suis amisit: modum tamen lugendi non sibi tantum sed etiam aliis fecit ac totum exercitum non solum maestum sed etiam attonitum corpus Drusi sui sibi vindicantem ad morem Romani luctus redegit iudicavitque non militandi tantum disciplinam esse servandam sed etiam dolendi. Non potuisset ille lacrimas alienas compescere, nisi prius pressisset suas.

XVI.

M. Antonius avus meus, nullo minor nisi eo a quo victus est, tunc cum rem publicam constitueret et triumvirali potestate praeditus nihil supra se videret, exceptis vero duobus collegis omnia infra se cerneret, fratrem interfectum audivit. Fortuna impotens, quales ex humanis malis tibi ipsa ludos facis! Eo ipso tempore, quo M. Antonius civium suorum vitae sedebat mortisque arbiter, M. Antonii frater duci iuebatur ad supplicium! Tulit hoc tamen tam triste vulnus eadem magnitudine animi M. Antonius, qua omnia alia adversa toleraverat, et hoc fuit eius lugere viginti legionum sanguine fratri parentare. Sed ut omnia alia exempla praeteream, ut in me quoque ipso alia taceam funera, bis me fraterno luctu aggressa fortuna est, bis intellexit laedi me posse, vinci non posse: amisi Germanicum fratrem, quem quomodo amaverim, intellegit profecto quisquis cogitat, quomodo suos fratres pii fratres ament; sic tamen affectum meum rexi, ut nec relinquerem quicquam, quod exigi deberet a bono fratre, nec facerem, quod reprehendi posset in principe.'

Haec ergo puta tibi parentem publicum referre exempla, eundem ostendere, quam nihil sacrum intactumque sit Fortunae, quae ex eis penatibus ausa est funera ducere, ex quibus erat deos petitura. Nemo itaque miretur aliquid ab illa aut crudeliter fieri aut inique; potest enim haec adversus privatas domos ullam aequitatem nosse aut ullam modestiam, cuius implacabilis saevitia totiens ipsa funestavit pulvinaria? Faciamus licet illi convicium non nostro tantum ore sed etiam publico, non tamen mutabitur; adversus omnis se preces omnisque querimonias exiget. Hoc fuit in rebus humanis Fortuna, hoc erit: nihil inausum sibi reliquit, nihil intactum relinquet; ibit violentior per omnia, sicut solita est semper, eas quoque domos ausa iniuriae causa intrare, in quas per templa aditur, et atram laureatis foribus induet vestem. Hoc unum obtineamus ab illa votis ac precibus publicis, si nondum illi genus humanum placuit consumere, si Romanum adhuc nomen propitia respicit: hunc principem lapsis hominum rebus datum, sicut omnibus mortalibus, sibi esse sacratum velit! Discat ab illo clementiam fiatque mitissimo omnium principum

XVII.

Debes itaque eos intueri omnes, quos paulo ante rettuli, aut adscitos caelo aut proximos, et ferre aequo animo Fortunam ad te quoque porrigentem manus, quas ne ab eis quidem, per quos iuramus, abstinet; debes illorum imitari firmitatem in perferendis et evincendis doloribus, in quantum modo homini fas est per divina ire vestigia. Quamvis [sint] in aliis rebus dignitatum ac nobilitatum magna discrimina, virtus in medio posita est: neminem dedignatur, qui modo dignum se illa iudicat. Optime certe illos imitaberis, qui cum indignari possent non esse ipsos exsortes huius mali, tamen in hoc uno se ceteris exaequari hominibus non iniuriam sed ius mortalitatis iudicaverunt tuleruntque nec nimis acerbe et aspere, quod acciderat, nec molliter et effeminate; nam et non sentire mala sua non est hominis et non ferre non est viri. Non possum tamen, cum omnes circumierim Caesares, quibus Fortuna fratres sororesque eripuit, hunc praeterire ex omni Caesarum numero excerpendum, quem rerum natura in exitium opprobriumque humani generis edidit, a quo imperium adustum atque eversum funditus principis mitissimi recreat clementia. C. Caesar amissa sorore Drusilla, is homo, qui non magis dolere quam gaudere principaliter posset, conspectum conversationemque civium suorum profugit, exsequiis sororis suae non interfuit, iusta sorori non praestitit, sed in Albano suo tesseris ac foro et pervolgatis huiusmodi aliis occupationibus acerbissimi funeris elevabat mala. Pro pudor imperii! Principis Romani lugentis sororem alea solacium fuit! Idem ille Gaius furiosa inconstantia modo barbam capillumque summittens tondens modo Italiae ac Siciliae oras errabundus permetiens et numquam satis certus, utrum lugeri vellet an coli sororem, eodem omni tempore, quo templa illi constituebat ac pulvinaria, eos qui parum maesti fuerant, crudelissima adficiebat animadversione; eadem enim intemperie animi adversarum rerum ictus ferebat, qua secundarum elatus eventu super humanum intumescebat modum. Procul istud exemplum ab omni Romano sit viro, luctum suum aut intempestivis sevocare lusibus aut sordium ac squaloris foeditate inritare aut alienis malis oblectare minime humano solacio.

Tibi vero nihil ex consuetudine mutandum est tua, quoniam quidem ea instituisti amare studia, quae et optime felicitatem extollunt et facillime minuunt calamitatem eademque et ornamenta maxima homini sunt et solacia. Nunc itaque te studiis tuis immerge altius, nunc illa tibi velut munimenta animi circumda, ne ex ulla tui parte inveniatur introitus dolor. Fratris quoque tui produci memoriam aliquo scriptorum monumento tuorum; hoc enim unum est [in] rebus humanis opus, cui nulla tempestas noceat, quod nulla consumat vetustas. Cetera, quae per constructionem lapidum et marmoreas moles aut terrenos tumulos in magnam eductos altitudinem constant, non propagant longam diem, quippe et ipsa intereunt: immortalis est ingeni memoria. Hanc tu fratri tuo largire, in hac eum conloca; melius illum duraturo semper consecrabis ingenio quam inuito dolore lugebis. Quod ad ipsam Fortunam pertinet, etiam si nunc agi apud te causa eius non potest — omnia enim illa, quae nobis dedit, ob hoc ipsum, quod aliquid eripuit, invisibilia sunt —, tunc tamen erit agenda, cum primum aequiorem te illi iudicem dies fecerit; tunc enim poteris in gratiam cum illa redire. Nam multa providit, quibus hanc emendaret iniuriam, multa etiam nunc dabit, quibus redimat; denique ipsum hoc, quod abstulit, ipsa dederat tibi. Noli ergo contra te ingenio uti tuo, noli adesse dolori tuo. Potest quidem eloquentia tua quae parva sunt adprobare pro magnis, rursus magna attenuare et ad minima deducere; sed alio istas vires servet suas, nunc tota se in solacium tuum conferat. Et tamen dispice, ne hoc iam quoque ipsum sit supervacuum; aliquid enim a nobis natura exigit, plus vanitate contrahitur. Numquam autem ego a te, ne ex toto maereas, exigam. Et scio inveniri quosdam durae magis quam fortis prudentiae viros, qui negent doliturum esse sapientem: hi non videntur mihi umquam in eiusmodi casum incidisse, alioquin excussisset illis fortuna superbam sapientiam et ad confessionem eos veri etiam invitos compulisset. Satis praestiterit ratio, si id unum ex dolore, quod et superest et abundat, exciderit: ut quidem nullum omnino esse eum patiat, nec sperandum ulli nec concupiscendum est. Hunc potius modum servet, qui nec impietatem imitetur nec insaniam et nos in eo teneat habitu, qui et piaie mentis est nec motae: fluant lacrimae, sed eadem et desinant, trahantur ex imo gemitus pectore, sed idem et finantur; sic rege animum tuum, ut et sapientibus te adprobare possis et fratribus. Effice, ut frequenter fratris tui memoriam tibi velis occurrere, ut illum et sermonibus celebres et adsidua recordatione repraesentes tibi, quod ita demum consequi poteris, si tibi memoriam eius iucundam magis quam flebilem feceris; naturale est enim, ut semper animus ab eo refugiat, ad quod cum tristitia revertitur. Cogita modestiam eius, cogita in rebus agendis sollertiam, in exsequendis industriam, in promissis constantiam. Omnia dicta eius ac facta et aliis expone et tibimet ipse commemora. Qualis fuerit cogita qualisque sperari potuerit: quid enim de illo non tuto sponderi fratre posset?

Haec, utcumque potui, longo iam situ obsoleto et hebetato animo composui. Quae si aut parum respondere ingenio tuo aut parum mederi dolori videbuntur, cogita, quam non possit is alienae vacare consolationi, quem sua mala occupatum tenent, et quam non facile Latina ei homini verba succurrant, quem barbarorum inconditus et barbaris quoque humanioribus gravis fremitus circumsonat.

I. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Ita fac, mi Lucili: vindica te tibi, et tempus quod adhuc aut auferebatur aut subripiiebatur aut excidebat collige et serva. Persuade tibi hoc sic esse ut scribo: quaedam tempora eripiuntur nobis, quaedam subducuntur, quaedam effluunt. Turpissima tamen est iactura quae per neglegentiam fit. Et si volueris attendere, magna pars vitae elabitur male agentibus, maxima nihil agentibus, tota vita aliud agentibus. [2] Quem mihi dabis qui aliquod pretium tempori ponat, qui diem aestimet, qui intellegat se cotidie mori? In hoc enim fallimur, quod mortem prospicimus: magna pars eius iam praeterit; quidquid aetatis retro est mors tenet. Fac ergo, mi Lucili, quod facere te scribis, omnes horas complectere; sic fiet ut minus ex crastino pendeas, si hodierno manum inieceris. [3] Dum differtur vita transcurrit. Omnia, Lucili, aliena sunt, tempus tantum nostrum est; in huius rei unius fugacis ac lubricae possessionem natura nos misit, ex qua expellit quicumque vult. Et tanta stultitia mortalium est ut quae minima et vilissima sunt, certe reparabilia, imputari sibi cum impetravere patiantur, nemo se iudicet quicquam debere qui tempus accepit, cum interim hoc unum est quod ne gratus quidem potest reddere.

[4] Interrogabis fortasse quid ego faciam qui tibi ista praecipio. Fatebor ingenue: quod apud luxuriosum sed diligentem evenit, ratio mihi constat impensae. Non possum dicere nihil perdere, sed quid perdam et quare et quemadmodum dicam; causas paupertatis meae reddam. Sed evenit mihi quod plerisque non suo vitio ad inopiam redactis: omnes ignoscunt, nemo succurrit. [5] Quid ergo est? non puto pauperem cui quantulumcumque superest sat est; tu tamen malo serves tua, et bono tempore incipies. Nam ut visum est maioribus nostris, ‘sera parsimonia in fundo est’; non enim tantum minimum in imo sed pessimum remanet. Vale.

II. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Ex iis quae mihi scribis et ex iis quae audio bonam spem de te concipio: non discurreis nec locorum mutationibus inquietaris. Aegri animi ista iactatio est: primum argumentum compositae mentis existimo posse consistere et secum morari. [2] Illud autem vide, ne ista lectio auctorum multorum et omnis generis voluminum habeat aliquid vagum et instabile. Certis ingeniis immorari et innutriri oportet, si velis aliquid trahere quod in animo fideliter sedeat. Nusquam est qui ubique est. Vitam in peregrinatione exigentibus hoc evenit, ut multa hospitia habeant, nullas amicitias; idem accadat necesse est iis qui nullius se ingenio familiariter applicant sed omnia cursim et properantes transmittunt. [3] Non prodest cibus nec corpori accedit qui statim sumptus emittitur; nihil aequae sanitatem impedit quam remediorum crebra mutatio; non venit vulnus ad cicatricem in quo medicamenta temptantur; non convalescit planta quae saepe transfertur; nihil tam utile est ut in transitu prosit. Distingit librorum multitudo; itaque cum legere non possis quantum habueris, satis est habere quantum legas. [4] 'Sed modo' inquis 'hunc librum evolvere volo, modo illum.' Fastidientis stomachi est multa degustare; quae ubi varia sunt et diversa, inquinant non alunt. Probatos itaque semper lege, et si quando ad alios deverti libuerit, ad priores redi. Aliquid cotidie adversus paupertatem, aliquid adversus mortem auxili compara, nec minus adversus ceteras pestes; et cum multa percurreris, unum excerpe quod illo die concoquas. [5] Hoc ipse quoque facio; ex pluribus quae legi aliquid apprehendo. Hodiernum hoc est quod apud Epicurum nactus sum - soleo enim et in aliena castra transire, non tamquam transfuga, sed tamquam explorator -: 'honestas' inquit 'res est laeta paupertas'. [6] Illa vero non est paupertas, si laeta est; non qui parum habet, sed qui plus cupit, pauper est. Quid enim refert quantum illi in arca, quantum in horreis iaceat, quantum pascat aut feneret, si alieno imminet, si non acquisita sed acquirenda computat? Quis sit divitiarum modus quaeris? primus habere quod necesse est, proximus quod sat est. Vale.

III. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Epistulas ad me perferendas tradidisti, ut scribis, amico tuo; deinde admones me ne omnia cum eo ad te pertinentia communicem, quia non soleas ne ipse quidem id facere: ita eadem epistula illum et dixisti amicum et negasti. Itaque si proprio illo verbo quasi publico usus es et sic illum amicum vocasti quomodo omnes candidatos ‘bonos viros’ dicimus, quomodo obvios, si nomen non succurrit, ‘dominos’ salutamus, hac abierit. [2] Sed si aliquem amicum existimas cui non tantundem credis quantum tibi, vehementer erras et non satis nosti vim verae amicitiae. Tu vero omnia cum amico delibera, sed de ipso prius: post amicitiam credendum est, ante amicitiam iudicandum. Isti vero praepostero officia permiscunt qui, contra praecepta Theophrasti, cum amaverunt iudicant, et non amant cum iudicaverunt. Diu cogita an tibi in amicitiam aliquis recipiendus sit. Cum placuerit fieri, toto illum pectore admitte; tam audaciter cum illo loquere quam tecum. [3] Tu quidem ita vive ut nihil tibi committas nisi quod committere etiam inimico tuo possis; sed quia interveniunt quaedam quae consuetudo fecit arcana, cum amico omnes curas, omnes cogitationes tuas misce. Fidelem si putaveris, facies; nam quidam fallere docuerunt dum timent falli, et illi ius peccandi suspicando fecerunt. Quid est quare ego ulla verba coram amico meo retraham? quid est quare me coram illo non putem solum? [4] Quidam quae tantum amicis committenda sunt obviis narrant, et in quaslibet aures quidquid illos urit exonerant; quidam rursus etiam carissimorum conscientiam reformidant et, si possent, ne sibi quidem credituri interius premunt omne secretum. Neutrum faciendum est; utrumque enim vitium est, et omnibus credere et nulli, sed alterum honestius dixerim vitium, alterum tutius. [5] Sic utrosque reprehendas, et eos qui semper inquieti sunt, et eos qui semper quiescunt. Nam illa tumultu gaudens non est industria sed exagitatae mentis concursatio, et haec non est quies quae motum omnem molestiam iudicat, sed dissolutio et languor. [6] Itaque hoc quod apud Pomponium legi animo mandabitur: ‘quidam adeo in latebras refugerunt ut putent in turbido esse quidquid in luce est’. Inter se ista miscenda sunt: et quiescenti agendum et agenti quiescendum est.

Cum rerum natura delibera: illa dicet tibi et diem fecisse se et noctem. Vale.

IV. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Persevera ut coepisti et quantum potes propera, quo diutius frui emendato animo et composito possis. Frueris quidem etiam dum emendas, etiam dum componis: alia tamen illa voluptas est quae percipitur ex contemplatione mentis ab omni labe purae et splendidae. [2] Tenes utique memoria quantum senseris gaudium cum praetexta posita sumpsisti virilem togam et in forum deductus es: maius expecta cum puerilem animum deposueris et te in viros philosophia transcripserit. Adhuc enim non pueritia sed, quod est gravius, puerilitas remanet; et hoc quidem peior est, quod auctoritatem habemus senum, vitia puerorum, nec puerorum tantum sed infantum: illi levia, hi falsa formidant, nos utraque. [3] Profice modo: intelleges quaedam ideo minus timenda quia multum metus afferunt. Nullum malum magnum quod extremum est. Mors ad te venit: timenda erat si tecum esse posset: necesse est aut non perveniat aut transeat. [4] ‘Difficile est’ inquis ‘animum perducere ad contemtionem animae.’ Non vides quam ex frivolis causis contemnatur? Alius ante amicae fores laqueo pependit, alius se praecipitavit e tecto ne dominum stomachantem diutius audiret, alius ne reduceretur e fuga ferrum adegit in viscera: non putas virtutem hoc effecturam quod efficit nimia formido? Nulli potest segura vita contingere qui de producenda nimis cogitat, qui inter magna bona multos consules numerat. [5] Hoc cotidie meditare, ut possis aequo animo vitam relinquere, quam multi sic complectuntur et tenent quomodo qui aqua torrente rapiuntur spinas et aspera. Plerique inter mortis metum et vitae tormenta miseri fluctuantur et vivere nolunt, mori nesciunt. [6] Fac itaque tibi iucundam vitam omnem pro illa sollicitudinem deponendo. Nullum bonum adiuvat habentem nisi ad cuius amissionem praeparatus est animus; nullius autem rei facilior amissio est quam quae desiderari amissa non potest. Ergo adversus haec quae incidere possunt etiam potentissimis adhortare te et indura. [7] De Pompei capite pupillus et spado tulere sententiam, de Crasso crudelis et insolens Parthus; Gaius Caesar iussit Lepidum Dextro tribuno praebere cervicem, ipse Chaereae praestitit; neminem eo fortuna provexit ut non tantum illi minaretur quantum permiserat.

Noli huic tranquillitati confidere: momento mare evertitur; eodem die ubi luserunt navigia sorbentur. [8] Cogita posse et latronem et hostem admoveere iugulo tuo gladium; ut potestas maior absit, nemo non servus habet in te vitae necisque arbitrium. Ita dico: quisquis vitam suam contempsit tuae dominus est. Recognosce exempla eorum qui domesticis insidiis perierunt, aut aperta vi aut dolo: intelleges non pauciores servorum ira cecidisse quam regum. Quid ad te itaque quam potens sit quem times, cum id propter quod times nemo non possit? [9] At si forte in manus hostium incideris, victor te duci iubebit - eo nempe quo duceris. Quid te ipse decipis et hoc nunc primum quod olim patiebaris intellegis? Ita dico: ex quo natus es, duceris. Haec et eiusmodi versanda in animo sunt si volumus ultimam illam horam placidi exspectare cuius metus omnes alias inquietas facit.

V. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Quod pertinaciter studes et omnibus omissis hoc unum agis, ut te meliorem cotidie facias, et probo et gaudeo, nec tantum hortor ut perseveres sed etiam rogo. Illud autem te admoneo, ne eorum more qui non proficere sed conspici cupiunt facias aliqua quae in habitu tuo aut genere vitae notabilia sint; [2] asperum cultum et intonsum caput et neglegentiolem barbam et indictum argento odium et cubile humi positum et quidquid aliud ambitionem perversa via sequitur evita. Satis ipsum nomen philosophiae, etiam si modeste tractetur, invidiosum est: quid si nos hominum consuetudini coeperimus excerpere? Intus omnia dissimilia sint, frons populo nostra conveniat. [3] Non splendeat toga, ne sordeat quidem; non habeamus argentum in quod solidi auri caelatura descenderit, sed non putemus frugalitatis indicium auro argentoque caruisse. Id agamus ut meliorem vitam sequamur quam vulgus, non ut contrariam: alioquin quos emendari volumus fugamus a nobis et avertimus; illud quoque efficimus, ut nihil imitari velint nostri, dum timent ne imitanda sint omnia. [4] Hoc primum philosophia promittit, sensum communem, humanitatem et congregationem; a qua professione dissimilitudo nos separabit. Videamus ne ista per quae admirationem parare volumus ridicula et odiosa sint. Nempe propositum nostrum est secundum naturam vivere: hoc contra naturam est, torquere corpus suum et faciles odisse munditias et squalorem appetere et cibis non tantum vilibus uti sed taetris et horridis. [5] Quemadmodum desiderare delicatas res luxuriae est, ita usitatas et non magno parabiles fugere dementiae. Frugalitatem exigit philosophia, non poenam; potest autem esse non incompta frugalitas. Hic mihi modus placet: temperetur vita inter bonos mores et publicos; suspiciant omnes vitam nostram sed agnoscant. [6] ‘Quid ergo? eadem faciemus quae ceteri? nihil inter nos et illos intererit?’ Plurimum: dissimiles esse nos vulgo sciat qui inspexerit propius; qui domum intraverit nos potius miretur quam supellectilem nostram. Magnus ille est qui fictilibus sic utitur quemadmodum argento, nec ille minor est qui sic argento utitur quemadmodum fictilibus; infirmi animi est pati non posse divitias.

Hecatonem nostrum inveni cupiditatum finem etiam ad timoris remedia proficere. 'Desines' inquit 'timere, si sperare desieris.' Dices, 'quomodo ista tam diversa pariter sunt?' Ita est, mi Lucili: cum videantur dissidere, coniuncta sunt. Quemadmodum eadem catena et custodiam et militem copulat, sic ista quae tam dissimilia sunt pariter incedunt: spem metus sequitur. [8] Nec miror ista sic ire: utrumque pendentis animi est, utrumque futuri expectatione solliciti. Maxima autem utriusque causa est quod non ad praesentia aptamur sed cogitationes in longinqua praemittimus; itaque providentia, maximum bonum condicionis humanae, in malum versa est. [9] Ferae pericula quae vident fugiunt, cum effugere, securae sunt: nos et venturo torquemur et praeterito. Multa bona nostra nobis nocent; timoris enim tormentum memoria reducit, providentia anticipat; nemo tantum praesentibus miser est. Vale.

VI. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Intellego, Lucili, non emendari me tantum sed transfigurari; nec hoc promitto iam aut spero, nihil in me superesse quod mutandum sit. Quidni multa habeam quae debeant colligi, quae extenuari, quae attolli? Et hoc ipsum argumentum est in melius translati animi, quod vitia sua quae adhuc ignorabat videt; quibusdam aegris gratulatio fit cum ipsi aegros se esse senserunt. [2] Cuperem itaque tecum communicare tam subitam mutationem mei; tunc amicitiae nostrae certiore fiduciam habere coepissem, illius verae quam non spes, non timor, non utilitatis suae cura divellit, illius cum qua homines moriuntur, pro qua moriuntur. [3] Multos tibi dabo qui non amico sed amicitia caruerint: hoc non potest accidere cum animos in societatem honesta cupiendi par voluntas trahit. Quidni non possit? sciunt enim ipsos omnia habere communia, et quidem magis adversa.

[4] Concipere animo non potes quantum momenti afferri mihi singulos dies videam. ‘Mitte’ inquis ‘et nobis ista quae tam efficacia expertus es.’ Ego vero omnia in te cupio transfundere, et in hoc aliquid gaudeo discere, ut doceam; nec me ulla res delectabit, licet sit eximia et salutaris, quam mihi uni sciturus sum. Si cum hac exceptione detur sapientia, ut illam inclusam teneam nec enuntiem, reiciam: nullius boni sine socio iucunda possessio est. [5] Mittam itaque ipsos tibi libros, et ne multum operae impendas dum passim profutura sectaris, imponam notas, ut ad ipsa protinus quae probo et miror accedas. Plus tamen tibi et viva vox et convictus quam oratio proderit; in rem praesentem venias oportet, primum quia homines amplius oculis quam auribus credunt, deinde quia longum iter est per praecepta, breve et efficax per exempla. [6] Zenonem Cleanthes non expressisset, si tantummodo audisset: vitae eius interfuit, secreta perspexit, observavit illum, an ex formula sua viveret. Platon et Aristoteles et omnis in diversum itura sapientium turba plus ex moribus quam ex verbis Socratis traxit; Metrodorum et Hermarchum et Polyaeum magnos viros non schola Epicuri sed contubernium fecit. Nec in hoc te accerso tantum, ut proficias, sed ut prosis; plurimum enim alter alteri conferemus.

hodie apud Hecatonem delectaverit dicam. ‘Quaeris’ inquit ‘quid profecerim? amicus esse mihi coepi.’ Multum profecit: numquam erit solus. Scito esse hunc amicum omnibus. Vale.

VII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Quid tibi vitandum praecipue existimes quaeris? turbam. Nondum illi tuto committeris. Ego certe confitebor imbecillitatem meam: numquam mores quos extuli refero; aliquid ex eo quod composui turbatur, aliquid ex iis quae fugavi redit. Quod aegris evenit quos longa imbecillitas usque eo affecit ut nusquam sine offensa proferantur, hoc accidit nobis quorum animi ex longo morbo reficiuntur. [2] Inimica est multorum conversatio: nemo non aliquod nobis vitium aut commendat aut imprimit aut nescientibus allinit. Utique quo maior est populus cui miscemur, hoc periculi plus est. Nihil vero tam damnosum bonis moribus quam in aliquo spectaculo desidere; tunc enim per voluptatem facilius vitia subrepunt. [3] Quid me existimas dicere? avarior redeo, ambitiosior, luxuriosior? immo vero crudelior et inhumanior, quia inter homines fui. Casu in meridianum spectaculum incidi, lusus exspectans et sales et aliquid laxamenti quo hominum oculi ab humano cruore acquiescant. Contra est: quidquid ante pugnatum est misericordia fuit; nunc omissis nugis mera homicidia sunt. Nihil habent quo tegantur; ad ictum totis corporibus ex positi numquam frustra manum mittunt. [4] Hoc plerique ordinariis paribus et postulaticiis praeferunt. Quidni praeferant? non galea, non scuto repellitur ferrum. Quo munimenta? quo artes? omnia ista mortis morae sunt. Mane leonibus et ursis homines, meridie spectatoribus suis obiciuntur. Interfectores interfecturis iubent obici et victorem in aliam detinent caedem; exitus pugnantium mors est. Ferro et igne res geritur. [5] Haec fiunt dum vacat harena. ‘Sed latrocinium fecit aliquis, occidit hominem.’ Quid ergo? quia occidit, ille meruit ut hoc pateretur: tu quid meruisti miser ut hoc spectes? ‘Occide, verbera, ure! Quare tam timide incurrit in ferrum? quare parum audacter occidit? quare parum libenter moritur? Plagis agatur in vulnera, mutuos ictus nudis et obviis pectoribus excipiant.’ Intermissum est spectaculum: ‘interim iugulentur homines, ne nihil agatur’. Age, ne hoc quidem intellegitis, mala exempla in eos redundare qui faciunt? Agite dis immortalibus gratias quod eum docetis esse crudelem qui non potest discere.

facile transitur ad plures. Socrati et Catoni et Laelio excutere morem suum dissimilis multitudo potuisset: adeo nemo nostrum, qui cum maxime concinnamus ingenium, ferre impetum vitiorum tam magno comitatu venientium potest. [7] Unum exemplum luxuriae aut avaritiae multum mali facit: convictor delicatus paulatim enervat et mollit, vicinus dives cupiditatem irritat, malignus comes quamvis candido et simplici rubiginem suam affricuit: quid tu accidere his moribus credis in quos publice factus est impetus? [8] Necesse est aut imiteris aut oderis. Utrumque autem devitandum est: neve similis malis fias, quia multi sunt, neve inimicus multis, quia dissimiles sunt. Recede in te ipse quantum potes; cum his versare qui te meliorem facturi sunt, illos admitte quos tu potes facere meliores. Mutuo ista fiunt, et homines dum docent discunt. [9] Non est quod te gloria publicandi ingenii producat in medium, ut recitare istis velis aut disputare; quod facere te vellem, si haberes isti populo idoneam mercem: nemo est qui intellegere te possit. Aliquis fortasse, unus aut alter incidet, et hic ipse formandus tibi erit instituendusque ad intellectum tui. 'Cui ergo ista didici?' Non est quod timeas ne operam perdidideris, si tibi didicisti.

VIII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] ‘Tu me’ inquis ‘vitare turbam iubes, secedere et conscientia esse contentum? ubi illa praecepta vestra quae imperant in actu mori?’ Quid? ego tibi videor inertiam suadere? In hoc me recondidi et fores clusi, ut prodesse pluribus possem. Nullus mihi per otium dies exit; partem noctium studiis vindico; non vaco somno sed succumbo, et oculos vigilia fatigatos cadentesque in opere detineo. [2] Secessi non tantum ab hominibus sed a rebus, et in primis a meis rebus: posterorum negotium ago. Illis aliqua quae possint prodesse conscribo; salutare admonitiones, velut medicamentorum utilium compositiones, litteris mando, esse illas efficaces in meis ulceribus expertus, quae etiam si persanata non sunt, serpere desierunt. [3] Rectum iter, quod sero cognovi et lassus errando, aliis monstro. Clamo: ‘vitae quaecumque vulgo placent, quae casus attribuit; ad omne fortuitum bonum suspiciosi pavidique subsistite: et fera et piscis spe aliqua oblectante decipitur. Munera ista fortunae putatis? insidiae sunt. Quisquis vestrum tutam agere vitam volet, quantum plurimum potest ista viscata beneficia devitet in quibus hoc quoque miserrimi fallimur: habere nos putamus, haeremus. [4] In praecipitia cursus iste deducit; huius eminentis vitae exitus cadere est. Deinde ne resistere quidem licet, cum coepit transversos agere felicitas, aut saltem rectis aut semel ruere: non vertit fortuna sed cernulat et allidit. [5] Hanc ergo sanam ac salubrem formam vitae tenete, ut corpori tantum indulgeatis quantum bonae valetudini satis est. Durius tractandum est ne animo male pareat: cibus famem sedet, potio sitim exstinguat, vestis arceat frigus, domus munimentum sit adversus infesta temporis. Hanc utrum caespes erexerit an varius lapis gentis alienae, nihil interest: scitote tam bene hominem culmo quam auro tegi. Contemnite omnia quae supervacui labor velut ornamentum ac decus ponit; cogitate nihil praeter animum esse mirabile, cui magno nihil magnum est.’ [6] Si haec mecum, si haec cum posteris loquor, non videor tibi plus prodesse quam cum ad vadimonium advocatus descenderem aut tabulis testamenti anulum imprimerem aut in senatu candidato vocem et manum commodarem? Mihi crede, qui nihil agere videntur maiora agunt: humana divinaque simul tractant.

[10] Hunc sensum a te dici non paulo melius et adstrictius memini: non est tuum fortuna quod fecit tuum.

Illud etiam nunc melius dictum a te non praeteribo: dari bonum quod potuit auferri potest.

Hoc non imputo in solutum: de tuo tibi. Vale.

IX. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] An merito reprehendat in quadam epistula Epicurus eos qui dicunt sapientem se ipso esse contentum et propter hoc amico non indigere, desideras scire. Hoc obicitur Stilboni ab Epicuro et iis quibus summum bonum visum est animus in patiens. [2] In ambiguitatem incidendum est, si exprimere ‘ἀπὸ θεῶν’ uno verbo cito voluerimus et impatientiam dicere; poterit enim contrarium ei quod significare volumus intellegi. Nos eum volumus dicere qui respuat omnis mali sensum: accipietur is qui nullum ferre possit malum. Vide ergo num satius sit aut invulnerabilem animum dicere aut animum extra omnem patientiam positum. [3] Hoc inter nos et illos interest: noster sapiens vincit quidem incommodum omne sed sentit, illorum ne sentit quidem. Illud nobis et illis commune est, sapientem se ipso esse contentum. Sed tamen et amicum habere vult et vicinum et contubernalem, quamvis sibi ipse sufficiat. [4] Vide quam sit se contentus: aliquando sui parte contentus est. Si illi manum aut morbus aut hostis exciderit, si quis oculum vel oculos casus excusserit, reliquiae illi suae satisfacient et erit imminuto corpore et amputato tam laetus quam [in] integro fuit; sed <si> quae sibi desunt non desiderat, non deesse mavult. [5] Ita sapiens se contentus est, non ut velit esse sine amico sed ut possit; et hoc quod dico ‘possit’ tale est: amissum aequo animo fert. Sine amico quidem numquam erit: in sua potestate habet quam cito replet. Quomodo si perdiderit Phidias statuam protinus alteram faciet, sic hic faciendarum amicitiarum artifex substituet alium in locum amissi. [6] Quaeris quomodo amicum cito facturum sit? Dicam, si illud mihi tecum convenerit, ut statim tibi solvam quod debeo et quantum ad hanc epistulam paria faciamus. Hecaton ait, ‘ego tibi monstrabo amatorium sine medicamento, sine herba, sine ullius veneficae carmine: si vis amari, ama’. Habet autem non tantum usus amicitiae veteris et certae magnam voluptatem sed etiam initium et comparatio novae. [7] Quod interest inter metentem agricolam et serentem, hoc inter eum qui amicum paravit et qui parat. Attalus philosophus dicere solebat iucundius esse amicum facere quam habere, ‘quomodo artificii iucundius pingere est quam pinxisse’. Illa in opere suo occupata sollicitudo ingens oblectamentum habet in ipsa occupatione: non aequè delectatur qui ab opere perfecto removet manum. Iam fructu artis suae fruitur: ipsa fruebatur arte cum pingeret. Fructuosior est adulescentia liberorum, sed infantia dulcior.

[8] Nunc ad propositum revertamur. Sapiens etiam si contentus est se, tamen habere amicum vult, si nihil aliud, ut exerceat amicitiam, ne tam magna virtus iaceat, non ad hoc quod dicebat Epicurus in hac ipsa epistula, ‘ut habeat qui sibi aegro assideat, succurrat in vincula coniecto vel inopi’, sed ut habeat aliquem cui ipse aegro assideat, quem ipse circumventum hostili custodia liberet. Qui se spectat et propter hoc ad amicitiam venit male cogitat. Quemadmodum coepit, sic desinet: paravit amicum adversum vincla laturum opem; cum primum crepuerit catena, discedet. [9] Hae sunt amicitiae quas temporarias populus appellat; qui utilitatis causa assumptus est tamdiu placebit quamdiu utilis fuerit. Hac re florentes amicorum turba circumsedet, circa eversos solitudo est, et inde amici fugiunt ubi probantur; hac re ista tot nefaria exempla sunt aliorum metu relinquentium, aliorum metu prodentium. Necesse est initia inter se et exitus congruant: qui amicus esse coepit quia expedit <et desinet quia expedit>; placebit aliquod pretium contra amicitiam, si ullum in illa placet praeter ipsam. [10] ‘In quid amicum paras?’ Ut habeam pro quo mori possim, ut habeam quem in exilium sequar, cuius me morti et opponam et impendam: ista quam tu describis negotiatio est, non amicitia, quae ad commodum accedit, quae quid consecutura sit spectat. [11] Non dubie habet aliquid simile amicitiae affectus amantium; possis dicere illam esse insanam amicitiam. Numquid ergo quisquam amat lucri causa? numquid ambitionis aut gloriae? Ipse per se amor, omnium aliarum rerum neglegens, animos in cupiditatem formae non sine spe mutuae caritatis accendit. Quid ergo? ex honestiore causa coit turpis affectus? [12] ‘Non agitur’ inquis ‘nunc de hoc, an amicitia propter se ipsam appetenda sit.’ Immo vero nihil magis probandum est; nam si propter se ipsam expetenda est, potest ad illam accedere qui se ipso contentus est. ‘Quomodo ergo ad illam accedit?’ Quomodo ad rem pulcherrimam, non lucro captus nec varietate fortunae perterritus; detrahit amicitiae maiestatem suam qui illam parat ad bonos casus.

interpretantur: sapientem undique submovent et intra cutem suam cogunt. Distinguendum autem est quid et quatenus vox ista promittat: se contentus est sapiens ad beate vivendum, non ad vivendum; ad hoc enim multis illi rebus opus est, ad illud tantum animo sano et erecto et despiciente fortunam. [14] Volo tibi Chrysippi quoque distinctionem indicare. Ait sapientem nulla re egere, et tamen multis illi rebus opus esse: ‘contra stulto nulla re opus est - nulla enim re uti scit - sed omnibus eget’. Sapienti et manibus et oculis et multis ad cotidianum usum necessariis opus est, eget nulla re; egere enim necessitatis est, nihil necesse sapienti est. [15] Ergo quamvis se ipso contentus sit, amicis illi opus est; hos cupit habere quam plurimos, non ut beate vivat; vivet enim etiam sine amicis beate. Summum bonum extrinsecus instrumenta non quaerit; domi colitur, ex se totum est; incipit fortunae esse subiectum si quam partem sui foris quaerit. [16] ‘Qualis tamen futura est vita sapientis, si sine amicis relinquatur in custodiam coniectus vel in aliqua gente aliena destitutus vel in navigatione longa retentus aut in desertum litus eiectus?’ Qualis est Iovis, cum resoluta mundo et dis in unum confusis paulisper cessante natura acquiescit sibi cogitationibus suis traditus. Tale quiddam sapiens facit: in se reconditur, secum est. [17] Quamdiu quidem illi licet suo arbitrio res suas ordinare, se contentus est et ducit uxorem; se contentus <est> et liberos tollit; se contentus est et tamen non viveret si foret sine homine victurus. Ad amicitiam fert illum nulla utilitas sua, sed naturalis irritatio; nam ut aliarum nobis rerum innata dulcedo est, sic amicitiae. Quomodo solitudinis odium est et appetitio societatis, quomodo hominem homini natura conciliat, sic inest huic quoque rei stimulus qui nos amicitiarum appetentes faciat. [18] Nihilominus cum sit amicorum amantissimus, cum illos sibi comparet, saepe praeferat, omne intra se bonum terminabit et dicet quod Stilbon ille dixit, Stilbon quem Epicuri epistula insequitur. Hic enim capta patria, amissis liberis, amissa uxore, cum ex incendio publico solus et tamen beatus exiret, interroganti Demetrio, cui cognomen ab exitio urbium Poliorcetes fuit, num quid perdidisset, ‘omnia’ inquit ‘bona mea mecum sunt’. [19] Ecce vir fortis ac strenuus! ipsam hostis sui victoriam vicit. ‘Nihil’ inquit ‘perdidi’: dubitare illum coegit an vicisset. ‘Omnia mea mecum sunt’: iustitia, virtus, prudentia, hoc ipsum, nihil bonum putare quod eripi possit.

Miramur animalia quaedam quae per medios ignes sine noxa corporum transeunt: quanto hic mirabilior vir qui per ferrum et ruinas et ignes inlaesus et indemnis evasit! Vides quanto facilius sit totam gentem quam unum virum vincere? Haec vox illi communis est cum Stoico: aequae et hic intacta bona per concrematas urbes fert; se enim ipse contentus est; hoc felicitatem suam fine designat. [20] Ne existimes nos solos generosa verba iactare, et ipse Stilbonis obiurgator Epicurus similem illi vocem emisit, quam tu boni consule, etiam si hunc diem iam expunxi. ‘Si cui’ inquit ‘sua non videntur amplissima, licet totius mundi dominus sit, tamen miser est.’ Vel si hoc modo tibi melius enuntiari videtur - id enim agendum est ut non verbis serviamus sed sensibus -, ‘miser est qui se non beatissimum iudicat, licet imperet mundo’. [21] Ut scias autem hos sensus esse communes, natura scilicet dictante, apud poetam comicum invenies:

Quid enim refert qualis status tuus sit, si tibi videtur malus ‘ [22] ‘Quid ergo?’ inquis ‘si beatum se dixerit ille turpiter dives et ille multorum dominus sed plurium servus, beatus sua sententia fiet?’ Non quid dicat sed quid sentiat refert, nec quid uno die sentiat, sed quid assidue. Non est autem quod verearis ne ad indignum res tanta perveniat: nisi sapienti sua non placent; omnis stultitia laborat fastidio sui. Vale.

X. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Sic est, non muto sententiam: fuge multitudinem, fuge paucitatem, fuge etiam unum. Non habeo cum quo te communicatum velim. Et vide quod iudicium meum habeas: audeo te tibi credere. Crates, ut aiunt, huius ipsius Stilbonis auditor, cuius mentionem priore epistula feci, cum vidisset adulescentulum secreto ambulans, interrogavit quid illic solus faceret. ‘Mecum’ inquit ‘loquor.’ Cui Crates ‘cave’ inquit ‘rogo et diligenter attende: cum homine malo loqueris’. [2] Lugentem timentemque custodire solemus, ne solitudine male utatur. Nemo est ex imprudentibus qui relinqui sibi debeat; tunc mala consilia agitant, tunc aut aliis aut ipsis futura pericula struunt, tunc cupiditates improbas ordinant; tunc quidquid aut metu aut pudore celabat animus exponit, tunc audaciam acuit, libidinem irritat, iracundiam instigat. Denique quod unum solitudo habet commodum, nihil ulli committere, non timere indicem, perit stulto: ipse se prodit. Vide itaque quid de te sperem, immo quid spondeam mihi - spes enim incerti boni nomen est -: non invenio cum quo te malim esse quam tecum. [3] Repeto memoria quam magno animo quaedam verba proieceris, quanti roboris plena: gratulatus sum protinus mihi et dixi, ‘non a summis labris ista venerunt, habent hae voces fundamentum; iste homo non est unus e populo, ad salutem spectat’. [4] Sic loquere, sic vive; vide ne te ulla res deprimat. Votorum tuorum veterum licet deis gratiam facias, alia de integro suscipe: roga bonam mentem, bonam valetudinem animi, deinde tunc corporis. Quidni tu ista vota saepe facias? Audacter deum roga: nihil illum de alieno rogaturus es.

XI. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Locutus est mecum amicus tuus bonae indolis, in quo quantum esset animi, quantum ingenii, quantum iam etiam profectus, sermo primus ostendit. Dedit nobis gustum, ad quem respondebit; non enim ex praeparato locutus est, sed subito deprehensus. Ubi se colligebat, verecundiam, bonum in adulescente signum, vix potuit excutere; adeo illi ex alto suffusus est rubor. Hic illum, quantum suspicor, etiam cum se confirmaverit et omnibus vitiis exuerit, sapientem quoque sequetur. Nulla enim sapientia naturalia corporis aut animi vitia ponuntur: quidquid infixum et ingenitum est lenitur arte, non vincitur. [2] Quibusdam etiam constantissimis in conspectu populi sudor erumpit non aliter quam fatigatis et aestuantibus solet, quibusdam tremunt genua dicturis, quorundam dentes colliduntur, lingua titubat, labra concurrunt: haec nec disciplina nec usus umquam excutit, sed natura vim suam exercet et illo vitio sui etiam robustissimos admonet. [3] Inter haec esse et ruborem scio, qui gravissimis quoque viris subitus affunditur. Magis quidem in iuvenibus apparet, quibus et plus caloris est et tenera frons; nihilominus et veteranos et senes tangit. Quidam numquam magis quam cum erubuerint timendi sunt, quasi omnem verecundiam effuderint; [4] Sulla tunc erat violentissimus cum faciem eius sanguis invaserat. Nihil erat mollius ore Pompei; numquam non coram pluribus rubuit, utique in contionibus. Fabianum, cum in senatum testis esset inductus, erubuisse memini, et hic illum mire pudor decuit. [5] Non accidit hoc ab infirmitate mentis sed a novitate rei, quae inexercitatos, etiam si non concutit, movet naturali in hoc facilitate corporis pronos; nam ut quidam boni sanguinis sunt, ita quidam incitati et mobilis et cito in os prodeuntis. [6] Haec, ut dixi, nulla sapientia abigit: alioquin haberet rerum naturam sub imperio, si omnia eraderet vitia. Quaecumque attribuit condicio nascendi et corporis temperatura, cum multum se diuque animus composuerit, haerebunt; nihil horum vetari potest, non magis quam accersi. [7] Artifices scaenici, qui imitantur affectus, qui metum et trepidationem exprimunt, qui tristitiam repraesentant, hoc indicio imitantur verecundiam. Deiciunt enim vultum, verba summittunt, figunt in terram oculos et deprimunt: ruborem sibi exprimere non possunt; nec prohibetur hic nec adducitur. Nihil adversus haec sapientia promittit, nihil proficit: sui iuris sunt, iniussa veniunt, iniussa discedunt.

XII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Quocumque me verti, argumenta senectutis meae video. Veneram in suburbanum meum et querebar de impensis aedificii dilabentis. Ait vilicus mihi non esse negligentiae suae vitium, omnia se facere, sed villam veterem esse. Haec villa inter manus meas crevit: quid mihi futurum est, si tam putria sunt aetatis meae saxa? [2] Iratus illi proximam occasionem stomachandi arripio. ‘Apparet’ inquam ‘has platanos neglegi: nullas habent frondes. Quam nodosi sunt et retorridi rami, quam tristes et squalidi trunci! Hoc non accideret si quis has circumfoderet, si irrigaret.’ Iurat per genium meum se omnia facere, in nulla re cessare curam suam, sed illas vetulas esse. Quod intra nos sit, ego illas posueram, ego illarum primum videram folium. [3] Conversus ad ianuam ‘quis est iste?’ inquam ‘iste decrepitus et merito ad ostium admotus? foras enim spectat. Unde istunc nactus es? quid te delectavit: alienum mortuum tollere?’ At ille ‘non cognoscis me?’ inquit: ‘ego sum Felicio, cui solebas sigillaria afferre; ego sum Philositi vilici filius, deliciolum tuum’. ‘Perfecte’ inquam ‘iste delirat: pupulus, etiam delictum meum factus est? Prorsus potest fieri: dentes illi cum maxime cadunt.’

[4] Debeo hoc suburbano meo, quod mihi senectus mea quocumque adverteram apparuit. Complectamur illam et amemus; plena <est> voluptatis, si illa scias uti. Gratissima sunt poma cum fugiunt; pueritiae maximus in exitu decor est; deditos vino potio extrema delectat, illa quae mergit, quae ebrietati summam manum imponit; [5] quod in se iucundissimum omnis voluptas habet in finem sui differt. Iucundissima est aetas devexa iam, non tamen praeceps, et illam quoque in extrema tegula stantem iudico habere suas voluptates; aut hoc ipsum succedit in locum voluptatum, nullis egere. Quam dulce est cupiditates fatigasse ac reliquisse! [6] ‘Molestum est’ inquis ‘mortem ante oculos habere.’ Primum ista tam seni ante oculos debet esse quam iuveni - non enim citamur ex censu -; deinde nemo tam sene est ut improbe unum diem speret. Unus autem dies gradus vitae est. Tota aetas partibus constat et orbis habet circumductos maiores minoribus: est aliquis qui omnis complectatur et cingat - hic pertinet a natali ad diem extremum -; est alter qui annos adulescentiae excludit; est qui totam pueritiam ambitu suo adstringit; est deinde per se annus in se omnia continens tempora, quorum multiplicatione vita componitur; mensis artiore praecingitur circulo; angustissimum habet dies gyrum, sed et hic ab initio ad exitum venit, ab ortu ad occasum. [7] Ideo Heraclitus, cui cognomen fecit orationis obscuritas, ‘unus’ inquit ‘dies par omni est’. Hoc alius aliter excepit. Dixit enim * * * parem esse horis, nec mentitur; nam si dies est tempus viginti et quattuor horarum, necesse est omnes inter se dies pares esse, quia nox habet quod dies perdidit. Alius ait parem esse unum diem omnibus similitudine; nihil enim habet longissimi temporis spatium quod non et in uno die invenias, lucem et noctem, et in alternas mundi vices plura facit ista, non <alia>: * * * alias contractior, alias productior. [8] Itaque sic ordinandus est dies omnis tamquam cogat agmen et consummet atque expleat vitam. Pacuvius, qui Syriam usu suam fecit, cum vino et illis funebribus epulis sibi parentaverat, sic in cubiculum ferebatur a cena ut inter plausus exoletorum hoc ad symphoniam caneretur: ‘beb’TMtai, beb’TMtai«. [9] Nullo non se die extulit. Hoc quod ille ex mala conscientia faciebat nos ex bona faciamus, et in somnum ituri laeti hilaresque dicamus,

Crastinum si adiecerit deus, laeti recipiamus. Ille beatissimus est et securus sui possessor qui crastinum sine sollicitudine exspectat; quisquis dixit ‘vixi’ cotidie ad lucrum surgit.

LIBER SECUNDUS

XIII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Multum tibi esse animi scio; nam etiam antequam instrueres te praeceptis salutaribus et dura vincentibus, satis adversus fortunam placebas tibi, et multo magis postquam cum illa manum conseruisti viresque expertus es tuas, quae numquam certam dare fiduciam sui possunt nisi cum multae difficultates hinc et illinc apparuerunt, aliquando vero et propius accesserunt. Sic verus ille animus et in alienum non venturus arbitrium probatur; haec eius obrussa est. [2] Non potest athleta magnos spiritus ad certamen afferre qui numquam suggillatus est: ille qui sanguinem suum vidit, cuius dentes crepuere sub pugno, ille qui subplantatus ad versarium toto tulit corpore nec proiecit animum proiectus, qui quotiens cecidit contumacior resurrexit, cum magna spe descendit ad pugnam. [3] Ergo, ut similitudinem istam prosequar, saepe iam fortuna supra te fuit, nec tamen tradidisti te, sed subsiluisti et acrior constitisti; multum enim adicit sibi virtus laccessita.

Tamen, si tibi videtur, accipe a me auxilia quibus munire te possis. [4] Plura sunt, Lucili, quae nos terrent quam quae premunt, et saepius opinione quam re laboramus. Non loquor tecum Stoica lingua, sed hac summissiore; nos enim dicimus omnia ista quae gemitus mugitusque exprimunt levia esse et contemnenda. Omittamus haec magna verba, sed, di boni, vera: illud tibi praecipio, ne sis miser ante tempus, cum illa quae velut imminetia expavisti fortasse numquam ventura sint, certe non venerint. [5] Quaedam ergo nos magis torquent quam debent, quaedam ante torquent quam debent, quaedam torquent cum omnino non debeant; aut augemus dolorem aut praecipimus aut fingimus.

Primum illud, quia res in controversia est et litem contestatam habemus, in praesentia differatur. Quod ego leve dixero tu gravissimum esse contendes; scio alios inter flagella ridere, alios gemere sub colapho. Postea videbimus utrum ista suis viribus valeant an imbecillitate nostra. [6] Illud praesta mihi, ut, quotiens circumsteterint qui tibi te miserum esse persuadeant, non quid audias sed quid sentias cogites, et cum patientia tua deliberes ac te ipse interroges, qui tua optime nosti, 'quid est quare isti me complorent?

quid est quod trepident, quod contagium quoque mei timeant, quasi transilire calamitas possit? est aliquid istic mali, an res ista magis infamis est quam mala?’ Ipse te interroga, ‘numquid sine causa crucior et maereo et quod non est malum facio?’ [7] ‘Quomodo’ inquis ‘intellegam, vana sint an vera quibus angor?’ Accipe huius rei regulam: aut praesentibus torquemur aut futuris aut utrisque. De praesentibus facile iudicium est: si corpus tuum liberum et sanum est, nec ullus ex iniuria dolor est, videbimus quid futurum sit: hodie nihil negotii habet. [8] ‘At enim futurum est.’ Primum dispice an certa argumenta sint venturi mali; plerumque enim suspicionibus laboramus, et illudit nobis illa quae conficere bellum solet fama, multo autem magis singulos conficit. Ita est, mi Lucili: cito accedimus opinioni; non coarguimus illa quae nos in metum adducunt nec excutimus, sed trepidamus et sic vertimus terga quemadmodum illi quos pulvis motus fuga pecorum exuit castris aut quos aliqua fabula sine auctore sparsa conterruit. [9] Nescio quomodo magis vana perturbant; vera enim modum suum habent: quidquid ex incerto venit coniecturae et paventis animi licentiae traditur. Nulli itaque tam perniciosi, tam inrevocabiles quam lymphatici metus sunt; ceteri enim sine ratione, hi sine mente sunt. [10] Inquiramus itaque in rem diligenter. Verisimile est aliquid futurum mali: non statim verum est. Quam multa non exspectata venerunt! quam multa exspectata nusquam comparuerunt! Etiam si futurum est, quid iuvat dolori suo occurrere? satis cito dolebis cum venerit: interim tibi meliora promitte. [11] Quid facies lucri? tempus. Multa intervenient quibus vicinum periculum vel prope admotum aut subsistat aut desinat aut in alienum caput transeat: incendium ad fugam patuit; quosdam molliter ruina deposuit; aliquando gladius ab ipsa cervice revocatus est; aliquis carnifici suo superstes fuit. Habet etiam mala fortuna levitatem. Fortasse erit, fortasse non erit: interim non est; meliora propone. [12] Nonnumquam, nullis apparentibus signis quae mali aliquid praenuntient, animus sibi falsas imagines fingit: aut verbum aliquod dubiae significationis detorquet in peius aut maiorem sibi offensam proponit alicuius quam est, et cogitat non quam iratus ille sit, sed quantum liceat irato. Nulla autem causa vitae est, nullus miseriarum modus, si timetur quantum potest. Hic prudentia prosit, hic robore animi evidentem quoque metum respue; si minus, vitio vitium repelle, spe metum tempera. Nihil tam certum est ex his quae timentur ut non certius sit et formidata subsidere et sperata decipere.

[17] Circumspice tecum singulos: occurrent tibi senes qui se cum maxime ad ambitionem, ad peregrinationes, ad negotiandum parent. Quid est autem turpius quam senex vivere incipiens? Non adicerem auctorem huic voci, nisi esset secretior nec inter vulgata Epicuri dicta, quae mihi et laudare et adoptare permisi. Vale.

XIV. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Fateor insitam esse nobis corporis nostri caritatem; fateor nos huius gerere tutelam. Non nego indulgendum illi, serviendum nego; multis enim serviet qui corpori servit, qui pro illo nimium timet, qui ad illud omnia refert. [2] Sic gerere nos debemus, non tamquam propter corpus vivere debeamus, sed tamquam non possimus sine corpore; huius nos nimius amor timoribus inquietat, sollicitudinibus onerat, contumeliis obicit; honestum ei vile est cui corpus nimis carum est. Agatur eius diligentissime cura, ita tamen ut, cum exigit ratio, cum dignitas, cum fides, mittendum in ignes sit. [3] Nihilominus quantum possumus evitemus incommoda quoque, non tantum pericula, et in tutum nos reducamus, excogitantes subinde quibus possint timenda depelli. Quorum tria, nisi fallor, genera sunt: timetur inopia, timentur morbi, timentur quae per vim potentioris eveniunt. [4] Ex his omnibus nihil nos magis concutit quam quod ex aliena potentia impendit; magno enim strepitu et tumultu venit. Naturalia mala quae rettuli, inopia atque morbus, silentio subeunt nec oculis nec auribus quicquam terroris incutiunt: ingens alterius mali pompa est; ferrum circa se et ignes habet et catenas et turbam ferarum quam in viscera immittat humana. [5] Cogita hoc loco carcerem et cruces et eculeos et uncum et adactum per medium hominem qui per os emergeret stipitem et distracta in diversum actis curribus membra, illam tunicam alimentis ignium et illitam et textam, et quidquid aliud praeter haec commenta saevitia est. [6] Non est itaque mirum, si maximus huius rei timor est cuius et varietas magna et apparatus terribilis est. Nam quemadmodum plus agit tortor quo plura instrumenta doloris exposuit - specie enim vincuntur qui patientiae restitissent -, ita ex iis quae animos nostros subigunt et domant plus proficiunt quae habent quod ostendant. Illae pestes non minus graves sunt - famem dico et sitim et praecordiorum suppurationes et febrem viscera ipsa torrentem - sed latent, nihil habent quod intentent, quod praeferant: haec ut magna bella aspectu paratuque vicerunt.

[7] Demus itaque operam, abstineamus offensis. Interdum populus est quem timere debeamus; interdum, si ea civitatis disciplina est ut plurima per senatum transigantur, gratiosi in eo viri; interdum singuli quibus potestas populi et in populum data est. Hos omnes amicos habere operosum est, satis est inimicos non habere. Itaque sapiens numquam potentium iras provocabit, immo [nec] declinabit, non aliter quam in navigando procellam. [8] Cum peteres Siciliam, traiecisti fretum Temerarius gubernator contempsit austri minas - ille est enim qui Siculum pelagus exasperet et in vertices cogat -; non sinistrum petit litus sed id a quo propior Charybdis maria convolvit. At ille cautior peritos locorum rogat quis aestus sit, quae signa dent nubes; longe ab illa regione verticibus infami cursum tenet. Idem facit sapiens: nocituram potentiam vitat, hoc primum cavens, ne vitare videatur; pars enim securitatis et in hoc est, non ex professo eam petere, quia quae quis fugit damnat. [9] Circumspiciendum ergo nobis est quomodo a vulgo tuti esse possimus. Primum nihil idem concupiscamus: rixa est inter competitores. Deinde nihil habeamus quod cum magno emolumento insidiantis eripi possit; quam minimum sit in corpore tuo spoliolum. Nemo ad humanum sanguinem propter ipsum venit, aut admodum pauci; plures computant quam oderunt. Nudum latro transmittit; etiam in obsessa via pauperi pax est. [10] Tria deinde ex praecepto veteri praestanda sunt ut vitentur: odium, invidia, contemptus. Quomodo hoc fiat sapientia sola monstrabit; difficile enim temperamentum est, verendumque ne in contemptum nos invidiae timor transferat, ne dum calcare nolumus videamur posse calcari. Multis timendi attulit causas timeri posse. Undique nos reducamus: non minus contemni quam suspici nocet. [11] Ad philosophiam ergo confugiendum est; haec litterae, non dico apud bonos sed apud mediocriter malos infularum loco sunt. Nam forensis eloquentia et quaecumque alia populum movet adversarios habet: haec quieta et sui negotii contemni non potest, cui ab omnibus artibus etiam apud pessimos honor est. Numquam in tantum convalescet nequitia, numquam sic contra virtutes coniurabitur, ut non philosophiae nomen venerabile et sacrum maneat. Ceterum philosophia ipsa tranquille modesteque tractanda est.

disputare an illo tempore capessenda fuerit sapienti res publica. Quid tibi vis, arce Cato? iam non agitur de libertate: olim pessum data est. Quaeritur utrum Caesar an Pompeius possideat rem publicam: quid tibi cum ista contentione? nullae partes tuae sunt. Dominus eligitur: quid tua, uter vincat? potest melior vincere, non potest non peior esse qui vicerit. Ultimas partes attingi Catonis; sed ne priores quidem anni fuerunt qui sapientem in illam rapinam rei publicae admitterent. Quid aliud quam vociferatus est Cato et misit irritas voces, cum modo per populi levatus manus et obrutus sputis exportandus extra forum traheretur, modo e senatu in carcerem duceretur?

[14] Sed postea videbimus an sapienti opera rei publicae danda sit: interim ad hos te Stoicos voco qui a re publica exclusi secesserunt ad colendam vitam et humano generi iura condenda sine ulla potentioris offensa. Non conturbabit sapiens publicos mores nec populum in se vitae novitate convertet. [15] ‘Quid ergo? utique erit tutus qui hoc propositum sequetur?’ Promittere tibi hoc non magis possum quam in homine temperanti bonam valetudinem, et tamen facit temperantia bonam valetudinem. Perit aliqua navis in portu: sed quid tu accidere in medio mari credis? Quanto huic periculum paratius foret multa agenti molientique, cui ne otium quidem tutum est? Pereunt aliquando innocentes - quis negat? -, nocentes tamen saepius. Ars ei constat qui per ornamenta percussus est. [16] Denique consilium rerum omnium sapiens, non exitum spectat; initia in potestate nostra sunt, de eventu fortuna iudicat, cui de me sententiam non do. ‘At aliquid vexationis afferet, aliquid adversi.’ Non damnat latro cum occidit.

XV. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Mos antiquis fuit, usque ad meam servatus aetatem, primis epistulae verbis adicere 'si vales bene est, ego valeo'. Recte nos dicimus 'si philosopharis, bene est'. Valere enim hoc demum est. Sine hoc aeger est animus; corpus quoque, etiam si magnas habet vires, non aliter quam furiosi aut frenetici validum est. [2] Ergo hanc praecipue valetudinem cura, deinde et illam secundam; quae non magno tibi constabit, si volueris bene valere. Stulta est enim, mi Lucili, et minime conveniens litterato viro occupatio exercendi lacertos et dilatandi cervicem ac latera firmandi; cum tibi feliciter sagina cesserit et tori creverint, nec vires umquam opimi bovis nec pondus aequabis. Adice nunc quod maiore corporis sarcina animus eliditur et minus agilis est. Itaque quantum potes circumscribe corpus tuum et animo locum laxa. [3] Multa sequuntur incommoda huic deditos curae: primum exercitationes, quarum labor spiritum exhaurit et inhabilem intentioni ac studiis acrioribus reddit; deinde copia ciborum subtilitas impeditur. Accedunt pessimae notae mancipia in magisterium recepta, homines inter oleum et vinum occupati, quibus ad votum dies actus est si bene desudaverunt, si in locum eius quod effluxit multum potionis altius in ieiuno iturae regesserunt. [4] Bibere et sudare vita cardiaci est. Sunt exercitationes et faciles et breves, quae corpus et sine mora lassent et tempori parcant, cuius praecipua ratio habenda est: cursus et cum aliquo pondere manus motae et saltus vel ille qui corpus in altum levat vel ille qui in longum mittit vel ille, ut ita dicam, saliaris aut, ut contumeliosius dicam, fullonius: quoslibet ex his elige +usum rude facile+. [5] Quidquid facies, cito redi a corpore ad animum; illum noctibus ac diebus exerce. Labore modico alitur ille; hanc exercitationem non frigus, non aestus impedit, ne senectus quidem. Id bonum cura quod vetustate fit melius. [6] Neque ego te iubeo semper imminere libro aut pugillaribus: dandum est aliquod intervallum animo, ita tamen ut non resolvatur, sed remittatur. Gestatio et corpus concutit et studio non officit: possis legere, possis dictare, possis loqui, possis audire, quorum nihil ne ambulatio quidem vetat fieri. [7] Nec tu intentionem vocis contempseris, quam veto te per gradus et certos modos extollere, deinde deprimere. Quid si velis deinde quemadmodum ambules discere? Admitte istos quos nova artificia docuit fames: erit qui gradus tuos temperet et buccas edentis observet et in tantum procedat in quantum audaciam eius patientia et credulitate produxeris. Quid ergo? a clamore protinus et a summa contentione vox tua incipiet? usque eo naturale est paulatim incitari ut litigantes quoque a sermone incipiant, ad vociferationem transeant; nemo statim Quiritium fidem implorat. [8] Ergo utcumque tibi impetus animi suaserit, modo vehementius fac vitiis convicium, modo lentius, prout vox te quoque hortabitur +in id latus+; modesta, cum recipies illam revocarisque, descendat, non decadat; +mediatorisui habeat et hoc+ indocto et rustico more desaeviat. Non enim id agimus ut exerceatur vox, sed ut exerceat.

[9] Detraxi tibi non pusillum negotii: una mercedula et +unum graecum+ ad haec beneficia accedet. Ecce insigne praeceptum: ‘stulta vita ingrata est, trepida; tota in futurum fertur’. ‘Quis hoc’ inquis ‘dicit?’ idem qui supra. Quam tu nunc vitam dici existimas stultam? Babae et Isonis? Non ita est: nostra dicitur, quos caeca cupiditas in nocitura, certe numquam satiatura praecipitat, quibus si quid satis esse posset, fuisset, qui non cogitamus quam iucundum sit nihil poscere, quam magnificum sit plenum esse nec ex fortuna pendere. [10] Subinde itaque, Lucili, quam multa sis consecutus recordare; cum aspexeris quot te antecedant, cogita quot sequantur. Si vis gratus esse adversus deos et adversus vitam tuam, cogita quam multos antecesseris. Quid tibi cum ceteris? te ipse antecessisti. [11] Finem constitue quem transire ne possis quidem si velis; discedant aliquando ista insidiosa bona et sperantibus meliora quam assecutis. Si quid in illis esset solidi, aliquando et implerent: nunc haurientium sitim concitant. Mittantur speciosi apparatus; et quod futuri temporis incerta sors volvit, quare potius a fortuna impetrem ut det, quam a me ne petam? Quare autem petam? oblitus fragilitatis humanae congeram? in quid laborem? Ecce hic dies ultimus est; ut non sit, prope ab ultimo est. Vale.

XVI. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Liquere hoc tibi, Lucili, scio, neminem posse beate vivere, ne tolerabiliter quidem, sine sapientiae studio, et beatam vitam perfecta sapientia effici, ceterum tolerabilem etiam inchoata. Sed hoc quod liquet firmandum et altius cotidiana meditatione figendum est: plus operis est in eo ut proposita custodias quam ut honesta proponas. Perseverandum est et assiduo studio robur addendum, donec bona mens sit quod bona voluntas est.

[2] Itaque - non opus est - tibi apud me pluribus verbis aut affirmatione tam longa: intellego multum te profecisse. Quae scribis unde veniant scio; non sunt ficta nec colorata. Dicam tamen quid sentiam: iam de te spem habeo, nondum fiduciam. Tu quoque idem facias volo: non est quod tibi cito et facile credas. Excute te et varie scrutare et observa; illud ante omnia vide, utrum in philosophia an in ipsa vita profeceris. [3] Non est philosophia populare artificium nec ostentationi paratum; non in verbis sed in rebus est. Nec in hoc adhibetur, ut cum aliqua oblectatione consumatur dies, ut dematur otio nausia: animum format et fabricat, vitam disponit, actiones regit, agenda et omittenda demonstrat, sedet ad gubernaculum et per ancipitia fluctuantium derigit cursum. Sine hac nemo intrepide potest vivere, nemo secure; innumerabilia accidunt singulis horis quae consilium exigant, quod ab hac petendum est. [4] Dicet aliquis, 'quid mihi prodest philosophia, si fatum est? quid prodest, si deus rector est? quid prodest, si casus imperat? Nam et mutari certa non possunt et nihil praeparari potest adversus incerta, sed aut consilium meum occupavit deus decrevitque quid facerem, aut consilio meo nihil fortuna permittit.' [5] Quidquid est ex his, Lucili, vel si omnia haec sunt, philosophandum est; sive nos inexorabili lege fata constringunt, sive arbiter deus universi cuncta disposuit, sive casus res humanas sine ordine impellit et iactat, philosophia nos tueri debet. Haec adhortabitur ut deo libenter pareamus, ut fortunae contumaciter; haec docebit ut deum sequaris, feras casum. [6] Sed non est nunc in hanc disputationem transeundum, quid sit iuris nostri si providentia in imperio est, aut si factorum series illigatos trahit, aut si repentina ac subita dominantur: illo nunc revertor, ut te moneam et exhorter ne patiaris impetum animi tui delabi et refrigescere. Contine illum et constitue, ut habitus animi fiat quod est impetus.

XVII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Proice omnia ista, si sapis, immo ut sapias, et ad bonam mentem magno cursu ac totis viribus tende; si quid est quo teneris, aut expedi aut incide. ‘Moratur’ inquis ‘me res familiares; sic illam disponere volo ut sufficere nihil agenti possit, ne aut paupertas mihi oneri sit aut ego alicui.’ [2] Cum hoc dicis, non videris vim ac potentiam eius de quo cogitas boni nosse; et summam quidem rei pervides, quantum philosophia prosit, partes autem nondum satis subtiliter dispicis, necdum scis quantum ubique nos adiuvet, quemadmodum et in maximis, ut Ciceronis utar verbo, ‘opituletur’ <et> in minima descendat. Mihi crede, advoca illam in consilium: suadebit tibi ne ad calculos sedeas. [3] Nempe hoc quaeris et hoc ista dilatione vis consequi, ne tibi paupertas timenda sit: quid si appetenda est? Multis ad philosophandum obstitere divitiae: paupertas expedita est, segura est. Cum classicum cecinit, scit non se peti; cum aqua conclamata est, quomodo exeat, non quid efferat, quaerit; [ut] si navigandum est, non strepunt portus nec unius comitatu inquieta sunt litora; non circumstat illam turba servorum, ad quos pascendos transmarinarum regionum est optanda fertilitas. [4] Facile est pascere paucos ventres et bene institutos et nihil aliud desiderantes quam impleri: parvo fames constat, magno fastidium. Paupertas contenta est desiderii instantibus satis facere: quid est ergo quare hanc recuses contubernalem cuius mores sanus dives imitatur? [5] Si vis vacare animo, aut pauper sis oportet aut pauperi similis. Non potest studium salutare fieri sine frugalitatis cura; frugalitas autem paupertas voluntaria est. Tolle itaque istas excusationes: ‘nondum habeo quantum sat est; si ad illam summam pervenero, tunc me totum philosophiae dabo’. Atqui nihil prius quam hoc parandum est quod tu differs et post cetera paras; ab hoc incipiendum est. ‘Parare’ inquis ‘unde vivam volo.’ Simul et parare <te> discis: si quid te vetat bene vivere, bene mori non vetat. [6] Non est quod nos paupertas a philosophia revocet, ne egestas quidem. Toleranda est enim ad hoc properantibus vel fames; quam toleravere quidam in obsidionibus, et quod aliud erat illius patientiae praemium quam in arbitrium non cadere victoris? Quanto hoc maius est quod promittitur: perpetua libertas, nullius nec hominis nec dei timor. Ecquid vel esurienti ad ista veniendum est? [7] Perpessi sunt exercitus inopiam omnium rerum, vixerunt herbarum radicibus et dictu foedis tulerunt famem; haec omnia passi sunt pro regno, quo magis mireris, alieno: dubitabit aliquis ferre paupertatem ut animum furoribus liberet? Non est ergo prius acquirendum: licet ad philosophiam etiam sine viatico pervenire. [8] Ita est? cum omnia habueris, tunc habere et sapientiam voles? haec erit ultimum vitae instrumentum et, ut ita dicam, additamentum? Tu vero, sive aliquid habes, iam philosophare - unde enim scis an iam nimis habeas? -, sive nihil, hoc prius quaere quam quicquam. [9] 'At necessaria deerunt.' Primum deesse non poterunt, quia natura minimum petit, naturae autem se sapiens accommodat. Sed si necessitates ultimae inciderint, iamdudum exhibit e vita et molestus sibi esse desinet. Si vero exiguum erit et angustum quo possit vita produci, id boni consulat nec ultra necessaria sollicitus aut anxius ventri et scapulis suum reddet et occupationes divitum concursationesque ad divitias euntium securus laetusque ridebit [10] ac dicet, 'quid in longum ipse te differs? expectabisne fenoris quaestum aut ex mercede compendium aut tabulas beati senis, cum fieri possis statim dives? Repraesentat opes sapientia, quas cuicumque fecit supervacuas dedit.' Haec ad alios pertinent: tu locupletibus propior es. Saeculum muta, nimis habes; idem est autem omni saeculo quod sat est.

[11] Poteram hoc loco epistulam claudere, nisi te male instituissem. Reges Parthos non potest quisquam salutare sine munere; tibi valedicere non licet gratis. Quid istic? ab Epicuro mutuum sumam: 'multis parasse divitias non finis miseriarum fuit sed mutatio'. [12] Nec hoc miror; non est enim in rebus vitium sed in ipso animo. Illud quod paupertatem nobis gravem fecerat et divitias graves fecit. Quemadmodum nihil refert utrum aegrum in ligneo lecto an in aureo colles - quocumque illum transtuleris, morbum secum suum transferet -, sic nihil refert utrum aeger animus in divitiis an in paupertate ponatur: malum illum suum sequitur. Vale.

XVIII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] December est mensis: cum maxime civitas sudat. Ius luxuriae publice datum est; ingenti apparatu sonant omnia, tamquam quicquam inter Saturnalia intersit et dies rerum agendarum; adeo nihil interest ut <non> videatur mihi errasse qui dixit olim mensem Decembrem fuisse, nunc annum. [2] Si te hic haberem, libenter tecum conferrem quid existimares esse faciendum, utrum nihil ex cotidiana consuetudine movendum an, ne dissidere videremur cum publicis moribus, et hilarius cenandum et exuendam togam. Nam quod fieri nisi in tumultu et tristi tempore civitatis non solebat, voluptatis causa ac festorum dierum vestem mutavimus. [3] Si te bene novi, arbitri partibus functus nec per omnia nos similes esse pilleatae turbae voluisses nec per omnia dissimiles; nisi forte his maxime diebus animo imperandum est, ut tunc voluptatibus solus abstineat cum in illas omnis turba procubuit; certissimum enim argumentum firmitatis suae capit, si ad blanda et in luxuriam trahentia nec it nec abducitur. [4] Hoc multo fortius est, ebrio ac vomitante populo siccum ac sobrium esse, illud temperantius, non excerpere se nec insignire nec misceri omnibus et eadem sed non eodem modo facere; licet enim sine luxuria agere festum diem.

exultabis dipondio satur et intelleges ad securitatem non opus esse fortuna; hoc enim quod necessitati sat est dabit et irata. [8] Non est tamen quare tu multum tibi facere videaris - facies enim quod multa milia servorum, multa milia pauperum faciunt -: illo nomine te Cuspice, quod facies non coactus, quod tam facile erit tibi illud pati semper quam aliquando experiri. Exerceamur ad palum, et ne imparatos fortuna deprehendat, fiat nobis paupertas familiaris; securius divites erimus si scierimus quam non sit grave pauperes esse. [9] Certos habebat dies ille magister voluptatis Epicurus quibus maligne famem exstingueret, visurus an aliquid deesset ex plena et consummata voluptate, vel quantum deesset, et an dignum quod quis magno labore pensaret. Hoc certe in iis epistulis ait quas scripsit Charino magistratu ad Polyaeum; et quidem gloriatur non toto asse <se> pasci, Metrodorum, qui nondum tantum profecerit, toto. [10] In hoc tu victu saturitatem putas esse? Et voluptas est; voluptas autem non illa levis et fugax et subinde reficienda, sed stabilis et certa. Non enim iucunda res est aqua et polenta aut frustum hordeacii panis, sed summa voluptas est posse capere etiam ex his voluptatem et ad id se deduxisse quod eripere nulla fortunae iniquitas possit. [11] Liberaliora alimenta sunt carceris, sepositos ad capitale supplicium non tam anguste qui occisurus est pascit: quanta est animi magnitudo ad id sua sponte descendere quod ne ad extrema quidem decretis timendum sit! hoc est praeoccupare tela fortunae. [12] Incipe ergo, mi Lucili, sequi horum consuetudinem et aliquos dies destina quibus secedas a tuis rebus minimoque te facias familiarem; incipe cum paupertate habere commercium;

aude, hospes, contemnere opes et te quoque dignum
finge deo.

[14] Sed iam incipiamus epistulam complicare. 'Prius' inquis 'redde quod debes.' Delegabo te ad Epicurum, ab illo fiet numeratio: 'immodica ira gignit insaniam'. Hoc quam verum sit necesse est scias, cum habueris et servum et inimicum. [15] In omnes personas hic exardescit affectus; tam ex amore nascitur quam ex odio, non minus inter seria quam inter lusus et iocos; nec interest ex quam magna causa nascatur sed in qualem perveniat animum. Sic ignis non refert quam magnus sed quo incidat; nam etiam maximum solida non receperunt, rursus arida et corripui facilia scintillam quoque foveant usque in incendium. Ita est, mi Lucili: ingentis irae exitus furor est, et ideo ira vitanda est non moderationis causa sed sanitatis. Vale.

XIX. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Exulto quotiens epistulas tuas accipio; implent enim me bona spe, et iam non promittunt de te sed spondent. Ita fac, oro atque obsecro - quid enim habeo melius quod amicum rogem quam quod pro ipso rogaturus sum? si potes, subducte istis occupationibus; si minus, eripe. Satis multum temporis sparsimus: incipiamus vasa in senectute colligere. [2] Numquid invidiosum est? in freto viximus, moriamur in portu. Neque ego suaserim tibi nomen ex otio petere, quod nec iactare debes nec abscondere; numquam enim usque eo te abigam generis humani furore damnato ut latebram tibi aliquam parari et oblivionem velim: id age ut otium tuum non emineat sed appareat. [3] Deinde videbunt de isto quibus integra sunt et prima consilia an velint vitam per obscurum transmittere: tibi liberum non est. In medium te protulit ingenii vigor, scriptorum elegantia, clarae et nobiles amicitiae; iam notitia te invasit; ut in extrema mergaris ac penitus recondaris, tamen priora monstrabunt. [4] Tenebras habere non potes; sequetur quocumque fugeris multum pristinae lucis: quietem potes vindicare sine ullius odio, sine desiderio aut morsu animi tui. Quid enim relinques quod invitus relictum a te possis cogitare? Clientes? quorum nemo te ipsum sequitur, sed aliquid ex te; amicitia olim petebatur, nunc praeda; mutabunt testamenta destituti senes, migrabit ad aliud limen salutator. Non potest parvo res magna constare: aestima utrum te relinquere an aliquid ex tuis malis. [5] Utinam quidem tibi senescere contigisset intra natalium tuorum modum, nec te in altum fortuna misisset! Tulit te longe a conspectu vitae salubris rapida felicitas, provincia et procuratio et quidquid ab istis promittitur; maiora deinde officia te excipient et ex aliis alia: quis exitus erit? [6] quid exspectas donec desinas habere quod cupias? numquam erit tempus. Qualem dicimus seriem esse causarum ex quibus nectitur fatum, talem esse * * * cupiditatum: altera ex fine alterius nascitur. In eam demissus es vitam quae numquam tibi terminum miseriarum ac servitutis ipsa factura sit: subduc cervicem iugo tritam; semel illam incidi quam semper premi satius est. [7] Si te ad privata rettuleris, minora erunt omnia, sed affatim implebunt: at nunc plurima et undique ingesta non satiant.

Utrum autem mavis ex inopia saturitatem an in copia famem? Et avida felicitas est et alienae aviditati exposita; quamdiu tibi satis nihil fuerit, ipse aliis non eris. [8] ‘Quomodo’ inquis ‘exibo?’ Utcumque. Cogita quam multa temere pro pecunia, quam multa laboriose pro honore temptaveris: aliquid et pro otio audendum est, aut in ista sollicitudine procurationum et deinde urbanorum officiorum senescendum, in tumultu ac semper novis fluctibus quos effugere nulla modestia, nulla vitae quiete contingit. Quid enim ad rem pertinet an tu quiescere velis? fortuna tua non vult. Quid si illi etiam nunc permiseris crescere? quantum ad successus accesserit accedet ad metus. [9] Volo tibi hoc loco referre dictum Maecenatis vera in ipso eculeo elocuti: ‘ipsa enim altitudo attonat summa’. Si quaeris in quo libro dixerit, in eo qui Prometheus inscribitur. Hoc voluit dicere, attonita habet summa. Est ergo tanti ulla potentia ut sit tibi tam ebrius sermo? Ingeniosus ille vir fuit, magnum exemplum Romanae eloquentiae daturus nisi illum enervasset felicitas, immo castrasset. Hic te exitus manet nisi iam contrahas vela, nisi, quod ille sero voluit, terram leges.

XX. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Si vales et te dignum putas qui aliquando fias tuus, gaudeo; mea enim gloria erit, si te istinc ubi sine spe exeundi fluctuaris extraxero. Illud autem te, mi Lucili, rogo atque hortor, ut philosophiam in praecordia ima demittas et experimentum profectus tui capias non oratione nec scripto, sed animi firmitate, cupiditatum deminutione: verba rebus proba. [2] Aliud propositum est declamantibus et assensionem coronae captantibus, aliud his qui iuvenum et otiosorum aures disputatione varia aut volubili detinent: facere docet philosophia, non dicere, et hoc exigit, ut ad legem suam quisque vivat, ne orationi vita dissentiat vel ipsa inter se vita; <ut> unus sit omnium actio[dissentio]num color [sit]. Maximum hoc est et officium sapientiae et indicium, ut verbis opera concordent, ut ipse ubique par sibi idemque sit. 'Quis hoc praestabit?' Pauci, aliqui tamen. Est enim difficile [hoc]; nec hoc dico, sapientem uno semper iturum gradu, sed una via. [3] Observa te itaque, numquid vestis tua domusque dissentiant, numquid in te liberalis sis, in tuos sordidus, numquid cenes frugaliter, aedifices luxuriose; unam semel ad quam vivas regulam prende et ad hanc omnem vitam tuam exaequa. Quidam se domi contrahunt, dilatant foris et extendunt: vitium est haec diversitas et signum vacillantis animi ac nondum habentis tenorem suum. [4] Etiam nunc dicam unde sit ista inconstantia et dissimilitudo rerum consiliorumque: nemo proponit sibi quid velit, nec si proposuit perseverat in eo, sed transilit; nec tantum mutat sed redit et in ea quae deseruit ac damnavit revolvitur. [5] Itaque ut relinquam definitiones sapientiae veteres et totum complectar humanae vitae modum, hoc possum contentus esse: quid est sapientia? semper idem velle atque idem nolle. Licet illam exceptiunculam non adicias, ut rectum sit quod velis; non potest enim cuiquam idem semper placere nisi rectum. [6] Nesciunt ergo homines quid velint nisi illo momento quo volunt; in totum nulli velle aut nolle decretum est; variatur cotidie iudicium et in contrarium vertitur ac plerisque agitur vita per lusum. Preme ergo quod coepisti, et fortasse perduceris aut ad summum aut eo quod summum nondum esse solus intellegas.

[7] ‘Quid fiet’ inquis ‘huic turbae familiarium sine re familiari?’ Turba ista cum a te pasci desierit, ipsa se pascet, aut quod tu beneficio tuo non potes scire, paupertatis scies: illa veros certosque amicos retinebit, discedet quisquis non te se aliud sequebatur. Non est autem vel ob hoc unum amanda paupertas, quod a quibus ameris ostendet? O quando ille veniet dies quo nemo in honorem tuum mentiat! [8] Huc ergo cogitationes tuae tendant, hoc cura, hoc opta, omnia alia vota deo remissurus, ut contentus sis temet ipso et ex te nascentibus bonis. Quae potest esse felicitas propior? Redige te ad parva ex quibus cadere non possis, idque ut libentius facias, ad hoc pertinebit tributum huius epistolae, quod statim conferam.

[9] Inideas licet, etiam nunc libenter pro me dependet Epicurus. ‘Magnificentior, mihi crede, sermo tuus in grabatto videbitur et in panno; non enim dicentur tantum illa sed probabuntur.’ Ego certe aliter audio quae dicit Demetrius noster, cum illum vidi nudum, quanto minus quam [in] stramentis incubantem: non praeceptor veri sed testis est. [10] ‘Quid ergo? non licet divitias in sinu positas contemnere?’ Quidni liceat? Et ille ingentis animi est qui illas circumfusas sibi, multum diuque miratus quod ad se venerint, ridet suasque audit magis esse quam sentit. Multum est non corrumpi divitiarum contubernio; magnus ille qui in divit’is pauper est. [11] ‘Nescio’ inquis ‘quomodo paupertatem iste laturus sit, si in illam inciderit.’ Nec ego, Epicure, an +gulus+ [si] iste pauper contempturus sit divitias, si in illas inciderit; itaque in utroque mens aestimanda est inspiciendumque an ille paupertati indulgeat, an hic divitiis non indulgeat. Alioquin leve argumentum est bonae voluntatis grabattus aut pannus, nisi apparuit aliquem illa non necessitate pati sed malle. [12] Ceterum magnae indolis est ad ista non properare tamquam meliora, sed praeparari tamquam ad facilia. Et sunt, Lucili, facilia; cum vero multum ante meditatus accesseris, iucunda quoque; inest enim illis, sine qua nihil est iucundum, securitas. [13] Necessarium ergo iudico id quod tibi scripsi magnos viros saepe fecisse, aliquos dies interponere quibus nos imaginaria paupertate exerceamus ad veram; quod eo magis faciendum est quod deliciis permaduimus et omnia dura ac difficilia iudicamus. Potius excitandus e somno et vellicandus est animus admonendusque naturam nobis minimum constituisse. Nemo nascitur dives; quisquis

nos regna non capiunt. Vale.

XXI SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Cum istis tibi esse negotium iudicas de quibus scripseras? Maximum negotium tecum habes, tu tibi molestus es. Quid velis nescis, melius probas honesta quam sequeris, vides ubi sit posita felicitas sed ad illam pervenire non audes. Quid sit autem quod te impediatur, quia parum ipse dispicis, dicam: magna esse haec existimas quae relicturus es, et cum proposuisti tibi illam securitatem ad quam transiturus es, retinet te huius vitae a qua recessurus es fulgor tamquam in sordida et obscura casurum. [2] Erras, Lucili: ex hac vita ad illam ascenditur. Quod interest inter splendorem et lucem, cum haec certam originem habeat ac suam, ille niteatur alieno, hoc inter hanc vitam et illam: haec fulgore extrinsecus veniente percussa est, crassam illi statim umbram faciet quisquis obstiterit: illa suo lumine illustris est. Studia te tua clarum et nobilem efficient. [3] Exemplum Epicuri referam. Cum Idomeneo scriberet et illum a vita speciosa ad fidelem stabilemque gloriam revocaret, regiae tunc potentiae ministrum et magna tractantem, 'si gloria' inquit 'tangeris, notiores te epistulae meae facient quam omnia ista quae colis et propter quae coleris'. [4] Numquid ergo mentitus est? quis Idomeneae nosset nisi Epicurus illum litteris suis incidisset? Omnes illos megistanas et satrapas et regem ipsum ex quo Idomenei titulus petebatur oblivio alta suppressit. Nomen Attici perire Ciceronis epistulae non sinunt. Nihil illi profuisset gener Agrippa et Tiberius progener et Drusus Caesar pronepos; inter tam magna nomina taceretur nisi <sibi> Cicero illum applicuisset. [5] Profunda super nos altitudo temporis veniet, pauca ingenia caput exserent et in idem quandoque silentium abitura oblivioni resistent ac se diu vindicabunt. Quod Epicurus amico suo potuit promittere, hoc tibi promitto, Lucili: habebis apud posteros gratiam, possum mecum duratura nomina educere. Vergilius noster duobus memoriam aeternam promisit et praestat:

fortunati ambo! si quid mea carmina possunt,
nulla dies umquam memori vos eximet aeo, dum domus Aeneae Capitoli immobile saxum accolet imperiumque pater Romanus habebit.

[7] Ne gratis Idomeneus in epistulam meam venerit, ipse eam de suo redimet. Ad hunc Epicurus illam nobilem sententiam scripsit qua hortatur ut Pythoclea locupletem non publica nec ancipiti via faciat. 'Si vis' inquit 'Pythoclea divitem facere, non pecuniae adiciendum sed cupiditati detrahendum est.' [8] Et apertior ista sententia est quam <ut> interpretanda sit, et disertior quam ut adiuvanda. Hoc unum te admoneo, ne istud tantum existimes de divit'is dictum: quocumque transtuleris, idem poterit. Si vis Pythoclea honestum facere, non honoribus adiciendum est sed cupiditatibus detrahendum; si vis Pythoclea esse in perpetua voluptate, non voluptatibus adiciendum est sed cupiditatibus detrahendum; si vis Pythoclea senem facere et implere vitam, non annis adiciendum est sed cupiditatibus detrahendum. [9] Has voces non est quod Epicuri esse iudices: publicae sunt. Quod fieri in senatu solet faciendum ego in philosophia quoque existimo: cum censuit aliquis quod ex parte mihi placeat, iubeo illum dividere sententiam et sequor quod probo.

Eo libentius Epicuri egregia dicta commemoro, ut istis qui ad illum confugiunt spe mala inducti, qui velamentum ipsos vitiorum suorum habituros existimant, probent quocumque ierint honeste esse vivendum. [10] Cum adieris eius hortulos +et inscriptum hortulis+ 'HOSPES HIC BENE MANEBIS, HIC SVMMVM BONVM VOLVPTAS EST' paratus erit istius domicilii custos hospitalis, humanus, et te polenta excipiet et aquam quoque large ministrabit et dicet, 'ecquid bene acceptus es?' 'Non irritant' inquit 'hi hortuli famem sed exstinguunt, nec maiorem ipsis potionibus sitim faciunt, sed naturali et gratuito remedio sedant; in hac voluptate consenui.' [11] De his tecum desideriis loquor quae consolationem non recipiunt, quibus dandum est aliquid ut desinant. Nam de illis extraordinariis quae licet differre, licet castigare et opprimere, hoc unum commonefaciam: ista voluptas naturalis est, non necessaria. Huic nihil debes; si quid impendis, voluntarium est. Venter praecepta non audit: poscit, appellat. Non est tamen molestus creditor: parvo dimittitur, si modo das illi quod debes, non quod potes. Vale.

LIBER TERTIUS

[1] Iam intellegis educendum esse te ex istis occupationibus speciosis et malis, sed quomodo id consequi possis quaeris. Quaedam non nisi a praesente monstrantur; non potest medicus per epistulas cibi aut balinei tempus eligere: vena tangenda est. Vetus proverbium est gladiatorem in harena capere consilium: aliquid adversarii vultus, aliquid manus mota, aliquid ipsa inclinatio corporis intuentem monet.

[2] Quid fieri soleat, quid oporteat, in universum et mandari potest et scribi; tale consilium non tantum absentibus, etiam posteris datur: illud alterum, quando fieri debeat aut quemadmodum, ex longinquo nemo suadebit, cum rebus ipsis deliberandum est. [3] Non tantum praesentis sed vigilantis est occasionem observare properantem; itaque hanc circumspecte, hanc si videris prende, et toto impetu, totis viribus id age ut te istis officiis exuas. Et quidem quam sententiam feram attende: censeo aut ex ista vita tibi aut e vita exeundum. Sed idem illud existimo, leni eundum via, ut quod male implicuisti solvas potius quam abrumpas, dummodo, si alia solvendi ratio non erit, vel abrumpas. Nemo tam timidus est ut malit semper pendere quam semel cadere. [4] Interim, quod primum est, impedire te noli; contentus esto negotiis in quae descendisti, vel, quod videri mavis, incidisti. Non est quod ad ulteriora nitaris, aut perdes excusationem et apparebit te non incidisse. Ista enim quae dici solent falsa sunt: 'non potui aliter. Quid si nollem? necesse erat.' Nulli necesse est felicitatem cursu sequi: est aliquid, etiam si non repugnare, subsistere nec instare fortunae ferenti.

Stoicam sententiam quaeris. Non est quod quisquam illos apud te temeritatis infamet: cautiores quam fortiores sunt. Exspectas forsitan ut tibi haec dicant: ‘turpe est cedere oneri; luctare cum officio quod semel recepisti. Non est vir fortis ac strenuus qui laborem fugit, nisi crescit illi animus ipsa rerum difficultate.’ [8] Dicentur tibi ista, si operae pretium habebit perseverantia, si nihil indignum bono viro faciendum patiendumve erit; alioqui sordido se et contumelioso labore non conteret nec in negotiis erit negotii causa. Ne illud quidem quod existimas facturum eum faciet, ut ambitiosis rebus implicitus semper aestus earum ferat; sed cum viderit gravia in quibus volutatur, incerta, ancipitia, referet pedem, non vertet terga, sed sensim recedet in tutum. [9] Facile est autem, mi Lucili, occupationes evadere, si occupationum pretia contempseris; illa sunt quae nos morantur et detinent. ‘Quid ergo? tam magnas spes relinquam? ab ipsa messe discedam? nudum erit latus, incommitata lectica, atrium vacuum?’ Ab his ergo inviti homines recedunt et mercedem miseriarum amant, ipsas execrantur. Sic de ambitione quo modo de amica queruntur, id est, si verum affectum eorum inspicias, non oderunt sed litigant. Excute istos qui quae cupiere deplorant et de earum rerum loquuntur fuga quibus carere non possunt, videbis voluntariam esse illis in eo moram quod aegre ferre ipsos et misere loquuntur. Ita est, Lucili: paucos servitus, plures servitatem tenent. Sed si deponere illam in animo est et libertas bona fide placuit, in hoc autem unum advocationem petis, ut sine perpetua sollicitudine id tibi facere contingat, quidni tota te cohors Stoicorum probatura sit? omnes Zenones et Chrysippi moderata, honesta, tua suadebunt. Sed si propter hoc tergiversaris, ut circumaspicias quantum feras tecum et quam magna pecunia instruas otium, numquam exitum invenies: nemo cum sarcinis enatat. Emerge ad meliorem vitam propitiis diis, sed non sic quomodo istis propitii sunt quibus bono ac benigno vultu mala magnifica tribuerunt, ob hoc unum excusati, quod ista quae urunt, quae excruciant, optantibus data sunt.

[13] Iam imprimebam epistolae signum: resolvenda est, ut cum sollempni ad te munusculo veniat et aliquam magnificam vocem ferat secum; et occurrit mihi ecce nescio utrum verior an eloquentior. ‘Cuius?’ inquis. Epicuri; adhuc enim alienas +sarcinas adoro+:

‘nemo non ita exit e vita tamquam modo intraverit’. Quemcumque vis occupa, adulescentem, senem, medium: invenies aequè timidum mortis, aequè inscium vitae. Nemo quicquam habet facti; in futurum enim nostra distulimus. Nihil me magis in ista voce delectat quam quod exprobratur senibus infantia. ‘Nemo’ inquit ‘aliter quam quomodo natus est exit e vita.’ Falsum est: peiores morimur quam nascimur. Nostrum istud, non naturae vitium est. Illa nobiscum queri debet et dicere, ‘quid hoc est? sine cupiditatibus vos genui, sine timoribus, sine superstitione, sine perfidia ceterisque pestibus: quales intrastis exite’. Percepit sapientiam, si quis tam securus moritur quam nascitur; nunc vero trepidamus cum periculum accessit, non animus nobis, non color constat, lacrimae nihil profuturæ cadunt. Quid est turpius quam in ipso limine securitatis esse sollicitum? Causa autem hæc est, quod inanes omnium bonorum sumus, vitæ <iactura> laboramus. Non enim apud nos pars eius ulla subsedit: transmissa est et effluxit. Nemo quam bene vivat sed quam diu curat, cum omnibus possit contingere ut bene vivant, ut diu nulli. Vale.

XXIII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Putas me tibi scripturum quam humane nobiscum hiemps gerit, quae et remissa fuit et brevis, quam malignum ver sit, quam praeposterum frigus, et alias ineptias verba quaerentium? Ego vero aliquid quod et mihi et tibi prodesse possit scribam. Quid autem id erit nisi ut te exhorter ad bonam mentem? Huius fundamentum quod sit quaeris? ne gaudeas vanis. Fundamentum hoc esse dixi: culmen est. Ad summa pervenit qui scit quo gaudeat, qui felicitatem suam in aliena potestate non posuit; sollicitus est et incertus sui quem spes aliqua proritat, licet ad manum sit, licet non ex difficili petatur, licet numquam illum sperata deceperint. [3] Hoc ante omnia fac, mi Lucili: discce gaudere. Existimas nunc me detrahare tibi multas voluptates qui fortuita summoveo, qui spes, dulcissima oblectamenta, devitandas existimo? immo contra nolo tibi umquam deesse laetitiam. Volo illam tibi domi nasci: nascitur si modo intra te ipsum fit. Ceterae hilaritates non implent pectus; frontem remittunt, leves sunt, nisi forte tu iudicas eum gaudere qui ridet: animus esse debet alacer et fidens et supra omnia erectus. [4] Mihi crede, verum gaudium res severa est. An tu existimas quemquam soluto vultu et, ut isti delicati loquuntur, hilariculo mortem contemnere, paupertati domum aperire, voluptates tenere sub freno, meditari dolorum patientiam? Haec qui apud se versat in magno gaudio est, sed parum blando. In huius gaudii possessione esse te volo: numquam deficiet, cum semel unde petatur inveneris. [5] Levium metallorum fructus in summo est: illa opulentissima sunt quorum in alto latet vena assidue plenius responsura fodienti. Haec quibus delectatur vulgus tenuem habent ac perfusoriam voluptatem, et quodcumque invecitium gaudium est fundamento caret: hoc de quo loquor, ad quod te conor perducere, solidum est et quod plus pateat introrsus. [6] Fac, oro te, Lucili carissime, quod unum potest praestare felicem: dissice et conculca ista quae extrinsecus splendent, quae tibi promittuntur ab alio vel ex alio; ad verum bonum specta et de tuo gaude. Quid est autem hoc ‘de tuo’? te ipso et tui optima parte. Corpusculum bonum esse credideris: veri boni aviditas tuta est. [7] Quod sit istud interrogas, aut unde subeat? Dicam: ex bona conscientia, ex honestis consiliis, ex rectis actionibus, ex contemptu fortuitorum, ex placido vitae et continuo tenore unam prementis viam. Nam illi qui ex aliis propositis in alia transiliunt aut ne transiliunt quidem sed casu quodam transmittuntur, quomodo habere quicquam certum mansurumve possunt suspensi et vagi? [8] Pauci sunt qui consilio se suaque disponant: ceteri, eorum more quae fluminibus innatant, non eunt sed feruntur; ex quibus alia lenior unda detinuit ac mollius vexit, alia vehementior rapuit, alia proxima ripae cursu languescente deposuit, alia torrens impetus in mare eiecit. Ideo constituendum est quid velimus et in eo perseverandum.

XXIV. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Sollicitum esse te scribis de iudici eventu quod tibi furor inimici denuntiat; existimas me suasurum ut meliora tibi ipse proponas et acquiescas spei blandae. Quid enim necesse est mala accersere, satis cito patienda cum venerint praesumere, ac praesens tempus futuri metu perdere? Est sine dubio stultum, quia quandoque sis futurus miser, esse iam miserum. [2] Sed ego alia te ad securitatem via ducam: si vis omnem sollicitudinem exuere, quidquid vereris ne eveniat eventurum utique propone, et quodcumque est illud malum, tecum ipse metire ac timorem tuum taxa: intelleges profecto aut non magnum aut non longum esse quod metuis. [3] Nec diu exempla quibus confirmeris colligenda sunt: omnis illa aetas tulit. In quamcumque partem rerum vel civilium vel externarum memoriam miseris, occurrent tibi ingenia aut profectus aut impetus magni. Numquid accidere tibi, si damnaris, potest durius quam ut mittaris in exilium, ut ducaris in carcerem? Numquid ultra quicquam ulli timendum est quam ut uratur, quam ut pereat? Singula ista constitue et contemptores eorum cita, qui non quaerendi sed eligendi sunt. [4] Damnationem suam Rutilius sic tulit tamquam nihil illi molestum aliud esset quam quod male iudicaretur. Exilium Metellus fortiter tulit, Rutilius etiam libenter; alter ut rediret rei publicae praestitit, alter reditum suum Sullae negavit, cui nihil tunc negabatur. In carcere Socrates disputavit et exire, cum essent qui promitterent fugam, noluit remansitque, ut duarum rerum gravissimarum hominibus metum demeret, mortis et carceris. [5] Mucius ignibus manum imposuit. Acerbum est uri: quanto acerbius si id te faciente patiaris! Vides hominem non eruditum nec ullis praeceptis contra mortem aut dolorem subornatum, militari tantum robore instructum, poenas a se irriti conatus exigentem; spectator destillantis in hostili foculo dexterae stetit nec ante removit nudis ossibus fluentem manum quam ignis illi ab hoste subductus est. Facere aliquid in illis castris felicius potuit, nihil fortius. Vide quanto acrior sit ad occupanda pericula virtus quam crudelitas ad irroganda: facilius Porsina Mucio ignovit quod voluerat occidere quam sibi Mucius quod non occiderat.

quod est iniquissimum compara. Illud autem ante omnia memento, demere rebus tumultum ac videre quid in quaque re sit: scies nihil esse in istis terribile nisi ipsum timorem. [13] Quod vides accidere pueris, hoc nobis quoque maiusculis pueris evenit: illi quos amant, quibus assueverunt, cum quibus ludunt, si personatos vident, expavescunt: non hominibus tantum sed rebus persona demenda est et reddenda facies sua. [14] Quid mihi gladios et ignes ostendis et turbam carnificum circa te frementem? Tolle istam pompam sub qua lates et stultos territas: mors es, quam nuper servus meus, quam ancilla contempsit. Quid tu rursus mihi flagella et eculeos magno apparatu explicas? quid singulis articulis singula machinamenta quibus extorqueantur aptata et mille alia instrumenta excarnificandi particulatim hominis? Pone ista quae nos obstupefaciunt; iube contiscere gemitus et exclamationes et vocum inter lacerationem elisarum acerbitatem: nempe dolor es, quem podagricus ille contemnit, quem stomachicus ille in ipsis delicis perfert, quem in puerperio puella perpetitur. Levis es si ferre possum; brevis es si ferre non possum.

persequar et dicam vanos esse inferorum metus, nec Ixionem rota volvi nec saxum umeris Sisyphi trudi in adversum nec ullius viscera et renasci posse cotidie et carpi: nemo tam puer est ut Cerberum timeat et tenebras et larvalem habitum nudis ossibus cohaerentium. Mors nos aut consumit aut exuit; emissis meliora restant onere detracto, consumptis nihil restat, bona pariter malaque summoti sunt. [19] Permite mihi hoc loco referre versum tuum, si prius admonuero ut te iudices non aliis scripsisse ista sed etiam tibi. Turpe est aliud loqui, aliud sentire: quanto turpius aliud scribere, aliud sentire! Memini te illum locum aliquando tractasse, non repente nos in mortem incidere sed minutatim procedere. [20] Cotidie morimur; cotidie enim demitur aliqua pars vitae, et tunc quoque cum crescimus vita decrescit. Infantiam amisimus, deinde pueritiam, deinde adulescentiam. Usque ad hesternum quidquid transiit temporis perit; hunc ipsum quem agimus diem cum morte dividimus. Quemadmodum clepsydra non extremum stilicidium exhaurit sed quidquid ante defluxit, sic ultima hora qua esse desinimus non sola mortem facit sed sola consummat; tunc ad illam pervenimus, sed diu venimus. [21] Haec cum descripsisses quo soles ore, semper quidem magnus, numquam tamen acrior quam ubi veritati commodas verba, dixisti, mors non una venit, sed quae rapit ultima mors est.

Malo te legas quam epistolam meam; apparebit enim tibi hanc quam timeamus mortem extremam esse, non solam.

temere nec cum procursu capiendus est impetus. [25] Vir fortis ac sapiens non fugere debet e vita sed exire; et ante omnia ille quoque vitetur affectus qui multos occupavit, libido moriendi. Est enim, mi Lucili, ut ad alia, sic etiam ad moriendum inconsulta animi inclinatio, quae saepe generosos atque acerrimae indolis viros corripit, saepe ignavos iacentesque: illi contemnunt vitam, hi gravantur. [26] Quosdam subit eadem faciendi videndique satietas et vitae non odium sed fastidium, in quod prolabimur ipsa impellente philosophia, dum dicimus ‘quousque eadem? nempe ex pergiscar dormiam, <edam> esuriam, algebo aestuabo. Nullius rei finis est, sed in orbem nexa sunt omnia, fugiunt ac sequuntur; diem nox premit, dies noctem, aestas in autumnum desinit, autumnus hiemps instat, quae vere compescitur; omnia sic transeunt ut revertantur. Nihil novi facio, nihil novi video: fit aliquando et huius rei nausia.’ Multi sunt qui non acerbum iudicent vivere sed supervacuum. Vale.

XXV. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Quod ad duos amicos nostros pertinet, diversa via eundum est; alterius enim vitia emendanda, alterius frangenda sunt. Utar libertate tota: non amo illum nisi offendo. 'Quid ergo?' inquis 'quadragenarium pupillum cogitas sub tutela tua continere? Respice aetatem eius iam duram et intractabilem: non potest reformari; tenera finguntur.' [2] An profecturus sim nescio: malo successum mihi quam fidem deesse. Nec desperaveris etiam diutinos aegros posse sanari, si contra intemperantiam steteris, si multa invitos et facere coegeris et pati. Ne de altero quidem satis fiducia habeo, excepto eo quod adhuc peccare erubescit; nutriendus est hic pudor, qui quamdiu in animo eius duraverit, aliquis erit bonae spei locus. Cum hoc veterano parcius agendum puto, ne in desperationem sui veniat; [3] nec ullum tempus aggrediendi fuit melius quam hoc, dum interquiescit, dum emendato similis est. Aliis haec intermissio eius imposuit, mihi verba non dat: exspecto cum magno fenore vitia reditura, quae nunc scio cessare, non deesse. Impendam huic rei dies et utrum possit aliquid agi an non possit experiri.

[4] Tu nobis te, ut facis, fortem praesta et sarcinas contrahe; nihil ex his quae habemus necessarium est. Ad legem naturae revertamur; divitiae paratae sunt. Aut gratuitum est quo egemus, aut vile: panem et aquam natura desiderat. Nemo ad haec pauper est, intra quae quisquis desiderium suum clusit cum ipso Iove de felicitate contendat, ut ait Epicurus, cuius aliquam vocem huic epistolae involvam. [5] 'Sic fac' inquit 'omnia tamquam spectet Epicurus.' Prodest sine dubio custodem sibi imposuisse et habere quem respicias, quem interesse cogitationibus tuis iudices. Hoc quidem longe magnificentius est, sic vivere tamquam sub alicuius boni viri ac semper praesentis oculis, sed ego etiam hoc contentus sum, ut sic facias quaecumque facies tamquam spectet aliquis: omnia nobis mala solitudo persuadet. [6] Cum iam profeceris tantum ut sit tibi etiam tui reverentia, licebit dimittas paedagogum: interim aliquorum te auctoritate custodi - aut Cato ille sit aut Scipio aut Laelius aut alius cuius interventu perdit quoque homines vitia supprimerent, dum te efficis eum cum quo peccare non audeas. Cum hoc effeceris et aliqua coeperit apud te tui esse dignatio, incipiam tibi permittere quod idem suadet Epicurus: 'tunc praecipue in te ipse secede cum esse cogeris in turba'. [7] Dissimilem te fieri multis oportet, dum tibi tutum [non] sit ad te recedere. Circumspice singulos: nemo est cui non satius sit cum quolibet esse quam secum. 'Tunc praecipue in te ipse secede cum esse cogeris in turba' - si bonus vir <es>, si quietus, si temperans. Alioquin in turbam tibi a te recedendum est: istic malo viro propius es. Vale.

XXVI. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Modo dicebam tibi in conspectu esse me senectutis: iam vereor ne senectutem post me reliquerim. Aliud iam his annis, certe huic corpori, vocabulum convenit, quoniam quidem senectus lassae aetatis, non fractae nomen est: inter decrepitos me numera et extrema tangentis. [2] Gratias tamen mihi apud te ago: non sentio in animo aetatis iniuriam, cum sentiam in corpore. Tantum vitia et vitiorum ministeria senuerunt: viget animus et gaudet non multum sibi esse cum corpore; magnam partem oneris sui posuit. Exsultat et mihi facit controversiam de senectute: hunc ait esse florem suum. Credamus illi: bono suo utatur. [3] Ire in cogitationem iubet et dispicere quid ex hac tranquillitate ac modestia morum sapientiae debeam, quid aetati, et diligenter excutere quae non possim facere, quae nolim, proinde habiturus atque si nolim quidquid non posse me gaudeo: quae enim querela est, quod incommodum, si quidquid debebat desinere defecit? [4] 'Incommodum summum est' inquis 'minui et deperire et, ut proprie dicam, liquescere. Non enim subito impulsus ac prostratus sum: carpinur, singuli dies aliquid subtrahunt viribus.' Ecquis exitus est melior quam in finem suum natura solvente dilabi? non quia aliquid mali ictus <est> et e vita repentinus excessus, sed quia lenis haec est via, subduci. Ego certe, velut appropinquet experimentum et ille laturus sententiam de omnibus annis meis dies venerit, ita me observo et alloquor: [5] 'nihil est' inquam 'adhuc quod aut rebus aut verbis exhibuimus; levia sunt ista et fallacia pignora animi multisque involuta lenociniis: quid profecerim morti crediturus sum. Non timide itaque componor ad illum diem quo remotis strophis ac fucis de me iudicaturus sum, utrum loquar fortia an sentiam, numquid simulatio fuerit et mimus quidquid contra fortunam iactavi verborum contumacium. [6] Remove existimationem hominum: dubia semper est et in partem utramque dividitur. Remove studia tota vita tractata: mors de te pronuntiatura est. Ita dico: disputationes et litterata colloquia et ex praeceptis sapientium verba collecta et eruditus sermo non ostendunt verum robur animi; est enim oratio etiam timidissimis audax. Quid egeris tunc apparebit cum animam ages. Accipio condicionem, non reformido iudicium.' [7]

Haec mecum loquor, sed tecum quoque me locutum puta. Iuvenior es: quid refert? non dinumerantur anni. Incertum est quo loco te mors exspectet; itaque tu illam omni loco exspecta.

[8] Desinere iam volebam et manus spectabat ad clausulam, sed conficienda sunt aera et huic epistulae viaticum dandum est. Puta me non dicere unde sumpturus sim mutuum: scis cuius arca utar. Exspecta me pusillum, et de domo fiet numeratio; interim commodabit Epicurus, qui ait ‘meditare mortem’, vel si commodius sic transire ad nos hic potest sensus: ‘egregia res est mortem condiscere’. [9] Supervacuum forsitan putas id discere quod semel utendum est. Hoc est ipsum quare meditari debeamus: semper discendum est quod an sciamus experiri non possumus. [10] ‘Meditare mortem’: qui hoc dicit meditari libertatem iubet. Qui mori didicit servire dedidicit; supra omnem potentiam est, certe extra omnem. Quid ad illum carcer et custodia et claustra? liberum ostium habet. Una est catena quae nos alligatos tenet, amor vitae, qui ut non est abiciendus, ita minuendus est, ut si quando res exiget, nihil nos detineat nec impediat quominus parati simus quod quandoque faciendum est statim facere. Vale.

XXVII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] ‘Tu me’ inquis ‘mones? iam enim te ipse monuisti, iam correxisti? ideo aliorum emendationi vacas?’ Non sum tam improbus ut curationes aeger obeam, sed, tamquam in eodem valetudinario iaceam, de communi tecum malo colloquor et remedia communico. Sic itaque me audi tamquam mecum loquar; in secretum te meum admitto et te adhibito mecum exigo. [2] Clamo mihi ipse, ‘numera annos tuos, et pudebit eadem velle quae volueras puer, eadem parare. Hoc denique tibi circa mortis diem praesta: moriantur ante te vitia. Dimitte istas voluptates turbidas, magno luendas: non venturae tantum sed praeteritae nocent. Quemadmodum scelera etiam si non sunt deprehensa cum fierent, sollicitudo non cum ipsis abit, ita improbarum voluptatum etiam post ipsas paenitentia est. Non sunt solidae, non sunt fideles; etiam si non nocent, fugiunt. [3] Aliquod potius bonum mansurum circumspice; nullum autem est nisi quod animus ex se sibi invenit. Sola virtus praestat gaudium perpetuum, securum; etiam si quid obstat, nubium modo intervenit, quae infra feruntur nec umquam diem vincunt.’ [4] Quando ad hoc gaudium pervenire continget? non quidem cessatur adhuc, sed festinetur. Multum restat operis, in quod ipse necesse est vigiliam, ipse laborem tuum impendas, si effici cupis; delegationem res ista non recipit. [5] Aliud litterarum genus adiutorium admittit Calvisius Sabinus memoria nostra fuit dives; et patrimonium habebat libertini et ingenium; numquam vidi hominem beatum indecentius. Huic memoria tam mala erat ut illi nomen modo Ulixis excideret, modo Achillis, modo Priami, quos tam bene noverat quam paedagogos nostros novimus. Nemo vetulus nomenclator, qui nomina non reddit sed imponit, tam perperam tribus quam ille Troianos et Achivos persalutabat. [6] Nihilominus eruditus volebat videri. Hanc itaque compendariam excogitavit: magna summa emit servos, unum qui Homerum teneret, alterum qui Hesiodum; novem praeterea lyricis singulos assignavit. Magno emissee illum non est quod mireris: non invenerat, faciendos locavit. Postquam haec familia illi comparata est, coepit convivas suos inquietare. Habebat ad pedes hos, a quibus subinde cum peteret versus quos referret, saepe in medio verbo excidebat. [7] Suasit illi Satellius Quadratus, stultorum divitum arrosor et, quod sequitur, arrisor, et, quod duobus his adiunctum est, derisor, ut grammaticos haberet analectas. Cum dixisset Sabinus centenis millibus sibi constare singulos servos, 'minoris' inquit 'totidem scrinia emissas'. Ille tamen in ea opinione erat ut putaret se scire quod quisquam in domo sua sciret. [8] Idem Satellius illum hortari coepit ut luctaretur, hominem aegrum, pallidum, gracilem. Cum Sabinus respondisset, 'et quomodo possum? vix vivo', 'noli, obsecro te' inquit 'istuc dicere: non vides quam multos servos valentissimos habeas?' Bona mens nec commodatur nec emitur; et puto, si venalis esset, non haberet emptorem: at mala cotidie emitur.

XXVIII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Hoc tibi soli putas accidisse et admiraris quasi rem novam quod peregrinatione tam longa et tot locorum varietatibus non discussisti tristitiam gravitatemque mentis? Animum debes mutare, non caelum. Licet vastum traieceris mare, licet, ut ait Vergilius noster, terraeque urbesque recedant,

sequentur te quocumque perveneris vitia. [2] Hoc idem querenti cuidam Socrates ait, 'quid miraris nihil tibi peregrinationes prodesse, cum te circumferas? premit te eadem causa quae expulit'. Quid terrarum iuvare novitas potest? quid cognitio urbium aut locorum? in irritum cedit ista iactatio. Quaeris quare te fuga ista non adiuvet? tecum fugis. Onus animi deponendum est: non ante tibi ullus placebit locus. [3] Talem nunc esse habitum tuum cogita qualem Vergilius noster vatis inducit iam concitatae et instigatae multumque habentis se spiritus non sui:

bacchatur vates, magnum si pectore possit excussisse deum.

Vadis huc illuc ut excutias insidens pondus quod ipsa iactatione incommodius fit, sicut in navi onera immota minus urgent, inaequaliter convoluta citius eam partem in quam incubuere demergunt. Quidquid facis, contra te facis et motu ipso noces tibi; aegrum enim concutis. [4] At cum istuc exemeris malum, omnis mutatio loci iucunda fiet; in ultimas expellaris terras licebit, in quolibet barbariae angulo colloceris, hospitalis tibi illa qualiscumque sedes erit. Magis quis veneris quam quo interest, et ideo nulli loco addicere debemus animum. Cum hac persuasione vivendum est: 'non sum uni angulo natus, patria mea totus hic mundus est'. [5] Quod si liqueret tibi, non admirareris nil adiuvari te regionum varietatibus in quas subinde priorum taedio migras; prima enim quaeque placuisset si omnem tuam crederes. Nunc <non> peregrinaris sed erras et ageris ac locum ex loco mutas, cum illud quod quaeris, bene vivere, omni loco positum sit. [6] Num quid tam turbidum fieri potest quam forum? ibi quoque licet quiete vivere, si necesse sit. Sed si liceat disponere se, conspectum quoque et viciniam fori procul fugiam; nam ut loca gravia etiam firmissimam valetudinem temptant, ita bonae quoque menti necdum adhuc perfectae et convalescenti sunt aliqua parum salubria. [7] Dissentio ab his qui in fluctus medios eunt et tumultuosam probantes vitam cotidie cum difficultatibus rerum magno animo colluctantur. Sapiens feret ista, non eliget, et malet in pace esse quam in pugna; non multum prodest vitia sua proiecisce, si cum alienis rixandum est. [8] ‘Triginta’ inquit ‘tyranni Socraten circumsteterunt nec potuerunt animum eius infringere.’ Quid interest quot domini sint? servitus una est; hanc qui contempsit in quanta libet turba dominantium liber est.

XXIX. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] De Marcellino nostro quaeris et vis scire quid agat. Raro ad nos venit, non ulla alia ex causa quam quod audire verum timet, a quo periculo iam abest; nulli enim nisi audituro dicendum est. Ideo de Diogene nec minus de aliis Cynicis qui libertate promiscua usi sunt et obvios <quosque> monuerunt dubitari solet an hoc facere debuerint. Quid enim, si quis surdos obiurget aut natura morbove mutos? [2] 'Quare' inquis 'verbis parcam? gratuita sunt. Non possum scire an ei profuturus sim quem admoneo: illud scio, alicui me profuturum, si multos admonuero. Spargenda manus est: non potest fieri ut non aliquando succedat multa temptanti.' [3] Hoc, mi Lucili, non existimo magno viro faciendum: diluitur eius auctoritas nec habet apud eos satis ponderis quos posset minus obsolecta corrigere. Sagittarius non aliquando ferire debet, sed aliquando deerrare; non est ars quae ad effectum casu venit. Sapientia ars est: certum petat, eligat profecturos, ab iis quos desperavit recedat, non tamen cito relinquat et in ipsa desperatione extrema remedia temptet.

[4] Marcellinum nostrum ego nondum despero; etiam nunc servari potest, sed si cito illi manus porrigitur. Est quidem periculum ne porrigentem trahat; magna in illo ingeni vis est, sed iam tendentis in pravum. Nihilominus adibo hoc periculum et audebo illi mala sua ostendere. [5] Faciet quod solet: advocabit illas facetias quae risum evocare lugentibus possunt, et in se primum, deinde in nos iocabitur; omnia quae dicturus sum occupabit. Scrutabitur scholas nostras et obiciet philosophis congiaria, amicas, gulam; [6] ostendet mihi alium in adulterio, alium in popina, alium in aula; ostendet mihi lepidum philosophum Aristonem, qui in gestatione disserebat - hoc enim ad edendas operas tempus exceperat. De cuius secta cum quaereretur, Scaurus ait 'utique Peripateticus non est'. De eodem cum consuleretur Iulius Graecinus, vir egregius, quid sentiret, 'non possum' inquit 'tibi dicere; nescio enim quid de gradu faciat', tamquam de essedario interrogaretur. [7] Hos mihi circulatores qui philosophiam honestius neglexissent quam vendunt in faciem ingeret. Constitui tamen contumelias perpeti: moveat ille mihi risum, ego fortasse illi lacrimas movebo, aut si ridere perseverabit, gaudebo tamquam in malis quod illi genus insaniae hilare contigerit. Sed non est ista hilaritas longa: observa, videbis eosdem intra exiguum tempus acerrime ridere et acerrime rabere. [8] Propositum est aggredi illum et ostendere quanto pluris fuerit cum multis minoris videretur. Vitia eius etiam si non excidero, inhibebo; non desinent, sed intermittent fortasse autem et desinent, si intermittendi consuetudinem fecerint. Non est hoc ipsum fastidiendum, quoniam quidem graviter affectis sanitatis loco est bona remissio.

[10] Si pudorem haberes, ultimam mihi pensionem remisisses; sed ne ego quidem me sordide geram in finem aeris alieni et tibi quod debeo impingam. 'Numquam volui populo placere; nam quae ego scio non probat populus, quae probat populus ego nescio.' [11] 'Quis hoc?' inquis, tamquam nescias cui imperem. Epicurus; sed idem hoc omnes tibi ex omni domo conclamabunt, Peripatetici, Academici, Stoici, Cynici. Quis enim placere populo potest cui placet virtus? malis artibus popularis favor quaeritur. Similem te illis facias oportet: non probabunt nisi agnoverint. Multo autem ad rem magis pertinet qualis tibi videaris quam aliis; conciliari nisi turpi ratione amor turpium non potest. [12] Quid ergo illa laudata et omnibus praeferenda artibus rebusque philosophia praestabit? scilicet ut malis tibi placere quam populo, ut aestimes iudicia, non numeres, ut sine metu deorum hominumque vivas, ut aut vincas mala aut finias. Ceterum, si te videro celebrem secundis vocibus vulgi, si intrante te clamor et plausus, pantomimica ornamenta, obstrepuerint, si tota civitate te feminae puerique laudaverint, quidni ego tui miserear, cum sciam quae via ad istum favorem ferat? Vale.

LIBER QUARTUS

XXX. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Bassum Aufidium, virum optimum, vidi quassum, aetati obluctantem. Sed iam plus illum degravat quam quod possit attolli; magno senectus et universo pondere incubuit. Scis illum semper infirmi corporis et exsucti fuisse; diu illud continuit et, ut verius dicam, concinnavit: subito defecit. Quemadmodum in nave quae sentinam trahit uni rimae aut alteri obsistitur, ubi plurimis locis laxari coepit et cedere, succurri non potest navigio dehiscenti, ita in senili corpore aliquatenus imbecillitas sustineri et fulciri potest. Ubi tamquam in putri aedificio omnis iunctura diducitur, et dum alia excipitur, alia discinditur, circumspiciendum est quomodo exeas. Bassus tamen noster alacer animo est: hoc philosophia praestat, in conspectu mortis hilarem <esse> et in quocumque corporis habitu fortem laetumque nec deficientem quamvis deficiatur. Magnus gubernator et scisso navigat velo et, si exarmavit, tamen reliquias navigii aptat ad cursum. Hoc facit Bassus noster et eo animo vultuque finem suum spectat quo alienum spectare nimis securi putares. Magna res est, Lucili, haec et diu discenda, cum adventat hora illa inevitabilis, aequo animo abire. Alia genera mortis spei mita sunt: desinit morbus, incendium exstinguitur, ruina quos videbatur oppressura deposuit; mare quos hauserat eadem vi qua sorbebat eiecit incolumes; gladium miles ab ipsa perituri cervice re vocavit: nil habet quod speret quem senectus ducit ad mortem; huic uni intercedi non potest. Nullo genere homines mollius moriuntur sed nec diutius.

[5] Bassus noster videbatur mihi prosequi se et componere et vivere tamquam superstes sibi et sapienter ferre desiderium sui. Nam de morte multa loquitur et id agit sedulo ut nobis persuadeat, si quid incommodi aut metus in hoc negotio est, morientis vitium esse, non mortis; non magis in ipsa quicquam esse molestiae quam post ipsam.

[6] Tam demens autem est qui timet quod non est passurus quam qui timet quod non est sensurus. An quis quam hoc futurum credit, ut per quam nihil sentiatur, ea sentiatur? 'Ergo' inquit 'mors adeo extra omne malum est ut sit extra omnem malorum metum.' [7] Haec ego scio et saepe dicta et saepe dicenda, sed neque cum legerem aequae mihi profuerunt neque cum audirem iis dicentibus qui negabant

timenda a quorum metu aberant: hic vero plurimum apud me auctoritatis habuit, cum loqueretur de morte vicina. [8] Dicam enim quid sentiam: puto fortiores esse eum qui in ipsa morte est quam qui circa mortem. Mors enim admota etiam imperitis animum dedit non vitandi inevitabilia; si gladiator tota pugna timidissimus iugulum adversario praestat et errantem gladium sibi attemperat. At illa quae in propinquo est utique ventura desiderat lentam animi firmitatem, quae est rarior nec potest nisi a sapiente praestari. [9] Libentissime itaque illum audiebam quasi ferentem de morte: sententiam et qualis esset eius natura velut propius inspectae indicantem. Plus, ut puto, fidei haberet apud te, plus ponderis, si quis revixisset et in morte nihil mali esse narraret expertus: accessus mortis quam perturbationem afferat optime tibi hi dicent qui secundum illam steterunt, qui venientem et viderunt et receperunt. [10] Inter hos Bassum licet numeres, qui nos decipi noluit. Is ait tam stultum esse qui mortem timeat quam qui senectutem; nam quemadmodum senectus adulescentiam sequitur, ita mors senectutem. Vivere noluit qui mori non vult; vita enim cum exceptione mortis data est; ad hanc itur. Quam ideo timere dementis est quia certa exspectantur, dubia metuuntur. [11] Mors necessitatem habet aequam et invictam: quis queri potest in ea condicione se esse in qua nemo non est? prima autem pars est aequitatis aequalitas. Sed nunc supervacuum est naturae causam agere, quae non aliam voluit legem nostram esse quam suam: quid quid composuit resolvit, et quidquid resolvit componit iterum. [12] Iam vero si cui contigit ut illum senectus leviter emitteret, non repente avulsum vitae sed minutatim subductum, o ne ille agere gratias diis omnibus debet quod satius ad requiem homini necessariam, lasso gratam perductus est. Vides quosdam optantes mortem, et quidem magis quam rogari solet vita. Nescio utros existimem maiorem nobis animum dare, qui deposcunt mortem an qui hilares eam quietique opperiantur, quoniam illud ex rabie interdum ac repentina indignatione fit, haec ex iudicio certo tranquillitas est. Venit aliquis ad mortem iratus: mortem venientem nemo hilaris excepit nisi qui se ad illam diu composuerat.

crescebat illi quomodo manifestior notari solet agitatorum laetitia cum septimo spatio palmae appropinquat. [14] Dicebat quidem ille Epicuri praeceptis obsequens, primum sperare se nullum dolorem esse in illo extremo anhelitu; si tamen esset, habere aliquantum in ipsa brevitate solacii; nullum enim dolorem longum esse qui magnus est. Ceterum succursurum sibi etiam in ipsa distractione animae corporis que, si cum cruciatu id fieret, post illum dolorem se dolere non posse. Non dubitare autem se quin senilis anima in primis labris esset nec magna vi distraheretur a corpore. ‘Ignis qui alentem materiam occupavit aqua et interdum ruina exstinguendus est: ille qui alimentis deficitur sua sponte subsidit.’ [15] Libenter haec, mi Lucili, audio non tamquam nova, sed tamquam in rem praesentem perductus. Quid ergo? non multos spectavi abrumpentes vitam? Ego vero vidi, sed plus momenti apud me habent qui ad mortem veniunt sine odio vitae et admittunt illam, non attrahunt. [16] Illud quidem aiebat tormentum nostra nos sentire opera, quod tunc trepidamus cum prope a nobis esse credimus mortem: a quo enim non prope est, parata omnibus locis omnibusque momentis? ‘Sed consideremus’ inquit ‘tunc cum aliqua causa moriendi videtur accedere, quanto aliae propiores sint quae non timentur.’ [17] Hostis alicui mortem minabatur, hanc cruditas occupavit. Si distinguere voluerimus causas metus nostri, inveniemus alias esse, alias videri. Non mortem timemus sed cogitationem mortis; ab ipsa enim semper tantundem absumus. Ita si timenda mors est, semper timenda est: quod enim morti tempus exemptum est?

XXXI. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[2] Ad summam sapiens eris, si cluseris aures, quibus ceram parum est obdere: firmiore spissamento opus est quam in sociis usum Ulixem ferunt. Illa vox quae timebatur erat blanda, non tamen publica: at haec quae timenda est non ex uno scopulo sed ex omni terrarum parte circumsonat. Praetervehere itaque non unum locum insidiosa voluptate suspectum, sed omnes urbes. Surdum te amantissimis tuis praesta: bono animo mala precantur. Et si esse vis felix, deos ora ne quid tibi ex his quae optantur eveniat. [3] Non sunt ista bona quae in te isti volunt congeri: unum bonum est, quod beatæ vitae causa et firmamentum est, sibi fidere. Hoc autem contingere non potest, nisi contemptus est labor et in eorum numero habitus quae neque bona sunt neque mala; fieri enim non potest ut una ulla res modo mala sit, modo bona, modo levis et perferenda, modo expavescenda. [4] Labor bonum non est: quid ergo est bonum? laboris contemptio. Itaque in vanum operosos culpaverim: rursus ad honesta nitentes, quanto magis incubuerint minus que sibi vinci ac strigare permiserint, admirabor et clamabo, 'tanto melior, surge et inspira et clivum istum uno si potes spiritu exsupera'. [5] Generosos animos labor nutrit. Non est ergo quod ex illo <voto> veterum parentum tuorum eligas quid contingere tibi velis, quid optes; et in totum iam per maxima acto viro turpe est etiam nunc deos fatigare. Quid votis opus est? fac te ipse felicem; facies autem, si intellexeris bona esse quibus admixta virtus est, turpia quibus malitia coniuncta est. Quemadmodum sine mixtura lucis nihil splendidum est, nihil atrum nisi quod tenebras habet aut aliquid in se traxit obscuri, quemadmodum sine adiutorio ignis nihil calidum est, nihil sine aere frigidum, ita honesta et turpia virtutis ac malitiae societas efficit. [6] Quid ergo est bonum? rerum scientia. Quid malum est? rerum imperitia. Ille prudens atque artifex pro tempore quaeque repellat aut eliget; sed nec quae repellit timet nec miratur quae eligit, si modo magnus illi et invictus animus est. Summitti te ac deprimi veto. Laborem si non recuses, parum est: posce. [7] ‘Quid ergo?’ inquis ‘labor frivolus et supervacuus et quem humiles causae evocaverunt non est malus?’ Non magis quam ille qui pulchris rebus impenditur, quoniam animi est ipsa tolerantia quae se ad dura et aspera hortatur ac dicit, ‘quid cessas? non est viri timere sudorem’. [8] Huc et illud accedat, ut perfecta virtus sit, aequalitas ac tenor vitae per omnia consonans sibi, quod non potest esse nisi rerum scientia contingit et ars per quam humana ac divina noscantur. Hoc est summum bonum; quod si occupas, incipis deorum socius esse, non supplex. [9] ‘Quomodo’ inquis ‘isto pervenitur?’ Non per Poeninum Graiumve montem nec per deserta Candaviae; nec Syrtes tibi nec Scylla aut Charybdis adeundae sunt, quae tamen omnia transisti procuratiunculae pretio: tutum iter est, iucundum est, ad quod natura te instruxit. Dedit tibi illa quae si non deserueris, par deo surges. [10] Parem autem te deo pecunia non faciet: deus nihil habet Praetexta non faciet: deus nudus est. Fama non faciet nec ostentatio tui et in populos nominis dimissa notitia: nemo novit deum, multi de illo male existimant, et impune. Non turba servorum lecticam tuam per itinera urbana ac peregrina portantium: deus ille maximus potentissimusque ipse vehit omnia. Ne forma quidem et vires beatum te facere possunt: nihil horum patitur vetustatem. [11] Quaerendum est quod non fiat in dies peius, cui non possit obstari. Quid hoc est? animus, sed hic rectus, bonus, magnus. Quid aliud voces hunc quam deum in corpore humano hospitantem? Hic animus tam in equitem Romanum quam in libertinum, quam in servum potest cadere. Quid est enim eques Romanus aut libertinus aut servus? nomina ex ambitione aut iniuria nata. Subsilire in caelum ex angulo licet: exsurge modo

finge deo.

Finges autem non auro vel argento: non potest ex hac materia imago deo exprimi similis; cogita illos, cum propitii essent, fictiles fuisse. Vale.

XXXII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Inquiro de te et ab omnibus sciscitor qui ex ista regione veniunt quid agas, ubi et cum quibus moreris. Verba dare non potes: tecum sum. Sic vive tamquam quid facias auditorus sim, immo tamquam visurus. Quaeris quid me maxime ex iis quae de te audio delectet? quod nihil audio, quod plerique ex iis quos interrogo nesciunt quid agas. [2] Hoc est salutare, non conversari dissimilibus et diversa cupientibus. Habeo quidem fiduciam non posse te detorqueri mansurumque in proposito, etiam si sollicitantium turba circumeat. Quid ergo est? non timeo ne mutant te, timeo ne impediant. Multum autem nocet etiam qui moratur, utique in tanta brevitate vitae, quam breviorē inconstantia facimus, aliud eius subinde atque aliud facientes initium; diducimus illam in particulas ac lancinamus. [3] Propera ergo, Lucili carissime, et cogita quantum additurus celeritati fueris, si a tergo hostis instaret, si equitem adventare suspicareris ac fugientium premer vestigia. Fit hoc, premeris: accelera et evade, perduc te in tutum et subinde considera quam pulchra res sit consummare vitam ante mortem, deinde exspectare securum reliquam temporis sui partem, nihil sibi, in possessione beatæ vitae positum, quae beatior non fit si longior. [4] O quando illud videbis tempus quo scies tempus ad te non pertinere, quo tranquillus placidusque eris et crastini neglegens et in summa tui satietate! Vis scire quid sit quod faciat homines avidos futuri? nemo sibi contigit. Optaverunt itaque tibi alia parentes tui; sed ego contra omnium tibi eorum contemptum opto quorum illi copiam. Vota illorum multos compilant ut te locupletent; quidquid ad te transferunt alicui detrahendum est. [5] Opto tibi tui facultatem, ut vagis cogitationibus agitata mens tandem resistat et certa sit, ut placeat sibi et intellectis veris bonis, quae simul intellecta sunt possidentur, aetatis adiectione non egeat. Ille demum necessitates supergressus est et exauctoratus ac liber qui vivit vita peracta.

XXXIII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Desideras his quoque epistulis sicut prioribus adscribi aliquas voces nostrorum procerum. Non fuerunt circa flosculos occupati: totus contextus illorum virilis est. Inaequalitatem scias esse ubi quae eminent notabilia sunt: non est admirationi una arbor ubi in eandem altitudinem tota silva surrexit. [2] Eiusmodi vocibus referta sunt carmina, refertae historiae. Itaque nolo illas Epicuri existimes esse: publicae sunt et maxime nostrae, sed <in> illo magis adnotantur quia rarae interim interveniunt, quia inexpectatae, quia mirum est fortiter aliquid dici ab homine mollitiam professo. Ita enim plerique iudicant: apud me Epicurus est et fortis, licet manuleatus sit; fortitudo et industria et ad bellum prompta mens tam in Persas quam in alte cinctos cadit. [3] Non est ergo quod exigas excerpta et repetita: continuum est apud nostros quidquid apud alios excerpitur. Non habemus itaque ista oculiferia nec emptorem decipimus nihil inventurum cum intraverit praeter illa quae in fronte suspensa sunt: ipsis permittimus unde velint sumere exemplar. [4] Iam puta nos velle singulares sententias ex turba separare: cui illas assignabimus? Zenoni an Cleanthi an Chrysippo an Panaetio an Posidonio Non sumus sub rege: sibi quisque se vindicat. Apud istos quidquid Hermarchus dixit, quidquid Metrodorus, ad unum refertur; omnia quae quisquam in illo contubernio locutus est unius ductu et auspiciis dicta sunt. Non possumus, inquam, licet temptemus, educere aliquid ex tanta rerum aequalium multitudine:

Quocumque miseris oculum, id tibi occurret quod eminere posset nisi inter paria legeretur. [5] Quare depone istam spem posse te summatim degustare ingenia maximorum virorum: tota tibi inspicienda sunt, tota tractanda. <Continuando> res geritur et per lineamenta sua ingenii opus nequitur ex quo nihil subduci sine ruina potest. Nec recuso quominus singula membra, dummodo in ipso homine, consideres: non est. formonsa cuius crus laudatur aut brachium, sed illa cuius universa facies admirationem partibus singulis abstulit. [6] Si tamen exegeris, non tam mendice tecum agam, sed plena manu fiet; ingens eorum turba est passim iacentium;

sumenda erunt, non colligenda. Non enim excidunt sed fluunt; perpetua et inter se contexta sunt. Nec dubito quin multum conferant rudibus adhuc et extrinsecus auscultantibus; facilius enim singula insidunt circumscripta et carminis modo inclusa. [7] Ideo pueris et sententias ediscendas damus et has quas Graeci chrias vocant, quia complecti illas puerilis animus potest, qui plus adhuc non capit. Certi profectus viro captare flosculos turpe est et fulcire se notissimis ac paucissimis vocibus et memoria stare: sibi iam innitatur. Dicat ista, non teneat; turpe est enim seni aut prospicienti senectutem ex commentario sapere. ‘Hoc Zenon dixit’: tu quid? ‘Hoc Cleanthes’: tu quid? Quousque sub alio moveris? impera et dic quod memoriae tradatur, aliquid et de tuo profer. [8] Omnes itaque istos, numquam auctores, semper interpretes, sub aliena umbra latentes, nihil existimo habere generosi, numquam ausos aliquando facere quod diu didicerant. Memoriam in alienis exercuerunt; aliud autem est meminisse, aliud scire. Meminisse est rem commissam memoriae custodire; at contra scire est et sua facere quaeque nec ad exemplar pendere et totiens respicere ad magistrum. [9] ‘Hoc dixit Zenon, hoc Cleanthes.’ Aliquid inter te intersit et librum. Quousque discas? iam et praecipe. Quid est quare audiam quod legere possum? ‘Multum’ inquit ‘viva vox facit.’ Non quidem haec quae alienis verbis commodatur et actuari vice fungitur. [10] Adice nunc quod isti qui numquam tutelae suae fiunt primum in ea re sequuntur priores in qua nemo non a priore descivit; deinde in ea re sequuntur quae adhuc quaeritur. Numquam autem invenietur, si contenti fuerimus inventis. Praeterea qui alium sequitur nihil invenit, immo nec quaerit. [11] Quid ergo? non ibo per priorum vestigia? ego vero utar via vetere, sed si propiorem planioremque invenero, hanc muniam. Qui ante nos ista moverunt non domini nostri sed duces sunt. Patet omnibus veritas; nondum est occupata; multum ex illa etiam futuris relictum est. Vale.

XXXIV. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Cresco et exulto et discussa senectute recalesco quotiens ex iis quae agis ac scribis intellego quantum te ipse - nam turbam olim reliqueras - superieceris. Si agricolam arbor ad fructum perducta delectat, si pastor ex fetu gregis sui capit voluptatem, si alumnum suum nemo aliter intuetur quam ut adulescentiam illius suam iudicet, quid evenire credis iis qui ingenia educaverunt et quae tenera formaverunt adulta subito vident? [2] Assero te mihi; meum opus es. Ego cum vidissem indolem tuam, inieci manum, exhortatus sum, addidi stimulos nec lente ire passus sum sed subinde incitavi; et nunc idem facio, sed iam currentem hortor et invicem hortantem. [3] 'Quid illud?' inquis 'adhuc volo.' In hoc plurimum est, non sic quomodo principia totius operis dimidium occupare dicuntur. Ista res animo constat; itaque pars magna bonitatis est velle fieri bonum. Scis quem bonum dicam? perfectum, absolutum, quem malum facere nulla vis, nulla necessitas possit. [4] Hunc te prospicio, si perseveraveris et incubueris et id egeris ut omnia facta dictaque tua inter se congruant ac respondeant sibi et una forma percussa sint. Non est huius animus in recto cuius acta discordant. Vale.

XXXV. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Cum te tam valde rogo ut studeas, meum negotium ago: habere amicum volo, quod contingere mihi, nisi pergis ut coepisti excolere te, non potest. Nunc enim amas me, amicus non es. 'Quid ergo? haec inter se diversa sunt?' immo dis similia. Qui amicus est amat; qui amat non utique amicus est; itaque amicitia semper prodest, amor aliquando etiam nocet. [2] Si nihil aliud, ob hoc profice, ut amare discas. Festina ergo dum mihi proficis, ne istuc alteri didiceris. Ego quidem percipio iam fructum, cum mihi fingo uno nos animo futuros et quidquid aetati meae vigoris abscessit, id ad me et tua, quamquam non multum abest, rediturum; sed tamen re quoque ipsa esse laetus volo. [3] Venit ad nos ex iis quos amamus etiam absentibus gaudium, sed id leve et evanidum: conspectus et praesentia et conversatio habet aliquid vivae voluptatis, utique si non tantum quem velis sed qualem velis videas. Affer itaque te mihi, ingens munus, et quo magis instes, cogita te mortalem esse, me senem. [4] Propera ad me, sed ad te prius. Profice et ante omnia hoc cura, ut constes tibi. Quotiens experiri voles an aliquid actum sit, observa an eadem hodie velis quae heri: mutatio voluntatis indicat animum natare, aliubi atque aliubi apparere, prout tulit ventus. Non vagatur quod fixum atque fundatum est: istud sapienti perfecto contingit, aliquatenus et proficienti provectoque. Quid ergo interest? hic commovetur quidem, non tamen transit, sed suo loco nutat; ille ne commovetur quidem. Vale.

XXXVI. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Amicum tuum hortare ut istos magno animo contemnat qui illum obiurgant quod umbram et otium petierit, quod dignitatem suam destituerit et, cum plus consequi posset, praetulerit quietem omnibus; quam utiliter suum negotium gesserit cotidie illis ostendet. Hi quibus invidetur non desinent transire: alii elidentur, alii cadent. Res est inquieta felicitas; ipsa se exagitat. Movet cerebrum non uno genere: alios in aliud irritat, hos in impotentiam, illos in luxuriam; hos inflat, illos mollit et totos resolvit. [2] 'At bene aliquis illam fert.' Sic, quomodo vinum. Itaque non est quod tibi isti persuadeant eum esse felicem qui a multis obsidetur: sic ad illum quemadmodum ad lacum concurritur, quem exhaustiunt et turbant. 'Nugatorium et inertem vocant.' Scis quosdam perverse loqui et significare contraria. Felicem vocabant: quid ergo? erat? [3] Ne illud quidem curo, quod quibusdam nimis horridi animi videtur et tetrici. Ariston aiebat malle se adolescentem tristem quam hilarem et amabilem turbae; vinum enim bonum fieri quod recens durum et asperum visum est; non pati aetatem quod in dolio placuit. Sine eum tristem appellent et inimicum processibus suis: bene se dabit in vetustate ipsa tristitia, perseveret modo colere virtutem, perbibere liberalia studia, non illa quibus perfundi satis est, sed haec quibus tingendus est animus. [4] Hoc est discendi tempus. 'Quid ergo? aliquod est quo non sit discendum?' Minime; sed quemadmodum omnibus annis studere honestum est, ita non omnibus institui. Turpis et ridicula res est elementarius senex: iuveni parandum, seni utendum est. Facies ergo rem utilissimam tibi, si illum quam optimum feceris; haec aiunt beneficia esse expetenda tribuendaque, non dubie primae sortis, quae tam dare prodest quam accipere. [5] Denique nihil illi iam liberi est, spopondit; minus autem turpe est creditori quam spei bonae decoquere. Ad illud aes alienum solvendum opus est negotianti navigatione prospera, agrum colenti ubertate eius quam colit terrae, caeli favore: ille quod debet sola potest voluntate persolvi. [6] In mores fortuna ius non habet. Hos disponat ut quam tranquillissimus ille animus ad perfectum veniat, qui nec ablatum sibi quicquam sentit nec adiectum, sed in eodem habitu est quomodocumque res cedunt; cui sive aggeruntur vulgaria bona, supra res suas eminet, sive aliquid ex istis vel omnia casus excussit, minor non fit.

[7] Si in Parthia natus esset, arcum infans statim tenderet; si in Germania, protinus puer tenerum hastile vibraret; si avorum nostrorum temporibus fuisset, equitare et hostem comminus percutere didicisset. Haec singulis disciplina gentis suae suadet atque imperat. [8] Quid ergo huic meditandum est? quod adversus omnia tela, quod adversus omne hostium genus bene facit, mortem contemnere, quae quin habeat aliquid in se terribile, ut et animos nostros quos in amorem sui natura formavit offendat, nemo dubitat; nec enim opus esset in id comparari et acui in quod instinctu quodam voluntario iremus, sicut feruntur omnes ad conservationem sui. [9] Nemo discit ut si necesse fuerit aequo animo in rosa iaceat, sed in hoc duratur, ut tormentis non summittat fidem, ut si necesse fuerit stans etiam aliquando saucius pro vallo pervigilet et ne pilo quidem incumbat, quia solet obrepere interim somnus in aliquod adminiculum reclinatis. Mors nullum habet incommodum; esse enim debet aliquid cuius sit incommodum. [10] Quod si tanta cupiditas te longioris aevi tenet? cogita nihil eorum quae ab oculis abeunt et in rerum naturam, ex qua prodierunt ac mox processura sunt, reconduntur consumi: desinunt ista, non pereunt, et mors, quam pertimescimus ac recusamus, intermittit vitam, non eripit; veniet iterum qui nos in lucem reponat dies, quem multi recusarent nisi oblitos reduceret. [11] Sed postea diligentius docebo omnia quae videntur perire mutari. Aequo animo debet rediturus exire. Observa orbem rerum in se remeantium: videbis nihil in hoc mundo exstingui sed vicibus descendere ac surgere. Aestas abit, sed alter illam annus adducet; hiemps cecidit, referent illam sui menses; solem nox obruit, sed ipsam statim dies abiget. Stellarum iste discursus quidquid praeterit repetit; pars caeli levatur assidue, pars mergitur.

XXXVII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Quod maximum vinculum est ad bonam mentem, promisisti virum bonum, sacramento rogatus es. Deridebit te, si quis tibi dixerit mollem esse militiam et facilem. Nolo te decipi. Eadem honestissimi huius et illius turpissimi auctoramenti verba sunt: ‘uri, vinciri ferroque necari’. [2] Ab illis qui manus harenae locant et edunt ac bibunt quae per sanguinem reddant cavetur ut ista vel inviti patiantur: a te ut volens libensque patiaris. Illis licet arma summittere, misericordiam populi temptare: tu neque summittes nec vitam rogabis; recta tibi invictoque moriendum est. Quid porro prodest paucos dies aut annos lucrificare? sine missione nascimur. [3] ‘Quomodo ergo’ inquis ‘me expediam?’ Effugere non potes necessitates, potes vincere.

et hanc tibi viam dabit philosophia. Ad hanc te confer si vis salvus esse, si securus, si beatus, denique si vis esse, quod est maximum, liber; hoc contingere aliter non potest. [4] Humilis res est stultitia, abiecta, sordida, servilis, multis affectibus et sacrissimis subiecta. Hos tam graves dominos, interdum alternis imperantes, interdum pariter, dimittit a te sapientia, quae sola libertas est. Una ad hanc fert via, et quidem recta; non aberrabis; vade certo gradu. Si vis omnia tibi subicere, te subice rationi; multos reges, si ratio te rexerit. Ab illa disces quid et quemadmodum aggredi debeas; non incides rebus. [5] Neminem mihi dabis qui sciat quomodo quod vult coeperit velle: non consilio adductus illo sed impetu impactus est. Non minus saepe fortuna in nos incurrit quam nos in illam. Turpe est non ire sed ferri, et subito in medio turbine rerum stupentem quaerere, ‘huc ego quemadmodum veni?’ Vale.

XXXVIII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Merito exigis ut hoc inter nos epistularum commercium frequentemus. Plurimum proficit sermo, quia minutatim irrepit animo: disputationes praeparatae et effusae audiente populo plus habent strepitus, minus familiaritatis. Philosophia bonum consilium est: consilium nemo clare dat. Aliquando utendum est et illis, ut ita dicam, contionibus, ubi qui dubitat impellendus est; ubi vero non hoc agendum est, ut velit discere, sed ut discat, ad haec submissiora verba veniendum est. Facilius intrant et haerent; nec enim multis opus est sed efficacibus. [2] Seminis modo spargenda sunt, quod quamvis sit exiguum, cum occupavit idoneum locum, vires suas explicat et ex minimo in maximos auctus diffunditur. Idem facit ratio: non late patet, si aspicias; in opere crescit. Pauca sunt quae dicuntur, sed si illa animus bene exceperit, convalescunt et exsurgunt. Eadem est, inquam, praeceptorum condicio quae seminum: multum efficiunt, et angusta sunt. Tantum, ut dixi, idonea mens rapiat illa et in se trahat; multa invicem et ipsa generabit et plus reddet quam acceperit. Vale.

XXXIX. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Commentarios quos desideras, diligenter ordinatos et in angustum coactos, ego vero componam; sed vide ne plus profutura sit ratio ordinaria quam haec quae nunc vulgo breviarium dicitur, olim cum latine loqueremur summarium vocabatur. Illa res discenti magis necessaria est, haec scienti; illa enim docet, haec admonet. Sed utriusque rei tibi copiam faciam. Tu a me non est quod illum aut illum exigas: qui notorem dat ignotus est. [2] Scribam ergo quod vis, sed meo more; interim multos habes quorum scripta nescio an satis ordinentur. Sume in manus indicem philosophorum: haec ipsa res expergisci te coget, si videris quam multi tibi laboraverint. Concupisces et ipse ex illis unus esse; habet enim hoc optimum in se generosus animus, quod concitatur ad honesta. Neminem excelsi ingenii virum humilia delectant et sordida: magnarum rerum species ad se vocat et extollit. [3] Quemadmodum flamma surgit in rectum, iacere ac deprimi non potest, non magis quam quiescere, ita noster animus in motu est, eo mobiliior et actuosior quo vehementior fuerit. Sed felix qui ad meliora hunc impetum dedit: ponet se extra ius dicionemque fortunae; secunda temperabit, adversa comminuet et aliis admiranda despiciet. [4] Magni animi est magna contemnere ac mediocria malle quam nimia; illa enim utilia vitaliaque sunt, at haec eo quod superfluunt nocent. Sic segetem nimia sternit ubertas, sic rami onere franguntur, sic ad maturitatem non pervenit nimia fecunditas. Idem animis quoque evenit quos immoderata felicitas rumpit, qua non tantum in aliorum iniuriam sed etiam in suam utuntur. [5] Qui hostis in quemquam tam contumeliosus fuit quam in quosdam voluptates suae sunt? quorum impotentiae atque insanae libidini ob hoc unum possis ignoscere, quod quae fecere patiuntur. Nec immerito hic illos furor vexat; necesse est enim in immensum exeat cupiditas quae naturalem modum transilit. Ille enim habet suum finem, inania et ex libidine orta sine termino sunt. [6] Necessaria metitur utilitas: supervacua quo redigis? Voluptatibus itaque se mergunt quibus in consuetudinem adductis carere non possunt, et ob hoc miserrimi sunt, quod eo pervenerunt ut illis quae supervacua fuerant facta sint necessaria. Serviunt itaque voluptatibus, non fruuntur, et mala sua, quod malorum ultimum est, et amant; tunc autem est consummata infelicitas, ubi turpia non solum delectant sed etiam placent, et desinit esse remedio locus ubi quae fuerant vitia mores sunt. Vale.

XL. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[2] Audisse te scribis Serapionem philosophum, cum istuc applicuisset: 'solet magno cursu verba convellere, quae non effundit +ima+ sed premit et arguet; plura enim veniunt quam quibus vox una sufficiat'. Hoc non probo in philosopho, cuius pronuntiatio quoque, sicut vita, debet esse composita; nihil autem ordinatum est quod praecipitatur et properat. Itaque oratio illa apud Homerum concitata et sine intermissione in morem nivis superveniens oratori data est, lenis et melle dulcior seni profluit. [3] Sic itaque habe: [ut] istam vim dicendi rapidam atque abundantem aptiorem esse circulanti quam agenti rem magnam ac seriam docentique. Aequae stillare illum nolo quam currere; nec extendat aures nec obruat. Nam illa quoque inopia et exilitas minus intentum auditorem habet taedio interruptae tarditatis; facilius tamen insidit quod exspectatur quam quod praetervolat. Venique tradere homines discipulis praecepta dicuntur: non traditur quod fugit. [4] Adice nunc quod quae veritati operam dat oratio incompressa esse debet et simplex: haec popularis nihil habet veri. Movere vult turbam et inconsultas aures impetu rapere, tractandam se non praebet, aufertur: quomodo autem regere potest quae regi non potest? Quid quod haec oratio quae sanandis mentibus adhibetur descendere in nos debet? remedia non prosunt nisi immorantur. [5] Multum praeterea habet inanitatis et vani, plus sonat quam valet. Lenienda sunt quae me exterrant, compescenda quae irritant, discutienda quae fallunt, inhibenda luxuria, corripienda avaritia: quid horum raptim potest fieri? quis medicus aegros in transitu curat? Quid quod ne voluptatem quidem ullam habet talis verborum sine dilectu ruentium strepitus? [6] Sed ut pleraque quae fieri posse non crederes cognovisse satis est, ita istos qui verba exercuerunt abunde est semel audisse. Quid enim quis discere, quid imitari velit? quid de eorum animo iudicet quorum oratio perturbata et immissa est nec potest reprimi? [7] Quemadmodum per proclive currentium non ubi visum est gradus sistitur, sed incitato corporis ponderi servit ac longius quam voluit effertur, sic ista dicendi celeritas nec in sua potestate est nec satis decora philosophiae, quae ponere debet verba, non proicere, et pedetemptim procedere. [8] ‘Quid ergo? non aliquando et insurget?’ Quidni? sed salva dignitate morum, quam violenta ista et nimia vis exuit. Habeat vires magnas, moderatas tamen; perennis sit unda, non torrens. Vix oratori permiserim talem dicendi velocitatem inrevocabilem ac sine lege vadentem: quemadmodum enim iudex subsequi poterit aliquando etiam imperitus et rudis? Tum quoque, cum illum aut ostentatio abstulerit aut affectus impotens sui, tantum festinet atque ingerat quantum aures pati possunt.

[11] Quaedam tamen et nationibus puto magis aut minus convenire. In Graecis hanc licentiam tuleris: nos etiam cum scribimus interpungere assuevimus. Cicero quoque noster, a quo Romana eloquentia exsiluit, gradarius fuit. Romanus sermo magis se circumspicit et aestimat praebetque aestimandum. [12] Fabianus, vir egregius et vita et scientia et, quod post ista est, eloquentia quoque, disputabat expedite magis quam concitate, ut posses dicere facilitatem esse illam, non celeritatem. Hanc ego in viro sapiente recipio, non exigo; ut oratio eius sine impedimento exeat, proferatur tamen malo quam profluat. [13] Eo autem magis te deterreo ab isto morbo quod non potest tibi ista res contingere aliter quam si te pudere desierit: perfrices frontem oportet et te ipse non audias; multa enim inobservatus ille cursus feret quae reprehendere velis. [14] Non potest, inquam, tibi contingere res ista salva verecundia. Praeterea exercitatione opus est cotidiana et a rebus studium transferendum est ad verba. Haec autem etiam si aderunt et poterunt sine ullo tuo labore decurrere, tamen temperanda sunt; nam quemadmodum sapienti viro incessus modestior convenit, ita oratio pressa, non audax. Summa ergo summarum haec erit: tardilocum esse te iubeo. Vale.

XLI. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Facis rem optimam et tibi salutarem si, ut scribis, perseveras ire ad bonam mentem, quam stultum est optare cum possis a te impetrare. Non sunt ad caelum elevandae manus nec exorandus aedituus ut nos ad aurem simulacri, quasi magis exaudiri possimus, admittat: prope est a te deus, tecum est, intus est. [2] Ita dico, Lucili: sacer intra nos spiritus sedet, malorum bonorumque nostrorum observator et custos; hic prout a nobis tractatus est, ita nos ipse tractat. Bonus vero vir sine deo nemo est: an potest aliquis supra fortunam nisi ab illo adiutus exsurgere? Ille dat consilia magnifica et erecta. In unoquoque virorum bonorum

[4] Si hominem videris interritum periculis, intactum cupiditatibus, inter adversa felicem, in mediis tempestatibus placidum, ex superiore loco homines videntem, ex aequo deos, non subibit te veneratio eius? non dices, ‘ista res maior est altiorque quam ut credi similis huic in quo est corpusculo possit’? [5] Vis isto divina descendit; animum excellentem, moderatum, omnia tamquam minora transeuntem, quidquid timemus optamusque ridentem, caelestis potentia agit. Non potest res tanta sine adminiculo numinis stare; itaque maiore sui parte illic est unde descendit. Quemadmodum radii solis contingunt quidem terram sed ibi sunt unde mittuntur, sic animus magnus ac sacer et in hoc demissus, ut propius [quidem] divina nossemus, conversatur quidem nobiscum sed haeret origini suae; illinc pendet, illuc spectat ac nititur, nostris tamquam melior interest. [6] Quis est ergo hic animus? qui nullo bono nisi suo nitet. Quid enim est stultius quam in homine aliena laudare? quid eo dementius qui ea miratur quae ad alium transferri protinus possunt? Non faciunt meliorem equum aurei freni. Aliter leo aurata iuba mittitur, dum contractatur et ad patientiam recipiendi ornamenti cogitur fatigatus, aliter incultus, integri spiritus: hic scilicet impetu acer, qualem illum natura esse voluit, speciosus ex horrido, cuius hic decor est, non sine timore aspici, praefertur illi languido et bratteato. [7] Nemo gloriari nisi suo debet. Vitem laudamus si fructu palmites onerat, si ipsa pondere [ad terram] eorum quae tulit adminicula deducit: num quis huic illam praeferret vitem cui aureae uvae, aurea folia dependent? Propria virtus est in vite fertilitas; in homine quoque id laudandum est quod ipsius est. Familiam formonsam habet et domum pulchram, multum serit, multum fenerat: nihil horum in ipso est sed circa ipsum. [8] Lauda in illo quod nec eripi potest nec dari, quod proprium hominis est. Quaeris quid sit? animus et ratio in animo perfecta. Rationale enim animal est homo; consummatur itaque bonum eius, si id implevit cui nascitur. Quid est autem quod ab illo ratio haec exigit? rem facillimam, secundum naturam suam vivere. Sed hanc difficilem facit communis insania: in vitia alter alterum trudimus. Quomodo autem revocari ad salutem possunt quos nemo retinet, populus impellit? Vale.

LIBER QUINTUS

XLII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Iam tibi iste persuasit virum se bonum esse? Atqui vir bonus tam cito nec fieri potest nec intellegi. Scis quem nunc virum bonum dicam? hunc secundae notae; nam ille alter fortasse tamquam phoenix semel anno quingentesimo nascitur. Nec est mirum ex intervallo magna generari: mediocria et in turbam nascentia saepe fortuna producit, eximia vero ipsa raritate commendat. [2] Sed iste multum adhuc abest ab eo quod profitetur; et si sciret quid esset vir bonus, nondum esse se crederet, fortasse etiam fieri posse desperaret. ‘At male existimat de malis.’ Hoc etiam mali faciunt, nec ulla maior poena nequitiae est quam quod sibi ac suis displicet. [3] ‘At odit eos qui subita et magna potentia impotenter utuntur.’ Idem faciet cum idem potuerit. Multorum quia imbecilla sunt latent vitia, non minus ausura cum illis vires suae placuerint quam illa quae iam felicitas aperuit. Instrumenta illis explicandae nequitiae desunt. [4] Sic tuto serpens etiam pestifera tractatur dum riget frigore: non desunt tunc illi venena sed torpent. Multorum crudelitas et ambitio et luxuria, ut paria pessimis audeat, fortunae favore deficitur. Eadem velle [subaudi si] cognoscas: da posse quantum volunt. [5] Meministi, cum quendam affirmares esse in tua potestate, dixisse me volaticum esse ac levem et te non pedem eius tenere sed pinnam? Mentitus sum: pluma tenebatur, quam remisit et fugit. Scis quos postea tibi exhibuerit ludos, quam multa in caput suum casura temptaverit. Non videbat se per aliorum pericula in suum ruere non cogitabat quam onerosa essent quae petebat, etiam si supervacua non essent.

vilius. [8] Idem itaque in omnibus consiliis rebusque faciamus quod solemus facere quotiens ad institorem alicuius mercis accessimus: videamus hoc quod concupiscimus quanti deferatur. Saepe maximum pretium est pro quo nullum datur. Multa possum tibi ostendere quae acquisita acceptaque libertatem nobis extorserint; nostri essemus, si ista nostra non essent. [9] Haec ergo tecum ipse versa, non solum ubi de incremento agetur, sed etiam ubi de iactura. ‘Hoc perituum est.’ Nempe adventicium fuit; tam facile sine isto vives quam vixisti. Si diu illud habuisti, perdis postquam satiatus es; si non diu, perdis antequam assuescas. ‘Pecuniam minorem habebis.’ Nempe et molestiam. [10] ‘Gratiam minorem.’ Nempe et invidiam. Circumspice ista quae nos agunt in insaniam, quae cum plurimis lacrimis amittimus: scies non damnum in iis molestum esse, sed opinionem damni. Nemo illa perisse sentit sed cogitat. Qui se habet nihil perdidit: sed quoto cuique habere se contigit? Vale.

XLIII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Quomodo hoc ad me pervenerit quaeris, quis mihi id te cogitare narraverit quod tu nulli narraveras? Is qui scit plurimum, rumor. ‘Quid ergo?’ inquis ‘tantus sum ut possim excitare rumorem?’ Non est quod te ad hunc locum respiciens metiaris: ad istum respice in quo moraris. [2] Quidquid inter vicina eminet magnum est illic ubi eminet; nam magnitudo non habet modum certum: comparatio illam aut tollit aut deprimit. Navis quae in flumine magna est in mari parvula est; gubernaculum quod alteri navi magnum alteri exiguum est. [3] Tu nunc in provincia, licet contemnas ipse te, magnus es. Quid agas, quemadmodum cenes, quemadmodum dormias, quaeritur, scitur: eo tibi diligentius vivendum est. Tunc autem felicem esse te iudica cum poteris in publico vivere, cum te parietes tui tegent, non abscondent, quos plerumque circumdatos nobis iudicamus non ut tutius vivamus, sed ut peccemus occultius. [4] Rem dicam ex qua mores aestimes nostros: vix quemquam invenies qui possit aperto ostio vivere. Ianitores conscientia nostra, non superbia opposuit: sic vivimus ut deprendi sit subito aspici. Quid autem prodest recondere se et oculos hominum auresque vitare? [5] Bona conscientia turbam advocat, mala etiam in solitudine anxia atque sollicita est. Si honesta sunt quae facis, omnes sciant; si turpia, quid refert neminem scire cum tu scias? O te miserum si contemnis hunc testem! Vale.

XLIV. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Iterum tu mihi te pusillum facis et dicis malignius tecum egisse naturam prius, deinde fortunam, cum possis eximere te vulgo et ad felicitatem hominum maximam emergere. Si quid est aliud in philosophia boni, hoc est, quod stemma non inspicit; omnes, si ad originem primam revocantur, a dis sunt. [2] Eques Romanus es, et ad hunc ordinem tua te perduxit industria; at mehercules multis quattuordecim clausa sunt, non omnes curia admittit, castra quoque quos ad laborem et periculum recipiant fastidiose legunt: bona mens omnibus patet, omnes ad hoc sumus nobiles. Nec reicit quemquam philosophia nec eligit: omnibus lucet. [3] Patricius Socrates non fuit; Cleanthes aquam traxit et rigando horto locavit manus; Platonem non accepit nobilem philosophia sed fecit: quid est quare desperes his te posse fieri parem? Omnes hi maiores tui sunt, si te illis geris dignum; geres autem, si hoc protinus tibi ipse persuaseris, a nullo te nobilitate superari. [4] Omnibus nobis totidem ante nos sunt; nullius non origo ultra memoriam iacet. Platon ait neminem regem non ex servis esse oriundum, neminem non servum ex regibus. Omnia ista longa varietas miscuit et sursum deorsum fortuna versavit. [5] Quis est generosus? ad virtutem bene a natura compositus. Hoc unum intuendum est: alioquin si ad vetera revocas, nemo non inde est ante quod nihil est. A primo mundi ortu usque in hoc tempus perduxit nos ex splendidis sordidisque alternata series. Non facit nobilem atrium plenum fumosis imaginibus; nemo in nostram gloriam vixit nec quod ante nos fuit nostrum est: animus facit nobilem, cui ex quacumque condicione supra fortunam licet surgere. [6] Puta itaque te non equitem Romanum esse sed libertinum: potes hoc consequi, ut solus sis liber inter ingenuos. 'Quomodo?' inquis. Si mala bonaque non populo auctore distineris. Intuendum est non unde veniant, sed quo eant. Si quid est quod vitam beatam potest facere, id bonum est suo iure; depravari enim in malum non potest. [7] Quid est ergo in quo erratur, cum omnes beatam vitam optent? quod instrumenta eius pro ipsa habent et illam dum petunt fugiunt. Nam cum summa vitae beatae sit solida securitas et eius inconcussa fiducia, sollicitudinis colligunt causas et per insidiosum iter vitae non tantum ferunt sarcinas sed trahunt; ita longius ab effectu eius quod petunt semper abscedunt et quo plus operae impenderunt, hoc se magis impediunt et feruntur retro. Quod evenit in labyrintho properantibus: ipsa illos velocitas implicat. Vale.

XLV. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Librorum istic inopiam esse quereris. Non refert quam multos sed quam bonos habeas: lectio certa prodest, varia delectat. Qui quo destinavit pervenire vult unam sequatur viam, non per multas vagetur: non ire istuc sed errare est. [2] ‘Vellem’ inquis ‘<non> magis consilium mihi quam libros dares.’ Ego vero quoscumque habeo mittere paratus sum et totum horreum excutere; me quoque isto, si possem, transferrem, et nisi mature te finem officii sperarem impetraturum, hanc senilem expeditionem indixissem mihi nec me Charybdis et Scylla et fabulosum istud fretum deterrire potuissent. Transassem ista, non solum traiecissem, dummodo te complecti possem et praesens aestimare quantum animo crevisses.

[3] Ceterum quod libros meos tibi mitti desideras, non magis ideo me disertum puto quam formosum putarem si imaginem meam peteres. Indulgentiae scio istud esse, non iudici; et si modo iudici est, indulgentia tibi imposuit. [4] Sed qualescumque sunt, tu illos sic lege tamquam verum quaeram adhuc, non sciam, et contumaciter quaeram. Non enim me cuiquam emancipavi, nullius nomen fero; multum magnorum virorum iudicio credo, aliquid et meo vindico. Nam illi quoque non inventa sed quaerenda nobis reliquerunt, et invenissent forsitan necessaria nisi et supervacua quaesissent. [5] Multum illis temporis verborum cavillatio eripuit, captiosae disputationes quae acumen irritum exercent. Nectimus nodos et ambiguam significationem verbis illigamus ac deinde dissolvimus: tantum nobis vacat? iam vivere, iam mori scimus? Tota illo mente pergendum est ubi provideri debet ne res nos, non verba decipiant. [6] Quid mihi vocum similitudines distinguis, quibus nemo umquam nisi dum disputat captus est? Res fallunt: illas discerne. Pro bonis mala amplectimur; optamus contra id quod optavimus; pugnant vota nostra cum votis, consilia cum consilis. [7] Adulatio quam similis est amicitiae! Non imitatur tantum illam sed vincit et praeterit; apertis ac propitiis auribus recipitur et in praecordia ima descendit, eo ipso gratiosa quo laedit: doce quemadmodum hanc similitudinem possim dinoscere. Venit ad me pro amico blandus inimicus; vitia nobis sub virtutum nomine obrepunt: temeritas sub titulo fortitudinis latet, moderatio vocatur ignavia, pro cauto timidus accipitur. In his magno periculo erramus: his certas notas imprime. [8] Ceterum qui interrogatur an cornua habeat non est tam stultus ut frontem suam temptet, nec rursus tam ineptus aut hebes ut nesciat <nisi> tu illi subtilissima collectione persuaseris. Sic ista sine noxa decipiunt quomodo praestigiatorum acetabula et calculi, in quibus me fallacia ipsa delectat. Effice ut quomodo fiat intellegam: perdidici lusum. Idem de istis captionibus dico - quo enim nomine potius sophismata appellem? -: nec ignorantia nocent nec scientiam iuvant.

[9] Si utique vis verborum ambiguitates diducere, hoc nos doce, beatum non eum esse quem vulgus appellat, ad quem pecunia magna confluit, sed illum cui bonum omne in animo est, erectum et excelsum et mirabilia calcantem, qui neminem videt cum quo se commutatum velit, qui hominem ea sola parte aestimat qua homo est, qui natura magistra utitur, ad illius leges componitur, sic vivit quomodo illa praescripsit; cui bona sua nulla vis excutit, qui mala in bonum vertit, certus iudicii, inconcussus, intrepidus; quem aliqua vis movet, nulla perturbat; quem fortuna, cum quod habuit telum nocentissimum vi maxima intorsit, pungit, non vulnerat, et hoc raro; nam cetera eius tela, quibus genus humanum debellatur, grandinis more dissultant, quae incussa tectis sine ullo habitatoris incommodo crepitat ac solvitur. [10] Quid me detines in eo quem tu ipse pseudomenon appellas, de quo tantum librorum compositum est? Ecce tota mihi vita mentitur: hanc coargue, hanc ad verum, si acutus es, redige. Necessaria iudicat quorum magna pars supervacua est; etiam quae non est supervacua nihil in se momenti habet in hoc, ut possit fortunatum beatumque praestare. Non enim statim bonum est, si quid necessarium est: aut proicimus bonum, si hoc nomen pani et polentae damus et ceteris sine quibus vita non ducitur. [11] Quod bonum est utique necessarium est: quod necessarium est non utique bonum est, quoniam quidem necessaria sunt quaedam eademque vilissima. Nemo usque eo dignitatem boni ignorat ut illud ad haec in diem utilia demittat. [12] Quid ergo? non eo potius curam transferes, ut ostendas omnibus magno temporis impendio quaeri supervacua et multos transisse vitam dum vitae instrumenta conquirunt? Recognosce singulos, considera universos: nullius non vita spectat in crastinum. [13] Quid in hoc sit mali quaeris? Infinitum. Non enim vivunt sed victuri sunt: omnia differunt. Etiam si attenderemus, tamen nos vita praecurreret; nunc vero cunctantes quasi aliena transcurrit et ultimo die finitur, omni perit.

Sed ne epistolae modum excedam, quae non debet sinistram manum legentis implere, in alium diem hanc litem cum dialecticis differam nimium subtilibus et hoc solum curantibus, non et hoc. Vale.

XLVI. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Librum tuum quem mihi promiseras accepi et tamquam lecturus ex commodo adaperui ac tantum degustare volui; deinde blanditus est ipse ut procederem longius. Qui quam disertus fuerit ex hoc intellegas licet: levis mihi visus est, cum esset nec mei nec tui corporis, sed qui primo aspectu aut Titi Livii aut Epicuri posset videri. Tanta autem dulcedine me tenuit et traxit ut illum sine ulla dilatione perlegerim. Sol me invitabat, fames admonebat, nubes minabantur; tamen exhausti totum. [2] Non tantum delectatus sed gavisus sum. Quid ingenii iste habuit, quid animi! Dicerem 'quid impetus!', si interquievisset, si <ex> intervallo surrexisset; nunc non fuit impetus sed tenor. Compositio virilis et sancta; nihilominus interveniebat dulce illud et loco lene. Grandis, erectus es; hoc te volo tenere, sic ire. Fecit aliquid et materia; ideo eligenda est fertilis, quae capiat ingenium, quae incitet.

[3] <De> libro plura scribam cum illum retractavero; nunc parum mihi sedet iudicium, tamquam audierim illa, non legerim. Sine me et inquirere. Non est quod verearis: verum audies. O te hominem felicem, quod nihil habes propter quod quisquam tibi tam longe mentiatur! nisi quod iam etiam ubi causa sublata est mentimur consuetudinis causa. Vale.

XLVII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Libenter ex iis qui a te veniunt cognovi familiariter te cum servis tuis vivere: hoc prudentiam tuam, hoc eruditionem decet. 'Servi sunt.' Immo homines. 'Servi sunt.' Immo contubernales. 'Servi sunt.' Immo humiles amici. 'Servi sunt.' Immo conservi, si cogitaveris tantundem in utrosque licere fortunae. [2] Itaque rideo istos qui turpe existimant cum servo suo cenare: quare, nisi quia superbissima consuetudo cenanti domino stantium servorum turbam circumdedit? Est ille plus quam capit, et ingenti aviditate onerat distentum ventrem ac desuetum iam ventris officio, ut maiore opera omnia egerat quam ingessit. [3] At infelicibus servis movere labra ne in hoc quidem ut loquantur, licet; virga murmur omne compescitur, et ne fortuita quidem verberibus excepta sunt, tussis, sternumenta, singultus; magno malo ulla voce interpellatum silentium luitur; nocte tota ieiuni mutique perstant. [4] Sic fit ut isti de domino loquantur quibus coram domino loqui non licet. At illi quibus non tantum coram dominis sed cum ipsis erat sermo, quorum os non consuebatur, parati erant pro domino porrigere cervicem, periculum imminens in caput suum avertere; in conviviis loquebantur, sed in tormentis tacebant. [5] Deinde eiusdem arrogantiae proverbium iactatur, totidem hostes esse quot servos: non habemus illos hostes sed facimus. Alia interim crudelia, inhumana praetereo, quod ne tamquam hominibus quidem sed tamquam iumentis abutimur. [quod] Cum ad cenandum discubuimus, alius sputa deterget, alius reliquias temulentorum <toro> subditus colligit. [6] Alius pretiosas aves scindit; per pectus et clunes certis ductibus circumferens eruditam manum frustra excutit, infelix, qui huic uni rei vivit, ut altitia decenter secet, nisi quod miserior est qui hoc voluptatis causa docet quam qui necessitatis discit. [7] Alius vini minister in muliebrem modum ornatus cum aetate luctatur: non potest effugere pueritiam, retrahitur, iamque militari habitu glaber retrit pilis aut penitus evulsis tota nocte pervigilat, quam inter ebrietatem domini ac libidinem dividit et in cubiculo vir, in convivio puer est. [8] Alius, cui convivarum censura permissa est, perstat infelix et exspectat quos adulatio et intemperantia aut gulae aut linguae revocet in crastinum. Adice obsonatores quibus dominici palati notitia subtilis est, qui sciunt cuius illum rei sapor excitet, cuius delectet aspectus, cuius novitate nauseabundus erigi possit, quid iam ipsa satietate fastidiat, quid illo die esuriat. Cum his cenare non sustinet et maiestatis suae deminutionem putat ad eandem mensam cum servo suo accedere. Di melius! quot ex istis dominos habet! [9] Stare ante limen Callisti domini suum vidi et eum qui illi impegerat titulum, qui inter reicula manicipia produxerat, aliis intransitibus excludi. Rettulit illi gratiam servus ille in primam decuriam coniectus, in qua vocem praeco experitur: et ipse illum invicem apologavit, et ipse non iudicavit domo sua dignum. Dominus Callistum vendidit: sed domino quam multa Callistus!

[10] Vis tu cogitare istum quem servum tuum vocas ex isdem seminibus ortum eodem frui caelo, aequae spirare, aequae vivere, aequae mori! tam tu illum videre ingenuum potes quam ille te servum. Variana clade multos splendidissime natos, senatorium per militiam auspicantes gradum, fortuna depressit: alium ex illis pastorem, alium custodem casae fecit. Contemne nunc eius fortunae hominem in quam transire dum contemnis potes.

[11] Nolo in ingentem me locum immittere et de usu servorum disputare, in quos superbissimi, crudelissimi, contumeliosissimi sumus. Haec tamen praecepti mei summa est: sic cum inferiore vivas quemadmodum tecum superiorem velis vivere. Quotiens in mentem venerit quantum tibi in servum <tuum> liceat, veniat in mentem tantundem in te domino tuo licere. [12] ‘At ego’ inquis ‘nullum habeo dominum.’ Bona aetas est: forsitan habebis. Nescis qua aetate Hecuba servire coeperit, qua Croesus, qua Darei mater, qua Platon, qua Diogenes? [13] Vive cum servo clementer, comiter quoque, et in sermonem illum admitte et in consilium et in convictum.

Hoc loco acclamabit mihi tota manus delicatarum ‘nihil hac re humilior, nihil turpius’. Hos ego eosdem deprehendam alienorum servorum osculantes manum. [14] Ne illud quidem videtis, quam omnem invidiam maiores nostri dominis, omnem contumeliam servis detraxerint? Dominum patrem familiae appellaverunt, servos - quod etiam in mimis adhuc durat - familiares; instituerunt diem festum, non quo solo cum servis domini vescerentur, sed quo utique; honores illis in domo gerere, ius dicere permiserunt et domum pusillam rem publicam esse iudicaverunt. [15] ‘Quid ergo? omnes servos admovebo mensae meae?’ Non magis quam omnes liberos. Erras si existimas me quosdam quasi sordidioris operae reiecturum, ut puta illum mulionem et illum bubulcum. Non ministeriis illos aestimabo sed moribus: sibi quisque dat mores, ministeria casus assignat. Quidam cenent tecum quia digni sunt, quidam ut sint; si quid enim in illis ex sordida conversatione servile est, honestiorum convictus excutiet. [16] Non est, mi Lucili, quod amicum tantum in foro et in curia quaeras: si diligenter attenderis, et domi invenies. Saepe bona materia cessat sine artifice: tempta et experire. Quemadmodum stultus est qui equum empturus non ipsum inspicit sed stratum eius ac frenos, sic stultissimus est qui hominem aut ex veste aut ex condicione, quae vestis modo nobis circumdata est, aestimat. [17] ‘Servus est.’ Sed fortasse liber animo. ‘Servus est.’ Hoc illi nocebit? Ostende quis non sit: alius libidini servit, alius avaritiae, alius ambitioni, <omnes spei>, omnes timori. Dabo consularem aniculae servientem, dabo ancillulae divitem, ostendam nobilissimos iuvenes mancipia pantomimorum: nulla servitus turpior est quam voluntaria. Quare non est quod fastidiosi isti te deterreant quominus servis tuis hilarem te praestes et non superbe superiorem: colant potius te quam timeant.

est malitia, saepe mutatur, non in melius sed in aliud. Vale.

XLVIII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[4] Hoc, Lucili virorum optime, mihi ab istis subtilibus praecipi malo, quid amico praestare debeam, quid homini, quam quot modis ‘amicus’ dicatur, et ‘homo’ quam multa significet. In diversum ecce sapientia et stultitia discedunt! cui accedo? in utram ire partem iubes? Illi homo pro amico est, huic amicus non est pro homine; ille amicum sibi parat, hic se amico: tu mihi verba distorques et syllabas digeris. [5] Scilicet nisi interrogationes vaferrimas struxero et conclusione falsa a vero nascens mendacium adstrinxero, non potero a fugiendis petenda secernere. Pudet me: in re tam seria senes ludimus. [Vale. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM.]

tristes docemus et pallidi? Vis scire quid philosophia promittat generi humano? consilium. Alium mors vocat, alium paupertas urit, alium divitiae vel alienae torquent vel suae; ille malam fortunam horret, hic se felicitati suae subducere cupit; hunc homines male habent, illum dii. Quid mihi lusoria ista componis? non est iocandi locus: ad miseros advocatus es. Opem laturum te naufragis, captis, aegris, egentibus, intentae securi subiectum praestantibus caput pollicitus es: quo diverteris? quid agis? Hic cum quo ludis timet: succurre, quidquid Ålaqueti respondentium poenisÅ. Omnes undique ad te manus tendunt, perditae vitae perituraeque auxilium aliquod implorant, in te spes opesque sunt; rogant ut ex tanta illos volutatione extrahas, ut disiectis et errantibus clarum veritatis lumen ostendas. [9] Dic quid natura necessarium fecerit, quid supervacuum, quam faciles <leges> posuerit, quam iucunda sit vita, quam expedita illas sequentibus, quam acerba et implicita eorum qui opinioni plus quam naturae crediderunt * * * si prius docueris quam partem eorum levatura sint. Quid istorum cupiditates demit? quid temperat? Utinam tantum non prodessent! nocent. Hoc tibi cum voles manifestissimum faciam, comminui et debilitari generosam indolem in istas argutias coniectam. [10] Pudet dicere contra fortunam militaturis quae porrigant tela, quemadmodum illos subornent. Hac ad summum bonum itur? per istud philosophiae ‘sive nive’ et turpes infamesque etiam ad album sedentibus exceptiones? Quid enim aliud agitis, cum eum quem interrogatis scientes in fraudem inducitis, quam ut formula cecidisse videatur? Sed quemadmodum illos praetor, sic hos philosophia in integrum restituit. [11] Quid disceditis ab ingentibus promissis et grandia locuti, effecturos vos ut non magis auri fulgor quam gladii praestringat oculos meos, ut ingenti constantia et quod omnes optant et quod omnes timent calcem, ad grammaticorum elementa descenditis? Quid dicitis?

Hoc enim est quod mihi philosophia promittit, ut parem deo faciat; ad hoc invitatus sum, ad hoc veni: fidem praesta.

[12] Quantum potes ergo, mi Lucili, reduc te ab istis exceptionibus et praescriptionibus philosophorum: aperta decent et simplicia bonitatem. Etiam si multum superesset aetatis, parce dispensandum erat ut sufficeret necessariis: nunc quae dementia est supervacua discere in tanta temporis egestate! Vale.

XLIX. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[2] Modo amisisse te videor; quid enim non 'modo' est, si recorderis? Modo apud Sotionem philosophum puer sedi, modo causas agere coepi, modo desii velle agere, modo desii posse. Infinita est velocitas temporis, quae magis apparet respicientibus. Nam ad praesentia intentos fallit; adeo praecipitis fugae transitus lenis est. [3] Causam huius rei quaeris? quidquid temporis transit eodem loco est; pariter aspicitur, una iacet; omnia in idem profundum cadunt. Et alioqui non possunt longa intervalla esse in ea re quae tota brevis est. Punctum est quod vivimus et adhuc puncto minus; sed et hoc minimum specie quadam longioris spatii natura derisit: aliud ex hoc infantiam fecit, aliud pueritiam, aliud adulescentiam, aliud inclinationem quandam ab adulescentia ad senectutem, aliud ipsam senectutem. In quam angusto quodam quot gradus posuit! [4] Modo te prosecutus sum; et tamen hoc 'modo' aetatis nostrae bona portio est, cuius breviter aliquando defecturam cogitemus. Non solebat mihi tam velox tempus videri: nunc incredibilis cursus apparet, sive quia admoveri lineas sentio, sive quia attendere coepi et computare damnum meum.

Eo magis itaque indignor aliquos ex hoc tempore quod sufficere ne ad necessaria quidem potest, [5] etiam si custoditum diligentissime fuerit, in supervacua maiorem partem erogare. Negat Cicero, si duplicetur sibi aetas, habiturum se tempus quo legat lyricos: eodem loco <pono> dialecticos: tristius inepti sunt. Illi ex professo lasciviunt, hi agere ipsos aliquid existimant. [6] Nec ego nego prospicienda ista, sed prospicienda tantum et a limine salutanda, in hoc unum, ne verba nobis dentur et aliquid esse in illis magni ac secreti boni iudicemus. Quid te torques et maceras in ea quaestione quam subtilius est contempsisse quam solvere? Securi est et ex commodo migrantis minuta conquirere: cum hostis instat a tergo et movere se iussus est miles, necessitas excutit quidquid pax otiosa collegerat. [7] Non vacat mihi verba dubie cadentia consecrari et vafritiam in illis meam experiri.

Aspice qui coeant populi, quae moenia clusis
ferrum acuant portis.

Magno mihi animo strepitus iste belli circumsonantis exaudiendus est. [8] Demens omnibus merito viderer, si cum saxa in munimentum murorum senes feminaeque congererent, cum iuventus intra portas armata signum eruptionis exspectaret aut posceret, cum hostilia in portis tela vibrarent et ipsum solum suffossionibus et cuniculis tremere, sederem otiosus et eiusmodi quaestiunculas ponens: ‘quod non perdidisti habes; cornua autem non perdidisti; cornua ergo habes’ aliaque ad exemplum huius acutae delirationis concinnata. [9] Atqui aequae licet tibi demens videar si istis impendero operam: et nunc obsideor. Tunc tamen periculum mihi obsessio externum immineret, murus me ab hoste secerneret: nunc mortifera mecum sunt. Non vaco ad istas ineptias; ingens negotium in manibus est. Quid agam? mors me sequitur, fugit vita. [10] Adversus haec me doce aliquid; effice ut ego mortem non fugiam, vita me non effugiat. Exhortare adversus difficilia, [de aequanimitate] adversus inevitabilia; angustias temporis mei laxa. Doce non esse positum bonum vitae in spatio eius sed in usu posse fieri, immo saepissime fieri, ut qui diu vixit parum vixerit. Dic mihi dormituro ‘potes non expergisci’; dic experrecto ‘potes non dormire amplius’. Dic exeunti ‘potes non reverti’; dic redeunti ‘potes non exire’. [11] Erras si in navigatione tantum existimas minimum esse quo  morte vita diducitur: in omni loco aequae tenue intervallum est. Non ubique se mors tam prope ostendit: ubique tam prope est. Has tenebras discute, et facilius ea trades ad quae praeparatus sum. Dociles natura nos edidit, et rationem dedit imperfectam, sed quae perfici posset. [12] De iustitia mihi, de pietate disputa, de frugalitate, de pudicitia utraque, et illa cui alieni corporis abstinencia est, et hac cui sui cura. Si me nolueris per devia ducere, facilius ad id quo tendo perveniam; nam, ut ait ille tragicus, 'veritatis simplex oratio est', ideoque illam implicari non oportet; nec enim quicquam minus convenit quam subdola ista calliditas animis magna conantibus. Vale.

L. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Epistulam tuam accepi post multos menses quam miseras; supervacuum itaque putavi ab eo qui afferebat quid ageres quaerere. Valde enim bonae memoriae est, si meminit; et tamen spero te sic iam vivere ut, ubicumque eris, sciam quid agas. Quid enim aliud agis quam ut meliorem te ipse cotidie facias, ut aliquid ex erroribus ponas, ut intellegas tua vitia esse quae putas rerum? Quaedam enim locis et temporibus adscribimus; at illa, quocumque transierimus, secutura sunt. [2] Harpasten, uxoris meae fatuam, scis hereditarium onus in domo mea remansisse. Ipse enim aversissimus ab istis prodigiis sum; si quando fatuo delectari volo, non est mihi longe quaerendus: me rideo. Haec fatua subito desiit videre. Incredibilem rem tibi narro, sed veram: nescit esse se caecam; subinde paedagogum suum rogat ut migret, ait domum tenebricosam esse. [3] Hoc quod in illa ridemus omnibus nobis accidere liqueat tibi: nemo se avarum esse intellegit, nemo cupidum. Caeci tamen ducem quaerunt, nos sine duce erramus et dicimus, 'non ego ambitiosus sum, sed nemo aliter Romae potest vivere; non ego sumptuosus sum, sed urbs ipsa magnas impensas exigit; non est meum vitium quod iracundus sum, quod nondum constitui certum genus vitae: adulescentia haec facit'.

[4] Quid nos decipimus? non est extrinsecus malum nostrum: intra nos est, in visceribus ipsis sedet, et ideo difficulter ad sanitatem pervenimus quia nos aegrotare nescimus. Si curari coeperimus, quando tot morborum tantas vires discutiemus? Nunc vero ne quaerimus quidem medicum, qui minus negotii haberet si adhiberetur ad recens vitium; sequerentur teneri et rudes animi recta monstrantem. [5] Nemo difficulter ad naturam reducitur nisi qui ab illa defecit: erubescimus discere bonam mentem. At mehercules, <si> turpe est magistrum huius rei quaerere, illud desperandum est, posse nobis casu tantum bonum influere: laborandum est et, ut verum dicam, ne labor quidem magnus est, s modo, ut dixi, ante animum nostrum formare incipimus et recorrigere quam indurescat pravitas eius. [6] Sed nec indurata despero: nihil est quod non expugnet pertinax opera et intenta ac diligens cura. Robora m rectum quamvis flexa revocabis; curvatas trabes calor explicat et aliter natae in id finguntur quod usus noster exigit: quanto facilius animus accipit formam, flexibilis et omni umore obsequentior! Quid enim est aliud animus quam quodam modo se habens spiritus? vides autem tanto spiritum esse faciliorem omni alia materia quanto tenuior est. [7] Illud, mi Lucili, non est quod te impediat quominus de nobis bene speres, quod malitia nos iam tenet, quod diu in possessione nostri est: ad neminem ante bona mens venit quam mala; omnes praeoccupati sumus; virtutes discere vitia dediscere <est>. [8] Sed eo maiore animo ad emendationem nostri debemus accedere quod semel traditi nobis boni perpetua possessio est; non dediscitur virtus. Contraria enim male in alieno haerent, ideo depelli et exturbari possunt; fideliter sedent quae in locum suum veniunt. Virtus secundum naturam est, vitia inimica et infesta sunt. [9] Sed quemadmodum virtutes receptae exire non possunt facilisque earum tutela est, ita initium ad illas eundi arduum, quia hoc proprium imbecillae mentis atque aegrae est, formidare inexperta; itaque cogenda est ut incipiat. Deinde non est acerba medicina; protinus enim delectat, dum sanat. Aliorum remediorum post sanitatem voluptas est, philosophia pariter et salutaris et dulcis est. Vale.

LI. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[2] 'Quid ergo? ulli loco indicendum est odium?' Minime; sed quemadmodum aliqua vestis sapienti ac probo viro magis convenit quam aliqua, nec ullum colorem ille odit sed aliquem parum putat aptum esse frugalitatem professo, sic regio quoque est quam sapiens vir aut ad sapientiam tendens declinet tamquam alienam bonis moribus. [3] Itaque de secessu cogitans numquam Canopum eliget, quamvis neminem Canopus esse frugi vetet, ne Baias quidem: deversorium vitiorum esse coeperunt. Illic sibi plurimum luxuria permittit, illic, tamquam aliqua licentia debeatur loco, magis solvitur.

[5] Id agere debemus ut irritamenta vitiorum quam longissime profugiamus; indurandus est animus et a blandimentis voluptatum procul abstrahendus. Una Hannibalem hiberna solverunt et indomitum illum nivibus atque Alpibus virum enervaverunt fomenta Campaniae: armis vicit, vitiis victus est. [6] Nobis quoque militandum est, et quidem genere militiae quo numquam quies, numquam otium datur: debellandae sunt in primis voluptates, quae, ut vides, saeva quoque ad se ingenia rapuerunt. Si quis sibi proposuerit quantum operis aggressus sit, sciet nihil delicate, nihil molliter esse faciendum. Quid mihi cum istis calentibus stagnis? quid cum sudatoriis, in quae siccus vapor corpora exhausurus includitur? omnis sudor per laborem exeat. [7] Si faceremus quod fecit Hannibal, ut interrupto cursu rerum omissoque bello fovendis corporibus operam daremus, nemo non intempestivam desidiam, victori quoque, nedum vincenti, periculosam, merito reprehenderet: minus nobis quam illis Punica signa sequentibus licet, plus periculi restat cedentibus, plus operis etiam perseverantibus. [8] Fortuna mecum bellum gerit: non sum imperata facturus; iugum non recipio, immo, quod maiore virtute faciendum est, excutio. Non est emolliendus animus: si voluptati cessero, cedendum est dolori, cedendum est labori, cedendum est paupertati; idem sibi in me iuris esse volet et ambitio et ira; inter tot affectus distrahar, immo discerpar. [9] Libertas proposita est; ad hoc praemium laboratur. Quae sit libertas quaeris? Nulli rei servire, nulli necessitati, nullis casibus, fortunam in aequum deducere. Quo die illam intellexero plus posse, nil poterit: ego illam feram, cum in manu mors sit?

quae, oro te, Lucili, persequere sine modo, sine fine; nam illis quoque nec finis est nec modus. Proice quaecumque cor tuum laniant, quae si aliter extrahi nequirent, cor ipsum cum illis reveliendum erat. Voluptates praecipue exturba et invisissimas habe: latronum more, quos ‘philêtas’ Aegyptii vocant, in hoc nos amplectuntur, ut strangulent. Vale.

LII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Quid est hoc, Lucili, quod nos alio tendentes alio trahit et eo unde recedere cupimus impellit? quid colluctatur cum animo nostro nec permittit nobis quicquam semel velle? Fluctuamur inter varia consilia; nihil libere volumus, nihil absolute, nihil semper. [2] ‘Stultitia’ inquis ‘est cui nihil constat, nihil diu placet.’ Sed quomodo nos aut quando ab illa revellemus? Nemo per se satis valet ut emergat; oportet manum aliquis porrigat, aliquis educat. [3] Quosdam ait Epicurus ad veritatem sine ullius adiutorio exisse, fecisse sibi ipsos viam; hos maxime laudat quibus ex se impetus fuit, qui se ipsi protulerunt: quosdam indigere ope aliena, non ituros si nemo praecesserit, sed bene secuturos. Ex his Metrodorum ait esse; egregium hoc quoque, sed secundae sortis ingenium. Nos ex illa prima nota non sumus; bene nobiscum agitur, si in secundam recipimur. Ne hunc quidem contempseris hominem qui alieno beneficio esse salvus potest; et hoc multum est, velle servari. [4] Praeter haec adhuc invenies genus aliud hominum ne ipsum quidem fastidiendum eorum qui cogi ad rectum compellique possunt, quibus non duce tantum opus sit sed adiutore et, ut ita dicam, coactore; hic tertius color est. Si quaeris huius quoque exemplar, Hermarchum ait Epicurus talem fuisse. Itaque alteri magis gratulatur, alterum magis suspicit; quamvis enim ad eundem finem uterque pervenerit, tamen maior est laus idem effecisse in difficiliore materia. [5] Puta enim duo aedificia excitata esse, ambo paria, aequae excelsa atque magnifica. Alter puram aream accepit, illic protinus opus crevit; alterum fundamenta lassarunt in mollem et fluvidam humum missa multumque laboris exhaustum est dum pervenitur ad solidum: intuentibus quidquid fecit <alter> * * * alterius magna pars et difficilior latet. [6] Quaedam ingenia facilia, expedita, quaedam manu, quod aiunt, facienda sunt et in fundamentis suis occupata. Itaque illum ego feliciorem dixerim qui nihil negotii secum habuit, hunc quidem melius de se meruisse qui malignitatem naturae suae vicit et ad sapientiam se non perduxit sed extraxit.

[7] Hoc durum ac laboriosum ingenium nobis datum scias licet; imus per obstantia. Itaque pugnemus, aliquorum invocemus auxilium. ‘Quem’ inquis ‘invocabo? Hunc aut illum?’ Tu vero etiam ad priores revertere, qui vacant; adjuvare nos possunt non tantum qui sunt, sed qui fuerunt. [8] Ex his autem qui sunt eligamus non eos qui verba magna celeritate praecipitant et communes locos volvunt et in privato circulantur, sed eos qui vita docent, qui cum dixerunt quid faciendum sit probant faciendo, qui docent quid vitandum sit nec umquam in eo quod fugiendum dixerunt deprehenduntur; eum elige adiutorem quem magis admireris cum videris quam cum audieris. [9] Nec ideo te prohibuerim hos quoque audire quibus admittere populum ac disserere consuetudo est, si modo hoc proposito in turbam prodeunt, ut meliores fiant faciantque meliores, si non ambitionis hoc causa exercent. Quid enim turpius philosophia captante clamores? numquid aeger laudat medicum secantem? [10] Tacete, favete et praebete vos curationi; etiam si exclamaveritis, non aliter audiam quam si ad tactum vitiorum vestrorum ingemescatis. Testari vultis attendere vos moverique rerum magnitudine? sane liceat: ut quidem iudicetis et feratis de meliore suffragium, quidni non permittam? Apud Pythagoram discipulis quinque annis tacendum erat: numquid ergo existimas statim illis et loqui et laudare licuisse?

Permittendum erit aliquando iuvenibus sequi impetum animi, tunc autem cum hoc ex impetu facient, cum silentium sibi imperare non poterunt; talis laudatio aliquid exhortationis affert ipsis audientibus et animos adolescentium exstimulat. <At> ad rem commoveantur, non ad verba composita; alioquin nocet illis eloquentia, si non rerum cupiditatem facit sed sui.

[15] Differam hoc in praesentia; desiderat enim propriam et longam executionem, quemadmodum populo disserendum, quid sibi apud populum permittendum sit, quid populo apud se. Damnum quidem fecisse philosophiam non erit dubium postquam prostituta est; sed potest in penetralibus suis ostendi, si modo non institorem sed antistitem nancata est. Vale.

LIBER SEXTUS

LIII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Quid non potest mihi persuaderi, cui persuasum est ut navigarem? Solvi mari languido; erat sine dubio caelum grave sordidis nubibus, quae fere aut in aquam aut in ventum resolvuntur, sed putavi tam pauca milia a Parthenope tua usque Puteolos subripi posse, quamvis dubio et imminente caelo. Itaque quo celerius evaderem, protinus per altum ad Nesida derexi praecisurus omnes sinus. [2] Cum iam eo processissem ut mea nihil interesset utrum irem an redirem, primum aequalitas illa quae me corruerat periit; nondum erat tempestas, sed iam inclinatio maris ac subinde crebrior fluctus. Coepi gubernatorem rogare ut me in aliquo litore exponeret: aiebat ille aspera esse et importuosa nec quicquam se aequae in tempestate timere quam terram. [3] Peius autem vexabar quam ut mihi periculum succurreret; nausia enim me segnitis haec et sine exitu torquebat, quae bilem movet nec effundit. Institi itaque gubernatori et illum, vellet nollet, coegi, peteret litus. Cuius ut viciniam attigimus, non exspecto ut quicquam ex praeceptis Vergilii fiat, obvertunt pelago proras

memor artificii mei vetus frigidae cultor mitto me in mare, quomodo psychrolutam decet, gausapatus. [4] Quae putas me passum dum per aspera erepo, dum viam quaero, dum facio? Intellexi non immerito nautis terram timeri. Incredibilia sunt quae tulerim, cum me ferre non possem: illud scito, Ulixem non fuisse tam irato mari natum ut ubique naufragia faceret: nausiator erat. Et ego quocumque navigare debuero vicensimo anno perveniam.

exercitatione aliqua laborasse. Dubio et incipiente morbo quaeritur nomen, qui ubi ut talaria coepit intendere et utrosque distortos pedes fecit, necesse est podagram fateri.

[8] Quare vitia sua nemo confitetur? quia etiam nunc in illis est: somnium narrare vigilantis est, et vitia sua confiteri sanitatis indicium est. Expergiscamur ergo, ut errores nostros coarguere possimus. Sola autem nos philosophia excitabit, sola somnum excutiet gravem: illi te totum dedica. Dignus illa es, illa digna te est: ite in complexum alter alterius. Omnibus aliis rebus te nega, fortiter, aperte; non est quod precario philosopheris. [9] Si aeger esses, curam intermisisses rei familiaris et forensia tibi negotia excidissent nec quemquam tanti putares cui advocatus in remissione descenderes; toto animo id ageres ut quam primum morbo liberareris. Quid ergo? non et nunc idem facies? omnia impedimenta dimitte et vaca bonae menti: nemo ad illam pervenit occupatus. Exercet philosophia regnum suum; dat tempus, non accipit; non est res subsiciva; ordinaria est, domina est, adest et iubet. [10] Alexander cuidam civitati partem agrorum et dimidium rerum omnium promittenti 'eo' inquit 'proposito in Asiam veni, ut non id acciperem quod dedissetis, sed ut id haberetis quod reliquissetem'. Idem philosophia rebus omnibus: 'non sum hoc tempus acceptura quod vobis superfuert, sed id vos habebitis quod ipsa reiecerō'. [11] Totam huc converte mentem, huic asside, hanc cole: ingens intervallum inter te et ceteros fiet; omnes mortales multo antecedes, non multo te dii antecedent. Quaeris quid inter te et illos interfuturum sit? diutius erunt. At mehercules magni artificis est cluisse totum in exiguo; tantum sapienti sua quantum deo omnis aetas patet. Est aliquid quo sapiens antecedit deum: ille naturae beneficio non timet, suo sapiens. [12] Ecce res magna, habere imbecillitatem hominis, securitatem dei. Incredibilis philosophiae vis est ad omnem fortuitam vim retundendam. Nullum telum in corpore eius sedet; munita est, solida; quaedam defetigat et velut levia tela laxo sinu eludit, quaedam discutit et in eum usque qui miserat respuit. Vale.

LIV. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Longum mihi commeatum dederat mala valetudo; repente me invasit. ‘Quo genere?’ inquis. Prorsus merito interrogas: adeo nullum mihi ignotum est. Uni tamen morbo quasi assignatus sum, quem quare Graeco nomine appellem nescio; satis enim apte dici suspirium potest. Brevis autem valde et procellae similis est impetus; intra horam fere desinit: quis enim diu expirat? [2] Omnia corporis aut incommoda aut pericula per me transierunt: nullum mihi videtur molestius. Quidni? aliud enim quidquid est aegrotare est, hoc animam egerere. Itaque medici hanc ‘meditationem mortis’ vocant; facit enim aliquando spiritus ille quod saepe conatus est. Hilarem me putas haec tibi scribere quia effugi? [3] Tam ridicule facio, si hoc fine quasi bona valetudine delector, quam ille, quisquis vicisse se putat cum vadimonium distulit.

Ego vero et in ipsa suffocatione non desii cogitationibus laetis ac fortibus acquiescere. [4] ‘Quid hoc est?’ inquam ‘tam saepe mors experitur me? Faciat: [at] ego illam diu expertus sum.’ ‘Quando?’ inquis. Antequam nascerer. Mors est non esse. Id quale sit iam scio: hoc erit post me quod ante me fuit. Si quid in hac re tormenti est, necesse est et fuisse, antequam prodiremus in lucem; atqui nullam sensimus tunc vexationem. [5] Rogo, non stultissimum dicas si quis existimet lucernae peius esse cum exstincta est quam antequam accenditur? Nos quoque et exstinguimur et accendimur: medio illo tempore aliquid patimur, utrimque vero alta securitas est. In hoc enim, mi Lucili, nisi fallor, erramus, quod mortem iudicamus sequi, cum illa et praecesserit et secutura sit. Quidquid ante nos fuit mors est; quid enim refert non incipias an desinas, cum utriusque rei hic sit effectus, non esse?

de die toto. Illum tu lauda et imitare quem non piget mori, cum iuvet vivere: quae est enim virtus, cum eiciaris, exire? Tamen est et hic virtus: eicior quidem, sed tamquam exeam. Et ideo numquam eicitur sapiens quia eici est inde expelli unde invitatus recedas: nihil invitatus facit sapiens; necessitatem effugit, quia vult quod coactura est. Vale.

LV. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] A gestatione cum maxime venio, non minus fatigatus quam si tantum ambulassem quantum sedi; labor est enim et diu ferri, ac nescio an eo maior quia contra naturam est, quae pedes dedit ut per nos ambularemus, oculos ut per nos videremus. Debilitatem nobis indixere deliciae, et quod diu noluimus posse desimus. [2] Mihi tamen necessarium erat concutere corpus, ut, sive bilis insederat faucibus, discuteretur, sive ipse ex aliqua causa spiritus densior erat, extenuaret illum iactatio, quam profuisse mihi sensi. Ideo diutius vehi perseveravi invitante ipso litore, quod inter Cumas et Servili Vatae villam curvatur et hinc mari, illinc lacu velut angustum iter cluditur. Erat autem a recenti tempestate spissum; fluctus enim illud, ut scis, frequens et concitatus exaequat, longior tranquillitas solvit, cum harenis, quae umore alligantur, sucus abscessit.

[6] De ipsa villa nihil tibi possum certi scribere; frontem enim eius tantum novi et exposita, quae ostendit etiam transeuntibus. Speluncae sunt duae magni operis, cuivis laxo atrio pares, manu factae, quarum altera solem non recipit, altera usque in occidentem tenet. Platanona medius rivus et a mari et ab Acherusio lacu receptus euripi modo dividit, alendis piscibus, etiam si assidue exhauriatur, sufficiens. Sed illi, cum mare patet, parcuritur: cum tempestas piscatoribus dedit ferias, manus ad parata porrigitur. [7] Hoc tamen est commodissimum in villa, quod Baias trans parietem habet: incommodis illarum caret, voluptatibus fruitur. Has laudes eius ipse novi: esse illam totius anni credo; occurrit enim Favonio et illum adeo excipit ut Bais neget. Non stulte videtur elegisse hunc locum Vatia in quem otium suum pigrum iam et senile conferret.

[8] Sed non multum ad tranquillitatem locus confert: animus est qui sibi commendet omnia. Vidi ego in villa hilari et amoena maestos, vidi in media solitudine occupatis similes. Quare non est quod existimes ideo parum bene compositum esse te quod in Campania non es. Quare autem non es? huc usque cogitationes tuas mitte. [9] Conversari cum amicis absentibus licet, et quidem quotiens velis, quamdiu velis. Magis hac voluptate, quae maxima est, fruimur dum absumus; praesentia enim nos delicatos facit, et quia aliquando una loquimur, ambulamus, consedimus, cum diducti sumus nihil de iis quos modo vidimus cogitamus. [10] Et ideo aequo animo ferre debemus absentiam, quia nemo non multum etiam praesentibus abest. Pone hic primum noctes separatas, deinde occupationes utrique diversas, deinde studia secreta, suburbanas profectiones: videbis non multum esse quod nobis peregrinatio eripiat. [11] Amicus animo possidendus est; hic autem numquam abest; quemcumque vult cotidie videt. Itaque mecum stude, mecum cena, mecum ambula: in angusto vivebamus, si quicquam esset cogitationibus clusum. Video te, mi Lucili; cum maxime audio; adeo tecum sum ut dubitem an incipiam non epistulas sed codicillos tibi scribere. Vale.

LVI. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Peream si est tam necessarium quam videtur silentium in studia seposito. Ecce undique me varius clamor circumsonat: supra ipsum balneum habito. Propone nunc tibi omnia genera vocum quae in odium possunt aures adducere: cum fortiores exercentur et manus plumbo graves iactant, cum aut laborant aut laborantem imitantur, gemitus audio, quotiens retentum spiritum remiserunt, sibilos et acerbissimas respiraciones; cum in aliquem inertem et hac plebeia unctione contentum incidi, audio crepitum illisae manus umeris, quae prout plana pervenit aut concava, ita sonum mutat. Si vero pilicrepus supervenit et numerare coepit pilas, actum est. [2] Adice nunc scordalum et furem deprensus et illum cui vox sua in balineo placet, adice nunc eos qui in piscinam cum ingenti impulsae aquae sono saliunt. Praeter istos quorum, si nihil aliud, rectae voces sunt, alipilum cogita tenuem et stridulam vocem quo sit notabilior subinde exprimentem nec umquam tacentem nisi dum vellit alas et alium pro se clamare cogit; iam biberari varias exclamaciones et botularium et crustularium et omnes popinarum institores mercem sua quadam et insignita modulatione vendentis.

[3] ‘O te’ inquis ‘ferreum aut surdum, cui mens inter tot clamores tam varios, tam dissonos constat, cum Chrysippum nostrum assidua salutatio perducatur ad mortem.’ At mehercules ego istum fremitum non magis curo quam fluctum aut deiectum aquae, quamvis audiam cuidam genti hanc unam fuisse causam urbem suam transferendi, quod fragorem Nili cadentis ferre non potuit. [4] Magis mihi videtur vox avocare quam crepitus; illa enim animum adducit, hic tantum aures implet ac verberat. In his quae me sine avocatione circumstrepunt essedas transcurrentes pono et fabrum inquilinum et serrarium vicinum, aut hunc qui ad Metam Sudantem tubulas experitur et tibias, nec cantat sed exclamat: [5] etiam nunc molestior est mihi sonus qui intermittitur subinde quam qui continuatur. Sed iam me sic ad omnia ista duravi ut audire vel pausarium possim voce acerbissima remigibus modos dantem. Animum enim cogo sibi intentum esse nec avocari ad externa; omnia licet foris resonent, dum intus nihil tumultus sit, dum inter se non rixentur cupiditas et timor, dum avaritia luxuriaque non dissideant nec altera alteram vexet. Nam quid prodest totius regionis silentium, si affectus fremunt?

Falsum est: nulla placida est quies nisi quam ratio composuit; nox exhibet molestiam, non tollit, et sollicitudines muta. Nam dormientium quoque insomnia tam turbulenta sunt quam dies: illa tranquillitas vera est in quam bona mens explicatur. [7] Aspice illum cui somnus laxae domus silentio quaeritur, cuius aures ne quis agitet sonus, omnis servorum turba conticuit et suspensum accedentium propius vestigium ponitur: huc nempe versatur atque illuc, somnum inter aegritudines levem captans; quae non audit audisse se queritur.

[8] Quid in causa putas esse? Animus illi obstrepit. Hic placandus est, huius compescenda seditio est, quem non est quod existimes placidum, si iacet corpus: interdum quies inquieta est; et ideo ad rerum actus excitandi ac tractatione bonarum artium occupandi sumus, quotiens nos male habet inertia sui impatiens. [9] Magni imperatores, cum male parere militem vident, aliquo labore compescunt et expeditionibus detinent: numquam vacat lascivire districtis, nihilque tam certum est quam otii vitia negotio discuti. Saepe videmur taedio rerum civilium et infelicis atque ingratae stationis paenitentia secessisse; tamen in illa latebra in quam nos timor ac lassitudo coniecit interdum recrudescit ambitio. Non enim excisa desit, sed fatigata aut etiam obirata rebus parum sibi cedentibus. [10] Idem de luxuria dico, quae videtur aliquando cessisse, deinde frugalitatem professos sollicitat atque in media parsimonia voluptates non damnatas sed relictas petit, et quidem eo vehementius quo occultius. Omnia enim vitia in aperto leniora sunt; morbi quoque tunc ad sanitatem inclinant cum ex abdito erumpunt ac vim sui proferunt. Et avaritiam itaque et ambitionem et cetera mala mentis humanae tunc perniciosissima scias esse cum simulata sanitate subsidunt. [11] Otiosi videmur, et non sumus. Nam si bona fide sumus, si receptui cecinimus, si speciosa contempsimus, ut paulo ante dicebam, nulla res nos avocabit, nullus hominum aviumque concentus interrumpet cogitationes bonas, solidasque iam et certas. [12] Leve illud ingenium est nec sese adhuc reduxit introsus quod ad vocem et accidentia erigitur; habet intus aliquid sollicitudinis et habet aliquid concepti pavoris quod illum curiosum facit, ut ait

et me, quem dudum non ulla iniecta movebant tela neque adverso glomerati e agmine Grai, nunc omnes terrent aerae, sonus excitat omnis suspensum et pariter comitique onerique timentem.

[13] Prior ille sapiens est, quem non tela vibrantia, non arietata inter <se> arma agminis densi, non urbis impulsae fragor territat: hic alter imperitus est, rebus suis timet ad omnem crepitum expavescens, quem una quaelibet vox pro fremitu accepta deiecit, quem motus levissimi exanimant; timidum illum sarcinae faciunt. [14] Quemcumque ex istis felicibus elegeris, multa trahentibus, multa portantibus, videbis illum 'comitique onerique timentem'. Tunc ergo te scito esse compositum cum ad te nullus clamor pertinebit, cum te nulla vox tibi excutiet, non si blandietur, non si minabitur, non si inani sono vana circumstrepet. [15] 'Quid ergo? non aliquando commodius est et carere convicio?' Fateor; itaque ego ex hoc loco migrabo. Experiri et exercere me volui: quid necesse est diutius torqueri, cum tam facile remedium Ulixes sociis etiam adversus Sirenas invenerit Vale.

LVII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Cum a Bais deberem Neapolim repetere, facile credidi tempestatem esse, ne iterum navem experirer; et tantum luti tota via fuit ut possim videri nihilominus navigasse. Totum athletarum fatum mihi illo die perpetiendum fuit: a ceromate nos haphe excepit in crypta Neapolitana. [2] Nihil illo carcere longius, nihil illis facibus obscurius, quae nobis praestant non ut per tenebras videamus, sed ut ipsas. Ceterum etiam si locus haberet lucem, pulvis auferret, in aperto quoque res gravis et molesta: quid illic, ubi in se volutatur et, cum sine ullo spiramento sit inclusus, in ipsos a quibus excitatus est recidit? Duo incommoda inter se contraria simul pertulimus: eadem via, eodem die et luto et pulvere laboravimus.

[3] Aliquid tamen mihi illa obscuritas quod cogitare dedit: sensi quendam ictum animi et sine metu mutationem quam insolitae rei novitas simul ac foeditas fecerat. Non de me nunc tecum loquor, qui multum ab homine tolerabili, nedum a perfecto absum, sed de illo in quem fortuna ius perdidit: huius quoque ferietur animus, mutabitur color. [4] Quaedam enim, mi Lucili, nulla effugere virtus potest; admonet illam natura mortalitatis suae. Itaque et vultum adducet ad tristitia et inhorrescet ad subita et caligabit, si vastam altitudinem in crepidine eius constitutus despexerit: non est hoc timor, sed naturalis affectio inexpugnabilis rationi. [5] Itaque fortes quidam et paratissimi fundere suum sanguinem alienum videre non possunt; quidam ad vulneris novi, quidam ad veteris et purulenti tractationem inspectionemque succidunt ac linquntur animo; alii gladium facilius recipiunt quam vident. [6] Sensi ergo, ut dicebam, quandam non quidem perturbationem, sed mutationem: rursus ad primum conspectum redditae lucis alacritas rediit incogitata et iniussa. Illud deinde mecum loqui coepi, quam inepte quaedam magis aut minus timeremus, cum omnium idem finis esset. Quid enim interest utrum supra aliquem vigilarium ruat an mons? nihil invenies. Erunt tamen qui hanc ruinam magis timeant, quamvis utraque mortifera aequae sit; adeo non effectum, sed efficientiam timor spectat.

quia non fuerit illi exitus liber? Ego vero non facio: qui hoc dicunt videntur mihi errare. [8] Quemadmodum flamma non potest opprimi - nam circa id diffugit quo urgetur -, quemadmodum aer verberare atque ictu non laeditur, ne scinditur quidem, sed circa id cui cessit refunditur, sic animus, qui ex tenuissimo constat, deprehendi non potest nec intra corpus effligi, sed beneficio subtilitatis suae per ipsa quibus premitur erumpit. Quomodo fulmini, etiam cum latissime percussit ac fulsit, per exiguum foramen est reductus, sic animo, qui adhuc tenuior est igne, per omne corpus fuga est. [9] Itaque de illo quaerendum est, an possit immortalis esse. Hoc quidem certum habet: si superstes est corpori, opteri illum nullo genere posse, [propter quod non perit] quoniam nulla immortalitas cum exceptione est, nec quicquam noxium aeterno est. Vale.

LVIII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Quanta verborum nobis paupertas, immo egestas sit, numquam magis quam hodierno die intellexi. Mille res inciderunt, cum forte de Platone loqueremur, quae nomina desiderarent nec haberent, quaedam vero <quae> cum habuissent fastidio nostro perdidissent. Quis autem ferat in egestate fastidium? [2] Hunc quem Graeci ‘oestron’ vocant, pecora peragentem et totis saltibus dissipantem, ‘asilum’ nostri vocabant. Hoc Vergilio licet credas:

est lucum Silari iuxta ilicibusque virentem
plurimus Alburnum volitans, cui nomen asilo Romanum est, oestrum Grai vertere vocantes, asper, acerba sonans, quo tota exterrita silvis diffugiunt armenta.

[3] Puto intellegi istud verbum interisse. Ne te longe differam, quaedam simplicia in usu erant, sicut ‘cernere ferro inter se’ dicebant. Idem Vergilius hoc probabit tibi:

ingentis, genitos diversis partibus orbis, inter se coiisse viros et cernere ferro.

Quod nunc ‘decernere’ dicimus: simplicis illius verbi usus amissus est. [4] Dicebant antiqui ‘si iusso’, id est ‘iussero’. Hoc nolo mihi credas, sed eidem Vergilio:

cetera, qua iusso, mecum manus inferat arma.

[5] Non id ago nunc hac diligentia ut ostendam quantum tempus apud grammaticum perdiderim, sed ut ex hoc intellegas quantum apud Ennium et Accium verborum situs occupaverit, cum apud hunc quoque, qui cotidie excutitur, aliqua nobis subducta sint. [6] ‘Quid sibi’ inquis ‘ista praeparatio vult? quo spectat?’ Non celabo te: cupio, si fieri potest, propitiis auribus tuis ‘essentiam’ dicere; si minus, dicam et iratis. Ciceronem auctorem huius verbi habeo, puto locupletem; si recentiorem quaeris, Fabianum, disertum et elegantem, orationis etiam ad nostrum fastidium nitidae. Quid enim fiet, mi Lucili? quomodo dicetur 'ousia', res necessaria, natura continens fundamentum omnium? Rogo itaque permittas mihi hoc verbo uti. Nihilominus dabo operam ut ius a te datum parcissime exerceam; fortasse contentus ero mihi licere. [7] Quid proderit facilitas tua, cum ecce id nullo modo Latine exprimere possim propter quod linguae nostrae convicium feci? Magis damnabis angustias Romanas, si scieris unam syllabam esse quam mutare non possum. Quae sit haec quaeris? 'to on'. Duri tibi videor ingenii: in medio positum, posse sic transferri ut dicam 'quod est'. Sed multum interesse video: cogor verbum pro vocabulo ponere; sed si ita necesse est, ponam 'quod est'.

[8] Sex modis hoc a Platone dici amicus noster, homo eruditissimus, hodierno die dicebat. Omnes tibi exponam, si ante indicavero esse aliquid genus, esse et speciem. Nunc autem primum illud genus quaerimus ex quo ceterae species suspensae sunt, a quo nascitur omnis divisio, quo universa comprehensa sunt. Invenietur autem si coeperimus singula retro legere; sic enim perducemur ad primum. [9] Homo species est, ut Aristoteles ait; equus species est; canis species est. Ergo commune aliquod quaerendum est his omnibus vinculum, quod illa complectatur et sub se habeat. Hoc quid est? animal. Ergo genus esse coepit horum omnium quae modo rettuli - hominis, equi, canis - animal. [10] Sed quaedam [quae] animum habent nec sunt animalia; placet enim satis et arbustis animam inesse; itaque et vivere illa et mori dicimus. Ergo animantia superiorem tenebunt locum, quia et animalia in hac forma sunt et sata. Sed quaedam anima carent, ut saxa; itaque erit aliquid animantibus antiquius, corpus scilicet. Hoc sic dividam ut dicam corpora omnia aut animantia esse aut inanima. [11] Etiam nunc est aliquid superius quam corpus; dicimus enim quaedam corporalia esse, quaedam incorporalia. Quid ergo erit ex quo haec deducantur? illud cui nomen modo parum proprium imposuimus, 'quod est'. Sic enim in species secabitur ut dicamus: 'quod est' aut corporale est aut incorporale. [12] Hoc ergo est genus primum et antiquissimum et, ut ita dicam, generale; cetera genera quidem sunt, sed specialia. Tamquam homo genus est; habet enim in se nationum species, Graecos, Romanos, Parthos; colorum, albos, nigros, flavos; habet singulos, Catonem, Ciceronem, Lucretium. Ita qua multa continet, in genus cadit; qua sub alio est, in speciem. Illud genus 'quod est' generale supra se nihil habet; initium rerum est; omnia sub illo sunt. [13] Stoici volunt superponere huic etiam nunc aliud genus magis principale; de quo statim dicam, si prius illud genus de quo locutus sum merito primum poni docuero, cum sit rerum omnium capax. [14] 'Quod est' in has species divido, ut sint corporalia aut incorporalia; nihil tertium est. Corpus quomodo divido? ut dicam: aut animantia sunt aut inanima. Rursus animantia quemadmodum divido? ut dicam: quaedam animum habent, quaedam tantum animam, at sic: quaedam impetum habent, incedunt, transeunt, quaedam solo affixa radicibus aluntur, crescunt. Rursus animalia in quas species seco? aut mortalia sunt aut immortalia. [15] Primum genus Stoicis quibusdam videtur 'quid'; quare videatur subiciam. 'In rerum' inquiunt 'natura quaedam sunt, quaedam non sunt, et haec autem quae non sunt rerum natura complectitur, quae animo succurrunt, tamquam Centauri, Gigantes et quidquid aliud falsa cogitatione formatum habere aliquam imaginem coepit, quamvis non habeat substantiam.'

[16] Nunc ad id quod tibi promisi revertor, quomodo quaecumque sunt in sex modos Plato partiatur. Primum illud 'quod est' nec visu nec tactu nec ullo sensu comprehenditur: cogitabile est. Quod generaliter est, tamquam homo generalis, sub oculos non venit; sed specialis venit, ut Cicero et Cato. Animal non videtur: cogitatur. Videtur autem species eius, equus et canis. [17] Secundum ex his quae sunt ponit Plato quod eminet et exsuperat omnia; hoc ait per excellentiam esse. Poeta communiter dicitur - omnibus enim versus facientibus hoc nomen est - sed iam apud Graecos in unius notam cessit: Homerum intellegas, cum audieris poetam. Quid ergo hoc est? deus scilicet, maior ac potentior cunctis. [18] Tertium genus est eorum quae proprie sunt; innumerabilia haec sunt, sed extra nostrum posita conspectum. Quae sint interrogas? Propria Platonis supellex est: 'ideas' vocat, ex quibus omnia quaecumque videmus fiunt et ad quas cuncta formantur. Hae immortales, immutabiles, inviolabiles sunt. [19] Quid sit idea, id est quid Platoni esse videatur, audi: 'idea est eorum quae natura fiunt exemplar aeternum'. Adiciam definitioni interpretationem, quo tibi res apertior fiat. Volo imaginem tuam facere. Exemplar picturae te habeo, ex quo capit aliquem habitum mens nostra quem operi suo imponat; ita illa quae me docet et instruit facies, a qua petitur imitatio, idea est. Talia ergo exemplaria infinita habet rerum natura, hominum, piscium, arborum, ad quae quodcumque fieri ab illa debet exprimitur. [20] Quartum locum habebit idos. Quid sit hoc idos attendas oportet, et Platoni imputes, non mihi, hanc rerum difficultatem; nulla est autem sine difficultate subtilitas. Paulo ante pictoris imagine utebar. Ille cum reddere Vergilium coloribus vellet, ipsum intuebatur. Idea erat Vergilii facies, futuri operis exemplar; ex hac quod artifex trahit et operi suo imposuit idos est. Quid intersit quaeris? Alterum exemplar est, alterum forma ab exemplari sumpta et operi imposita; alteram artifex imitatur, alteram facit. Habet aliquam faciem statua: haec est idos. Habet aliquam faciem exemplar ipsum quod intuens opifex statuam figuravit: haec idea est. Etiam nunc si aliam desideras distinctionem, idos in opere est, idea extra opus, nec tantum extra opus est, sed ante opus. [22] Quintum genus est eorum quae communiter sunt; haec incipiunt ad nos pertinere; hic sunt omnia, homines, pecora, res. Sextum genus <est> eorum quae quasi sunt, tamquam inane, tamquam tempus.

Quaecumque videmus aut tangimus Plato in illis non numerat quae esse proprie putat; fluunt enim et in assidua deminutione atque adiectione sunt. Nemo nostrum idem est in senectute qui fuit iuvenis; nemo nostrum est idem mane qui fuit pridie. Corpora nostra rapiuntur fluminum more. Quidquid vides currit cum tempore; nihil ex iis quae videmus manet; ego ipse, dum loquor mutari ista, mutatus sum. [23] Hoc est quod ait Heraclitus: 'in idem flumen bis descendimus et non descendimus'. Manet enim idem fluminis nomen, aqua transmissa est. Hoc in amne manifestius est quam in homine; sed nos quoque non minus velox cursus praetervehit, et ideo admiror dementiam nostram, quod tantopere amamus rem fugacissimam, corpus, timemusque ne quando moriamur, cum omne momentum mors prioris habitus sit: vis tu non timere ne semel fiat quod cotidie fit! [24] De homine dixi, fluvida materia et caduca et omnibus obnoxia causis: mundus quoque, aeterna res et invicta, mutatur nec idem manet. Quamvis enim omnia in se habeat quae habuit, aliter habet quam habuit: ordinem mutat.

remittit atque avocat et, ut dici solet, pascit, sic nos animum aliquando debemus relaxare et quibusdam oblectamentis reficere. Sed ipsa oblectamenta opera sint; ex his quoque, si observaveris, sumes quod possit fieri salutare. [26] Hoc ego, Lucili, facere soleo: ex omni notione, etiam si a philosophia longissime aversa est, eruere aliquid conor et utile efficere. Quid istis quae modo tractavimus remotius a reformatione morum? quomodo meliorem me facere ideae Platonicae possunt? quid ex istis traham quod cupiditates meas comprimat? Vel hoc ipsum, quod omnia ista quae sensibus serviunt, quae nos accendunt et irritant, negat Plato ex iis esse quae vere sint. [27] Ergo ista imaginaria sunt et ad tempus aliquam faciem ferunt, nihil horum stabile nec solidum est; et nos tamen cupimus tamquam aut semper futura aut semper habituri. Imbecilli fluvidique inter vana constitimus: ad illa mittamus animum quae aeterna sunt. Miremur in sublimi volitantes rerum omnium formas deumque inter illa versantem et hoc providentem, quemadmodum quae immortalia facere non potuit, quia materia prohibebat, defendat a morte ac ratione vitium corporis vincat. [28] Manent enim cuncta, non quia aeterna sunt, sed quia defenduntur cura regentis: immortalia tutore non egerent. Haec conservat artifex fragilitatem materiae vi sua vincens. Contemnamus omnia quae adeo pretiosa non sunt ut an sint omnino dubium sit. [29] Illud simul cogitemus, si mundum ipsum, non minus mortalem quam nos sumus, providentia periculis eximit, posse aliquatenus nostra quoque providentia longiorem prorogari huic corpusculo moram, si voluptates, quibus pars maior perit, potuerimus regere et coercere. [30] Plato ipse ad senectutem se diligentia protulit. Erat quidem corpus validum ac forte sortitus et illi nomen latitudo pectoris fecerat, sed navigationes ac pericula multum detraxerant viribus; parsimonia tamen et eorum quae aviditatem evocant modus et diligens sui tutela perduxit illum ad senectutem multis prohibentibus causis. [31] Nam hoc scis, puto, Platoni diligentiae suae beneficio contigisse quod natali suo decessit et annum unum atque octogensimum implevit sine ulla deductione. Ideo magi, qui forte Athenis erant, immolaverunt defuncto, amplioris fuisse sortis quam humanae rati, quia consummasset perfectissimum numerum, quem novem novies multiplicata componunt. Non dubito quin paratus sis et paucos dies ex ista summa et sacrificium remittere. [32] Potest frugalitas producere senectutem, quam ut non puto concupiscendam, ita ne recusandam quidem; iucundum est secum esse quam diutissime, cum quis se dignum quo frueretur effecit.

Itaque de isto feremus sententiam, an oporteat fastidire senectutis extrema et finem non opperiri sed manu facere. Prope est a timente qui fatum segnīs exspectat, sicut ille ultra modum deditus vino est qui amphoram exsiccat et faecem quoque exsorbet. [33] De hoc tamen quaeremus, pars summa vitae utrum faex sit an liquidissimum ac purissimum quiddam, si modo mens sine iniuria est et integri sensus animum iuvant nec defectum et praemortuum corpus est; plurimum enim refert, vitam aliquis extendat an mortem. [34] At si inutile ministeriis corpus est, quidni oporteat educere animum laborantem? et fortasse paulo ante quam debet faciendum est, ne cum fieri debebit facere non possis; et cum maius periculum sit male vivendi quam cito moriendi, stultus est qui non exigua temporis mercede magnae rei aleam redimit. Paucos longissima senectus ad mortem sine iniuria pertulit, multis iners vita sine usu sui iacuit: quanto deinde crudelius iudicas aliquid ex vita perdidisse quam ius finiendae? [35] Noli me invitus audire, tamquam ad te iam pertineat ista sententia, et quid dicam aestima: non relinquam senectutem, si me totum mihi reservabit, totum autem ab illa parte meliore; at si coeperit concutere mentem, si partes eius convellere, si mihi non vitam reliquerit sed animam, prosiliam ex aedificio putri ac ruenti. [36] Morbum morte non fugiam, dumtaxat sanabilem nec officientem animo. Non afferam mihi manus propter dolorem: sic mori vinci est. Hunc tamen si sciero perpetuo mihi esse patiendum, exhibo, non propter ipsum, sed quia impedimento mihi futurus est ad omne propter quod vivitur; imbecillus est et ignavus qui propter dolorem moritur, stultus qui doloris causa vivit.

[37] Sed in longum exeo; est praeterea materia quae ducere diem possit: et quomodo finem imponere vitae poterit qui epistulae non potest? Vale ergo: quod libentius quam mortes meras lecturus es. Vale.

LIX. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

diserte quidem dicit, sed parum proprie; nullum enim malum gaudium est. Voluptatibus hoc nomen imposuit et quod voluit expressit; significavit enim homines malo suo laetos. [4] Tamen ego non immerito dixeram cepisse me magnam ex epistula tua voluptatem; quamvis enim ex honesta causa imperitus homo gaudeat, tamen affectum eius impotentem et in diversum statim inclinaturum voluptatem voco, opinione falsi boni motam, immoderatam et immodicam.

Sed ut ad propositum revertar, audi quid me in epistula tua delectaverit: habes verba in potestate, non effert te oratio nec longius quam destinasti trahit. [5] Multi sunt qui ad id quod non proposuerant scribere alicuius verbi placentis decore vocentur, quod tibi non evenit: pressa sunt omnia et rei aptata; loqueris quantum vis et plus significas quam loqueris. Hoc maioris rei indicium est: apparet animum quoque nihil habere supervacui, nihil tumidi. [6] Invenio tamen translationes verborum ut non temerarias ita quae periculum sui fecerint; invenio imagines, quibus si quis nos uti vetat et poetis illas solis iudicat esse concessas, neminem mihi videtur ex antiquis legisse, apud quos nondum captabatur plausibilis oratio: illi, qui simpliciter et demonstrandae rei causa eloquebantur, parabolis referti sunt, quas existimo necessarias, non ex eadem causa qua poetis, sed ut imbecillitas nostrae adminicula sint, ut et dicentem et audientem in rem praesentem adducant.

Ne ab alia imagine ad aliam transeamus, hoc quaeram quod saepe mecum dispicio, quid ita nos stultitia tam pertinaciter teneat? Primo quia non fortiter illam repellimus nec toto ad salutem impetu nitimur, deinde quia illa quae a sapientibus viris reperta sunt non satis credimus nec apertis pectoribus haurimus leviterque tam magnae rei insistimus. [10] Quemadmodum autem potest aliquis quantum satis sit adversus vitia discere, qui quantum a vitiis vacat discit? Nemo nostrum in altum descendit; summa tantum decerpsimus et exiguum temporis inpendisse philosophiae satis abundeque occupatis fuit. [11] Illud praecipue inpedit, quod cito nobis placemus; si invenimus qui nos bonos viros dicat, qui prudentes, qui sanctos, adgnosimus. Non sumus modica laudatione contenti: quidquid in nos adlatio sine pudore congestit tamquam debitum prendimus. Optimos nos esse, sapientissimos adfirmantibus adsentimur, cum sciamus illos saepe multa mentiri; adeoque indulgemus nobis ut laudari velimus in id cui contraria cum maxime facimus. Mitissimum ille se in ipsis suppliciis audit, in rapinis liberalissimum et in ebrietatibus ac libidinibus temperantissimum; sequitur itaque ut ideo mutari nolimus quia nos optimos esse credidimus. [12] Alexander cum iam in India vagaretur et gentes ne finitimis quidem satis notas bello vastaret, in obsidione cuiusdam urbis, <dum> circumit muros et inbecillissima moenium quaerit, sagitta ictus diu persedere et incepta agere perseveravit. Deinde cum represso sanguine sicci vulneris dolor cresceret et crus suspensum equo paulatim obtorpuisset, coactus absistere ‘omnes’ inquit ‘iurant esse me Iovis filium, sed vulnus hoc hominem esse me clamat’. [13] Idem nos faciamus. Pro sua quemque portione adulatio infatuat: dicamus, ‘vos quidem dicitis me prudentem esse, ego autem video quam multa inutilia concupiscam, nocitura optem. Ne hoc quidem intellego quod animalibus satietas monstrat, quis cibo debeat esse, quis potioni modus; quantum capiam adhuc nescio.’

[14] Iam docebo quemadmodum intellegas te non esse sapientem. Sapiens ille plenus est gaudio, hilaris et placidus, inconcussus; cum dis ex pari vivit. Nunc ipse te consule: si numquam maestus es, <si> nulla spes animum tuum futuri expectatione sollicitat, si per dies noctesque par et aequalis animi tenor erecti et placentis sibi est, pervenisti ad humani boni summam; sed si appetis voluptates et undique et omnes, scito tantum tibi ex sapientia quantum ex gaudio deesse. Ad hoc cupis pervenire, sed erras, qui inter divitias illuc venturum esse te speras, inter honores, id est gaudium inter sollicitudines quaeris: ista, quae sic petis tamquam datura laetitiam ac voluptatem, causae dolorum sunt. [15] Omnes, inquam, illo tendunt ad gaudium, sed unde stabile magnumque consequantur ignorant: ille ex conviviis et luxuria, ille ex ambitione et circumfusa clientium turba, ille ex amica, alius ex studiorum liberalium vana ostentatione et nihil sanantibus litteris - omnes istos oblectamenta fallacia et brevia decipiunt, sicut ebrietas, quae unius horae hilarem insaniam longi temporis taedio pensat, sicut plausus et acclamationis secundae favor, qui magna sollicitudine et partus est et expiandus. [16] Hoc ergo cogita, hunc esse sapientiae effectum, gaudii aequalitatem. Talis est sapientis animus qualis mundus super lunam: semper illic serenum est. Habes ergo et quare velis sapiens esse, si numquam sine gaudio

est. Gaudium hoc non nascitur nisi ex virtutum conscientia: non potest gaudere nisi fortis, nisi iustus, nisi temperans. [17] ‘Quid ergo’ inquis, ‘stulti ac mali non gaudent?’ Non magis quam praedam nacti leones: cum fatigaverunt se vino ac libidinibus, cum illos nox inter vitia defecit, cum voluptates angusto corpori ultra quam capiebat ingestae suppurare coeperunt, tunc exclamant miseri Vergilianum illum versum:

namque ut supremam falsa inter gaudia noctem
egerimus nosti.

[18] Omnem luxuriosi noctem inter falsa gaudia et quidem tamquam supremam agunt: illud gaudium quod deos deorumque aemulos sequitur non interrumpitur, non desinit; desineret, si sumptum esset aliunde. Quia non est alieni muneris, ne arbitrii quidem alieni est: quod non dedit fortuna non eripit. Vale.

LX. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Queror, litigo, irascor. Etiam nunc optas quod tibi optavit nutrix tua aut paedagogus aut mater? nondum intellegis quantum mali optaverint? O quam inimica nobis sunt vota nostrorum! eo quidem inimiciora quo cessere felicius. Iam non admiror si omnia nos a prima pueritia mala sequuntur: inter execrationes parentum crevimus. Exaudiant di quandoque nostram pro nobis vocem gratuitam. [2] Quousque poscemus aliquid deos? [quasi] ita nondum ipsi alere nos possumus? Quamdiu sationibus implebimus magnarum urbium campos? quamdiu nobis populus metet? quamdiu unius mensae instrumentum multa navigia et quidem non ex uno mari subvehent? Taurus paucissimorum iugerum pascuo impletur; una silva elephantis pluribus sufficit: homo et terra et mari pascitur. [3] Quid ergo? tam insatiabilem nobis natura alvum dedit, cum tam modica corpora dedisset, ut vastissimorum edacissimorumque animalium aviditatem vinceremus? Minime; quantulum est enim quod naturae datur! Parvo illa dimittitur: non fames nobis ventris nostri magno constat sed ambitio. [4] Hos itaque, ut ait Sallustius, ‘ventri oboedientes’ animalium loco numeremus, non hominum, quosdam vero ne animalium quidem, sed mortuorum. Vivit is qui multis usui est, vivit is qui se utitur; qui vero latitant et torpent sic in domo sunt quomodo in conditivo. Horum licet in limine ipso nomen marmori inscribas: mortem suam antecesserunt. Vale.

LXI. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[2] Hoc animo tibi hanc epistulam scribo, tamquam me cum maxime scribentem mors evocatura sit; paratus exire sum, et ideo fruar vita quia quam diu futurum hoc sit non nimis pendeo. Ante senectutem curavi ut bene viverem, in senectute ut bene moriar; bene autem mori est libenter mori. [3] Da operam ne quid umquam invitus facias; quidquid necesse futurum est repugnanti, id volenti necessitas non est. Ita dico: qui imperia libens excipit partem acerbissimam servitutis effugit, facere quod nolit; non qui iussus aliquid facit miser est, sed qui invitus facit. Itaque sic animum componamus ut quidquid res exiget, id velimus, et in primis ut finem nostri sine tristitia cogitemus. [4] Ante ad mortem quam ad vitam praeparandi sumus. Satis instructa vita est, sed nos in instrumenta eius avidi sumus; deesse aliquid nobis videtur et semper videbitur: ut satis vixerimus, nec anni nec dies faciunt sed animus. Vixi, Lucili carissime, quantum satis erat; mortem plenus exspecto. Vale.

LXII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Mentiuntur qui sibi obstare ad studia liberalia turbam negotiorum videri volunt: simulant occupationes et augent et ipsi se occupant. Vaco, Lucili, vaco, et ubicumque sum, ibi meus sum. Rebus enim me non trado sed commodo, nec consector perdendi temporis causas; et quocumque constitui loco, ibi cogitationes meas tracto et aliquid in animo salutare converso. [2] Cum me amicis dedi, non tamen mihi abduco nec cum illis moror quibus me tempus aliquod congregavit aut causa ex officio nata civili, sed cum optimo quoque sum; ad illos, in quocumque loco, in quocumque saeculo fuerunt, animum meum mitto. [3] Demetrium, virorum optimum, mecum circumfero et relictis conchyliatis cum illo seminudo loquor, illum admiror. Quidni admirer? vidi nihil ei deesse. Contemnere aliquis omnia potest, omnia habere nemo potest: brevissima ad divitias per contemptum divitiarum via est. Demetrius autem noster sic vivit, non tamquam contempserit omnia, sed tamquam aliis habenda permiserit. Vale.

LIBER SEPTIMUS

LXIII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Molestē fero decessisse Flaccum, amicum tuum, plus tamen aequo dolere te nolo. Illud, ut non doleas, vix audebo exigere; et esse melius scio. Sed cui ista firmitas animi continget nisi iam multum supra fortunam elato? illum quoque ista res vellicabit, sed tantum vellicabit. Nobis autem ignosci potest prolapsis ad lacrimas, si non nimiae decucurrerunt, si ipsi illas repressimus. Nec sicci sint oculi amisso amico nec fluant; lacrimandum est, non plorandum. [2] Duram tibi legem videor ponere, cum poetarum Graecorum maximus ius flendi dederit in unum dumtaxat diem, cum dixerit etiam Niobam de cibo cogitasse? Quaeris unde sint lamentationes, unde immodici fletus? per lacrimas argumenta desiderii quaerimus et dolorem non sequimur sed ostendimus; nemo tristis sibi est. O infelicem stultitiam! est aliqua et doloris ambitio. [3] ‘Quid ergo?’ inquis ‘obliviscar amici?’ Brevem illi apud te memoriam promittis, si cum dolore mansura est: iam istam frontem ad risum quaelibet fortuita res transferet. Non differo in longius tempus quo desiderium omne mulcetur, quo etiam acerrimi luctus residunt: cum primum te observare desieris, imago ista tristitiae discedet. Nunc ipse custodis dolorem tuum; sed custodienti quoque elabitur, eoque citius quo est acrior desinit. [4] Id agamus ut iucunda nobis amissorum fiat recordatio. Nemo libenter ad id redit quod non sine tormento cogitaturus est, sicut illud fieri necesse est, ut cum aliquo nobis morsu amissorum quos amavimus nomen occurrat; sed hic quoque morsus habet suam voluptatem. [5] Nam, ut dicere solebat Attalus noster, ‘sic amicorum defunctorum memoria iucunda est quomodo poma quaedam sunt suaviter aspera, quomodo in vino nimis veteri ipsa nos amaritudo delectat; cum vero intervenit spatium, omne quod angebat exstinguitur et pura ad nos voluptas venit’. [6] Si illi credimus, ‘amicos incolumes cogitare melle ac placenta frui est: eorum qui fuerunt retractatio non sine acerbitate quadam iuvat. Quis autem negaverit haec acria quoque et habentia austeritatis aliquid stomachum excitare?’ [7] Ego non idem sentio: mihi amicorum defunctorum cogitatio dulcis ac blanda est; habui enim illos tamquam amissurus, amisi tamquam habeam.

Fac ergo, mi Lucili, quod aequitatem tuam decet, desine beneficium fortunae male interpretari: abstulit, sed dedit. [8] Ideo amicis avide fruamur quia quamdiu contingere hoc possit incertum est. Cogitemus quam saepe illos reliquerimus in aliquam peregrinationem longinquam exituri, quam saepe eodem morantes loco non viderimus: intellegemus plus nos temporis in vivis perdidisse. [9] Feras autem hos qui negligentissime amicos habent, miserrime lugent, nec amant quemquam nisi perdiderunt? ideoque tunc effusius maerent quia verentur ne dubium sit an amaverint; sera indicia affectus sui quaerunt. [10] Si habemus alios amicos, male de iis et meremur et existimamus, qui parum valent in unius elati solacium; si non habemus, maiorem iniuriam ipsi nobis fecimus quam a fortuna accepimus: illa unum abstulit, nos quemcumque non fecimus. [11] Deinde ne unum quidem nimis amavit qui plus quam unum amare non potuit. Si quis despoliatus amissa unica tunica complorare se malit quam circumspicere quomodo frigus effugiat et aliquid inveniat quo tegat scapulas, nonne tibi videatur stultissimus? Quem amabas extulisti: quaere quem ames. Satius est amicum reparare quam flere.

[15] Itaque assidue cogitemus de nostra quam omnium quos diligimus mortalitate. Tunc ego debui dicere, 'minor est Serenus meus: quid ad rem pertinet? post me mori debet, sed ante me potest'. Quia non feci, imparatum subito fortuna percussit. Nunc cogito omnia et mortalia esse et incerta lege mortalia; hodie fieri potest quidquid umquam potest. [16] Cogitemus ergo, Lucili carissime, cito nos eo perventuros quo illum pervenisse maeremus; et fortasse, si modo vera sapientium fama est recipitque nos locus aliquis, quem putamus perisse praemissus est. Vale.

LXIV. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Fuisti here nobiscum. Potes queri, si here tantum; ideo adieci ‘nobiscum’; mecum enim semper es. Intervenerant quidam amici propter quos maior fumus fieret, non hic qui erumpere ex lautorum culinis et terrere vigiles solet, sed hic modicus qui hospites venisse significet. [2] Varius nobis fuit sermo, ut in convivio, nullam rem usque ad exitum adducens sed aliunde alio transiliens. Lectus est deinde liber Quinti Sextii patris, magni, si quid mihi credis, viri, et licet neget Stoici. [3] Quantus in illo, di boni, vigor est, quantum animi! Hoc non in omnibus philosophis invenies: quorundam scripta clarum habentium nomen exanguia sunt. Instituunt, disputant, cavillantur, non faciunt animum quia non habent: cum legeris Sextium, dices, ‘vivit, viget, liber es, supra hominem est, dimittit me plenum ingentis fiduciae’. [4] In qua positione mentis sim cum hunc lego fatebor tibi: libet omnis casus provocare, libet exclamare, ‘quid cessas, fortuna? congregere: paratum vides’. Illius animum induo qui quaerit ubi se experiatur, ubi virtutem suam ostendat, spumantemque dari pecora inter inertia votis

optat aprum aut fulvum descendere monte leonem.

[5] Libet aliquid habere quod vincam, cuius patientia exercear. Nam hoc quoque egregium Sextius habet, quod et ostendet tibi beatae vitae magnitudinem et desperationem eius non faciet: scies esse illam in excelso, sed volenti penetrabilem. [6] Hoc idem virtus tibi ipsa praestabit, ut illam admireris et tamen speres. Mihi certe multum auferre temporis solet contemplatio ipsa sapientiae; non aliter illam intueor obstupefactus quam ipsum interim mundum, quem saepe tamquam spectator novus video. [7] Veneror itaque inventa sapientiae inventoresque; adire tamquam multorum hereditatem iuvat. Mihi ista acquisita, mihi laborata sunt. Sed agamus bonum patrem familiae, faciamus ampliora quae accepimus; maior ista hereditas a me ad posteros transeat. Multum adhuc restat operis multumque restabit, nec ulli nato post mille saecula praecludetur occasio aliquid adhuc adiciendi. [8] Sed etiam si omnia a veteribus inventa sunt, hoc semper novum erit, usus et inventorum ab aliis scientia ac dispositio. Puta relicta nobis medicamenta quibus sanarentur oculi: non opus est mihi alia quaerere, sed haec tamen morbis et temporibus aptanda sunt. Hoc asperitas oculorum collevatur; hoc palpebrarum crassitudo tenuatur; hoc vis subita et umor avertitur; hoc acuetur visus: teras ista oportet et eligas tempus, adhibeas singulis modum. Animi remedia inventa sunt ab antiquis; quomodo autem admoveantur aut quando nostri operis est quaerere.

[9] Multum egerunt qui ante nos fuerunt, sed non peregerunt. Suspiciendi tamen sunt et ritu deorum colendi. Quidni ego magnorum virorum et imagines habeam incitamenta animi et natales celebrem? quidni ego illos honoris causa semper appellem? Quam venerationem praeceptoribus meis debeo, eandem illis praeceptoribus generis humani, a quibus tanti boni initia fluxerunt. [10] Si consulem videro aut praetorem, omnia quibus honor haberi honori solet faciam: equo desiliam, caput adaperiam, semita cedam. Quid ergo? Marcum Catonem utrumque et Laelium Sapientem et Socraten cum Platone et Zenonem Cleanthenque in animum meum sine dignatione summa recipiam? Ego vero illos veneror et tantis nominibus semper assurgo. Vale.

LXV. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Hesternum diem divisi cum mala valetudine: antemeridianum illa sibi vindicavit, postmeridiano mihi cessit. Itaque lectione primum temptavi animum; deinde, cum hanc recepisset, plus illi imperare ausus sum, immo permittere: aliquid scripsi et quidem intentius quam soleo, dum cum materia difficili contendo et vinci nolo, donec intervenerunt amici qui mihi vim afferrent et tamquam aegrum intemperantem coercerent. [2] In locum stili sermo successit, ex quo eam partem ad te perferam quae in lite est. Te arbitrum addiximus. Plus negotii habes quam existimas: triplex causa est.

Dicunt, ut scis, Stoici nostri duo esse in rerum natura ex quibus omnia fiant, causam et materiam. Materia iacet iners, res ad omnia parata, cessatura si nemo moveat; causa autem, id est ratio, materiam format et quocumque vult versat, ex illa varia opera producit. Esse ergo debet unde fiat aliquid, deinde a quo fiat: hoc causa est, illud materia. [3] Omnis ars naturae imitatio est; itaque quod de universo dicebam ad haec transfer quae ab homine facienda sunt. Statua et materiam habuit quae pateretur artificem, et artificem qui materiae daret faciem; ergo in statua materia aes fuit, causa opifex. Eadem condicio rerum omnium est: ex eo constant quod fit, et ex eo quod facit.

[4] Stoicis placet unam causam esse, id quod facit. Aristoteles putat causam tribus modis dici: ‘prima’ inquit ‘causa est ipsa materia, sine qua nihil potest effici; secunda opifex; tertia est forma, quae unicuique operi imponitur tamquam statuae’. Nam hanc Aristoteles ‘idos’ vocat. ‘Quarta quoque’ inquit ‘his accedit, propositum totius operis.’ [5] Quid sit hoc aperiam. Aes prima statuae causa est; numquam enim facta esset, nisi fuisset id ex quo funderetur ducereturve. Secunda causa artifex est; non potuisset enim aes illud in habitum statuae figurari, nisi accessissent peritae manus. Tertia causa est forma; neque enim statua ista ‘doryphoros’ aut ‘diadumenos’ vocaretur, nisi haec illi esset impressa facies. Quarta causa est faciendi propositum; nam nisi hoc fuisset, facta non esset. [6] Quid est propositum? quod invitavit artificem, quod ille secutus fecit: vel pecunia est haec, si venditurus fabricavit, vel gloria, si laboravit in nomen, vel religio, si donum templo paravit. Ergo et haec causa est propter quam fit: an non putas inter causas facti operis esse numerandum quo remoto factum non esset?

[7] His quintam Plato adicit exemplar, quam ipse 'idean' vocat; hoc est enim ad quod respiciens artifex id quod destinabat effecit. Nihil autem ad rem pertinet utrum foris habeat exemplar ad quod referat oculos an intus, quod ibi ipse concepit et posuit. Haec exemplaria rerum omnium deus intra se habet numerosque universorum quae agenda sunt et modos mente complexus est; plenus his figuris est quas Plato 'ideas' appellat, immortales, immutabiles, infatigabiles. Itaque homines quidem pereunt, ipsa autem humanitas, ad quam homo effingitur, permanet, et hominibus laborantibus, intereuntibus, illa nihil patitur. [8] Quinque ergo causae sunt, ut Plato dicit: id ex quo, id a quo, id in quo, id ad quod, id propter quod; novissime id quod ex his est. Tamquam in statua - quia de hac loqui coepimus - id ex quo aes est, id a quo artifex est, id in quo forma est quae aptatur illi, id ad quod exemplar est quod imitatur is qui facit, id propter quod facientis propositum est, id quod ex istis est ipsa statua <est>. [9] Haec omnia mundus quoque, ut ait Plato, habet: facientem, hic deus est; ex quo fit, haec materia est; formam, haec est habitus et ordo mundi quem videmus; exemplar, scilicet ad quod deus hanc magnitudinem operis pulcherrimi fecit; propositum, propter quod fecit. [10] Quaeris quod sit propositum deo? bonitas. Ita certe Plato ait: 'quae deo faciendi mundum fuit causa? bonus est; bono nulla cuiusquam boni invidia est; fecit itaque quam optimum potuit'.

Fer ergo iudex sententiam et pronuntia quis tibi videatur verisimillimum dicere, non quis verissimum dicat; id enim tam supra nos est quam ipsa veritas.

Quaerimus quid sit causa? ratio scilicet faciens, id est deus; ista enim quaecumque rettulistis non sunt multae et singulae causae, sed ex una pendent, ex ea quae facit. [13] Formam dicis causam esse? hanc imponit artifex operi: pars causae est, non causa. Exemplar quoque non est causa, sed instrumentum causae necessarium. Sic necessarium est exemplar artificis quomodo scalprum, quomodo lima: sine his procedere ars non potest, non tamen hae partes artis aut causae sunt. [14] ‘Propositum’ inquit ‘artificis, propter quod ad faciendum aliquid accedit, causa est.’ Ut sit causa, non est efficiens causa, sed superveniens. Hae autem innumerabiles sunt: nos de causa generali quaerimus. Illud vero non pro solita ipsis subtilitate dixerunt, totum mundum et consummatum opus causam esse; multum enim interest inter opus et causam operis.

[15] Aut fer sententiam aut, quod facilius in eiusmodi rebus est, nega tibi liquere et nos reverti iube. ‘Quid te’ inquis ‘delectat tempus inter ista contere, quae tibi nullum affectum eripiunt, nullam cupiditatem abigunt?’ Ego quidem [peiora] illa ago ac tracto quibus pacatur animus, et me prius scrutor, deinde hunc mundum. [16] Ne nunc quidem tempus, ut existimas, perdo; ista enim omnia, si non concidantur nec in hanc subtilitatem inutilem distrahantur, attollunt et levant animum, qui gravi sarcina pressus explicari cupit et reverti ad illa quorum fuit. Nam corpus hoc animi pondus ac poena est; premente illo urguetur, in vinclis est, nisi accessit philosophia et illum respirare rerum naturae spectaculo iussit et a terrenis ad divina dimisit. Haec libertas eius est, haec evagatio; subducit interim se custodiae in qua tenetur et caelo reficitur. [17] Quemadmodum artifices [ex] alicuius rei subtilioris quae intentione oculos defetigat, si malignum habent et precarium lumen, in publicum prodeunt et in aliqua regione ad populi otium dedicata oculos libera luce delectant, sic animus in hoc tristi et obscuro domicilio clusus, quotiens potest, apertum petit et in rerum naturae contemplatione requiescit. [18] Sapiens assectatorque sapientiae adhaeret quidem in corpore suo, sed optima sui parte abest et cogitationes suas ad sublimia intendit. Velut sacramento rogatus hoc quod vivit stipendium putat; et ita formatus est ut illi nec amor vitae nec odium sit, patiturque mortalia quamvis sciat ampliora superesse. [19] Interdicis mihi inspectione rerum naturae, a toto abductum redigis in partem? Ego non quaeram quae sint initia universorum? quis rerum formator? quis omnia in uno mersa et materia inerti convoluta discreverit? Non quaeram quis sit istius artifex mundi? qua ratione tanta magnitudo in legem et ordinem venerit? quis sparsa collegerit, confusa distinxerit, in una deformitate iacentibus faciem dividerit? unde lux tanta fundatur? ignis sit, an aliquid igne lucidius? [20] Ego ista non quaeram? ego nesciam unde descenderim? semel haec mihi videnda sint, an saepe nascendum? quo hinc iturus sim? quae sedes exspectet animam solutam legibus servitutis humanae? Vetas me caelo interesse, id est iubes me vivere capite demisso? [21] Maior sum et ad maiora genitus quam ut mancipium sim mei corporis, quod equidem non aliter aspicio quam vinculum aliquod libertati meae circumdatum; hoc itaque oppono fortunae, in quo resistat, nec per illud ad me ullum transire vulnus sino. Quidquid in me potest iniuriam pati hoc est in hoc obnoxio domicilio animus liber habitat. [22] Numquam me caro ista compellet ad metum, numquam ad indignam bono simulationem; numquam in honorem huius corpusculi mentiar. Cum visum erit, distraham cum illo societatem; et nunc tamen, dum haeremus, non erimus aequis partibus socii: animus ad se omne ius ducet. Contemptus corporis sui certa libertas est.

LXVI. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

Non enim ullo honestamento eget: ipsa magnum sui decus est et corpus suum consecrat. Aliter certe Claranum nostrum coepi intueri: formosus mihi videtur et tam rectus corpore quam est animo. [3] Potest ex casa vir magnus exire, potest et ex deformi humilique corpusculo formosus animus ac magnus. Quosdam itaque mihi videtur in hoc tales natura generare, ut approbet virtutem omni loco nasci. Si posset per se nudos edere animos, fecisset; nunc quod amplius est facit: quosdam enim edit corporibus impeditos, sed nihilominus perrumpentis obstantia. [4] Claranus mihi videtur in exemplar editus, ut scire possemus non deformitate corporis foedari animum, sed pulchritudine animi corpus ornari. Quamvis autem paucissimos una fecerimus dies, tamen multi nobis sermones fuerunt, quos subinde egeram et ad te permittam. [5] Hoc primo die quaesitum est, quomodo possint paria bona esse, si triplex eorum condicio est. Quaedam, ut nostris videtur, prima bona sunt, tamquam gaudium, pax, salus patriae; quaedam secunda, in materia infelici expressa, tamquam tormentorum patientia et in morbo gravi temperantia. Illa bona directo optabimus nobis, haec, si necesse erit. Sunt adhuc tertia, tamquam modestus incessus et compositus ac probus vultus et conveniens prudenti viro gestus. [6] Quomodo ista inter se paria esse possunt, cum alia optanda sint, alia aversanda?

Si volumus ista distinguere, ad primum bonum revertamur et consideremus id quale sit. Animus intuens vera, peritus fugiendorum ac petendorum, non ex opinione sed ex natura pretia rebus imponens, toti se inserens mundo et in omnis eius actus contemplationem suam mittens, cogitationibus actionibusque intentus ex aequo, magnus ac vehemens, asperis blandisque pariter invictus, neutri se fortunae summittens, supra omnia quae contingunt acciduntque eminens, pulcherrimus, ordinatissimus cum decore tum viribus, sanus ac siccus, imperturbatus intrepidus, quem nulla vis frangat, quem nec attollant fortuita nec deprimant - talis animus virtus est. [7] Haec eius est facies, si sub unum veniat aspectum et semel tota se ostendat. Ceterum multae eius species sunt, quae pro vitae varietate et pro actionibus explicantur: nec minor fit aut maior ipsa. Decrescere enim summum bonum non potest nec virtuti ire retro licet; sed in alias atque alias qualitates convertitur, ad rerum quas actura est habitum figurata. [8] Quidquid attingit in similitudinem sui adducit et tingit; actiones, amicitias, interdum domos totas quas intravit disposuitque condecorat; quidquid tractavit, id amabile, conspicuum, mirabile facit. Itaque vis eius et magnitudo ultra non potest surgere, quando incrementum maximo non est: nihil invenies rectius recto, non magis quam verius vero, quam temperato temperatius. [9] Omnis in modo est virtus; modo certa mensura est; constantia non habet quo procedat, non magis quam fiducia aut veritas aut fides. Quid accedere perfecto potest? nihil, aut perfectum non erat cui accessit; ergo ne virtuti quidem, cui si quid adici potest, defuit. Honestum quoque nullam accessionem recipit; honestum est enim propter ista quae rettuli. Quid porro? decorum et iustum et legitimum non eiusdem esse formae putas, certis terminis comprehensum? Crescere posse imperfectae rei signum est. [10] Bonum omne in easdem cadit leges: iuncta est privata et publica utilitas, tam mehercules quam inseparabile est laudandum petendumque. Ergo virtutes inter se pares sunt et opera virtutis et omnes homines quibus illae contingere. [11] Satorum vero animaliumque virtutes, cum mortales sint, fragiles quoque caducaeque sunt et incertae; exsiliunt residuntque et ideo non eodem pretio aestimantur. Una inducitur humanis virtutibus regula; una enim est ratio recta simplexque. Nihil est divino divinius, caelesti caelestius. [12] Mortalia minuuntur cadunt, deteruntur crescunt, exhauriuntur implentur; itaque illis in tam incerta sorte inaequalitas est: divinorum una natura est. Ratio autem nihil aliud est quam in corpus humanum pars divini spiritus mersa; si ratio divina est, nullum autem bonum sine ratione est, bonum omne divinum est. Nullum porro inter divina discrimen est; ergo nec inter bona. Paria itaque sunt et gaudium et fortis atque obstinata tormentorum perpressio; in utroque enim eadem est animi magnitudo, in altero remissa et laxa, in altero pugnat et intenta. [13] Quid? tu non putas parem esse virtutem eius qui fortiter hostium moenia expugnat, et eius qui obsidionem patientissime sustinet? [et] Magnus Scipio, qui Numantiam cludit et comprimit cogitque invictas manus in exitium ipsas suum verti, magnus ille obsessorum animus, qui scit non esse clusum cui mors aperta est, et in complexu libertatis expirat. Aequae reliqua quoque inter se paria sunt, tranquillitas, simplicitas, liberalitas, constantia, aequanimitas, tolerantia; omnibus enim istis una virtus subest, quae animum rectum et indeclinabilem praestat.

[14] ‘Quid ergo? nihil interest inter gaudium et dolorum inflexibilem patientiam?’ Nihil, quantum ad ipsas virtutes: plurimum inter illa in quibus virtus utraque ostenditur; in altero enim naturalis est animi remissio ac laxitas, in altero contra naturam dolor. Itaque media sunt haec quae plurimum intervalli recipiunt: virtus in utroque par est. [15] Virtutem materia non mutat: nec peiorem facit dura ac difficilis nec meliorem hilaris et laeta; necessest ergo par sit. In utraque enim quod fit aequae recte fit, aequae prudenter, aequae honeste; ergo aequalia sunt bona, ultra quae nec hic potest se melius in hoc gaudio gerere nec ille melius in illis cruciatibus; duo autem quibus nihil fieri melius potest paria sunt. [16] Nam si quae extra virtutem posita sunt aut minuere illam aut augere possunt, desinit unum bonum esse quod honestum. Si hoc concesseris, omne honestum perit. Quare? dicam: quia nihil honestum est quod ab invito, quod a coacto fit; omne honestum voluntarium est. Admisce illi pigritiam, querelam, tergiversationem, metum: quod habet in se optimum perdidit, sibi placere. Non potest honestum esse quod non est liberum; nam quod timet servit. [17] Honestum omne securum est, tranquillum est: si recusat aliquid, si complorat, si malum iudicat, perturbationem recepit et in magna discordia volutatur; hinc enim species recti vocat, illinc suspicio mali retrahit. Itaque qui honeste aliquid facturus est, quidquid opponitur, id etiam si incommodum putat, malum non putet, velit, libens faciat. Omne honestum iniussum incoactumque est, sincerum et nulli malo mixtum.

eculeo iaceat ac tortorem suum lasset?'. Poteram respondere: Epicurus quoque ait sapientem, si in Phalaridis tauro peruratur, exclamaturum, 'dulce est et ad me nihil pertinet'. Quid miraris si ego paria bona dico <alterius in convivio iacentis, alterius inter tormenta fortissime stantis, cum quod incredibilius est dicat Epicurus, dulce esse torrerii? [19] Sed hoc respondeo, plurimum interesse inter gaudium et dolorem; si quaeratur electio, alterum petam, alterum vitabo: illud secundum naturam est, hoc contra. Quamdiu sic aestimantur, magno inter se dissident spatio: cum ad virtutem ventum est, utraque par est, et quae per laeta procedit et quae per tristitia. [20] Nullum habet momentum vexatio et dolor et quidquid aliud incommodi est; virtute enim obruitur. Quemadmodum minuta lumina claritas solis obscurat, sic dolores, molestias, iniurias virtus magnitudine sua elidit atque opprimit; et quocumque affulsit, ibi quidquid sine illa apparet exstinguitur, nec magis ullam portionem habent incommoda, cum in virtutem inciderunt, quam in mari nimbus. [21] Hoc ut scias ita esse, ad omne pulchrum vir bonus sine ulla cunctatione procurret: stet illic licet carnifex, stet tortor atque ignis, perseverabit nec quid passurus sed quid facturum sit aspiciet, et se honestae rei tamquam bono viro credet; utilem illam sibi iudicabit, tutam, prosperam. Eundem locum habebit apud illum honesta res, sed tristis atque aspera, quem vir bonus pauper aut exul <aut exilis> ac pallidus. [22] Agedum pone ex alia parte virum bonum divitiis abundantem, ex altera nihil habentem, sed in se omnia: uterque aequè vir bonus erit, etiam si fortuna dispari utetur. Idem, ut dixi, in rebus iudicium est quod in hominibus: aequè laudabilis virtus est in corpore valido ac libero posita quam in morbo ac vincto. [23] Ergo tuam quoque virtutem non magis laudabis si corpus illi tuum integrum fortuna praestiterit quam si ex aliqua parte mutilatum: alioqui hoc erit ex servorum habitu dominum aestimare. Omnia enim ista in quae dominium casus exercet serva sunt, pecunia et corpus et honores, imbecilla, fluida, mortalia, possessionis incertae: illa rursus libera et invicta opera virtutis, quae non ideo magis appetenda sunt si benignius a fortuna tractantur, nec minus si aliqua iniquitate rerum premuntur. [24] Quod amicitia in hominibus est, hoc in rebus appetitio. Non, puto, magis amares virum bonum locupletem quam pauperem, nec robustum et lacertosum quam gracilem et languidi corporis; ergo ne rem quidem magis appetes aut amabis hilarem ac pacatam quam distractam et operosam. [25] Aut si hoc est, magis diliges ex duobus aequae bonis viris nitidum et unctum quam pulverulentum et horrentem; deinde hoc usque pervenies ut magis diligas integrum omnibus membris et illaesum quam debilem aut luscum; paulatim fastidium tuum illo usque procedet ut ex duobus aequae iustis ac prudentibus comatum et crispulum malis. Ubi par in utroque virtus est, non comparet aliarum rerum inaequalitas; omnia enim alia non partes sed accessiones sunt. [26] Num quis tam iniquam censuram inter, suos agit ut sanum filium quam aegrum magis diligat, procerumve et excelsum quam brevem aut modicum? Fetus suos non distinguunt ferae et se in alimentum pariter omnium sternunt; aves ex aequo partiuntur cibos. Ulixes ad Ithacae suae saxa sic properat quemadmodum Agamemnon ad Mycenarum nobiles muros; nemo enim patriam quia magna est amat, sed quia sua. [27] Quorsus haec pertinent? ut scias; virtutem omnia opera velut fetus suos isdem oculis intueri, aequae indulgere omnibus, et quidem impensius laborantibus, quoniam quidem etiam parentium amor magis in ea quorum miseretur inclinatur. Virtus quoque opera sua quae videt affici et premi non magis amat, sed parentium bonorum more magis complectitur ac fovet.

iniciunt formidinem mentibus et illas non aliter quam animalia specie periculi agitant. [32] Utraque ergo res sine causa animum et diffundit et mordet: nec illa gaudio nec haec metu digna est. Sola ratio immutabilis et iudicii tenax est; non enim servit sed imperat sensibus. Ratio rationi par est, sicut rectum recto; ergo et virtus virtuti; nihil enim aliud est virtus quam recta ratio. Omnes virtutes rationes sunt; rationes sunt, si rectae sunt; si rectae sunt, et pares sunt. [33] Qualis ratio est, tales et actiones sunt; ergo omnes pares sunt; nam cum similes rationi sint, similes et inter se sunt. Pares autem actiones inter se esse dico qua honestae rectaeque sunt; ceterum magna habebunt discrimina variante materia, quae modo latior est, modo angustior, modo illustris, modo ignobilis, modo ad multos pertinens, modo ad paucos. In omnibus tamen istis id quod optimum est par est: honestae sunt. [34] Tamquam viri boni omnes pares sunt qua boni sunt, sed habent differentias aetatis: alius senior est, alius iunior; habent corporis: alius formosus, alius deformis est; habent fortunae: ille dives, hic pauper est, ille gratosus, potens, urbibus notus et populis, hic ignotus plerisque et obscurus. Sed per illud quo boni sunt pares sunt.

[35] De bonis ac malis sensus non iudicat; quid utile sit, quid inutile, ignorat. Non potest ferre sententiam nisi in rem praesentem perductus est; nec futuri providus est nec praeteriti memor; quid sit consequens nescit. Ex hoc autem rerum ordo seriesque contexitur et unitas vitae per rectum iturae. Ratio ergo arbitra est bonorum ac malorum; aliena et externa pro vilibus habet, et ea quae neque bona sunt neque mala accessiones minimas ac levissimas iudicat; omne enim illi bonum in animo est. [36] Ceterum bona quaedam prima existimat, ad quae ex proposito venit, tamquam victoriam, bonos liberos, salutem patriae; quaedam secunda, quae non apparent nisi in rebus adversis, tamquam aequo animo pati morbum, ignem, exilium; quaedam media, quae nihilo magis secundum naturam sunt quam contra naturam, tamquam prudenter ambulare, composite sedere. Non enim minus secundum naturam est sedere quam stare aut ambulare. [37] Duo illa bona superiora diversa sunt: prima enim secundum naturam sunt, gaudere liberorum pietate, patriae incolumitate; secunda contra naturam sunt, fortiter obstare tormentis et sitim perpeti morbo urente praecordia. [38] 'Quid ergo? aliquid contra naturam bonum est?’ Minime; sed id aliquando contra naturam est in quo bonum illud existit. Vulnerari enim et subiecto igne tabescere et adversa valetudine affligi contra naturam est, sed inter ista servare animum infatigabilem secundum naturam est. [39] Et ut quod volo exprimam breviter, materia boni aliquando contra naturam est bonum numquam, quoniam bonum sine ratione nullum est, sequitur autem ratio naturam. ‘Quid est ergo ratio?’ Naturae imitatio. ‘Quod est summum hominis bonum?’ Ex naturae voluntate se gerere.

[40] ‘Non est’ inquit ‘dubium quin felicior pax sit numquam lacessita quam multo reparata sanguine. Non est dubium’ inquit ‘quin felicior res sit inconcussa valetudo quam ex gravibus morbis et extrema minitantibus in tutum vi quadam et patientia educta. Eodem modo non erit dubium quin maius bonum sit gaudium quam obnixus animus ad perpetiendos cruciatus vulnerum aut ignium.’ [41] Minime; illa enim quae fortuita sunt plurimum discriminis recipiunt; aestimantur enim utilitate sumentium. Bonorum unum propositum est consentire naturae; hoc [contingere] in omnibus par est. Cum alicuius in senatu sententiam sequimur, non potest dici: ille magis assentitur quam ille. Ab omnibus in eandem sententiam itur. Idem de virtutibus dico: omnes naturae assentiuntur. Idem de bonis dico: omnia naturae assentiuntur. [42] Alter adulescens decessit, alter senex, aliquis protinus infans, cui nihil amplius contigit quam prospicere vitam: omnes hi aequae fuere mortales, etiam si mors aliorum longius vitam passa est procedere, aliorum in medio flore praecidit, aliorum interrupt ipsa principia. [43] Alius inter cenandum solutus est; alterius continuata mors somno est; aliquem concubitus exstinxit. His oppone ferro transfossos aut exanimatos serpentium morsu aut fractos ruina aut per longam nervorum contractionem extortos minutatim. Aliquorum melior dici, aliquorum peior potest exitus: mors quidem omnium par est. Per quae veniunt diversa sunt; in [id] quod desinunt unum est. Mors nulla maior aut minor est; habet enim eundem in omnibus modum, finisse vitam. [44] Idem tibi de bonis dico: hoc bonum inter meras voluptates, hoc est inter tristia et acerba; illud fortunae indulgentiam rexit, hoc violentiam domuit: utrumque aequae bonum est, quamvis illud plana et molli via ierit, hoc aspera. Idem enim finis omnium est: bona sunt, laudanda sunt, virtutem rationemque comitantur; virtus aequat inter se quidquid agnoscit.

excepit nec arma dimisit: ‘macte virtute esto’ sanguinulentis et ex acie redeuntibus dicitur. Itaque haec magis laudaverim bona exercitata et fortia et cum fortuna rixata. [51] Ego dubitem quin magis laudem truncam illam et retorridam manum Mucii quam cuiuslibet fortissimi salvam? Stetit hostium flammaramque contemptor et manum suam in hostili foculo destillantem perspectavit, donec Porsina cuius poenae favebat gloriae invidit et ignem invito eripi iussit. [52] Hoc bonum quidni inter prima numerem tantoque maius putem quam illa segura et intemptata fortunae quanto rarius est hostem amissa manu vicisse quam armata? ‘Quid ergo?’ inquis ‘hoc bonum tibi optabis?’ Quidni? hoc enim nisi qui potest et optare, non potest facere. [53] An potius optem ut malaxandos articulos exoletis meis porrigam? ut muliercula aut aliquis in mulierculam ex viro versus digitulos meos ducat? Quidni ego feliciorem putem Mucium, quod sic tractavit ignem quasi illam manum tractatori praestitisset? In integrum restituit quidquid erraverat: confecit bellum inermis ac mancus et illa manu trunca reges duos vicit. Vale.

LXVII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Ut a communibus initium faciam, ver aperire se coepit, sed iam inclinatum in aestatem, quo tempore calere debebat, intepuit nec adhuc illi fides est; saepe enim in hiemem revolvitur. Vis scire quam dubium adhuc sit? nondum me committo frigidae verae, adhuc rigorem eius infringo. ‘Hoc est’ inquis ‘nec calidum nec frigidum pati.’ Ita est, mi Lucili: iam aetas mea contenta est suo frigore; vix media regelatur aestate. Itaque maior pars in vestimentis degitur. [2] Ago gratias senectuti quod me lectulo affixit: quidni gratias illi hoc nomine agam? Quidquid debebam nolle, non possum. Cum libellis mihi plurimus sermo est. Si quando intervenerunt epistulae tuae, tecum esse mihi videor et sic afficior animo tamquam tibi non rescribam sed respondeam. Itaque et de hoc quod quaeris, quasi colloquar tecum, quale sit una scrutabimur.

[3] Quaeris an omne bonum optabile sit. ‘Si bonum est’ inquis ‘fortiter torqueri et magno animo uri et patienter aegrotare, sequitur ut ista optabilia sint; nihil autem video ex istis voto dignum. Neminem certe adhuc scio eo nomine votum solvisse quod flagellis caesus esset aut podagra distortus aut eculeo longior factus.’ [4] Distingue, mi Lucili, ista, et intelleges esse in iis aliquid optandum. Tormenta abesse a me velim; sed si sustinenda fuerint, ut me in illis fortiter, honeste, animose geram optabo. Quidni ego malim non incidere bellum? sed si inciderit, ut vulnera, ut famem et omnia quae bellorum necessitas affert generose feram optabo. Ton sum tam demens ut aegrotare cupiam; sed si aegrotandum fuerit, ut nihil intemperanter, nihil effeminate faciam optabo. Ita non incommoda optabilia sunt, sed virtus qua perferuntur incommoda.

Atqui pericula contemnit et provocat; pulcherrima pars eius maximeque mirabilis illa est, non cedere ignibus, obviam ire vulneribus, interdum tela ne vitare quidem sed pectore excipere. Si fortitudo optabilis est, et tormenta patienter ferre optabile est; hoc enim fortitudinis pars est. Sed separa ista, ut dixi: nihil erit quod tibi faciat errorem. Non enim pati tormenta optabile est, sed pati fortiter: illud opto 'fortiter', quod est virtus. [7] 'Quis tamen umquam hoc sibi optavit?' Quaedam vota aperta et professa sunt, cum particulatim fiunt; quaedam latent, cum uno voto multa comprehensa sunt. Tamquam opto mihi vitam honestam; vita autem honesta actionibus variis constat: in hac es Reguli arca, Catonis scissum manu sua vulnus, Rutili exsilium, calix venenatus qui Socraten transtulit e carcere in caelum. Ita cum optavi mihi vitam honestam, et haec optavi sine quibus interdum honesta non potest esse.

quis ante ora patrum Troiae sub moenibus altis contigit oppetere!

Quid interest, optes hoc alicui an optabile fuisse fatearis? [9] Decius se pro re publica devovit et in medios hostes concitato equo mortem petens irruit. Alter post hunc, paternae virtutis aemulus, conceptis sollemnibus ac iam familiaribus verbis in aciem confertissimam incucurrit, de hoc sollicitus tantum, ut litaret, optabilem rem putans bonam mortem. Dubitas ergo an optimum sit memorabilem mori et in aliquo opere virtutis? [10] Cum aliquis tormenta fortiter patitur, omnibus virtutibus utitur. Fortasse una in promptu sit et maxime appareat, patientia; ceterum illic est fortitudo, cuius patientia et perpressio et tolerantia rami sunt; illic est prudentia, sine qua nullum initur consilium, quae suadet quod effugere non possis quam fortissime ferre; illic est constantia, quae deici loco non potest et propositum nulla vi extorquente dimittit; illic est individuus ille comitatus virtutum. Quidquid honeste fit una virtus facit, sed ex consilii sententia; quod autem ab omnibus virtutibus comprobatur, etiam si ab una fieri videtur, optabile est.

quaedam tristis vultus bona; sunt quaedam vota quae non gratulantium coetu, sed adorantium venerantiumque celebrantur. [12] Ita tu non putas Regulum optasse ut ad Poenos perveniret? Indue magni viri animum et ab opinionibus vulgi secede paulisper; cape, quantam debes, virtutis pulcherrimae ac magnificentissimae speciem, quae nobis non ture nec sertis, sed sudore et sanguine colenda est. [13] Aspice M. Catonem sacro illi pectori purissimas manus admoventem et vulnera parum alte demissa laxantem. Utrum tandem illi dicturus es ‘vellem quae velles’ et ‘moleste fero’ an ‘feliciter quod agis’? [14] Hoc loco mihi Demetrius noster occurrit, qui vitam securam et sine ullis fortunae incursionibus mare mortuum vocat. Nihil habere ad quod exciteris, ad quod te concites, cuius denuntiatione et incursu firmitatem animi tui temptes, sed in otio inconcusso iacere non est tranquillitas: malacia est. [15] Attalus Stoicus dicere solebat, ‘malo me fortuna in castris suis quam in deliciis habeat. Torqueor, sed fortiter: bene est. Occidor, sed fortiter: bene est.’ Audi Epicurum, dicet et ‘dulce est’. Ego tam honestae rei ac severae numquam molle nomen imponam. [16] Uror, sed invictus: quidni hoc optabile sit? - non quod urit me ignis, sed quod non vincit. Nihil est virtute praestantius, nihil pulchrius; et bonum est et optabile quidquid ex huius geritur imperio. Vale.

LXVIII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Consilio tuo accedo: absconde te in otio, sed et ipsum otium absconde. Hoc te facturum Stoicorum etiam si non praecepto, at exemplo licet scias; sed ex praecepto quoque facies: et tibi et cui voles approbaris. [2] Nec ad omnem rem publicam mittimus nec semper nec sine ullo fine; praeterea, cum sapienti rem publicam ipso dignam dedimus, id est mundum, non est extra rem publicam etiam si recesserit, immo fortasse relicto uno angulo in maiora atque ampliora transit et caelo impositus intellegit, cum sellam aut tribunal ascenderet, quam humili loco sederit. Depone hoc apud te, numquam plus agere sapientem quam cum in conspectum eius divina atque humana venerunt.

[3] Nunc ad illud revertor quod suadere tibi coeperam, ut otium tuum ignotum sit. Non est quod inscribas tibi philosophiam ac quietem: aliud proposito tuo nomen impone, valetudinem et imbecillitatem vocato et desidiam. Gloriari otio iners ambitio est. [4] Animalia quaedam, ne inveniri possint, vestigia sua circa ipsum cubile confundunt: idem tibi faciendum est, alioqui non deerunt qui persequantur. Multi aperta transeunt, condita et abstrusa rimantur; furem signata sollicitant. Vile videtur quidquid patet; aperta effractarius praeterit. Hos mores habet populus, hos imperitissimus quisque: in secreta irrumpere cupit. [5] Optimum itaque est non iactare otium suum; iactandi autem genus est nimis latere et a conspectu hominum secedere. Ille Tarentum se abdidit, ille Neapoli inclusus est, ille multis annis non transit domus suae limen: convocat turbam quisquis otio suo aliquam fabulam imposuit.

nostro sunt quaedam quasi causariae partes quibus adhibenda curatio est. [8] Quid in otio facio? ulcus meum curo. Si ostenderem tibi pedem turgidum, lividam manum, aut contracti cruris aridos nervos, permitteres mihi uno loco iacere et fovere morbum meum: maius malum est hoc, quod non possum tibi ostendere: in pectore ipso collectio et vomica est. Nolo nolo laudes, nolo dicas, 'o magnum virum! contempsit omnia et damnatis humanae vitae furoribus fugit'. Nihil damnavi nisi me. [9] Non est quod proficiendi causa venire ad me velis. Erras, qui hinc aliquid auxili speras: non medicus sed aeger hic habitat. Malo illa, cum discesseris, dicas: 'ego istum beatum hominem putabam et eruditum, erexeram aures: destitutus sum, nihil vidi, nihil audivi quod concupiscerem, ad quod reverterer'. Si hoc sentis, si hoc loqueris, aliquid profectum est: malo ignoscas otio meo quam inideas.

[10] 'Otium' inquis 'Seneca, commendas mihi? ad Epicureas voces delaberis?' Otium tibi commendo, in quo maiora agas et pulchriora quam quae reliquisti: pulsare superbas potentiorum fores, digerere in litteram senes orbos, plurimum in foro posse invidiosa potentia ac brevis est et, si verum aestimes, sordida. [11] Ille me gratia forensi longe antecedit, ille stipendiis militaribus et quaesita per hoc dignitate, ille clientium turba. [cui in turba] Par esse non possum, plus habent gratiae: est tanti ab omnibus vinci, dum a me fortuna vincatur. [12] Utinam quidem hoc propositum sequi olim fuisset animus tibi! utinam de vita beata non in conspectu mortis ageremus! Sed nunc quoque non moramur; multa enim quae supervacua esse et inimica credituri fuimus rationi, nunc experientiae credimus. [13] Quod facere solent qui serius exierunt et volunt tempus celeritate reparare, calcar addamus. Haec aetas optime facit ad haec studia: iam despumavit, iam vitia primo fervore adulescentiae indomita lassavit; non multum superest ut exstinguat. [14] 'Et quando' inquis 'tibi proderit istud quod in exitu discis, aut in quam rem?' In hanc, ut exeam melior. Non est tamen quod existimes ullam aetatem aptiorem esse ad bonam mentem quam quae se multis experimentis, longa ac frequenti rerum paenitentia domuit, quae ad salutaria mitigatis affectibus venit. Hoc est huius boni tempus: quisquis senex ad sapientiam pervenit, annis pervenit. Vale.

LXIX. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Mutare te loca et aliunde alio transilire nolo, primum quia tam frequens migratio instabilis animi est: coalescere otio non potest nisi desit circumspicere et errare. Ut animum possis continere, primum corporis tui fugam siste. [2] Deinde plurimum remedia continuata proficiunt: interrumpenda non est quies et vitae prioris oblivio; sine dediscere oculos tuos, sine aures assuescere sanioribus verbis. Quotiens processeris, in ipso transitu aliqua quae renovent cupiditates tuas tibi occurrent. [3] Quemadmodum ei qui amorem exuere conatur evitanda est omnis admonitio dilecti corporis - nihil enim facilius quam amor recrudesceat -, ita qui deponere vult desideria rerum omnium quarum cupiditate flagravimus et oculos et aures ab iis quae reliquit avertat. [4] Cito rebellat affectus. Quocumque se verterit, pretium aliquod praesens occupationis suae aspiciet. Nullum sine auctoramento malum est: avaritia pecuniam promittit, luxuria multas ac varias voluptates, ambitio purpuram et plausum et ex hoc potentiam et quidquid <potest> potentia. [5] Mercede te vitia sollicitant: hic tibi gratis vivendum est. Vix effici toto saeculo potest ut vitia tam longa licentia tumida subigantur et iugum accipiant, nedum si tam breve tempus intervallis discindimus; unam quamlibet rem vix ad perfectum perducit assidua vigilia et intentio. [6] Si me quidem velis audire, hoc meditare et exerce, ut mortem et excipias et, si ita res suadebit, accersas: interest nihil, illa ad nos veniat an ad illam nos. Illud imperitissimi cuiusque verbum falsum esse tibi ipse persuade: 'bella res est mori sua morte'. Nemo moritur nisi sua morte. Illud praeterea tecum licet cogites: nemo nisi suo die moritur. Nihil perdis ex tuo tempore; nam quod relinquis alienum est. Vale.

LIBER OCTAVUS

LXX. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Post longum intervallum Pompeios tuos vidi. In conspectum adulescentiae meae reductus sum; quidquid illic iuvenis feceram videbar mihi facere adhuc posse et paulo ante fecisse. [2] Praenavigavimus, Lucili, vitam et quemadmodum in mari, ut ait Vergilius noster, terraeque urbesque recedunt, sic in hoc cursu rapidissimi temporis primum pueritiam abscondimus, deinde adulescentiam, deinde quidquid est illud inter iuvenem et senem medium, in utriusque confinio positum, deinde ipsius senectutis optimos annos; novissime incipit ostendi publicus finis generis humani. [3] Scopulum esse illum putamus dementissimi: portus est, aliquando petendus, numquam recusandus, in quem si quis intra primos annos delatus est, non magis queri debet quam qui cito navigavit. Alium enim, ut scis, venti segnes ludunt ac detinent et tranquillitatis lentissimae taedio lassant, alium pertinax flatus celerrime perfert. [4] Idem evenire nobis puta: alios vita velocissime adduxit quo veniendum erat etiam cunctantibus, alios maceravit et coxit. Quae, ut scis, non semper retinenda est; non enim vivere bonum est, sed bene vivere.

Itaque sapiens vivet quantum debet, non quantum potest. [5] Videbit ubi victurus sit, cum quibus, quomodo, quid acturus. Cogitat semper qualia vita, non quanta sit. [sit] Si multa occurrunt molesta et tranquillitatem turbantia, emittit se; nec hoc tantum in necessitate ultima facit, sed cum primum illi coepit suspecta esse fortuna, diligenter circumspicit numquid illic desinendum sit. Nihil existimat sua referre, faciat finem an accipiat, tardius fiat an citius: non tamquam de magno detrimento timet; nemo multum ex stilicidio potest perdere. [6] Citius mori aut tardius ad rem non pertinet, bene mori aut male ad rem pertinet; bene autem mori est effugere male vivendi periculum. Itaque effeminatissimam vocem illius Rhodii existimo, qui cum in caveam coniectus esset a tyranno et tamquam ferum aliquod animal aleretur, suadenti cuidam ut abstineret cibo, ‘omnia’ inquit ‘homini, dum vivit, speranda sunt’. [7] Ut sit hoc verum, non omni pretio vita emenda est. Quaedam licet magna, licet certa sint, tamen ad illa turpi infirmitatis confessione non veniam: ego cogitem in eo qui vivit omnia posse fortunam, potius quam cogitem in eo qui scit mori nil posse fortunam?

[8] Aliquando tamen, etiam si certa mors instabit et destinatum sibi supplicium sciet, non commodabit poenae suae manum: sibi commodaret. Stultitia est timore mortis mori: venit qui occidat, exspecta. Quid occupas? quare suscipis alienae crudelitatis procurationem? utrum invides carnifici tuo an parcis? [9] Socrates potuit abstinencia finire vitam et inedia potius quam veneno mori; triginta tamen dies in carcere et in exspectatione mortis exegit, non hoc animo tamquam omnia fieri possent, tamquam multas spes tam longum tempus reciperet, sed ut praeberet se legibus, ut fruendum amicis extremum Socraten daret. Quid erat stultius quam mortem contemnere, venenum timere? [10] Scribonia, gravis femina, amita Drusi Libonis fuit, adulescentis tam stolidi quam nobilis, maiora sperantis quam illo saeculo quisquam sperare poterat aut ipse ullo. Cum aeger a senatu in lectica relatus esset non sane frequentibus exsequis - omnes enim necessarii deseruerant impie iam non reum sed funus -, habere coepit consilium utrum conscisceret mortem an exspectaret. Cui Scribonia 'quid te' inquit 'delectat alienum negotium agere?' Non persuasit illi: manus sibi attulit, nec sine causa. Nam post diem tertium aut quartum inimici moriturus arbitrio si vivit, alienum negotium agit.

consilium ad quod fama non pertinet! Hoc unum intueri, ut te fortunae quam celerrime eripias; alioquin aderunt qui de facto tuo male existiment.

[14] Invenies etiam profectos sapientiam qui vim afferendam vitae suae negent et nefas iudicent ipsum interemptorem sui fieri: exspectandum esse exitum quem natura decrevit. Hoc qui dicit non videt se libertatis viam cludere: nihil melius aeterna lex fecit quam quod unum introitum nobis ad vitam dedit, exitus multos. [15] Ego exspectem vel morbi crudelitatem vel hominis, cum possim per media exire tormenta et adversa discutere? Hoc est unum cur de vita non possimus queri: neminem tenet. Bono loco res humanae sunt, quod nemo nisi vitio suo miser est. Placet? vive: non placet? licet eo reverti unde venisti. [16] Ut dolorem capitis levares, sanguinem saepe misisti; ad extenuandum corpus vena percutitur. Non opus est vasto vulnere dividere praecordia: scalpello aperitur ad illam magnam libertatem via et puncto securitas constat. Quid ergo est quod nos facit pigros inertesque? Nemo nostrum cogitat quandoque sibi ex hoc domicilio exeundum; sic veteres inquilinos indulgentia loci et consuetudo etiam inter iniurias detinet. [17] Vis adversus hoc corpus liber esse? tamquam migraturus habita. Propone tibi quandoque hoc contubernio carendum: fortior eris ad necessitatem exeundi. Sed quemadmodum suus finis veniet in mentem omnia sine fine concupiscentibus? [18] Nullius rei meditatio tam necessaria est; alia enim fortasse exercentur in supervacuum. Adversus paupertatem praeparatus est animus: permansere divitiae. Ad contemptum nos doloris armavimus: numquam a nobis exegit huius virtutis experimentum integri ac sani felicitas corporis. Ut fortiter amissorum desideria pateremur praecepimus nobis: omnis quos amabamus superstites fortuna servavit. [19] Huius unius rei usum qui exigit dies veniet. Non est quod existimes magnis tantum viris hoc robur fuisse quo servitutis humanae claustra perumperent; non est quod iudices hoc fieri nisi a Catone non posse, qui quam ferro non emiserat animam manu extraxit: vilissimae sortis homines ingenti impetu in tutum evaserunt, cumque e commodo mori non licuisset nec ad arbitrium suum instrumenta mortis eligere, obvia quaeque rapuerunt et quae natura non erant noxia vi sua tela fecerunt. [20] Nuper in ludo bestiariorum unus e Germanis, cum ad matutina spectacula pararetur, secessit ad exonerandum corpus - nullum aliud illi dabatur sine custode secretum; ibi lignum id quod ad emundanda obscena adhaerente spongia positum est totum in gulam farsit et interclusis faucibus spiritum elisit. Hoc fuit morti contumeliam facere. Ita prorsus, parum munde et parum decenter: quid est stultius quam fastidiose mori? [21] O virum fortem, o dignum cui fati daretur electio! Quam fortiter ille gladio usus esset, quam animose in profundam se altitudinem maris aut abscisae rupis immisisset! Undique destitutus invenit quemadmodum et mortem sibi deberet et telum, ut scias ad moriendum nihil aliud in mora esse quam velle. Existimetur de facto hominis acerrimi ut cuique visum erit, dum hoc constet, praeferendam esse spurcissimam mortem servituti mundissimae.

[22] Quoniam coepi sordidis exemplis uti, perseverabo; plus enim a se quisque exigit, si viderit hanc rem etiam a contemptissimis posse contemni. Catones Scipionesque et alios quos audire cum admiratione consuevimus supra imitationem positos putamus: iam ego istam virtutem habere tam multa exempla in ludo bestiario quam in ducibus belli civilis ostendam. [23] Cum adveheretur nuper inter custodias quidam ad matutinum spectaculum missus, tamquam somno premente nutaret, caput usque eo demisit donec radiis insereret, et tamdiu se in sedili suo tenuit donec cervicem circumactu rotae frangeret; eodem vehiculo quo ad poenam ferebatur effugit. [24] Nihil obstat erumpere et exire cupienti: in aperto nos natura custodit. Cui permittit necessitas sua, circumspiciat exitum mollem; cui ad manum plura sunt per quae sese asserat, is dilectum agat et qua potissimum liberetur consideret: cui difficilis occasio est, is proximam quamque pro optima arripiat, sit licet inaudita, sit nova. Non deerit ad mortem ingenium cui non defuerit animus. [25] Vides quemadmodum extrema quoque mancipia, ubi illis stimulos adegit dolor, excitentur et intentissimas custodias fallant? Ille vir magnus est qui mortem sibi non tantum imperavit sed invenit. Ex eodem tibi munere plura exempla promisi. [26] Secundo naumachiae spectaculo unus e barbaris lanceam quam in adversarios acceperat totam iugulo suo mersit. 'Quare, quare' inquit 'non omne tormentum, omne ludibrium iamdudum effugio? quare ego mortem armatus exspecto?' Tanto hoc speciosius spectaculum fuit quanto honestius mori discunt homines quam occidere. [27] Quid ergo? quod animi perditum quoque noxiosi habent non habebunt illi quos adversus hos casus instruxit longa meditatio et magistra rerum omnium ratio? Illa nos docet fati varios esse accessus, finem eundem, nihil autem interesse unde incipiat quod venit. [28] Eadem illa ratio monet ut si licet moriaris <quemadmodum placet, si minus> quemadmodum potes, et quidquid obvenerit ad vim afferendam tibi invadas. Iniuriosum est rapto vivere, at contra pulcherrimum mori rapto. Vale.

LXXI. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Subinde me de rebus singulis consulis, oblitus vasto nos mari dividi. Cum magna pars consilii sit in tempore, necesse est evenire ut de quibusdam rebus tunc ad te perferatur sententia mea cum iam contraria potior est. Consilia enim rebus aptantur; res nostrae feruntur, immo volvuntur; ergo consilium nasci sub diem debet. Et hoc quoque nimis tardum est: sub manu, quod aiunt, nascatur. Quemadmodum autem inveniatur ostendam. [2] Quotiens quid fugiendum sit aut quid petendum voles scire, ad summum bonum, propositum totius vitae tuae, respice. Illi enim consentire debet quidquid agimus: non disponet singula, nisi cui iam vitae suae summa proposita est. Nemo, quamvis paratos habeat colores, similitudinem reddet, nisi iam constat quid velit pingere. Ideo peccamus quia de partibus vitae omnes deliberamus, de tota nemo deliberat. [3] Scire debet quid petat ille qui sagittam vult mittere, et tunc derigere ac moderari manu telum: errant consilia nostra, quia non habent quo derigantur; ignoranti quem portum petat nullus suus ventus est. Necesse est multum in vita nostra casus possit, quia vivimus casu. [4] Quibusdam autem evenit ut quaedam scire se nesciant; quemadmodum quaerimus saepe eos cum quibus stamus, ita plerumque finem summi boni ignoramus appositum. Nec multis verbis nec circumitu longo quod sit summum bonum colliges: digito, ut ita dicam, demonstrandum est nec in multa spargendum. Quid enim ad rem pertinet in particulas illud diducere? cum possis dicere ‘summum bonum est quod honestum est’ et, quod magis admireris, ‘unum bonum est quod honestum est, cetera falsa et adulterina bona sunt’. [5] Hoc si persuaseris tibi et virtutem adamaveris - amare enim parum est -, quidquid illa contigerit, id tibi, qualecumque aliis videbitur, faustum felixque erit. Et torqueri, si modo iacueris ipso torquente securior, et aegrotare, si non male dixeris fortunae, si non cesseris morbo, omnia denique quae ceteris videntur mala et mansuescent et in bonum abibunt, si super illa eminueris. Hoc liqueat, nihil esse bonum nisi honestum: et omnia incommoda suo iure bona vocabuntur quae modo virtus honestaverit. [6] Multis videmur maiora promittere quam recipit humana condicio, non immerito; ad corpus enim respiciunt. Revertantur ad animum: iam hominem deo metientur.

Erige te, Lucili virorum optime, et relinque istum ludum litterarium philosophorum qui rem magnificentissimam ad syllabas vocant, qui animum minuta docendo demittunt et conterunt: fies similis illis qui invenerunt ista, non qui docent et id agunt ut philosophia potius difficilis quam magna videatur. [7] Socrates, qui totam philosophiam revocavit ad mores et hanc summam dixit esse sapientiam, bona malaque distinguere, 'sequere' inquit 'illos, si quid apud te habeo auctoritatis, ut sis beatus, et te alicui stultum videri sine. Quisquis volet tibi contumeliam faciat et iniuriam, tu tamen nihil patieris, si modo tecum erit virtus. Si vis inquit 'beatus esse, si fide bona vir bonus, sine contemnat te aliquis.' Hoc nemo praestabit nisi qui omnia prior ipse contempserit, nisi qui omnia bona exaequaverit, quia nec bonum sine honesto est et honestum in omnibus par est.

[8] 'Quid ergo? nihil interest inter praeturam Catonis et repulsam? nihil interest utrum Pharsalica acie Cato vincatur an vincat? hoc eius bonum, quo victis partibus non potest vinci, par erat illi bono quo victor rediret in patriam et componeret pacem?' Quidni par sit? eadem enim virtute et mala fortuna vincitur et ordinatur bona; virtus autem non potest maior aut minor fieri: unius staturae est. [9] 'Sed Cn. Pompeius amittet exercitum, sed illud pulcherrimum rei publicae praetextum, optimates, et prima acies Pompeianarum partium, senatus ferens arma, uno proelio profligabuntur et tam magni ruina imperii in totum dissiliet orbem: aliqua pars eius in Aegypto, aliqua in Africa, aliqua in Hispania cadet. Ne hoc quidem miserae rei publicae continget, semel ruere.' [10] Omnia licet fiant: Iubam in regno suo non locorum notitia adiuvet, non popularium pro rege suo virtus obstinatissima, Uticensium quoque fides malis fracta deficiat et Scipionem in Africa nominis sui fortuna destituat: olim provisum est ne quid Cato detrimenti caperet. [11] 'Victus est tamen.' Et hoc numera inter repulsas Catonis: tam magno animo feret aliquid sibi ad victoriam quam ad praeturam obstitisse. Quo die repulsus est ludit, qua nocte periturus fuit legit; eodem loco habuit praetura et vita excidere; omnia quae acciderent ferenda esse persuaserat sibi.

animo? quid enim mutationis periculo exceptum? non terra, non caelum, non totus hic rerum omnium contextus, quamvis deo agente ducatur; non semper tenebit hunc ordinem, sed illum ex hoc cursu aliquis dies deiciet. [13] Certis eunt cuncta temporibus: nasci debent, crescere, exstingui. Quaecumque supra nos vides currere et haec quibus innixi atque impositi sumus veluti solidissimis carpentur ac desinent; nulli non senectus sua est. Inaequalibus ista spatiis eodem natura dimittit: quidquid est non erit, nec peribit sed resolvetur. [14] Nobis solvi perire est; proxima enim intuemur, ad ulteriora non prospicit mens hebes et quae se corpori addixerit; alioqui fortius finem sui suorumque pateretur, si speraret, <ut> omnia illa, sic vitam mortemque per vices ire et composita dissolvi, dissoluta componi, in hoc opere aeternam artem cuncta temperantis dei verti. [15] Itaque ut M. Cato, cum aevum animo percucurrerit, dicet, ‘omne humanum genus, quodque est quodque erit, morte damnatum est; omnes quae usquam rerum potiuntur urbes quaeque alienorum imperiorum magna sunt decora, ubi fuerint aliquando quaeretur et vario exitii genere tollentur: alias destruent bella, alias desidia paxque ad inertiam versa consumet et magnis opibus exitiosa res, luxus. Omnes hos fertiles campos repentini maris inundatio abscondet aut in subitam cavernam considentis soli lapsus abducat. Quid est ergo quare indigner aut doleam, si exiguo momento publica fata praecedo?’ [16] Magnus animus deo pareat et quidquid lex universi iubet sine cunctatione patiat: aut in meliorem emittitur vitam lucidius tranquilliusque inter divina mansurus aut certe sine ullo futurus incommodo, si naturae remiscebatur et revertetur in totum. Non est ergo M. Catonis maius bonum honesta vita quam mors honesta, quoniam non intenditur virtus. Idem esse dicebat Socrates veritatem et virtutem. Quomodo illa non crescit, sic ne virtus quidem: habet numeros suos, plena est.

mollissimis quidem, ausus est; negant enim illum esse beatum, sed tamen negant miserum. [18] Academici veteres beatum quidem esse etiam inter hos cruciatus fatentur, sed non ad perfectum nec ad plenum, quod nullo modo potest recipi: nisi beatus est, in summo bono non est. Quod summum bonum est supra se gradum non habet, si modo illi virtus inest, si illam adversa non minuunt, si manet etiam comminuto corpore incolumis: manet autem. Virtutem enim intellego animosam et excelsam, quam incitat quidquid infestat. [19] Hunc animum, quem saepe induunt generosae indolis iuvenes quos alicuius honestae rei pulchritudo percussit, ut omnia fortuita contemnant, profecto sapientia [non] infundet et tradet; persuadebit unum bonum esse quod honestum, hoc nec remitti nec intendi posse, non magis quam regulam qua rectum probari solet flectes. Quidquid ex illa mutaveris iniuria est recti. [20] Idem ergo de virtute dicemus: et haec recta est, flexuram non recipit; [rigidari quidem amplius intendi potest]. Haec de omnibus rebus iudicat, de hac nulla. Si rector ipsa non potest fieri, ne quae ab illa quidem fiunt alia aliis rectiora sunt; huic enim necesse est respondeant; ita paria sunt.

[21] ‘Quid ergo?’ inquis ‘iacere in convivio et torqueri paria sunt?’ Hoc mirum videtur tibi? illud licet magis admireris: iacere in convivio malum est, iacere in eculeo bonum est, si illud turpiter, hoc honeste fit. Bona ista aut mala non efficit materia sed virtus; haec ubicumque apparuit, omnia eiusdem mensurae ac pretii sunt. [22] In oculos nunc mihi manus intentat ille qui omnium animum aestimat ex suo, quod dicam paria bona esse honeste iudicantis <et honeste periclitantis,> quod dicam paria bona esse eius qui triumphat et eius qui ante currum vehitur invictus animo. Non putant enim fieri quidquid facere non possunt; ex infirmitate sua ferunt de virtute sententiam. [23] Quid miraris si uri, vulnerari, occidi, alligari iuvat, aliquando etiam libet? Luxurioso frugalitas poena est, pigro supplicii loco labor est, delicatus miseretur industrii, desidioso studere torqueri est: eodem modo haec ad quae omnes imbecilli sumus dura atque intoleranda credimus, obliti quam multis tormentum sit vino carere aut prima luce excitari. Non ista difficilia sunt natura, sed nos fluvidi et enerves. [24] Magno animo de rebus magnis iudicandum est; alioqui videbitur illarum vitium esse quod nostrum est. Sic quaedam rectissima, cum in aquam demissa sunt, speciem curvi praefracrique visentibus reddunt. Non tantum quid videas, sed quemadmodum, refert: animus noster ad vera perspicienda caligat. [25] Da mihi adulescentem incorruptum et ingenio vegetum: dicet fortunatiorem sibi videri qui omnia rerum adversarum onera rigida cervice sustollat, qui supra fortunam exstet. Non est mirum in tranquillitate non concuti: illud mirare, ibi extolli aliquem ubi omnes deprimuntur, ibi stare ubi omnes iacent. [26] Quid est in tormentis, quid est in aliis quae adversa appellamus mali? hoc, ut opinor, succidere mentem et incurvari et succumbere. Quorum nihil sapienti viro potest evenire: stat rectus sub quolibet pondere. Nulla illum res minorem facit; nihil illi eorum quae ferenda sunt displicet. Nam quidquid cadere in hominem potest in se cecidisse non queritur. Vires suas novit; scit se esse oneri ferendo. [27] Non educo sapientem ex hominum numero nec dolores ab illo sicut ab aliqua rupe nullum sensum admittente summoveo. Memini ex duabus illum partibus esse compositum: altera est irrationalis, haec mordetur, uritur, dolet; altera rationalis, haec inconcussas opiniones habet, intrepida est et indomita. In hac positum est summum illud hominis bonum. Antequam impleatur, incerta mentis volutatio est; cum vero perfectum est, immota illi stabilitas est. [28] Itaque inchoatus et ad summa procedens cultorque virtutis, etiam si appropinquit perfecto bono sed ei nondum summam manum imposuit, ibit interim cessim et remittet aliquid ex intentione mentis; nondum enim incerta transgressus est, etiam nunc versatur in lubrico. Beatus vero et virtutis exactae tunc se maxime amat cum fortissime expertus est, et metuenda ceteris, si alicuius honesti officii pretia sunt, non tantum fert sed amplexatur multoque audire mavult ‘tanto melior’ quam ‘tanto felicior’.

omnes casus procurrerent. [31] Quemadmodum lana quosdam colores semel ducit, quosdam nisi saepius macerata et recocta non perbibit, sic alias disciplinas ingenia, cum acceperere, protinus praestant: haec, nisi alte descendit et diu sedit et animum non coloravit sed infecit, nihil ex iis quae promiserat praestat. [32] Cito hoc potest tradi et paucissimis verbis: unum bonum esse virtutem, nullum certe sine virtute, et ipsam virtutem in parte nostri meliore, id est rationali, positam. Quid erit haec virtus? iudicium verum et immotum; ab hoc enim impetus venient mentis, ab hoc omnis species quae impetum movet redigetur ad liquidum. [33] Huic iudicio consentaneum erit omnia quae virtute contacta sunt et bona iudicare et inter se paria. Corporum autem bona corporibus quidem bona sunt, sed in totum non sunt bona; his pretium quidem erit aliquod, ceterum dignitas non erit; magnis inter se intervallis distabunt: alia minora, alia maiora erunt. [34] Et in ipsis sapientiam sectantibus magna discrimina esse fateamur necesse est: alius iam in tantum profecit ut contra fortunam audeat attollere oculos, sed non pertinaciter - cadunt enim nimio splendore praestrici -, alius in tantum ut possit cum illa conferre vultum, nisi iam pervenit ad summum et fiduciae plenus est. [35] Imperfecta necesse est labent et modo prodeant, modo sublabantur aut succidant. Sublabentur autem, nisi ire et niti perseveraverint; si quicquam ex studio et fideli intentione laxaverint, retro eundum est. Nemo profectum ibi invenit ubi reliquerat.

[36] Instemus itaque et perseveremus; plus quam profligavimus restat, sed magna pars est profectus velle proficere. Huius rei conscius mihi sum: volo et mente tota volo. Te quoque instinctum esse et magno ad pulcherrima properare impetu video. Properemus: ita demum vita beneficium erit; alioquin mora est, et quidem turpis inter foeda versantibus. Id agamus ut nostrum omne tempus sit; non erit autem, nisi prius nos nostri esse coeperimus. [37] Quando continget contemnere utramque fortunam, quando continget omnibus oppressis affectibus et sub arbitrium suum adductis hanc vocem emittere 'vici'? Quem vicerim quaeris? Non Persas nec extrema Medorum nec si quid ultra Dahas bellicosum iacet, sed avaritiam, sed ambitionem, sed metum mortis, qui victores gentium vicit. Vale.

LXXII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Quod quaeris a me liquebat mihi - sic rem edidiceram - per se; sed diu non retemptavi memoriam meam, itaque non facile me sequitur. Quod evenit libris situ cohaerentibus, hoc evenisse mihi sentio: explicandus est animus et quaecumque apud illum deposita sunt subinde excuti debent, ut parata sint quotiens usus exegerit. Ergo hoc in praesentia differamus; multum enim operae, multum diligentiae poscit. Cum primum longiorem eodem loco speravero moram, tunc istud in manus sumam. [2] Quaedam enim sunt quae possis et in cisio scribere, quaedam lectum et otium et secretum desiderant. Nihilominus his quoque occupatis diebus agatur aliquid et quidem totis. Numquam enim non succedent occupationes novae: serimus illas, itaque ex una exeunt plures. Deinde ipsi nobis dilationem damus: 'cum hoc peregero, toto animo incumbam' et 'si hanc rem molestam composuero, studio me dabo'. [3] Non cum vacaveris philosophandum est, sed ut philosopheris vacandum est; omnia alia negligenda ut huic assideamus, cui nullum tempus satis magnum est, etiam si a pueritia usque ad longissimos humani aevi terminos vita producitur. Non multum refert utrum omittas philosophiam an intermittas; non enim ubi interrupta est manet, sed eorum more quae intenta dissiliunt usque ad initia sua recurrit, quod a continuatione discessit. Resistendum est occupationibus, nec explicandae sed summovendae sunt. Tempus quidem nullum est parum idoneum studio salutari; atqui multi inter illa non student propter quae studendum est. [4] 'Incidet aliquid quod impediat.' Non quidem eum cuius animus in omni negotio laetus atque alacer est: imperfectis adhuc interscinditur laetitia, sapientis vero contextitur gaudium, nulla causa rumpitur, nulla fortuna; semper et ubique tranquillus est. Non enim ex alieno pendet nec favorem fortunae aut hominis exspectat. Domestica illi felicitas est; exiret ex animo si intraret: ibi nascitur. [5] Aliquando extrinsecus quo admoneatur mortalitatis intervenit, sed id leve et quod summam cutem stringat. Aliquo, inquam, incommodo afflatur; maximum autem illud bonum fixum est. Ita dico, extrinsecus aliqua sunt incommoda, velut in corpore interdum robusto solidoque eruptiones quaedam pustularum et ulcuscula, nullum in alto malum

est. [6] Hoc, inquam, interest inter consummatae sapientiae virum et alium procedentis quod inter sanum et ex morbo gravi ac diutino emergentem, cui sanitatis loco est levior accessio: hic nisi attendit, subinde gravatur et in eadem revolvitur, sapiens recidere non potest, ne incidere quidem amplius. Corpori enim ad tempus bona valetudo est, quam medicus, etiam si reddidit, non praestat - saepe ad eundem qui advocaverat excitatur: <animus> semel in totum sanatur. [7] Dicam quomodo intellegas sanum: si se ipse contentus est, si confidit sibi, si scit omnia vota mortalium, omnia beneficia quae dantur petunturque, nullum in beata vita habere momentum. Nam cui aliquid accedere potest, id imperfectum est; cui aliquid abscedere potest, id imperpetuum est: cuius perpetua futura laetitia est, is suo gaudeat. Omnia autem quibus vulgus inhiat ultro citroque fluunt: nihil dat fortuna mancipio. Sed haec quoque fortuita tunc delectant cum illa ratio temperavit ac miscuit haec est quae etiam externa commendet, quorum avidis usus ingratus est. [8] Solebat Attalus hac imagine uti: 'vidisti aliquando canem missa a domino frustra panis aut carnis aperto ore captantem? quidquid excepit protinus integrum devorat et semper ad spem venturi hiat. Idem evenit nobis: quidquid exspectantibus fortuna proiecit, id sine ulla voluptate demittimus statim, ad rapinam alterius erecti et attoniti.' Hoc sapienti non evenit: plenus est; etiam si quid obvenit, secure excipit ac reponit; laetitia fruitur maxima, continua, sua. [9] Habet aliquis bonam voluntatem, habet profectum, sed cui multum desit a summo: hic deprimitur alternis et extollitur ac modo in caelum allevatur, modo defertur ad terram. Imperitis ac rudibus nullus praecipitationis finis est; in Epicureum illud chaos decidunt, inane sine termino. [10] Est adhuc genus tertium eorum qui sapientiae alludunt, quam non quidem contigerunt, in conspectu tamen et, ut ita dicam, sub ictu habent: hi non concutiuntur, ne defluunt quidem; nondum in sicco, iam in portu sunt. [11] Ergo cum tam magna sint inter summos imosque discrimina, cum medios quoque sequatur fluctus suus, sequatur ingens periculum ad deteriora redeundi, non debemus occupationibus indulgere. Excludendae sunt: si semel intraverint, in locum suum alias substituent. Principiis illarum obstemus: melius non incipient quam desinent. Vale.

LXXIII. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Errare mihi videntur qui existimant philosophiae fideliter deditos contumaces esse ac refractarios, contemptores magistratuum aut regum eorumve per quos publica administrantur. Ex contrario enim nulli adversus illos gratiores sunt, nec immerito; nullis enim plus praestant quam quibus frui tranquillo otio licet. [2] Itaque ii quibus multum ad propositum bene vivendi confert securitas publica necesse est auctorem huius boni ut parentem colant, multo quidem magis quam illi inquieti et in medio positi, qui multa principibus debent sed multa et imputant, quibus numquam tam plene occurrere ulla liberalitas potest ut cupiditates illorum, quae crescunt dum implentur, exsatiat. Quisquis autem de accipiendo cogitat oblitus accepti est, nec ullum habet malum cupiditas maius quam quod ingrata est. [3] Adice nunc quod nemo eorum qui in re publica versantur quot vincat, sed a quibus vincatur, aspicit; et illis non tam iucundum est multos post se videre quam grave aliquem ante se. Habet hoc vitium omnis ambitio: non respicit. Nec ambitio tantum instabilis est, verum cupiditas omnis, quia incipit semper a fine. [4] At ille vir sincerus ac purus, qui reliquit et curiam et forum et omnem administrationem rei publicae ut ad ampliora secederet, diligit eos per quos hoc ei facere tuto licet solusque illis gratuitum testimonium reddit et magnam rem nescientibus debet. Quemadmodum praeceptores suos veneratur ac suspicit quorum beneficio illis in viis exit, sic et hos sub quorum tutela positus exercet artes bonas.

[5] ‘Verum alios quoque rex viribus suis protegit.’ Quis negat? Sed quemadmodum Neptuno plus debere se iudicat ex iis qui eadem tranquillitate usi sunt qui plura et pretiosiora illo mari vexit, animosius a mercatore quam a vectore solvitur votum et ex ipsis mercatoribus effusius ratus est qui odores ac purpuras et auro pensanda portabat quam qui vilissima quaeque et saburrae loco futura congesserat, sic huius pacis beneficium ad omnis pertinentis altius ad eos pervenit qui illa bene utuntur. [6] Multi enim sunt ex his togatis quibus pax operosior bello est: an idem existimas pro pace debere eos qui illam ebrietati aut libidini impendunt aut aliis vitiis quae vel bello rumpenda sunt? Nisi forte tam iniquum putas esse sapientem ut nihil viritim se debere pro communibus bonis iudicet. Soli lunaeque plurimum debeo, et non uni mihi oriuntur; anno temperantique annum deo privatim obligatus sum, quamvis nihil in meum honorem * * * descripta sint. [7] Stulta avaritia mortalium possessionem proprietatemque discernit nec quicquam suum credit esse quod publicum est; at ille sapiens nihil magis suum iudicat quam cuius illi cum humano genere consortium est. Nec enim essent ista communia, nisi pars illorum pertineret ad singulos; socium efficit etiam quod ex minima portione commune est.

[8] Adice nunc quod magna et vera bona non sic dividuntur ut exiguum in singulos cadat: ad unumquemque tota perveniunt. E congiario tantum ferunt homines quantum in capita promissum est; epulum et visceratio et quidquid aliud manu capitur discedit in partes: at haec individua bona, pax et libertas, ea tam omnium tota quam singulorum sunt. [9] Cogitat itaque per quem sibi horum usus fructusque contingat, per quem non ad arma illum nec ad servandas vigilias nec ad tuenda moenia et multiplex belli tributum publica necessitas vocet, agitque gubernatori suo gratias. Hoc docet philosophia praecipue, bene debere beneficia, bene solvere; interdum autem solutio est ipsa confessio. [10] Confitebitur ergo multum se debere ei cuius administratione ac providentia contingit illi pingue otium et arbitrium sui temporis et imperturbata publicis occupationibus quies.

O Meliboe, deus nobis haec otia fecit;
namque erit ille mihi semper deus.

[11] Si illa quoque otia multum auctori suo debent quorum munus hoc maximum est, ille meas errare boves, ut cernis, et ipsum ludere quae vellem calamo permisit agresti, quanti aestimamus hoc otium quod inter deos agitur, quod deos facit?

[12] Ita dico, Lucili, et te in caelum compendiario voco. Solebat Sextius dicere Iovem plus non posse quam bonum virum. Plura

Iuppiter habet quae praestet hominibus, sed inter duos bonos non est melior qui locupletior, non magis quam inter duos quibus par scientia regendi gubernaculum est meliorem dixeris cui maius speciosiusque navigium est. [13] Iuppiter quo antecedit virum bonum? diutius bonus est: sapiens nihilo se minoris aestimat quod virtutes eius spatio brevior cludentur. Quemadmodum ex duobus sapientibus qui senior decessit non est beatior eo cuius intra pauciores annos terminata virtus est, sic deus non vincit sapientem felicitate, etiam si vincit aetate; non est virtus maior quae longior. [14] Iuppiter omnia habet, sed nempe aliis tradidit habenda: ad ipsum hic unus usus pertinet, quod utendi omnibus causa est: sapiens tam aequo animo omnia apud alios videt contemnitque quam Iuppiter et hoc se magis suspicit quod Iuppiter uti illis non potest, sapiens non vult. [15] Credamus itaque Sextio monstranti pulcherrimum iter et clamanti ‘hac hac secundum frugalitatem, hac secundum temperantiam, hac secundum fortitudinem’. Non sunt dii fastidiosi, non invidi: admittunt et ascendentibus manum porrigunt. [16] Miraris hominem ad deos ire? Deus ad homines venit, immo quod est propius, in homines venit: nulla sine deo mens bona est. Semina in corporibus humanis divina dispersa sunt, quae si bonus cultor excipit, similia origini prodeunt et paria iis ex quibus orta sunt surgunt: si malus, non aliter quam humus sterilis ac palustris necat ac deinde creat purgamenta pro frugibus. Vale.

LXXIV. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Epistula tua delectavit me et marcentem excitavit; memoriam quoque meam, quae iam mihi segnis ac lenta est, evocavit. Quidni tu, mi Lucili, maximum putes instrumentum vitae beatae hanc persuasionem unum bonum esse quod honestum est? Nam qui alia bona iudicat in fortunae venit potestatem, alieni arbitrii fit: qui omne bonum honesto circumscripsit intra se felix <est>. [2] Hic amissis liberis maestus, hic sollicitus aegris, hic turpibus et aliqua sparsis infamia tristis; illum videbis alienae uxoris amore cruciari, illum suae; non deerit quem repulsa distorqueat; erunt quos ipse honor vexet. [3] Illa vero maxima ex omni mortalium populo turba miserorum quam expectatio mortis exagitat undique impendens; nihil enim est unde non subeat. Itaque, ut in hostili regione versantibus, huc et illuc circumspiciendum est et ad omnem strepitum circumagenda cervix; nisi hic timor e pectore eiectus est, palpitantibus praecordiis vivitur. [4] Occurrent acti in exilium et evoluti bonis; occurrent, quod genus egestatis gravissimum est, in divitis inopes; occurrent naufragi similiave naufragis passi, quos aut popularis ira aut invidia, perniciosum optimis telum, inopinantis securosque disiecit procellae more quae in ipsa sereni fiducia solet emergere, aut fulminis subiti ad cuius ictum etiam vicina tremuerunt. Nam ut illic quisquis ab igne propior stetit percusso similis obstipuit, sic in his per aliquam vim accidentibus unum calamitas opprimit, ceteros metus, paremque passis tristitiam facit pati posse. [5] Omnium animos mala aliena ac repentina sollicitant. Quemadmodum aves etiam inanis fundae sonus territat, ita nos non ad ictum tantum exagitamur sed ad crepitum. Non potest ergo quisquam beatus esse qui huic se opinioni credidit. Non enim beatum est nisi quod intrepidum; inter suspecta male vivitur. [6] Quisquis se multum fortuitis dedit ingentem sibi materiam perturbationis et inexplicabilem fecit: una haec via est ad tuta vadenti, externa despicere et honesto esse contentum. Nam qui aliquid virtute melius putat aut ullum praeter illam bonum, ad haec quae a fortuna sparguntur sinum expandit et sollicitus missilia eius exspectat. [7] Hanc enim imaginem animo tuo propone, ludos facere fortunam et in hunc mortalium coetum honores, divitias, gratiam excutere, quorum alia inter diripientium manus scissa sunt, alia infida societate divisa, alia magno detrimento eorum in quos devenerant presa. Ex quibus quaedam aliud agentibus inciderunt, quaedam, quia nimis captabantur, amissa et dum avide rapiuntur expulsa sunt: nulli vero, etiam cui rapina feliciter cessit, gaudium rapti duravit in posterum. Itaque prudentissimus quisque, cum primum induci videt munuscula, a theatro fugit et scit magno parva constare. Nemo manum conserit cum recedente, nemo exeuntem ferit: circa praemium rixa est. [8] Idem in his evenit quae fortuna desuper iactat: aestuamus miseri, distringimur, multas habere cupimus manus, modo in hanc partem, modo in illam respicimus; nimis tarde nobis mitti videntur quae cupiditates nostras irritant, ad paucos perventura, exspectata omnibus; [9] ire obviam cadentibus cupimus; gaudemus si quid invasimus invadendique aliquos spes vana delusit; vilem praedam magno aliquo incommodo luimus aut [de] fallimur. Secedamus itaque ab istis ludis et demus raptoribus locum; illi spectent bona ista pendentia et ipsi magis pendeant.

[14] Sed ut illa praeteream, aut ista bona non sunt quae vocantur aut homo felicior deo est, quoniam quidem quae cara nobis sunt non habet in usu deus; nec enim libido ad illum nec epularum lautitia nec opes nec quicquam ex his hominem inescantibus et vili voluptate ducentibus pertinet. Ergo aut credibile est bona deo deesse aut hoc ipsum argumentum est bona non esse, quod deo desunt. [15] Adice quod multa quae bona videri volunt animalibus quam homini pleniora contingunt. Illa cibo avidius utuntur, venere non aequae fatigantur; virium illis maior est et aequabilior firmitas: sequitur ut multo feliciora sint homine. Nam sine nequitia, sine fraudibus degunt; fruuntur voluptatibus, quas et magis capiunt et ex facili, sine ullo pudoris aut paenitentiae metu. [16] Considera tu itaque an id bonum vocandum sit quo deus ab homine, <homo ab animalibus> vincitur. Summum bonum in animo contineamus: obsolescit si ab optima nostri parte ad pessimam transit et transfertur ad sensus, qui agiliores sunt animalibus mutis. Non est summa felicitatis nostrae in carne ponenda: bona illa sunt vera quae ratio dat, solida ac sempiterna, quae cadere non possunt, ne decrescere quidem ac minui. [17] Cetera opinione bona sunt et nomen quidem habent commune cum veris, proprietates [quidem] in illis boni non est; itaque commoda vocentur et, ut nostra lingua loquar, producta. Ceterum sciamus mancipia nostra esse, non partes, et sint apud nos, sed ita ut meminerimus extra nos esse; etiam si apud nos sint, inter subiecta et humilia numerentur propter quae nemo se attollere debeat. Quid enim stultius quam aliquem eo sibi placere quod ipse non fecit? [18] Omnia ista nobis accedant, non haereant, ut si abducentur, sine ulla nostri laceratione discedant. Utamur illis, non gloriemur, et utamur parce tamquam depositis apud nos et abituris. Quisquis illa sine ratione possedit non diu tenuit; ipsa enim se felicitas, nisi temperatur, premit. Si fugacissimis bonis credidit, cito deseritur, et, ut deseratur, affligitur. Paucis deponere felicitatem molliter licuit: ceteri cum iis inter quae eminere labuntur, et illos degravant ipsa quae extulerant. [19] Ideo adhibebitur prudentia, quae modum illis ac parsimoniam imponat, quoniam quidem licentia opes suas praecipitat atque urget, nec umquam immodica durarunt nisi illa moderatrix ratio compescuit. Hoc multarum tibi urbium ostendet eventus, quarum in ipso flore luxuriosa imperia ceciderunt, et quidquid virtute partum erat intemperantia corrui. Adversus hos casus muniendi sumus. Nullus autem contra fortunam inexpugnabilis murus est: intus instruamur; si illa pars tuta est, pulsari homo potest, capi non potest. Quod sit hoc instrumentum scire desideras? [20] Nihil indignetur sibi accidere sciatque illa ipsa quibus laedi videtur ad conservationem universi pertinere et ex iis esse quae cursum mundi officiumque consummant; placeat homini quidquid deo placuit; ob hoc ipsum <se> suaque miretur, quod non potest vinci, quod mala ipsa sub se tenet, quod ratione, qua valentius nihil est, casum doloremque et iniuriam subigit. [21] Ama rationem! huius te amor contra durissima armabit. Feras catulorum amor in venabula impingit feritasque et inconsultus impetus praestat indomitas; iuvenilia nonnumquam ingenia cupido gloriae in contemptum tam ferri quam ignium misit; species quosdam atque umbra virtutis in mortem voluntariam trudit: quanto his omnibus fortior ratio est, quanto constantior, tanto vehementius per metus ipsos et pericula exibat.

[23] Quid adversus hos pro nobis responderi soleat ponam; deinde tunc adiciam quid praeterea respondendum putem. Alia condicio est in iis quae ablata in locum suum aliquid incommodi substituunt: tamquam bona valetudo vitiata in malam transfert; acies oculorum extincta caecitate nos afficit; non tantum velocitas perit poplitibus incisis, sed debilitas pro illa subit. Hoc non est periculum in iis quae paulo ante rettulimus. Quare? si amicum bonum amisi, non est mihi pro illo perfidia patienda, nec si bonos liberos extuli, in illorum locum impietas succedit. [24] Deinde non amicorum illic aut liberorum interitus sed corporum est. Bonum autem uno modo perit, si in malum transit; quod natura non patitur, quia omnis virtus et opus omne virtutis incorruptum manet. Deinde etiam si amici perierunt, etiam si probati respondentesque voto patris liberi, est quod illorum expleat locum. Quid sit quaeris? quod illos quoque bonos fecerat, virtus. [25] Haec nihil vacare patitur loci, totum animum tenet, desiderium omnium tollit, sola satis est; omnium enim bonorum vis et origo in ipsa est. Quid refert an aqua decurrens interceptiatur atque abeat, si fons ex quo fluxerat salvus est? Non dices vitam iustiorum salvis liberis quam amissis nec ordinationem nec prudentiorem nec honestiorem; ergo ne meliorem quidem. Non facit adiectio amicorum sapienterem, non facit stultiorem detractio; ergo nec beatorem aut miseriorem. Quamdiu virtus salva fuerit, non senties quidquid abscesserit.

[26] 'Quid ergo? non est beatorum et amicorum et liberorum turba succinctus?' Quidni non sit? Summum enim bonum nec infringitur nec augetur; in suo modo permanet, utcumque fortuna se gessit. Sive illi senectus longa contigit sive citra senectutem finitus est, eadem mensura summi boni est, quamvis aetatis diversa sit. [27] Utrum maiorem an minorem circulum scribas ad spatium eius pertinet, non ad formam: licet alter diu manserit, alterum statim obduxeris et in eum in quo scriptus est pulverem solveris, in eadem uterque forma fuit. Quod rectum est nec magnitudine aestimatur nec numero nec tempore; non magis produci quam contrahi potest. Honestam vitam ex centum annorum numero in quantum voles corripe et in unum diem coge: aequae honesta est. [28] Modo latius virtus funditur, regna urbes provincias temperat, fert leges, colit amicitias, inter propinquos liberosque dispensat officia, modo arto fine circumdatur paupertatis exsili orbitatis; non tamen minor est si ex altiore fastigio in humile subducitur, in privatum ex regio, ex publico et spatioso iure in angustias domus vel anguli coit. [29] Aequae magna est, etiam si in se recessit undique exclusa; nihilominus enim magni spiritus est et erecti, exactae prudentiae, indeclinabilis iustitiae. Ergo aequae beata est; beatum enim illud uno loco positum est, in ipsa mente, stabile, grande, tranquillum, quod sine scientia divinarum humanorumque non potest effici.

[30] Sequitur illud quod me responsurum esse dicebam. Non affligitur sapiens liberorum amissione, non amicorum; eodem enim animo fert illorum mortem quo suam exspectat; non magis hanc timet quam illam dolet. Virtus enim convenientia constat: omnia opera eius cum ipsa concordant et congruunt. Haec concordia perit si animus, quem excelsum esse oportet, luctu aut desiderio summittitur.

Inhonestas est omnis trepidatio et sollicitudo, in ullo actu pigritia; honestum enim securum et expeditum est, interritum est, in procinctu stat. [31] ‘Quid ergo? non aliquid perturbationi simile patietur? non et color eius mutabitur et vultus agitabitur et artus refrigescunt? et quidquid aliud non ex imperio animi, sed inconsulto quodam naturae impetu geritur?’ Fateor; sed manebit illi persuasio eadem, nihil illorum malum esse nec dignum ad quod mens sana deficiat. [32] Omnia quae facienda erunt audaciter faciet et prompte. Hoc enim stultitiae proprium quis dixerit, ignave et contumaciter facere quae faciat, et alio corpus impellere, alio animum, distrahique inter diversissimos motus. Nam propter illa ipsa quibus extollit se miraturque contempta est, et ne illa quidem quibus gloriatur libenter facit. Si vero aliquid timetur malum, eo proinde, dum exspectat, quasi venisset urgetur, et quidquid ne patiatur timet iam metu patitur. [33] Quemadmodum in corporibus infirmis languorem signa praecurrunt - quaedam enim segnitia enervis est et sine labore ullo lassitudo et oscitatio et horror membra percurrunt - sic infirmus animus multo ante quam opprimatur malis quatitur; praesumit illa et ante tempus cadit. Quid autem dementius quam angere futuris nec se tormento reservare, sed arcessere sibi miseriae et admoveere? quas optimum est differre, si discutere non possis. [34] Vis scire futuro neminem debere torqueri? Quicumque audierit post quinquagesimum annum sibi patienda supplicia, non perturbatur nisi si medium spatium transiluerit et se in illam saeculo post futuram sollicitudinem immiserit: eodem modo fit ut animos libenter aegros et captantes causas doloris vetera atque oblitterata contristant. Et quae praeterierunt et quae futura sunt absunt: neutra sentimus. Non est autem nisi ex eo quod sentias dolor. Vale.

LIBER NONUS

LXXV. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Minus tibi accuratas a me epistulas mitti quereris. Quis enim accurate loquitur nisi qui vult putide loqui? Qualis sermo meus esset si una desideremus aut ambularemus, inlaboratus et facilis, tales esse epistulas meas volo, quae nihil habent accersitum nec fictum. [2] Si fieri posset, quid sentiam ostendere quam loqui malletm. Etiam si disputarem, nec supploderem pedem nec manum iactarem nec attollerem vocem, sed ista oratoribus reliquissetm, contentus sensus meos ad te pertulissetm, quos nec exornassem nec abiecissetm. [3] Hoc unum plane tibi adprobare vellem, omnia me illa sentire quae dicerem, nec tantum sentire sed amare. Aliter homines amicam, aliter liberos osculantur; tamen in hoc quoque amplexu tam sancto et moderato satis apparet adfectus. Non mehercules ieiuna esse et arida volo quae de rebus tam magnis dicentur (neque enim philosophia ingenio renuntiat), multum tamen operae inpendi verbis non oportet. [4] Haec sit propositi nostri summa: quod sentimus loquamur, quod loquimur sentiamus; concordet sermo cum vita. Ille promissum suum implevit qui et cum videas illum et cum audias idem est. Videbimus qualis sit, quantus sit: unus est. [5] Non delectent verba nostra sed prosint. Si tamen contingere eloquentia non sollicito potest, si aut parata est aut parvo constat, adsit et res pulcherrimas prosequatur: sit talis ut res potius quam se ostendat. Aliae artes ad ingenium totae pertinent, hic animi negotium agitur. [6] Non quaerit aeger medicum eloquentem, sed si ita competit ut idem ille qui sanare potest compte de iis quae facienda sunt disserat, boni consulat. Non tamen erit quare gratuletur sibi quod inciderit in medicum etiam disertum; hoc enim tale est quale si peritus gubernator etiam formosus est. [7] Quid aures meas scabis? quid oblectas? aliud agitur: urendus, secandus, abstinendus sum. Ad haec adhibitus es; curare debes morbum veterem, gravem, publicum; tantum negotii habes quantum in pestilentia medicus. Circa verba occupatus es? iamdudum gaude si sufficis rebus. Quando tam multa disces? quando quae didiceris adfiges tibi ita ut excidere non possint? quando illa experieris? Non enim, ut cetera, memoriae tradidisse satis est: in opere temptanda sunt; non est beatus qui scit illa, sed <qui> facit.

[9] Primi sunt qui sapientiam nondum habent sed iam in vicinia eius constiterunt; tamen etiam quod prope est extra est. Qui sint hi quaeris? qui omnes iam adfectus ac vitia posuerunt, quae erant conplectenda didicerunt, sed illis adhuc inexperta fiducia est. Bonum suum nondum in usu habent, iam tamen in illa quae fugerunt decidere non possunt; iam ibi sunt unde non est retro lapsus, sed hoc illis de se nondum liquet: quod in quadam epistula scripsisse me memini, ‘scire se nesciunt’. Iam contigit illis bono suo frui, nondum confidere. [10] Quidam hoc proficientium genus de quo locutus sum ita conplectuntur ut illos dicant iam effugisse morbos animi, adfectus nondum, et adhuc in lubrico stare, quia nemo sit extra periculum malitiae nisi qui totam eam excussit; nemo autem illam excussit nisi qui pro illa sapientiam adsumpsit. [11] Quid inter morbos animi intersit et adfectus saepe iam dixi. Nunc quoque te admonebo: morbi sunt inveterata vitia et dura, ut avaritia, ut ambitio; nimio artius haec animum implicuerunt et perpetua eius mala esse coeperunt. Ut breviter finiam, morbus est iudicium in pravo pertinax, tamquam valde expetenda sint quae leviter expetenda sunt; vel, si mavis, ita finiamus: nimis imminere leviter petendis vel ex toto non petendis, aut in magno pretio habere in aliquo habenda vel in nullo. [12] Adfectus sunt motus animi improbables, subiti et concitati, qui frequentes neglectique fecere morbum, sicut destillatio una nec adhuc in morem adducta tussim facit, adsidua et vetus pthisin. Itaque qui plurimum profecere extra morbos sunt, adfectus adhuc sentiunt perfecto proximi.

[14] Tertium illud genus extra multa et magna vitia est, sed non extra omnia. Effugit avaritiam sed iram adhuc sentit; iam non sollicitatur libidine, etiamnunc ambitione; iam non concupiscit, sed adhuc timet, et in ipso metu ad quaedam satis firmus est, quibusdam cedit: mortem contemnit, dolorem reformidat.

[16] ‘Ego vero’ inquis ‘spero me posse et amplioris ordinis fieri.’ Optaverim hoc nobis magis quam promiserim: praeoccupati sumus, ad virtutem contendimus inter vitia districti. Pudet dicere: honesta colimus quantum vacat. At quam grande praemium expectat, si occupationes nostras et mala tenacissima abrumpimus! [17] Non cupiditas nos, non timor pellet; inagitati terroribus, incorrupti voluptatibus, nec mortem horrebimus nec deos; sciemus mortem malum non esse, deos malo non esse. Tam inbecillum est quod nocet quam cui nocetur: optima vi noxia carent. [18] Expectant nos, <si> ex hac aliquando faece in illud evadimus sublime et excelsum, tranquillitas animi et expulsis erroribus absoluta libertas. Quaeris quae sit ista? Non homines timere, non deos; nec turpia velle nec nimia; in se ipsum habere maximam potestatem: inaestimabile bonum est suum fieri. Vale.

LXXVI. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Inimicitias mihi denuntias si quicquam ex iis quae cotidie facio ignoraveris. Vide quam simpliciter tecum vivam: hoc quoque tibi committam. Philosophum audio et quidem quintum iam diem habeo ex quo in scholam eo et ab octava disputantem audio. ‘Bona’ inquis ‘aetate.’ Quidni bona? quid autem stultius est quam quia diu non didiceris non discere? [2] ‘Quid ergo? idem faciam quod trossuli et iuvenes?’ Bene mecum agitur si hoc unum senectutem meam dedecet: omnis aetatis homines haec schola admittit. ‘In hoc senescamus, ut iuvenes sequamur?’ In theatrum senex ibo et in circum deferar et nullum par sine me depugnabit: ad philosophum ire erubescam? [3] Tamdiu discendum est quamdiu nescias; si proverbio credimus, quamdiu vivas. Nec ulli hoc rei magis convenit quam huic: tamdiu discendum est quemadmodum vivas quamdiu vivas. Ego tamen illic aliquid et doceo. Quaeris quid doceam? etiam seni esse discendum. [4] Pudet autem me generis humani quotiens scholam intravi. Praeter ipsum theatrum Neapolitanorum, ut scis, transeundum est Metronactis petenti domum. Illud quidem fartum est, et ingenti studio quis sit pythaeus bonus iudicatur; habet tubicen quoque Graecus et praeco concursus: at in illo loco in quo vir bonus quaeritur, in quo vir bonus discitur, paucissimi sedent, et hi plerisque videntur nihil boni negotii habere quod agant; inepti et inertes vocantur. Mihi contingat iste derisus: aequo animo audienda sunt inperitorum convicia et ad honesta vadenti contemnendus est ipse contemptus.

[5] Perge, Lucili, et propera, ne tibi accidat quod mihi, ut senex discas; immo ideo magis propera quoniam id nunc adgressus es quod perdiscere vix senex possis. ‘Quantum’ inquis ‘proficiam?’ Quantum temptaveris. [6] Quid expectas? nulli sapere casu obtigit. Pecunia veniet ultro, honor offeretur, gratia ac dignitas fortasse ingerentur tibi: virtus in te non incidet. Ne levi quidem opera aut parvo labore cognoscitur; sed est tanti laborare omnia bona semel occupaturo. Unum est enim bonum quod honestum: in illis nihil invenies veri, nihil certi, quaecumque famae placent. [7] Quare autem unum sit bonum quod honestum dicam, quoniam parum me exsecutum priore epistula iudicas magisque hanc rem tibi laudatam quam probatam putas, et in artum quae dicta sunt contraham.

[8] Omnia suo bono constant. Vitem fertilitas commendat et sapor vini, velocitas cervum; quam fortia dorso iumenta sint quaeris, quorum hic unus est usus, sarcinam ferre; in cane sagacitas prima est, si investigare debet feras, cursus, si consequi, audacia, si mordere et invadere: id in quoque optimum esse debet cui nascitur, quo censetur. [9] In homine quid est optimum? ratio: hac antecedit animalia, deos sequitur. Ratio ergo perfecta proprium bonum est, cetera illi cum animalibus satisque communia sunt. Valet: et leones. Formonsus est: et pavones. Velox est: et equi. Non dico, in his omnibus vincitur; non quaero quid in se maximum habeat, sed quid suum. Corpus habet: et arbores. Habet impetum ac motum voluntarium: et bestiae et vermes. Habet vocem: sed quanto clariorem canes, acutiorem aquilae, graviorem tauri, dulciorem mobilioremque luscinii? [10] Quid est in homine proprium? ratio: haec recta et consummata felicitatem hominis implevit. Ergo si omnis res, cum bonum suum perfecit, laudabilis est et ad finem naturae suae pervenit, homini autem suum bonum ratio est, si hanc perfecit laudabilis est et finem naturae suae tetigit. Haec ratio perfecta virtus vocatur eademque honestum est. [11] Id itaque unum bonum est in homine quod unum hominis est; nunc enim non quaerimus quid sit bonum, sed quid sit hominis bonum. Si nullum aliud est hominis quam ratio, haec erit unum eius bonum, sed pensandum cum omnibus. Si sit aliquis malus, puto inprobabitur; si bonus, puto probabitur. Id ergo in homine primum solumque est quo et probatur et inprobatur.

[12] Non dubitas an hoc sit bonum; dubitas an solum bonum sit. Si quis omnia alia habeat, valetudinem, divitias, imagines multas, frequens atrium, sed malus ex confesso sit, inprobabis illum; item si quis nihil quidem eorum quae rettuli habeat, deficiatur pecunia, clientium turba, nobilitate et avorum proavorumque serie, sed ex confesso bonus sit, probabis illum. Ergo hoc unum est bonum hominis, quod qui habet, etiam si aliis destituitur, laudandus est, quod qui non habet in omnium aliorum copia damnatur ac reicitur. [13] Quae condicio rerum, eadem hominum est: navis bona dicitur non quae pretiosis coloribus picta est nec cui argenteum aut aureum rostrum est nec cuius tutela ebore caelata est nec quae fiscis atque opibus regiis pressa est, sed stabilis et firma et iuncturis aquam excludentibus spissa, ad ferendum incursum maris solida, gubernaculo parens, velox et non sentiens ventum; [14] gladium bonum dices non cui auratus est balteus nec cuius vagina gemmis distinguitur, sed cui et ad secandum subtilis acies est et mucro munimentum omne rupturus; regula non quam formosa, sed quam recta sit quaeritur: eo quidque laudatur cui comparatur, quod illi proprium est. [15] Ergo in homine quoque nihil ad rem pertinet quantum aret, quantum feneret, a quam multis salutetur, quam pretioso incumbat lecto, quam perlucido poculo bibat, sed quam bonus sit. Bonus autem est si ratio eius explicita et recta est et ad naturae suae voluntatem accommodata. [16] Haec vocatur virtus, hoc est honestum et unicum hominis bonum. Nam cum sola ratio perficiat hominem, sola ratio perfecte beatum facit; hoc autem unum bonum est quo uno beatus efficitur. Dicimus et illa bona esse quae a virtute profecta contractaque sunt, id est opera eius omnia; sed ideo unum ipsa bonum est quia nullum sine illa est. [17] Si omne in animo bonum est, quidquid illum confirmat, extollit, amplificat, bonum est; validiorem autem animum et excelsiorem et ampliorem facit virtus. Nam cetera quae cupiditates nostras iniritant deprimunt quoque animum et labefaciunt et cum videntur attollere inflant ac multa vanitate deludunt. Ergo id unum bonum est quo melior animus efficitur. [18] Omnes actiones totius vitae honesti ac turpis respectu temperantur; ad haec faciendi et non faciendi ratio derigitur. Quid sit hoc dicam: vir bonus quod honeste se facturum putaverit faciet etiam [sine pecunia] si laboriosum erit, faciet etiam si damnosum erit, faciet etiam si periculosum erit; rursus quod turpe erit non faciet, etiam si pecuniam adferet, etiam si voluptatem, etiam si potentiam; ab honesto nulla re deterrebitur, ad turpia nulla invitabitur. [19] Ergo si honestum utique secuturus est, turpe utique vitaturus, et in omni actu vitae spectaturus haec duo, <nec aliud bonum quam honestum> nec aliud malum quam turpe, si una indepravata virtus est et sola permanet tenoris sui, unum est bonum virtus, cui iam accidere ne sit bonum non potest. Mutationis periculum effugit: stultitia ad sapientiam erepit, sapientia in stultitiam non revolvitur.

inconsulto impetu plerosque calcasse: inventus est qui divitias proiceret, inventus est qui flammis manum inponeret, cuius risum non interromperet tortor, qui in funere liberorum lacrimam non mitteret, qui morti non trepidus occurreret; amor enim, ira, cupiditas pericula depoposcerunt. Quod potest brevis obstinatio animi, aliquo stimulo excitata, quanto magis virtus, quae non ex impetu nec subito sed aequaliter valet, cui perpetuum robur est? [21] Sequitur ut quae ab inconsultis saepe contemnuntur, a sapientibus semper, ea nec bona sint nec mala. Unum ergo bonum ipsa virtus est, quae inter hanc fortunam et illam superba incedit cum magno utriusque contemptu.

[22] Si hanc opinionem receperis, aliquid bonum esse praeter honestum, nulla non virtus laborabit; nulla enim obtineri poterit si quicquam extra se respexerit. Quod si est, rationi repugnat, ex qua virtutes sunt, et veritati, quae sine ratione non est; quaecumque autem opinio veritati repugnat falsa est. [23] Virum bonum concedas necesse est summae pietatis erga deos esse. Itaque quidquid illi accidit aequo animo sustinebit; sciet enim id accidisse lege divina qua universa procedunt. Quod si est, unum illi bonum erit quod honestum; in hoc enim positum <est> et parere diis nec excandescere ad subita nec deplorare sortem suam, sed patienter excipere fatum et facere imperata. [24] Si ullum aliud est bonum quam honestum, sequetur nos aviditas vitae, aviditas rerum vitam instruentium, quod est intolerabile, infinitum, vagum. Solum ergo bonum est honestum, cui modus est.

videbitur, nisi animum adleves et te ipse interroges, si res exegerit ut pro patria moriaris et salutem omnium civium tua redimas, an porrecturus sis cervicem non tantum patienter sed etiam libenter. Si hoc facturus es, nullum aliud bonum est; omnia enim relinquis ut hoc habeas. Vide quanta vis honesti sit: pro re publica morieris, etiam si statim facturus hoc eris cum scieris tibi esse faciendum. [28] Interdum ex re pulcherrima magnum gaudium etiam exiguo tempore ac brevi capitur, et quamvis fructus operis peracti nullus ad defunctum exemptumque rebus humanis pertineat, ipsa tamen contemplatio futuri operis iuvat, et vir fortis ac iustus, cum mortis suae pretia ante se posuit, libertatem patriae, salutem omnium pro quibus dependit animam, in summa voluptate est et periculo suo fruitur. [29] Sed ille quoque cui etiam hoc gaudium eripitur quod tractatio operis maximi et ultimi praestat, nihil cunctatus desiliet in mortem, facere recte pieque contentus. Oppone etiamnunc illi multa quae dehortentur, dic, ‘factum tuum matura sequetur oblivio et parum grata existimatio civium’. Respondebit tibi, ‘ista omnia extra opus meum sunt, ego ipsum contemplor; hoc esse honestum scio; itaque quocumque ducit ac vocat venio’.

[30] Hoc ergo unum bonum est, quod non tantum perfectus animus sed generosus quoque et indolis bonae sentit: cetera levia sunt, mutabilia. Itaque sollicite possidentur; etiam si favente fortuna in unum congesta sunt, dominis suis incubant gravia et illos semper premunt, aliquando et inludunt. [31] Nemo ex istis quos purpuratos vides felix est, non magis quam ex illis quibus sceptrum et chlamydem in scaena fabulae adsignant: cum praesente populo lati incesserunt et coturnati, simul exierunt, excalceantur et ad staturam suam redeunt. Nemo istorum quos divitiae honoresque in altiore fastigio ponunt magnus est. Quare ergo magnus videtur? cum basi illum sua metiris. Non est magnus pumilio licet in monte constiterit; colossus magnitudinem suam servabit etiam si steterit in puteo. [32] Hoc laboramus errore, sic nobis inponitur, quod neminem aestimamus eo quod est, sed adicimus illi et ea quibus adornatus est. Atqui cum voles veram hominis aestimationem inire et scire qualis sit, nudum inspicere; ponat patrimonium, ponat honores et alia fortunae mendacia, corpus ipsum exuat: animum intueri, qualis quantusque sit, alieno an suo magnus. [33] Si rectis oculis gladios micantes videt et si scit sua nihil interesse utrum anima per os an per iugulum exeat, beatum voca; si cum illi denuntiata sunt corporis tormenta et quae casu veniunt et quae potentioris iniuria, si vincula et exilia et vanas humanarum formidines mentium securus audit et dicit:

o virgo, nova mi facies inopinave surgit;
omnia praecepi atque animo mecum ipse peregi.

Tu hodie ista denuntias: ego semper denuntiavi mihi et hominem paravi ad humana.’ [34] Praecogitati mali mollis ictus venit. At stultis et fortunae credentibus omnis videtur nova rerum et inopinata facies; magna autem pars est apud inperitos mali novitas. Hoc ut scias, ea quae putaverant aspera fortius, cum adsuevere, patiuntur. [35] Ideo sapiens adsuescit futuris malis, et quae alii diu patiendo levia faciunt hic levia facit diu cogitando. Audimus aliquando voces inperitorum dicentium ‘sciebam hoc mihi restare’: sapiens scit sibi omnia restare; quidquid factum est, dicit ‘sciebam’. Vale.

LXXVII. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Subito nobis hodie Alexandrinae naves apparuerunt, quae praemitti solent et nuntiare secuturae classis adventum: tabellarias vocant. Gratus illarum Campaniae aspectus est: omnis in pilis Puteolorum turba consistit et ex ipso genere velorum Alexandrinas quamvis in magna turba navium intellegit; solis enim licet siparum intendere, quod in alto omnes habent naves. [2] Nulla enim res aequè adiuvat cursum quam summa pars veli; illinc maxime navis urgetur. Itaque quotiens ventus increbuit maiorque est quam expedit, antemna summittitur: minus habet virium flatus ex humili. Cum intravere Capreas et promunturium ex quo alta procelloso speculatur vertice Pallas, ceterae velo iubentur esse contentae: siparum

Alexandrinarum insigne [indiciu] est.

[3] In hoc omnium discursu properantium ad litus magnam ex pigritia mea sensi voluptatem, quod epistulas meorum accepturus non properavi scire quis illic esset rerum mearum status, quid adferrent: olim iam nec perit quicquam mihi nec acquiritur. Hoc, etiam si senex non essem, fuerat sentiendum, nunc vero multo magis: quantulumcumque haberem, tamen plus iam mihi superesset viatici quam viae, praesertim cum eam viam simus ingressi quam peragere non est necesse. [4] Iter imperfectum erit si in media parte aut citra petitu[m] locu[m] steteris: vita non est imperfecta si honesta est; ubicumque desines, si bene desines, tota est. Saepe autem et fortiter desinendum est et non ex maximis causis; nam nec eae maximae sunt quae nos tenent.

[5] Tullius Marcellinus, quem optime noveras, adulescens quietus et cito senex, morbo et non insanabili correptus sed longo et molesto et multa imperante, coepit deliberare de morte. Convocavit complures amicos. Unusquisque aut, quia timidus erat, id illi suadebat quod sibi suasisset, aut, quia adulator et blandus, id consiliu[m] dabat quod deliberanti gratius fore suspicabatur. [6] Amicus noster Stoicus, homo egregius et, ut verbis illum quibus laudari dignus est laudem, vir fortis ac strenuus, videtur mihi optime illum cohortatus. Sic enim coepit: 'noli, mi Marcelline, torqueri tamquam de re magna deliberes. Non est res magna vivere: omnes servi tui vivunt, omnia animalia: magnum est honeste mori, prudenter, fortiter. Cogita quamdiu iam idem facias: cibus, somnus, libido — per hunc circulum curritur; mori velle non tantum prudens aut fortis aut miser, etiam fastidiosus potest.' [7] Non opus erat suasore illi sed adiutore: servi parere nolebant. Primum detraxit illis metum et indicavit tunc familiam periculum adire cum incertum esset an mors domini voluntaria fuisset; alioqui tam mali exempli esse occidere dominum quam prohibere. [8] Deinde ipsum Marcellinum admonuit non esse inhumanum, quemadmodum cena peracta reliquiae circumstantibus dividantur, sic peracta vita aliquid porrigi iis qui totius vitae ministri fuissent. Erat Marcellinus facilis animi et liberalis etiam cum de suo fieret; minutas itaque summulas distribuit flentibus servis et illos ultro consolatus est. [9] Non fuit illi opus ferro, non sanguine: triduo abstinuit et in ipso cubiculo poni tabernaculum iussit. Solium deinde inlatum est, in quo diu iacuit et calda subinde suffusa paulatim defecit, ut aiebat, non sine quadam voluptate, quam adferre solet lenis dissolutio non inexpertis nobis, quos aliquando liquit animus.

[10] In fabellam excessi non ingrati tibi; exitum enim amici tui cognosces non difficilem nec miserum. Quamvis enim mortem sibi consciverit, tamen mollissime excessit et vita elapsus est. Sed ne inutilis quidem haec fabella fuerit; saepe enim talia exempla necessitas exigit. Saepe debemus mori nec volumus, morimur nec volumus. [11] Nemo tam inperitus est ut nesciat quandoque moriendum; tamen cum prope accessit, tergiversatur, tremit, plorat. Nonne tibi videtur stultissimus omnium qui flevit quod ante annos mille non vixerat? aequè stultus est qui flet quod post annos mille non vivet. Haec paria sunt: non eris nec fuisti; utrumque tempus alienum est. [12] In hoc punctum coniectus es, quod ut extendas, quousque extendes? Quid fles? quid optas? perdis operam.

Desine fata deum flecti sperare precando.

Rata et fixa sunt et magna atque aeterna necessitate ducuntur: eo ibis quo omnia eunt. Quid tibi novi est? Ad hanc legem natus es; hoc patri tuo accidit, hoc matri, hoc maioribus, hoc omnibus ante te, hoc omnibus post te. Series invicta et nulla mutabilis ope inligavit ac trahit cuncta. [13] Quantus te populus moriturosum sequetur, quantus comitabitur! Fortior, ut opinor, esses, si multa milia tibi commorerentur; atqui multa milia et hominum et animalium hoc ipso momento quo tu mori dubitas animam variis generibus emittunt. Tu autem non putabas te aliquando ad id perventurum ad quod semper ibas? Nullum sine exitu iter est.

[14] Exempla nunc magnorum virorum me tibi iudicas relaturum? puerorum referam. Lacon ille memoriae traditur, inpubis adhuc, qui captus clamabat 'non serviam' sua illa Dorica lingua, et verbis fidem inposuit: ut primum iussus est fungi servili et contumelioso ministerio (adferre enim vas obscenum iubebatur), inlisum parieti caput rupit. [15] Tam prope libertas est: et servit aliquis? Ita non sic perire filium tuum malles quam per inertiam senem fieri? Quid ergo est cur perturberis, si mori fortiter etiam puerile est? Puta nolle te sequi: duceris. Fac tui iuris quod alieni est. Non sumes pueri spiritum, ut dicas 'non servio'? Infelix, servis hominibus, servis rebus, servis vitae; nam vita, si moriendi virtus abest, servitus est. [16] Ecquid habes propter quod expectes? voluptates ipsas quae te morantur ac retinent consumpsisti: nulla tibi nova est, nulla non iam odiosa ipsa satietate. Quis sit vini, quis mulsi sapor scis: nihil interest centum per vesicam tuam an mille amphorae transeant: saccus es. Quid sapiat ostreum, quid mullus optime nosti: nihil tibi luxuria tua in futuros annos intactum reservavit. Atqui haec sunt a quibus invitus divelleris. [17] Quid est aliud quod tibi eripi doleas? Amicos? Scis enim amicus esse? Patriam? tanti enim illam putas ut tardius cenes? Solem? quem, si posses, extingueres: quid enim umquam fecisti luce dignum? Confitere non curiae te, non fori, non ipsius rerum naturae desiderio tardiozem ad moriendum fieri: invitus relinquis macellum, in quo nihil reliquisti. [18] Mortem times: at quomodo illam media boletatione contemnis! Vivere vis: scis enim? Mori times: quid porro? ista vita non mors est? C. Caesar, cum illum transeuntem per Latinam viam unus ex custodiarum agmine demissa usque in pectus vetere barba rogaret mortem, 'nunc enim' inquit 'vivis?' Hoc istis respondendum est quibus succursura mors est: 'mori times: nunc enim vivis?' [19] 'Sed ego' inquit 'vivere volo, qui multa honeste facio; invitus relinquo officia vitae, quibus fideliter et industrie fungor.’ Quid? tu nescis unum esse ex vitae officiis et mori? Nullum officium relinquis; non enim certus numerus quem debeas explere finitur. [20] Nulla vita est non brevis; nam si ad naturam rerum respexeris, etiam Nestoris et Sattiae brevis est, quae inscribi monumento suo iussit annis se nonaginta novem vixisse. Vides aliquem gloriari senectute longa: quis illam ferre potuisset si contigisset centesimum implere? Quomodo fabula, sic vita: non quam diu, sed quam bene acta sit, refert. Nihil ad rem pertinet quo loco desinas. Quocumque voles desine: tantum bonam clausulam inpone. Vale.

LXXVIII. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Vexari te destillationibus crebris ac febriculis, quae longas destillationes et in consuetudinem adductas sequuntur, eo molestius mihi est quia expertus sum hoc genus valetudinis, quod inter initia contempsi — poterat adhuc adulescentia iniurias ferre et se adversus morbos contumaciter gerere — deinde succubui et eo perductus sum ut ipse destillarem, ad summam maciem deductus. [2] Saepe impetum cepi abrumpendae vitae: patris me indulgentissimi senectus retinuit. Cogitavi enim non quam fortiter ego mori possem, sed quam ille fortiter desiderare non posset. Itaque imperavi mihi ut viverem; aliquando enim et vivere fortiter facere est.

corporis, intermissio voluptatum. De morte satis dictum est: hoc unum dicam, non morbi hunc esse sed naturae metum. Multorum mortem distulit morbus et saluti illis fuit videri perire. Morieris, non quia aegrotas, sed quia vivis. Ista te res et sanatum manet; cum convalueris, non mortem sed valetudinem effugeris.

[7] Ad illud nunc proprium incommodum revertamur: magnos cruciatus habet morbus, sed hos tolerabiles intervalla faciunt. Nam summi doloris intentio invenit finem; nemo potest valde dolere et diu; sic nos amantissima nostri natura disposuit ut dolorem aut tolerabilem aut brevem faceret. [8] Maximi dolores consistunt in macerrimis corporis partibus: nervi articuli et quidquid aliud exile est acerrime saevit cum in arto vitia concepit. Sed cito hae partes obstupescunt et ipso dolore sensum doloris amittunt, sive quia spiritus naturali prohibitus cursu et mutatus in peius vim suam qua viget admonetque nos perdit, sive quia corruptus umor, cum desiit habere quo confluat, ipse se elidit et iis quae nimis implevit excutit sensum. [9] Sic podagra et cheragra et omnis vertebrarum dolor nervorumque interquiescit cum illa quae torquebat hebetavit; omnium istorum prima verminatio vexat, impetus mora extinguitur et finis dolendi est optorpuisse. Dentium, oculorum, aurium dolor ob hoc ipsum acutissimus est quod inter angusta corporis nascitur, non minus, mehercule, quam capitis ipsius; sed si incitator est, in alienationem soporemque convertitur. [10] Hoc itaque solacium vasti doloris est, quod necesse est desinas illum sentire si nimis senseris. Illud autem est quod inperitos in vexatione corporis male habet: non adsueverunt animo esse contenti; multum illis cum corpore fuit. Ideo vir magnus ac prudens animum diducit a corpore et multum cum meliore ac divina parte versatur, cum hac querula et fragili quantum necesse est. [11] ‘Sed molestum est’ inquit ‘carere adsuetis voluptatibus, abstinere cibo, sitire, esurire.’ Haec prima abstinentia gravia sunt, deinde cupiditas relanguescit ipsis per [se] quae cupimus fatigatis ac deficientibus; inde morosus est stomachus, inde quibus fuit aviditas cibi odium est. Desideria ipsa moriuntur; non est autem acerbum carere eo quod cupere desieris. [12] Adice quod nullus non intermittitur dolor aut certe remittitur. Adice quod licet cavere venturum et obsistere inminente remediis; nullus enim non signa praemittit, utique qui ex solito revertitur. Tolerabilis est morbi patientia, si contempseris id quod extremum minatur.

[13] Noli mala tua facere tibi ipse graviora et te querelis onerare: levis est dolor si nihil illi opinio adiecerit. Contra si exhortari te coeperis ac dicere ‘nihil est aut certe exiguum est; duremus; iam desinet’, levem illum, dum putas, facies. Omnia ex opinione suspensa sunt; non ambitio tantum ad illam respicit et luxuria et avaritia: ad opinionem dolemus. [14] Tam miser est quisque quam credidit. Detrahendas praeteritorum dolorum conquestiones puto et illa verba: ‘nulli umquam fuit peius. Quos cruciatus, quanta mala pertuli! Nemo me surrecturum putavit. Quotiens deploratus sum a meis, quotiens a medicis relictus! In eculeum inpositi non sic distrahuntur.’ Etiam si sunt vera ista, transierunt: quid iuvat praeteritos dolores retractare et miserum esse quia fueris? Quid quod nemo non multum malis suis adicit et sibi ipse mentitur? Deinde quod acerbum fuit ferre, tulisse iucundum est: naturale est mali sui fine gaudere. Circumcidenda ergo duo sunt, et futuri timor et veteris incommodi memoria: hoc ad me iam non pertinet, illud nondum. [15] In ipsis positus difficultatibus dicat, forsan et haec olim meminisse iuvabit.

Toto contra ille pugnet animo; vincetur si cesserit, vincet si se contra dolorem suum intenderit: nunc hoc plerique faciunt, adtrahunt in se ruinam cui obstandum est. Istud quod premit, quod inpendet, quod urguet, si subducere te coeperis, sequetur et gravius incumbet; si contra steteris et obniti volueris, repelletur. [16] Athletae quantum plagarum ore, quantum toto corpore excipiunt! ferunt tamen omne tormentum gloriae cupiditate nec tantum quia pugnant ista patiuntur, sed ut pugnent: exercitatio ipsa tormentum est. Nos quoque evincamus omnia, quorum praemium non corona nec palma est nec tubicen praedicationi nominis nostri silentium faciens, sed virtus et firmitas animi et pax in ceterum parta, si semel in aliquo certamine debellata fortuna est. ‘Dolorem gravem sentio.’ [17] Quid ergo? non sentis si illum muliebriter tuleris? Quemadmodum perniciosior est hostis fugientibus, sic omne fortuitum incommodum magis instat cedenti et averso. ‘Sed grave est.’ Quid? nos ad hoc fortes sumus, ut levia portemus? Utrum vis longum esse morbum an concitatum et brevem? Si longus est, habet intercapedinem, dat refectioni locum, multum temporis donat, necesse est, ut exsurgat, et desinat: brevis morbus ac praeceps alterutrum faciet, aut extinguetur aut extinguet. Quid autem interest, non sit an non sim? in utroque finis dolendi est.

[18] Illud quoque proderit, ad alias cogitationes avertere animum et a dolore discedere. Cogita quid honeste, quid fortiter feceris; bonas partes tecum ipse tracta; memoriam in ea quae maxime miratus es sparge; tunc tibi fortissimus quisque et victor doloris occurrat: ille qui dum varices exsecandas praeberet legere librum perseveravit, ille qui non desiit ridere cum hoc ipsum irati tortores omnia instrumenta crudelitatis suae experirentur. Non vincetur dolor ratione, qui victus est risu? [19] Quidquid vis nunc licet dicas, destillationes et vim continuae tussis egerentem viscerum partes et febrem praecordia ipsa torrentem et sitim et artus in diversum articulis exeuntibus tortos: plus est flamma et eculeus et lamina et vulneribus ipsis intumescantibus quod illa renovaret et altius urgeret inpressum. Inter haec tamen aliquis non gemit. Parum est: non rogavit. Parum est: non respondit. Parum est: risit et quidem ex animo. Vis tu post hoc dolorem deridere?

[20] ‘Sed nihil’ inquit ‘agere sinit morbus, qui me omnibus abduxit officiis.’ Corpus tuum valetudo tenet, non et animum. Itaque cursoris moratur pedes, sutoris aut fabri manus inpedit: si animus tibi esse in usu solet, suadebis docebis, audies disces, quaeres recordaberis. Quid porro? nihil agere te credis si temperans aeger sis? ostendes morbum posse superari vel certe sustineri. [21] Est, mihi crede, virtuti etiam in lectulo locus. Non tantum arma et acies dant argumenta alacris animi indomitique terroribus: et in vestimentis vir fortis apparet. Habes quod agas: bene luctare cum morbo. Si nihil te coegerit, si nihil exoraverit, insigne prodis exemplum. O quam magna erat gloriae materia, si spectaremur aegri! ipse te specta, ipse te lauda.

[22] Praeterea duo genera sunt voluptatum. Corporales morbus inhibet, non tamen tollit; immo, si verum aestimes, incitat. Magis iuvat bibere sitientem, gratior est esurienti cibus; quidquid ex abstinentia contingit avidius excipitur. Illas vero animi voluptates, quae maiores certioresque sunt, nemo medicus aegro negat. Has quisquis sequitur et bene intellegit omnia sensuum blandimenta contemnit. [23] ‘O infelicem aegrum!’ Quare? quia non vino nivem diluit? quia non rigorem potionis suae, quam capaci scypho miscuit, renovat fracta insuper glacie? quia non ostrea illi Lucrina in ipsa

mensa aperiuntur? quia non circa cenationem eius tumultus cocorum est ipsos cum opsoniis focos transferentium? Hoc enim iam luxuria commenta est: ne quis intepescat cibus, ne quid palato iam calloso parum ferveat, cenam culina prosequitur. [24] 'O infelicem aegrum!' Edet quantum concoquat; non iacebit in conspectu aper ut vilis caro a mensa relegatus, nec in repositorio eius pectora avium (totas enim videre fastidium est) congesta ponentur. Quid tibi mali factum est? cenabis tamquam aeger, immo aliquando tamquam sanus.

[28] His te cogitationibus recrea et interim epistulis nostris vaca. Veniet aliquando tempus quod nos iterum iungat ac misceat; quantulumlibet sit illud, longum faciet scientia utendi. Nam, ut Posidonius ait, 'unus dies hominum eruditorum plus patet quam inperitis longissima aetas'. [29] Interim hoc tene, hoc morde: adversis non succumbere, laetis non credere, omnem fortunae licentiam in oculis habere, tamquam quidquid potest facere factura sit. Quidquid expectatum est diu, levius accedit. Vale.

LXXIX. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Expecto epistulas tuas quibus mihi indices circuitus Siciliae totius quid tibi novi ostenderit, et omnia de ipsa Charybdi certiora. Nam Scyllam saxum esse et quidem non terribile navigantibus optime scio: Charybdis an respondeat fabulis perscribi mihi desidero et, si forte observaveris (dignum est autem quod observes), fac nos certiores utrum uno tantum vento agatur in vertices an omnis tempestas aequae mare illud contorqueat, et an verum sit quidquid illo freti turbine abreptum est per multa milia trahi conditum et circa Tauromenitanum litus emergere. [2] Si haec mihi perscripseris, tunc tibi audebo mandare ut in honorem meum Aetnam quoque ascendas, quam consumi et sensim subsidere ex hoc colligunt quidam, quod aliquanto longius navigantibus solebat ostendi. Potest hoc accidere non quia montis altitudo descendit, sed quia ignis evanuit et minus vehemens ac largus effertur, ob eandem causam fumo quoque per diem segniore. Neutrum autem incredibile est, nec montem qui devoretur cotidie minui, nec manere eundem, quia non ipsum <ignis> exest sed in aliqua inferna valle conceptus exaestuat et aliis pascitur, in ipso monte non alimentum habet sed viam. [3] In Lycia regio notissima est (Hephaestion incolae vocant), foratum pluribus locis solum, quod sine ullo nascentium damno ignis innoxius circumit. Laeta itaque regio est et herbida, nihil flammis adurentibus sed tantum vi remissa ac languida refulgentibus.

ultimi: parata verba invenit, quae aliter instructa novam faciem habent. Nec illis manus inicit tamquam alienis; sunt enim publica. [Iurisconsulti negant quicquam publicum usu capi.] [7] Aut ego te non novi aut Aetna tibi salivam movet; iam cupis grande aliquid et par prioribus scribere. Plus enim sperare modestia tibi tua non permittit, quae tanta in te est ut videaris mihi retracturus ingenii tui vires, si vincendi periculum sit: tanta tibi priorum reverentia est.

[8] Inter cetera hoc habet boni sapientia: nemo ab altero potest vinci nisi dum ascenditur. Cum ad summum perveneris, paria sunt; non est incremento locus, statur. Numquid sol magnitudini suae adicit? numquid ultra quam solet luna procedit? Maria non crescunt; mundus eundem habitum ac modum servat. [9] Extollere se quae iustam magnitudinem implevere non possunt: quicumque fuerint sapientes, pares erunt et aequales. Habebit unusquisque ex iis proprias dotes: alius erit affabilior, alius expeditior, alius promptior in eloquendo, alius facundior: illud de quo agitur, quod beatum facit, aequalest in omnibus. [10] An Aetna tua possit sublabi et in se ruere, an hoc excelsum cacumen et conspicuum per vasti maris spatia detrahat adsidua vis ignium, nescio: virtutem non flamma, non ruina inferius adducet; haec una maiestas deprimi nescit. Nec proferri ultra nec referri potest; sic huius, ut caelestium, stata magnitudo est. Ad hanc nos conemur educere. [11] Iam multum operis effecti est; immo, si verum fateri volo, non multum. Nec enim bonitas est pessimis esse meliorem: quis oculis gloriatur qui suspicetur diem? Cui sol per caliginem splendet, licet contentus interim sit effugisse tenebras, adhuc non fruitur bono lucis. [12] Tunc animus noster habebit quod gratuletur sibi cum emissus his tenebris in quibus volutatur non tenui visu clara prospexerit, sed totum diem admiserit et redditus caelo suo fuerit, cum receperit locum quem occupavit sorte nascendi. Sursum illum vocant initia sua; erit autem illic etiam antequam hac custodia exsolvatur, cum vitia disiecerit purusque ac levis in cogitationes divinas emicuerit.

ubi invidia secessit. [14] Quamdiu videbatur furere Democritus! Vix recepit Socraten fama. Quamdiu Catonem civitas ignoravit! respuit nec intellexit nisi cum perdidit. Rutili innocentia ac virtus lateret, nisi accepisset iniuriam: dum violatur, effulsit. Numquid non sorti suae gratias egit et exilium suum complexus est? De his loquor quos inlustravit fortuna dum vexat: quam multorum profectus in notitiam evasere post ipsos! quam multos fama non excepit sed eruit! [15] Vides Epicurum quantopere non tantum eruditiores sed haec quoque inperitorum turba miretur: hic ignotus ipsis Athenis fuit, circa quas delituerat. Multis itaque iam annis Metrodoro suo superstes in quadam epistula, cum amicitiam suam et Metrodori grata commemoratione cecinisset, hoc novissime adiecit, nihil sibi et Metrodoro inter bona tanta nocuisse quod ipsos illa nobilis Graecia non ignotos solum habuisset sed paene inauditos. [16] Numquid ergo non postea quam esse desierat inventus est? numquid non opinio eius enituit? Hoc Metrodorus quoque in quadam epistula confitetur, se et Epicurum non satis enotuisse; sed post se et Epicurum magnum paratumque nomen habituros qui voluissent per eadem ire vestigia. [17] Nulla virtus latet, et latuisse non ipsius est damnum: veniet qui conditam et saeculi sui malignitate compressam dies publicet. Paucis natus est qui populum aetatis suae cogitat. Multa annorum milia, multa populorum supervenient: ad illa respice. Etiam si omnibus tecum viventibus silentium livor indixerit, venient qui sine offensa, sine gratia iudicent. Si quod est pretium virtutis ex fama, nec hoc interit. Ad nos quidem nihil pertinebit posterorum sermo; tamen etiam non sentientes colet ac frequentabit. [18] Nulli non virtus et vivo et mortuo rettulit gratiam, si modo illam bona secutus est fide, si se non exornavit et pinxit, sed idem fuit sive ex denunciato videbatur sive inparatus ac subito. Nihil simulatio proficit; paucis inponit leviter extrinsecus inducta facies: veritas in omnem partem sui eadem est. Quae decipiunt nihil habent solidi. Tenue est mendacium: perlucet si diligenter inspexeris. Vale.

LXXX. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Hodierno die non tantum meo beneficio mihi vaco sed spectaculi, quod omnes molestos ad sphaeromachian avocavit. Nemo inrumpet, nemo cogitationem meam inpediet, quae hac ipsa fiducia procedit audacius. Non crepabit subinde ostium, non adlevabitur velum: licebit tuto vadere, quod magis necessarium est per se eunti et suam sequenti viam. Non ergo sequor priores? facio, sed permitto mihi et invenire aliquid et mutare et relinquere; non servio illis, sed assentior.

[2] Magnum tamen verbum dixi, qui mihi silentium promittebam et sine interpellatore secretum: ecce ingens clamor ex stadio perfertur et me non excutit mihi, sed in huius ipsius rei contemplationem transfert. Cogito mecum quam multi corpora exerceant, ingenia quam pauci; quantus ad spectaculum non fidele et lusorium fiat concursus, quanta sit circa artes bonas solitudo; quam inbecilli animo sint quorum lacertos umerosque miramur. [3] Illud maxime revolve mecum: si corpus perduci exercitatione ad hanc patientiam potest qua et pugnos pariter et calces non unius hominis ferat, qua solem ardentissimum in ferventissimo pulvere sustinens aliquis et sanguine suo madens diem ducat, quanto facilius animus conroboreari possit ut fortunae ictus invictus excipiat, ut proiectus, ut conculcatus exurgat. Corpus enim multis eget rebus ut valeat: animus ex se crescit, se ipse alit, se exercet. Illis multo cibo, multa potione opus est, multo oleo, longa denique opera: tibi continget virtus sine apparatu, sine impensa. Quidquid facere te potest bonum tecum est. [4] Quid tibi opus est ut sis bonus? velle. Quid autem melius potes velle quam eripere te huic servituti quae omnes premit, quam mancipia quoque condicionis extremae et in his sordibus nata omni modo exuere conantur? Peculium suum, quod comparaverunt ventre fraudato, pro capite numerant: tu non concupisces quanticumque ad libertatem pervenire, qui te in illa putas natum? [5] Quid ad arcam tuam respicis? emi non potest. Itaque in tabellas vanum coicitur nomen libertatis, quam nec qui emerunt habent nec qui vendiderunt: tibi des oportet istud bonum, a te petas. Libera te primum metu mortis (illa nobis iugum inponit), deinde metu paupertatis. [6] Si vis scire quam nihil in illa mali sit, compara inter se pauperum et divitum vultus: saepius pauper et fidelius ridet; nulla sollicitudo in alto est; etiam si qua incidit cura, velut nubes levis transit: horum qui felices vocantur hilaritas ficta est aut gravis et suppurata tristitia, eo quidem gravior quia interdum non licet palam esse miseros, sed inter aerumnas cor ipsum exedentes necesse est agere felicem. [7] Saepius hoc exemplo mihi utendum est, nec enim ullo efficacius exprimitur hic humanae vitae mimus, qui nobis partes quas male agamus adsignat. Ille qui in scaena latus incedit et haec resupinus dicit, en impero Argis; regna mihi liquit Pelops, qua ponto ab Helles atque ab Ionio mari urguetur Isthmos, servus est, quinque modios accipit et quinque denarios. [8] Ille qui superbus atque inpotens et fiducia virium tumidus ait, quod nisi quieris, Menelae, hac dextra occides, diurnum accipit, in centunculo dormit. Idem de istis licet omnibus dicas quos supra capita hominum supraque turbam delicatos lectica suspendit: omnium istorum personata felicitas est. Contemnes illos si despoliaveris. [9] Equum empturus solvi iubes stratum, detrahis vestimenta venalibus ne qua vitia corporis lateant: hominem involutum aestimas? Mangones quidquid est quod displiceat, id aliquo lenocinio abscondunt, itaque ementibus ornamenta ipsa suspecta sunt: sive crus alligatum sive brachium aspiceres, nudari iuberes et ipsum tibi corpus ostendi. [10] Vides illum Scythiae Sarmatiaeve regem insigni capitis decorum? Si vis illum aestimare totumque scire qualis sit, fasciam solve: multum mali sub illa latet. Quid de aliis loquor? si perpendere te voles, sepone pecuniam, domum, dignitatem, intus te ipse considera: nunc qualis sis aliis credis. Vale.

LXXXI. SENECA LUCILIO SUO SALUTEM

[1] Quereris incidisse te in hominem ingratum: si hoc nunc primum, age aut fortunae aut diligentiae tuae gratias. Sed nihil facere hoc loco diligentia potest nisi te malignum; nam si hoc periculum vitare volueris, non dabis beneficia; ita ne apud alium pereant, apud te peribunt. Non respondeant potius quam non dentur: et post malam segetem serendum est. Saepe quidquid perierat adsidua infelicis soli sterilitate unius anni restituit ubertas. [2] Est tanti, ut gratum inuenias, experiri et ingratos. Nemo habet tam certam in beneficiis manum ut non saepe fallatur: aberrent, ut aliquando haereant. Post naufragium maria temptantur; feneratorem non fugat a foro coctor. Cito inerti otio vita torpebit, si relinquendum est quidquid offendit. Te vero benigniorem haec ipsa res faciat; nam cuius rei eventus incertus est, id ut aliquando procedat saepe temptandum est.

beneficio vis iniuriae extinguitur. Nam cui, etiam si merita non antecessissent, oportebat ignosci, post beneficia laedenti plus quam venia debetur. [8] Non pono utrique par pretium: pluris aestimo beneficium quam iniuriam. Non omnes esse grati sciunt: debere beneficium potest etiam imprudens et rudis et unus e turba, utique dum prope est ab accepto, ignorat autem quantum pro eo debeat. Uni sapienti notum est quanti res quaeque taxanda sit. Nam ille de quo loquebar modo stultus, etiam si bonae voluntatis est, aut minus quam debet aut <alio quam debet> tempore aut quo non debet loco reddit; id quod referendum est effundit atque abicit.

gratiam scit nisi sapiens. Stultus quoque, utcumque scit et quemadmodum potest, referat; scientia illi potius quam voluntas desit: velle non discitur. [14] Sapiens omnia inter se comparabit; maius enim aut minus fit, quamvis idem sit, tempore, loco, causa. Saepe enim hoc <non> potuere divitiae in domum infusae quod opportune dati mille denarii. Multum enim interest donaveris an succurreris, servaverit illum tua liberalitas an instruxerit; saepe quod datur exiguum est, quod sequitur ex eo magnum. Quantum autem existimas interesse utrum aliquis quod daret a se [quod praestabat] sumpserit an beneficium acceperit ut daret?

miseratio contingit iis qui patiuntur iniurias quas posse fieri faciendo docuerunt), sed quod virtutum omnium pretium in ipsis est. Non enim exercentur ad praemium: recte facti fecisse merces est. [20] Gratus sum non ut alius mihi libentius praestet priori inritatus exemplo, sed ut rem iucundissimam ac pulcherrimam faciam; gratus sum non quia expedit, sed quia iuvat. Hoc ut scias ita esse, si gratum esse non licebit nisi ut videar ingratus, si reddere beneficium non aliter quam per speciem iniuriae potero, aequissimo animo ad honestum consilium per mediam infamiam tendam. Nemo mihi videtur pluris aestimare virtutem, nemo illi magis esse devotus quam qui boni viri famam perdidit ne conscientiam perderet. [21] Itaque, ut dixi, maiore tuo quam alterius bono gratus es; illi enim vulgaris et cotidiana res contigit, recipere quod dederat, tibi magna et ex beatissimo animi statu profecta, gratum fuisse. Nam si malitia miseros facit, virtus beatos, gratum autem esse virtus est, rem usitatam reddidisti, inaestimabilem consecutus es, conscientiam grati, quae nisi in animum divinum fortunatumque non pervenit.

[In] Contrarium autem huic adfectum summa infelicitas urget: nemo sibi gratus est qui alteri non fuit. Hoc me putas dicere, qui ingratus est miser erit? non differo illum: statim miser est. [22] Itaque ingrati esse vitemus non aliena causa sed nostra. Minimum ex nequitia levissimumque ad alios redundat: quod pessimum ex illa est et, ut ita dicam, spississimum, domi remanet et premit habentem, quemadmodum Attalus noster dicere solebat, ‘malitia ipsa maximam partem veneni sui bibit’. Illud venenum quod serpentes in alienam perniciem proferunt, sine sua continent, non est huic simile: hoc habentibus pessimum est. [23] Torquet se ingratus et macerat; odit quae accepit, quia redditurus est, et extenuat, iniurias vero dilatat atque auget. Quid autem eo miserius cui beneficia excidunt, haerent iniuriae? At contra sapientia exornat omne beneficium ac sibi ipsa commendat et se adsidua eius commemoratione delectat. [24] Malis una voluptas est et haec brevis, dum accipiunt beneficia, ex quibus sapienti longum gaudium manet ac perenne. Non enim illum accipere sed accepisse delectat, quod immortale est et adsiduum. Illa contemnit quibus laesus est, nec obliviscitur per neglegentiam sed volens. [25] Non vertit omnia in peius nec quaerit cui inputet casum, et peccata hominum ad fortunam potius refert. Non calumniatur verba nec vultus; quidquid accidit benigne interpretando levat. Non offensae potius quam officii meminit; quantum potest in priore ac meliore se memoria detinet, nec mutat animum adversus bene meritos nisi multum male facta praecedunt et manifestum etiam coniventi discrimen est; tunc quoque in hoc dumtaxat, ut talis sit post maiorem iniuriam qualis ante beneficium. Nam cum beneficio par est iniuria, aliquid in animo benivolentiae remanet. [26] Quemadmodum reus sententiis paribus absolvitur et semper quidquid dubium est humanitas inclinatur in melius, sic animus sapientis, ubi paria maleficiis merita sunt, desinit quidem debere, sed non desinit velle debere, et hoc facit quod qui post tabulas novas solvunt.

sit si satis gratus esse non potuit. [32] Eo perductus est furor ut periculosissima res sit beneficia in aliquem magna conferre; nam quia putat turpe non reddere, non vult esse cui reddat. Tibi habe quod accepisti; non repeto, non exigo: profuisse tutum sit. Nullum est odium perniciosius quam e beneficii violati pudore. Vale.

LXXXII. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Desii iam de te esse sollicitus. ‘Quem’ inquis ‘deorum sponsorem accepisti?’ Eum scilicet qui neminem fallit, animum recti ac boni amatorem. In tuto pars tui melior est. Potest fortuna tibi iniuriam facere: quod ad rem magis pertinet, non timeo ne tu facias tibi. I qua ire coepisti et in isto te vitae habitu compone placide, non molliter. [2] Male mihi esse malo quam molliter — <‘male’> nunc sic excipe quemadmodum a populo solet dici: dure, aspere, laboriose. Audire solemus sic quorundam vitam laudari quibus invidetur: ‘molliter vivit’; hoc dicunt, ‘mollis est’. Paulatim enim effeminatur animus atque in similitudinem otii sui et pigritiae in qua iacet solvitur. Quid ergo? viro non vel obrigescere satius est? * * * deinde idem delicati timent, [morti] cui vitam suam fecere similem. Multum interest inter otium et conditivum. [3] ‘Quid ergo?’ inquis ‘non satius est vel sic iacere quam in istis officiorum verticibus volutari?’ Utraque res detestabilis est, et contractio et torpor. Puto, aequae qui in odoribus iacet mortuus est quam qui rapitur unco; otium sine litteris mors est et hominis vivi sepultura. [4] Quid deinde prodest secessisse? tamquam non trans maria nos sollicitudinum causae persequantur. Quae latebra est in quam non intret metus mortis? quae tam emunita et in altum subducta vitae quies quam non dolor terret? quacumque te abdideris, mala humana circumstrepent. Multa extra sunt quae circumeunt nos quo aut fallant aut urgeant, multa intus quae in media solitudine exaestuant. [5] Philosophia circumdanda est, inexpugnabilis murus, quem fortuna multis machinis lacessitum non transit. In insuperabili loco stat animus qui externa deseruit et arce se sua vindicat; infra illum omne telum cadit. Non habet, ut putamus, fortuna longas manus: neminem occupat nisi haerentem sibi. [6] Itaque quantum possumus ab illa resiliamus; quod sola praestabit sui naturaeque cognitio. Sciat quo iturus sit, unde ortus, quod illi bonum, quod malum sit, quid petat, quid evitet, quae sit illa ratio quae adpetenda ac fugienda discernat, qua cupiditatum mansuescit insania, timorum saexitia conpescitur. [7] Haec quidam putant ipsos etiam sine philosophia repressisse; sed cum securos aliquis casus expertus est, exprimitur sera confessio; magna verba excidunt cum tortor poposcit manum, cum mors propius accessit. Possis illi dicere, 'facile provocabas mala absentia: ecce dolor, quem tolerabilem esse dicebas, ecce mors, quam contra multa animose locutus es; sonant flagella, gladius micat;

nunc animis opus, Aenea, nunc pectore firmo'.

[8] Faciet autem illud firmum adsidua meditatio, si non verba exercueris sed animum, si contra mortem te praeparaveris, adversus quam non exhortabitur nec attollet qui cavillationibus tibi persuadere temptaverit mortem malum non esse. Libet enim, Lucili, virorum optime, ridere ineptias Graecas, quas nondum, quamvis mirer, excussi. [9] Zenon noster hac conlectione utitur: 'nullum malum gloriosum est; mors autem gloriosa est; mors ergo non est malum'. Profecisti! liberatus sum metu; post hoc non dubitabo porrigere cervicem. Non vis severius loqui nec morituro risum movere? Non mehercules facile tibi dixerim utrum ineptior fuerit qui se hac interrogatione iudicavit mortis metum extinguere, an qui hoc, tamquam ad rem pertineret, conatus est solvere. [10] Nam et ipse interrogationem contrariam opposuit ex eo natam quod mortem inter indifferentia ponimus, quae adiaphora Graeci vocant. 'Nihil' inquit 'indifferens gloriosum est; mors autem gloriosum est; ergo mors non est indifferens.' Haec interrogatio vides ubi obrepit: mors non est gloriosa, sed fortiter mori gloriosum est. Et cum dicis 'indifferens nihil gloriosum est', concedo tibi ita ut dicam nihil gloriosum esse nisi circa indifferentia; tamquam indifferentia esse dico (id est nec bona nec mala) morbum, dolorem, paupertatem, exilium, mortem. [11] Nihil horum per se gloriosum est, nihil tamen sine his. Laudatur enim non paupertas, sed ille quem paupertas non summittit nec incurvat; laudatur non exilium, sed ille [Rutilius] qui fortiore vultu in exilium iit quam misisset; laudatur non dolor, sed ille quem nihil coegit dolor; nemo mortem laudat, sed eum cuius mors ante abstulit animum quam conturbavit. [12] Omnia ista per se non sunt honesta nec gloriosa, sed quidquid ex illis virtus adiit tractavitque honestum et gloriosum facit: illa in medio posita sunt. Interest utrum malitia illis an virtus manum admoverit; mors enim illa quae in Catone gloriosa est in Bruto statim turpis est et erubescenda. Hic est enim Brutus qui, cum periturus mortis moras quaereret, ad exonerandum ventrem secessit et evocatus ad mortem iussusque praebere cervicem, ‘praebebo’, inquit ‘ita vivam’. Quae dementia est fugere cum retro ire non possis! ‘Praebebo’, inquit ‘ita vivam’. Paene adiecit ‘vel sub Antonio’. O hominem dignum qui vitae dederetur!

[15] Est et horum, Lucili, quae appellamus media grande discrimen. Non enim sic mors indifferens est quomodo utrum capillos pares <an inpaes> habeas: mors inter illa est quae mala quidem non sunt, tamen habent mali speciem: sui amor est et permanendi conservandique se insita voluntas atque aspernatio dissolutionis, * * * quia videtur multa nobis bona eripere et nos ex hac cui adsuevimus rerum copia educere. Illa quoque res morti nos alienat, quod haec iam novimus, illa ad quae transituri sumus nescimus qualia sint, et horremus ignota. Naturalis praeterea tenebrarum metus est, in quas adductura mors creditur. [16] Itaque etiam si indifferens mors est, non tamen ea est quae facile negligi possit: magna exercitatione durandus est animus ut conspectum eius accessumque patiat. Mors contemni debet magis quam solet; multa enim de illa credidimus; multorum ingeniis certatum est ad augendam eius infamiam; descriptus est carcer infernus et perpetua nocte oppressa regio, in qua

aeternum latrans exsanguis terreat umbras.

Etiam cum persuaseris istas fabulas esse nec quicquam defunctis superesse quod timeant, subit alius metus: aequae enim timent ne apud inferos sint quam ne nusquam. [17] His adversantibus quae nobis offundit longa persuasio, fortiter pati mortem quidni gloriosum sit et inter maxima opera mentis humanae? Quae numquam ad virtutem exsurget si mortem malum esse crediderit: exsurget si putabit indifferens esse. Non recipit rerum natura ut aliquis magno animo accedat ad id quod malum iudicat: pigre veniet et cunctanter. Non est autem gloriosum quod ab invito et tergiversante fit; nihil facit virtus quia necesse est. [18] Adice nunc quod nihil honeste fit nisi cui totus animus incubuit atque adfuit, cui nulla parte sui repugnavit. Ubi autem ad malum acceditur aut peiorum metu, aut spe bonorum ad quae pervenire tanti sit devorata unius mali patientia, dissident inter se iudicia facientis: hinc est quod iubeat proposita perficere, illinc quod retrahat et ab re suspecta ac periculosa fugiat; igitur in diversa distrahitur. Si hoc est, perit gloria; virtus enim concordii animo decreta peragit, non timet quod facit.

Tu ne cede malis, sed contra audentior ito
quam tua te fortuna sinet.

Nostri quidem videri volunt Zenonis interrogationem
veram esse, fallacem autem alteram et falsam quae illi opponitur. Ego non redigo ista ad legem dialecticam et ad illos artificii veternosissimi nodos: totum genus istuc exturbandum iudico quo circumscribi se qui interrogatur existimat et ad confessionem perductus aliud respondet, aliud putat. Pro veritate simplicius agendum est, contra metum fortius. [20] Haec ipsa quae involvuntur ab illis solvere malim et expandere, ut persuadeam, non ut inponam. In aciem educturus exercitum pro coniugibus ac liberis mortem obiturum quomodo exhortabitur? Do tibi Fabios totum rei publicae bellum in unam transferentes domum. Laconas tibi ostendo in ipsis Thermopylarum angustiis positos: nec victoriam sperant nec reditum; ille locus illis sepulchrum futurus est. [21] Quemadmodum exhortaris ut totius gentis ruinam obiectis corporibus excipiant et vita potius quam loco cedant? Dices 'quod malum est gloriosum non est; mors gloriosa est; mors ergo non malum'? O efficacem contionem! Quis post hanc dubitet se infestis ingerere mucronibus et stans mori? At ille Leonidas quam fortiter illos adlocutus est! 'Sic', inquit 'conmiliones, prandete tamquam apud inferos cenaturi.' Non in ore crevit cibus, non haesit in faucibus, non elapsus est manibus: alacres et ad prandium illi promiserunt et ad cenam.

[22] Quid? dux ille Romanus, qui ad occupandum locum milites missos, cum per ingentem hostium exercitum ituri essent, sic adlocutus est: 'ire, conmiliones, illo necesse est unde redire non est necesse'. Vides quam simplex et imperiosa virtus sit: quem mortalium circumscriptiones vestrae fortiores facere, quem erectiores possunt? frangunt animum, qui numquam minus contrahendus est et in minuta ac spinosa cogendus quam cum <ad> aliquid grande componitur. [23] Non trecentis, sed omnibus mortalibus mortis timor detrahi debet. Quomodo illos doces malum non esse? quomodo opiniones totius aevi, quibus protinus infantia inbuitur, evincis? quod auxilium invenis [quid dicis] inbecillitati humanae? quid dicis quo inflammati in media pericula inruant? qua oratione hunc timendi consensum, quibus ingenii viribus obnixam contra te persuasionem humani generis avertis? verba mihi captiosa componis et interrogatiunculas nectis? Magnis telis magna portenta feriuntur. [24] Serpentem illam in Africa saevam et Romanis legionibus bello ipso terribiliorem frustra sagittis fundisque petierunt: ne Pythio quidem vulnerabilis erat. Cum ingens magnitudo pro vastitate corporis solida ferrum et quidquid humanae torserant manus reiceret, molaribus demum fracta saxis est. Et adversus mortem tu tam minuta iacularis? subula leonem excipis? Acuta sunt ista quae dicis: nihil est acutius arista; quaedam inutilia et inefficacia ipsa subtilitas reddit. Vale.

LXXXIII. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Singulos dies tibi meos et quidem totos indicari iubes: bene de me iudicas si nihil esse in illis putas quod abscondam. Sic certe vivendum est tamquam in conspectu vivamus, sic cogitandum tamquam aliquis in pectus intimum introspicere possit: et potest. Quid enim prodest ab homine aliquid esse secretum? nihil deo clusum est; interest animis nostris et cogitationibus medius intervenit — sic ‘intervenit’ dico tamquam aliquando discedat. [2] Faciam ergo quod iubes, et quid agam et quo ordine libenter tibi scribam. Observabo me protinus et, quod est utilissimum, diem meum recognoscam. Hoc nos pessimos facit, quod nemo vitam suam respicit; quid facturi simus cogitamus, et id raro, quid fecerimus non cogitamus; atqui consilium futuri ex praeterito venit.

[3] Hodiernus dies solidus est, nemo ex illo quicquam mihi eripuit; totus inter stratum lectionemque divisus est; minimum exercitationi corporis datum, et hoc nomine ago gratias senectuti: non magno mihi constat. Cum me movi, lassus sum; hic autem est exercitationis etiam fortissimis finis. [4] Progymnastas meos quaeris? unus mihi sufficit Pharius, puer, ut scis, amabilis, sed mutabitur: iam aliquem teneriorem quaero. Hic quidem ait nos eandem crisin habere, quia utrique dentes cadunt. Sed iam vix illum adsequor currentem et intra paucissimos dies non potero: vide quid exercitatio cotidiana proficiat. Cito magnum intervallum fit inter duos in diversum euntes: eodem tempore ille ascendit, ego descendo, nec ignoras quanto ex his velocius alterum fiat. Mentitus sum; iam enim aetas nostra non descendit sed cadit. [5] Quomodo tamen hodiernum certamen nobis cesserit quaeris? quod raro cursoribus evenit, hieran fecimus. Ab hac fatigatione magis quam exercitatione in frigidam descendi: hoc apud me vocatur parum calda. Ille tantus psychrolutes, qui kalendis Ianuariis euripum salutabam, qui anno novo quemadmodum legere, scribere, dicere aliquid, sic auspicabar in Virginem desilire, primum ad Tiberim transtuli castra, deinde ad hoc solium quod, cum fortissimus sum et omnia bona fide fiunt, sol temperat: non multum mihi ad balneum superest. [6] Panis deinde siccus et sine mensa prandium, post quod non sunt lavandae manus. Dormio minimum.

Consuetudinem meam nosti: brevissimo somno utor et quasi interiungo; satis est mihi vigilare desisse; aliquando dormisse me scio, aliquando suspicor. [7] Ecce circensium obstrepit clamor; subita aliqua et universa voce feriuntur aures meae, nec cogitationem meam excutiant, ne interrumpunt quidem. Fremitum patientissime fero; multae voces et in unum confusae pro fluctu mihi sunt aut vento silvam verberante et ceteris sine intellectu sonantibus.

[8] Quid ergo est nunc cui animum adiecerim? dicam. Superest ex hesterno mihi cogitatio quid sibi voluerint prudentissimi viri qui rerum maximarum probationes levissimas et perplexas fecerint, quae ut sint verae, tamen mendacio similes sunt. [9] Vult nos ab ebrietate detertere Zenon, vir maximus, huius sectae fortissimae ac sanctissimae conditor. Audi ergo quemadmodum colligat virum bonum non futurum ebrium: 'ebrio secretum sermonem nemo committit, viro autem bono committit; ergo vir bonus ebrius non erit'. Quemadmodum opposita interrogatione simili derideatur adtende (satis enim est unam ponere ex multis): 'dormienti nemo secretum sermonem committit, viro autem bono committit; vir bonus ergo non dormit'. [10] Quo uno modo potest Posidonius Zenonis nostri causam agit, sed ne sic quidem, ut existimo, agi potest. Ait enim 'ebrium' duobus modis dici, altero cum aliquis vino gravis est et inpos sui, altero si solet ebrius fieri et huic obnoxius vitio est; hunc a Zenone dici qui soleat fieri ebrius, non qui sit; huic autem neminem commissurum arcana quae per vinum eloqui possit. [11] Quod est falsum; prima enim illa interrogatio complectitur eum qui est ebrius, non eum qui futurus est. Plurimum enim interesse concedes et inter ebrium et ebriosum: potest et qui ebrius est tunc primum esse nec habere hoc vitium, et qui ebriosus est saepe extra ebrietatem esse; itaque id intellego quod significari verbo isto solet, praesertim cum ab homine diligentiam professo ponatur et verba examinante. Adice nunc quod, si hoc intellexit Zenon et nos intellegere noluit, ambiguitate verbi quaesiit locum fraudi, quod faciendum non est ubi veritas quaeritur. [12] Sed sane hoc senserit: quod sequitur falsum est, ei qui soleat ebrius fieri non committi sermonem secretum. Cogita enim quam multis militibus non semper sobriis et imperator et tribunus et centurio tacenda mandaverint. De illa C. Caesaris caede, illius dico qui superato Pompeio rem publicam tenuit, tam creditum est Tillio Cimbri quam C. Cassio. Cassius tota vita aquam bibit, Tillius Cimber et nimius erat in vino et scordalus. In hanc rem iocatus est ipse: 'ego' inquit 'quemquam feram, qui vinum ferre non possum?'.

Quanto satius est aperte accusare ebrietatem et vitia eius exponere, quae etiam tolerabilis homo vitaverit, nedum perfectus ac sapiens, cui satis est sitim extinguere, qui, etiam si quando hortata est hilaritas aliena causa producta longius, tamen citra ebrietatem resistit. [18] Nam de illo videbimus, an sapientis animus nimio vino turbetur et faciat ebriis solita: interim, si hoc colligere vis, virum

bonum non debere ebrium fieri, cur syllogismis agis? Dic quam turpe sit plus sibi ingerere quam capiat et stomachi sui non nosse mensuram, quam multa ebrii faciant quibus sobrii erubescant, nihil aliud esse ebrietatem quam voluntariam insaniam. Extende in plures dies illum ebrii habitum: numquid de furore dubitabis? nunc quoque non est minor sed brevior. [19] Refer Alexandri Macedonis exemplum, qui Clitum carissimum sibi ac fidelissimum inter epulas transfodit et intellecto facinore mori voluit, certe debuit. Omne vitium ebrietas et incendit et detegit, obstantem malis conatibus verecundiam removet; plures enim pudore peccandi quam bona voluntate prohibitis abstinent. [20] Ubi possedit animum nimia vis vini, quidquid mali latebat emergit. Non facit ebrietas vitia sed protrahit: tunc libidinosus ne cubiculum quidem expectat, sed cupiditatibus suis quantum petierunt sine dilatione permittit; tunc inpudicus morbum profitetur ac publicat; tunc petulans non linguam, non manum continet. Crescit insolenti superbia, crudelitas saevo, malignitas livido; omne vitium laxatur et prodit. [21] Adice illam ignorationem sui, dubia et parum explanata verba, incertos oculos, gradum errantem, vertiginem capitis, tecta ipsa mobilia velut aliquo turbine circumagente totam domum, stomachi tormenta cum effervescit merum ac viscera ipsa distendit. Tunc tamen utcumque tolerabile est, dum illi vis sua est: quid cum somno vitiatur et quae ebrietas fuit cruditas facta est? [22] Cogita quas clades ediderit publica ebrietas: haec acerrimas gentes bellicosasque hostibus tradidit, haec multorum annorum pertinaci bello defensa moenia patefecit, haec contumacissimos et iugum recusantes in alienum egit arbitrium, haec invictos acie mero domuit. [23] Alexandrum, cuius modo feci mentionem, tot itinera, tot proelia, tot hiemes per quas victa temporum locorumque difficultate transierat, tot flumina ex ignoto cadentia, tot maria tutum dimiserunt: intemperantia bibendi et ille Herculaneus ac fatalis scyphus condidit. [24] Quae gloria est capere multum? cum penes te palma fuerit et propinationes tuas strati somno ac vomitantes recusaverint, cum superstes toti convivio fueris, cum omnes viceris virtute magnifica et nemo vini tam capax fuerit, vinceris a dolio. [25] M. Antonium, magnum virum et ingeni nobilis, quae alia res perdidit et in externos mores ac vitia non Romana traiecit quam ebrietas nec minor vino Cleopatrae amor? Haec illum res hostem rei publicae, haec hostibus suis inparem reddidit; haec crudelem fecit, cum capita principum civitatis cenanti referrentur, cum inter apparatissimas epulas luxusque regales ora ac manus proscriptorum recognosceret, cum vino gravis sitiret tamen sanguinem. Intolerabile erat quod ebrius fiebat cum haec faceret: quanto intolerabilius quod haec in ipsa ebrietate faciebat! [26] Fere vinolentiam crudelitas sequitur; vitiatur enim exasperaturque sanitas mentis. Quemadmodum <morosos> difficilesque faciunt diutini morbi et ad minimam rabidos offensionem, ita ebrietates continuae efferant animos; nam cum saepe apud se non sint, consuetudo insaniae durat et vitia vino concepta etiam sine illo valent.

LIBER UNDECIMUS - TERTIUS DECIMUS

LXXXIV. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Itinera ista quae segnitiam mihi excutiunt et valetudini meae prodesse iudico et studiis. Quare valetudinem adiuvent vides: cum pigrum me et negligentem corporis litterarum amor faciat, aliena opera exerceor. Studio quare prosint indicabo: a lectionibus <non> recessi. Sunt autem, ut existimo, necessariae, primum ne sim me uno contentus, deinde ut, cum ab aliis quaesita cognovero, tum et de inventis iudicem et cogitem de inveniendis. Alit lectio ingenium et studio fatigatum, non sine studio tamen, reficit. [2] Nec scribere tantum nec tantum legere debemus: altera res contristabit vires et exhaustiet (de stilo dico), altera solvet ac diluet. Invicem hoc et illo commeandum est et alterum altero temperandum, ut quidquid lectione collectum est stilus redigat in corpus. [3] Apes, ut aiunt, debemus imitari, quae vagantur et flores ad mel faciendum idoneos carpunt, deinde quidquid attulere disponunt ac per favos digerunt et, ut Vergilius noster ait,

stipant et dulci distendunt nectare cellas.

libamenta confundere, ut etiam si apparuerit unde sumptum sit, aliud tamen esse quam unde sumptum est appareat. Quod in corpore nostro videmus sine ulla opera nostra facere naturam [6] (alimenta quae accepimus, quamdiu in sua qualitate perdurant et solida innatant stomacho, onera sunt; at cum ex eo quod erant mutata sunt, tunc demum in vires et in sanguinem transeunt), idem in his quibus aluntur ingenia praestemus, ut quaecumque hausimus non patiamur integra esse, ne aliena sint. [7] Concoquamus illa; alioqui in memoriam ibunt, non in ingenium. Adsentiamur illis fideliter et nostra faciamus, ut unum quiddam fiat ex multis, sicut unus numerus fit ex singulis cum minores summas et dissidentes computatio una comprehendit. Hoc faciat animus noster: omnia quibus est adiutus abscondat, ipsum tantum ostendat quod effecit. [8] Etiam si cuius in te comparebit similitudo quem admiratio tibi altius fixerit, similem esse te volo quomodo filium, non quomodo imaginem: imago res mortua est. ‘Quid ergo? non intellegetur cuius imiteris orationem? cuius argumentationem? cuius sententias?’ Puto aliquando ne intellegi quidem posse, si magni vir ingenii omnibus quae ex quo voluit exemplari traxit formam suam inpressit, ut in unitatem illa conpetant. [9] Non vides quam multorum vocibus chorus constet? unus tamen ex omnibus redditur. Aliqua illic acuta est, aliqua gravis, aliqua media; accedunt viris feminae, interponuntur tibiae: singulorum illic latent voces, omnium apparent. [10] De choro dico quem veteres philosophi noverant: in commissionibus nostris plus cantorum est quam in theatris olim spectatorum fuit. Cum omnes vias ordo canentium implevit et cavea aeneatoribus cincta est et ex pulpito omne tiliarum genus organorumque consonuit, fit concentus ex dissonis. Talem animum esse nostrum volo: multae in illo artes, multa praecepta sint, multarum aetatum exempla, sed in unum conspirata.

cui invidetur et invidet. [12] Intueris illas potentium domos, illa tumultuosa rixa salutantium limina? multum habent contumeliarum ut intres, plus cum intraveris. Praeteri istos gradus divitum et magno adgestu suspensa vestibula: non in praerupto tantum istic stabis sed in lubrico. Huc potius te ad sapientiam derige, tranquillissimasque res eius et simul amplissimas pete. [13] Quaecumque videntur eminere in rebus humanis, quamvis pusilla sint et comparatione humillimorum exstent, per difficiles tamen et arduos tramites adeuntur. Confragosa in fastigium dignitatis via est; at si conscendere hunc verticem libet, cui se fortuna summisit, omnia quidem sub te quae pro excelsissimis habentur aspicias, sed tamen venies ad summa per planum. Vale.

LXXXV. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Peperceram tibi et quidquid nodosi adhuc supererat praeterieram, contentus quasi gustum tibi dare eorum quae a nostris dicuntur ut probetur virtus ad explendam beatam vitam sola satis efficax. Iubes me quidquid est interrogationum aut nostrarum aut ad traductionem nostram excogitatarum comprehendere: quod si facere voluero, non erit epistula sed liber. Illud totiens testor, hoc me argumentorum genere non delectari; pudet in aciem descendere pro dis hominibusque susceptam subula armatum.

[2] ‘Qui prudens est et temperans est; qui temperans est, et constans; qui constans est inperturbatus est; qui inperturbatus est sine tristitia est; qui sine tristitia est beatus est; ergo prudens beatus est, et prudentia ad beatam vitam satis est.’

[3] Huic collectioni hoc modo Peripatetici quidam respondent, ut inperturbatum et constantem et sine tristitia sic interpretentur tamquam inperturbatus dicatur qui raro perturbatur et modice, non qui numquam. Item sine tristitia eum dici aiunt qui non est obnoxius tristitiae nec frequens nimiusve in hoc vitio; illud enim humanam naturam negare, alicuius animum immunem esse tristitia; sapientem non vinci maerore, ceterum tangi; et cetera in hunc modum sectae suae respondentia. Non his tollunt adfectus sed temperant. [4] Quantulum autem sapienti damus, si inbecillissimis fortior est et maestissimis laetior et effrenatissimis moderatior et humillimis maior! Quid si miretur velocitatem suam Ladas ad claudos debilesque respiciens?

Illa vel intactae segetis per summa volaret
gramina nec cursu teneras laeisset aristas, vel mare per medium fluctu suspensa tumentis ferret iter, celeres nec tingeret aequore plantas.

Haec est pernicitas per se aestimata, non quae tardissimorum conlatione laudatur. Quid si sanum voces leviter febricitantem? non est bona valetudo mediocritas morbi. [5] ‘Sic’ inquit ‘sapiens inperturbatus dicitur quomodo apyrina dicuntur non quibus nulla inest durtia granorum sed quibus minor.' Falsum est. Non enim deminutionem malorum in bono viro intellego sed vacationem; nulla debent esse, non parva; nam si ulla sunt, crescent et interim impediunt. Quomodo oculos maior et perfecta suffusio excaecat, sic modica turbat. [6] Si das aliquos adfectus sapienti, inpar illis erit ratio et velut torrente quodam auferetur, praesertim cum illi non unum adfectum des cum quo conluctetur sed omnis. Plus potest quamvis mediocrium turba quam posset unius magni violentia. [7] Habet pecuniae cupiditatem, sed modicam; habet ambitionem, sed non concitatum; habet iracundiam, sed placabilem; habet inconstantiam, sed minus vagam ac mobilem; habet libidinem, sed non insanam. Melius cum illo ageretur qui unum vitium integrum haberet quam cum eo qui leviora quidem, sed omnia. [8] Deinde nihil interest quam magnus sit adfectus: quantuscumque est, parere nescit, consilium non accipit. Quemadmodum rationi nullum animal optemperat, non ferum, non domesticum et mite (natura enim illorum est surda suadenti), sic non sequuntur, non audiunt adfectus, quantulicumque sunt. Tigres leonesque numquam feritatem exuunt, aliquando summittunt, et cum minime expectaveris exasperatur torvitas mitigata. Numquam bona fide vitia mansuescunt. [9] Deinde, si ratio proficit, ne incipient quidem adfectus; si invita ratione coeperint, invita perseverabunt. Facilius est enim initia illorum prohibere quam impetum regere.

Falsa est itaque ista mediocritas et inutilis, eodem loco habenda quo si quis diceret modice insaniendum, modiceaegrotandum. [10] Sola virtus habet, non recipiunt animi mala temperamentum; facilius sustuleris illa quam rexeris. Numquid dubium est quin vitia mentis humanae inveterata et dura, quae morbos vocamus, inmoderata sint, ut avaritia, ut crudelitas, ut inpotentia [impietas]? Ergo inmoderati sunt et adfectus; ab his enim ad illa transitur. [11] Deinde, si das aliquid iuris tristitiae, timori, cupiditati, ceteris motibus pravis, non erunt in nostra potestate. Quare? quia extra nos sunt quibus iniritantur; itaque crescent prout magnas habuerint minoresve causas quibus concitentur. Maior erit timor, si plus quo exterreatur aut propius aspexerit, acrior cupiditas quo illam amplioris rei spes evocaverit. [12] Si in nostra potestate non est an sint adfectus, ne illud quidem est, quanti sint: si ipsis permisisti incipere, cum causis suis crescent tantique erunt quanti fient. Adice nunc quod ista, quamvis exigua sint, in maius excedunt; numquam pernicioosa servant modum; quamvis levia initia morborum serpunt et aegra corpora minima interdum mergit accessio. [13] Illud vero cuius dementiae est, credere quarum rerum extra nostrum arbitrium posita principia sunt, earum nostri esse arbitri terminos! Quomodo ad id finiendum satis valeo ad quod prohibendum parum valui, cum facilius sit excludere quam admissa comprimere?

[14] Quidam ita distinxerunt ut dicerent, 'temperans ac prudens positione quidem mentis et habitu tranquillus est, eventu non est. Nam, quantum ad habitum mentis suae, non perturbatur nec contristatur nec timet, sed multae extrinsecus causae incidunt quae illi perturbationem adferant.' [15] Tale est quod volunt dicere: iracundum quidem illum non esse, irasci tamen aliquando; et timidum quidem non esse, timere tamen aliquando, id est vitio timoris carere, adfectu non carere. Quod si recipitur, usu frequenti timor transibit in vitium, et ira in animum admissa habitum illum ira carentis animi retexet. [16] Praeterea si non contemnit venientes extrinsecus causas et aliquid timet, cum fortiter eundum erit adversus tela, ignes, pro patria, legibus, libertate, cunctanter exhibit et animo recedente. Non cadit autem in sapientem haec diversitas mentis. [17] Illud praeterea iudico observandum, ne duo quae separatim probanda sunt misceamus; per se enim colligitur unum bonum esse quod honestum, per se rursus ad vitam beatam satis esse virtutem. Si unum bonum est quod honestum, omnes concedunt ad beate vivendum sufficere virtutem; e contrario non remittetur, si beatum sola virtus facit, unum bonum esse quod honestum est. [18] Xenocrates et Speusippus putant beatum vel sola virtute fieri posse, non tamen unum bonum esse quod honestum est. Epicurus quoque iudicat, cum virtutem habeat, beatum esse, sed ipsam virtutem non satis esse ad beatam vitam, quia beatum efficiat voluptas quae ex virtute est, non ipsa virtus. Inepta distinctio: idem enim negat umquam virtutem esse sine voluptate. Ita si ei iuncta semper est atque inseparabilis, et sola satis est; habet enim secum voluptatem, sine qua non est etiam cum sola est. [19] Illud autem absurdum est, quod dicitur beatum quidem futurum vel sola virtute, non futurum autem perfecte beatum; quod quemadmodum fieri possit non reperio. Beata enim vita bonum in se perfectum habet, inexsuperabile; quod si est, perfecte beata est. Si deorum vita nihil habet maius aut melius, beata autem vita divina est, nihil habet in quod amplius possit attolli. [20] Praeterea, si beata vita nullius est indigens, omnis beata vita perfecta est eademque est et beata et beatissima. Numquid dubitas quin beata vita summum bonum sit? ergo si summum bonum habet, summe beata est. Quemadmodum summum bonum adiectionem non recipit (quid enim supra summum erit?), ita ne beata quidem vita, quae sine summo bono non est. Quod si aliquem ‘magis’ beatum induxeris, induces et ‘multo magis’; innumerabilia discrimina summi boni facies, cum summum bonum intellegam quod supra se gradum non habet. [21] Si est aliquis minus beatus quam alius, sequitur ut hic alterius vitam beatoris magis concupiscat quam suam; beatus autem nihil suae praefert. Utrumlibet ex his incredibile est, aut aliquid beato restare quod esse quam quod est malit, aut id illum non malle quod illo melius est. Utique enim quo prudentior est, hoc magis se ad id quod est optimum extendet et id omni modo consequi cupiet. Quomodo autem beatus est qui cupere etiam nunc potest, immo qui debet?

[22] Dicam quid sit ex quo veniat hic error: nesciunt beatam vitam unam esse. In optimo illam statu ponit qualitas sua, non magnitudo; itaque in aequo est longa et brevis, diffusa et angustior, in multa loca multasque partes distributa et in unum coacta. Qui illam numero aestimat et mensura et partibus, id illi quod habet eximium eripit. Quid autem est in beata vita eximium? quod plena est. [23] Finis, ut puto, edendi bibendique satietas est. Hic plus edit, ille minus: quid refert? uterque iam satur est. Hic plus bibit, ille minus: quid refert? uterque non sitit. Hic pluribus annis vixit, hic paucioribus: nihil interest si tam illum multi anni beatum fecerunt quam hunc pauci. Ille quem tu minus beatum vocas non est beatus: non potest hoc nomen inminui.

[24] ‘Qui fortis est sine timore est; qui sine timore est sine tristitia est; qui sine tristitia est beatus est.’

Nostrorum haec interrogatio est. Adversus hanc sic respondere conantur: falsam nos rem et controversiosam pro confessa vindicare, eum qui fortis est sine timore esse. ‘Quid ergo?’ inquit ‘fortis inminuentia mala non timebit? istuc dementis alienatique, non fortis est. Ille vero’ inquit ‘moderatissime timet, sed in totum extra metum non est.’ [25] Qui hoc dicunt rursus in idem revolvuntur, ut illis virtutum loco sint minora vitia; nam qui timet quidem, sed rarius et minus, non caret malitia, sed levioe vexatur. ‘At enim dementem puto qui mala imminetia non extimescit.’ Verum est quod dicis, si mala sunt; sed si scit mala illa non esse et unam tantum turpitudinem malum iudicat, debet secure pericula aspicere et aliis timenda contemnere. Aut si stulti et amentis est mala non timere, quo quis prudentior est, hoc timebit magis. [26] ‘Ut vobis’ inquit ‘videtur, praebebit se periculis fortis.’ Minime: non timebit illa sed vitabit; cautio illum decet, timor non decet. ‘Quid ergo?’ inquit ‘mortem, vincula, ignes, alia tela fortunae non timebit?’ Non; scit enim illa non esse mala sed videri; omnia ista humanae vitae formidines putat. [27] Describe captivitatem, verbera, catenas, egestatem et membrorum lacerationes vel per morbum vel per iniuriam et quidquid aliud adtuleris: inter lymphatos metus numerat. Ista timidis timenda sunt. An id existimas malum ad quod aliquando nobis nostra sponte veniendum est? [28] Quaeris quid sit malum?cedere iis quae mala vocantur et illis libertatem suam dedere, pro qua cuncta patienda sunt: perit libertas nisi illa contemnimus quae nobis iugum inponunt. Non dubitarent quid conveniret forti viro si scirent quid esset fortitudo. Non est enim inconsulta temeritas nec periculorum amor nec formidabilium adpetitio: scientia est distinguendi quid sit malum et quid non sit. Diligentissima in tutela sui fortitudo est et eadem patientissima eorum quibus falsa species malorum est. [29] ‘Quid ergo? si ferrum intentatur cervicibus viri fortis, si pars subinde alia atque alia suffoditur, si viscera sua in sinu suo vidit, si ex intervallo, quo magis tormenta sentiat, repetitur et per adsiccata vulnera recens demittitur sanguis, non timet? istum tu dices nec dolere?’ Iste vero dolet (sensus enim hominis nulla exuit virtus), sed non timet: invictus ex alto dolores suos spectat. Quaeris quis tunc animus illi sit? qui aegrum amicum adhortantibus.

‘Falsum est’ inquit ‘quod proponitis; non enim, si quid nocet, etiam deterioe facit. Tempestas et procella nocet gubernatori, non tamen illum deterioe facit.’ [31] Quidam e Stoicis ita adversus hoc respondent: deterioe fieri gubernatorem tempestate ac procella, quia non possit id quod proposuit efficere nec tenere cursum suum; deteriores illum in arte sua non fieri, in opere fieri. Quibus Peripateticus ‘ergo’ inquit ‘et sapientem deteriores faciet paupertas, dolor, et quidquid aliud tale fuerit; virtutem enim illi non eripiet, sed opera eius inpediet’. [32] Hoc recte diceretur nisi dissimilis esset gubernatoris condicio et sapientis. Huic enim propositum est in vita agenda non utique quod temptat efficere, sed omnia recte facere: gubernatori propositum est utique navem in portum perducere. Artes ministrae sunt, praestare debent quod promittunt, sapientia domina rectrixque est; artes serviunt vitae, sapientia imperat.

[33] Ego aliter respondendum iudico: nec artem gubernatoris deteriores ulla tempestate fieri nec ipsam administrationem artis. Gubernator tibi non felicitatem promisit sed utilem operam et navis regendae scientiam; haec eo magis apparet quo illi magis aliqua fortuita vis obstitit. Qui hoc potuit dicere, ‘Neptune, numquam hanc navem nisi rectam’, arti satis fecit: tempestas non opus gubernatoris inedit sed successum. [34] ‘Quid ergo?’ inquit ‘non nocet gubernatori ea res quae illum tenere portum vetat, quae conatus eius inritos efficit, quae aut refert illum aut detinet et exarmat?’ Non tamquam gubernatori, sed tamquam naviganti nocet: alioqui <gubernator ille non est.> Gubernatoris artem adeo non inedit ut ostendat; tranquillo enim, ut aiunt, quilibet gubernator est. Navigio ista obsunt, non rectori eius, qua rector est. [35] Duas personas habet gubernator, alteram communem cum omnibus qui eandem conscenderunt navem: ipse quoque vector est; alteram propriam: gubernator est. Tempestas tamquam vectori nocet, non tamquam gubernatori. [36] Deinde gubernatoris ars alienum bonum est: ad eos quos vehit pertinet, quomodo medici ad eos quos curat: <sapientis> commune bonum est: <est> et eorum cum quibus vivit et proprium ipsius. Itaque gubernatori fortasse noceatur cuius ministerium aliis promissum tempestate ineditur: [37] sapienti non nocetur a paupertate, non a dolore, non ab aliis tempestatibus vitae. Non enim prohibentur opera eius omnia, sed tantum ad alios pertinentia: ipse semper in actu est, in effectu tunc maximus cum illi fortuna se opposuit; tunc enim ipsius sapientiae negotium agit, quam diximus et alienum bonum esse et suum.

aliquae necessitates premunt. Propter paupertatem prohibetur docere quemadmodum tractanda res publica sit, at illud docet, quemadmodum sit tractanda paupertas. Per totam vitam opus eius extenditur. Ita nulla fortuna, nulla res actus sapientis excludit; id enim ipsum agit quo alia agere prohibetur. Ad utrosque casus aptatus est: bonorum rector est, malorum victor. [39] Sic, inquam, se exercuit ut virtutem tam in secundis quam in adversis exhiberet nec materiam eius sed ipsam intueretur; itaque nec paupertas illum nec dolor nec quidquid aliud inperitos avertit et praecipites agit prohibet. [40] Tu illum premi putas malis? utitur. Non ex ebone tantum Phidias sciebat facere simulacra; faciebat ex aere. Si marmor illi, si adhuc viliorē materiam obtulisses, fecisset quale ex illa fieri optimum posset. Sic sapiens virtutem, si licebit, in divitiis explicabit, si minus, in paupertate; si poterit, in patria, si minus, in exilio; si poterit, imperator, si minus, miles; si poterit, integer, si minus, debilis. Quamcumque fortunam acceperit, aliquid ex illa memorabile efficiet. [41] Certi sunt domitores ferarum qui saevissima animalia et ad occursum expavescenda hominem pati subigunt nec asperitatem excussisse contenti usque in contubernium mitigant: leonis faucibus magister manum insertat, osculatur tigrim suus custos, elephantum minimus Aethiops iubet subsidere in genua et ambulare per funem. Sic sapiens artifex est domandi mala: dolor, egestas, ignominia, carcer, exilium ubique horrenda, cum ad hunc pervenere, mansueta sunt. Vale.

LXXXVI. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] In ipsa Scipionis Africani villa iacens haec tibi scribo, adoratis manibus eius et ara, quam sepulchrum esse tanti viri suspicor. Animum quidem eius in caelum ex quo erat redisse persuadeo mihi, non quia magnos exercitus duxit (hos enim et Cambyzes furiosus ac furore feliciter usus habuit), sed ob egregiam moderationem pietatemque, quam magis in illo admirabilem iudico cum reliquit patriam quam cum defendit. Aut Scipio Romae esse debebat aut Roma in libertate. [2] ‘Nihil’ inquit ‘volo derogare legibus, nihil institutis; aequum inter omnes cives ius sit. Utere sine me beneficio meo, patria. Causa tibi libertatis fui, ero et argumentum: exeo, si plus quam tibi expedit crevi.’ [3] Quidni ego admirer hanc magnitudinem animi, qua in exilium voluntarium secessit et civitatem exoneravit? Eo perducta res erat ut aut libertas Scipioni aut Scipio libertati faceret iniuriam. Neutrum fas erat; itaque locum dedit legibus et se Liternum recepit tam suum exilium rei publicae inputaturus quam Hannibalis.

[4] Vidi villam exstructam lapide quadrato, murum circumdatum silvae, turrets quoque in propugnaculum villae utrimque subrectas, cisternam aedificiis ac viridibus subditam quae sufficere in usum vel exercitus posset, balneolum angustum, tenebricosum ex consuetudine antiqua: non videbatur maioribus nostris caldum nisi obscurum. [5] Magna ergo me voluptas subiit contemplantem mores Scipionis ac nostros: in hoc angulo ille ‘Carthaginis horror’, cui Roma debet quod tantum semel capta est, abluebat corpus laboribus rusticis fessum. Exercebat enim opere se terramque (ut mos fuit priscis) ipse subigebat. Sub hoc ille tecto tam sordido stetit, hoc illum pavementum tam vile sustinuit: at nunc quis est qui sic lavari sustineat? [6] Pauper sibi videtur ac sordidus nisi parietes magnis et pretiosis orbibus refulserunt, nisi Alexandrina marmora Numidicis crustis distincta sunt, nisi illis undique operosa et in picturae modum variata circumlitio praetextitur, nisi vitro absconditur camera, nisi Thasius lapis, quondam rarum in aliquo spectaculum templo, piscinas nostras circumdedit, in quas multa sudatione corpora exsaniata demittimus, nisi aquam argentea epitonias fuderunt. [7] Et adhuc plebeias fistulas loquor: quid cum ad balnea libertinorum pervenero? Quantum statuarum, quantum columnarum est nihil sustinentium sed in ornamentum positarum impensae causa! quantum aquarum per gradus cum fragore labentium! Eo deliciarum pervenimus ut nisi gemmas calcare nolumus.

[8] In hoc balneo Scipionis minimae sunt rimae magis quam fenestrae muro lapideo exsectae, ut sine iniuria munimenti lumen admitterent; at nunc blattaria vocant balnea, si qua non ita aptata sunt ut totius diei solem fenestris amplissimis recipiant, nisi et lavantur simul et colorantur, nisi ex solio agros ac maria prospiciunt. Itaque quae concursum et admirationem habuerant cum dedicarentur, ea in antiquorum numerum reiciuntur cum aliquid novi luxuria commenta est quo ipsa se obrueret. [9] At olim et pauca erant balnea nec ullo cultu exornata: cur enim exornaretur res quadrantaria et in usum, non in oblectamentum reperta? Non suffundebatur aqua nec recens semper velut ex calido fonte currebat, nec referre credebant in quam perlucida sordes deponerent. [10] Sed, di boni, quam iuvat illa balinea intrare obscura et gregali tectorio inducta, quae scires Catonem tibi aedilem aut Fabium Maximum aut ex Corneliis aliquem manu sua temperasse! Nam hoc quoque nobilissimi aediles fungebantur officio intrandi ea loca quae populum receptabant exigendique munditias et utilem ac salubrem temperaturam, non hanc quae nuper inventa est similis incendio, adeo quidem ut convictum in aliquo scelere servum vivum lavari oporteat. Nihil mihi videtur iam interesse, ardeat balineum an caleat. [11] Quantae nunc aliqui rusticitatis damnant Scipionem quod non in caldarium suum latis specularibus diem admiserat, quod non in multa luce decoquebatur et expectabat ut in balneo concoqueret! O hominem calamitosum! nesciit vivere. Non saccata aqua lavabatur sed saepe turbida et, cum plueret vehementius, paene lutulenta. Nec multum eius intererat an sic lavaretur; veniebat enim ut sudorem illic ablueret, non ut unguentum. [12] Quas nunc quorundam voces futuras credis? ‘Non invidео Scipioni: vere in exilio vixit qui sic lavabatur.’ Immo, si scias, non cotidie lavabatur; nam, ut aiunt qui priscos mores urbis tradiderunt, brachia et crura cotidie abluebant, quae scilicet sordes opere collegerant, ceterum toti nundinis lavabantur. Hoc loco dicet aliquis: ‘liquet mihi inmundissimos fuisse’. Quid putas illos oluisse? militiam, laborem, virum. Postquam munda balnea inventa sunt, spurciores sunt. [13] Descripturus infamem et nimiis notabilem deliciis Horatius Flaccus quid ait?

Dares nunc Buccillum: proinde esset ac si hircum oleret, Gargonii loco esset, quem idem Horatius Buccillo opposuit. Parum est sumere unguentum nisi bis die terque renovatur, ne evanescat in corpore. Quid quod hoc odore tamquam suo gloriantur?

[14] Haec si tibi nimium tristia videbuntur, villae inputabis, in qua didici ab Aegialo, diligentissimo patre familiae (is enim nunc huius agri possessor est) quamvis vetus arbustum posse transferri. Hoc nobis senibus discere necessarium est, quorum nemo non olivetum alteri ponit, ~quod vidi illud arborum trimum et quadrimum fastidiendi fructus aut deponere.~ [15] Te quoque proteget illa quae tarda venit seris factura nepotibus umbram, ut ait Vergilius noster, qui non quid verissime sed quid decentissime diceretur aspexit, nec agricolas docere voluit sed legentes delectare. [16] Nam, ut alia omnia transeam, hoc quod mihi hodie necesse fuit deprehendere, adscribam:

vere fabis satio est; tunc te quoque, Medica, putres accipiunt sulci, et milio venit annua cura.

An uno tempore ista ponenda sint et an utriusque verna sit satio, hinc aestimes licet: Iunius mensis est quo tibi scribo, iam proclivis in Iulium: eodem die vidi fabam metentes, milium serentes.

enim ab imo vestietur nec magna pars eius quemadmodum in olivetis veteribus arida et retorrída erit. [19] Alter ponendi modus hic fuit: ramos fortes nec corticis duri, quales esse novellarum arborum solent, eodem genere deposuit. Hi paulo tardius surgunt, sed cum tamquam a planta processerint, nihil habent in se abhorridum aut triste. [20] Illud etiam nunc vidi, vitem ex arbusto suo annosam transferri; huius capillamenta quoque, si fieri potest, colligenda sunt, deinde liberalius sternenda vitis, ut etiam ex corpore radicescat. Et vidi non tantum mense Februario positas sed etiam Martio exacto; tenent et complexae sunt non suas ulmos. [21] Omnes autem istas arbores quae, ut ita dicam, grandiscapiae sunt, ait aqua adiuvandas cisternina; quae si prodest, habemus pluviam in nostra potestate.

Plura te docere non cogito, ne quemadmodum Aegialus me sibi adversarium paravit, sic ego parem te mihi. Vale.

LXXXVII. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Naufragium antequam navem ascenderem feci: quomodo acciderit non adicio, ne et hoc putes inter Stoica paradoxa ponendum, quorum nullum esse falsum nec tam mirabile quam prima facie videtur, cum volueris, adprobabo, immo etiam si nolueris.

Interim hoc me iter docuit quam multa haberemus supervacua et quam facile iudicio possemus deponere quae, si quando necessitas abstulit, non sentimus ablata. [2] Cum paucissimis servis, quos unum capere vehiculum potuit, sine ullis rebus nisi quae corpore nostro continebantur, ego et Maximus meus biduum iam beatissimum agimus. Culcita in terra iacet, ego in culcita; ex duabus paenulis altera stragulum, altera opertorium facta est. [3] De prandio nihil detrahi potuit; paratum fuit ~non magis hora~, nusquam sine caricis, numquam sine pugillaribus; illae, si panem habeo, pro pulmentario sunt, si non habeo, pro pane. Cotidie mihi annum novum faciunt, quem ego faustum et felicem reddo bonis cogitationibus et animi magnitudine, qui numquam maior est quam ubi aliena seposuit et fecit sibi pacem nihil timendo, fecit sibi divitias nihil concupiscendo.

[4] Vehiculum in quod inpositus sum rusticum est; mulae vivere se ambulando testantur; mulio excalceatus, non propter aetatem. Vix a me obtineo ut hoc vehiculum velim videri meum: durat adhuc perversa recti verecundia, et quotiens in aliquem comitatum lautiolem incidimus invitus erubesco, quod argumentum est ista quae probo, quae laudo, nondum habere certam sedem et immobilem. Qui sordido vehiculo erubescit pretioso gloriabitur. [5] Parum adhuc profeci: nondum audeo frugalitatem palam ferre; etiamnunc curo opiniones viatorum.

Contra totius generis humani opiniones mittenda vox erat: ‘insanitis, erratis, stupetis ad supervacua, neminem aestimatis suo. Cum ad patrimonium ventum est, diligentissimi computatores sic rationem ponitis singulorum quibus aut pecuniam credituri estis aut beneficia (nam haec quoque iam expensa fertis): [6] late possidet, sed multum debet; habet domum formosam, sed alienis nummis paratam; familiam nemo cito speciosiore producet, sed nominibus non respondet; si creditoribus solverit, nihil illi supererit. Idem in reliquis

[7] Divitem illum putas quia aurea supellex etiam in via sequitur, quia in omnibus provinciis arat, quia magnus kalendari liber volvitur, quia tantum suburbani agri possidet quantum invidiose in desertis Apuliae possideret: cum omnia dixeris, pauper est. Quare? quia debet. ‘Quantum?’ inquis. Omnia; nisi forte iudicas interesse utrum aliquis ab homine an a fortuna mutuum sumpserit. [8] Quid ad rem pertinent mulae saginatae unius omnes coloris? quid ista vehicula caelata?

Instratos ostro alipedes pictisque tapetis:
aurea pectoribus demissa monilia pendent, tecti auro fulvum mandunt sub dentibus aurum.

Ista nec dominum meliorem possunt facere nec mulam. [9] M. Cato Censorius, quem tam e re publica fuit nasci quam Scipionem (alter enim cum hostibus nostris bellum, alter cum moribus gessit), cantherio vehebatur et hippoperis quidem inpositis, ut secum utilia portaret. O quam cuperem illi nunc occurrere aliquem ex his trossulis, in via divitibus, cursores et Numidas et multum ante se pulveris agentem! Hic sine dubio cultior comitatioque quam M. Cato videretur, hic qui inter illos apparatus delicatos cum maxime dubitat utrum se ad gladium locet an ad cultrum. [10] O quantum erat saeculi decus, imperatorem, triumphalem, censorium, quod super omnia haec est, Catonem, uno caballo esse contentum et ne toto quidem; partem enim sarcinae ab utroque latere dependentes occupabant. Ita non omnibus obesis mannis et asturconibus et tolutariis praeferres unicum illum equum ab ipso Catone defricum?

Adversus hoc sic respondent Peripatetici ut quod primum

proponimus falsum esse dicant. ‘Ab eo’ inquiunt ‘quod est bonum non utique fiunt boni. In musica est aliquid bonum tamquam tibia aut chorda aut organum aliquod aptatum ad usus canendi; nihil tamen horum facit musicum.’ [13] His respondebimus, ‘non intellegitis quomodo posuerimus quod bonum est in musica. Non enim id dicimus quod instruit musicum, sed quod facit: tu ad supellectilem artis, non ad artem venis. Si quid autem in ipsa arte musica bonum est, id utique musicum faciet.’ [14] Etiamnunc facere istuc planius volo. Bonum in arte musica duobus modis dicitur, alterum quo effectus musici adiuvatur, alterum quo ars: ad effectum pertinent instrumenta, tibiae et organa et chordae, ad artem ipsam non pertinent. Est enim artifex etiam sine istis: uti forsitan non potest arte. Hoc non est aeque duplex in homine; idem enim est bonum et hominis et vitae.

‘Falsum est’ inquiunt ‘quod proponitis; nam et in grammaticae et in arte medendi aut gubernandi videmus bona humillimis quibusque contingere.’ [16] Sed istae artes non sunt magnitudinem animi professae, non consurgunt in altum nec fortuita fastidiunt: virtus extollit hominem et super cara mortalibus conlocat; nec ea quae bona nec ea quae mala vocantur aut cupit nimis aut expavescit. Chelidon, unus ex Cleopatrae mollibus, atrimonium grande possedit. Nuper Natalis, tam improbae linguae quam impurae, in cuius ore feminae purgabantur, et multorum heres fuit et multos habuit heredes. Quid ergo? utrum illum pecunia impurum effecit an ipse pecuniam inspurgavit? quae sic in quosdam homines quomodo denarius in cloacam cadit. [17] Virtus super ista consistit; suo aere censetur; nihil ex istis quolibet incurrentibus bonum iudicat. Medicina et gubernatio non interdicat sibi ac suis admiratione talium rerum; qui non est vir bonus potest nihilominus medicus esse, potest gubernator, potest grammaticus tam mehercules quam cocus. Cui contingit habere rem non quamlibet, hunc non quemlibet dixeris; qualia quisque habet, talis est. [18] Fiscus tanti est quantum habet; immo in accessionem eius venit quod habet. Quis pleno sacculo ullum pretium ponit nisi quod pecuniae in eo conditae numerus effecit? Idem evenit magnorum dominis patrimoniorum: accessiones illorum et appendices sunt. Quare ergo sapiens magnus est? quia magnum animum habet. Verum est ergo quod contemptissimo cuique contingit bonum non esse. [19] Itaque indolentiam numquam bonum dicam:habet illam cicada, habet pulex. Ne quietem quidem et molestia vacare bonum dicam: quid est otiosius verme? Quaeris quae res sapientem faciat? quae deum. Des oportet illi divinum aliquid, caeleste, magnificum: non in omnes bonum cadit nec quemlibet possessorem patitur. [20] Vide

hic segetes, illic veniunt felicius uvae, arborei fetus alibi atque iniussa virescunt gramina. Nonne vides, croceos ut Tmolus odores, India mittit ebur, molles sua tura Sabaei, at Chalybes nudi ferrum?

[21] Ista in regiones discripta sunt, ut necessarium mortalibus esset inter ipsos commercium, si invicem alius aliquid ab alio peteret. Summum illud bonum habet et ipsum suam sedem; non nascitur ubi ebur, nec ubi ferrum. Quis sit summi boni locus quaeris? animus. Hic nisi purus ac sanctus est, deum non capit.

[22] ‘Bonum ex malo non fit; divitiae [autem fiunt] fiunt autem ex avaritia; divitiae ergo non sunt bonum.’ ‘Non est’ inquit ‘verum, bonum ex malo non nasci; ex sacrilegio enim et furto pecunia nascitur. Itaque malum quidem est sacrilegium et furtum, sed ideo quia plura mala facit quam bona; dat enim lucrum, sed cum metu, sollicitudine, tormentis et animi et corporis.’ [23] Quisquis hoc dicit, necesse est recipiat sacrilegium, sicut malum sit quia multa mala facit, ita bonum quoque ex aliqua parte esse, quia aliquid boni facit: quo quid fieri portentuosius potest? Quamquam sacrilegium, furtum, adulterium inter bona haberi prorsus persuasimus. Quam multi furto non erubescunt, quam multi adulterio gloriantur! nam sacrilegia minuta puniuntur, magna in triumphis feruntur. [24] Adice nunc quod sacrilegium, si omnino ex aliqua parte bonum est, etiam honestum erit et recte factum vocabitur, ~nostra enim actio est~ quod nullius mortalium cogitatio recipit. Ergo bona nasci ex malo non possunt.

Nam si, ut dicitis, ob hoc unum sacrilegium malum est, quia multum mali adfert, si remiseris illi supplicia, si securitatem spoonderis, ex toto bonum erit. Atqui maximum scelerum supplicium in ipsis est. [25] Erras, inquam, si illa ad carnificem aut carcerem differs: statim puniuntur cum facta sunt, immo dum fiunt. Non nascitur itaque ex malo bonum, non magis quam ficus ex olea: ad semen nata respondent, bona degenerare non possunt. Quemadmodum ex turpi honestum non nascitur, ita ne ex malo quidem bonum; nam idem est honestum et bonum.

[28] ‘Quod dum consequi volumus in multa mala incidimus, id bonum non est; dum divitias autem consequi volumus, in multa mala incidimus; ergo divitiae bonum non sunt.’

respondent: ‘erratis, qui incommoda divitis inputatis. Illae neminem laedunt: aut sua nocet cuique stultitia aut aliena nequitia, sic quemadmodum gladius neminem occidit: occidentis telum est. Non ideo divitiae tibi nocent si propter divitias tibi nocetur.’ [31] Posidonius, ut ego existimo, melius, qui ait divitias esse causam malorum, non quia ipsae faciunt aliquid, sed quia facturos iniritant. Alia est enim causa efficiens, quae protinus necessest noceat, alia praecedens. Hanc praecedentem causam divitiae habent: inflant animos, superbiam pariunt, invidiam contrahunt, et usque eo mentem alienant ut fama pecuniae nos etiam nocitura delectet. [32] Bona autem omnia carere culpa decet; pura sunt, non corrumpunt animos, non sollicitant; extollunt quidem et dilatant, sed sine tumore. Quae bona sunt fiduciam faciunt, divitiae audaciam; quae bona sunt magnitudinem animi dant, divitiae insolentiam. Nihil autem aliud est insolentia quam species magnitudinis falsa. [33] ‘Isto modo’ inquit ‘etiam malum sunt divitiae, non tantum bonum non sunt.’ Essent malum si ipsae nocerent, si, ut dixi, haberent efficientem causam: nunc praecedentem habent et quidem non iniritantem tantum animos sed adtrahentem; speciem enim boni offundunt veri similem ac plerisque credibilem. [34] Habet virtus quoque praecedentem causam ad invidiam; multis enim propter sapientiam, multis propter iustitiam invidetur. Sed nec ex se hanc causam habet nec veri similem; contra enim veri similior illa species hominum animis obicitur a virtute, quae illos in amorem et admirationem vocet.

mixtum, sed commodum dicitur a maiore sui parte aestimatum: bonum ad unum sapientem pertinet; inviolatum esse oportet.

[38] Bonum animum habe: unus tibi nodus, sed Herculeus restat: 'ex malis bonum non fit; ex multis paupertatibus divitiae fiunt; ergo divitiae bonum non sunt'.

Hanc interrogationem nostri non agnoscunt, Peripatetici et fingunt illam et solvunt. Ait autem Posidonius hoc sophisma, per omnes dialecticorum scholas iactatum, sic ab Antipatro refelli: [39] 'paupertas non per possessionem dicitur, sed per detractorem' (vel, ut antiqui dixerunt, orbationem; Graeci kata steressin dicunt); 'non quod habeat dicit, sed quod non habeat. Itaque ex multis inanibus nihil impleri potest: divitias multae res faciunt, non multae inopiae. Aliter' inquit 'quam debes paupertatem intellegis. Paupertas enim est non quae pauca possidet, sed quae multa non possidet; ita non ab eo dicitur quod habet, sed ab eo quod ei deest.'

[40] Facilius quod volo exprimerem, si Latinum verbum esset quo anuparxia significaretur. Hanc paupertati Antipater adsignat: ego non video quid aliud sit paupertas quam parvi possessio. De isto videbimus, si quando valde vacabit, quae sit divitiarum, quae paupertatis substantia; sed tunc quoque considerabimus numquid satius sit paupertatem permulcere, divitiis demere supercilium quam litigare de verbis, quasi iam de rebus iudicatum sit. [41] Putemus nos ad contionem vocatos: lex de abolendis divitis fertur. His interrogationibus suasuri aut dissuasuri sumus? his effecturi ut populus Romanus paupertatem, fundamentum et causam imperii sui, requirat ac laudet, divitias autem suas timeat, ut cogitet has se apud victos repperisse, hinc ambitum et largitiones et tumultus in urbem sanctissimam temperatissimam inrupisse, nimis luxuriose ostentari gentium spolia, quod unus populus eripuerit omnibus facilius ab omnibus uni eripi posse? Haec satius est suadere, et expugnare adfectus, non circumscribere. Si possumus, fortius loquamur; si minus, apertius. Vale.

LXXXVIII. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

Quidam illud de liberalibus studiis quaerendum iudicaverunt, an virum bonum facerent: ne promittunt quidem nec huius rei scientiam adfectant. [3] Grammatice circa curam sermonis versatur et, si latius evagari vult, circa historias, iam ut longissime fines suos proferat, circa carmina. Quid horum ad virtutem viam sternit? Syllabarum enarratio et verborum diligentia et fabularum memoria et versuum lex ac modificatio — quid ex his metum demit, cupiditatem eximit, libidinem frenat? [4] Ad geometriam transeamus et ad musicen: nihil apud illas invenies quod vetet timere, vetet cupere. Quae quisquis ignorat, alia frustra scit.

* * * utrum doceant isti virtutem an non: si non docent, ne tradunt quidem; si docent, philosophi sunt. Vis scire quam non ad docendam virtutem consederint? aspice quam dissimilia inter se omnium studia sint: atqui similitudo esset idem docentium. [5] Nisi forte tibi Homerum philosophum fuisse persuadent, cum his ipsis quibus colligunt negent; nam modo Stoicum illum faciunt, virtutem solam probantem et voluptates refugientem et ab honesto ne immortalitatis quidem pretio recedentem, modo Epicureum, laudantem statum quietae civitatis et inter convivia cantusque vitam exigentis, modo Peripateticum, tria bonorum genera inducentem, modo Academicum, omnia incerta dicentem. Apparet nihil horum esse in illo, quia omnia sunt; ista enim inter se dissident. Demus illis Homerum philosophum fuisse: nempe sapiens factus est antequam carmina ulla cognosceret; ergo illa discamus quae Homerum fecere sapientem. [6] Hoc quidem me quaerere, uter maioraetate fuerit, Homerus an Hesiodus, non magis ad rem pertinet quam scire, cum minor Hecuba fuerit quam Helena, quare tam male tulerit aetatem. Quid, inquam, annos Patrocli et Achillis inquirere ad rem existimas pertinere? [7] Quaeris Ulixes ubi erraverit potius quam efficias ne nos semper erremus? Non vacat audire utrum inter Italiam et Siciliam iactatus sit an extra notum nobis orbem (neque enim potuit in tam angusto error esse tam longus): tempestates nos animi cotidie iactant et nequitia in omnia Ulixis mala inpellit. Non deest forma quae sollicitet oculos, non hostis; hinc monstra effera et humano cruore gaudentia, hinc insidiosa blandimenta aurium, hinc naufragia et tot varietates malorum. Hoc me doce, quomodo patriam amem, quomodo uxorem, quomodo patrem, quomodo ad haec tam honesta vel naufragus navigem. [8] Quid inquiris an Penelopa inpudica fuerit, an verba saeculo suo dederit? an Ulixem illum esse quem videbat, antequam sciret, suspicata sit? Doce me quid sit pudicitia et quantum in ea bonum, in corpore an in animo posita sit.

[10] Metiri me geometres docet latifundia potius quam doceat quomodo metiar quantum homini satis sit; numerare docet me et avaritiae commodat digitos potius quam doceat nihil ad rem pertinere istas computationes, non esse feliciorum cuius patrimonium tabularios lassat, immo quam supervacua possideat qui infelicissimus futurus est si quantum habeat per se computare cogetur. [11] Quid mihi prodest scire agellum in partes dividere, si nescio cum fratre dividere? Quid prodest colligere subtiliter pedes iugeri et comprehendere etiam si quid decempedam effugit, si tristem me facit vicinus inpotens et aliquid ex meo abradens? Docet quomodo nihil perdam ex finibus meis: at ego discere volo quomodo totos hilaris amittam. 'Paterno agro et avito' inquit 'expellor.' [12] Quid? ante avum tuum quis istum agrum tenuit? cuius, non dico hominis, sed populi fuerit potes expedire? Non dominus isto, sed colonus intrasti. Cuius colonus es? si bene tecum agitur, heredis. Negant iurisconsulti quicquam usu capi publicum:

hoc quod tenes, quod tuum dicis, publicum est et quidem generis humani. [13] O egregiam artem! scis rotunda metiri, in quadratum redigis quamcumque acceperis formam, intervalla siderum dicis, nihil est quod in mensuram tuam non cadat: si artifex es, metire hominis animum, dic quam magnus sit, dic quam pusillus sit. Scis quae recta sit linea: quid tibi prodest, si quid in vita rectum sit ignoras?

frigida Saturni sese quo stella receptet, quos ignis caeli Cyllenius erret in orbes.

Hoc scire quid proderit? ut sollicitus sim cum Saturnus et Mars ex contrario stabunt aut cum Mercurius vespertinum faciet occasum vidente Saturno, potius quam hoc discam, ubicumque sunt ista, propitia esse nec posse mutari? [15] Agit illa continuus ordo factorum et inevitabilis cursus; per statas vices remeant et effectus rerum omnium aut movent aut notant. Sed sive quidquid evenit faciunt, quid inmutabilis rei notitia proficiet? sive significant, quid refert providere quod effugere non possis? Scias ista, nescias: fient.

Satis abundeque provisum est ut ab insidiis tutus essem. [17] ‘Numquid me crastina non fallit hora? fallit enim quod nescienti evenit.’ Ego quid futurum sit nescio: quid fieri possit scio. Ex hoc nihil deprecabor, totum expecto: si quid remittitur, boni consulo. Fallit me hora si parcit, sed ne sic quidem fallit. Nam quemadmodum scio omnia accidere posse, sic scio et non utique casura; itaque secunda expecto, malis paratus sum.

[18] In illo feras me necesse est non per praescriptum euntem; non enim adducor ut in numerum liberalium artium pictores recipiam, non magis quam statuarios aut marmorarios aut ceteros luxuriae ministros. Aequae luctatores et totam oleo ac luto constantem scientiam expello ex his studiis liberalibus; aut et unguentarios

recipiam et cocos et ceteros voluptatibus nostris ingenia accommodantes sua. [19] Quid enim, oro te, liberale habent isti ieiuni vomitores, quorum corpora in sagina, animi in macie et veterno sunt? An liberale studium istuc esse iuventuti nostrae credimus, quam maiores nostri rectam exercuerunt hastilia iacere, sudem torquere, equum agitare, arma tractare? Nihil liberos suos docebant quod discendum esset iacentibus. Sed nec hae nec illae docent aluntve virtutem; quid enim prodest equum regere et cursum eius freno temperare, adfectibus effrenatissimis abstrahi? quid prodest multos vincere luctatione vel caestu, ab iracundia vinci?

[24] ‘Quemadmodum’ inquit ‘est aliqua pars philosophiae naturalis, est aliqua moralis, est aliqua rationalis, sic et haec quoque liberalium artium turba locum sibi in philosophia vindicat. Cum ventum est ad naturales quaestiones, geometriae testimonio statur;

ergo eius quam adiuvat pars est.' [25] Multa adiuvant nos nec ideo partes nostri sunt; immo si partes essent, non adiuvarent. Cibus adiutorium corporis nec tamen pars est. Aliquod nobis praestat geometria ministerium: sic philosophiae necessaria est quomodo ipsi faber, sed nec hic geometriae pars est nec illa philosophiae. [26] Praeterea utraque fines suos habet; sapiens enim causas naturalium et quaerit et novit, quorum numeros mensurasque geometres persequitur et supputat. Qua ratione constant caelestia, quae illis sit vis quaeve natura sapiens scit: cursus et recursus et quasdam obversationes per quas descendunt et adlevantur ac speciem interdum stantium praebent, cum caelestibus stare non liceat, colligit mathematicus. [27] Quae causa in speculo imagines exprimat sciet sapiens: illud tibi geometres potest dicere, quantum abesse debeat corpus ab imagine et qualis forma speculi quales imagines reddat. Magnum esse solem philosophus probabit, quantus sit mathematicus, qui usu quodam et exercitatione procedit. Sed ut procedat, inpetranda illi quaedam principia sunt; non est autem ars sui iuris cui precarium fundamentum est. [28] Philosophia nil ab alio petit, totum opus a solo excitat: mathematice, ut ita dicam, superficialia est, in alieno aedificat; accipit prima, quorum beneficio ad ulteriora perveniat. Si per se iret ad verum, si totius mundi naturam posset comprehendere, dicerem multum conlaturam mentibus nostris, quae tractatu caelestium crescunt trahuntque aliquid ex alto.

Una re consummatur animus, scientia bonorum ac malorum inmutabili; nihil autem ulla ars alia de bonis ac malis quaerit. Singulas lubet circumire virtutes. [29] Fortitudo contemptrix timendorum est; terribilia et sub iugum libertatem nostram mittentia despicit, provocat, frangit: numquid ergo hanc liberalia studia corroborant? Fides sanctissimum humani pectoris bonum est, nulla necessitate ad fallendum cogitur, nullo corrumpitur praemio: 'ure', inquit 'caede, occide: non prodam, sed quo magis secreta quaeret dolor, hoc illa altius condam'. Numquid liberalia studia hos animos facere possunt? Temperantia voluptatibus imperat, alias odit atque abigit, alias dispensat et ad sanum modum redigit nec umquam ad illas propter ipsas venit; scit optimum esse modum cupitorum non quantum velis, sed quantum debeas sumere. [30] Humanitas vetat superbum esse adversus socios, vetat amarum; verbis, rebus, adfectibus comem se facilemque omnibus praestat; nullum alienum malum putat, bonum autem suum ideo maxime quod alicui bono futurum est amat. Numquid liberalia studia hos mores praecipiant? non magis quam simplicitatem, quam modestiam ac moderationem, non magis quam frugalitatem ac parsimoniam, non magis quam clementiam, quae alieno sanguini tamquam suo parcat et scit homini non esse homine prodige utendum.

[31] ‘Cum dicatis’ inquit ‘sine liberalibus studiis ad virtutem non perveniri, quemadmodum negatis illa nihil conferre virtuti?’ Quia nec sine cibo ad virtutem pervenitur, cibis tamen ad virtutem non pertinet; ligna navi nihil conferunt, quamvis non fiat navis nisi ex lignis: non est, inquam, cur aliquid putes eius adiutorio fieri sine quo non potest fieri. [32] Potest quidem etiam illud dici, sine liberalibus studiis venire ad sapientiam posse; quamvis enim virtus discenda sit, tamen non per haec discitur. Quid est autem quare existimem non futurum sapientem eum qui litteras nescit, cum sapientia non sit in litteris? Res tradit, non verba, et nescio an certior memoria sit quae nullum extra se subsidium habet. [33] Magna et spatiosa res est sapientia; vacuo illi loco opus est; de divinis humanisque discendum est, de praeteritis de futuris, de caducis de aeternis, de tempore. De quo uno vide quam multa quaerantur: primum an per se sit aliquid; deinde an aliquid ante tempus sit sine tempore; cum mundo coeperit an etiam ante mundum quia fuerit aliquid, fuerit et tempus. [34] Innumerabiles quaestiones sunt de animo tantum: unde sit, qualis sit, quando esse incipiat, quamdiu sit, aliunde alio transeat et domicilia mutet in alias animalium formas aliasque coniectus, an non amplius quam semel serviat et emissus vagetur in toto; utrum corpus sit an non sit; quid sit facturus cum per nos aliquid facere desierit, quomodo libertate sua usus cum ex hac effugerit cavea; an obliviscatur priorum et illinc nosse se incipiat unde corpori abductus in sublime secessit. [35] Quaecumque partem rerum humanarum divinarumque conprenderis, ingenti copia quaerendorum ac discendorum fatigaberis. Haec tam multa, tam magna ut habere possint liberum hospitium, supervacua ex animo tollenda sunt. Non dabit se in has angustias virtus; laxum spatium res magna desiderat. Expellantur omnia, totum pectus illi vacet.

illis retineamus quantum necessarium est. An tu existimas reprehendum qui supervacua usibus comparat et pretiosarum rerum pompam in domo explicat, non putas eum qui occupatus est in supervacua litterarum supellectile? Plus scire velle quam sit satis intemperantiae genus est. [37] Quid quod ista liberalium artium consecratio molestos, verbosos, intempestivos, sibi placentes facit et ideo non discentes necessaria quia supervacua didicerunt? Quattuor milia librorum Didymus grammaticus scripsit: misererer si tam multa supervacua legisset. In his libris de patria Homeri quaeritur, in his de Aeneae matre vera, in his libidinosior Anacreon an ebriosior vixerit, in his an Sappho publica fuerit, et alia quae erant dediscenda si scires. I nunc et longam esse vitam nega!

[38] Sed ad nostros quoque cum perveneris, ostendam multa securibus recidenda. Magno impendio temporum, magna alienarum aurium molestia laudatio haec constat: ‘o hominem litteratum!’ Simus hoc titulo rusticiore contenti: ‘o virum bonum!’ [39] Itane est? annales evolvam omnium gentium et quis primus carmina scripserit quaeram? quantum temporis inter Orphea intersit et Homerum, cum fastos non habeam, computabo? et Aristarchi notas quibus aliena carmina conpunctis recognoscant, et aetatem in syllabis conteram? Itane in geometriae pulvere haerebo? adeo mihi praeceptum illud salutare excidit: ‘tempori parce’? Haec sciam? et quid ignorem? [40] Apion grammaticus, qui sub C. Caesare tota circumlocutus est Graecia et in nomen Homeri ab omnibus civitatibus adoptatus, aiebat Homerum utraque materia consummata, et Odyssia et Iliade, principium adiecissem operi suo quo bellum Troianum complexus est. Huius rei argumentum adferebat quod duas litteras in primo versu posuisset ex industria librorum suorum numerum continentes. [41] Talia sciat oportet qui multa vult scire. Non vis cogitare quantum temporis tibi auferat mala valetudo, quantum occupatio publica, quantum occupatio privata, quantum occupatio cotidiana, quantum somnus? Metire aetatem tuam: tam multa non capit. [42] De liberalibus studiis loquor: philosophi quantum habent supervacui, quantum ab usu recedentis! Ipsi quoque ad syllabarum distinctiones et coniunctionum ac praepositionum proprietates descenderunt et invidere grammaticis, invidere geometris; quidquid in illorum artibus supervacuum erat transtulere in suam. Sic effectum est ut diligentius loqui scirent quam vivere. [43] Audi quantum mali faciat nimia subtilitas et quam infesta veritati sit. Protagoras ait de omni re in utramque partem disputari posse ex aequo et de hac ipsa, an omnis res in utramque partem disputabilis sit. Nausiphanes ait ex his quae videntur esse nihil magis esse quam non esse. [44] Parmenides ait ex his quae videntur nihil esse ~universo~. Zenon Eleates omnia negotia de negotio deiecit: ait nihil esse. Circa eadem fere Pyrrhonei versantur et Megarici et Eretrici et Academici, qui novam induxerunt scientiam, nihil scire. [45] Haec omnia in illum supervacuum studiorum liberalium gregem coice; illi mihi non profuturam scientiam tradunt, hi spem omnis scientiae eripiunt. Satius est supervacua scire quam nihil. Illi non praeferunt lumen per quod acies derigatur ad verum, hi oculos mihi effodiunt. Si Protagorae credo, nihil in rerum natura est nisi dubium; si Nausiphani, hoc unum certum est, nihil esse certi; si Parmenidi, nihil est praeter unum; si Zenoni, ne unum quidem. [46] Quid ergo nos sumus? quid ista quae nos circumstant, alunt, sustinent? Tota rerum natura umbra est aut inanis aut fallax. Non facile dixerim utris magis irascar, illis qui nos nihil scire voluerunt, an illis qui ne hoc quidem nobis reliquerunt, nihil scire. Vale.

LXXXIX. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Rem utilem desideras et ad sapientiam properanti necessariam, dividi philosophiam et ingens corpus eius in membra disponi; facilius enim per partes in cognitionem totius adducimur. Utinam quidem quemadmodum universa mundi facies in conspectum venit, ita philosophia tota nobis posset occurrere, simillimum mundo spectaculum! Profecto enim omnes mortales in admirationem sui raperet, relictis iis quae nunc magna magnorum ignorantia credimus. Sed quia contingere hoc non potest, est sic nobis aspicienda quemadmodum mundi secreta cernuntur. [2] Sapientis quidem animus totam molem eius amplectitur nec minus illam velociter obit quam caelum acies nostra; nobis autem, quibus perrumpenda caligo est et quorum visus in proximo deficit, singula quaeque ostendi facilius possunt, universi nondum capacibus. Faciam ergo quod exigis et philosophiam in partes, non in frusta dividam. Dividi enim illam, non concidi, utile est; nam comprehendere quemadmodum maxima ita minima difficile est. [3] Describitur in tribus populus, in centurias exercitus; quidquid in maius crevit facilius agnoscitur si discessit in partes, quas, ut dixi, innumerabiles esse et parvulas non oportet. Idem enim vitii habet nimia quod nulla divisio: simile confuso est quidquid usque in pulverem sectum est.

[4] Primum itaque, si [ut] videtur tibi, dicam inter sapientiam et philosophiam quid intersit. Sapientia perfectum bonum est mentis humanae; philosophia sapientiae amor est et adfectatio: haec eo tendit quo illa pervenit. Philosophia unde dicta sit apparet; ipso enim nomine fatetur quid amet. [5] Sapientiam quidam ita finierunt ut dicerent divinorum et humanorum scientiam; quidam ita: sapientia est nosse divina et humana et horum causas. Supervacua mihi haec videtur adiectio, quia causae divinorum humanorumque pars divinorum sunt. Philosophiam quoque fuerunt qui aliter atque aliter finirent: alii studium illam virtutis esse dixerunt, alii studium corrigendae mentis; a quibusdam dicta est adpetitio rectae rationis. [6] Illud quasi constitit, aliquid inter philosophiam et sapientiam interesse; neque enim fieri potest ut idem sit quod adfectatur et quod adfectat. Quomodo multum inter avaritiam et pecuniam interest, cum illa cupiat, haec concupiscatur, sic inter philosophiam et sapientiam. Haec enim illius effectus ac praemium est; illa venit, ad hanc itur. [7] Sapientia est quam Graeci sophian vocant. Hoc verbo Romani quoque utebantur, sicut philosophia nunc quoque utuntur; quod et togatae tibi antiquae probabunt et inscriptus Dossenni monumento titulus:

hospes resiste et sophian Dossenni lege.

[8] Quidam ex nostris, quamvis philosophia studium virtutis esset et haec peteretur, illa peteret, tamen non putaverunt illas distrahi posse; nam nec philosophia sine virtute est nec sine philosophia virtus. Philosophia studium virtutis est, sed per ipsam virtutem; nec virtus autem esse sine studio sui potest nec virtutis studium sine ipsa. Non enim quemadmodum in iis qui aliquid ex distante loco ferire conantur alibi est qui petit, alibi quod petitur; nec quemadmodum itinera quae ad urbes perducunt <extra urbes sunt, sic viae ad virtutem> extra ipsam: ad virtutem venit per ipsam, cohaerent inter se philosophia virtusque.

[9] Philosophiae tres partes esse dixerunt et maximi et plurimi auctores: moralem, naturalem, rationalem. Prima componit animum; secunda rerum naturam scrutatur; tertia proprietates verborum exigit et structuram et argumentationes, ne pro vero falsa subrepan. Ceterum inventi sunt et qui in pauciora philosophiam et qui in plura diducerent. [10] Quidam ex Peripateticis quartam partem adiecerunt civilem, quia propriam quandam exercitationem desideret et circa aliam materiam occupata sit; quidam adiecerunt his partem quam oikonomiken vocant, administrandae familiaris rei scientiam; quidam et de generibus vitae locum separaverunt. Nihil autem horum non in illa parte morali reperietur. [11] Epicurei duas partes philosophiae putaverunt esse, naturalem atque moralem: rationalem removerunt. Deinde cum ipsis rebus cogerentur ambigua discernere, falsa sub specie veri latentia coarguere, ipsi quoque locum quem ‘de iudicio et regula’ appellant — alio nomine rationalem — induxerunt, sed eum accessionem esse naturalis partis existimant. [12] Cyrenaici naturalia cum rationalibus sustulerunt et contenti fuerunt moralibus, sed hi quoque quae remouent aliter inducunt; in quinque enim partes moralia dividunt, ut una sit de fugiendis et petendis, altera de adfectibus, tertia de actionibus, quarta de causis, quinta de argumentis. Causae rerum ex naturali parte sunt, argumenta ex rationali. [13] Ariston Chius non tantum supervacuas esse dixit naturalem et rationalem sed etiam contrarias; moralem quoque, quam solam reliquerat, circumcidit. Nam eum locum qui monitiones continet sustulit et paedagogi esse dixit, non philosophi, tamquam quidquam aliud sit sapiens quam generis humani paedagogus.

[17] Superest ut rationalem partem philosophiae dividam. Omnis oratio aut continua est aut inter respondentem et interrogantem discissa; hanc dialektiken, illam rhetoriken placuit vocari. Rhetorike verba curat et sensus et ordinem; dialektike in duas partes dividitur, in verba et significationes, id est in res quae dicuntur et vocabula quibus dicuntur. Ingens deinde sequitur utriusque divisio. Itaque hoc loco finem faciam et summa sequar fastigia rerum;

alioqui, si voluero facere partium partes, quaestionum liber fiet.

[18] Haec, Lucili virorum optime, quominus legas non deterreo, dummodo quidquid legeris ad mores statim referas. Illos conpesce, marcentia in te excita, soluta constringe, contumacia doma, cupiditates tuas publicasque quantum potes vexa; et istis dicentibus ‘quousque eadem?’ responde:

[19] ‘Ego debebam dicere “quousque eadem peccabitis?” Remedia ante vultis quam vitia desinere? Ego vero eo magis dicam, et quia recusatis perseverabo; tunc incipit medicina proficere ubi in corpore alienato dolorem tactus expressit. Dicam etiam invitis profutura. Aliquando aliqua ad vos non blanda vox veniat, et quia verum singuli audire non vultis, publice audite.

[21] ‘Nunc vobiscum loquor quorum aequae spatiosae luxuria quam illorum avaritia diffunditur. Vobis dico: quousque nullus erit lacus cui non villarum vestrarum fastigia immineant? nullum flumen cuius non ripas aedificia vestra praetexant? Ubicumque scatebunt aquarum calentium venae, ibi nova deversoria luxuriae excitabuntur. Ubicumque in aliquem sinum litus curvabitur, vos protinus fundamenta iacietis, nec contenti solo nisi quod manu feceritis, mare agetis introrsus. Omnibus licet locis tecta vestra resplendeant, aliubi inposita montibus in vastum terrarum marisque prospectum, aliubi ex plano in altitudinem montium educta, cum multa aedificaveritis, cum ingentia, tamen et singula corpora estis et parvola. Quid prosunt multa cubicula? in uno iacietis. Non est vestrum ubicumque non estis.

variis generibus cum magno labore persequitur: nullis animalibus nisi ex fastidio pax est. Quantum [est] ex istis epulis [quae] per tot comparatis manus fesso voluptatibus ore libatis? quantum ex ista fera periculose capta dominus crudus ac nauseans gustat? quantum ex tot conchyliis tam longe advectis per istum stomachum inexplebilem labitur? Infelices, ecquid intellegitis maiorem vos famem habere quam ventrem?

XC. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Quis dubitare, mi Lucili, potest quin deorum immortalium munus sit quod vivimus, philosophiae quod bene vivimus? Itaque tanto plus huic nos debere quam dis quanto maius beneficium est bona vita quam vita pro certo haberetur, nisi ipsam philosophiam di tribuissent; cuius scientiam nulli dederunt, facultatem omnibus. [2] Nam si hanc quoque bonum vulgare fecissent et prudentes nasceremur, sapientia quod in se optimum habet perdidisset, inter fortuita non esse. Nunc enim hoc in illa pretiosum atque magnificum est, quod non obvenit, quod illam sibi quisque debet, quod non ab alio petitur. Quid haberes quod in philosophia suspiceres si beneficiaria res esset? [3] Huius opus unum est de divinis humanisque verum invenire; ab hac numquam recedit religio, pietas, iustitia et omnis alius comitatus virtutum consertarum et inter se cohaerentium. Haec docuit colere divina, humana diligere, et penes deos imperium esse, inter homines consortium. Quod aliquamdiu inviolatum mansit, antequam societatem avaritia distraxit et paupertatis causa etiam iis quos fecit locupletissimos fuit; desierunt enim omnia possidere, dum volunt propria. [4] Sed primi mortalium quique ex his geniti naturam incorrupti sequebantur eundem habebant et ducem et legem, commissi melioris arbitrio; natura est enim potioribus deteriora summittere. Mutis quidem gregibus aut maxima corpora praesunt aut vehementissima: non praecedunt armenta degener taurus, sed qui magnitudine ac toris ceteros mares vicit; elephantorum gregem excelsissimus ducit: inter homines pro maximo est optimum. Animo itaque rector eligebatur, ideoque summa felicitas erat gentium in quibus non poterat potentior esse nisi melior; tuto enim quantum vult potest qui se nisi quod debet non putat posse.

[5] Illo ergo saeculo quod aureum perhibent penes sapientes fuisse regnum Posidonius iudicat. Hi continebant manus et infirmiore a validioribus tuebantur, suadebant dissuadebantque et utilia atque inutilia monstrabant; horum prudentia ne quid deesset suis providebat, fortitudo pericula arcebat, beneficentia augebat ornabatque subiectos. Officium erat imperare, non regnum. Nemo quantum posset adversus eos experiebatur per quos coeperat posse, nec erat cuiquam aut animus in iniuriam aut causa, cum bene imperanti bene pareretur, nihilque rex maius minari male parentibus posset quam ut abiret e regno. [6] Sed postquam subrepentibus vitiis in tyrannidem regna conversa sunt, opus esse legibus coepit, quas et ipsas inter initia tulere sapientes. Solon, qui Athenas aequo iure fundavit, inter septem fuit sapientia notos; Lycurgum si eadem aetas tulisset, sacro illi numero accessisset octavus. Zaleuci leges Charondaeque laudantur; hi non in foro nec in consultorum atrio, sed in Pythagorae tacito illo sanctoque secessu didicerunt iura quae florenti tunc Siciliae et per Italiam Graeciae ponerent.

[7] Hactenus Posidonio adsentior: artes quidem a philosophia inventas quibus in cotidiano vita utitur non concesserim, nec illi fabricae adseram gloriam. ‘Illa’ inquit ‘sparsos et aut casis tectos aut aliqua rupe suffossa aut exesae arboris trunco docuit tecta moliri.’ Ego vero philosophiam iudico non magis excogitasse has machinationes tectorum supra tecta surgentium et urbium urbes prementium quam vivaria piscium in hoc clausa ut tempestatum periculum non adiret gula et quamvis acerrime pelago saeviente haberet luxuria portus suos in quibus distinctos piscium greges saginaret. [8] Quid ais? philosophia homines docuit habere clavem et seram? Quid aliud erat avaritiae signum dare? Philosophia haec cum tanto habitantium periculo imminetia tecta suspendit? Parum enim erat fortuitis tegi et sine arte et sine difficultate naturale invenire sibi aliquod receptaculum. [9] Mihi crede, felix illud saeculum ante architectos fuit, ante tectores. Ista nata sunt iam nascente luxuria, in quadratum tigna decidere et serra per designata corrente certa manu trabem scindere;

Non enim tecta cenationi epulum recepturae parabantur, nec in hunc usum pinus aut abies deferebatur longo vehiculorum ordine vicis intrementibus, ut ex illa lacunaria auro gravia penderent. [10] Furcae utrimque suspensae fulciebant casam; spissatis ramalibus ac fronde congesta et in proclive disposita decursus imbribus quamvis magnis erat. Sub his tectis habitare [sed] securi: culmus liberos textit, sub marmore atque auro servitus habitat.

[11] In illo quoque dissentio a Posidonio, quod ferramenta fabrilia excogitata a sapientibus viris iudicat; isto enim modo dicat licet

sapientes fuisse per quos

tunc laqueis captare feras et fallere visco inventum et magnos canibus circumdare saltus.

Omnia enim ista sagacitas hominum, non sapientia invenit. [12] In hoc quoque dissentio, sapientes fuisse qui ferri metalla et aeris invenerint, cum incendio silvarum adusta tellus in summo venas iacentis liquefacta fudisset: ista tales inveniunt quales colunt. [13] Ne illa quidem tam subtilis mihi quaestio videtur quam Posidonio, utrum malleus in usu esse prius an forcipes coeperint. Utraque invenit aliquis excitati ingenii, acuti, non magni nec elati, et quidquid aliud corpore incurvato et animo humum spectante quaerendum est. Sapiens facilis victu fuit. Quidni? cum hoc quoque saeculo esse quam expeditissimus cupiat. [14] Quomodo, oro te, convenit ut et Diogenem mireris et Daedalum? Uter ex his sapiens tibi videtur? qui serram commentus est, an ille qui, cum vidisset puerum cava manu bibentem aquam, fregit protinus exemptum e perula calicem <cum> hac obiurgatione sui: ‘quamdiu homo stultus supervacuas sarcinas habui!’, qui se complicuit in dolio et in eo cubitavit? [15] Hodie utrum tandem sapientiozem putas qui invenit quemadmodum in immensam altitudinem crocum latentibus fistulis exprimat, qui euripos subito aquarum impetu implet aut siccatur et versatilia cenationum laquearia ita coagmentat ut subinde alia facies atque alia succedat et totiens tecta quotiens fericula mutantur, an eum qui et aliis et sibi hoc monstrat, quam nihil nobis natura durum ac difficile imperaverit, posse nos habitare sine marmorario ac fabro, posse nos vestitos esse sine commercio sericorum, posse nos habere usibus nostris necessaria si contenti fuerimus iis quae terra posuit in summo? Quem si audire humanum genus voluerit, tam supervacuum sciet sibi cocum esse quam militem.

corticibus arborum pleraeque gentes tegunt corpora? non avium plumae in usum vestis conseruntur? non hodieque magna Scytharum pars tergis vulpium induitur ac murum, quae tactu mollia et impenetrabilia ventis sunt? Quid ergo? non quilibet virgeam cratem texuerunt manu et vili obliverunt luto, deinde [de] stipula aliisque silvestribus operuere fastigium et pluviis per devexa labentibus hiemem transiere securi? [17] ‘Opus est tamen calorem solis aestivi umbra crassiore propellere.’ Quid ergo? non vetustas multa abdidit loca quae vel iniuria temporis vel alio quolibet casu excavata in specum recesserunt? Quid ergo? non in defosso latent Syrticae gentes quibusque propter nimios solis ardores nullum tegimentum satis repellendis caloribus solidum est nisi ipsa arens humus? [18] Non fuit tam iniqua natura ut, cum omnibus aliis animalibus facilem actum vitae daret, homo solus non posset sine tot artibus vivere; nihil durum ab illa nobis imperatum est, nihil aegre quaerendum, ut possit vita produci. Ad parata nati sumus: nos omnia nobis difficilia facilius fastidio fecimus. Tecta tegimentaue et fomenta corporum et cibi et quae nunc ingens negotium facta sunt obvia erant et gratuita et opera levi parabilia; modus enim omnium prout necessitas erat: nos ista pretiosa, nos mira, nos magnis multisque conquirenda artibus fecimus. [19] Sufficit ad id natura quod poscit. A natura luxuria descivit, quae cotidie se ipsa incitat et tot saeculis crescit et ingenio adiuvat vitia. Primo supervacua coepit concupiscere, inde contraria, novissime animum corpori addixit et illius deservire libidini iussit. Omnes istae artes quibus aut circitatur civitas aut strepit corpori negotium gerunt, cui omnia olim tamquam servo praestabantur, nunc tamquam domino parantur. Itaque hinc textorum, hinc fabrorum officinae sunt, hinc odores coquentium, hinc molles corporis motus docentium mollesque cantus et infractos. Recessit enim ille naturalis modus desideria ope necessaria finiens; iam rusticitatis et miseriae est velle quantum sat est.

duritiam utrimque conprimentis tramae remolliat, spatha coire cogatur et iungi, textrini quoque artem a sapientibus dixit inventam, oblitus postea repertum hoc subtilius genus in quo tela iugo vincta est, stamen secernit harundo, inseritur medium radiis subtemen acutis, quod lato paviunt insecti pectine dentes.

Quid si contigisset illi videre has nostri temporis telas, in quibus vestis nihil celatura conficitur, in qua non dico nullum corpori auxilium, sed nullum pudori est? [21] Transit deinde ad agricolas nec minus facunde describit proscissum aratro solum et iteratum quo solutior terra facilius pateat radicibus, tunc sparsa semina et collectas manu herbas ne quid fortuitum et agreste succrescat quod necet segetem. Hoc quoque opus ait esse sapientium, tamquam non nunc quoque plurima cultores agrorum nova inveniant per quae fertilitas augeatur. [22] Deinde non est contentus his artibus, sed in pistrinum sapientem summittit; narrat enim quemadmodum rerum naturam imitatus panem coeperit facere. ‘Receptas’ inquit ‘in os fruges concurrens inter se duritia dentium frangit, et quidquid excidit ad eosdem dentes lingua refertur; tunc umore miscetur ut facilius per fauces lubricas transeat; cum pervenit in ventrem, aequali eius fervore concoquitur; tunc demum corpori accedit. [23] Hoc aliquis secutus exemplar lapidem asperum aspero inposuit ad similitudinem dentium, quorum pars immobilis motum alterius expectat; deinde utriusque adritu grana franguntur et saepius regeruntur donec ad minutiam frequenter trita redigantur; tum farinam aqua sparsit et adsidua tractatione perdomuit finxitque panem, quem primo cinis calidus et fervens testa percoxit, deinde furni paulatim reperti et alia genera quorum fervor serviret arbitrio.’ Non multum afuit quin sutrinum quoque inventum a sapientibus diceret.

velocitatem suam flectunt. [25] ‘Omnia’ inquit ‘haec sapiens quidem invenit, sed minora quam ut ipse tractaret sordidioribus ministris dedit.’ Immo non aliis excogitata ista sunt quam quibus hodieque curantur. Quaedam nostra demum prodisse memoria scimus, ut speculariorum usum perluciente testa clarum transmittentium lumen, ut suspensuras balneorum et impressos parietibus tubos per quos circumfunderetur calor qui ima simul ac summa foveret aequaliter. Quid loquar marmora quibus templa, quibus domus fulgent? quid lapideas moles in rotundum ac leve formatas quibus porticus et capacia populorum tecta suscipimus? quid verborum notas quibus quamvis citata excipitur oratio et celeritatem linguae manus sequitur? Vilissimorum mancipiorum ista commenta sunt: [26] sapientia altius sedet nec manus edocet: animorum magistra est. Vis scire quid illa eruerit, quid effecerit? Non decoros corporis motus nec varios per tubam ac tibiam cantus, quibus exceptus spiritus aut in exitu aut in transitu formatur in vocem. Non arma nec muros nec bello utilia molitur: paci favet et genus humanum ad concordiam vocat. [27] Non est, inquam, instrumentorum ad usus necessarios opifex. Quid illi tam parvola adsignas? artificem vides vitae. Alias quidem artes sub dominio habet; nam cui vita, illi vitae quoque ornantia serviunt: ceterum ad beatum statum tendit, illo ducit, illo vias aperit. [28] Quae sint mala, quae videantur ostendit; vanitatem exuit mentibus, dat magnitudinem solidam, inflatam vero et ex inani speciosam reprimit, nec ignorari sinit inter magna quid intersit et tumida; totius naturae notitiam ac sui tradit. Quid sint di qualesque declarat, quid inferi, quid lares et genii, quid in secundam numinum formam animae perpetitae, ubi consistent, quid agant, quid possint, quid velint. Haec eius initamenta sunt, per quae non municipale sacrum sed ingens deorum omnium templum, mundus ipse, reseratur, cuius vera simulacra verasque facies cernendas mentibus protulit; nam ad spectacula tam magna hebes visus est. [29] Ad initia deinde rerum redit aeternamque rationem toti inditam et vim omnium seminum singula proprie figurantem. Tum de animo coepit inquirere, unde esset, ubi, quamdiu, in quot membra divisus. Deinde a corporibus se ad incorporalia transtulit veritatemque et argumenta eius excussit; post haec quemadmodum discernerentur vitae aut vocis ambigua; in utraque enim falsa veris inmixta sunt.

[30] Non abduxit, inquam, se (ut Posidonio videtur) ab istis artibus sapiens, sed ad illas omnino non venit. Nihil enim dignum inventu iudicasset quod non erat dignum perpetuo usu iudicaturus; ponenda non sumeret. [31] ‘Anacharsis’ inquit ‘invenit rotam figuli, cuius circuitu vasa formantur.’ Deinde quia apud Homerum invenitur figuli rota, maluit videri versus falsos esse quam fabulam. Ego nec Anacharsim auctorem huius rei fuisse contendo et, si fuit, sapiens quidem hoc invenit, sed non tamquam sapiens, sicut multi sapientes faciunt qua homines sunt, non qua sapientes. Puta velocissimum esse sapientem: cursu omnis anteibit qua velox est, non qua sapiens. Cuperem Posidonio aliquem vitrearium ostendere, qui spiritu vitrum in habitus plurimos format qui vix diligenti manu effingerentur. Haec inventa sunt postquam sapientem invenire desimus. [32] ‘Democritus’ inquit ‘invenisse dicitur fornicem, ut lapidum curvatura paulatim inclinorum medio saxo alligaretur.’ Hoc dicam falsum esse; necesse est enim ante Democritum et pontes et portas fuisse, quarum fere summa curvantur. [33] Excidit porro vobis eundem Democritum invenisse quemadmodum ebur molliretur, quemadmodum decoctus calculus in zmaragdum converteretur, qua hodieque coctura inventi lapides <in> hoc utiles colorantur. Ista sapiens licet invenerit, non qua sapiens erat invenit; multi enim faciunt quae ab imprudentissimis aut aequae fieri videmus aut peritius atque exercitatus.

fortunata tempora, cum in medio iacerent beneficia naturae promiscue utenda, antequam avaritia atque luxuria dissociavere mortales et ad rapinam ex consortio <docuere> discurrere: non erant illi sapientes viri, etiam si faciebant facienda sapientibus. [37] Statum quidem generis humani non alium quisquam suspexerit magis, nec si cui permittat deus terrena formare et dare gentibus mores, aliud probaverit quam quod apud illos fuisse memoratur apud quos nulli subigebant arva coloni;

ne signare quidem aut partiri limite campum fas erat: in medium quaerebant, ipsaque tellus omnia liberius nullo poscente ferebat.

[38] Quid hominum illo genere felicius? In commune rerum natura fruebantur; sufficebat illa ut parens in tutelam omnium; haec erat publicarum opum segura possessio. Quidni ego illud locupletissimum mortalium genus dixerim in quo pauperem invenire non posses? Inrupit in res optime positas avaritia et, dum seducere aliquid cupit atque in suum vertere, omnia fecit aliena et in angustum se ex inmenso redegit. Avaritia paupertatem intulit et multa concupiscendo omnia amisit. [39] Licet itaque nunc conetur reparare quod perdidit, licet agros agris adiciat vicinum vel pretio pellens vel iniuria, licet in provinciarum spatium rura dilatet et possessionem vocet per sua longam peregrinationem: nulla nos finium propagatio eo reducet unde discessimus. Cum omnia fecerimus, multum habebimus: universum habebamus. [40] Terra ipsa fertilior erat inlaborata et in usus populorum non diripientium larga. Quidquid natura protulerat, id non minus invenisse quam inventum monstrare alteri voluptas erat; nec ulli aut superesse poterat aut deesse: inter concordēs dividebatur. Nondum valentior inposuerat infirmiori manum, nondum avarus abscondendo quod sibi iaceret alium necessariis quoque excluserat: par erat alterius ac sui cura. [41] Arma cessabant incruentaeque humano sanguine manus odium omne in feras verterant. Illi quos aliquod nemus densum a sole protexerat, qui adversus saevitiam hiemis aut imbris vili receptaculo tuti sub fronde vivebant, placidas transigebant sine suspirio noctes. Sollicitudo nos in nostra purpura versat et acerrimis excitat stimulis: at quam mollem somnum illis dura tellus dabat! [42] Non inpendebant caelata laquearia, sed in aperto iacentis sidera superlabebantur et, insigne spectaculum noctium, mundus in praeceps agebatur, silentio tantum opus ducens. Tam interdiu illis quam nocte patebant prospectus huius pulcherrimae domus; libebat intueri signa ex media caeli parte vergentia, rursus ex occulto alia surgentia. [43] Quidni iuvaret vagari inter tam late sparsa miracula? At vos ad omnem tectorum pavetis sonum et inter picturas vestras, si quid increpuit, fugitis attoniti. Non habebant domos instar urbium: spiritus ac liber inter aperta perflatus et levis umbra rupis aut arboris et perlucidi fontes rivique non opere nec fistula nec ullo coacto itinere obsolefacti sed sponte currentes et prata sine arte formosa, inter haec agreste domicilium rustica politum manu — haec erat secundum naturam domus, in qua libebat habitare nec ipsam nec pro ipsa timentem: nunc magna pars nostri metus tecta sunt.

[44] Sed quamvis egregia illis vita fuerit et carens fraude, non fuere sapientes, quando hoc iam in opere maximo nomen est. Non tamen negaverim fuisse alti spiritus viros et, ut ita dicam, a dis recentes; neque enim dubium est quin meliora mundus nondum effectus ediderit. Quemadmodum autem omnibus indoles fortior fuit et ad labores paratior, ita non erant ingenia omnibus consummata. Non enim dat natura virtutem: ars est bonum fieri. [45] Illi quidem non aurum nec argentum nec perlucidos <lapis in> ima terrarum faece quaerebant parcebantque adhuc etiam mutis animalibus: tantum aberat ut homo hominem non iratus, non timens, tantum spectaturus occideret. Nondum vestis illis erat picta, nondum texebatur aurum, adhuc nec eruebatur. [46] Quid ergo <est>? Ignorantia rerum innocentes erant; multum autem interest utrum peccare aliquis nolit an nesciat. Deerat illis iustitia, deerat prudentia, deerat temperantia ac fortitudo. Omnibus his virtutibus habebat similia quaedam rudis vita: virtus non contingit animo nisi instituto et edocto et ad summum adsidua exercitatione perducto. Ad hoc quidem, sed sine hoc nascimur, et in optimis quoque, antequam erudias, virtutis materia, non virtus est. Vale.

XCI. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Liberalis noster nunc tristis est nuntiatio incendio quo Lugdunensis colonia exusta est; movere hic casus quemlibet posset, nedum hominem patriae suae amantissimum. Quae res effecit ut firmitatem animi sui quaerat, quam videlicet ad ea quae timeri posse putabat exercuit. Hoc vero tam inopinatum malum et paene inauditum non miror si sine metu fuit, cum esset sine exemplo; multas enim civitates incendium vexavit, nullam abstulit. Nam etiam ubi hostili manu in tecta ignis inmissus est, multis locis deficit, et quamvis subinde excitetur, raro tamen sic cuncta depascitur ut nihil ferro relinquat. Terrarum quoque vix umquam tam gravis et perniciosus fuit motus ut tota oppida everteret. Numquam denique tam infestum ulli exarsit incendium ut nihil alteri superesset incendio. [2] Tot pulcherrima opera, quae singula inlustrare urbes singulas possent, una nox stravit, et in tanta pace quantum ne bello quidem timeri potest accidit. Quis hoc credat? ubique armis quiescentibus, cum toto orbe terrarum diffusa securitas sit, Lugudunum, quod ostendebatur in Gallia, quaeritur. Omnibus fortuna quos publice adflixit quod passuri erant timere permisit; nulla res magna non aliquod habuit ruinae suae spatium: in hac una nox interfuit inter urbem maximam et nullam. Denique diutius illam tibi perisse quam perit narro.

[3] Haec omnia Liberalis nostri adfectum inclinant, adversus sua firmum et erectum. Nec sine causa concussus est: inexpectata plus adgravant; novitas adicit calamitatibus pondus, nec quisquam mortalium non magis quod etiam miratus est doluit. [4] Ideo nihil nobis inprovisum esse debet; in omnia praemittendus animus cogitandumque non quidquid solet sed quidquid potest fieri. Quid enim est quod non fortuna, cum voluit, ex florentissimo detrahat? quod non eo magis adgrediatur et quatiat quo speciosius fulget? Quid illi arduum quidve difficile est? [5] Non una via semper, ne trita quidem incurrit: modo nostras in nos manus advocat, modo suis contenta viribus invenit pericula sine auctore. Nullum tempus exceptum est: in ipsis voluptatibus causae doloris oriuntur. Bellum in media pace consurgit et auxilia securitatis in metum transeunt: ex amico <fit> inimicus, hostis ex socio. In subitas tempestates hibernisque maiores agitur aestiva tranquillitas. Sine hoste patimur hostilia, et cladis causas, si alia deficiunt, nimia sibi felicitas invenit. Invadit temperantissimos morbus, validissimos pthisis, innocentissimos poena, secretissimos tumultus; eligit aliquid novi casus per quod velut oblitis vires suas ingerat. [6] Quidquid longa series multis laboribus, multa deum indulgentia struxit, id unus dies spargit ac dissipat. Longam moram dedit malis properantibus qui diem dixit: hora momentumque temporis evertendis imperis sufficit. Esset aliquod inbecillitatis nostrae solacium rerumque nostrarum si tam tarde perirent cuncta quam fiunt: nunc incrementa lente exeunt, festinatur in damnum. [7] Nihil privatim, nihil publice stabile est; tam hominum quam urbium fatavolvuntur. Inter placidissima terror existit nihilque extra tumultuantibus causis mala unde minime expectabantur erumpunt. Quae domesticis bellis steterant regna, quae externis, inpellente nullo ruunt: quota quaeque felicitatem civitas pertulit! Cogitanda ergo sunt omnia et animus adversus ea quae possunt evenire firmandus. [8] Exilia, tormenta [morbi], bella, naufragia meditare. Potest te patriae, potest patriam tibi casus eripere, potest te in solitudines abigere, potest hoc ipsum in quo turba suffocatur fieri solitudo. Tota ante oculos sortis humanae condicio ponatur, nec quantum frequenter evenit sed quantum plurimum potest evenire praesumamus animo, si nolumus opprimi nec illis inusitatis velut novis obstupefieri; in plenum cogitanda fortuna est. [9] Quotiens Asiae, quotiens Achaiae urbes uno tremore ceciderunt! Quot oppida in Syria, quot in Macedonia devorata sunt! Cypron quotiens vastavit haec clades! Quotiens in se Paphus corruit! Frequenter nobis nuntiati sunt totarum urbium interitus, et nos inter quos ista frequenter nuntiantur, quota pars omnium sumus! Consurgamus itaque adversus fortuita et quidquid inciderit sciamus non esse tam magnum quam rumore iactetur. [10] Civitas arsit opulenta ornamentumque provinciarum quibus et inserta erat et excepta, uni tamen inposita et huic non latissimo monti: omnium istarum civitatum quas nunc magnificas ac nobiles audis vestigia quoque tempus eradet. Non vides quemadmodum in Achaia clarissimarum urbium iam fundamenta consumpta sint nec quicquam extet ex quo appareat illas saltem fuisse? [11] Non tantum manu facta labuntur, nec tantum humana arte atque industria posita vertit dies:

iuga montium diffluunt, totae desedere regiones, operta sunt fluctibus quae procul a conspectu maris stabant; vasta vis ignium colles per quos relucebat erosit et quondam altissimos vertices, solacia navigantium ac speculas, ad humile deduxit. Ipsius naturae opera vexantur et ideo aequo animo ferre debemus urbium excidia. [12] Casurae stant; omnis hic exitus manet, sive <ventorum> interna vis flatusque per clusa violenti pondus sub quo tenentur excusserint, sive torrentium <impetus> in abdito vastior obstantia effregerit, sive flammaram violentia conpaginem soli ruperit, sive vetustas, a qua nihil tutum est, expugnaverit minutatim, sive gravitas caeli egresserit populos et situs deserta corruperit. Enumerare omnes fatorum vias longum est. Hoc unum scio: omnia mortalium opera mortalitate damnata sunt, inter peritura vivimus.

[13] Haec ergo atque eiusmodi solacia admoveo Liberali nostro incredibili quodam patriae suae amore flagranti, quae fortasse consumpta est ut in melius excitaretur. Saepe maiori fortunae locum fecit iniuria: multa ceciderunt ut altius surgerent. Timagenes, felicitati urbis inimicus, aiebat Romae sibi incendia ob hoc unum dolori esse, quod sciret meliora surrectura quam arsissent. [14] In hac quoque urbe veri simile est certaturos omnes ut maiora celsioraque quam amisere restituant. Sint utinam diuturna et melioribus auspiciis in aevum longius condita! Nam huic coloniae ab origine sua centensimus annus est, aetas ne homini quidem extrema. A Planco deducta in hanc frequentiam loci opportunitate convaluit: quot tamen gravissimos casus intra spatium humanae <pertulit> senectutis! [15] Itaque formetur animus ad intellectum patientiamque sortis suae et sciat nihil inausum esse fortunae, adversus imperia illam idem habere iuris quod adversus imperantis, adversus urbes idem posse quod adversus homines. Nihil horum indignandum est: in eum intravimus mundum in quo his legibus vivitur. Placet: pare. Non placet: quacumque vis exi. Indignare si quid in te iniqui proprie constitutum est; sed si haec summos imosque necessitas alligat, in gratiam cum fato revertere, a quo omnia resolvuntur. [16] Non est quod nos tumulis metiaris et his monumentis quae viam disparia praetexunt: aequat omnis cinis. Inpares nascimur, pares morimur. Idem de urbibus quod de urbium incolis dico: tam Ardea capta quam Roma est. Conditor ille iuris humani non natalibus nos nec nominum claritate distinxit, nisi dum sumus: ubi vero ad finem mortalium ventum est, ‘discede’ inquit ‘ambitio: omnium quae terram premunt siremps lex esto’. Ad omnia patienda pares sumus; nemo altero fragilior est, nemo in crastinum sui certior.

[17] Alexander Macedonum rex discere geometriam coeperat, infelix, sciturus quam pusilla terra esset, ex qua minimum occupaverat. Ita dico: ‘infelix’ ob hoc quod intellegere debebat falsum se gerere cognomen: quis enim esse magnus in pusillo potest? Erant illa quae tradebantur subtilia et diligenti intentione discenda, non quae perciperet vesanus homo et trans oceanum cogitationes suas mittens. ‘Facilia’ inquit ‘me doce’. Cui praeceptor ‘ista’ inquit ‘omnibus eadem sunt, aequae difficilia’. [18] Hoc puta rerum naturam dicere: ‘ista de quibus quereris omnibus eadem sunt; nulli dare faciliora possum, sed quisquis volet sibi ipse illa reddet faciliora’. Quomodo? aequanimitate. Et doleas oportet et sitias et esurias et senescas (si tibi longior contigerit inter homines mora) et aegrotas et perdas aliquid et pereas. [19] Non est tamen quod istis qui te circumstrepunt credas: nihil horum malum est, nihil intolerabile aut durum. Ex consensu istis metus est. Sic mortem times quomodo famam: quid autem stultius homine verba metuente? Eleganter Demetrius noster solet dicere eodem loco sibi esse voces inperitorum quo ventre redditos crepitus. ‘Quid enim’ inquit ‘mea, susum isti an deosum sonent?’ [20] Quanta dementia est vereri ne infameris ab infamibus! Quemadmodum famam extimuisti sine causa, sic et illa quae numquam timeres nisi fama iussisset. Num quid detrimenti faceret vir bonus iniquis rumoribus sparsus? [21] Ne morti quidem hoc apud nos noceat: et haec malam opinionem habet. Nemo eorum qui illam accusat expertus est: interim temeritas est damnare quod nescias. At illud scis, quam multis utilis sit, quam multos liberet tormentis, egestate, querellis, supplicis, taedio. Non sumus in ullius potestate, cum mors in nostra potestate sit. Vale.

XCII. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Puto, inter me teque conveniet externa corpori adquiri, corpus in honorem animi coli, in animo esse partes ministras, per quas movemur alimurque, propter ipsum principale nobis datas. In hoc principali est aliquid inrationale, est et rationale; illud huic servit, hoc unum est quod alio non refertur sed omnia ad se refert. Nam illa quoque divina ratio omnibus praeposita est, ipsa sub nullo est; et haec autem nostra eadem est, quae ex illa est.

[2] Si de hoc inter nos convenit, sequitur ut de illo quoque conveniat, in hoc uno positam esse beatam vitam, ut in nobis ratio perfecta sit. Haec enim sola non summittit animum, stat contra fortunam; in quolibet rerum habitu ~servitus~ servat. Id autem unum bonum est quod numquam defringitur. Is est, inquam, beatus quem nulla res minorem facit; tenet summa, et ne ulli quidem nisi sibi innixus; nam qui aliquo auxilio sustinetur potest cadere. Si aliter est, incipient multum in nobis valere non nostra. Quis autem vult constare fortuna aut quis se prudens ob aliena miratur? [3] Quid est beata vita? securitas et perpetua tranquillitas. Hanc dabit animi magnitudo, dabit constantia bene iudicati tenax. Ad haec quomodo pervenitur? si veritas tota perspecta est; si servatus est in rebus agendis ordo, modus, decor, innoxia voluntas ac benigna, intenta rationi nec umquam ab illa recedens, amabilis simul mirabilisque. Denique ut breviter tibi formulam scribam, talis animus esse sapientis viri debet qualis deum deceat. [4] Quid potest desiderare is cui omnia honesta contingunt? Nam si possunt aliquid non honesta conferre ad optimum statum, in his erit beata vita sine quibus non est. Et quid turpius stultiusve quam bonum rationalis animi ex inrationalibus nectere?

[5] Quidam tamen augeri summum bonum iudicant, quia parum plenum sit fortuitis repugnantibus. Antipater quoque inter magnos sectae huius auctores aliquid se tribuere dicit externis, sed exiguum admodum. Vides autem quale sit die non esse contentum nisi aliquis igniculus adluxerit: quod potest in hac claritate solis habere scintilla momentum? [6] Si non es sola honestate contentus, necesse est aut quietem adici velis, quam Graeci aochlesian vocant, aut voluptatem.

Horum alterum utcumque recipi potest; vacat enim animus molestia liber ad inspectum universi, nihilque illum avocat a contemplatione naturae. Alterum illud, voluptas, bonum pecoris est: adicimus rationali inrationale, honesto inhonestum, magno * * * vitam facit titillatio corporis? [7] Quid ergo dubitatis dicere bene esse homini, si palato bene est? Et hunc tu, non dico inter viros numeras, sed inter homines, cuius summum bonum saporibus et coloribus et sonis constat? Excedat ex hoc animalium numero pulcherrimo ac dis secundo; mutis adgregetur animal pabulo laetum. [8] Inrationalis pars animi duas habet partes, alteram animosam, ambitiosam, inpotentem, positam in adfectionibus, alteram humilem, languidam, voluptatibus deditam: illam effrenatam, meliorem tamen, certe fortiolem ac digniorem viro, reliquerunt, hanc necessariam beatae vitae putaverunt, enervem et abiectam. [9] Huic rationem servire iusserunt, et fecerunt animalis generosissimi summum bonum demissum et ignobile, praeterea mixtum portentosumque et ex diversis ac male congruentibus membris. Nam ut ait Vergilius noster in Scylla,

pube tenus, postrema inmani corpore pistrix delphinum caudas utero commissa luporum.

Huic tamen Scyllae fera animalia adiuncta sunt, horrenda, velocia: at isti sapientiam ex quibus composuere portentis? [10] Prima pars hominis est ipsa virtus; huic committitur inutilis caro et fluida, receptandis tantum cibis habilis, ut ait Posidonius. Virtus illa divina in lubricum desinit et superioribus eius partibus venerandis atque caelestibus animal iners ac marcidum adtexitur. Illa utcumque altera quies nihil quidem ipsa praestabat animo, sed inpedimenta removebat: voluptas ultro dissolvit et omne robur emollit. Quae invenietur tam discors inter se iunctura corporum? Fortissimae rei inertissima adstruitur, severissimae parum seria, sanctissimae intemperans usque ad incesta.

[11] 'Quid ergo?' inquit 'si virtutem nihil inpeditura sit bona valetudo et quies et dolorum vacatio, non petes illas?' Quidni petam? non quia bona sunt, sed quia secundum naturam sunt, et quia bono a me iudicio sumuntur. Quid erit tunc in illis bonum? hoc unum, bene eligi. Nam cum vestem qualem decet sumo, cum ambulo ut oportet, cum ceno quemadmodum debeo, non cena aut ambulatio aut vestis bona sunt, sed meum in iis propositum servantis in quaque re rationi convenientem modum. [12] Etiamnunc adiciam: mundaе vestis electio adpetenda est homini; natura enim homo mundum et elegans animal est. Itaque non est bonum per se munda vestis sed mundaе vestis electio, quia non in re bonum est sed in electione quali; actiones nostrae honestae sunt, non ipsa quae aguntur. [13] Quod de veste dixi, idem me dicere de corpore existima. Nam hoc quoque natura ut quandam vestem animo circumdedit; velamentum eius est. Quis autem umquam vestimenta aestimavit arcula? nec bonum nec malum vagina gladium facit. Ergo de corpore quoque idem tibi respondeo: sumpturum quidem me, si detur electio, et sanitatem et vires, bonum autem futurum iudicium de illis meum, non ipsa.

[14] 'Est quidem' inquit 'sapiens beatus; summum tamen illud bonum non consequitur nisi illi et naturalia instrumenta respondeant. Ita miser quidem esse qui virtutem habet non potest, beatissimus autem non est qui naturalibus bonis destituitur, ut valetudine, ut membrorum integritate.' [15] Quod incredibilis videtur, id concedis, aliquem in maximis et continuis doloribus non esse miserum, esse etiam beatum: quod levius est negas, beatissimum esse. Atqui si potest virtus efficere ne miser aliquis sit, facilius efficiet ut beatissimus sit; minus enim intervalli a beato ad beatissimum restat quam a misero ad beatum. An quae res tantum valet ut ereptum calamitatibus inter beatos locet non potest adicere quod superest, ut beatissimum faciat? in summo deficit clivo? [16] Commoda sunt in vita et incommoda, utraque extra nos. Si non est miser vir bonus quamvis omnibus prematur incommodis, quomodo non est beatissimus si aliquibus commodis deficitur? Nam quemadmodum incommodorum onere usque ad miserum non deprimitur, sic commodorum inopia non deducitur a beatissimo, sed tam sine commodis beatissimus est quam non est sub incommodis miser; aut potest illi eripi bonum suum, si potest minui. [17] Paulo ante dicebam igniculum nihil conferre lumini solis; claritate enim eius quidquid sine illo luceret absconditur. 'Sed quaedam' inquit 'soli quoque opstant.' At sol integer est etiam inter opposita, et quamvis aliquid interiacet quod nos prohibeat eius aspectu, in opere est, cursu suo fertur; quotiens inter nubila eluxit, non est sereno minor, ne tardior quidem, quoniam multum interest utrum aliquid obstet tantum an inpediat. [18] Eodem modo virtuti opposita nihil detrahunt: non est minor, sed minus fulget. Nobis forsitan non aequae apparet ac nitet, sibi eadem est et more solis obscuri in occulto vim suam exercet. Hoc itaque adversus virtutem possunt calamitates et damna et iniuriae quod adversus solem potest nebula.

[21] 'Frigidum' inquit 'aliquid et calidum novimus, inter utrumque tepidum est; sic aliquis beatus est, aliquis miser, aliquis nec beatus nec miser.' Volo hanc contra nos positam imaginem excutere. Si tepido illi plus frigidi ingessero, fiet frigidum; si plus calidi adfudero, fiet novissime calidum. At huic nec misero nec beato quantumcumque ad miserias adiecero, miser non erit, quemadmodum dicitis; ergo imago ista dissimilis est. [22] Deinde trado tibi hominem nec miserum nec beatum. Huic adicio caecitatem: non fit miser; adicio debilitatem: non fit miser; adicio dolores continuos et graves: miser non fit. Quem tam multa mala in miseram vitam non transferunt ne ex beata quidem educunt. [23] Si non potest, ut dicitis, sapiens ex beato in miserum decidere, non potest in non beatum. Quare enim qui labi coepit alicubi subsistat? quae res illum non patitur ad imum devolvi retinet in summo. Quidni non possit beata vita rescindi? ne remitti quidem potest, et ideo virtus ad illam per se ipsa satis est.

[24] ‘Quid ergo?’ inquit ‘sapiens non est beatior qui diutius vixit, quem nullus avocavit dolor, quam ille qui cum mala fortuna semper luctatus est?’ Responde mihi: numquid et melior est et honestior? Si haec non sunt, ne beatior quidem est. Rectius vivat oportet ut beatius vivat: si rectius non potest, ne beatius quidem. Non intenditur virtus, ergo ne beata quidem vita, quae ex virtute est. Virtus enim tantum bonum est ut istas accessiones minutas non sentiat, brevitatem aevi et dolorem et corporum varias offensiones; nam voluptas non est digna ad quam respiciat. [25] Quid est in virtute praecipuum? futuro non indigere nec dies suos computare. In quantulo libet tempore bona aeterna consummat. Incredibilia nobis haec videntur et supra humanam naturam excurrentia; maiestatem enim eius ex nostra inbecillitate metimur et vitiis nostris nomen virtutis inponimus. Quid porro? non aequè incredibile videtur aliquem in summis cruciatibus positum dicere ‘beatus sum’? Atqui haec vox in ipsa officina voluptatis audita est. ‘Beatissimum’ inquit ‘hunc et ultimum diem ago’ Epicurus, cum illum hinc urinae difficultas torqueret, hinc insanabilis exulcerati dolor ventris. [26] Quare ergo incredibilia ista sint apud eos qui virtutem colunt, cum apud eos quoque reperiantur apud quos voluptas imperavit? Hi quoque degeneres et humillimae mentis aiunt in summis doloribus, in summis calamitatibus sapientem nec miserum futurum nec beatum. Atqui hoc quoque incredibile est, immo incredibilius; non video enim quomodo non inimum agatur e fastigio suo deiecta virtus. Aut beatum praestare debet aut, si ab hoc depulsa est, non prohibebit fieri miserum. Stans non potest mitti: aut vincatur oportet aut vincat.

[27] ‘Dis’ inquit ‘inmortalibus solis et virtus et beata vita contigit, nobis umbra quaedam illorum bonorum et similitudo; accedimus ad illa, non pervenimus.’ Ratio vero dis hominibusque communis est: haec in illis consummata est, in nobis consummabilis. [28] Sed ad desperationem nos vitia nostra perducunt. Nam ille alter secundus est ut aliquis parum constans ad custodienda optima, cuius iudicium labat etiam nunc et incertum est. Desideret oculorum atque aurium sensum, bonam valetudinem et non foedum aspectum corporis et habitu manente suo aetatis praeterea longius spatium. [29] Per haec potest non paenitenda agi vita, at imperfecto viro huic malitiae vis

quaedam inest, quia animum habet mobilem ad prava, illa ~aitarens malitia et ea agitata~ abest [de bono]. Non est adhuc bonus, sed in bonum fingitur; cuicumque autem deest aliquid ad bonum, malus est.

si cui virtus animusque in corpore praesens,

hic deos aequat, illo tendit originis suae memor. Nemo inprobe eo conatur ascendere unde descenderat. Quid est autem cur non existimes in eo divini aliquid existere qui dei pars est? Totum hoc quo continemur et unum est et deus; et socii sumus eius et membra. Capax est noster animus, perfertur illo si vitia non depriment. Quemadmodum corporum nostrorum habitus erigitur et spectat in caelum, ita animus, cui in quantum vult licet porrigi, in hoc a natura rerum formatus est, ut paria dis vellet; et si utatur suis viribus ac se in spatium suum extendat, non aliena via ad summa nititur. [31] Magnus erat labor ire in caelum: redit. Cum hoc iter nactus est, vadit audaciter contemptor omnium nec ad pecuniam respicit aurumque et argentum, illis in quibus iacuere tenebris dignissima, non ab hoc aestimat splendore quo inperitorum verberant oculos, sed a vetere caeno ex quo illa secrevit cupiditas nostra et effodit. Scit, inquam, aliubi positas esse divitias quam quo congeruntur; animum impleri debere, non arcam. [32] Hunc inponere dominio rerum omnium licet, hunc in possessionem rerum naturae inducere, ut sua orientis occidentisque terminis finiat, deorumque ritu cuncta possideat, cum opibus suis divites superne despiciat, quorum nemo tam suo laetus est quam tristis alieno. [33] Cum se in hanc sublimitatem tulit, corporis quoque ut oneris necessarii non amator sed procurator est, nec se illi cui inpositus est subicit. Nemo liber est qui corpori servit; nam ut alios dominos quos nimia pro illo sollicitudo invenit transeas, ipsius morosum imperium delicatumque est. [34] Ab hoc modo aequo animo exit, modo magno prosilit, nec quis deinde relictus eius futurus sit exitus quaerit; sed ut ex barba capilloque tonsa neglegimus, ita ille divinus animus egressurus hominem, quo receptaculum suum conferatur, ignis illud ~excludat~ an terra contegat an ferae distrahant, non magis ad se iudicat pertinere quam secundas ad editum infantem. Utrum proiectum aves differant an consumatur canibus data praeda marinis, quid ad illum qui nullus <est>? [35] Sed tunc quoque cum inter homines est, <non> timet ullas post mortem minas eorum quibus usque ad mortem timeri parum est. 'Non conterret' inquit 'me nec uncus nec proiecti ad contumeliam cadaveris laceratio foeda visuris. Neminem de supremo officio rogo, nulli reliquias meas commendo. Ne quis insepultus esset rerum natura prospexit: quem saevitia proiecerit dies condet.' Diserte Maecenas ait, nec tumulum curo: sepelit natura relictos.

Alte cinctum putes dixisse; habuit enim ingenium et grande et virile, nisi illud secunda discinxissent. Vale.

XCIII. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] In epistula qua de morte Metronactis philosophi querebaris, tamquam et potuisset diutius vivere et debuisset, aequitatem tuam desideravi, quae tibi in omni persona, in omni negotio superest, in una re deest, in qua omnibus: multos inveni aequos adversus homines, adversus deos neminem. Obiurgamus cotidie fatum: ‘quare ille in medio cursu raptus est? quare ille non rapitur? quare senectutem et sibi et aliis gravem extendit?’ [2] Utrum, obsecro te, aequius iudicas, te naturae an tibi parere naturam? quid autem interest quam cito exeas unde utique exeundum est? Non ut diu vivamus curandum est, sed ut satis; nam ut diu vivas fato opus est, ut satis, animo. Longa est vita si plena est; impletur autem cum animus sibi bonum suum reddidit et ad se potestatem sui transtulit. [3] Quid illum octoginta anni iuvant per inertiam exacti? non vixit iste sed in vita moratus est, nec sero mortuus est, sed diu. ‘Octoginta annis vixit.’ Interest mortem eius ex quo die numeres. ‘At ille obiit viridis.’ [4] Sed officia boni civis, boni amici, boni filii executus est; in nulla parte cessavit; licet aetas eius imperfecta sit, vita perfecta est. ‘Octoginta annis vixit.’ Immo octoginta annis fuit, nisi forte sic vixisse eum dicis quomodo dicuntur arbores vivere. Obsecro te, Lucili, hoc agamus ut quemadmodum pretiosa rerum sic vita nostra non multum pateat sed multum pendeat; actu illam metiamur, non tempore. Vis scire quid inter hunc intersit vegetum contemptoremque fortunae functum omnibus vitae humanae stipendiis atque in summum bonum eius evectum et illum cui multi anni transmissi sunt? alter post mortem quoque est, alter ante mortem perit. [5] Laudemus itaque et in numero felicitum reponamus eum cui quantulumcumque temporis contigit bene conlocatum est. Vidit enim veram lucem; non fuit unus e multis; et vixit et vigit. Aliquando sereno usus est, aliquando, ut solet, validi sideris fulgor per nubila emicuit. Quid quaeris quamdiu vixerit? vivit: ad posteros usque transiluit et se in memoriam dedit. [6] Nec ideo mihi plures annos accedere recusaverim; nihil tamen mihi ad beatam vitam defuisse dicam si spatium eius inciditur; non enim ad eum diem me aptavi quem ultimum mihi spes avida promiserat, sed nullum non tamquam ultimum aspexi. Quid me interrogas quando natus sim, an inter iuniores adhuc censear? habeo meum. [7] Quemadmodum in minore corporis habitu potest homo esse perfectus, sic et in minore temporis modo potest vita esse perfecta. Aetas inter externa est. Quamdiu sim alienum est: quamdiu ero, <vere> ut sim, meum est. Hoc a me exige, ne velut per tenebras aevum ignobile emetiar, ut agam vitam, non ut praetervehar. [8] Quaeris quod sit amplissimum vitae spatium? usque ad sapientiam vivere; qui ad illam pervenit attingit non longissimum finem, sed maximum. Ille vero gloriatur audacter et dis agat gratias interque eos sibi, et rerum naturae inputet quod fuit. Merito enim inputabit: meliorem illi vitam reddidit quam accepit. Exemplar boni viri posuit, qualis quantusque esset ostendit; si quid adiecisset, fuisset simile praeterito. [9] Et tamen quousque vivimus? Omnium rerum cognitione frui sumus: scimus a quibus principiis natura se attollat, quemadmodum ordinet mundum, per quas annum vices revocet, quemadmodum omnia quae usquam erunt cluserit et se ipsam finem sui fecerit; scimus sidera impetu suo vadere, praeter terram nihil stare, cetera continua velocitate decurrere; scimus quemadmodum solem luna praetereat, quare tardior velociorem post se relinquat, quomodo lumen accipiat aut perdat, quae causa inducat noctem, quae reducat diem: illuc eundum est ubi ista propius aspicias. [10] ‘Nec hac spe’ inquit sapiens ille ‘fortius exeo, quod patere mihi ad deos meos iter iudico. Merui quidem admitti et iam inter illos fui animumque illo meum misi et ad me illi suum miserant. Sed tolli me de medio puta et post mortem nihil ex homine restare: aequae magnum animum habeo, etiam si nusquam transiturus excedo.’ Non tam multis vixit annis quam potuit. [11] Et paucorum versuum liber est et quidem laudandus atque utilis: annales Tanusii scis quam ponderosi sint et quid vocentur. Hoc est vita quorundam longa, et quod Tanusii sequitur annales. [12] Numquid feliciorem iudicas eum qui summo die muneris quam eum qui medio occiditur? numquid aliquem tam stulte cupidum esse vitae putas ut iugulari in spoliario quam in harena malit? Non maiore spatio alter alterum praecedimus. Mors per omnis it; qui occidit consequitur occisum. Minimum est de quo sollicitissime agitur. Quid autem ad rem pertinet quam diu vites quod evitare non possis? Vale.

XCIV. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Eam partem philosophiae quae dat propria cuique personae praecepta nec in universum componit hominem sed marito suadet quomodo se gerat adversus uxorem, patri quomodo educet liberos, domino quomodo servos regat, quidam solam receperunt, ceteras quasi extra utilitatem nostram vagantis reliquerunt, tamquam quis posset de parte suadere nisi qui summam prius totius vitae complexus esset. [2] Ariston Stoicus e contrario hanc partem levem existimat et quae non descendat in pectus usque, anilia habentem praecepta; plurimum ait proficere ipsa decreta philosophiae constitutionemque summi boni; ‘quam qui bene intellexit ac didicit quid in quaque re faciendum sit sibi ipse praecipit.’ [3] Quemadmodum qui iaculari discit destinatum locum captat et manum format ad derigenda quae mittit, cum hanc vim ex disciplina et exercitatione percepit, quocumque vult illa utitur (didicit enim non hoc aut illud ferire sed quodcumque voluerit), sic qui se ad totam vitam instruxit non desiderat particulatim admoneri, doctus in totum, non enim quomodo cum uxore aut cum filio viveret sed quomodo bene viveret: in hoc est et quomodo cum uxore ac liberis vivat. [4] Cleanthes utilem quidem iudicat et hanc partem, sed inbecillam nisi ab universo fluit, nisi decreta ipsa philosophiae et capita cognovit.

In duas ergo quaestiones locus iste dividitur: utrum utilis an inutilis sit, et an solus virum bonum possit efficere, id est utrum supervacuum sit an omnis faciat supervacuos. [5] Qui hanc partem videri volunt supervacuum hoc aiunt: si quid oculis oppositum moratur aciem, removendum est; illo quidem obiecto operam perdit qui praecipit ‘sic ambulabis, illo manum porriges’. Eodem modo ubi aliqua res occaecat animum et ad officiorum dispiciendum ordinem impedit, nihil agit qui praecipit ‘sic vives cum patre, sic cum uxore’. Nihil enim proficient praecepta quamdiu menti error offusus est: si ille discutitur, apparebit quid cuique debeatur officio. Alioqui doces illum quid sano faciendum sit, non efficis sanum. [6] Pauperi ut agat divitem monstras: hoc quomodo manente paupertate fieri potest? Ostendis esurienti quid tamquam satur faciat: fixam potius medullis famem detrahe. Idem tibi de omnibus vitiis dico: ipsa removenda sunt, non praeciendum quod fieri illis manentibus non potest. Nisi opiniones falsas quibus laboramus expuleris, nec avarus quomodo pecunia utendum sit exaudiet nec timidus quomodo periculosa contemnat. [7] Efficias oportet ut sciat pecuniam nec bonum nec malum esse; ostendas illi miserrimos divites; efficias ut quidquid publice expavimus sciat non esse tam timendum quam fama circumfert, nec <diu> dolere quemquam nec mori saepe: in morte, quam pati lex est, magnum esse solacium quod ad neminem redit; in dolore pro remedio futuram obstinationem animi, qui levius sibi facit quidquid contumaciter passus est; optimam doloris esse naturam, quod non potest nec qui extenditur magnus esse nec qui est magnus extendi; omnia fortiter excipienda quae nobis mundi necessitas imperat. [8] His decretis cum illum in conspectum suae condicionis adduxeris et cognoverit beatam esse vitam non quae secundum voluptatem est sed secundum naturam, cum virtutem unicum bonum hominis adamaverit, turpitudinem solum malum fugerit, reliqua omnia — divitias, honores, bonam valetudinem, vires, imperia — scierit esse mediam partem nec bonis adnumerandam nec malis, monitorem non desiderabit ad singula qui dicat ‘sic incede, sic cena; hoc viro, hoc feminae, hoc marito, hoc caelibis convenit’. [9] Ista enim qui diligentissime monent ipsi facere non possunt; haec paedagogus puero, haec avia nepoti praecipit, et irascendum non esse magister iracundissimus disputat. Si ludum litterarium intraveris, scies ista quae ingenti supercilio philosophi iactant in puerili esse praescripto.

an non habenti? Qui non habet nihil a te adiuvabitur, aures eius contraria monitionibus tuis fama possedit; qui habet exactum iudicium de fugiendis petendisque scit <quid> sibi faciendum sit etiam te tacente. Tota ergo pars ista philosophiae summoventi potest.

[13] Duo sunt propter quae delinquimus: aut inest animo pravis opinionibus malitia contracta aut, etiam si non est falsis occupatus, ad falsa proclivis est et cito specie quo non oportet trahente corrumpitur. Itaque debemus aut percurare mentem aegram et vitiis liberare aut vacantem quidem sed ad peiora pronam praeoccupare. Utrumque decreta philosophiae faciunt; ergo tale praecipendi genus nil agit. [14] Praeterea si praecepta singulis damus, incomprehensibile opus est; alia enim dare debemus feneranti, alia colenti agrum, alia negotianti, alia regum amicitias sequenti, alia pares, alia inferiores amatur. [15] In matrimonio praecipies quomodo vivat cum uxore aliquis quam virginem duxit, quomodo cum ea quae alicuius ante matrimonium experta est, quemadmodum cum locuplete, quemadmodum cum indotata. An non putas aliquid esse discriminis inter sterilem et fecundam, inter provectiorem et puellam, inter matrem et novercam? Omnis species conplecti non possumus: atqui singulae propria exigunt, leges autem philosophiae breves sunt et omnia alligant. [16] Adice nunc quod sapientiae praecepta finita debent esse et certa; si qua finiri non possunt, extra sapientiam sunt; sapientia rerum terminos novit. Ergo ista praeceptiva pars summovenda est, quia quod paucis promittit praestare omnibus non potest; sapientia autem omnis tenet. [17] Inter insaniam publicam et hanc quae medicis traditur nihil interest nisi quod haec morbo laborat, illa opinionibus falsis; altera causas furoris traxit ex valetudine, altera animi mala valetudo est. Si quis furioso praecepta det quomodo loqui debeat, quomodo procedere, quomodo in publico se gerere, quomodo in privato, erit ipso quem monebit insanior: [si] bilis nigra curanda est et ipsa furoris causa removenda. Idem in hoc alio animi furore faciendum est: ipse discuti debet; alioqui abibunt in vanum monentium verba.

[18] Haec ab Aristone dicuntur; cui respondebimus ad singula. Primum adversus illud quod ait, si quid obstat oculo et inpedit visum, debere removeri, fateor huic non opus esse praeceptis ad videndum, sed remedio quo purgetur acies et officientem sibi moram effugiat;

natura enim videmus, cui usum sui reddit qui removet obstantia; quid autem cuique debeat officio natura non docet. [19] Deinde cuius curata suffusio est, is non protinus cum visum recepit aliis quoque potest reddere: malitia liberatus et liberat. Non opus est exhortatione, ne consilio quidem, ut colorum proprietates oculus intellegat; a nigro album etiam nullo monente distinguet. Multis contra praeceptis eget animus ut videat quid agendum sit in vita. Quamquam oculis quoque aegros medicus non tantum curat sed etiam monet. [20] ‘Non est’ inquit ‘quod protinus inbecillam aciem committas inprobo lumini; a tenebris primum ad umbrosa procede, deinde plus aude et paulatim claram lucem pati adsuesce. Non est quod post cibum studeas, non est quod plenis oculis ac tumentibus imperes; adflatum et vim frigoris in os occurrentis evita’ — alia eiusmodi, quae non minus quam medicamenta proficiunt. Adicit remediis medicina consilium.

[21] ‘Error’ inquit ‘est causa peccandi: hunc nobis praecepta non detrahunt nec expugnant opiniones de bonis ac malis falsas.’ Concedo per se efficacia praecepta non esse ad evertendam pravam animi persuasionem; sed non ideo <non> aliis quidem adiecta proficiunt. Primum memoriam renovant; deinde quae in universo confusius videbantur in partes divisa diligentius considerantur. Aut [in] isto modo licet et consolationes dicas supervacuas et exhortationes: atqui non sunt supervacuae; ergo ne monitiones quidem. [22] ‘Stultum est’ inquit ‘praecipere aegro quid facere tamquam sanus debeat, cum restituenda sanitas sit, sine qua inrita sunt praecepta.’ Quid quod habent aegri quaedam sanique communia de quibus admonendi sunt? tamquam ne avide cibos adpetant, ut lassitudinem vitent. Habent quaedam praecepta communia pauper et dives. [23] ‘Sana’ inquit ‘avaritiam, et nihil habebis quod admoneas aut pauperem aut divitem, si cupiditas utriusque consedit.’ Quid quod aliud est non concupiscere pecuniam, aliud uti pecunia scire? cuius avari modum ignorant, etiam non avari usum. ‘Tolle’ inquit ‘errores: supervacua praecepta sunt.’ Falsum est. Puta enim avaritiam relaxatam, puta adstrictam esse luxuriam, temeritati frenos iniectos, ignaviae subditum calcar: etiam remotis vitiis, quid et quemadmodum debeamus facere discendum est. [24] ‘Nihil’ inquit ‘efficient monitiones admotae gravibus vitiis.’ Ne medicina quidem morbos insanabiles vincit, tamen adhibetur aliis in remedium, aliis in levamentum. Ne ipsa quidem universae philosophiae vis, licet totas in hoc vires suas advocet, duram iam et veterem animis extrahet pestem; sed non ideo nihil sanat quia non omnia.

[25] ‘Quid prodest’ inquit ‘aperta monstrare?’ Plurimum; interdum enim scimus nec adtendimus. Non docet admonitio sed advertit, sed excitat, sed memoriam continet nec patitur elabi. Pleraque ante oculos posita transimus: admonere genus adhortandi est. Saepe animus etiam aperta dissimulat; ingerenda est itaque illi notitia rerum notissimarum. Illa hoc loco in Vatinius Calvi repetenda sententia est: ‘factum esse ambitum scitis, et hoc vos scire omnes sciunt’. [26] Scis amicitias sancte colendas esse, sed non facis. Scis inprobum esse qui ab uxore pudicitiam exigit, ipse alienarum corruptor uxorum; scis ut illi nil cum adultero, sic tibi nil esse debere cum paelice, et non facis. Itaque subinde ad memoriam reducendus es; non enim reposita illa esse oportet sed in promptu. Quaecumque salutaria sunt saepe agitari debent, saepe versari, ut non tantum nota sint nobis sed etiam parata. Adice nunc quod aperta quoque apertiora fieri solent.

[27] ‘Si dubia sunt’ inquit ‘quae praecipis, probationes adicere debebis; ergo illae, non praecepta proficient.’ Quid quod etiam sine probationibus ipsa monentis auctoritas prodest? sic quomodo iurisconsultorum valent responsa, etiam si ratio non redditur. Praeterea ipsa quae praeciipiuntur per se multum habent ponderis, utique si aut carmini intexta sunt aut prosa oratione in sententiam coartata, sicut illa Catoniana: ‘emas non quod opus est, sed quod necesse est; quod non opus est asse carum est’, qualia sunt illa aut reddita oraculo aut similia: [28] ‘tempori parce’, ‘te nosce’. Numquid rationem exiges cum tibi aliquis hos dixerit versus?

Audentis fortuna iuvat, piger ipse sibi opstat.

Advocatum ista non quaerunt: adfectus ipsos tangunt et natura vim suam exercente proficiunt. [29] Omnium honestarum rerum semina animi gerunt, quae admonitione excitantur non aliter quam scintilla flatu levi adiuta ignem suum explicat; erigitur virtus cum tacta est et impulsata. Praeterea quaedam sunt quidem in animo, sed parum prompta, quae incipiunt in expedito esse cum dicta sunt; quaedam diversis locis iacent sparsa, quae contrahere inexercitata mens non potest. Itaque in unum conferenda sunt et iungenda, ut plus valeant animumque magis adlevent. [30] Aut si praecepta nihil adiuvant, omnis institutio tollenda est; ipsa natura contenti esse debemus. Hoc qui dicunt non vident alium esse ingenii mobilis et erecti, alium tardi et hebetis, utique alium alio ingeniosiore. Ingenii vis praeceptis alitur et crescit novasque persuasiones adicit innatis et depravata corrigit.

[32] ‘Si quis’ inquit ‘recta habet et honesta decreta, hic ex supervacuo monetur.’ Minime; nam hic quoque doctus quidem est facere quae debet, sed haec non satis perspicit. Non enim tantum adfectibus inpedimur quominus probanda faciamus sed inperitia inveniendi quid quaeque res exigit. Habemus interdum compositum animum, sed residem et inexercitatum ad inveniendam officiorum viam, quam admonitio demonstrat.

ac necessariis rebus non sunt infinita; tenues autem differentias habent quas exigunt tempora, loca, personae, sed his quoque dantur praecepta generalia.

[37] ‘Leges’ inquit ‘ut faciamus quod oportet non efficiunt, et quid aliud sunt quam minis mixta praecepta?’ Primum omnium ob hoc illae non persuadent quia minantur, at haec non cogunt sed exorant; deinde leges a scelere deterrent, praecepta in officium adhortantur. His adice quod leges quoque proficiunt ad bonos mores, utique si non tantum imperant sed docent. [38] In hac re dissentio a Posidonio, qui <‘improbo’ inquit> ‘quod Platonis legibus adiecta principia sunt. Legem enim brevem esse oportet, quo facilius ab inperitis teneatur. Velut emissa divinitus vox sit: iubeat, non disputet. Nihil videtur mihi frigidius, nihil ineptius quam lex cum prologo. Mone, dic quid me velis fecisse: non disco sed pareo.’ Proficiunt vero; itaque malis moribus uti videbis civitates usas malis legibus. [39] ‘At non apud omnis proficiunt.’ Ne philosophia quidem; nec ideo inutilis et formandis animis inefficax est. Quid autem? philosophia non vitae lex est? Sed putemus non proficere leges: non ideo sequitur ut ne monitiones quidem proficiant. Aut sic et consolationes nega proficere dissuasionisque et adhortationes et obiurgationes et laudationes. Omnia ista monitionum genera sunt; per ista ad perfectum animi statum pervenitur. [40] Nulla res magis animis honesta induit dubiosque et in pravum inclinabiles revocat ad rectum quam bonorum virorum conversatio; paulatim enim descendit in pectora et vim praeceptorum obtinet frequenter aspici, frequenter audiri. Occursus mehercules ipse sapientium iuvat, et est aliquid quod ex magno viro vel tacente proficias. [41] Nec tibi facile dixerim quemadmodum prosit, sicut illud intellegam profuisse. ‘Minuta quaedam’ ut ait Phaeton ‘animalia cum mordent non sentiuntur, adeo tenuis illis et fallens in periculum vis est; tumor indicat morsum et in ipso tumore nullum vulnus apparet.’ Idem tibi in conversatione virorum sapientium eveniet: non deprehendes quemadmodum aut quando tibi prosit, profuisse deprendes.

Avarus animus nullo satiatur lucro.

Ab alio expectes alteri quod feceris.

Haec cum ictu quodam audimus, nec ulli licet dubitare aut interrogare ‘quare?’; adeo etiam sine ratione ipsa veritas lucet. [44] Si reverentia frenat animos ac vitia conpescit, cur non et admonitio idem possit? Si inponit pudorem castigatio, cur admonitio non faciat, etiam si nudis praeceptis utitur? Illa vero efficacior est et altius penetrat quae adiuvat ratione quod praecipit, quae adicit quare quidque faciendum sit et quis facientem oboedientemque praeceptis fructus expectet. Si imperio proficitur, et admonitione; atqui proficitur imperio; ergo et admonitione. [45] In duas partes virtus dividitur, in contemplationem veri et actionem: contemplationem institutio tradit, actionem admonitio. Virtutem et exercet et ostendit recta actio. Acturo autem si prodest qui suadet, et qui monet proderit. Ergo si recta actio virtuti necessaria est, rectas autem actiones admonitio demonstrat, et admonitio necessaria est. [46] Duae res plurimum roboris animo dant, fides veri et fiducia: utramque admonitio facit. Nam et creditur illi et, cum creditum est, magnos animus spiritus concipit ac fiducia impletur; ergo admonitio non est supervacua. M. Agrippa, vir ingentis animi, qui solus ex iis quos civilia bella claros potentesque fecerunt felix in publicum fuit, dicere solebat multum se huic debere sententiae: ‘nam concordia parvae res crescunt, discordia maximae dilabuntur’. [47] Hac se aiebat et fratrem et amicum optimum factum. Si eiusmodi sententiae familiariter in animum receptae formant eum, cur non haec pars philosophiae quae talibus sententiis constat idem possit? Pars virtutis disciplina constat, pars exercitatione; et discas oportet et quod didicisti agendo confirmes. Quod si est, non tantum scita sapientiae prosunt sed etiam praecepta, quae adfectus nostros velut edicto coercent et ablegant.

[48] ‘Philosophia’ inquit ‘dividitur in haec, scientiam et habitum animi; nam qui didicit et facienda ac vitanda percepit nondum sapiens est nisi in ea quae didicit animus eius transfiguratus est. Tertia ista pars praecipendi ex utroque est, et ex decretis et ex habitu; itaque supervacua est ad implendam virtutem, cui duo illa sufficiunt.’ [49] Isto ergo modo et consolatio supervacua est (nam haec quoque ex utroque est) et adhortatio et suasio et ipsa argumentatio; nam et haec ab habitu animi compositi validique proficiscitur. Sed quamvis ista ex optimo habitu animi veniant, optimus animi habitus ex his est; et facit illa et ex illis ipse fit. [50] Deinde istud quod dicis iam perfecti viri est ac summam consecuti felicitatis humanae. Ad haec autem tarde pervenitur; interim etiam imperfecto sed proficienti demonstranda est in rebus agendis via. Hanc forsitan etiam sine admonitione dabit sibi ipsa sapientia, quae iam eo perduxit animum ut moveri nequeat nisi in rectum. Inbecillioribus quidem ingeniis necessarium est aliquem praeire: ‘hoc vitabis, hoc facies’. [51] Praeterea si expectat tempus quo per se sciat quid optimum factu sit, interim errabit et errando inpedietur quominus ad illud perveniat quo possit se esse contentus; regi ergo debet dum incipit posse se regere. Pueri ad praescriptum discunt; digiti illorum tenentur et aliena manu per litterarum simulacra ducuntur, deinde imitari iubentur proposita et ad illa reformare chirographum: sic animus noster, dum eruditur ad praescriptum, iuvatur.

cum possimus felicitatem domo promere. [54] Non licet, inquam, ire recta via; trahunt in pravum parentes, trahunt servi. Nemo errat uni sibi, sed dementia spargit in proximos accipitque invicem. Et ideo in singulis vitia populorum sunt quia illa populus dedit. Dum facit quisque peiorem, factus est; didicit deteriora, dein docuit, effectaque est ingens illa nequitia congesto in unum quod cuique pessimum scitur. [55] Sit ergo aliquis custos et aurem subinde pervellat abigatque rumores et reclamet populis laudantibus. Erras enim si existimas nobiscum vitia nasci: supervenerunt, ingesta sunt. Itaque monitionibus crebris opiniones quae nos circumsonant repellantur. [56] Nulli nos vitio natura conciliat: illa integros ac liberos genuit. Nihil quo avaritiam nostram inritaret posuit in aperto: pedibus aurum argentumque subiecit calcandumque ac premendum dedit quidquid est propter quod calcamur ac premimur. Illa vultus nostros erexit ad caelum et quidquid magnificum mirumque fecerat videri a suspicientibus voluit: ortus occasusque et properantis mundi volubilem cursum, interdiu terrena aperientem, nocte caelestia, tardos siderum incessus si compares toti, citatissimos autem si cogites quanta spatia numquam intermissa velocitate circumeant, defectus solis ac lunae invicem obstantium, alia deinceps digna miratu, sive per ordinem subeunt sive subitis causis mota prosiliunt, ut nocturnos ignium tractus et sine ullo ictu sonituque fulgores caeli patescentis columnasque ac trabes et varia simulacra flammaram. [57] Haec supra nos natura disposuit, aurum quidem et argentum et propter ista numquam pacem agens ferrum, quasi male nobis committerentur, abscondit. Nos in lucem propter quae pugnaremus extulimus, nos et causas periculorum nostrorum et instrumenta disiecto terrarum pondere eruimus, nos fortunae mala nostra tradidimus nec erubescimus summa apud nos haberi quae fuerant ima terrarum. [58] Vis scire quam falsus oculos tuos deceperit fulgor? nihil est istis quamdiu mersa et involuta caeno suo iacent foedius, nihil obscurius, quidni? quae per longissimorum cuniculorum tenebras extrahuntur; nihil est illis dum fiunt et a faece sua separantur informius. Denique ipsos opifices intueri per quorum manus sterile terrae genus et infernum perpurgatur: videbis quanta fuligine oblinantur. [59] Atqui ista magis inquinant animos quam corpora, et in possessore eorum quam in artifice plus sordium est. Necessarium itaque admoneri est, habere aliquem advocatum bonae mentis et in tanto fremitu tumultuque falsorum unam denique audire vocem. Quae erit illa vox? ea scilicet quae tibi tantis clamoribus ambitionis exsurdato salubria insusurret verba, quae dicat: [60] non est quod invid eas istis quos magnos felicesque populus vocat, non est quod tibi compositae mentis habitum et sanitatem plausus excutiat, non est quod tibi tranquillitatis tuae fastidium faciat ille sub illis fascibus purpura cultus, non est quod felicior eum iudices cui summovetur quam te quem lictor semita deicit. Si vis exercere tibi utile, nulli autem grave imperium, summove vitia. [61] Multi inveniuntur qui ignem inferant urbibus, qui inexpugnabilia saeculis et per aliquot aetates tuta prosternant, qui aequum arcibus aggerem attollant et muros in miram altitudinem eductos arietibus ac machinis quassent. Multi sunt qui ante se agant agmina et tergis hostium [et] graves instent et ad mare magnum perfusi caede gentium veniant, sed hi quoque, ut vincerent hostem, cupiditate victi sunt. Nemo illis venientibus restitit, sed nec ipsi ambitioni crudelitatisque restiterant; tunc cum agere alios visi sunt, agebantur. [62] Agebat infelicem Alexandrum furor aliena vastandi et ad ignota mittebat. An tu putas sanum qui a Graeciae primum cladibus, in qua eruditus est, incipit? qui quod cuique optimum est eripit, Lacedaemona servire iubet, Athenas tacere? Non contentus tot civitatum strage, quas aut vicerat Philippus aut emerat, alias alio loco proicit et toto orbe arma circumfert; nec subsistit usquam lassa crudelitas inmanium ferarum modo quae plus quam exigit fames mordent. [63] Iam in unum regnum multa regna coniecit, iam Graeci Persaeque eundem timent, iam etiam a Dareo liberae nationes iugum accipiunt; it tamen ultra oceanum solemque, indignatur ab Herculis Liberique vestigiis victoriam flectere, ipsi naturae vim parat. Non ille ire vult, sed non potest stare, non aliter quam in praeceps deiecta pondera, quibus eundi finis est iacuisse. [64] Ne Gnaeo quidem Pompeio externa bella ac domestica virtus aut ratio suadebat, sed insanus amor magnitudinis falsae. Modo in Hispaniam et Sertoriana arma, modo ad colligandos piratas ac maria pacanda vadebat: hae praetexebantur causae ad continuandam potentiam. [65] Quid illum in Africam, quid in septentrionem, quid in Mithridaten et Armeniam et omnis Asiae angulos traxit? infinita scilicet cupido crescendi, cum sibi uni parum magnus videretur. Quid C. Caesarem in sua fata pariter ac publica inmisit? gloria et ambitio et nullus supra ceteros eminendi modus. Unum ante se ferre non potuit, cum res publica supra se duos ferret. [66] Quid, tu C. Marium semel consulem (unum enim consulatum accepit, ceteros rapuit), cum Teutonos Cimbrosque concideret, cum Iugurtham per Africae deserta sequeretur, tot pericula putas adpetisse virtutis instinctu? Marius exercitus, Marius ambitio ducebat. [67] Isti cum omnia concuterent, concutiebantur turbinum more, qui rapta convolvunt sed ipsi ante volvuntur et ob hoc maiore impetu incurrunt quia nullum illis sui regimen est, ideoque, cum multis fuerunt malo, pestiferam illam vim qua plerisque nocuerunt ipsi quoque sentiunt. Non est quod credas quemquam fieri aliena infelicitate felicem.

[68] Omnia ista exempla quae oculis atque auribus nostris ingeruntur retexenda sunt, et plenum malis sermonibus pectus exhauriendum; inducenda in occupatum locum virtus, quae mendacia et contra verum placentia exstirpet, quae nos a populo cui nimis credimus separet ac sinceris opinionibus reddat. Hoc est enim sapientia, in naturam converti et eo restitui unde publicus error expulerit. [69] Magna pars sanitatis est hortatores insaniae reliquisse et ex isto coitu invicem noxio procul abisse. Hoc ut esse verum scias, aspice quanto aliter unusquisque populo vivat, aliter sibi. Non est per se magistra innocentiae solitudo nec frugalitatem docent rura, sed ubi testis ac spectator abscessit, vitia subsidunt, quorum monstrari et conspici fructus est. [70] Quis eam quam nulli ostenderet induit purpuram? quis posuit secretam in auro dapem? quis sub alicuius arboris rusticae proiectus umbra luxuriae suae pompam solus explicuit? Nemo oculis suis lautus est, ne paucorum quidem aut familiarium, sed apparatus vitiorum suorum pro modo turbae spectantis expandit. [71] Ita est: inritamentum est omnium in quae insanimus admirator et conscius. Ne concupiscamus efficies si ne ostendamus effeceris. Ambitio et luxuria et inpotentia scaenam desiderant: sanabis ista si absconderis. [72] Itaque si in medio urbium fremitu conlocati sumus, stet ad latus monitor et contra laudatores ingentium patrimoniorum laudet parvo divitem et usu opes metientem. Contra illos qui gratiam ac potentiam attollunt otium ipse suspiciat traditum litteris et animum ab externis ad sua reversum. [73] Ostendat ex constitutione vulgi beatos in illo invidioso fastigio suo tremens et attonitos longeque aliam de se opinionem habentis quam ab aliis habetur; nam quae aliis excelsa videntur ipsis praerupta sunt. Itaque exanimantur et trepidant quotiens despexerunt in illud magnitudinis suae praeceps; cogitant enim varios casus et in sublimi maxime lubricos. [74] Tunc adpetita formidant et quae illos graves aliis reddit gravior ipsis felicitas incubat. Tunc laudant otium lene et sui iuris, odio est fulgor et fuga a rebus adhuc stantibus quaeritur. Tunc demum videas philosophantis metu et aegrae fortunae sana consilia. Nam quasi ista inter se contraria sint, bona fortuna et mens bona, ita melius in malis sapimus: secunda rectum auferunt. Vale.

XCV. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Petis a me ut id quod in diem suum dixeram debere differri repraesentem et scribam tibi an haec pars philosophiae quam Graeci paraeneticon vocant, nos praeceptivam dicimus, satis sit ad consummandam sapientiam. Scio te in bonam partem accepturum si negavero. Eo magis promitto et verbum publicum perire non patior: ‘postea noli rogare quod inpetrare nolueris’. [2] Interdum enim enixe petimus id quod recusaremus si quis offerret. Haec sive levitas est sive vernilitas punienda est promittendi facilitate. Multa videri volumus velle sed nolumus. Recitator historiam ingentem attulit minutissime scriptam, artissime plectam, et magna parte perlecta ‘desinam’ inquit ‘si vultis’: adclamatur ‘recita, recita’ ab iis qui illum ommutescere illic cupiunt. Saepe aliud volumus, aliud optamus, et verum ne dis quidem dicimus, sed dii aut non exaudiunt aut miserentur. [3] Ego me omnia misericordia vindicabo et tibi ingentem epistulam inpingam, quam tu si invitus leges, dicito ‘ego mihi hoc contraxi’, teque inter illos numera quos uxor magno ducta ambitu torquet, inter illos quos divitiae per summum acquisitae sudorem male habent, inter illos quos honores nulla non arte atque opera petiti discruciant, et ceteros malorum suorum compotes.

[4] Sed ut omissio principio rem ipsam adgrediar, ‘beata’ inquit ‘vita constat ex actionibus rectis; ad actiones rectas praecepta perducunt; ergo ad beatam vitam praecepta sufficiunt’. Non semper ad actiones rectas praecepta perducunt, sed cum obsequens ingenium est; aliquando frustra admoventur, si animum opiniones obsident pravae. [5] Deinde etiam si recte faciunt, nesciunt facere se recte. Non potest enim quisquam nisi ab initio formatus et tota ratione compositus omnis exsequi numeros ut sciat quando oporteat et in quantum et cum quo et quemadmodum et quare. Non potest toto animo ad honesta conari, ne constanter quidem aut libenter, sed respiciet, sed haesitabit.

Nam tibi de summa caeli ratione deumque disserere incipiam et rerum primordia pandam, unde omnis natura creet res, auctet alatque, quoque eadem rursus natura preempta resolvat, ut ait Lucretius.’ Sequitur ergo ut, cum contemplativa sit, habeat decreta sua. [12] Quid quod facienda quoque nemo rite obibit nisi is cui ratio erit tradita qua in quaque re omnis officiorum numeros exsequi possit? quos non servabit qui in rem praecepta acceperit, non in omne. Inbecilla sunt per se et, ut ita dicam, sine radice quae partibus dantur. Decreta sunt quae muniant, quae securitatem nostram tranquillitatemque tueantur, quae totam vitam totamque rerum naturam simul contineant. Hoc interest inter decreta philosophiae et praecepta quod inter elementa et membra: haec ex illis dependent, illa et horum causae sunt et omnium.

[15] Medicina quondam paucarum fuit scientia herbarum quibus sisteretur fluens sanguis, vulnera coirent; paulatim deinde in hanc pervenit tam multiplicem varietatem. Nec est mirum tunc illam minus negotii habuisse firmis adhuc solidisque corporibus et facili cibo nec per artem voluptatemque corrupto: qui postquam coepit non ad tollendam sed ad inritandam famem quaeri et inventae sunt mille conditurae quibus aviditas excitaretur, quae desiderantibus alimenta erant onera sunt plenis. [16] Inde pallor et nervorum vino madentium tremor et miserabilior ex cruditatibus quam ex fame macies; inde incerti labantium pedes et semper qualis in ipsa ebrietate titubatio; inde in totam cutem umor admissus distensusque venter dum male adsuescit plus capere quam poterat; inde suffusio luridae bilis et decolor vultus tabesque ~in se~ putrescentium et retorridi digiti articulis obrigescentibus nervorumque sine sensu iacentium torpor aut palpitatio [corporum] sine intermissione vibrantium. [17] Quid capitis vertigines dicam? quid oculorum auriumque tormenta et cerebri exaestuantis verminationes et omnia per quae exoneramur internis ulceribus adfecta? Innumerabilia praeterea febrium genera, aliarum impetu saevientium, aliarum tenui peste repentium, aliarum cum horrore et multa membrorum quassatione venientium? [18] Quid alios referam innumerabiles morbos, supplicia luxuriae? Immunes erant ab istis malis qui nondum se delicis solverant, qui sibi imperabant, sibi ministrabant. Corpora opere ac vero labore durabant, aut cursu defatigati aut venatu aut tellure versanda; excipiebat illos cibus qui nisi esurientibus placere non posset. Itaque nihil opus erat tam magna medicorum supellectile nec tot ferramentis atque puxidibus. Simplex erat ex causa simplici valetudo: multos morbos multa fericula fecerunt. [19] Vide quantum rerum per unam gulam transiturarum permisceat luxuria, terrarum marisque vastatrix. Necesse est itaque inter se tam diversa dissideant et hausta male digerantur aliis alio nitentibus. Nec mirum quod inconstans variusque ex discordi cibo morbus est et illa ex contrariis naturae partibus in eundem compulsa <ventrem> redundant. Inde tam novo aegrotamus genere quam vivimus.

morbos non miraberis: cocos numera. Cessat omne studium et liberalia professi sine ulla frequentia desertis angulis praesident; in rhetorum ac philosophorum scholis solitudo est: at quam celebres culinae sunt, quanta circa nepotum focos <se> iuventus premit! [24] Transeo puerorum infelicium greges quos post transacta convivialiae cubiculi contumeliae expectant; transeo agmina exoletorum per nationes coloresque discripta ut eadem omnibus levitas sit, eadem primae mensura lanuginis, eadem species capillorum, ne quis cui rector est coma crispulis misceatur; transeo pistorum turbam, transeo ministratorum per quos signo dato ad inferendam cenam discurritur. Di boni, quantum hominum unus venter exercet! [25] Quid? tu illos boletos, voluptarium venenum, nihil occulti operis iudicas facere, etiam si praesentanei non fuerunt? Quid? tu illam aestivam nivem non putas callum iocineribus obducere? Quid? illa ostrea, inertissimam carnem caeno saginatam, nihil existimas limosae gravitatis inferre? Quid? illud sociorum garum, pretiosam malorum piscium saniem, non credis urere salsa tabe praecordia? Quid? illa purulenta et quae tantum non ex ipso igne in os transferuntur iudicas sine noxa in ipsis visceribus extinguere? Quam foedi itaque pestilentesque ructus sunt, quantum fastidium sui exhalantibus crapulam veterem! scias putrescere sumpta, non concoqui. [26] Memini fuisse quondam in sermone nobilem patinam in quam quidquid apud lautos solet diem ducere properans in damnum suum popina congesserat: veneriae spondylique et ostrea eatenus circumcisa qua eduntur intervenientibus distinguebantur ~echini totam destructique~ sine ullis ossibus nulli constraverant. [27] Piget esse iam singula: coguntur in unum sapes. In cena fit quod fieri debebat in ventre: expecto iam ut manducata ponantur. Quantulo autem hoc minus est, testas excerpere atque ossa et dentium opera cocum fungi? 'Gravest luxuriari per singula: omnia semel et in eundem saponem versa ponantur. Quare ego ad unam rem manum porrigam? plura veniant simul, multorum ferculorum ornamenta coeant et cohaereant. [28] Sciant protinus hi qui iactationem ex istis peti et gloriam aiebant non ostendi ista sed conscientiae dari. Pariter sint quae disponi solent, uno iure perfusa; nihil intersit; ostrea, echini, spondyli, nulli perturbati concoctique ponantur.' Non esset confusior vomentium cibus. [29] Quomodo ista perplexa sunt, sic ex istis non singulares morbi nascuntur sed inexplicabiles, diversi, multiformes, adversus quos et medicina armare se coepit multis generibus, multis observationibus.

Idem tibi de philosophia dico. Fuit aliquando simplicior inter minora peccantis et levi quoque cura remediabiles: adversus tantam morum eversionem omnia conanda sunt. Et utinam sic denique lues ista vincatur! [30] Non privatim solum sed publice furimus. Homicidia conpescimus et singulas caedes: quid bella et occisarum gentium gloriosum scelus? Non avaritia, non crudelitas modum novit. Et ista quamdiu furtim et a singulis fiunt minus noxia minusque monstrosa sunt: ex senatus consultis plebisque scitis saeva exercentur et publice iubentur vetata privatim. [31] Quae clam commissa capite luerent, tum quia paludati fecere laudamus. Non pudet homines, mitissimum genus, gaudere sanguine alterno et bella gerere gerendaque liberis tradere, cum inter se etiam mutis ac feris pax sit. [32] Adversus tam potentem explicitumque late furem operosior philosophia facta est et tantum sibi virium sumpsit quantum iis adversus quae parabatur accesserat. Expeditum erat obiurgare indulgentis mero et petentis delicatorem cibum, non erat animus ad frugalitatem magna vi reducendus a qua paullum discesserat:

nunc manibus rapidis opus est, nunc arte magistra.

Voluptas ex omni quaeritur. Nullum intra se manet vitium: in avaritiam luxuria praeceps est. Honesti oblivio invasit; nihil turpest cuius placet pretium. Homo, sacra res homini, iam per lusum ac iocum occiditur et quem erudiri ad inferenda accipiendaque vulnera nefas erat, is iam nudus inermisque producitur satisque spectaculi ex homine mors est. [34] In hac ergo morum perversitate desideratur solito vehementius aliquid quod mala inveterata discutiat: decretis agendum est ut revellatur penitus falsorum recepta persuasio. His si adiunxerimus praecepta, consolationes, adhortationes, poterunt valere: per se inefficaces sunt. [35] Si volumus habere obligatos et malis quibus iam tenentur avellere, discant quid malum, quid bonum sit, sciant omnia praeter virtutem mutare nomen, modo mala fieri, modo bona. Quemadmodum primum militiae vinculum est religio et signorum amor et deserendi nefas, tunc deinde facile cetera exiguntur mandanturque iusiurandum adactis, ita in iis quos velis ad beatam vitam perducere prima fundamenta iacienda sunt et insinuanda virtus. Huius quadam superstitione teneantur, hanc ament; cum hac vivere velint, sine hac nolint.

[36] 'Quid ergo? non quidam sine institutione subtili evaserunt probi magnosque profectus adsecuti sunt dum nudis tantum praeceptis obsequuntur?' Fateor, sed felix illis ingenium fuit et salutaria in transitu rapuit. Nam ut dii immortales nullam didicere virtutem cum omni editi et pars naturae eorum est bonos esse, ita quidam ex hominibus egregiam sortiti indolem in ea quae tradi solent perveniunt sine longo magisterio et honesta complexi sunt cum primum audire; unde ista tam rapacia virtutis ingenia vel ex se fertilia. At illis aut hebetibus et obtusis aut mala consuetudine obsessis diu robigo animorum effricanda est. [37] Ceterum, ut illos in bonum pronos citius educit ad summa, et hos inbecilliores adiuvabit malisque opinionibus extrahet qui illis philosophiae placita tradiderit; quae quam sint necessaria sic licet videas. Quaedam insident nobis quae nos ad alia pigros, ad alia temerarios faciunt; nec haec audacia reprimi potest nec illa inertia suscitari nisi causae eorum eximuntur, falsa admiratio et falsa formido. Haec nos quamdiu possident, dicas licet 'hoc patri praestare debes, hoc liberis, hoc amicis, hoc hospitibus': temptantem avaritia retinebit. Sciet pro patria pugnandum esse, dissuadebit timor; sciet pro amicis desudandum esse ad extremum usque sudorem, sed deliciae vetabunt; sciet in uxore gravissimum esse genus iniuriae paelicem, sed illum libido in contraria inpinget. [38] Nihil ergo proderit dare praecepta nisi prius amoveris obstatura praeceptis, non magis quam proderit arma in conspectu posuisse propiusque admovisse nisi usurae manus expediuntur. Ut ad praecepta quae damus possit animus ire, solvendus est. [39] Putemus aliquem facere quod oportet: non faciet adsidue, non faciet aequaliter; nesciet enim quare faciat. Aliqua vel casu vel exercitatione exhibunt recta, sed non erit in manu regula ad quam exigantur, cui credat recta esse quae fecit. Non promittet se talem in perpetuum qui bonus casu est.

[40] Deinde praestabunt tibi fortasse praecepta ut quod oportet faciat, non praestabunt ut quemadmodum oportet; si hoc non praestant, ad virtutem non perducunt. Faciet quod oportet monitus, concedo; sed id parum est, quoniam quidem non in facto laus est sed in eo quemadmodum fiat. [41] Quid est cena sumptuosa flagitiosius et equestrem censum consumente? quid tam dignum censoria nota, si quis, ut isti ganeones loquuntur, sibi hoc et genio suo praestet? et deciens tamen sestertio aditiales cenae frugalissimis viris constiterunt. Eadem res, si gulae datur, turpis est, si honori, reprehensionem effugit; non enim luxuria sed inpensa sollemnis est. [42] Mullum ingentis formae — quare autem non pondus adicio et aliquorum gulam inrito? quattuor pondo et selibram fuisse aiebant — Tiberius Caesar missum sibi cum in macellum deferri et venire iussisset, ‘amici,’ inquit ‘omnia me fallunt nisi istum mullum aut Apicius emerit aut P. Octavius’. Ultra spem illi coniectura processit: liciti sunt, vicit Octavius et ingentem consecutus est inter suos gloriam, cum quinque sestertiis emisset piscem quem Caesar venderat, ne Apicius quidem emerat. Numerare tantum Octavio fuit turpe, non illi qui emerat ut Tiberio mitteret, quamquam illum quoque reprenderim: admiratus est rem qua putavit Caesarem dignum. Amico aliquis aegro adsidet: probamus. [43] At hoc hereditatis causa facit: vultur est, cadaver expectat. Eadem aut turpia sunt aut honesta: refert quare aut quemadmodum fiant. Omnia autem honeste fient si honesto nos addixerimus idque unum in rebus humanis bonum iudicamus quaeque ex eo sunt; cetera in diem bona sunt. [44] Ergo infigi debet persuasio ad totam pertinens vitam: hoc est quod decretum voco. Qualis haec persuasio fuerit, talia erunt quae agentur, quae cogitabuntur; qualia autem haec fuerint, talis vita erit. In particulas suasisse totum ordinanti parum est. [45] M. Brutus in eo libro quem peri kathekontos inscripsit dat multa praecepta et parentibus et liberis et fratribus: haec nemo faciet quemadmodum debet nisi habuerit quo referat. Proponamus oportet finem summi boni ad quem nitamur, ad quem omne factum nostrum dictumque respiciat; veluti navigantibus ad aliquod sidus derigendus est cursus. [46] Vita sine proposito vaga est; quod si utique proponendum est, incipiunt necessaria esse decreta. Illud, ut puto, concedes, nihil esse turpius dubio et incerto ac timide pedem referente. Hoc in omnibus rebus accidet nobis nisi eximuntur quae reprendunt animos et detinent et ire conarique totos vetant.

homines quidem delectantur fuligine. Vetemus salutationibus matutinis fungi et foribus adsidere templorum: humana ambitio istis officiis capitur, deum colit qui novit. Vetemus lintea et strigiles Iovi ferre et speculum tenere Iunoni: non quaerit ministros deus. Quidni? ipse humano generi ministrat, ubique et omnibus praesto est. [48] Audiat licet quem modum servare in sacrificiis debeat, quam procul resilire a molestis superstitionibus, numquam satis profectum erit nisi qualem debet deum mente conceperit, omnia habentem, omnia tribuentem, beneficum gratis. [49] Quae causa est dis bene faciendi? natura. Errat si quis illos putat nocere nolle: non possunt. Nec accipere iniuriam queunt nec facere; laedere etenim laedique coniunctum est. Summa illa ac pulcherrima omnium natura quos periculo exemit ne periculosos quidem fecit. [50] Primus est deorum cultus deos credere; deinde reddere illis maiestatem suam, reddere bonitatem sine qua nulla maiestas est; scire illos esse qui praesident mundo, qui universa vi sua temperant, qui humani generis tutelam gerunt interdum incuriosi singulorum. Hi nec dant malum nec habent; ceterum castigant quosdam et coercent et inrogant poenas et aliquando specie boni puniunt. Vis deos propitiare? bonus esto. Satis illos coluit quisquis imitatus est.

[51] Ecce altera quaestio, quomodo hominibus sit utendum. Quid agimus? quae damus praecepta? Ut parcamus sanguini humano? quantulum est ei non nocere cui debeas prodesse! Magna scilicet laus est si homo mansuetus homini est. Praecipiemus ut naufrago manum porrigat, erranti viam monstret, cum esuriante panem suum dividat? Quare omnia quae praestanda ac vitanda sunt dicam? cum possim breviter hanc illi formulam humani officii tradere: [52] omne hoc quod vides, quo divina atque humana conclusa sunt, unum est; membra sumus corporis magni. Natura nos cognatos edidit, cum ex isdem et in eadem gigneret; haec nobis amorem indidit mutuum et sociabiles fecit. Illa aequum iustumque composuit; ex illius constitutione miserius est nocere quam laedi; ex illius imperio paratae sint iuvandis manus. [53] Ille versus et in pectore et in ore sit:

homo sum, humani nihil a me alienum puto.

Habeamus in commune: <in commune> nati sumus. Societas nostra lapidum fornicationi simillima est, quae, casura nisi in vicem obstarent, hoc ipso sustinetur.

[55] Ad virtutes transeamus. Praecipiet aliquis ut prudentiam magni aestimemus, ut fortitudinem complectamur, iustitiam, si fieri potest, propius etiam quam ceteras nobis adplicemus; sed nil aget si ignoramus quid sit virtus, una sit an plures, separatae an innexae, an qui unam habet et ceteras habeat, quo inter se differant. [56] Non est necesse fabro de fabrica quaerere quod eius initium, quis usus sit, non magis quam pantomimo de arte saltandi: omnes istae artes se sciunt, nihil deest; non enim ad totam pertinent vitam. Virtus et aliorum scientia est et sui; discendum de ipsa est ut ipsa discatur. [57] Actio recta non erit nisi recta fuerit voluntas; ab hac enim est actio. Rursus voluntas non erit recta nisi habitus animi rectus fuerit; ab hoc enim est voluntas. Habitus porro animi non erit in optimo nisi totius vitae leges perceperit et quid de quoque iudicandum sit exegerit, nisi res ad verum redegerit. Non contingit tranquillitas nisi inmutabile certumque iudicium adeptis: ceteri decidunt subinde et reponuntur et inter missa adpetitaque alternis fluctuantur. [58] Causa his quae iactationis est? quod nihil liquet incertissimo regimine utentibus, fama. Si vis eadem semper velle, vera oportet velis. Ad verum sine decretis non pervenitur: continent vitam. Bona et mala, honesta et turpia, iusta et iniusta, pia et impia, virtutes ususque virtutum, rerum commodarum possessio, existimatio ac dignitas, valetudo, vires, forma, sagacitas sensuum — haec omnia aestimatorem desiderant. Scire liceat quanti quidque in censum deferendum sit. [59] Falleris enim et pluris quaedam quam sunt putas, adeoque falleris ut quae maxima inter nos habentur — divitiae, gratia, potentia — sestertio nummo aestimanda sint. Hoc nescies nisi constitutionem ipsam qua ista inter se aestimantur inspexeris. Quemadmodum folia per se virere non possunt, ramum desiderant cui inhaereant, ex quo trahant sucum, sic ista praecepta, si sola sunt, marcent; infigi volunt sectae.

satis explicari, supervacua esse decreta sapientiae [id est dogmata]. Atqui hoc ipsum quod dicunt decretum est tam mehercules quam si nunc ego dicerem recedendum a praeceptis velut supervacuis, utendum esse decretis, in haec sola studium conferendum; hoc ipso quo negarem curanda esse praecepta praeceperem. [61] Quaedam admonitionem in philosophia desiderant, quaedam probationem et quidem multam, quia involuta sunt vixque summa diligentia ac summa subtilitate aperiuntur. Si probationes <necessariae sunt>, necessaria sunt et decreta quae veritatem argumentis colligunt. Quaedam aperta sunt, quaedam obscura: aperta quae sensu comprehenduntur, quae memoria; obscura quae extra haec sunt. Ratio autem non impletur manifestis: maior eius pars pulchriorque in occultis est. Occulta probationem exigunt, probatio non sine decretis est; necessaria ergo decreta sunt. [62] Quae res communem sensum facit, eadem perfectum, certa rerum persuasio; sine qua si omnia in animo natant, necessaria sunt decreta quae dant animis inflexibile iudicium. [63] Denique cum monemus aliquem ut amicum eodem habeat loco quo se, ut ex inimico cogitet fieri posse amicum, in illo amorem incitet, in hoc odium moderetur, adicimus ‘iustum est, honestum’. Iustum autem honestumque decretorum nostrorum continet ratio; ergo haec necessaria est, sine qua nec illa sunt. [64] Sed utrumque iungamus; namque et sine radice inutiles rami sunt et ipsae radices iis quae genere adiuvantur. Quantum utilitatis manus habeant nescire nulli licet, aperte iuvant: cor illud, quo manus vivunt, ex quo impetum sumunt, quo moventur, latet. Idem dicere de praeceptis possum: aperta sunt, decreta vero sapientiae in abdito. Sicut sanctiora sacrorum tantum initiati sciunt, ita in philosophia arcana illa admissis receptisque in sacra ostenduntur; at praecepta et alia eiusmodi profanis quoque nota sunt.

similia discriminentur. [66] Haec res eandem vim habet quam praecipere; nam qui praecipit dicit ‘illa facies si voles temperans esse’, qui describit ait ‘temperans est qui illa facit, qui illis abstinet’. Quaeris quid intersit? alter praecepta virtutis dat, alter exemplar. Descriptiones has et, ut publicanorum utar verbo, iconismos ex usu esse confiteor: proponamus laudanda, invenietur imitator. [67] Putas utile dari tibi argumenta per quae intellegas nobilem equum, ne fallaris empturus, ne operam perdas in ignavo? Quanto hoc utilius est excellentis animi notas nosse, quas ex alio in se transferre permittitur.

Continuo pecoris generosi pullus in arvis altius ingreditur et mollia crura reponit; primus et ire viam et fluvios temptare minantis audet et ignoto sese committere ponti, nec vanos horret strepitus. Illi ardua cervix argutumque caput, brevis alvus obesaque terga, luxuriatque toris animosum pectus . . .
. . . Tum, si qua sonum procul arma dederunt, stare loco nescit, micat auribus et tremit artus, conlectumque premens volvitur sub naribus ignem.

[69] Dum aliud agit, Vergilius noster descripsit virum fortem: ego certe non aliam imaginem magno viro dederim. Si mihi M. Cato exprimendus <sit> inter fragores bellorum civilium inpavidus et primus incessens admotus iam exercitus Alpibus civilique se bello ferens obvium, non alium illi adsignaverim vultum, non alium habitum. [70] Altius certe nemo ingredi potuit quam qui simul contra Caesarem Pompeiumque se sustulit et aliis Caesareanas opes, aliis Pompeianas [tibi] foveantibus utrumque provocavit ostenditque aliquas esse et rei publicae partes. Nam parum est in Catone dicere ‘nec vanos horret strepitus’. Quidni? cum veros vicinosque non horreat, cum contra decem legiones et Gallica auxilia et mixta barbarica arma civilibus vocem liberam mittat et rem publicam hortetur ne pro libertate decidat, sed omnia experiatur, honestius in servitutem casura quam itura. [71] Quantum in illo vigoris ac spiritus, quantum in publica trepidatione fiduciaest! Scit se unum esse de cuius statu non agatur; non enim quaeri an liber Cato, sed an inter liberos sit: inde periculorum gladiatorumque contemptus. Libet admirantem invictam constantiam viri inter publicas ruinas non labantis dicere ‘luxuriatque toris animosum pectus’.

[72] Proderit non tantum quales esse soleant boni viri dicere formamque eorum et liniamenta deducere sed quales fuerint narrare et exponere, Catonis illud ultimum ac fortissimum vulnus per quod libertas emisit animam, Laeli sapientiam et cum suo Scipione concordiam, alterius Catonis domi forisque egregia facta, Tiberonis ligneos lectos, cum in publicum sterneret, haedinasque pro stragulis pelles et ante ipsius Iovis cellam adposita convivii vasa fictilia. Quid aliud paupertatem in Capitolio consecrare? Ut nullum aliud factum eius habeam quo illum Catonibus inseram, hoc parum credimus? censura fuit illa, non cena. [73] O quam ignorant homines cupidi gloriae quid illa sit aut quemadmodum petenda! Illo die populus Romanus multorum suppellectilem spectavit, unius miratus est. Omnium illorum aurum argentumque fractum est et [in] milliens conflatum, at omnibus saeculis Tiberonis fictilia durabunt. Vale.

LIBER SEXTUS DECIMUS

XCVI. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Tamen tu indignaris aliquid aut quereris et non intellegis nihil esse in istis mali nisi hoc unum quod indignaris et quereris? Si me interrogas, nihil puto viro miserum nisi aliquid esse in rerum natura quod putet miserum. Non feram me quo die aliquid ferre non potero. Male valeo: pars fati est. Familia decubuit, fenus offendit, domus crepuit, damna, vulnera, labores, metus incucurrerunt: solet fieri. Hoc parum est: debuit fieri. [2] Decernuntur ista, non accidunt. Si quid credis mihi, intimos adfectus meos tibi cum maxime detego: in omnibus quae adversa videntur et dura sic formatus sum: non pareo deo sed adsentior; ex animo illum, non quia necesse est, sequor. Nihil umquam mihi incidet quod tristis excipiam, quod malo vultu; nullum tributum invitus conferam. Omnia autem ad quae gemimus, quae expavescimus, tributa vitae sunt: horum, mi Lucili, nec speraveris immunitatem nec petieris. [3] Vesicae te dolor inquietavit, epistulae venerunt parum dulces, detrimenta continua — propius accedam, de capite timuisti. Quid, tu nesciebas haec te optare cum optares senectutem? Omnia ista in longa vita sunt, quomodo in longa via et pulvis et lutum et pluvia. [4] ‘Sed volebam vivere, carere tamen incommodis omnibus.’ Tam effeminata vox virum dedecet. Videris quemadmodum hoc votum meum excipias; ego illud magno animo, non tantum bono facio: neque di neque deae faciant ut te fortuna in delicis habeat. [5] Ipse te interroga, si quis potestatem tibi deus faciat, utrum velis vivere in macello an in castris. Atqui vivere, Lucili, militare est. Itaque hi qui iactantur et per operosa atque ardua sursum ac deorsum eunt et expeditiones periculosissimas obeunt fortes viri sunt primoresque castrorum; isti quos putida quies aliis laborantibus molliter habet turturillae sunt, tuti contumeliae causa. Vale.

XCVII. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Erras, mi Lucili, si existimas nostri saeculi esse vitium luxuriam et negligentiam boni moris et alia quae obiecit suis quisque temporibus: hominum sunt ista, non temporum. Nulla aetas vacavit a culpa; et si aestimare licentiam cuiusque saeculi incipias, pudet dicere, numquam apertius quam coram Catone peccatum est. [2] Credat aliquis pecuniam esse versatam in eo iudicio in quo reus erat P. Clodius ob id adulterium quod cum Caesaris uxore in operto commiserat, violatis religionibus eius sacrificii quod ‘pro populo’ fieri dicitur, sic summotis extra consaepum omnibus viris ut picturae quoque masculorum animalium contegantur? Atqui dati iudicibus nummi sunt et, quod hac etiamnunc pactione turpius est, stupra insuper matronarum et adolescentulorum nobilium stilari loco exacta sunt. [3] Minus crimine quam absolutione peccatum est: adulterii reus adulteria divisit nec ante fuit de salute securus quam similes sui iudices suos reddidit. Haec in eo iudicio facta sunt in quo, si nihil aliud, Cato testimonium dixerat. Ipsa ponam verba Ciceronis, quia res fidem excedit. [Ciceronis epistularum ad Atticum liber primus] [4] ‘Accersivit ad se, promisit, intercessit, dedit. Iam vero (o di boni, rem perditam!) etiam noctes certarum mulierum atque adolescentulorum nobilium introductiones nonnullis iudicibus pro mercedis cumulo fuerunt.’ [5] Non vacat de pretio queri, plus in accessionibus fuit. ‘Vis severi illius uxorem? dabo illam. Vis divitis huius? tibi praestabo concubitum. Adulterium nisi feceris, damna. Illa formonsa quam desideras veniet. Illius tibi noctem promitto nec differo; intra comperendinationem fides promissi mei extabit.’ Plus est distribuere adulteria quam facere; hoc vero matribus familiae denuntiare est. [6] Hi iudices Clodiani a senatu petierant praesidium, quod non erat nisi damnaturis necessarium, et inpetraverant; itaque eleganter illis Catulus absoluto reo ‘quid vos’ inquit ‘praesidium a nobis petebatis? an ne nummi vobis eriperentur?’ Inter hos tamen iocos inpune tulit ante iudicium adulter, in iudicio leno, qui damnationem peius effugit quam meruit. [7] Quicquam fuisse corruptius illis moribus credis quibus libido non sacris inhiberi, non iudicis poterat, quibus in ea ipsa quaestione quae extra ordinem senatusconsulto exercebatur plus quam quaerebatur admissum est? Quaerebatur an post adulterium aliquis posset tutus esse: apparuit sine adulterio tutum esse non posse.

[8] Hoc inter Pompeium et Caesarem, inter Ciceronem Catonemque commissum est, Catonem inquam illum quo sedente populus negatur permisisse sibi postulare Florales iocos nudandarum meretricum, si credis spectasse tunc severius homines quam iudicasse. Et fient et facta sunt ista, et licentia urbium aliquando disciplina metuque, numquam sponte considet. [9] Non est itaque quod credas nos plurimum libidini permisisse, legibus minimum; longe enim frugalior haec iuventus est quam illa, cum reus adulterium apud iudices negaret, iudices apud reum confiterentur, cum stuprum committeretur rei iudicandae causa, cum Clodius, isdem vitiis graciosus quibus nocens, conciliaturas exerceret in ipsa causae dictione. Credat hoc quisquam? qui damnabatur uno adulterio absolutus est multis.

[10] Omne tempus Clodios, non omne Catones feret. Ad deteriora faciles sumus, quia nec dux potest nec comes deesse, et res ipsa etiam sine duce, sine comite procedit. Non primum est tantum ad vitia sed praeceps, et, quod plerosque inemendabiles facit, omnium aliarum artium peccata artificibus pudori sunt offenduntque deerrantem, vitae peccata delectant. [11] Non gaudet navigio gubernator everso, non gaudet aegro medicus elato, non gaudet orator si patroni culpa reus cecidit, at contra omnibus crimen suum voluptati est: laetatur ille adulterio in quod inritatus est ipsa difficultate; laetatur ille circumscriptione furtoque, nec ante illi culpa quam culpa fortuna displicuit. Id prava consuetudine evenit. [12] Alioquin, ut scias subesse animis etiam in pessima abductis boni sensum nec ignorari turpe sed neglegi, omnes peccata dissimulant et, quamvis feliciter cesserint, fructu illorum utuntur, ipsa subducunt. At bona conscientia prodire vult et conspici: ipsas nequitia tenebras timet. [13] Eleganter itaque ab Epicuro dictum puto: ‘potest nocenti contingere ut lateat, latendi fides non potest’, aut si hoc modo melius hunc explicari posse iudicas sensum: ‘ideo non prodest latere peccantibus quia latendi etiam si felicitatem habent, fiduciam non habent’. Ita est, tuta scelera esse possunt, <secura esse non possunt>.

Quare? quia prima illa et maxima peccantium est poena peccasse, nec ullum scelus, licet illud fortuna exornet muneribus suis, licet tueatur ac vindicet, inpunitum est, quoniam sceleris in scelere supplicium est. Sed nihilominus et hae illam secundae poenae premunt ac sequuntur, timere semper et expavescere et securitati diffidere. Quare ego hoc supplicio nequitiam liberem? quare non semper illam in suspensio relinquam? [15] Illic dissentiamus cum Epicuro ubi dicit nihil iustum esse natura et crimina vitanda esse quia vitari metus non posse: hic consentiamus, mala facinora conscientia flagellari et plurimum illi tormentorum esse eo quod perpetua illam sollicitudo urget ac verberat, quod sponsoribus securitatis suae non potest credere. Hoc enim ipsum argumentum est, Epicure, natura nos a scelere abhorrere, quod nulli non etiam inter tuta timor est. [16] Multos fortuna liberat poena, metu neminem. Quare nisi quia infixi nobis eius rei aversatio est quam natura damnavit? Ideo numquam fides latendi fit etiam latentibus quia coarguit illos conscientia et ipsos sibi ostendit. Proprium autem est nocentium trepidare. Male de nobis actum erat, quod multa scelera legem et vindicem effugiunt et scripta supplicia, nisi illa naturalia et gravia de praesentibus solverent et in locum patientiae timor cederet. Vale.

XCVIII. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Numquam credideris felicem quemquam ex felicitate suspensum. Fragilibus innititur qui adventicio laetus est: exhibit gaudium quod intravit. At illud ex se ortum fidele firmumque est et crescit et ad extremum usque prosequitur: cetera quorum admiratio est vulgo in diem bona sunt. 'Quid ergo? non usui ac voluptati esse possunt?' Quis negat? sed ita si illa ex nobis pendent, non ex illis nos. [2] Omnia quae fortuna intuetur ita fructifera ac iucunda fiunt si qui habet illa se quoque habet nec in rerum suarum potestate est. Errant enim, Lucili, qui aut boni aliquid nobis aut mali iudicant tribuere fortunam: materiam dat bonorum ac malorum et initia rerum apud nos in malum bonumve exiturarum. Valentior enim omni fortuna animus est et in utramque partem ipse res suas ducit beataeque ac miserae vitae sibi causa est. [3] Malus omnia in malum vertit, etiam quae cum specie optimi venerant: rectus atque integer corrigit prava fortunae et dura atque aspera ferendi scientia mollit, idemque et secunda grate excipit modesteque et adversa constanter ac fortiter. Qui licet prudens sit, licet exacto faciat cuncta iudicio, licet nihil supra vires suas temptet, non continget illi bonum illud integrum et extra minas positum nisi certus adversus incerta est. [4] Sive alios observare volueris (liberius enim inter aliena iudicium est) sive te ipsum favore seposito, et senties hoc et confiteberis, nihil ex his optabilibus et caris utile esse nisi te contra levitatem casus rerumque casum sequentium instruxeris, nisi illud frequenter et sine querella inter singula damna dixeris:

[5] Immo mehercules, ut carmen fortius ac iustius petam quo animum tuum magis fulcias, hoc dicito quotiens aliquid aliter quam cogitabas evenerit: 'di melius'. Sic composito nihil accidet. Sic autem componetur si quid humanarum rerum varietas possit cogitaverit antequam senserit, si et liberos et coniugem et patrimonium sic habuerit tamquam non utique semper habiturus et tamquam non futurus ob hoc miserior si habere desierit. [6] Calamitosus est animus futuri anxius et ante miserias miser, qui sollicitus est ut ea quibus delectatur ad extremum usque permaneant;

nullo enim tempore conquiescet et expectatione venturi praesentia, quibus frui poterat, amittet. In aequo est autem amissae rei <dolor> et timor amittendae. [7] Nec ideo praecipio tibi negligentiam. Tu vero metuenda declina; quidquid consilio prospici potest prospice; quodcumque laesurum est multo ante quam accidat speculari et averte. In hoc ipsum tibi plurimum conferet fiducia et ad tolerandum omne obfirmata mens. Potest fortunam cavere qui potest ferre; certe in tranquillo non tumultuatur. Nihil est nec miserius nec stultius quam praetimere: quae ista dementia est malum suum antecedere? [8] Denique, ut breviter includam quod sentio et istos satagios ac sibi molestos describam tibi, tam intemperantes in ipsis miseriis sunt quam ante illas. Plus dolet quam necesse est qui ante dolet quam necesse est; eadem enim infirmitate dolorem non aestimat qua non expectat; eadem intemperantia fingit sibi perpetuam felicitatem suam, fingit crescere debere quaecumque contigerunt, non tantum durare, et oblitus huius petauri quo humana iactantur sibi uni fortuitorum constantiam spondet. [9] Egregie itaque videtur mihi Metrodorus dixisse in ea epistula qua sororem amisso optimae indolis filio adloquitur: ‘mortale est omne mortalium bonum’. De his loquitur bonis ad quae concurritur; nam illud verum bonum non moritur, certum est sempiternumque, sapientia et virtus; hoc unum contingit inmortale mortalibus. [10] Ceterum tam improbi sunt tamque oblitus quo eant, quo illos singuli dies trudent, ut mirentur aliquid ipsos amittere, amissuri uno die omnia. Quidquid est cui dominus inscriberis apud te est, tuum non est; nihil firmum infirmo, nihil fragile aeternum et invictum est. Tam necesse est perire quam perdere et hoc ipsum, si intellegimus, solacium est. Aequo animo perde: pereundum est.

[11] Quid ergo adversus has amissiones auxilii invenimus? hoc, ut memoria teneamus amissa nec cum ipsis fructum excidere patiamur quem ex illis percepimus. Habere eripitur, habuisse numquam. Peringratus est qui, cum amisit, pro accepto nihil debet. Rem nobis eripit casus, usum fructumque apud nos relinquit, quem nos iniquitate desiderii perdidimus. [12] Dic tibi ex istis quae terribilia videntur nihil est invictum’. Singula vicere iam multi, ignem Mucius, crucem Regulus, venenum Socrates, exilium Rutilius, mortem ferro adactam Cato: et nos vincamus aliquid. [13] Rursus ista quae ut

speciosa et felicia trahunt vulgum a multis et saepe contempta sunt. Fabricius divitias imperator reiecit, censor notavit; Tubero paupertatem et se dignam et Capitolio iudicavit, cum fictilibus in publica cena usus ostendit debere iis hominem esse contentum quibus di etiamnunc uterentur. Honores reppulit pater Sextius, qui ita natus ut rem publicam deberet capessere, latum clavum divo Iulio dante non recepit; intellegebat enim quod dari posset et eripi posse. Nos quoque aliquid et ipsi faciamus animose; simus inter exempla. [14] Quare defecimus? quare desperamus? Quidquid fieri potuit potest, nos modo purgemus animum sequamurque naturam, a qua aberranti cupiendum timendumque est et fortuitis serviendum. Licet reverti in viam, licet in integrum restitui: restituamur, ut possimus dolores quocumque modo corpus invaserint perferre et fortunae dicere 'cum viro tibi negotium est: quaere quem vincas'.

[15] * * * His sermonibus et his similibus lenitur illa vis ulceris, quam opto mehercules mitigari et aut sanari aut stare et cum ipso senescere. Sed securus de illo sum: de nostro damno agitur, quibus senex egregius eripitur. Nam ipse vitae plenus est, cui adici nihil desiderat sua causa sed eorum quibus utilis est. [16] Liberaliter facit quod vivit. Alius iam hos cruciatus finisset: hic tam turpe putat mortem fugere quam ad mortem confugere. 'Quid ergo? non si suadebit res exibat?' Quidni exeat, si nemo iam uti eo poterit, si nihil aliud quam dolori operam dabit? [17] Hoc est, mi Lucili, philosophiam in opere discere et ad verum exerceri, videre quid homo prudens animi habeat contra mortem, contra dolorem, cum illa accedat, hic premat; quid faciendum sit a faciente discendum est. [18] Adhuc argumentis actum est an posset aliqui dolori resistere, an mors magnos quoque animos admota summittere. Quid opus est verbis? in rem praesentem eamus: nec mors illum contra dolorem facit fortiolem nec dolor contra mortem. Contra utrumque sibi fidit nec spe mortis patienter dolet nec taedio doloris libenter moritur: hunc fert, illam expectat. Vale.

XCIX. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Epistolam quam scripsi Marullo cum filium parvulum amisisset et diceretur molliter ferre misi tibi, in qua non sum solitum morem secutus nec putavi leniter illum debere tractari, cum obiurgatione esset quam solacio dignior. Adflicto enim et magnum vulnus male ferenti paulisper cedendum est; exsatiat se aut certe primum impetum effundat: [2] hi qui sibi lugere sumpserunt protinus castigentur et discant quasdam etiam lacrimarum ineptias esse.

‘Solacia expectas? convicia accipe. Tam molliter tu fers mortem filii? quid faceres si amicum perdidisses? Decessit filius incertae spei, parvulus; pusillum temporis perit. [3] Causas doloris conquirimus et de fortuna etiam inique queri volumus, quasi non sit iustas querendi causas praebitura: at mehercules satis mihi iam videbaris animi habere etiam adversus solida mala, nedum ad istas umbras malorum quibus ingemescunt homines moris causa. Quod damnorum omnium maximum est, si amicum perdidisses, danda opera erat ut magis gauderes quod habueras quam maereres quod amiseras. [4] Sed plerique non computant quanta perceperint, quantum gavisi sint. Hoc habet inter reliqua mali dolor iste: non supervacuum tantum sed ingratus est. Ergo quod habuisti talem amicum, perit opera? Tot annis, tanta coniunctione vitae, tam familiari studiorum societate nil actum est? Cum amico effers amicitiam? Et quid doles amisisse, si habuisse non prodest? Mihi crede, magna pars ex iis quos amavimus, licet ipsos casus abstulerit, apud nos manet; nostrum est quod praeterit tempus nec quicquam est loco tutiore quam quod fuit. [5] Ingrati adversus percepta spe futuri sumus, quasi non quod futurum est, si modo successerit nobis, cito in praeterita transiturum sit. Anguste fructus rerum determinat qui tantum praesentibus laetus est: et futura et praeterita delectant, haec expectatione, illa memoria, sed alterum pendet et non fieri potest, alterum non potest non fuisse. Quis ergo furor est certissimo excidere? Adquiescamus iis quae iam hausimus, si modo non perforato animo hauriebamus et transmittente quidquid acceperat.

rogo redierint et statim aliud egerint. Nec inmerito; nam primum supervacuum est dolere si nihil dolendo proficias; deinde iniquum est queri de eo quod uni accidit, omnibus restat; deinde desiderii stulta conquestio est, ubi minimum interest inter amissum et desiderantem. Eo itaque aequiore animo esse debemus quod quos amisimus sequimur. [7] Respice celeritatem rapidissimi temporis, cogita brevitatem huius spatii per quod citatissimi currimus, observa hunc comitatum generis humani eodem tendentis, minimis intervallis distinctum etiam ubi maxima videntur: quem putas perisse praemissus est. Quid autem dementius quam, cum idem tibi iter emetiendum sit, flere eum qui antecessit? [8] Flet aliquis factum quod non ignoravit futurum? Aut si mortem in homine non cogitavit, sibi inposuit. Flet aliquis factum quod aiebat non posse non fieri? quisquis aliquem queritur mortuum esse, queritur hominem fuisse. Omnis eadem condicio devinxit: cui nasci contigit mori restat. [9] Intervallis distinguimur, exitu aequamur. Hoc quod inter primum diem et ultimum iacet varium incertumque est: si molestias aestimes, etiam puero longum, si velocitatem, etiam seni angustum. Nihil non lubricum et fallax et omni tempestate mobilius; iactantur cuncta et in contrarium transeunt iubente fortuna, et in tanta volutatione rerum humanarum nihil cuiquam nisi mors certum est; tamen de eo queruntur omnes in quo uno nemo decipitur.

[10] “Sed puer decessit.” Nondum dico melius agi cum eo qui <cito> vita defungitur: ad eum transeamus qui consenuit: quantulo vincit infantem! Propone temporis profundi vastitatem et universum conplectere, deinde hoc quod aetatem vocamus humanam compara immenso: videbis quam exiguum sit quod optamus, quod extendimus. [11] Ex hoc quantum lacrimae, quantum sollicitudines occupant? quantum mors antequam veniat optata, quantum valetudo, quantum timor? quantum tenent aut rudes aut inutiles anni? dimidium ex hoc edormitur. Adice labores, luctus, pericula, et intelleges etiam in longissima vita minimum esse quod vivitur. [12] Sed quis tibi concedit non melius se habere eum cui cito reverti licet, cui ante lassitudinem peractum est iter? Vita nec bonum nec malum est: boni ac mali locus est. Ita nihil ille perdidit nisi aleam in damnum certiore. Potuit evadere modestus et prudens, potuit sub cura tua in meliora formari, sed, quod iustius timetur, potuit fieri pluribus similis. [13] Aspice illos iuvenes quos ex nobilissimis domibus in harenam luxuria proiecit; aspice illos qui suam alienamque libidinem exercent mutuo inpudici, quorum nullus sine ebrietate, nullus sine aliquo insigni flagitio dies exit: plus timeri quam sperari potuisse manifestum erit. Non debes itaque causas doloris accersere nec levia incommoda indignando cumulare. [14] Non hortor ut nitaris et surgas; non tam male de te iudico ut tibi adversus hoc totam putem virtutem advocandam. Non est dolor iste sed morsus: tu illum dolorem facis. Sine dubio multum philosophia profecit, si puerum nutrici adhuc quam patri notiozem animo forti desideras.

[15] 'Quid? nunc ego duritiam suadeo et in funere ipso rigere vultum volo et animum ne contrahi quidem patior? Minime. Inhumanitas est ista, non virtus, funera suorum isdem oculis quibus ipsos videre nec commoveri ad primam familiarium divulsionem. Puta autem me vetare: quaedam sunt sui iuris; excidunt etiam retinentibus lacrimae et animum profusae levant. [16] Quid ergo est? permittamus illis cadere, non imperemus; fluat quantum adfectus eiecerit, non quantum poscet imitatio. Nihil vero maerori adiciamus nec illum ad alienum augeamus exemplum. Plus ostentatio doloris exigit quam dolor: quotus quisque sibi tristis est? Clarius cum audiuntur gemunt, et taciti quietique dum secretum est, cum aliquos videre, in fletus novos excitantur; tunc capiti suo manus ingerunt (quod potuerant facere nullo prohibente liberius), tunc mortem comprecantur sibi, tunc lectulo devolvuntur: sine spectatore cessat dolor. [17] Sequitur nos, ut in aliis rebus, ita in hac quoque hoc vitium, ad plurium exempla componi nec quid oporteat sed quid soleat aspicere. A natura discedimus, populo nos damus nullius rei bono auctori et in hac re sicut in his omnibus inconstantissimo. Videt aliquem fortem in luctu suo, impium vocat et efferatum; videt aliquem conlabentem et corpori adfusum, effeminatum ait et enervem. [18] Omnia itaque ad rationem revocanda sunt. Stultius vero nihil est quam famam captare tristitiae et lacrimas adprobare, quas iudico sapienti viro alias permissas cadere, alias vi sua latas. Dicam quid intersit. Cum primus nos nuntius acerbi funeris perculit, cum tenemus corpus e complexu nostro in ignem transiturum, lacrimas naturalis necessitas exprimit et spiritus ictu doloris impulsus quemadmodum totum corpus quatit, ita oculos, quibus adiacentem umorem perpremit et expellit. [19] Hae lacrimae per elisionem cadunt nolentibus nobis: aliae sunt quibus exitum damus cum memoria eorum quos amissimus retractatur, et inest quiddam dulce tristitiae cum occurrunt sermones eorum iucundi, conversatio hilaris, officiosa pietas; tunc oculi velut in gaudio relaxantur. His indulgemus, illis vincimur. [20] Non est itaque quod lacrimas propter circumstantem adsidentemque aut contineas aut exprimas: nec cessant nec fluunt umquam tam turpiter quam finguntur: eant sua sponte. Ire autem possunt placidis atque compositis; saepe salva sapientis auctoritate fluxerunt tanto temperamento ut illis nec humanitas nec dignitas deesset. [21] Licet, inquam, naturae obsequi gravitate servata. Vidi ego in funere suorum verendos, in quorum ore amor eminebat remota omni lugentium scaena; nihil erat nisi quod veris dabatur adfectibus. Est aliquis et dolendi decor; hic sapienti servandus est et quemadmodum in ceteris rebus, ita etiam in lacrimis aliquid sat est: imprudentium ut gaudia sic dolores exundavere.

kata touton ton kairon. [26] De quibus non dubito quid sis sensurus; quid enim est turpius quam captare in ipso luctu voluptatem, immo per luctum, et inter lacrimas quoque quod iuvet quaerere? Hi sunt qui nobis obiciunt nimium rigorem et infamant praecepta nostra duritiae, quod dicamus dolorem aut admittendum in animum non esse aut cito expellendum. Utrum tandem est aut incredibilius aut inhumanius, non sentire amisso amico dolorem an voluptatem in ipso dolore aucupari? [27] Nos quod praecipimus honestum est: cum aliquid lacrimarum adfectus effuderit et, ut ita dicam, despumaverit, non esse tradendum animum dolori. Quid, tu dicis miscendam ipsi dolori voluptatem? sic consolamur crustulo pueros, sic infantium fletum infuso lacte conpescimus. Ne illo quidem tempore quo filius ardet aut amicus expirat cessare pateris voluptatem, sed ipsum vis titillare maerorem? Utrum honestius dolor ab animo summovetur an voluptas ad dolorem quoque admittitur? “Admittitur” dico? Captatur, et quidem ex ipso. [28] “Est aliqua” inquit “voluptas cognata tristitiae.” Istuc nobis licet dicere, vobis quidem non licet. Unum bonum nostis, voluptatem, unum malum, dolorem: quae potest inter bonum et malum esse cognatio? Sed puta esse: nunc potissimum eruitur? Et ipsum dolore scrutamur, an aliquid habeat iucundum circa se et voluptarium? [29] Quaedam remedia aliis partibus corporis salutaria velut foeda et indecora adhiberi aliis nequeunt, et quod aliubi prodesset sine damno verecundiae, id fit inhonestum loco vulneris: non te pudet luctum voluptate sanare? Severius ista plaga curanda est. Illud potius admone, nullum mali sensum ad eum qui perit pervenire; nam si pervenit, non perit. [30] Nulla, inquam, res eum laedit qui nullus est: vivit si laeditur. Utrum putas illi male esse quod nullus est an quod est adhuc aliquis? Atqui nec ex eo potest ei tormentum esse quod non est (quis enim nullius sensus est?) nec ex eo quod est; effugit enim maximum mortis incommodum, non esse. [31] Illud quoque dicamus ei qui deflet ac desiderat in aetate prima raptum: omnes, quantum ad brevitatem aevi, si universo compares, et iuvenes et senes, in aequo sumus. Minus enim ad nos ex aetate omni venit quam quod minimum esse quis dixerit, quoniam quidem minimum aliqua pars est: hoc quod vivimus proximum nihilo est; et tamen, o dementia nostram, late disponitur.

[32] ‘Haec tibi scripsi, non tamquam expectaturus esses remedium a me tam serum (liquet enim mihi te locutum tecum quidquid lecturus es) sed ut castigarem exiguam illam moram qua a te recessisti, et in reliquum adhortarer contra fortunam tolleres animos et omnia eius tela non tamquam possent venire sed tamquam utique essent ventura prospiceres. Vale.'

C. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Fabiani Papiri libros qui inscribuntur civilium legisse te cupidissime scribis, et non respondisse expectationi tuae; deinde oblitus de philosopho agi compositionem eius accusas. Puta esse quod dicis et effundi verba, non figi. Primum habet ista res suam gratiam et est decor proprius orationis leniter lapsae; multum enim interesse existimo utrum exciderit an fluxerit. <Adice> nunc quod in hoc quoque quod dicturus sum ingens differentia est: [2] Fabianus mihi non effundere videtur orationem sed fundere; adeo larga est et sine perturbatione, non sine cursu tamen veniens. Illud plane fatetur et praefert, non esse tractatam nec diu tortam. Sed ita, ut vis, esse credamus: mores ille, non verba composuit et animis scripsit ista, non auribus. [3] Praeterea ipso dicente non vacasset tibi partes intueri, adeo te summa rapuisset; et fere quae impetu placent minus praestant ad manum relata; sed illud quoque multum est, primo aspectu oculos occupasse, etiam si contemplatio diligens inventura est quod arguat. [4] Si me interrogas, maior ille est qui iudicium abstulit quam qui meruit; et scio hunc tutiorem esse, scio audacius sibi de futuro promittere. Oratio sollicita philosophum non decet: ubi tandem erit fortis et constans, ubi periculum sui faciet qui timet verbis? [5] Fabianus non erat neglegens in oratione sed securus. Itaque nihil invenies sordidum: electa verba sunt, non captata, nec huius saeculi more contra naturam suam posita et inversa, splendida tamen quamvis sumantur e medio. Sensus honestos et magnificos habes, non coactos in sententiam sed latius dictos. Videbimus quid parum recisum sit, quid parum structum, quid non huius recentis politurae: cum circumspexeris omnia, nullas videbis angustias inanis. [6] Desit sane varietas marmorum et concisura aquarum cubiculis interfluentium et pauperis cella et quidquid aliud luxuria non contenta decore simplici miscet: quod dici solet, domus recta est.

Adice nunc quod de compositione non constat: quidam illam volunt esse ex horrido comptam, quidam usque eo aspera gaudent ut etiam quae mollius casus explicuit ex industria dissipent et clausulas abrumpant ne ad expectatum respondeant. [7] Lege Ciceronem: compositio eius una est, pedem curvat lenta et sine infamia mollis.

At contra Pollionis Asinii salebrosa et exiliens et ubi minime expectes relictura. Denique omnia apud Ciceronem desinunt, apud Pollionem cadunt, exceptis paucissimis quae ad certum modum et ad unum exemplar adstricta sunt.

[8] Humilia praeterea tibi videri dicis omnia et parum erecta: quo vitio carere eum iudico. Non sunt enim illa humilia sed placida et ad animi tenorem quietum compositumque formata, nec depressa sed plana. Deest illis oratorius vigor stimuli que quos quaeris et subiti ictus sententiarum; sed totum corpus, videris quam sit comptum, honestum est. Non habet oratio eius sed dabit dignitatem. [9] Adfer quem Fabiano possis praepone. Dic Ciceronem, cuius libri ad philosophiam pertinentes paene totidem sunt quot Fabiani: cedam, sed non statim pusillum est si quid maximo minus est. Dic Asinium Pollionem: cedam, et respondeamus: in re tanta eminere est post duos esse. Nomina adhuc T. Livium; scripsit enim et dialogos, quos non magis philosophiae adnumerare possis quam historiae, et ex professo philosophiam continentis libros: huic quoque dabo locum. Vide tamen quam multos antecedit qui a tribus vincitur et tribus eloquentissimis.

certe illum, talia mihi videbantur, non solida sed plena, quae adolescentem indolis bonae attollerent et ad imitationem sui evocarent sine desperatione vincendi, quae mihi adhortatio videtur efficacissima. Deterret enim qui imitandi cupiditatem fecit, spem abstulit. Ceterum verbis abundabat, sine commendatione partium singularum in universum magnificus. Vale.

CI. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Omnis dies, omnis hora quam nihil simus ostendit et aliquo argumento recenti admonet fragilitatis oblitus; tum aeterna meditados respicere cogit ad mortem. Quid sibi istud principium velit quaeris? Senecionem Cornelium, equitem Romanum splendidum et officiosum, noveras: ex tenui principio seipse promoverat et iam illi declivis erat cursus ad cetera; facilius enim crescit dignitas quam incipit. [2] Pecunia quoque circa paupertatem plurimum morae habet; dum ex illa erepat haeret. Iam Senecio divitis imminebat, ad quas illum duae res ducebant efficacissimae, et quaerendi et custodiendi scientia, quarum vel altera locupletem facere potuisset. [3] Hic homo summae frugalitatis, non minus patrimonii quam corporis diligens, cum me ex consuetudine mane vidisset, cum per totum diem amico graviter adfecto et sine spe iacentiusque in noctem adsedisset, cum hilaris cenasset, genere valetudinis praecipiti arreptus, angina, vix compressum artatis faucibus spiritum traxit in lucem. Intra paucissimas ergo horas quam omnibus erat sani ac valentis officiis functus decessit. [4] Ille qui et mari et terra pecuniam agitabat, qui ad publica quoque nullum relinquens inexpertum genus quaestus accesserat, in ipso actu bene cedentium rerum, in ipso procurrentis pecuniae impeturaptus est.

Insere nunc, Meliboe, piros, pone [in] ordine vites.

Quam stultum est aetatem disponere ne crastini quidem dominum! o quanta dementia est spes longas inchoantium: emam, aedificabo, credam, exigam, honores geram, tum deinde lassam et plenam senectutem in otium referam. [5] Omnia, mihi crede, etiam felicibus dubia sunt; nihil sibi quisquam de futuro debet promittere; id quoque quod tenetur per manus exit et ipsam quam premimus horam casus incidit. Volvitur tempus rata quidem lege, sed per obscurum: quid autem ad me an naturae certum sit quod mihi incertum est? [6] Navigationes longas et pererratis litoribus alienis seros in patriam reditus proponimus, militiam et castrensiu laboru tarda manipretia, procuraciones officiorumque per officia processus, cum interim ad latus mors est, quae quoniam numquam cogitatur nisi aliena, subinde nobis ingeruntur mortalitatis exempla non diutius quam dum miramur haesura. [7] Quid autem stultius quam mirari id ullo die factum quod omni potest fieri? Stat quidem terminus nobis ubi illum inexorabilis fatorum necessitas fixit, sed nemo scit nostrumquam prope versetur a termino; sic itaque formemus animum tamquam ad extremaventum sit. Nihil differamus; cotidie cum vita paria faciamus. [8] Maximum vitae vitium est quod imperfecta semper est, quod [in] aliquid ex illa differtur. Qui cotidie vitae suae summam manum inposuit non indiget tempore; ex hac autem indigentia timor nascitur et cupiditas futuri exedens animum. Nihil est miserius dubitatione venientium quorsus evadant; quantum sit illud quod restat aut quale sollicita mens inexplicabili formidine agitur. [9] Quo modo effugiemus hanc volutationem? Uno: si vita nostra non prominebit, si in se colligitur; ille enim ex futuro suspenditur cui inritum est praesens. Ubi vero quidquid mihi debui redditum est, ubi stabilita mens scit nihil interesse inter diem et saeculum, quidquid deinceps dierum rerumque venturum est ex alto prospicit et cum multo risu seriem temporum cogitat. Quid enim varietas mobilitasque casuum perturbabit, si certus sis adversus incerta? [10] Ideo propera, Lucili mi, vivere, et singulos dies singulas vitas puta. Qui hoc modo se aptavit, cui vita sua cotidie fuit tota, securus est: in spem viventibus proximum quodque tempus elabatur, subitque aviditas et miserrimus ac miserrima omnia efficiens metus mortis. Inde illud Maecenatis turpissimum votum quo et debilitatem non recusat et deformitatem et novissime acutam crucem, dummodo inter haec mala spiritus prorogetur:

debilem pede coxo,
tuber adstrue gibberum,
lubricos quate dentes:
vita dum superest, benest;
hanc mihi, vel acuta
si sedeam cruce, sustine.

[12] Quod miserrimum erat si incidisset optatur, et tamquam vita petitur supplici mora. Contemptissimum putarem si vivere vellet usque ad crucem: 'tu vero' inquit 'me debiles licet, dum spiritus in corpore fracto et inutili maneat; depraves licet, dum monstroso et distorto temporis aliquid accedat; suffigas licet et acutam sessuro crucem subdas': est tanti vulnus suum premere et patibulo pendere districtum, dum differat id quod est in malis optimum, supplicii finem? est tanti habere animam ut agam? [13] Quid huic optes nisi deos faciles? quid sibi vult ista carminis effeminati turpitude? quid timoris dementissimi pactio? quid tam foeda vitae mendicatio? Huic putes umquam recitasse Vergilium:

usque adeone mori miserum est?

Optat ultima malorum et quae pati gravissimum est extendi ac sustineri cupit: qua mercede? scilicet vitae longioris. Quod autem vivere est diu mori? [14] Invenitur aliquis qui velit inter supplicia tabescere et perire membratim et totiens per stilicidia emittere animam quam semel exhalare? Invenitur qui velit adactus ad illud infelix lignum, iam debilis, iam pravuset in foedum scapularum ac pectoris tuber elisus, cui multae moriendi causae etiam citra crucem fuerant, trahere animam tot tormenta tracturam? Nega nunc magnum beneficium esse naturae quod necesse est mori. [15] Multi peiora adhuc pacisci parati sunt: etiam amicum prodere, ut diutius vivant, et liberos ad stuprum manu sua tradere, ut contingat lucem videre tot consciam scelerum. Excutienda vitae cupido est discendumque nihil interesse quando patiaris quod quandoque patiendum est; quam bene vivas referre, non quamdiu; saepe autem in hoc esse bene, ne diu. Vale.

CII. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Quomodo molestus est iucundum somnium videnti qui excitat (aufertenim voluptatem etiam si falsam, effectum tamen verae habentem) sic epistulatua mihi fecit iniuriam; revocavit enim me cogitationi aptae traditum etiturum, si licuisset, ulterius. [2] Iuvabat de aeternitate animarum quaerere, immo mehercules credere; praebebam enim me facilem opinionibus magnorum virorum rem gratissimam promittentium magis quam probantium. Dabam me spei tantae, iam eram fastidio mihi, iam reliquias aetatis infractae contemnebam in immensum illud tempus et in possessionem omnis aevi transiturus, cum subito experrectus sum epistula tua accepta et tam bellum somnium perdi. Quod repetam, si te dimiser, et redimam.

[3] Negas me epistula prima totam quaestionem explicuisse in qua probare conabar id quod nostris placet, claritatem quae post mortem contingit bonum esse. Id enim me non solvisse quod opponitur nobis: ‘nullum’ inquit ‘bonum ex distantibus; hoc autem ex distantibus constat’. [4] Quod interrogas, mi Lucili, eiusdem quaestionis est loci alterius, et ideo non id tantum sed alia quoque eodem pertinentia distuleram; quaedam enim, ut scis, moralibus rationalia inmixta sunt. Itaque illam partem rectam et ad mores pertinentem tractavi, numquid stultum sit ac supervacuum ultra extremum diem curastrans mittere, an cadant bona nostra nobiscum nihilque sit eius qui nullusest, an ex eo quod, cum erit, sensuri non sumus, antequam sit aliquis fructus percipi aut peti possit. [5] Haec omnia ad mores spectant; itaque suo locoposita sunt. At quae a dialecticis contra hanc opinionem dicuntur segreganda fuerunt et ideo seposita sunt. Nunc, quia omnia exis, omnia quae dicunt persequar, deinde singulis occurram.

efficiuntur iure aut officio cohaerent, natura diductiet singuli sunt. Quid est quod etiam nunc praedicere velim? [7] nullum bonum putamus esse quod ex distantibus constat; uno enim spiritu unum bonum contineri ac regi debet, unum esse unius boni principale. Hoc si quando desideraverisper se probatur: interim ponendum fuit, quia in <nos> nostra tela mittuntur.

[8] ‘Dicitis’ inquit ‘nullum bonum ex distantibus esse; claritas aut emista bonorum virorum secunda opinio est. Nam quomodo fama non est unius sermo nec infamia unius mala existimatio, sic nec claritas uni bono placuisse;consentire in hoc plures insignes et spectabiles viri debent, ut claritassit. Haec autem ex iudiciis plurium efficitur, id est distantium; ergonon est bonum.

[9] ‘Claritas’ inquit ‘laus est a bonis bono reddita; laus oratio, vox est aliquid significans; vox est autem, licet virorum sit <bonorum, non> bonum. Nec enim quidquid vir bonus facit bonum est; nam et plauditet sibilat, sed nec plausum quisquam nec sibilum, licet omnia eius admiretur et laudet, bonum dicit, non magis quam sternumentum aut tussim. Ergo claritas bonum non est.

[10] ‘Ad summam dicite nobis utrum laudantis an laudati bonum sit: si laudati bonum esse dicitis, tam ridiculam rem facitis quam si adfirmetis meum esse quod alius bene valeat. Sed laudare dignos honesta actio est; ita laudantis bonum est cuius actio est, non nostrum qui laudamur: atqui hoc quaerebatur. ‘ omnium, si perrogetur, una erit: hic diversa dissimilium iudicia sunt. Difficiles adsensus, dubia omnia invenies, levia, suspecta. Putas tu posse unam omnium esse sententiam? non est unius una sententia. Illic placet verum, veritatis una vis, una facies est: apud hos falsa sunt quibus adsentiuntur. Numquam autem falsis constantia est; variantur et dissident.

[14] ‘Sed laus’ inquit ‘nihil aliud quam vox est, vox autem bonum non est. ‘ Cum dicunt claritatem esse laudem bonorum a bonis redditam, non advocem referunt sed ad sententiam. Licet enim vir bonus taceat sed aliquem iudicet dignum laude esse, laudatus est. [15] Praeterea aliud est laus, aliud laudatio, haec et vocem exigit; itaque nemo dicit laudem funebrem sed laudationem, cuius officium oratione constat. Cum dicimus aliquem laude dignum, non verba illi benigna hominum sed iudicia promittimus. Ergo laus etiam taciti est bene sentientis ac bonum virum apud se laudantis. [16] Deinde, ut dixi, ad animum refertur laus, non ad verba, quae conceptam laudem egerunt et in notitiam plurium emittunt. Laudat qui laudandum esse iudicat. Cum tragicus ille apud nos ait magnificum esse ‘laudari a laudato viro’, laude digno ait. Et cum aequae antiquus poeta ait ‘laus alit artis’, non laudationem dicit, quae corrumpit artes; nihil enim aequae et eloquentiam et omne aliud studium auribus deditum vitiavit quam popularis adsensio. [17] Fama vocem utique desiderat, claritas potest etiam citra vocem contingere contenta iudicio; plena est non tantum inter tacentis sed etiam inter reclamantis. Quid intersit inter claritatem et gloriam dicam: gloria multorum iudicis constat, claritas bonorum.

secundum quem iudicatum est. Numquid dubitas quin iustitia et habentis bonum sitet autem sit eius cui debitum solvit? Merentem laudare iustitia est; ergo utriusque bonum est.

[20] Cavillatoribus istis abunde responderimus. Sed non debet hoc nobis esse propositum, arguta disserere et philosophiam in has angustias ex sua maiestate detrahere: quanto satius est ire aperta via et recta quam sibi ipsum flexus disponere quos cum magna molestia debeas relegere? Neque enim quicquam aliud istae disputationes sunt quam inter se perite captantium lusus. [21] Dic potius quam naturale sit in immensum mentem suam extendere. Magna et generosa res est humanus animus; nullos sibi poni nisi communeset cum deo terminos patitur. Primum humilem non accipit patriam, Ephesum aut Alexandriam aut si quod est etiamnunc frequentius accolis laetius vetectis solum: patria est illi quodcumque suprema et universa circuitu suo cingit, hoc omne convexum intra quod iacent maria cum terris, intra quod aer humanis divina secernens etiam coniungit, in quo disposita tot numina in actus suos excubant. [22] Deinde artam aetatem sibi dari non sinit: ‘omnes’ inquit ‘anni mei sunt; nullum saeculum magnis ingeniis clusum est, nullum non cogitationi pervium tempus. Cum venerit dies ille qui mixtum hoc divini humanique secernat, corpus hic ubi inveni relinquam, ipse mediis reddam. Nec nunc sine illis sum, sed gravi terrenoque detineor.’ [23] Per has mortalis aevi moras illi meliori vitae longiorique proluditur. Quemadmodum decem mensibus tenet nos maternus uterus et praeparat non sibi sed illi loco in quem videmur emitti iam idonei spiritum trahere et inaperto durare, sic per hoc spatium quod ab infantia patet in senectutem in alium mature scimus partum. Alia origo nos expectat, alius rerum status. [24] Nondum caelum nisi ex intervallo pati possumus. Proinde intrepidus horam illam decretoriam prospice: non est animo suprema, sed corpori. Quidquid circa te iacet rerum tamquam hospitalis loci sarcinas specta: transeundum est. Excudit redeuntem natura sicut intrantem. [25] Non licet plus efferrequam intuleris, immo etiam ex eo quod ad vitam adtulisti pars magna ponenda est: detrahatur tibi haec circumiecta, novissimum velamentum tui, cutis; detrahatur caro et suffusus sanguis discurrensque per totum; detrahentur ossa nervique, firmamenta fluidorum ac labentium. [26] Dies iste quem tamquam extremum reformidas aeterni natalis est. Depone onus: quid cunctaris, tamquam non prius quoque relicto in quo latebas corpore exieris? Haeres, reluctaris: tum quoque magno nisu matris expulsus es. Gemis, ploras: et hoc ipsum flerenascentis est, sed tunc debebat ignosci: rudis et inperitus omnium veneras. Ex maternorum viscerum calido mollique fomento emissum adflavit aura liberior, deinde offendit durae manus tactus, tenerque adhuc et nullius rei gnarus obstipuisti inter ignota:

[27] nunc tibi non est novum separari ab eo cuius ante pars fueris; aequo animo membra iam supervacua dimitte et istuc corpus inhabitatum diu pone. Scindetur, obruetur, abolebitur: quid contristaris? ita solet fieri: pereunt semper velamenta nascentium. Quid ista sic diligis quasi tua? Istis opertus es: veniet qui te reveilat dies et ex contubernio foedi atque olidi ventris educat. [28] Huic nunc quoque tu quantum potessub<duc te> voluptatique nisi quae * * * necessariisque cohaerebit alienus iam hinc altius aliquid sublimiusque meditare: aliquando naturae tibi arcana reteguntur, discutietur ista caligo et lux undique clara percutiet. Imaginare tecum quantus ille sit fulgor tot sideribus inter se lumen miscentibus. Nulla serenum umbra turbabit; aequaliter splendeat omne caeli latus: dies et nox aeris infimi vices sunt. Tunc in tenebris vixisse te dices cum totam lucem et totus aspexeris, quam nunc per angustissimas oculorum vias obscure intueris, et tamen admiraris illam iam procul: quid tibi videbitur divina lux cum illam suo loco videris? [29] Haec cogitatio nihil sordidum animo subsidere sinit, nihil humile, nihil crudele. Deos rerum omnium esse testes ait; illis nos adprobari, illis in futurum parari iubet et aeternitatem proponere. Quam qui mente concepit nullos horret exercitus, non terretur tuba, nullis ad timorem minis agitur. [30] Quidni non timeat qui mori sperat? is quoque qui animum tamdiu iudicat manere quamdiu retinetur corporis vinculo, solutum statim spargi, id agit ut etiam post mortem utilis esse possit. Quamvis enim ipse ereptus sit oculis, tamen

multa viri virtus animo multusque recursat
gentis honos.

Cogita quantum nobis exempla bona prosint: scies magnorum virorum non minus praesentiam esse utilem quam memoriam. Vale.

[2] Tempestas minatur antequam surgat, crepant aedificia antequam corruant, praenuntiat fumus incendium: subita est ex homine perniciēs [est], et eo diligentius tegitur quo propius accedit. Erras si istorum tibi qui occurrunt vultibus credis: hominum effigies habent, animos ferarum, nisi quod illarum perniciosus est primus incursus: quos transiere non quaerunt. Numquam enim illas ad nocendum nisi necessitas incitat; [hae] aut fame aut timore coguntur ad pugnam: homini perdere hominem libet. [3] Tu tamen ita cogita quod ex homine periculum sit ut cogites quod sit hominis officium; alterum intueri ne laedaris, alterum ne laedas. Commodis omnium laeteris, movearis incommodis, et memineris quae praestare debeas, quae cavere. [4] Sic vivendo quid consequaris? non te ne noceant, sed ne fallant. Quantum potes autem in philosophiam recede: illa te sinu suo proteget, in huius sacrario eris aut tutus aut tutior. Non arietant inter se nisi in eadem ambulantes via. [5] Ipsam autem philosophiam non debebis iactare; multis fuit periculi causa insolenter tractata et contumaciter: tibi vitia detrahat, non aliis exprobet. Non abhorreat a publicis moribus nec hoc agat ut quidquid non facit damnare videatur. Licet sapere sine pompa, sine invidia. Vale.

CIV. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] In Nomentanum meum fugi — quid putas? urbem? immo febrem et quidam subrepentem; iam manum mihi iniecerat. Medicus initia esse dicebat motis venis et incertis et naturalem turbantibus modum. Protinus itaque parare vehiculum iussi; Paulina mea retinente exire perseveravi. Illud mihi in ore erat domini mei Gallionis, qui cum in Achaia febrem habere coepisset, protinus navem escendit clamitans non corporis esse sed loci morbum. [2] Hoc ego Paulinae meae dixi, quae mihi valetudinem meam commendat. Nam cum sciam spiritum illius in meo verti, incipio, ut illi consulam, mihi consulere. Et cum me fortiorem senectus ad multa reddiderit, hoc beneficium aetatis amitto; venit enim mihi in mentem in hoc senectute et adulescentem esse cui parciitur. Itaque quoniam ego ab illa non inpetro ut me fortius amet, <ame> inpetrat illa ut me diligentius amem. [3] Indulgendum est enim honestis affectibus; et interdum, etiam si premunt causae, spiritus in honorem suorum vel cum tormento revocandus et in ipso ore retinendus est, cum bono viro vivendum sit non quamdiu iuvat sed quamdiu oportet: ille qui non uxorem, non amicum tanti putat ut diutius in vita commoretur, qui perseverabit mori, delicatus est. Hoc quoque imperet sibi animus, ubi utilitas suorum exigit, nec tantum si vult mori, sed si coepit, intermittat et <se> suis commodet. [4] Ingentis animi est aliena causa ad vitam reverti, quod magni viri saepe fecerunt; sed hoc quoque summae humanitatis existimo, senectutem suam, cuius maximus fructus est securior sui tutela et vitae usus animosior, attentius <curare>, si scias alicui id tuorum esse dulce, utile, optabile. [5] Habet praeterea in se non mediocre ista res gaudium et mercedem; quid enim iucundius quam uxori tam carum esse ut propter hoc tibi carior fias? Potest itaque Paulina mea non tantum suum mihi timorem inputare sed etiam meum.

[6] Quaeris ergo quomodo mihi consilium profectionis cesserit? Ut primum gravitatem urbis excessi et illum odorem culinarum fumantium quae mota quidquid pestiferi vaporis sorbuerunt cum pulvere effundunt, protinus mutatam valetudinem sensi. Quantum deinde adiectum putas viribus postquam vineas attigi? in pascuum emissus cibum meum invasi. Repetivi ergo iam me; non permansit marcor ille corporis dubii et male cogitantis. Incipio toto animo studere. [7] Non multum ad hoc locus confert nisi se sibi praestat animus, qui secretum in occupationibus mediis si volet habebit: at ille qui regiones eligit et otium captat ubique quo distringatur inveniet. Nam Socraten quere quendam quod nihil sibi peregrinationes profuissent respondisse ferunt, 'non inmerito hoc tibi evenit; tecum enim peregrinaberis'. [8] O quam bene cum quibusdam ageretur, si a se aberrarent! Nunc premunt se ipsi, sollicitant, corrumpunt, territant. Quid prodest mare traicere et urbes mutare? si visista quibus urgueris effugere, non aliubi sis oportet sed alius. Puta venissete Athenas, puta Rhodon; elige arbitrio tuo civitatem: quid ad rem pertinet quos illa mores habeat? tuos adferes. [9] Divitias iudicabis bonum: torquebit te paupertas, quod est miserrimum, falsa. Quamvis enim multum possideas, tamen, quia aliquis plus habet, tanto tibi videris deficere quanto vinceris. Honores iudicabis bonum: male te habebit ille consul factus, ille etiam refectus; inviderebis quotiens aliquem in fastis saepius legeris. Tantum erit ambitionis furor ut nemo tibi post te videatur si aliquis ante te fuerit. [10] Maximum malum iudicabis mortem, cum <in> illa nihil sit mali nisi quod ante ipsam est, timeri. Exterrebunt te non tantum pericula sed suspensiones; vanis semper agitareris. Quid enim proderit

Argolicas mediosque fugam tenuisse per hostis?

Ipsa pax timores sumministrabit; ne tutis quidem habebitur fides consternata semel mente, quae ubi consuetudinem pavoris inprovidi fecit, etiam ad tutelam salutis suae inhabilis est. Non enim vitat sed fugit; magis autem periculis patemur aversi. [11] Gravissimum iudicabis malum aliquem ex his quos amabis amittere, cum interim hoc tam ineptum erit quam flere quod arboribus amoenis et domum tuam ornantibus decidant folia. Quidquid te delectat aequè vide+ut videres+: dum virent, utere. Alium alio die casus excutiet, sed quemadmodum frondium iactura facilis est quia renascuntur, sic istorum quos amas quosque oblectamenta vitae putas esse damnum, quia reparantur etiam si non renascuntur. [12] 'Sed non erunt idem. '

Ne tu quidem idem eris. Omnis dies, omnis horate mutat; sed in aliis rapina facilius apparet, hic latet, quia non exaperto fit. Alii auferuntur, at ipsi nobis furto subducimur. Horum nihilcogitabis nec remedia vulneribus oppones, sed ipse tibi seres sollicitudinumcausas alia sperando, alia desperando? Si sapis, alterum alteri misce:nec speraveris sine desperatione nec desperaveris sine spe.

[13] Quid per se peregrinatio prodesse cuiquam potuit? Non voluptatesilla temperavit, non cupiditates refrenavit, non iras repressit, non indomitosamoris impetus fregit, nulla denique animo mala eduxit. Non iudicium dedit, non discussit errorem, sed ut puerum ignota mirantem ad breve tempus rerumaliqua novitate detinuit. [14] Ceterum inconstantiam mentis, quae maximeaegra est, lacessit, mobiliorem leviolemque reddit ipsa iactatio. Itaquequae petierant cupidissime loca cupidius deserunt et avium modo transvolantcitiusque quam venerant abeunt. [15] Peregrinatio notitiam dabit gentium, novas tibi montium formas ostendet, invisitata spatia camporum et inriguasperennibus aquis valles; alicuius fluminis <singularem ponet> sub observationenaturam, sive ut Nilus aestivo incremento tumet, sive ut Tigris eripiturex oculis et acto per occulta cursu integrae magnitudinis redditur, siveut Maeander, poetarum omnium exercitatio et ludus, implicatur crebris anfractibuset saepe in vicinum alveo suo admotus, antequam sibi influat, flectitur:ceterum neque meliorem faciet neque saniolem. [16] Inter studia versandumest et inter auctores sapientiae ut quaesita discamus, nondum inventa quaeramus;sic eximendus animus ex miserrima servitute in libertatem adseritur. Quamdiuquidem nescieris quid fugiendum, quid petendum, quid necessarium, quidsupervacuum, quid iustum, quid iniustum, quid honestum, quid inhonestumsit, non erit hoc peregrinari sed errare. [17] Nullam tibi opem feret istediscursus; peregrinaris enim cum adfectibus tuis et mala te tua sequuntur. Utinam quidem sequerentur! Longius abessent: nunc fers illa, non ducis. Itaque ubique te premunt et paribus incommodis urunt. Medicina aegro, nonregio quaerenda est. [18] Fregit aliquis crus aut extorsit articulum: nonvehiculum navemque conscendit, sed advocat medicum ut fracta pars iungatur, ut luxata in locum reponatur. Quid ergo? animum tot locis fractum et extortumcredis locorum mutatione posse sanari? Maius est istud malum quam ut gestationecuretur. [19]

Peregrinatio non facit medicum, non oratorem; nulla ars locodiscitur: quid ergo? sapientia, ars omnium maxima, in itinere colligitur? Nullum est, mihi crede, iter quod te extra cupiditates, extra iras, extrametus sistat; aut si quod esset, agmine facto gens illuc humana pergeret. Tamdiu ista urguebunt mala macerabuntque per terras ac maria vagum quamdiu malorum gestaveris causas. [20] Fugam tibi non prodesse miraris? tecumsunt quae fugis. Te igitur emenda, onera tibi detrahe et [emenda] desideria intra salutarem modum contine; omnem ex animo erade nequitiam. Si vis peregrinationes habere iucundas, comitem tuum sana. Haerebit tibi avaritia quamdiu avaros sordidoque convixeris; haerebit tumor quamdiu superbo conversaberis; numquamsaevitiam in tortoris contubernio pones; incendent libidines tuas adulterorum sodalicia. [21] Si velis vitiis exui, longe a vitiorum exemplis recedendum est. Avarus, corruptor, saevus, fraudulentus, multum nocituri si propea te fuissent, intra te sunt. Ad meliores transi: cum Catonibus vive, cum Laelio, cum Tuberone. Quod si convivere etiam Graecis iuvat, cum Socrate, cum Zenone versare: alter te docebit mori si necesse erit, alter antequam necesse erit. [22] Vive cum Chrysippo, cum Posidonio: hi tibi tradent humanorum divinorumque notitiam, hi iubebunt in opere esse nec tantum scite loquit in oblectationem audientium verba iactare, sed animum indurare et adversus minas erigere. Unus est enim huius vitae fluctuantis et turbidae portus eventura contemnere, stare fidenter ac paratum tela fortunae adverso pectore excipere, non latitantem nec tergiversantem. [23] Magnanimos nos natura produxit, et ut quibusdam animalibus ferum dedit, quibusdam subdolum, quibusdampavidum, ita nobis gloriosum et excelsum spiritum quaerentem ubi honestissime, non ubi tutissime vivat, simillimum mundo, quem quantum mortalium passibus licet sequitur aemulaturque; profert se, laudari et aspici credit. [24] <Dominus> omnium est, supra omnia est; itaque nulli se rei summittat, nihil illi videatur grave, nihil quod virum incurvet.

minime quidem, si quis rectis oculis intueri illa possit et tenebras perumpere; multa per noctem habita terrori dies vertit ad risum.

Terribiles visu formae, Letumque Labosque:

egregie Vergilius noster non re dixit terribiles esse sed visu, id

est videri, non esse. [25] Quid, inquam, in istis est tam formidabile quam fama vulgavit? quid est, obsecro te, Lucili, cur timeat laborem vir, mortem homo? Totiens mihi occurrunt isti qui non putant fieri posse quidquid facere non possunt, et aiunt nos loqui maiora quam quae humana natura sustineat. [26] At quanto ego de illis melius existimo! ipsi quoque haec possunt facere, sed nolunt. Denique quem umquam ista destituere temptantem? cui non faciliora apparere in actu? Non quia difficilia sunt non audemus, sed quia non audemus difficilia sunt.

[27] Si tamen exemplum desideratis, accipite Socraten, per se ipsum senem, per omnia aspera iactatum, invictum tamen et paupertate, quam graviore milli domestica onera faciebant, et laboribus, quos militares quoque pertulit. Quibus ille domi exercitus, sive uxorem eius moribus feram, lingua petulantem, sive liberos indociles et matri quam patri similiores +sivere+ aut in bello fuit aut in tyrannide aut in libertate bellis ac tyrannis saeviore. [28] Viginti et septem annis pugnatum est; post finita arma triginta tyrannis noxae dedita est civitas, ex quibus plerique inimici erant. Novissime damnatio est sub gravissimis nominibus impleta: obiecta est et religionum violatio et iuventutis corruptela, quam inmittere in deos, in patres, in rem publicam dictus est. Post haec carcer et venenum. Haec usque eo animum Socratis non moverant ut ne vultum quidem moverint. <O> illam mirabilem laudem et singularem! usque ad extremum nec hilariorem quisquam nec tristiorem Socraten vidit; aequalis fuit in tanta inaequalitate fortunae.

[29] Vis alterum exemplum? accipe hunc M. Catonem recentiorem, cum quo et infestius fortuna egit et pertinacius. Cui cum omnibus locis obstitisset, novissime et in morte, ostendit tamen virum fortem posse invita fortunam vivere, invita mori. Tota illi aetas aut in armis est exacta civilibus aut +intacta+ concipiente iam civile bellum; et hunc licet dicas non minusquam Socraten +inseruisse dixisse+ nisi forte Cn. Pompeium et Caesarem et Crassum putas libertatis socios fuisse.

[30] Nemo mutatum Catonem totiens mutata re publica vidit; eundem se in omni statu praestitit, in praetura, in repulsa, in accusatione, in provincia, in contione, in exercitu, in morte. Denique in illa rei publicae trepitatione, cum illinc Caesar esset decem legionibus pugnacissimis subnixus, totis exterarum gentium praesidiis, hinc Cn.

Pompeius, satis unus adversus omnia, cum alii ad Caesarem inclinarent, alii ad Pompeium, solus Cato fecit aliquas et rei publicae partes. [31] Si animo conplexi volueris illius imaginem temporis, videbis illinc plebemet omnem erectum ad res novas vulgum, hinc optumates et equestrem ordinem, quidquid erat in civitate sancti et electi, duos in medio relictos, rempublicam et Catonem. Miraberis, inquam, cum animadverteris utrumque enim inprobat, utrumque exarmat. [32] Hanc fert de utroque sententiam: ait se, si Caesar vicerit, moriturum, si Pompeius, exulaturum. Quid habebat quod timeret qui ipse sibi et victo et victori constituerat quae constituta esse ab hostibus iratissimis poterant? Perit itaque ex decreto suo. [33] Vides posse homines laborem pati: per medias Africae solitudines pedesduxit exercitum. Vides posse tolerari sitim: in collibus arentibus sine ullis impedimentis victi exercitus reliquias trahens inopiam umoris loricatus tulit et, quotiens aquae fuerat occasio, novissimus bibit. Vides honorem et notam posse contemni: eodem quo repulsus est die in comitio pila lusit. Vides posse non timeri potentiam superiorum: et Pompeium et Caesarem, quorum nemo alterum offendere audebat nisi ut alterum demereretur, simul provocavit. Vides tam mortem posse contemni quam exilium: et exilium sibi indixit et mortem et interim bellum. [34] Possumus itaque adversus ista tantum habere animi, libeat modo subducere iugo collum. In primis autem respuendae voluptates: enervant et effeminant et multum petunt, multum autem a fortuna petendum est. Deinde spernendae opes: auctoramenta sunt servitutum. Aurum et argentum et quidquid aliud felices domos onerat relinquatur: non potest gratis constare libertas. Hanc si magno aestimas, omnia parvo aestimanda sunt. Vale.

CV. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Quae observanda tibi sint ut tutior vivas dicam. Tu tamen sic audiascenseo ista praecepta quomodo si tibi praeciperem qua ratione bonam valetudinemin Ardeatino tuereris. Considera quae sint quae hominem in perniciem hominisinstigent: invenies spem, invidiam, odium, metum, contemptum. [2] Ex omnibusistis adeo levissimum est contemptus ut multi in illo remedii causa delituerint. Quem quis contemnit, calcatur sine dubio sed transit; nemo homini contemptopertinaciter, nemo diligenter nocet; etiam in acie iacens praeteritur, cum stante pugnatur.

[3] Spem improborum vitabis si nihil habueris quod cupiditatem alienamet inprobam iritet, si nihil insigne possederis; concupiscuntur enim etiam+pars innotarum sunt sic raro+. Invidiam effugies si te non ingesserisoculis, si bona tua non iactaveris, si scieris in sinu gaudere. Odium autest ex offensa (hoc vitabis neminem lacescendo) aut gratuitum, a quo tesensus communis tuebitur. Fuit hoc multis periculosum: quidam odium habueruntnec inimicum. [4] Illud, ne timearis, praestabit tibi et fortunae mediocritaset ingeni lenitas: eum esse te homines sciant quem offendere sine periculopossint; reconciliatio tua et facilis sit et certa. Timeri autem tam domimolestum est quam foris, tam a servis quam a liberis: nulli non ad nocendum satis virium est. Adice nunc quod qui timetur timet: nemo potuit terribilisse secure. [5] Contemptus superest, cuius modum in sua potestate habetqui illum sibi adiunxit, qui contemnitur quia voluit, non quia debuit. Huius incommodum et artes bonae discutiunt et amicitiae eorum qui apudaliquem potentem potentes sunt, quibus adplicari expediet, non inplicari, ne pluris remedium quam periculum constet.

[7] Securitatis magna portio est nihil inique facere: confusam vitamet perturbatam inpotentes agunt; tantum metuunt quantum nocent, nec ullotempore vacant. Trepidant enim cum fecerunt, haerent; conscientia aliudagere non patitur ac subinde respondere ad se cogit. Dat poenas quisquisexpectat; quisquis autem meruit expectat. [8] Tutum aliqua res in malaconscientia praestat, nulla securum; putat enim se, etiam si non deprenditur, posse deprenderi, et inter somnos movetur et, quotiens alicuius scelus loquitur, de suo cogitat; non satis illi oblitteratum videtur, non satis tectum. Nocens habuit aliquando latendi fortunam, numquam fiduciam. Vale.

CVI. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Tardius rescribo ad epistulas tuas, non quia districtus occupationibussum. Hanc excusationem cave audias: vaco, et omnes vacant qui volunt. Neminemres sequuntur: ipsi illas amplexantur et argumentum esse felicitatis occupationemputant. Quid ergo fuit quare non protinus rescriberem? id de quo quaerebasveniebat in contextum operis mei; [2] scis enim me moralem philosophiamvelle conplecti et omnes ad eam pertinentis quaestiones explicare. Itaque dubitavi utrum differrem te donec suus isti rei veniret locus, an ius tibiextra ordinem dicerem: humanius visum est tam longe venientem non detinere. [3] Itaque et hoc ex illa serie rerum cohaerentium excerptam et, si quaerunt eiusmodi, non quaerenti tibi ultro mittam.

Quae sint haec interrogas? Quae scire magis iuvat quam prodest, sicuthoc de quo quaeris: bonum an corpus sit? [4] Bonum facit; prodest enim;quod facit corpus est. Bonum agitat animum et quodam modo format et continet, quae [ergo] propria sunt corporis. Quae corporis bona sunt corpora sunt;ergo et quae animi sunt; nam et hoc corpus est. [5] Bonum hominis necesseest corpus sit, cum ipse sit corporalis. Mentior, nisi et quae alunt illumet quae valetudinem eius vel custodiunt vel restituunt corpora sunt; ergoet bonum eius corpus est. Non puto te dubitaturum an adfectus corpora sint(ut aliud quoque de quo non quaeris infulciam), tamquam ira, amor, tristitia, nisi dubitas an vultum nobis mutant, an frontem adstringant, an faciemdiffundant, an ruborem evocent, an fugent sanguinem. Quid ergo? tam manifestasnotas corporis credis inprimi nisi a corpore? [6] Si adfectus corpora sunt, et morbi animorum, ut avaritia, crudelitas, indurata vitia et in statuminemendabilem adducta; ergo et malitia et species eius omnes, malignitas, invidia, superbia; [7] ergo et bona, primum quia contraria istis sunt, deinde quia eadem tibi indicia praestabunt. An non vides quantum oculisdet vigorem fortitudo? quantam intentionem prudentia? quantam modestiamet quietem reverentia? quantam serenitatem laetitia? quantum rigorem severitas? quantam remissionem lenitas? Corpora ergo sunt quae colorem habitumque corporum mutant, quae in illis regnum suum exercent.

[8] Numquid est dubium an id quo quid tangi potest corpus sit?
Tangere enim et tangi nisi corpus nulla potest res, ut ait Lucretius.
Omnia autem ista quae dixi non mutarent corpus nisi tangerent; ergo corpora sunt. [9] Etiam nunc cui tanta vis est ut inpellat et cogat et retineat inhibeat corpus est. Quid ergo? non timor retinet? non audacia inpellit? non fortitudo inmittit et impetum dat? non moderatio refrenat ac revocat? non gaudium extollit? non tristitia deducit? [10] Denique quidquid facimus aut malitiae aut virtutis gerimus imperio: quod imperat corpori corpus est, quod vim corpori adfert, corpus. Bonum corporis corporale est, bonum hominis et corporis bonum est; itaque corporale est.

[11] Quoniam, ut voluisti, morem gessi tibi, nunc ipse dicam mihi quod dicturum esse te video: latrunculis ludimus. In supervacuis subtilitasteritur: non faciunt bonos ista sed doctos. [12] Apertior res est sapere, immo simplicior: paucis <satis> est ad mentem bonam uti litteris, sed nos ut cetera in supervacuum diffundimus, ita philosophiam ipsam. Quemadmodum omnium rerum, sic litterarum quoque intemperantia laboramus: non vitae sed scholae discimus.
Vale.

[1] Ubi illa prudentia tua? ubi in dispiciendis rebus subtilitas? ubimagnitudo? Tam pusilla <te res> tangit? Servi occupationes tuas occasionemfugae putaverunt. Si amici deciperent (habeant enim sane nomen quod illisnoster error inposuit, et vocentur quo turpius non sint) * * * omnibusrebus tuis desunt illi qui et operam tuam conterebant et te aliis molestumesse credebant. [2] Nihil horum insolitum, nihil inexpectatum est; offendi rebus istis tam ridiculum est quam queri quod spargaris <in balneo autvexeris> in publico aut inquineris in luto. Eadem vitae condicio est quae balnei, turbae, itineris: quaedam in te mittentur, quaedam incident. Non est delicata res vivere. Longam viam ingressus es: et labaris oportet et arietes et cadas et lasseris et exclames ‘o mors!’, id est mentiaris. Alio loco comitem relinques, alio efferes, alio timebis: per eiusmodi offensasemetiendum est confragosum hoc iter. [3] Mori vult? praeparetur animus contra omnia; sciat se venisse ubi tonat fulmen; sciat se venisse ubi

Luctus et ultrices posuere cubilia Curae

In hoc contubernio vita degenda est. Effugere ista non potes, contemnere potes; contemnes autem si saepe cogitaveris et futura praesumpseris. [4] Nemo non fortius ad id cui se diu composuerat accessit et duris quoque, si praemeditata erant, obstitit: at contra inparatus etiam levissima expavit. Id agendum est ne quid nobis inopinatum sit; et quia omnia novitate graviora sunt, hoc cogitatio adsidua praestabit, ut nulli sis malo tiro.

[5] ‘Servi me reliquerunt. ‘ Alium compilaverunt, alium accusaverunt, alium occiderunt, alium prodiderunt, alium mulcaverunt, alium veneno, alium criminatione petierunt: quidquid dixeris multis accidit * * * deinceps quae multa et varia sunt in nos deriguntur. Quedam in nos fixa sunt, quaedam vibrant et cum maxime veniunt, quaedam in alios perventura nos stringunt. [6] Nihil miremur eorum ad quae nati sumus, quae ideo nulli querenda quia paria sunt omnibus. Ita dico, paria sunt; nam etiam quod effugit aliquispati potuit. Aequum autem ius est non quo omnes usi sunt sed quod omnibuslatum est. Imperetur aequitas animo et sine querella mortalitatis tributapendamus. [7]

Hiems frigora adducit: alendum est. Aestas calores refert:aestuandum est. Intemperies caeli valetudinem temptat: aegrotandum est. Et fera nobis aliquo loco occurret et homo perniciosior feris omnibus. Aliud aqua, aliud ignis eripiet. Hanc rerum condicionem mutare non possumus:illud possumus, magnum sumere animum et viro bono dignum, quo fortiterfortuita patiamur et naturae consentiamus. [8] Natura autem hoc quod videsregnum mutationibus temperat: nubilo serena succedunt; turbantur mariacum quieverunt; flant in vicem venti; noctem dies sequitur; pars caeliconsurgit, pars mergitur: contrariis rerum aeternitas constat. [9]

Ad hanclegem animus noster aptandus est; hanc sequatur, huic pareat; et quaecumquefiunt debuisse fieri putet nec velit obiurgare naturam. Optimum est pati quod emendare non possis, et deum quo auctore cuncta proveniunt sine murmurationecomitari: malus miles est qui imperatorem gemens sequitur. [10] Quare in pigriatque alacres excipiamus imperia nec deseramus hunc operis pulcherrimicursum, cui quidquid patiemur intextum est; et sic adloquamur Iovem, cuiusgubernaculo moles ista derigitur, quemadmodum Cleanthes noster versibusdisertissimis adloquitur, quos mihi in nostrum sermonem mutare permittiturCiceronis, disertissimi viri, exemplo. Si placuerint, boni consules; si displicuerint, scies me in hoc secutum Ciceronis exemplum.

Duc, o parens celsique dominator poli, quocumque placuit: nulla parendi mora est;
adsum inpiger. Fac nolle, comitabor gemens malusque patiar facere quod licuit bono.
Ducunt volentem fata, nolentem trahunt.

[12] Sic vivamus, sic loquamur; paratos nos inveniatur atque in pigros fatum. Hic est magnus animus qui se ei tradidit: at contra ille pusillus et degenerqui obluctatur et de ordine mundi male existimat et

[3] Haec nobis praecipere Attalum memini, cum scholam eius obsideremus et primi veniremus et novissimi exiremus, ambulantiem quoque illum ad aliquas disputationes evocarem, non tantum paratum discentibus sed obvium. ‘Idem’ inquit ‘et docenti et discenti debet esse propositum, ut ille prodesse velit, hic proficere.’ [4] Qui ad philosophum venit cotidie aliquid secum boni ferat: aut sanior domum redeat aut sanabilior. Redibit autem: ea philosophiae vis est ut non studentis sed etiam conversantis iuvet. Qui in solem venit, licet non in hoc venerit, colorabitur; qui in unguentaria taberna resederunt paullo diutius commorati sunt odorem secum loci ferunt; et qui ad philosophum fuerunt traxerint aliquid necesse est quod prodesset etiam negligentibus. Attende quid dicam: negligentibus, non repugnantibus.

sine suo audiunt. [7] Quidam ad magnificas voces excitantur et transeunt in adfectum dicentium alacres vultu et animo, nec aliter concitantur quam solent Phrygii tibicinis sono semiviri et ex imperio furentes. Rapti illos instigatque rerum pulchritudo, non verborum inanum sonitus. Si quid acriter contra mortem dictum est, si quid contra fortunam contumaciter, iuvat protinus quae audias facere. Adficiuntur illis et sunt quales iubentur, si illa animo forma permaneat, si non impetum insignem protinus populus, honesti dissuasor, excipiat: pauci illam quam conceperant mentem domum perferre potuerunt. [8] Facile est auditorem concitare ad cupidinem recti; omnibus enim natura fundamenta dedit semenque virtutum. Omnes ad omnia ista nati sumus: cum inritator accessit, tunc illa animi bona veluti sopita excitantur. Non vides quemadmodum theatra consonent quotiens aliqua dicta sunt quae publice adgnoscamus et consensu vera esse testamur?

Desunt inopiae multa, avaritiae omnia.

In nullum avarus bonus est, in se pessimus.

Ad hos versus ille sordidissimus plaudit et vitiis suis fieri convicium gaudet: quanto magis hoc iudicas evenire cum a philosopho ista dicuntur, cum salutaribus praeceptis versus inseruntur, efficacius eadem illa demissuri in animum inperitorum? [10] Nam ut dicebat Cleanthes, ‘quemadmodum spiritus noster clariorem sonum reddit cum illum tuba per longi canalis angustias tractum patientiore novissime exitu effudit, sic sensus nostros clariores carminis arta necessitas efficit.’ Eadem negligentius audiuntur minusque percutiunt quamdiu soluta oratione dicuntur: ubi accessere numeri et egregium sensum adstrinxere certi pedes, eadem illa sententia velut lacerto excussione torquetur. [11] De contemptu pecuniae multa dicuntur et longissimis orationibus hoc praecipitur, ut homines in animo, non in patrimonio putent esse divitias, eum esse locupletem qui paupertati suae aptatus est et parvo se divitem fecit; magis tamen feriuntur animi cum carmina eiusmodi dicta sunt:

Is minimo eget mortalis qui minimum cupit.

Quod vult habet qui velle quod satis est potest.

[12] Cum haec atque eiusmodi audimus, ad confessionem veritatis adducimur; illi enim quibus nihil satis est admirantur, exclamant, odium pecuniae indicunt. Hunc illorum adfectum cum videris, urge, hoc preme, hoc onera, relictis ambiguitatibus et syllogismis et cavillationibus et ceteris acuminis inriti ludicris. Dic in avaritiam, dic in luxuriam; cum profecisse te videriset animos audientium adfeceris, insta vehementius: veri simile non est quantum proficiat talis oratio remedio intenta et tota in bonum audientium versa. Facillime enim tenera conciliantur ingenia ad honesti rectique amorem, et adhuc docilibus leviterque corruptis inicit manum veritas si advocatum idoneum nacta est. [13] Ego certe cum Attalum audirem in vitia, in errores, in mala vitae perorantem, saepe miseritus sum generis humani et illum sublimem altioreque humano fastigio credidi. Ipse regem se esse dicebat, sed plusquam regnare mihi videbatur cui liceret censuram agere regnantium. [14] Cum vero commendare paupertatem coeperat et ostendere quam quidquid usus excederet pondus esset supervacuum et grave ferenti, saepe exire e schola pauperi libuit. Cum coeperat voluptates nostras traducere, laudare castum corpus, sobriam mensam, puram mentem non tantum ab illicitis voluptatibus sed etiam supervacuis, libebat circumscribere gulam ac ventrem. [15] Inde mihi quaedam permansere, Lucili; magno enim in omnia impetu veneram, deinde ad civitatis vitam reductus ex bene coeptis pauca servavi. Inde ostreis boletisque in omnem vitam renuntiatum est; nec enim cibi sed oblectamenta sunt ad edendum saturos cogentia (quod gratissimum est edacibus et se ultraquam capiunt farcientibus), facile descensura, facile reditura. [16] Inde in omnem vitam unguento abstinemus, quoniam optimus odor in corpore est nullus. Inde vino carens stomachus. Inde in omnem vitam balneum fugimus; decoquere corpus atque exinanire sudoribus inutile simul delicatumque credidimus. Cetera proiecta redierunt, ita tamen ut quorum abstinentiam interrupti modum servem et quidem abstinentiae proximior, nescio an difficiliorem, quoniam quaedam absciduntur facilius animo quam temperantur.

fateri quem mihi amorem Pythagoras iniecerit. Sotion dicebat quare ille animalibus abstinuisset, quare postea Sextius. Dissimilis utrique causa erat, sed utrique magnifica.

[18] Hic homini satis alimentorum citra sanguinem esse credebat et crudelitatis consuetudinem fieri ubi in voluptatem esset adducta laceratio. Adiciebat contrahendam materiam esse luxuriae; colligebat bonae valetudini contraria esse alimenta varia et nostris aliena corporibus. [19] At Pythagoras omnium inter omnia cognationem esse dicebat et animorum commercium in alias atque alias formas transeuntium. Nulla, si illi credas, anima interit, ne cessat quidem nisi tempore exiguo, dum in aliud corpus transfunditur. Videbimus per quas temporum vices et quando pererratis pluribus domiciliis in hominem revertatur: interim sceleris hominibus ac parricidii metum fecit, cum possent in parentis animam inscii incurrere et ferro morsu violare, si in quo corpore cognatus aliqui spiritus hospitaretur. [20] Haec cum exposuisset Sotion et implesset argumentis suis, 'non credis' inquit 'animas in alia corpora atque alia describi et migrationem esse quod dicimus mortem? Non credis in his pecudibus ferisve aut aqua mersis illum quondam hominis animum morari? Non credis nihil perire in hoc mundo, sed mutare regionem? nectantur caelestia per certos circuitus verti, sed animalia quoque per vices ire et animos per orbem agi? Magni ista crediderunt viri. [21] Itaque iudicium quidem tuum sustine, ceterum omnia tibi in integro serva. Si vera sunt ista, abstinuisse animalibus innocentia est; si falsa, frugalitas est. Quod istic credulitatis tuae damnum est? alimenta tibi leonum et vulturum eripio. [22] His ego instinctus abstinere animalibus coepi, et anno peractum non tantum facilis erat mihi consuetudo sed dulcis. Agitatio enim mihi animi esse credebam nec tibi hodie adfirmaverim an fuerit. Quaeris quomodo desierim? In primum Tiberii Caesaris principatum iuventutis tempus inciderat: alienigenatum sacra movebantur et inter argumenta superstitionis ponebatur quorundam animalium abstinencia. Patre itaque meo rogante, qui non calumniam timebat sed philosophiam oderat, ad pristinam consuetudinem redii; nec difficile mihi ut inciperem melius cenare persuasit. [23] Laudare solebat Attalus culcitam quae resisteret corpori: tali utor etiam senex, in qua vestigium apparere non

Haec rettuli ut probarem tibi quam vehementes haberent tirunculi impetus primos ad optima quaeque, si quis exhortaretur illos, si quis inpelleret. Sed aliquid praecipientium vitio peccatur, qui nos docent disputare, non vivere, aliquid discentium, qui propositum adferunt ad praeceptores suos non animum excolendi sed ingenium. Itaque quae philosophia fuit facta philologia est. [24] Multum autem ad rem pertinet quo proposito ad quamquam rem accedas. Qui grammaticus futurus Vergilium scrutatur non hoc animo legit illud egregium fugit inreparabile tempus:

‘vigilandum est; nisi properamus relinquemur; agit nos agiturque velocius dies; inscii rapimur; omnia in futurum disponimus et inter praecipitianti sumus’: sed ut observet, quotiens Vergilius de celeritate temporum dicit, hoc uti verbo illum ‘fugit’.

Optima quaeque dies miseris mortalibus aevi
prima fugit; subeunt morbi tristisque senectus et labor, et durae rapit inclementia mortis.

[26] Quemadmodum ex amphora primum quod est sincerissimum effluit, gravissimum quodque turbidumque subsidit, sic in aetate nostra quod est optimum in primo est. Id exauriri [in] aliis potius patimur, ut nobis faciem reservemus? Inhaereat istud animo et tamquam missum oraculo placeat:

prima fugit.

[27] Quare optima? quia quod restat incertum est. Quare optima? quia iuvenes possumus discere, possumus facilem animum et adhuc tractabilem ad meliora convertere; quia hoc tempus idoneum est laboribus, idoneum agitandis perstudia ingeniis [est] et exercendis per opera corporibus: quod superest segnius et languidius est et propius a fine. Itaque toto hoc agamus animo et omissis ad quae devertimur in rem unam laboremus, ne hanc temporis perniciosissimae celeritatem, quam retinere non possumus, relictis demum intellegamus. Primus quisque tamquam optimus dies placeat et redigatur in nostrum. [28] Quod fugit occupandum est. Haec non cogitat ille qui grammatici oculis carmen istud legit, ideo optimum quemque primum esse diem quia subeunt morbi, quia senectus premit et adhuc adulescentiam cogitantibus supra caput est, sed ait Vergilium semper una ponere morbos et senectutem — non me hercules in merito; senectus enim insanabilis morbus est. [29] ‘Praeterea’ inquit ‘hoc senectuti cognomen inposuit, “tristem” illam vocat:

subeunt morbi tristisque senectus.

Alio loco dicit

pallentesque habitant Morbi tristisque Senectus.’

Non est quod mireris ex eadem materia suis quemque studiis apta colligere: in eodem prato bos herbam quaerit, canis leporem, ciconia lacertam.

[30] Cum Ciceronis librum de re publica prendit hinc philologus aliquis, hinc grammaticus, hinc philosophiae deditus, alius alio curam suam mittit. Philosophus admiratur contra iustitiam dici tam multa potuisse. Cum ad hanc eandem lectionem philologus accessit, hoc subnotat: duos Romanos reges esse quorum alter patrem non habet, alter matrem. Nam de Servi matre dubitatur; Anci pater nullus, Numae nepos dicitur. [31] Praeterea notat eum quem nos dictatorem dicimus et in historiis ita nominari legimus apud antiquos magistrum populi’ vocatum. Hodieque id extat in auguralibus libris, et testimonium est quod qui ab illo nominatur ‘magister equitum’ est. Aequae notat Romulum perisse solis defectione; provocationem ad populum etiam a regibus fuisse; id ita in pontificalibus libris +et aliqui qui+ putant et Fenestella. [32] Eosdem libros cum grammaticus explicuit, primum [verba expresse] ‘reapse’ dici a Cicerone, id est ‘re ipsa’, in commentarium refert, nec minus ‘seipse’, id est ‘se ipse’.

Deinde transit ad ea quae consuetudo saeculi mutavit, tamquam ait Cicero ‘quoniam sumus ab ipsa calce eius interpellatione revocati. ‘Hanc quam nunc in circo ‘cretam’ vocamus ‘calcem’ antiqui dicebant. [33]Deinde Ennianos colligit versus et in primis illos de Africano scriptos:

quibit pro factis reddere opis pretium.

Ex eo se ait intellegere <opem> apud antiquos non tantum auxilium significasses operam. Ait [opera] enim Ennius neminem potuisse Scipioni neque civemneque hostem reddere operae pretium. [34] Felicem deinde se putat quodinvenerit unde visum sit Vergilio dicere

quem super ingens
porta tonat caeli.

Ennium hoc ait Homero [se] subripuisse, Ennio Vergilium; esse enim apudCiceronem in his ipsis de re publica hoc epigramma Enni:

si fas endo plagas caelestum ascendere cuiquam est, mi soli caeli maxima porta patet.

vela: quid me potest adiuvare rectornavigii attonitus et vomitans? Quanto maiore putas vitam tempestate iactariquam ullam ratem? Non est loquendum sed gubernandum. [38] Omnia quae dicunt, quae turba audiente iactant, aliena sunt: dixit illa Platon, dixit Zenon, dixit Chrysippus et Posidonius et ingens agmen nominum tot ac talium. Quomodoprobare possint sua esse monstrabo: faciant quae dixerint.

[39] Quoniam quae volueram ad te perferre iam dixi, nunc desideriotuo satis faciam et in alteram epistulam integrum quod exegeras transferam, ne ad rem spinosam et auribus erectis curiosisque audiendam lassus accedas. Vale.

CIX. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] An sapiens sapienti prosit scire desideras. Dicimus plenum omnibono esse sapientem et summa adeptum: quomodo prodesse aliqui possit summumhabenti bonum quaeritur. Prosunt inter se boni. Exercent enim virtuteset sapientiam in suo statu continent; desiderat uterque aliquem cum quoconferat, cum quo quaerat. [2] Peritos luctandi usus exercet; musicum quiparia didicit movet. Opus est et sapienti agitatione virtutum; ita quemadmodumipse se movet, sic movetur ab alio sapiente. [3] Quid sapiens sapienti proderit? Impetum illi dabit, occasiones actionum honestarum commonstrabit. Praeter haec aliquas cogitationes suas exprimet; docebit quae invenerit. Semper enim etiam sapienti restabit quod inveniat et quo animus eius excurrat. [4] Malus malo nocet facitque peiorem, iram eius incitando, tristitiae adsentiendo, voluptates laudando; et tunc maxime laborant mali ubi plurimumvitia miscuere et in unum conlata nequitia est. Ergo ex contrario bonusbono proderit. ‘Quomodo?’ ‘ inquis. [5] Gaudium illi adferet, fiduciam confirmabit;ex conspectu mutuae tranquillitatis crescet utriusque laetitia. Praeterea quarumdam illi rerum scientiam tradet; non enim omnia sapiens scit; etiamsi sciret, breviores vias rerum aliqui excogitare posset et has indicareper quas facilius totum opus circumfertur. [6] Proderit sapienti sapiens, non scilicet tantum suis viribus sed ipsius quem adiuvabit. Potest quidemille etiam relictus sibi explicare partes suas: utetur propria velocitate, sed nihilominus adiuvat etiam currentem hortator. ‘Non prodest sapienti sapiens sed sibi ipse. Hoc <ut> scias, detrahe illi vim propriam et ille nihil aget.’ [7] Isto modo dicas licet non essein melle dulcedinem; nam ipse ille qui esse debeat <nisi> ita aptatuslingua palatoque est ad eiusmodi gustum ut illum talis sapor capiat, offendetur;sunt enim quidam quibus morbi vitio mel amarum videatur. Oportet utrumque valere ut et ille prodesse possit et hic profuturo idonea materia sit.

satis est ulla amplius arma desiderat? Ergone sapiens; satis enim vitae instructus, satis armatus est. ‘[9] Ad haec respondeo: et qui in summum <perductus est calorem> opus est calore adiecto ut summum teneat. ‘Sed ipse se’ inquit ‘calor continet. ‘Primum multum interest inter ista quae comparas. Calor enim unus est, prodesse varium est. Deinde calor non adiuvatur adiectione caloris ut caleat: sapiens non potest in habitu mentis suae stare nisi amicos aliquos similes sui admisit cum quibus virtutes suas communicet. [10] Adice nunc quod omnibus inter se virtutibus amicitia est; itaque prodest qui virtutes alicuius pariter sui amat amandasque invicem praestat. Similia delectant, utique ubi honesta sunt et probare ac probari sciunt. [11] Etiam nunc sapientis animum perite movere nemo alius potest quam sapiens, sicut hominem movere rationaliter non potest nisi homo. Quomodo ergo ad rationem movendam ratione opus est, sic ut moveatur ratio perfecta opus est ratione perfecta. [12] Prodesse dicuntur et qui media nobis largiuntur, pecuniam, gratiam, incolumitatem, alia in usus vitae cara aut necessaria; in his dicetur etiam stultus prodesse sapienti. Prodesse autem est animum secundum naturam movere virtute sua. Ut eius qui movebitur, hoc non sine ipsius quoque qui proderit bono fiet; necesse est enim alienam virtutem exercendo exerceat et suam. [13] Sed ut removeas ista quae aut summa bona sunt aut summorum efficientia, nihilominus prodesse inter se sapientes possunt. Invenire enim sapientem sapienti per se res expetenda est, quia natura bonum omne carum est bono et sic quisque conciliatur bono quemadmodum sibi.

[14] Necesse est ex hac quaestione argumenti causa in alteram transeam. Quaeritur enim an deliberaturus sit sapiens, an in consilium aliquem advocaturus. Quod facere illi necessarium est cum ad haec civilia et domestica veniatur, ut ita dicam, mortalia; in his sic illi opus est alieno consilio quomodo medico, quomodo gubernatori, quomodo advocato et litis ordinatori. Proderit ergo sapiens aliquando sapienti; suadebit enim. Sed in illis quoque magnis ac divinis, ut diximus, communiter honesta tractando et animos cogitationesque miscendo utilis erit. [15] Praeterea secundum naturam est et amicos complecti et amicorum auctu ut suo proprioque laetari; nam nisi hoc fecerimus, ne virtus quidem nobis permanebit, quae exercendo sensu valet. Virtus autem suadet praesentia bene conlocare, in futurum consulere, deliberare et intendere animum: facilius intendet explicabitque qui aliquem sibi adsumpserit. Quaerit itaque aut perfectum virum aut proficientem vicinumque perfecto. Proderit autem ille perfectus, si consilium communi prudentia iuverit. [16] Aiunt homines plus in alieno negotio videre +initio+. Hoc illis evenit quos amor sui excaecat quibusque dispectum utilitatis timor in periculis excutit: incipiet sapere securior et extra metum positus. Sed nihilominus quaedam sunt quae etiam sapientes in alio quam in se diligentius vident. Praeterea illud dulcissimum et honestissimum 'idem velle atque idem nolle' sapiens sapienti praestabit; egregium opus pari iugo ducet.

[17] Persolvi quod exegeras, quamquam in ordine rerum erat quas moralis philosophiae voluminibus conplectimur. Cogita quod soleo frequenter tibi dicere, in istis nos nihil aliud quam acumen exercere. Totiens enim illo revertor: quid ista me res iuvat? fortio rem fac me, iustio rem, temperantio rem. Nondum exerceri vacat: adhuc medico mihi opus est. [18] Quid me poscis scientiam inutilem? Magna promisisti: exhibe fidem. Dicebas intrepidum fore etiam si circa me gladii micarent, etiam si mucro tangeret iugulum; dicebas securum fore etiam si circa me flagrarent incendia, etiam si subitus turbo toto navem meam mari raperet: hanc mihi praesta curam, ut voluptatem, ut gloriam contemnam. Postea docebis in plicta solvere, ambigua distinguere, obscura perspicere: nunc doce quod necesse est. Vale.

LIBER NONVS DECIMVS

CX. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Ex Nomentano meo te saluto et iubeo habere mentem bonam, hoc est propitios deos omnis, quos habet placatos et faventes quisquis sibi se propitiavit. Sepone in praesentia quae quibusdam placent, unicuique nostrum paedagogum dari deum, non quidem ordinarium, sed hunc inferioris notae ex eorum numero quos Ovidius ait ‘de plebe deos’. Ita tamen hoc seponas volo ut memineris maiores nostros qui crediderunt Stoicos fuisse; singulis enim et Genium et Iunonem dederunt. [2] Postea videbimus an tantum dis vacet ut privatorum negotia procurent: interim illud scito, sive adsignati sumus sive neglecti et fortunae dati, nulli te posse inprecari quicquam gravius quam si inprecatus fueris ut se habeat iratum. Sed non est quare cuiquam quem poena putaveris dignum optes ut infestos deos habeat: habet, inquam, etiam si videtur eorum favore produci. [3] Adhibe diligentiam tuam et intueri quid sint res nostrae, non quid vocentur, et scies plura mala contingere nobis quam accidere. Quotiens enim felicitatis et causa et initium fuit quod calamitas vocabatur! quotiens magna gratulatione excepta res gradum sibi struxit in praeceps et aliquem iam eminentem adlevavit etiamnunc, tamquam adhuc ibi staret unde tuto cadunt! [4] Sed ipsum illud cadere non habet in se mali quicquam si exitum spectes, ultra quem natura neminem deiecit. Prope est rerum omnium terminus, prope est, inquam, et illud unde felix eicitur et illud unde infelix emittitur: nos utraque extendimus et longa spe ac metu facimus. Sed, si sapis, omnia humana condicione metire; simul et quod gaudes et quod times contrahe. Est autem tanti nihil diu gaudere ne quid diu timeas.

[5] Sed quare istuc malum adstringo? Non est quod quicquam timendum putes: vana sunt ista quae nos movent, quae attonitos habent. Nemo nostrum quid veri esset excussit, sed metum alter alteri tradidit; nemo ausus est ad id quo perturbabatur accedere et naturam ac bonum timoris sui nosse. Itaque res falsa et inanis habet adhuc fidem quia non coarguitur. [6] Tanti putemus oculos intendere: iam apparebit quam brevia, quam incerta, quam tuta timeantur. Talis est animorum nostrorum confusio qualis Lucretio visa est:

in tenebris metuunt, ita nos in luce timemus.

Quid ergo? non omni puero stultiores sumus qui in luce timemus?
[7] Sed falsum est, Lucreti, non timemus in luce: omnia nobis fecimus tenebras. Nihil videmus, nec quid noceat nec quid expediat; tota vita incursitamus nec ob hoc resistimus aut circumspectius pedem ponimus. Vides autem quam sit furiosa res in tenebris impetus. At mehercules id agimus ut longius revocandi simus, et cum ignoremus quo feramur, velociter tamen illo quo intendimus perseveramus. [8] Sed lucescere, si velimus, potest. Uno autem modo potest, si quis hanc humanorum divinorumque notitiam [scientia] acceperit, si illa se non perfuderit sed infecerit, si eadem, quamvis sciat, retractaverit et ad se saepe rettulerit, si quaesierit quae sint bona, quae mala, quibus hoc falso sit nomen adscriptum, si quaesierit de honestis et turpibus, de providentia. [9] Nec intra haec humani ingenii sagacitas sistitur: prospicere et ultra mundum libet, quo feratur, unde surrexerit, in quem exitum tanta rerum velocitas properet. Ab hac divina contemplatione abductum animum in sordida et humilia pertraximus, ut avaritiae serviret, ut relicto mundo terminisque eius et dominis cuncta versantibus terram rimaretur et quaereret quid ex illa mali effoderet, non contentus oblatis. [10] Quidquid nobis bono futurum erat deus et parens noster in proximo posuit; non expectavit inquisitionem nostram et ultro dedit: nocitura altissime pressit. Nihil nisi de nobis queri possumus: ea quibus periremus nolente rerum natura et abscondente protulimus. Addiximus animum voluptati, cui indulgere initium omnium malorum est, tradidimus ambitioni et famae, ceteris aequae vanis et inanibus.

[11] Quid ergo nunc te hortor ut facias? nihil novi — nec enim novis malis remedia quaeruntur - sed hoc primum, ut tecum ipse dispicias quid sit necessarium, quid supervacuum. Necessaria tibi ubique occurrent: supervacua et semper et toto animo quaerenda sunt. [12] Non est autem quod te nimis laudes si contempseris aureos lectos et gemmeam supellectilem; quae est enim virtus supervacua contemnere? Tunc te admirare cum contempseris necessaria. Non magnam rem facis quod vivere sine regio apparatu potes, quod non desideras milliarios apros nec linguas phoenicopterorum et alia portenta luxuriae iam tota animalia fastidientis et certa membra ex singulis eligentis: tunc te admirabor si contempseris etiam sordidum panem, si tibi persuaseris herbam, ubi necesse est, non pecori tantum sed homini nasci, si scieris cacumina arborum explementum esse ventris in quem sic pretiosa congerimus tamquam recepta servantem. Sine fastidio implendus est; quid enim ad rem pertinet quid accipiat, perditurus quidquid acceperit? ^[13] Delectant te disposita quae terra marique capiuntur, alia eo gratiora si recentia perferuntur ad mensam, alia si diu pasta et coacta pinguescere fluunt ac vix saginam continent suam; delectat te nitor horum arte quaesitus. At mehercules ista sollicite scrutata varieque condita, cum subierint ventrem, una atque eadem foeditas occupabit. Vis ciborum voluptatem contemnere? exitum specta.

^[14] Attalum memini cum magna admiratione omnium haec dicere: ‘diu’ inquit ‘mihi inposuere divitiae. Stupebam ubi aliquid ex illis alio atque alio loco fulserat; existimabam similia esse quae laterent his quae ostenderentur. Sed in quodam apparatu vidi totas opes urbis, caelata et auro et argento et iis quae pretium auri argentique vicerunt, exquisitos colores et vestes ultra non tantum nostrum sed ultra finem hostium advectas; hinc puerorum perspicuos cultu atque forma greges, hinc feminarum, et alia quae res suas recognoscens summi imperii fortuna protulerat. ^[15] “Quid hoc est” inquam “aliud inritare cupiditates hominum per se incitatas? quid sibi vult ista pecuniae pompa? ad discendam avaritiam convenimus?” At mehercules minus cupiditatis istinc effero quam adtuleram. Contempsisti divitias, non quia supervacuae sed quia pusillae sunt. ^[16] Vidistine quam intra paucas horas ille ordo quamvis lentus dispositusque transierit? Hoc totam vitam nostram occupabit quod totum diem occupare non potuit? Accessit illud quoque: tam supervacuae mihi visae sunt habentibus quam fuerunt spectantibus. ^[17] Hoc itaque ipse mihi dico quotiens tale aliquid praestrinxerit oculos meos, quotiens occurrit domus splendida, cohors culta servorum, lectica formonsis inposita calonibus: “quid miraris? quid stupeas? pompa est. Ostendunt istae res, non possidentur, et dum placent transeunt”. ^[18] Ad veras potius te converte divitias; disce parvo esse contentus et illam vocem magnus atque animosus exclama: habemus aquam, habemus polentam; Iovi ipsi controversiam de felicitate faciamus. Faciamus, oro te, etiam si ista defuerint; turpe est beatam vitam in auro et argento reponere, aequè turpe in aqua et polenta. “Quid ergo faciam si ista non fuerint?” [19] Quaeris quod sit remedium inopiae? Famem fames finit: alioquin quid interest magna sint an exigua quae servire te cogant? quid refert quantulum sit quod tibi possit negare fortuna? [20] Haec ipsa aqua et polenta in alienum arbitrium cadit; liber est autem non in quem parum licet fortunae, sed in quem nihil. Ita est: nihil desideres oportet si vis Iovem provocare nihil desiderantem.’

Haec nobis Attalus dixit, natura omnibus dixit; quae si voles frequenter cogitare, id ages ut sis felix, non ut videaris, et ut tibi videaris, non aliis. Vale.

CXI. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Quid vocentur Latine sophismata quaesisti a me. Multi temptaverunt illis nomen inponere, nullum haesit; videlicet, quia res ipsa non recipiebatur a nobis nec in usu erat, nomini quoque repugnatum est. Aptissimum tamen videtur mihi quo Cicero usus est: ‘cavillationes’ vocat. [2] Quibus quisquis se tradidit quaestiunculas quidem vafras nectit, ceterum ad vitam nihil proficit: neque fortior fit neque temperantior neque elatior. At ille qui philosophiam in remedium suum exercuit ingens fit animo, plenus fiducia, inexsuperabilis et maior adeunti. [3] Quod in magnis evenit montibus, quorum proceritas minus apparet longe intuentibus: cum accesseris, tunc manifestum fit quam in arduo summa sint. Talis est, mi Lucili, verus et rebus, non artificiis philosophus. In edito stat, admirabilis, celsus, magnitudinis verae; non exsurgit in plantas nec summis ambulat digitis eorum more qui mendacio staturam adiuvant longioresque quam sunt videri volunt; contentus est magnitudine sua. [4] Quidni contentus sit eo usque crevisse quo manus fortuna non porrigit? Ergo et supra humana est et par sibi in omni statu rerum, sive secundo cursu vita procedit, sive fluctuatur et <it> per adversa ac difficilia: hanc constantiam cavillationes istae de quibus paulo ante loquebar praestare non possunt. Ludit istis animus, non proficit, et philosophiam a fastigio suo deducit in planum. [5] Nec te prohibuerim aliquando ista agere, sed tunc cum voles nihil agere. Hoc tamen habent in se pessimum: dulcedinem quandam sui faciunt et animum specie subtilitatis inductum tenent ac morantur, cum tanta rerum moles vocet, cum vix tota vita sufficiat ut hoc unum discas, vitam contemnere. ‘Quid regere?’ inquis. Secundum opus est; nam nemo illam bene rexit nisi qui contempserat. Vale.

CXII. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Cupio mehercules amicum tuum formari ut desideras et institui, sed valde durus capitur; immo, quod est molestius, valde mollis capitur et consuetudine mala ac diutina fractus. Volo tibi ex nostro artificio exemplum referre. [2] Non quaelibet insitionem vitis patitur: si vetus et exesa est, si infirma gracilisque, aut non recipiet surculum aut non alet nec adplicabit sibi nec in qualitatem eius naturamque transibit. Itaque solemus supra terram praecidere ut, si non respondit, temptari possit secunda fortuna et iterum repetita infra terram inseratur. [3] Hic de quo scribis et mandas non habet vires: indulsit vitiis. Simul et emarcuit et induruit; non potest recipere rationem, non potest nutrire. 'At cupit ipse.' Noli credere. Non dico illum mentiri tibi: putat se cupere. Stomachum illi fecit luxuria: cito cum illa redibit in gratiam. [4] 'Sed dicit se offendi vita sua.' Non negaverim; quis enim non offenditur? Homines vitia sua et amant simul et oderunt. Tunc itaque de illo feremus sententiam cum fidem nobis fecerit invisam iam sibi esse luxuriam: nunc illis male convenit. Vale.

CXIII. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Desideras tibi scribi a me quid sentiam de hac quaestione iactata apud nostros, an iustitia, fortitudo, prudentia ceteraeque virtutes animalia sint. Hac subtilitate effecimus, Lucili carissime, ut exercere ingenium inter inrita videremur et disputationibus nihil profuturis otium terere. Faciam quod desideras et quid nostris videatur exponam; sed me in alia esse sententia profiteor: puto quaedam esse quae deceant phaecasiatum palliatumque. Quae sint ergo quae antiquos moverint vel quae sint quae antiqui moverint dicam.

[2] Animum constat animal esse, cum ipse efficiat ut simus animalia, cum ab illo animalia nomen hoc traxerint; virtus autem nihil aliud est quam animus quodam modo se habens; ergo animal est. Deinde virtus agit aliquid; agi autem nihil sine impetu potest; si impetum habet, qui nulli est nisi animali, animal est. [3] ‘Si animal est’ inquit ‘virtus, habet ipsa virtutem.’ Quidni habeat se ipsam? quomodo sapiens omnia per virtutem gerit, sic virtus per se. ‘Ergo’ inquit ‘et omnes artes animalia sunt et omnia quae cogitamus quaeque mente complectimur. Sequitur ut multa millia animalium habitent in his angustiis pectoris, et singuli multa simus animalia aut multa habeamus animalia.’ Quaeris quid adversus istud respondeatur? Unaquaeque ex istis res animal erit: multa animalia non erunt. Quare? dicam, si mihi accommodaveris subtilitatem et intentionem tuam. [4] Singula animalia singulas habere debent substantias; ista omnia unum animum habent; itaque singula esse possunt, multa esse non possunt. Ego et animal sum et homo, non tamen duos esse nos dices. Quare? quia separati debent esse. Ita dico: alter ab altero debet esse diductus ut duo sint. Quidquid in uno multiplex est sub unam naturam cadit; itaque unum est. [5] Et animus meus animal est et ego animal sum, duo tamen non sumus. Quare? quia animus mei pars est. Tunc aliquid per se numerabitur cum per se stabit; ubi vero alterius membrum erit, non poterit videri aliud. Quare? dicam: quia quod aliud est suum oportet esse et proprium et totum et intra se absolutum.

vitia et adfectus, tamquam ira, timor, luctus, suspicio. Ultra res ista procedet: omnes sententiae, omnes cogitationes animalia erunt. Quod nullo modo recipiendum est; non enim quidquid ab homine fit homo est. [7] ‘Iustitia quid est?’ inquit. Animus quodam modo se habens. ‘Itaque si animus animal est, et iustitia.’ Minime; haec enim habitus animi est et quaedam vis. Idem animus in varias figuras convertitur et non totiens animal aliud est quotiens aliud facit; nec illud quod fit ab animo animal est. [8] <Si> iustitia animal est, <si> fortitudo, si ceterae virtutes, utrum desinunt esse animalia subinde aut rursus incipiunt, an semper sunt? desinere virtutes non possunt. Ergo multa animalia, immo innumerabilia, in hoc animo versantur. [9] ‘Non sunt’ inquit ‘multa, quia ex uno religata sunt et partes unius ac membra sunt.’ Talem ergo faciem animi nobis proponimus qualis est hydrae multa habentis capita, quorum unumquodque per se pugnat, per se nocet. Atqui nullum ex illis capitibus animal est, sed animalis caput: ceterum ipsa unum animal est. Nemo in Chimaera leonem animal esse dixit aut draconem: hae partes erant eius; partes autem non sunt animalia. [10] Quid est quo colligas iustitiam animal esse? ‘Agit’ inquit ‘aliquid et prodest; quod autem agit et prodest impetum habet; <quod autem impetum habet> animal est.’ Verum est si suum impetum habet; <suum autem non habet> sed animi. [11] Omne animal donec moriatur id est quod coepit: homo donec moriatur homo est, equus equus, canis canis; transire in aliud non potest. Iustitia, id est animus quodam modo se habens, animal est. Credamus: deinde animal est fortitudo, id est animus quodam modo se habens. Quis animus? ille qui modo iustitia erat? Tenetur in priore animali, in aliud animal transire ei non licet; in eo illi in quo primum esse coepit perseverandum est. [12] Praeterea unus animus duorum esse animalium non potest, multo minus plurium. Si iustitia, fortitudo, temperantia ceteraeque virtutes animalia sunt, quomodo unum animum habebunt? singulos habeant oportet, aut non sunt animalia. [13] Non potest unum corpus plurium animalium esse. Hoc et ipsi fatentur. Iustitiae quod est corpus? ‘Animus’. Quid? fortitudinis quod est corpus? ‘Idem animus’. Atqui unum corpus esse duorum animalium non potest. [14] ‘Sed idem animus’ inquit ‘iustitiae habitum induit et fortitudinis et temperantiae.’ Hoc fieri posset si quo tempore iustitia esset fortitudo non esset, quo tempore fortitudo esset temperantia non esset; nunc vero omnes virtutes simul sunt. Ita quomodo singulae erunt animalia, cum unus animus sit, qui plus quam unum animal non potest facere? [15] Denique nullum animal pars est alterius animalis; iustitia autem pars est animi; non est ergo animal.

Videor mihi in re confessa perdere operam; magis enim indignandum de isto quam disputandum est. Nullum animal alteri par est. Circumspice omnium corpora: nulli non et color proprius est et figura sua et magnitudo. [16] Inter cetera propter quae mirabile divini artificis ingenium est hoc quoque existimo esse, quod in tanta copia rerum numquam in idem incidit; etiam quae similia videntur, cum contuleris, diversa sunt. Tot fecit genera foliorum: nullum non sua proprietate signatum; tot animalia: nullius magnitudo cum altero convenit, utique aliquid interest. Exegit a se ut quae alia erant et dissimilia essent et inparia. Virtutes omnes, ut dicitis, pares sunt; ergo non sunt animalia. [17] Nullum non animal per se agit; virtus autem per se nihil agit, sed cum homine. Omnia animalia aut rationalia sunt, ut homines, ut dii, <aut irrationalia, ut ferae, ut pecora>; virtutes utique rationales sunt; atqui nec homines sunt nec dii; ergo non sunt animalia. [18] Omne rationale animal nihil agit nisi primum specie alicuius rei irritatum est, deinde impetum cepit, deinde adsensio confirmavit hunc impetum. Quid sit adsensio dicam. Oportet me ambulare: tunc demum ambulo cum hoc mihi dixi et adprobavi hanc opinionem meam; oportet me sedere: tunc demum sedeo. Haec adsensio in virtute non est. [19] Puta enim prudentiam esse: quomodo adsentietur 'oportet me ambulare'? Hoc natura non recipit. Prudentia enim ei cuius est prospicit, non sibi; nam nec ambulare potest nec sedere. Ergo adsensionem non habet; quod adsensionem non habet rationale animal non est. Virtus si animal est, rationale est; rationale autem non est; ergo nec animal. [20] Si virtus animal est, virtus autem bonum omnest, omne bonum animal est. Hoc nostri fatentur. Patrem servare bonum est, et sententiam prudenter in senatu dicere bonum est, et iuste decernere bonum est; ergo et patrem servare animal est et prudenter sententiam dicere animal est. Eo usque res ~exegit~ ut risum tenere non possis: prudenter tacere bonum est, <* * * cenare bonum est>; ita et tacere et cenare animal est.

[21] Ego mehercules titillare non desinam et ludos mihi ex istis subtilibus ineptiis facere. Iustitia et fortitudo, si animalia sunt, certe terrestria sunt; omne animal terrestre alget, esurit, sitit; ergo iustitia alget, fortitudo esurit, clementia sitit. [22] Quid porro? non interrogabo illos quam figuram habeant ista animalia? hominis an equi an ferae? Si rotundam illis qualem deo dederint, quaeram an et avaritia et luxuria et dementia aequae rotundae sint; sunt enim et ipsae animalia. Si has quoque conrotundaverint, etiamnunc interrogabo an prudens ambulatio animal sit. Necesse est confiteantur, deinde dicant ambulationem animal esse et quidem rotundum.

[23] Ne putes autem primum <me> ex nostris non ex praescripto loqui sed meae sententiae esse, inter Cleanthen et discipulum eius Chrysippum non convenit quid sit ambulatio. Cleanthes ait spiritum esse a principali usque in pedes permissum, Chrysippus ipsum principale. Quid est ergo cur non ipsius Chrysippi exemplo sibi quisque se vindicet et ista tot animalia quot mundus ipse non potest capere derideat?

[24] 'Non sunt' inquit 'virtutes multa animalia, et tamen animalia sunt. Nam quemadmodum aliquis et poeta est et orator, et tamen unus, sic virtutes istae animalia sunt sed multa non sunt. Idem est animus et animus et iustus et prudens et fortis, ad singulas virtutes quodam modo se habens.' [25] Sublata * * * convenit nobis. Nam et ego interim fateor animum animal esse, postea visurus quam de ista re sententiam feram: actiones eius animalia esse nego. Alioqui et omnia verba erunt animalia et omnes versus. Nam si prudens sermo bonum est, bonum autem omne animal est, <sermo animal est>. Prudens versus bonum est, bonum autem omne animal est; versus ergo animal est. Ita

animal est, quod non possunt rotundum dicere cum sex pedes habeat. [26] 'Textorium' inquis 'totum mehercules istud quod cum maxime agitur.' Dissilio risu cum mihi propono soloecismum animal esse et barbarismum et syllogismum et aptas illis facies tamquam pictor adsigno. Haec disputamus attractis superciliis, fronte rugosa? Non possum hoc loco dicere illud Caelianum: 'o tristes ineptias!' Ridiculae sunt.

Quin itaque potius aliquid utile nobis ac salutare tractamus et quaerimus quomodo ad virtutes pervenire possimus, quae nos ad illas via adducat? [27] Doce me non an fortitudo animal sit, sed nullum animal felix esse sine fortitudine, nisi contra fortuita convaluit et omnis casus antequam exciperet meditando praedomuit. Quid est fortitudo? Munimentum humanae imbecillitatis inexpugnabile, quod qui circumdedit sibi securus in hac vitae obsidione perdurat; utitur enim suis viribus, suis telis. [28] Hoc loco tibi Posidonii nostri referre sententiam volo: ‘non est quod umquam fortunae armis putes esse te tutum: tuis pugna. Contra ipsam fortuna non armat; itaque contra hostes instructi, contra ipsam inermes sunt.’ [29] Alexander Persas quidem et Hyrcanos et Indos et quidquid gentium usque in oceanum extendit oriens vastabat fugabatque, sed ipse modo occiso amico, modo amisso, iacebat in tenebris, alias scelus, alias desiderium suum maerens, victor tot regum atque populorum irae tristitiaeque succumbens; id enim egerat ut omnia potius haberet in potestate quam adfectus. [30] O quam magnis homines tenentur erroribus qui ius dominandi trans maria cupiunt permittere felicissimosque se iudicant si multas [pro] milite provincias obtinent et novas veteribus adiungunt, ignari quod sit illud ingens parque dis regnum: imperare sibi maximum imperium est. [31] Doceat me quam sacra res sit iustitia alienum bonum spectans, nihil ex se petens nisi usum sui. Nihil sit illi cum ambitione famaue: sibi placeat. Hoc ante omnia sibi quisque persuadeat: me iustum esse gratis oportet. Parum est. Adhuc illud persuadeat sibi: me in hanc pulcherrimam virtutem ultro etiam inpendere iuvet; tota cogitatio a privatis commodis quam longissime aversa sit. Non est quod spectes quod sit iustae rei praemium: maius in iusto est. [32] Illud adhuc tibi adfige quod paulo ante dicebam, nihil ad rem pertinere quam multi aequitatem tuam noverint. Qui virtutem suam publicari vult non virtuti laborat sed gloriae. Non vis esse iustus sine gloria? at mehercules saepe iustus esse debebis cum infamia, et tunc, si sapis, mala opinio bene parta delectet. Vale.

CXIV. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Quare quibusdam temporibus provenerit corrupti generis oratio quaeris et quomodo in quaedam vitia inclinatio ingeniorum facta sit, ut aliquando inflata explicatio vigeret, aliquando infracta et in morem cantici ducta; quare alias sensus audaces et fidem egressi placuerint, alias abruptae sententiae et suspiciosae, in quibus plus intellegendum esset quam audiendum; quare aliqua aetas fuerit quae translationis iure uteretur inverecunde. Hoc quod audire vulgo soles, quod apud Graecos in proverbium cessit: talis hominibus fuit oratio qualis vita.

‘Genium festo vix suo testem.’ ‘Tenuisve cerei fila et crepacem molam.’ ‘Focum mater aut uxor investiunt.’ [6] Non statim cum haec legeris hoc tibi occurret, hunc esse qui solutis tunicis in urbe semper incesserit (nam etiam cum absentis Caesaris partibus fungeretur, signum a discincto petebatur); hunc esse qui <in> tribunali, in rostris, in omni publico coetu sic apparuerit ut pallio velaretur caput exclusis utrimque auribus, non aliter quam in mimo fugitivi divitis solent; hunc esse cui tunc maxime civilibus bellis strepentibus et sollicita urbe et armata comitatus hic fuerit in publico, spadones duo, magis tamen viri quam ipse; hunc esse qui uxorem milliens duxit, cum unam habuerit? [7] Haec verba tam inprobe structa, tam neglegenter abiecta, tam contra consuetudinem omnium posita ostendunt mores quoque non minus novos et pravos et singulares fuisse. Maxima laus illi tribuitur mansuetudinis: pepercit gladio, sanguine abstinuit, nec ulla alia re quid posset quam licentia ostendit. Hanc ipsam laudem suam corripit istis orationis portentosissimae delicis; apparet enim mollem fuisse, non mitem. [8] Hoc istae ambages compositionis, hoc verba transversa, hoc sensus miri, magni quidem saepe sed enervati dum exeunt, cuivis manifestum facient: motum illi felicitate nimia caput. Quod vitium hominis esse interdum, interdum temporis solet. [9] Ubi luxuriam late felicitas fudit, cultus primum corporum esse diligentior incipit; deinde supellectili laboratur; deinde in ipsas domos inpenditur cura ut in laxitatem ruris excurrant, ut parietes advectis trans maria marmoribus fulgeant, ut tecta varientur auro, ut lacunaribus pavementorum respondeat nitor; deinde ad cenas lautitia transfertur et illic commendatio ex novitate et soliti ordinis commutatione captatur, ut ea quae includere solent cenam prima ponantur, ut quae advenientibus dabantur exeuntibus dentur. [10] Cum adsuevit animus fastidire quae ex more sunt et illi pro sordidis solita sunt, etiam in oratione quod novum est quaerit et modo antiqua verba atque exoleta revocat ac profert, modo fingit ~et ignota ac~ deflectit, modo, id quod nuper increbruit, pro cultu habetur audax translatio ac frequens. [11] Sunt qui sensus praecidant et hoc gratiam sperent, si sententia pependerit et audienti suspicionem sui fecerit; sunt qui illos detineant et porrigant; sunt qui non usque ad vitium accedant (necesse est enim hoc facere aliquid grande temptanti) sed qui ipsum vitium ament.

Itaque ubicumque videris orationem corruptam placere, ibi mores quoque a recto descivisse non erit dubium. Quomodo conviviorum luxuria, quomodo vestium aegrae civitatis indicia sunt, sic orationis licentia, si modo frequens est, ostendit animos quoque a quibus verba exeunt procidisse. [12] Mirari quidem non debes corrupta excipi non tantum a corona sordidiore sed ab hac quoque turba cultiore; togis enim inter se isti, non iudicis distant. Hoc magis mirari potes, quod non tantum vitiosa sed vitia laudentur. Nam illud semper factum est: nullum sine venia placuit ingenium. Da mihi quemcumque vis magni nominis virum: dicam quid illi aetas sua ignoverit, quid in illo sciens dissimulaverit. Multos tibi dabo quibus vitia non nocuerint, quosdam quibus profuerint. Dabo, inquam, maximae famae et inter admiranda propositos, quos si quis corrigit, delet; sic enim vitia virtutibus inmixta sunt ut illas secum tractura sint.

[13] Adice nunc quod oratio certam regulam non habet: consuetudo illam civitatis, quae numquam in eodem diu stetit, versat. Multi ex alieno saeculo petunt verba, duodecim tabulas loquuntur; Gracchus illis et Crassus et Curio nimis culti et recentes sunt, ad Appium usque et Coruncanium redeunt. Quidam contra, dum nihil nisi tritum et usitatum volunt, in sordes incidunt. [14] Utrumque diverso genere corruptum est, tam mehercules quam nolle nisi splendidis uti ac sonantibus et poeticis, necessaria atque in usu posita vitare. Tam hunc dicam peccare quam illum: alter se plus iusto colit, alter plus iusto negligit; ille et crura, hic ne alas quidem vellit.

[15] Ad compositionem transeamus. Quot genera tibi in hac dabo quibus peccetur? Quidam prae fractam et asperam probant; disturbant de industria si quid placidius effluxit; nolunt sine salebra esse iuncturam; virilem putant et fortem quae aurem inaequalitate percutiat. Quorundam non est compositio, modulatio est; adeo blanditur et molliter labitur. [16] Quid de illa loquar in qua verba differuntur et diu expectata vix ad clausulas redeunt? Quid illa in exitu lenta, qualis Ciceronis est, devexa et molliter detinens nec aliter quam solet ad morem suum pedemque respondens?

Non tantum * * * in genere sententiarum vitium est, si aut pusillae sunt et pueriles aut improbae et plus ausae quam pudore salvo licet, si floridae sunt et nimis dulces, si in vanum exeunt et sine effectum nihil amplius quam sonant.

[17] Haec vitia unus aliquis inducit, sub quo tunc eloquentia est, ceteri imitantur et alter alteri tradunt. Sic Sallustio vigente anputatae sententiae et verba ante expectatum cadentia et obscura brevitatis fuere pro cultu. L. Arruntius, vir rarae frugalitatis, qui historias belli Punici scripsit, fuit Sallustianus et in illud genus nitens. Est apud Sallustium ‘exercitum argento fecit’, id est, pecunia paravit. Hoc Arruntius amare coepit; posuit illud omnibus paginis. Dicit quodam loco ‘fugam nostris fecere’, alio loco ‘Hiero rex Syracusanorum bellum fecit’, et alio loco ‘quae audita Panhormitanos dedere Romanis fecere’. [18] Gustum tibi dare volui: totus his contextitur liber. Quae apud Sallustium rara fuerunt apud hunc crebra sunt et paene continua, nec sine causa; ille enim in haec incidebat, at hic illa quaerebat. Vides autem quid sequatur ubi alicui vitium pro exemplo est. [19] Dixit Sallustius ‘aquis hiemantibus’. Arruntius in primo libro belli Punici ait ‘repente hiemavit tempestas’, et alio loco cum dicere vellet frigidum annum fuisse ait ‘totus hiemavit annus’, et alio loco ‘inde sexaginta onerarias leves praeter militem et necesarios nautarum hiemante aquilone misit’. Non desinit omnibus locis hoc verbum infulcire. Quodam loco dicit Sallustius ‘dum inter arma civilia aequi bonique famas petit’. Arruntius non temperavit quominus primo statim libro poneret ingentes esse ‘famas’ de Regulo. [20] Haec ergo et eiusmodi vitia, quae alicui inpressit imitatio, non sunt indicia luxuriae nec animi corrupti; propria enim esse debent et ex ipso nata ex quibus tu aestimes alicuius adfectus: iracundi hominis iracunda oratio est, commoti nimis incitata, delicati tenera et fluxa. [21] Quod vides istos sequi qui aut vellunt barbam aut intervellunt, qui labra pressius tondent et adradunt servata et summissa cetera parte, qui lacernas coloris improbi sumunt, qui perlucens togam, qui nolunt facere quicquam quod hominum oculis transire liceat: iniritant illos et in se avertunt, volunt vel reprehendi dum conspici. Talis est oratio Maecenatis omniumque aliorum qui non casu errant sed scientes volentesque. [22] Hoc a magno animi malo oritur: quomodo in vino non ante lingua titubat quam mens cessit oneri et inclinata vel prodita est, ita ista orationis quid aliud quam ebrietas nulli molesta est nisi animus labat. Ideo ille curetur: ab illo sensus, ab illo verba exeunt, ab illo nobis est habitus, vultus, incessus. Illo sano ac valente oratio quoque robusta, fortis,

Rege incolumi mens omnibus una est:

amisso rupere fidem.

Rex noster est animus; hoc incolumi cetera manent in officio, parent, obtemperant: cum ille paulum vacillavit, simul dubitant. Cum vero cessit voluptati, artes quoque eius actusque marcent et omnis ex languido fluidoque conatus est.

[24] Quoniam hac similitudine usus sum, perseverabo. Animus noster modo rex est, modo tyrannus: rex cum honesta intuetur, salutem commissi sibi corporis curat et illi nihil imperat turpe, nihil sordidum; ubi vero inpotens, cupidus, delicatus est, transit in nomen detestabile ac dirum et fit tyrannus. Tunc illum excipiunt adfectus inpotentes et instant; qui initio quidem gaudet, ut solet populus largitione nocitura frustra plenus et quae non potest haurire contrectans; [25] cum vero magis ac magis vires morbus exedit et in medullas nervosque descendere deliciae, conspectu eorum quibus se nimia aviditate inutilem reddidit laetus, pro suis voluptatibus habet alienarum spectaculum, sumministrator libidinum testisque, quarum usum sibi ingerendo abstulit. Nec illi tam gratum est abundare iucundis quam acerbum quod non omnem illum apparatus per gulam ventremque transmittit, quod non cum omni exoletorum feminarumque turba convolutatur, maeretque quod magna pars suae felicitatis exclusa corporis angustiis cessat. [26] Numquid enim, mi Lucili, <non> in hoc furor est, quod nemo nostrum mortalem se cogitat, quod nemo inbecillum? immo quod nemo nostrum unum esse se cogitat? Aspice culinas nostras et concursantis inter tot ignes cocos: unum videri putas ventrem cui tanto tumultu comparatur cibus? Aspice veteraria nostra et plena multorum saeculorum vindemiis horrea: unum putas videri ventrem cui tot consulum regionumque vina cluduntur? Aspice quot locis terra vertatur, quot millia colonorum arent, fodiant: unum videri putas ventrem cui et in Sicilia et in Africa seritur? [27] Sani erimus et modica concupiscemus si unusquisque se numeret, metiatur simul corpus, sciat quam nec multum capere nec diu possit. Nihil tamen aequae tibi profuerit ad temperantiam omnium rerum quam frequens cogitatio brevis aevi et huius incerti: quidquid facies, respice ad mortem. Vale.

CXV. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Nimis anxium esse te circa verba et compositionem, mi Lucili, nolo: habeo maiora quae cures. Quaere quid scribas, non quemadmodum; et hoc ipsum non ut scribas sed ut sentias, ut illa quae senseris magis adplices tibi et velut signes. [2] Cuiuscumque orationem videris sollicitam et politam, scito animum quoque non minus esse pusillis occupatum. Magnus ille remissius loquitur et securius; quaecumque dicit plus habent fiduciae quam curae. Nosti comptulos iuvenes, barba et coma nitidos, de capsula totos: nihil ab illis speraveris forte, nihil solidum. Oratio cultus animi est: si circumtonsa est et fucata et manu facta, ostendit illum quoque non esse sincerum et habere aliquid fracti. Non est ornamentum virile concinnitas. [3] Si nobis animum boni viri liceret inspicere, o quam pulchram faciem, quam sanctam, quam ex magnifico placidoque fulgentem videremus, hinc iustitia, illinc fortitudine, hinc temperantia prudentiaque lucentibus! Praeter has frugalitas et continentia et tolerantia et liberalitas comitasque et (quis credat?) in homine rarum humanitas bonum splendorem illi suum adfunderent. Tunc providentia cum elegantia et ex istis magnanimitas eminentissima quantum, di boni, decoris illi, quantum ponderis gravitatisque adderent! quanta esset cum gratia auctoritas! Nemo illam amabilem qui non simul venerabilem diceret. [4] Si quis viderit hanc faciem altiore fulgentioreque quam cerni inter humana consuevit, nonne velut numinis occurso obstupefactus resistat et ut fas sit vidisse tacitus precetur, tum evocante ipsa vultus benignitate productus adoret ac supplicet, et diu contemplatus multum extantem superque mensuram solitorum inter nos aspici elatam, oculis mite quiddam sed nihilominus vivo igne flagrantibus, tunc deinde illam Vergili nostri vocem verens atque attonitus emittat?

O quam te memorem, virgo? namque haut tibi vultus mortalis nec vox hominem sonat . .
sis felix nostrumque leves quaecumque laborem.

Aderit levabitque, si colere eam voluerimus. Colitur autem non taurorum opimis corporibus contrucidatis nec auro argentoque suspenso nec in thesauros stipe infusa, sed pia et recta voluntate. [6] Nemo, inquam, non amore eius arderet si nobis illam videre contingeret; nunc enim multa obstrigillant et aciem nostram aut splendore nimio reperiunt aut obscuritate retinent. Sed si, quemadmodum visus oculorum quibusdam medicamentis acui solet et repurgari, sic nos aciem animi liberare impedimentis voluerimus, poterimus perspicere virtutem etiam obrutam corpore, etiam paupertate opposita, etiam humilitate et infamia obiacentibus; cernemus, inquam, pulchritudinem illam quamvis sordido obtectam. [7] Rursus aequae malitiam et aerumnosi animi veterum perspicimus, quamvis multus circa divitiarum radiantium splendor inpediat et intuentem hinc honorum, illinc magnarum potestatum falsa lux verberet. [8] Tunc intellegere nobis licebit quam contemnenda miremur, simillimi pueris, quibus omne ludicrum in pretio est; parentibus quippe nec minus fratribus praeferunt parvo aere empta monilia. Quid ergo inter nos et illos interest, ut Ariston ait, nisi quod nos circa tabulas et statuas insanimus, carius inepti? Illos reperti in litore calculi leves et aliquid habentes varietatis delectant, nos ingentium maculae columnarum, sive ex Aegyptiis harenis sive ex Africae solitudinibus advectae porticum aliquam vel capacem populi cenationem ferunt. [9] Miramur parietes tenui marmore inductos, cum sciamus quale sit quod absconditur. Oculis nostris inponimus, et cum auro tecta perfudimus, quid aliud quam mendacio gaudemus? Scimus enim sub illo auro foeda ligna latitare. Nec tantum parietibus aut lacunaribus ornamentum tenue praetenditur: omnium istorum quos incedere altos vides bratteata felicitas est. Inspice, et scies sub ista tenui membrana dignitatis quantum mali iaceat. [10] Haec ipsa res quae tot magistratus, tot iudices detinet, quae et magistratus et iudices facit, pecunia, ex quo in honore esse coepit, verus rerum honor cecidit, mercatoresque et venales in vicem facti quaerimus non quale sit quidque sed quanti; ad mercedem pii sumus, ad mercedem impii, et honesta quamdiu aliqua illis spes inest sequimur, in contrarium transituri si plus scelera promittent. [11] Admirationem nobis parentes auri argenteque fecerunt, et teneris infusa cupiditas altius sedit crevitque nobiscum. Deinde totus populus in alia discors in hoc convenit: hoc suspiciunt, hoc suis optant, hoc dis velut rerum humanarum maximum, cum grati videri volunt, consecrant. Denique eo mores redacti sunt ut paupertas maledicto probroque sit, contempta divitibus, invisa pauperibus. [12] Accedunt deinde carmina poetarum, quae adfectibus nostris facem subdant, quibus divitiae velut unicum vitae decus ornamentumque laudantur. Nihil illis melius nec dare videntur di immortales posse nec habere.

Regia Solis erat sublimibus alta columnis, clara micante auro.

Eiusdem currum aspice:

Aureus axis erat, temo aureus, aurea summae curvatura rotae, radiorum argenteus ordo.

Denique quod optimum videri volunt saeculum aureum appellant.
[14] Nec apud Graecos tragicos desunt qui lucro innocentiam, salutem, opinionem bonam mutant.

Sine me vocari pessimum, [simul] ut dives vocer.
An dives omnes quaerimus, nemo an bonus.
Non quare et unde, quid habeas tantum rogant.
Ubique tanti quisque, quantum habuit, fuit.
Quid habere nobis turpe sit quaeris? nihil.
Aut dives opto vivere aut pauper mori.
Bene moritur quisquis moritur dum lucrum facit.
Pecunia, ingens generis humani bonum, cui non voluptas matris aut blandae potest par esse prolis, non sacer meritis parens;
tam dulce si quid Veneris in vultu micat, merito illa amores caelitum atque hominum movet.

[15] Cum hi novissimi versus in tragoedia Euripidis pronuntiati essent, totus populus ad eiciendum et actorem et carmen consurrexit uno impetu, donec Euripides in medium ipse prosilivit petens ut expectarent viderentque quem admirator auri exitum faceret. Dabat in illa fabula poenas Bellerophontes quas in sua quisque dat. [16] Nulla enim avaritia sine poena est, quamvis satis sit ipsa poenarum. O quantum lacrimarum, quantum laborum exigit! quam misera desideratis, quam misera partis est! Adice cotidianas sollicitudines quae pro modo habendi quemque discruciant. Maiore tormento pecunia possidetur quam quaeritur. Quantum damnis ingemescunt, quae et magna incidunt et videntur maiora. Denique ut illis fortuna nihil detrahat, quidquid non acquiritur damnum est. [17] 'At felicem illum homines et divitem vocant et consequi optant quantum ille possidet.' Fateor. Quid ergo? tu ullos esse condicionis peioris existimas quam qui habent et miseriam et invidiam? Utinam qui divitias optaturi essent cum divitibus deliberarent; utinam honores petaturi cum ambitiosis et summum adeptis dignitatis statum! Profecto vota mutassent, cum interim illi nova suscipiunt cum priora damnaverint. Nemo enim est cui felicitas sua, etiam si cursu venit, satis faciat; queruntur et de consiliis et de processibus suis maluntque semper quae reliquerunt. [18] Itaque hoc tibi philosophia praestabit, quo equidem nihil maius existimo: numquam te paenitebit tui. Ad hanc tam solidam felicitatem, quam tempestas nulla concutiat, non perducent te apte verba contexta et oratio fluens leniter: eant ut volent, dum animo compositio sua constet, dum sit magnus et opinionum securus et ob ipsa quae aliis displicent sibi placens, qui profectum suum vita aestimet et tantum scire se iudicet quantum non cupit, quantum non timet. Vale.

CXVI. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Utrum satius sit modicos habere adfectus an nullos saepe quaesitum est. Nostri illos expellunt, Peripatetici temperant. Ego non video quomodo salubris esse aut utilis possit ulla mediocritas morbi. Noli timere: nihil eorum quae tibi non vis negari eripio. Facilem me indulgentemque praebebo rebus ad quas tendis et quas aut necessarias vitae aut utiles aut iucundas putas: detraham vitium. Nam cum tibi cupere interdixero, velle permittam, ut eadem illa intrepidus facias, ut certiore consilio, ut voluptates ipsas magis sentias: quidni ad te magis perventurae sint si illis imperabis quam si servies? [2] ‘Sed naturale est’ inquis ‘ut desiderio amici torquear: da ius lacrimis tam iuste cadentibus. Naturale est opinionibus hominum tangi et adversis contristari: quare mihi non permittas hunc tam honestum malae opinionis metum?’ Nullum est vitium sine patrocinio; nulli non initium verecundum est et exorabile, sed ab hoc latius funditur. Non obtinebis ut desinat si incipere permiseris. [3] Inbecillus est primo omnis adfectus; deinde ipse se concitat et vires dum procedit parat: excluditur facilius quam expellitur. Quis negat omnis adfectus a quodam quasi naturali fluere principio? Curam nobis nostri natura mandavit, sed huic ubi nimium indulseris, vitium est. Voluptatem natura necessariis rebus admiscuit, non ut illam peteremus, sed ut ea sine quibus non possumus vivere gratiora nobis illius faceret accessio: suo veniat iure, luxuria est. Ergo intransibilibus resistamus, quia facilius, ut dixi, non recipiuntur quam exeunt. [4] ‘Aliquatenus’ inquis ‘dolere, aliquatenus timere permitte.’ Sed illud ‘aliquatenus’ longe producit nec ubi vis accipit finem. Sapienti non sollicitate custodire se tutum est, et lacrimas suas et voluptates ubi volet sistet: nobis, quia non est regredi facile, optimum est omnino non progredi. [5] Eleganter mihi videtur Panaetius respondisse adulescentulo cuidam quaerenti an sapiens amaturus esset. ‘De sapiente’ inquit ‘videbimus: mihi et tibi, qui adhuc a sapiente longe absumus, non est committendum ut incidamus in rem commotam, inpotentem, alteri emancipatam, vilem sibi. Sive enim nos respicit, humanitate eius irritamur, sive contempsit, superbia accendimur. Aequae facilitas amoris quam difficultas nocet: facilitate capimur, cum difficultate certamus. Itaque conscii nobis inbecillitatis nostrae quiescamus; nec vino infirmum animum committamus nec formae nec adulationi nec ullis rebus blande trahentibus.’ [6] Quod Panaetius de amore quaerenti respondit, hoc ego de omnibus adfectibus dico: quantum possumus nos a lubrico recedamus; in sicco quoque parum fortiter stamus.

[7] Occurres hoc loco mihi illa publica contra Stoicos voce: ‘nimis magna promittitis, nimis dura praecipitis. Nos homunciones sumus; omnia nobis negare non possumus. Dolebimus, sed parum; concupiscemus, sed temperate; irascemur, sed placabimur.’ [8] Scis quare non possumus ista? quia nos posse non credimus. Immo mehercules aliud est in re: vitia nostra quia amamus defendimus et malumus excusare illa quam excutere. Satis natura homini dedit roboris si illo utamur, si vires nostras colligamus ac totas pro nobis, certe non contra nos concitemus. Nolle in causa est, non posse praetenditur. Vale.

CXVII. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM

[1] Multum mihi negotii concinnabis et, dum nescis, in magnam me litem ac molestiam inpinges, qui mihi tales quaestiunculas ponis, in quibus ego nec dissentire a nostris salva gratia nec consentire salva conscientia possum. Quaeris an verum sit quod Stoicis placet, sapientiam bonum esse, sapere bonum non esse. Primum exponam quid Stoicis videatur; deinde tunc dicere sententiam audebo.

[2] Placet nostris quod bonum est corpus esse, quia quod bonum est facit, quidquid facit corpus est. Quod bonum est prodest; faciat autem aliquid oportet ut prosit; si facit, corpus est. Sapientiam bonum esse dicunt; sequitur ut necesse sit illam corporalem quoque dicere. [3] At sapere non putant eiusdem condicionis esse. Incorporale est et accidens alteri, id est sapientiae; itaque nec facit quicquam nec prodest. ‘Quid ergo?’ inquit ‘non dicimus: bonum est sapere?’ Dicimus referentes ad id ex quo pendet, id est ad ipsam sapientiam.

[7] Non faciam quod victi solent, ut provocem ad populum: nostris incipiamus armis conflare. Quod accidit alicui, utrum extra id cui accidit est an in eo cui accidit? Si in eo est cui accidit, tam corpus est quam illud cui accidit. Nihil enim accidere sine tactu potest; quod tangit corpus est: nihil accidere sine actu potest; quod agit corpus est. Si extra est, postea quam acciderat recessit; quod recessit motum habet; quod motum habet corpus est. [8] Speras me dicturum non esse aliud cursum, aliud currere, nec aliud calorem, aliud calere, nec aliud lucem, aliud lucere: concedo ista alia esse, sed non sortis alterius. Si valetudo indifferens est, <et> bene valere indifferens est; si forma indifferens est, et formosum esse. Si iustitia bonum est, et iustum esse; si turpitudine malum est, et turpem esse malum est, tam mehercules quam si lippitudine malum est, lippire quoque malum est. Hoc ut scias, neutrum esse sine altero potest: qui sapit sapiens est; qui sapiens est sapit. Adeo non potest dubitari an quale illud sit, tale hoc sit, ut quibusdam utrumque unum videatur atque idem. [9] Sed illud libenter quaesierim, cum omnia aut mala sint aut bona aut indifferentia, sapere in quo numero sit? Bonum negant esse; malum utique non est; sequitur ut medium sit. Id autem medium atque indifferens vocamus quod tam malo contingere quam bono possit, tamquam pecunia, forma, nobilitas. Hoc, ut sapiat, contingere nisi bono non potest; ergo indifferens non est. Atqui ne malum quidem est, quod contingere malo non potest; ergo bonum est. Quod nisi bonus non habet bonum est; sapere non nisi bonus habet; ergo bonum est. [10] Accidens est' inquit 'sapientiae.' Hoc ergo quod vocas sapere, utrum facit sapientiam an patitur? Sive facit illud sive patitur, utroque modo corpus est; nam et quod fit et quod facit corpus est. Si corpus est, bonum est; unum enim illi deerat quominus bonum esset, quod incorporale erat.

[11] Peripateticis placet nihil interesse inter sapientiam et sapere, cum in utrolibet eorum et alterum sit. Numquid enim quemquam existimas sapere nisi qui sapientiam habet? numquid quemquam qui sapit non putas habere sapientiam? [12] Dialectici veteres ista distinguunt; ab illis divisio usque ad Stoicos venit. Qualis sit haec dicam. Aliud est ager, aliud agrum habere, quidni? cum habere agrum ad habentem, non ad agrum pertineat. Sic aliud est sapientia, aliud sapere. Puto, concedes duo esse haec, id quod habetur et eum qui habet: habetur sapientia, habet qui sapit. Sapientia est mens perfecta vel ad summum optimumque perducta; ars enim vitae est. Sapere quid est? non possum dicere ‘mens perfecta’, sed id quod contingit perfectam mentem habenti; ita alterum est mens bona, alterum quasi habere mentem bonam.

[13] ‘Sunt’ inquit ‘naturae corporum, tamquam hic homo est, hic equus; has deinde sequuntur motus animorum enuntiativi corporum. Hi habent proprium quiddam et a corporibus seductum, tamquam video Catonem ambulantiem: hoc sensus ostendit, animus credidit. Corpus est quod video, cui et oculos intendi et animum. Dico deinde: Cato ambulat. Non corpus’ inquit ‘est quod nunc loquor, sed enuntiativum quiddam de corpore, quod alii effatum vocant, alii enuntiatum, alii dictum. Sic cum dicimus “sapientiam”, corporale quiddam intellegimus; cum dicimus “sapit”, de corpore loquimur. Plurimum autem interest utrum illud dicas an de illo.’

[14] Putemus in praesentia ista duo esse (nondum enim quid mihi videatur pronuntio): quid prohibet quominus aliud quidem <sit> sed nihilominus bonum? Dicebam paulo ante aliud esse agrum, aliud habere agrum. Quidni? in alia enim natura est qui habet, in alia quod habetur: illa terra est, hic homo est. At in hoc de quo agitur eiusdem naturae sunt utraque, et qui habet sapientiam et ipsa. [15] Praeterea illic aliud est quod habetur, alius qui habet: hic in eodem est et quod habetur et qui habet. Ager iure possidetur, sapientia natura; ille abalienari potest et alteri tradi, haec non discedit a domino. Non est itaque quod compares inter se dissimilia.

Coeperam dicere posse ista duo esse et tamen utraque bona esse, tamquam sapientia et sapiens duo sunt et utrumque bonum esse concedis. Quomodo nihil obstat quominus et sapientia bonum sit et habens sapientiam, sic nihil obstat quominus et sapientia bonum sit et habere sapientiam, id est sapere. [16] Ego in hoc volo sapiens esse, ut sapiam. Quid ergo? non est id bonum sine quo nec illud bonum est? Vos certe dicitis sapientiam, si sine usu detur, accipiendam non esse. Quid est usus sapientiae? sapere: hoc est in illa pretiosissimum, quo detracto supervacua fit. Si tormenta mala sunt, torqueri malum est, adeo quidem ut illa non sint mala si quod sequitur detraxeris. Sapientia habitus perfectae mentis est, sapere usus perfectae mentis:

quomodo potest usus eius bonum non esse quae sine usu bonum non est? [17] Interrogo te an sapientia expetenda sit: fateris. Interrogo an usus sapientiae expetendus sit: fateris. Negas enim te illam recepturum si uti ea prohibearis. Quod expetendum est bonum est. Sapere sapientiae usus est, quomodo eloquentiae eloqui, quomodo oculorum videre. Ergo sapere sapientiae usus est, usus autem sapientiae expetendus est; sapere ergo expetendum est; si expetendum est, bonum est.

[18] Olim ipse me damno qui illos imitor dum accuso et verba apertae rei inpendo. Cui enim dubium potest esse quin, si aestus malum est, et aestuare malum sit? si algor malum est, malum sit algere? si vita bonum est, et vivere bonum sit? Omnia ista circa sapientiam, non in ipsa sunt; at nobis in ipsa commorandum est. [19] Etiam si quid evagari libet, amplos habet illa spatiososque secessus: de deorum natura quaeramus, de siderum alimento, de his tam variis stellarum discursibus, an ad illarum motus nostra moveantur, an corporibus omnium animisque illinc impetus veniat, an et haec quae fortuita dicuntur certa lege constricta sint nihilque in hoc mundo repentinum aut expers ordinis volutetur. Ista iam a formatione morum recesserunt, sed levant animum et ad ipsarum quas tractat rerum magnitudinem attollunt; haec vero de quibus paulo ante dicebam minuunt et deprimunt nec, ut putatis, exacuunt, sed extenuant. [20] Obsecro vos, tam necessariam curam maioribus melioribusque debitam in re nescio an falsa, certe inutili terimus? Quid mihi profuturum est scire an aliud sit sapientia, aliud sapere? Quid mihi profuturum est scire illud bonum esse, <hoc non esse>? Temere me geram, subibo huius voti aleam: tibi sapientia, mihi sapere contingat. Pares erimus. [21] Potius id age ut mihi viam monstres qua ad ista perveniam. Dic quid vitare debeam, quid adpetere, quibus animum labantem studiis firmem, quemadmodum quae me ex transverso feriunt aguntque procul a me repellam, quomodo par esse tot malis possim, quomodo istas calamitates removeam quae ad me inruperunt, quomodo illas ad quas ego inrupi. Doce quomodo feram aerumnas sine gemitu meo, felicitatem sine alieno, quomodo ultimum ac necessarium non expectem sed ipsemet, cum visum erit, profugiam. [22] Nihil mihi videtur turpius quam optare mortem. Nam si vis vivere, quid optas mori? sive non vis, quid deos rogas quod tibi nascenti dederunt? Nam ut quandoque moriaris etiam invito positum est, ut cum voles in tua manu est; alterum tibi necesse est, alterum licet. [23] Turpissimum his diebus principium diserti mehercules viri legi: 'ita[que]' inquit 'quam primum moriar'. Homo demens, optas rem tuam. 'Ita quam primum moriar.' Fortasse inter has voces senex factus es; alioqui quid in mora est? Nemo te tenet: evade qua visum est; elige quamlibet rerum naturae partem, quam tibi praebere exitum iubeas. Haec nempe sunt et elementa quibus hic mundus administratur; aqua, terra, spiritus, omnia ista tam causae vivendi sunt quam viae mortis. [24] 'Ita quam primum moriar': 'quam primum' istud quid esse vis? quem illi diem ponis? citius fieri quam optas potest. Inbecillae mentis ista sunt verba et hac detestatione misericordiam captantis: non vult mori qui optat. Deos vitam et salutem roga: si mori placuit, hic mortis est fructus, optare desinere.

[25] Haec, mi Lucili, tractemus, his formemus animum. Hoc est sapientia, hoc est sapere, non disputatiunculis inanibus subtilitatem vanissimam agitare. Tot quaestiones fortuna tibi posuit, nondum illas solvisti: iam cavillaris? Quam stultum est, cum signum pugnae acceperis, ventilare. Remove ista lusoria arma: decretoriis opus est. Dic qua ratione nulla animum tristitia, nulla formido perturbet, qua ratione hoc secretarum cupiditatum pondus effundam. Agatur aliquid. [26] 'Sapientia bonum est, sapere non est bonum': sic fit <ut> negemur sapere, ut hoc totum studium derideatur tamquam operatum supervacuis.

Quid si scires etiam illud quaeri, an bonum sit futura sapientia? Quid enim dubi est, oro te, an nec messem futuram iam sentiant horrea nec futuram adulescentiam pueritia viribus aut ullo robore intellegat? Aegro interim nil ventura sanitas prodest, non magis quam currentem luctantemque post multos secuturum menses otium reficit. [27] Quis nescit hoc ipso non esse bonum id quod futurum est, quia futurum est? Nam quod bonum est utique prodest; nisi praesentia prodesse non possunt. Si non prodest, bonum non est; si prodest, iam est. Futurus sum sapiens; hoc bonum erit cum fuero: interim non est. Prius aliquid esse debet, deinde quale esse. [28] Quomodo, oro te, quod adhuc nihil est iam bonum est? Quomodo autem tibi magis vis probari non esse aliquid quam si dixero ‘futurum est’? nondum enim venisse apparet quod veniet. Ver secuturum est: scio nunc hiemem esse. Aestas secutura est: scio aestatem non esse. Maximum argumentum habeo nondum praesentis futurum esse. [29] Sapiam, spero, sed interim non sapio; si illud bonum haberem, iam hoc carerem malo. Futurum est ut sapiam: ex hoc licet nondum sapere me intellegas. Non possum simul et in illo bono et in hoc malo esse; duo ista non coeunt nec apud eundem sunt una malum et bonum.

[30] Transcurramus sollertissimas nugae et ad illa quae nobis aliquam opem sunt latura properemus. Nemo qui obstetricem parturienti filiae sollicitus accersit edictum et ludorum ordinem perlegit; nemo qui ad incendium domus suae currit tabulam latrunculariam prospicit ut sciat quomodo alligatus exeat calculus. [31] At mehercule omnia tibi undique nuntiantur, et incendium domus et periculum liberorum et obsidio patriae et bonorum direptio; adice isto naufragia motusque terrarum et quidquid aliud timeri potest: inter ista districtus rebus nihil aliud quam animum oblectantibus vacas? Quid inter sapientiam et sapere intersit inquiris? nodos nectis ac solvis tanta mole inpendente capiti tuo? [32] Non tam benignum ac liberale tempus natura nobis dedit ut aliquid ex illo vacet perdere. Et vide quam multa etiam diligentissimis pereant: aliud valetudo sua cuique abstulit, aliud suorum; aliud necessaria negotia, aliud publica occupaverunt; vitam nobiscum dividit somnus. Ex hoc tempore tam angusto et rapido et nos auferente quid iuvat maiorem partem mittere in vanum? [33] Adice nunc quod adsuescit animus delectare se potius quam sanare et philosophiam oblectamentum facere cum remedium sit. Inter sapientiam et sapere quid intersit nescio: scio mea non interesse sciam ista an nesciam. Dic mihi: cum quid inter sapientiam et sapere intersit didicero, sapiam? Cur ergo potius inter vocabula me sapientiae detines quam inter opera? Fac me fortiorem, fac securiorem, fac fortunae parem, fac superiorem. Possum autem superior esse si derexero <eo> omne quod disco. Vale.

(1) Exigis a me frequentiores epistulas. Rationes conferamus: soluendonon eris. Conuenerat quidem ut tua priora essent: tu scriberes, ego rescriberem. Sed non ero difficilis: bene credi tibi scio. Itaque in antecessum dabonec faciam quod Cicero, uir disertissimus, facere Atticum iubet, ut etiam'si rem nullam habebit, quod in buccam uenerit scribat'. (2) Numquam potestdeesse quod scribam, ut omnia illa quae Ciceronis implent epistulas transeam:quis candidatus laboret; quis alienis, quis suis uiribus pugnet; quis consulatumfiducia Caesaris, quis Pompei, quis arcae petat; quam durus sit feneratorCaecilius, a quo minoris centesimis propinqui nummum mouere non possint. Sua satius est mala quam aliena tractare, se excutere et uidere quam multarumrerum candidatus sit, et non suffragari. (3) Hoc est, mi Lucili, egregium,hoc securum ac liberum, nihil petere et tota fortunae comitia transire. Quam putas esse iucundum tribubus uocatis, cum candidati in templis suispendeant et alius nummos pronuntiet, alius per sequestrem agat, alius eorummanus osculis conterat quibus designatus contingendam manum negaturus est,omnes attoniti uocem praeconis expectent, stare otiosum et spectare illasnudinas nec ementem quicquam nec uendentem? (4) Quanto hic maiore gaudiofruitur qui non praetoria aut consularia comitia securus intuetur, sedmagna illa in quibus alii honores anniuersarios petunt, alii perpetuaspotestates, alii bellorum euentus prosperos triumphosque, alii diuitias,alii matrimonia ac liberos, alii salutem suam suorumque! Quanti animi reseat solum nihil petere, nulli supplicare, et dicere, 'nihil mihi tecum,fortuna; non facio mei tibi copiam. Scio apud te Catones repelli, Vatiniosfieri. Nihil rogo. ' Hoc est priuatam facere fortunam. (5) Licet ergo haec in uicem scribere et hanc semper integram egereremateriam circumspicientibus tot milia hominum inquieta, qui ut aliquidpestiferi consequantur per mala nituntur in malum petuntque mox fugiendaaaut etiam fastidienda. (6) Cui enim adsecuto satis fuit quod optanti nimiumuidebatur? Non est, ut existimant homines, auida felicitas sed pusilla;itaque neminem satiat. Tu ista credis excelsa quia longe ab illis iaces;ei uero qui ad illa peruenit humilia sunt. Mentior nisi adhuc quaerit escendere: istud quod tu summum putas gradus est. (7) Omnes autem male habet ignorantia ueri. Tamquam ad bona feruntur decepti rumoribus, deinde mala esse aut inania aut minora quam sperauerint adepti ac multa passi uident; maiorque pars miratur ex interuallo fallentia, et uulgo bona pro magnis sunt.

(8) Hoc ne nobis quoque eueniat, quaeramus quid sit bonum. Varia eius interpretatio fuit, alius illud aliter expressit. Quidam ita finiunt: 'bonum est quod inuitat animos, quod ad se uocat'. Huic statim opponitur: quid si inuitat quidem sed in perniciem? scis quam multa mala blanda sint. Verum et ueri simile inter se differunt. Ita quod bonum est uero iungitur; non est enim bonum nisi uerum est. At quod inuitat ad se et ad licefacit uerisimile est: subrepat, sollicitat, adtrahit. (9) Quidam ita finierunt: 'bonum est quod ad petitionem sui mouet, uel quod impetum animi tendentis ad semouet'. 'Et huic idem opponitur; multa enim impetum animi mouent quae petantur petentium malo. Melius illi qui ita finierunt: 'bonum est quod ad se impetum animi secundum naturam mouet et ita demum petendum est cum coepit esse expetendum'. Iam et honestum est; hoc enim est perfecte petendum. (10) Locus ipse me admonet ut quid intersit inter bonum honestumque dicam. Aliquid inter se mixtum habent et inseparabile: nec potest bonum esse nisi cuius aliquid honesti inest, et honestum utique bonum est. Quid ergo inter duos interest? Honestum est perfectum bonum, quo beata uita completur, cuius contactu alia quoque bona fiunt. (11) Quod dico tale est: sunt quaedam neque bona neque mala, tamquam militia, legatio, iurisdictio. Haec cum honeste administrata sunt, bona esse incipiunt et ex dubio in bonum transeunt. Bonum societate honesti fit, honestum per se bonum est; bonum ex honesto fluit, honestum ex se est. Quod bonum est malum esse potuit; quod honestum est nisi bonum esse non potuit.

exiguum. Unde ad cognoscitur bonum? si perfecte secundum naturam est. (13) 'Fateris' inquis 'quod bonum est secundum naturam esse; haec eius proprietas est. Fateris et alia secundum naturam quidem esse sed bona non esse. Quomodo ergo illud bonum est cum haec non sint? quomodo ad aliam proprietatem peruenit cum utrique praecipuum illud commune sit, secundum naturam esse?'

(14) Ipsa scilicet magnitudine. Nec hoc nouum est, quaedam crescendo mutari. Infans fuit; factus est pubes: alia eius proprietas fit; ille enim irrationalis est, hic rationalis. Quaedam incremento non tantum in maius exeunt sed in aliud. (15) 'Non fit' inquit 'aliud quod maius fit. Utrum lagonam an dolium impleas uino, nihil refert: in utroque proprietas uini est. Et exiguum mellis pondus et magnum saporem non differt. ' Diuersa ponis exempla; in istis enim eadem qualitas est; quamuis augeantur, manet. (16) Quaedam amplificata in suo genere et in sua proprietate perdurant; quaedam post multa incrementa ultima demum uertit adiectio et nouam illis aliamque quam in qua fuerunt condicionem imprimit. Unus lapis facit fornicem, ille qui latera inclinata cuneauit et interuentus uinxit. Summa adiectio quare plurimum facit uel exigua? quia non auget sed implet. (17) Quaedam processu priorem exuunt formam et in nouam transeunt. Ubi aliquid animus diu protulit et magnitudinem eius sequendo lassatus est, infinitum coepit uocari; quod longe aliud factum est quam fuit cum magnum uideretur sed finitum. Eodem modo aliquid difficulter secari cogitauimus: nouissime crescente hac difficultate insecabile inuentum est. Sic ab eo quod uix et aegre mouebatur processimus ad immobile. Eadem ratione aliquid secundum naturam fuit: hoc in aliam proprietatem magnitudo sua transtulit bonum fecit. Vale.

(1) Quotiens aliquid inueni, non expecto donec dicas ‘in commune’: ipse mihi dico. Quid sit quod inuenerim quaeris? Sinum laxa, merum lucrum est. Docebo quomodo fieri diues celerrime possis. Quam ualde cupis audire! nec inmerito: ad maximas te diuitias compendiaria ducam. Opus erit tamen tibi creditore: ut negotiari possis, aes alienum facias oportet, sed nolo per intercessorem mutueris, nolo proxenetae nomen tuum iactent. (2) Paratum tibi creditorem dabo Catonianum illum, a te mutuum sumes. Quantulumcumque est, satis erit si, quidquid deerit, id a nobis petierimus. Nihil enim, mi Lucili, interest utrum non desideres an habeas. Summa rei in utroque eadem est: non torqueberis. Nec illud praecipio, ut aliquid naturae neges — contumax est, non potest uinci, suum poscit — sed ut quidquid naturam excedit scias precarium esse, non necessarium.

(3) Esurio: edendum est. Utrum hic panis sit plebeius an siligineus ad naturam nihil pertinet: illa uentrem non delectari uult sed impleri. Sitio: utrum haec aqua sit quam ex lacu proximo excepero an ea quam multa niue clusero, ut rigore refrigeretur alieno, ad naturam nihil pertinet. Illa hoc unum iubet, sitim extinguere; utrum sit aureum poculum an crustallinum an murreum an Tiburtinus calix an manus concaua, nihil refert. (4) Finem omnium rerum specta, et superuacua dimittes. Fames me appellat: ad proxima quaeque porrigatur manus; ipsa mihi commendabit quodcumque conprendero. Nihil contemnit esuriens. (5) Quid sit ergo quod me delectauerit quaeris? Videtur mihi egregie dictum, ‘sapiens diuitiarum naturalium est quaesitor acerrimus’. ‘Inanime’ inquis ‘lance muneras. Quid est istud? Ego iam paraueram fiscos; circumspiciebam in quod me mare negotiaturus inmitterem, quod publicum agitare, quas arcesserem merces.

Decipere est istud, docere paupertatem cum diuitias promiseris. ‘Ita tu pauperem iudicas cui nihil deest? ‘Suo’ inquis ‘et patientiae suae beneficio, non fortunae. ‘ Ideo ergo illum non iudicas diuitem quia diuitiae eius desinere non possunt? (6) Utrum mauis habere multum an satis? Qui multum habet plus cupit, quod est argumentum nondum illum satis habere; qui satis habet consecutus est quod numquam diuiti contigit, finem. An has ideo non putas esse diuitias quia propter illas nemo proscriptus est? quia propter illas nulli uenenum filius, nulli uxor inpegit? quia in bello tutae sunt? quia in pace otiosae? quia nec habere illas periculosum est nec operosum disponere?

(7) 'At parum habet qui tantum non alget, non esurit, non sitit. ' Plus Iuppiter non habet. Numquam parum est quod satis est, et numquam multum est quod satis non est. Post Dareum et Indos pauper est Alexander. Mentior? Quaerit quod suum faciat, scrutatur maria ignota, in oceanum classes nouas mittit et ipsa, ut ita dicam, mundi claustra perrumpit. Quod naturae satis est homini non est. (8) Inuentus est qui concupisceret aliquid post omnia: tanta est caecitas mentium et tanta initiorum suorum unicuique, cum processit, obliuio. Ille modo ignobilis anguli non sine controuersia dominus tacto fine terrarum per suum rediturus orbem tristis est. (9) Neminem pecunia diuitem fecit, immo contra nulli non maiorem sui cupidinem incussit. Quaeris quae sit huius rei causa? plus incipit habere posse qui plus habet. Ad summam quem uoles mihi ex his quorum nomina cum Crasso Licinoque numerantur in medium licet protrahas; adferat census et quidquid habet et quidquid sperat simul computet: iste, si mihi credis, pauper est, si tibi, potest esse. (10) At hic qui se ad quod exigit natura composuit non tantum extra sensum est paupertatis sed extra metum. Sed ut scias quam difficile sit res suas ad naturalem modum coartare, hic ipse quem circumcidimus, quem tu uocas pauperem, habet aliquid et superuacui. (11) At excaecant populum et in se conuertunt opes, si numerati multum ex aliqua domo effertur, si multum auri tecto quoque eius inlinitur, si familia aut corporibus electa aut spectabilis cultu est. Omnium istorum felicitas in publicum spectat: ille quem nos et populo et fortunae subduximus beatus introsum est. (12) Nam quod ad illos pertinet apud quos falso diuitiarum nomen inuasit occupata paupertas, sic diuitias habent quomodo habere dicimur febrem, cum illa nos habeat. E contrario dicere solemus 'febris illum tenet': eodem modo dicendum est 'diuitiae illum tenent'. Nihil ergo monuisse te malim quam hoc, quod nemo monetur satis, ut omnia naturalibus desideriis metiaris, quibus aut gratis satis fiat aut paruo: tantum miscere uitia desideriis noli. (13) Quaeris quali mensa, quali argento, quam paribus ministeriis et

Num, tibi cum fauces urit sitis, aurea quaeris
pocula? num esuriens fastidis omnia praeter
pauonem rhombumque?

(14) Ambitiosa non est fames, contenta desinere est; quo desinat non nimis curat. Infelicis luxuriae ista tormenta sunt: quaerit quemadmodum post saturitatem quoque esuriat, quemadmodum non impleat uentrem sed farciat, quemadmodum sitim prima potione sedatam reuocet. Egregie itaque Horatius negat ad sitim pertinere quo poculo (aquae) aut quam eleganti manu ministretur. Nam si pertinere ad te iudicas quam crinitus puer et quam perlucidum tibi poculum porrigat, non sitis.

(15) Inter reliqua hoc nobis praestitit natura praecipuum, quod necessitati fastidium excussit. Recipiunt superuacua dilectum: 'hoc parum decens, illud parum lautum, oculos hoc meos laedit'. Id actum est ab illo mundi conditore, qui nobis uiuendi iura discripsit, ut salui essemus, non ut delicati: ad salutem omnia parata sunt et in promptu, delicis omnia misere ac sollicite comparantur. (16) Utamur ergo hoc naturae beneficio inter magna numerando et cogitemus nullo nomine melius illam meruisse de nobis quam quia quidquid ex necessitate desideratur sine fastidio sumitur. Vale.

CXX. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM.

(1) Epistula tua per plures quaestiunculas uagata est sed in una constitit hanc expediri desiderat, quomodo ad nos boni honestique notitia peruenerit. Haec duo apud alios diuersa sunt, apud nos tantum diuisa. (2) Quid sithoc dicam. Bonum putant esse aliqui id quod utile est. Itaque hoc et diuitiiset equo et uino et calceo nomen inponunt; tanta fit apud illos boni uilitaset adeo in sordida usque descendit. Honestum putant cui ratio recti officiconstat, tamquam pie curatam patris senectutem, adiutam amici paupertatem, fortem expeditionem, prudentem moderatamque sententiam. (3) <nos> istaduo quidem facimus, sed ex uno.

Nihil est bonum nisi quod honestum est; quod honestum, est utique bonum. Superuacuum iudico adicere quid interista discriminis sit, cum saepe dixerim. Hoc unum dicam, nihil nobis uideri <bonum> quo quis et male uti potest; uides autem diuitiis, nobilitate, uiribus quam multi male utantur. Nunc ergo ad id reuertor de quo desideras dici, quomodo ad nos primaboni honestique notitia peruenerit. (4) Hoc nos natura docere non potuit: semina nobis scientiae dedit, scientiam non dedit. Quidam aiunt nos innotitiam incidisse, quod est incredibile, uirtutis alicui speciem casu occurrisse. Nobis uidetur obseruatio collegisse et rerum saepe factarum inter se conlatio; per analogian nostri intellectum et honestum et bonum iudicant. Hoc uerbum cum Latini grammatici ciuitate donauerint, ego damnandum non puto, <immo> in ciuitatem suam redigendum. Utar ergo illo non tantum tamquam recepto sed tamquam usitato. Quae sit haec analogia dicam. (5) Noueramus corporis sanitatem: ex hac cogitauimus esse aliquam et animi. Noueramus uires corporis: ex his collegimus esse et animi robur. Aliqua benigna facta, aliqua humana, aliqua fortia nos obstupescerant: haec coepimus tamquam perfecta mirari. Suberant illis multa uitia quae species conspicua licuius facti fulgorque celabat: haec dissimulauimus. Natura iubet augere laudanda, nemo non gloriam ultra uerum tulit: ex his ergo speciem ingentis boni traximus. (6) Fabricius Pyrrhi regis aurum reppulit maiusque regno iudicauit regias opes posse contemnere. Idem medico Pyrrhi promittente uenenum se regi daturum monuit Pyrrhum

Eiusdem animi fuit auro non uinci, ueneno non uincere. Admirati sumus ingentem uirum quem non regis, non contra regem promissa flexissent, boni exempli tenacem, quod difficillimum est, in bello innocentem, qui aliquod esse crederet etiam in hostes nefas, qui in summa paupertate quam sibi decus fecerat non aliter refugit diuitias quam uenenum. 'Viue' inquit 'beneficio meo, Pyrrhe, et gaude quod adhuc dolebas, Fabricium non posse corrumpi. ' (7) Horatius Cocles solus impleuit pontis angustias adimique a tergo sibi reditum, dummodo iter hosti auferretur, iussit et tam diu prementibus restitit donec reuulsa ingenti ruina tigna sonuerunt. Postquam respexit et extra periculum esse patriam periculo suo sensit, 'ueniat, si quis uult' inquit 'sic euntem sequi' iecitque se in praeceps et non minus sollicitus in illo rapido alueo fluminis ut armatus quam ut saluus exiret, retento armorum uictricium decorem tam tutus redit quam si ponte uenisset. (8) Haec et eiusmodi facta imaginem nobis ostendere uirtutis.

Adiciam quod mirum fortasse uideatur: mala interdum speciem honesti obtulere et optimum ex contrario enituit. Sunt enim, ut scis, uirtutibus uitia confinia, et perditis quoque ac turpibus recti similitudo est: sic mentitur prodigus liberalem, cum plurimum intersit utrum quis dare sciat an seruare nesciat. Multi, inquam, sunt, Lucili, qui non donant sed prociunt: non uoco ego liberalem pecuniae suae iratum. Imitatur negligentia facilitatem, temeritas fortitudinem. (9) Haec nos similitudo coegit adtendere et distinguere specie quidem uicina, re autem plurimum inter se dissidentia. Dum obseruamus eos quos insignes egregium opus fecerat, coepimus adnotare quis rem aliquam generoso animo fecisset et magno impetu, sed semel. Hunc uidimus in bello fortem, in foro timidum, animose paupertatem ferentem, humiliter infamiam: factum laudauimus, contempsimus uirum.

facereposset, sed nisi recte facere non posset. (11) Intelleximus in illo perfectam esse uirtutem. Hanc in partes diuisimus: oportebat cupiditates refrenari, metus conprimi, facienda prouideri, reddenda distribui: comprehendimus temperantiam, fortitudinem, prudentiam, iustitiam et suum cuique dedimus officium. Ex quo ergo uirtutem intelleximus? ostendit illam nobis ordo eius et decor et constantia et omnium inter se actionum concordia et magnitudo super omnia efferens sese. Hinc intellecta est illa beata uita secundo defluens cursu, arbitrii sui tota. (12) Quomodo ergo hoc ipsum nobis apparuit? dicam. Numquam uir ille perfectus adeptusque uirtutem fortunae maledixit, numquam accidentia tristis excepit, ciuem esse se uniuersi et militem credens labores uelut imperatos subit. Quidquid inciderat non tamquam malum aspernatusest et in se casu delatum, sed quasi delegatum sibi. 'Hoc qualecumque est' inquit 'meum est; asperum est, durum est, in hoc ipso nauemus operam. (13) Necessario itaque magnus apparuit qui numquam malis ingemuit, numquam de fato suo questus est; fecit multis intellectum sui et non aliter quam in tenebris lumen effulsit aduertitque in se omnium animos, cum esset placidus et lenis, humanis diuinisque rebus pariter aequus. (14) Habebat perfectum animum et ad summam sui adductum, supra quam nihil est nisi mens dei, ex quo pars et in hoc pectus mortale defluxit; quod numquam magis diuinum est quam ubi mortalitatem suam cogitat et scit in hoc natum hominem, ut uita defungeretur, nec domum esse hoc corpus sed hospitium, et quidem breue hospitium, quod relinquendum est ubi te grauem esse hospiti uideas.

potest? Nihil satis est morituris, immo morientibus; cotidie enim propius ab ultimo stamus, et illo unde nobiscadendum est hora nos omnis inpellit. (18) Vide in quanta caecitate mens nostra sit: hoc quod futurum dico cum maxime fit, et pars eius magna iam facta est; nam quod uiximus tempus eo loco est quo erat antequam uiximus. Erramus autem qui ultimum timemus diem, cum tantumdem in mortem singuli conferant. Non ille gradus lassitudinem facit in quo deficimus, sed ille profitetur; ad mortem dies extremus peruenit, accedit omnis; carpit nos illa, non corripit. Ideo magnus animus conscius sibi melioris naturae dat quidem operam ut in hac statione qua positus est honeste se atque industrie gerat, ceterum nihil horum quae circa sunt suum iudicat, sed ut commodatus utitur, peregrinus et properans.

saepe decem seruos; modo reges atque tetrarchas, omnia magna loquens, modo 'sit mihi mensa tripes et concha salis puri, toga quae defendere frigus
quamuis crassa queat'. Decies centena dedisses huic parco, paucis contento: quinque diebus
nil erat.

(21) Homines multi tales sunt qualem hunc describit Horatius Flaccus, numquam eundem, ne similem quidem sibi; adeo in diuersum aberrat. Multos dixi? prope est ut omnes sint. Nemo non cotidie et consilium mutat et uotum: modo uxorem uult habere, modo amicam, modo regnare uult, modo id agit ne quis sit officiosior seruus, modo dilatat se usque ad inuidiam, modo subsidit

contrahitur infra humilitatem uere iacentium, nunc pecuniam spargit, nunc rapit. (22) Sic maxime coarguitur animus imprudens: alius prodit atque alius et, quo turpius nihil iudico, inpar sibi est. Magnam rem puta unum hominem agere. Praeter sapientem autem nemo unum agit, ceteri multiformes sumus. Modo frugi tibi uidebimur et graues, modo prodigi et uani; mutamus subinde personam et contrariam ei sumimus quam exuimus. Hoc ergo a te exige, ut qualem institueris praestare te, talem usque ad exitum serues; effice ut possis laudari, si minus, ut agnosci. De aliquo quem here uidisti meriti dici potest 'hic qui est?': tanta mutatio est. Vale.

(2) Aliud ad hominem alendum pertinet, aliud adexercendum, aliud ad uestiendum, aliud ad docendum, aliud ad delectandum;omnia tamen ad hominem pertinent, etiam si non omnia meliorem eum faciunt. Mores alia aliter attingunt: quaedam illos corrigunt et ordinant, quaedamnaturam eorum et originem scrutantur.

(3) Cum <quaero> quare hominemnatura produxerit, quare praetulerit animalibus ceteris, longe me iudicasmores reliquisse? falsum est. Quomodo enim scies qui habendi sint nisi quid homini sit optimum inueneris, nisi naturam eius inspexeris? Tunc demumintelleges quid faciendum tibi, quid uitandum sit, cum didiceris quid naturaetae debeas. (4) ‘Ego’ inquis ‘uolo discere quomodo minus cupiam, minustimeam. Superstitionem mihi excute; doce leue esse uanumque hoc quod felicitasdicitur, unam illi syllabam facillime accedere. ‘ Desiderio tuo satis faciam:et uirtutes exhortabor et uitia conuerberabo. Licet aliquis nimium inmoderatumquein hac parte me iudicet, non desistam persequi nequitiam et adfectus efferatissimosinhibere et uoluptates ituras in dolorem conpescere et uotis obstrepere. Quidni? cum maxima malorum optauerimus, et ex gratulatione natum sit quidquidadloquimur.

(7) 'Ideo' inquit 'partes suas animalia apte mouent quia, si aliter mouerint, dolorem sensura sunt. Ita, ut uos dicitis, coguntur, metusque illa in rectum, non uoluntas mouet. ' Quod est falsum; tarda enim sunt quae necessitate inpelluntur, agilitas sponte motis est. Adeo autem non adigit illa ad hoc doloris timor ut in naturalem motum etiam dolore prohibente nitantur. (8) Sic infans qui stare meditatur et ferre se adsuescit, simul temptare uires suas coepit, cadit et cum fletu totiens resurgit donec seper dolorem ad id quod natura poscit exercuit. Animalia quaedam tergi durioris in uersa tam diu se torquent ac pedes exerunt et obliquant donec ad locum reponantur. Nullum tormentum sentit supina testudo, inquieta est tamend desiderio naturalis status nec ante desinit niti, quater se, quam in pedes constitit. (9) Ergo omnibus constitutionis suae sensus est et inde membrorum tam expedita tractatio, nec ullum maius indicium habemus cum hac illa aduiendum uenire notitia quam quod nullum animal ad usum sui rude est.

(14) ‘Dicitis’ inquit ‘omne animal primum constitutioni suae conciliari,hominis autem constitutionem rationalem esse et ideo conciliari hominemsibi non tamquam animali sed tamquam rationali; ea enim parte sibi carusest homo qua homo est. Quomodo ergo infans conciliari constitutioni rationalipotest, cum rationalis nondum sit?’ (15) Unicuique aetati sua constitutioest, alia infanti, alia puero, <alia adulescenti>, alia seni: omnesei constitutioni conciliantur in qua sunt. Infans sine dentibus est: huicconstitutioni suae conciliatur. Enati sunt dentes: huic constitutioni conciliatur. Nam et illa herba quae in segetem frugemque uentura est aliam constitutionemhabet tenera et uix eminens sulco, aliam cum conualuit et molli quidemculmo, sed quo ferat onus suum, constitit, aliam cum flauescit et ad areamspectat et spica eius induruit: in quamcumque constitutionem uenit, eamtuetur, in eam componitur. (16) Alia est aetas infantis, pueri, adulescentis,senis; ego tamen idem sum qui et infans fui et puer et adulescens. Sic,quamuis alia atque alia cuique constitutio sit, conciliatio constitutionissuae eadem est. Non enim puerum mihi aut iuuenem aut senem, sed me naturacommendat. Ergo infans ei constitutioni suae conciliatur quae tunc infantiest, non quae futura iuueni est; neque enim si aliquid illi maius in quodtranseat restat, non hoc quoque in quo nascitur secundum naturam est. (17) Primum sibi ipsum conciliatur animal; debet enim aliquid esse ad quod aliareferantur. Voluptatem peto. Cui? mihi; ergo mei curam ago. Dolorem refugio. Pro quo? pro me; ergo mei curam ago. Si omnia propter curam mei facio,ante omnia est mei cura. Haec animalibus inest cunctis, nec inseritur sedinnascitur. (18) Producit fetus suos natura, non abicit; et quia tutelacertissima ex proximo est, sibi quisque commissus est. Itaque, ut in prioribusepistulis dixi, tenera quoque animalia et materno utero uel ouo modo effusaquid sit infestum ipsa protinus norunt et mortifera deuitant; umbram quoquetransuolantium reformidant obnoxia auibis raptu uiuentibus. Nullum animalad uitam prodit sine metu mortis.

(19) ‘Quemadmodum’ inquit ‘editum animal intellectum habere

aut salutaris aut mortiferae rei potest? ‘ Primum quaeritur an intellegat, non quemadmodum intellegat. Esse autem illis intellectum ex eo apparet quod nihil amplius, si intellexerint, facient. Quid est quare pavonem, quare anserem gallinam non fugiat, at tanto minorem et ne notum quidem sibi accipitrem? quare pulli faem timeant, canem non timeant? Apparet illis inesse nocituris scientiam non experimento collectam; nam antequam possint experisci, cauent. (20) Deinde ne hoc casu existimes fieri, nec metuunt alia quam debent nec umquam obliuiscuntur huius tutelae et diligentiae: aequalis est illis apertissimo fuga. Praeterea non fiunt timidiora uiuendo; ex quo quidem apparet non usu illa in hoc peruenire sed naturali amore salutis suae. Et tardum est et uarium quod usus docet: quidquid natura tradit et aequale omnibus est et statim. (21) Si tamen exigis, dicam quomodo omne animal perniciosum intellegere cogatur. Sentit se carne constare; itaque sentit quid sit quod secari caro, quo uri, quo obteri possit, quae sint animalia armata ad nocendum: horum speciem trahit inimicam et hostilem. Inter se ista coniuncta sunt; simul enim conciliatur saluti suae quidque et iuuatura petit, laesura formidat. Naturales ad utilia impetus, naturales a contrariis aspernationes sunt; sine ulla cogitatione quae hoc dictet, sine consilio fit quidquid natura praecepit. (22) Non uides quanta sit subtilitas apibus ad fingenda domicilia, quanta diuidui laboris obeundi undique concordia? Non uides quam nulli mortalium imitabilis illa aranei textura, quanti operis sit fila disponere, alia in rectum inmissa firmamenti loco, alia in orbem currentia ex densiora, qua minora animalia, in quorum perniciem illa tenduntur, uelut retibus implicata teneantur? (23) Nascitur ars ista, non discitur. Itaque nullum est animal altero doctius: uidebis araneorum pares telas, par in fauisculorum omnium foramen. Incertum est et inaequabile quidquid ars tradit: ex aequo uenit quod natura distribuit. Haec nihil magis quam tutelam sui et eius peritiam tradidit, ideoque etiam simul incipiunt et discere et uiuere. (24) Nec est mirum cum eo nasci illa sine quo frustra nascerentur. Primum hoc instrumentum <in> illa natura contulit ad permanendum, (in) conciliationem et caritatem sui. Non poterant salua esse nisi uellent; nec (non) hoc per se profuturum erat, sed sine hoc nulla res profuisset. Sed in nullo dependes utilitatem sui, <ne> neglegentiam quidem; tacitis quoque et brutis, quamquam in cetera

sibi ipsa non deesse. Vale.

CXXII. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM.

(1) Detrimentum iam dies sensit; resiliuit aliquantum, ita tamen ut liberale adhuc spatium sit si quis cum ipso, ut ita dicam, die surgat. Officiosiormeliorque si quis illum expectat et lucem primam excipit: turpis qui altosole semisomnus iacet, cuius uigilia medio die incipit; et adhuc multishoc antelucanum est. (2) Sunt qui officia lucis noctisque peruerterintnec ante diducant oculos hesterna graues crapula quam adpetere nox coepit. Qualis illorum condicio dicitur quos natura, ut ait Vergilius, pedibusnostris subditos e contrario posuit, nosque ubi primus equis Oriens adflauit anhelis,

talis horum contraria omnibus non regio sed uita est. (3) Sunt quidam ineadem urbe antipodes qui, ut M. Cato ait, nec orientem umquam solem uideruntnec occidentem. Hos tu existimas scire quemadmodum uiuendum sit, qui nesciuntquando?

Et hi mortem timent, in quam se uiui condiderunt? tam infausti ominisquam nocturnae aues sunt. Licet in uino unguentoque tenebras suas exigant,licet epulis et quidem in multa fericula discoctis totum peruersae uigiliaetempus educant, non conuiuantur sed iusta sibi faciunt. Mortuis certe interdiuparentatur. At mehercules nullus agenti dies longus est. Extendamus uitam:huius et officium et argumentum actus est. Circumscribatur nox et aliquidex illa in diem transferatur. (4) Aues quae conuiuiis comparantur, ut in motaefacile pinguescant, in obscuro continentur; ita sine ulla exercitationeiacentibus tumor pigrum corpus inuadit et ~superba umbra~ iners saginasubcrescit. At istorum corpora qui se tenebris dicauerunt foeda uisuntur,quippe suspectior illis quam morbo pallentibus color est: languidi et euanidialbent, et in uiuis caro morticina est. Hoc tamen minimum in illis malorumdixerim: quanto plus tenebrarum in animo est! ille in se stupet, ille caligat,inuidet caecis. Quis umquam oculos tenebrarum causa habuit?

(5) Interrogas quomodo haec animo prauitas fiat auersandi diem et

totam uitam in noctem transferendi? Omnia uitia contra naturam pugnant, omniadebitum ordinem deserunt; hoc est luxuriae propositum, gaudere peruersis nec tantum discedere a recto sed quam longissime abire, deinde etiam e contrario stare. (6) Non uidentur tibi contra naturam uiuere <qui> ieiunibunt, qui uinum recipiunt inanibus uenis et ad cibum ebrii transeunt? Atqui frequens hoc adulescentium uitium est, qui uires excolunt <ut> in ipso paene balinei limine inter nudos bibant, immo potent et sudorem quem mouerunt potionibus crebris ac feruentibus subinde destringant. Postprandium aut cenam bibere uulgare est; hoc patres familiae rustici faciunt et uerae uoluptatis ignari: merum illud delectat quod non innatat cibo, quod libere penetrat ad neruos; illa ebrietas iuuat quae in uacuum uenit. (7) Non uidentur tibi contra naturam uiuere qui commutant cum feminis uestem? Non uiuunt contra naturam qui spectant ut pueritia splendeat tempore alieno? Quid fieri crudelius uel miserius potest? numquam uir erit, ut diu uirumpati possit? et cum illum contumeliae sexus eripuisse debuerat, non ne aetas quidem eripiet? (8) Non uiuunt contra naturam qui hieme concupiscunt rosam fomentoque aquarum calentium et locorum apta mutatione bruma lilium (florem uernum) exprimunt? Non uiuunt contra naturam qui pomaria in summis turribus serunt? quorum siluae in tectis domuum ac fastigiis nutant, inde ortis radicibus quo in probe cacumina egissent? Non uiuunt contra naturam qui fundamenta thermarum in mari iaciunt et delicate natare ipsi sibi non uidentur nisi calentia stagna fluctu ac tempestate feriantur? (9) Cum instituerunt omnia contra naturae consuetudinem uelle, nouissime in totum ab illa desciscunt. ‘Lucet: somni tempus est. Quies est: nunc exerceamur, nunc gestemur, nunc prandeamus. Iam lux propius accedit: tempus est cenae. Non oportet id facere quod populus; res sordida est trita ac uulgari uia uiuere. Dies publicus relinquatur: proprium nobis ac peculiare mane fiat.’ (10) Isti uero mihi defunctorum loco sunt; quantulum enim a funere absunt et quidem acerbo qui ad faces et cereos uiuunt? Hanc uitam agere eodem tempore multos meminimus, inter quos et Acilium Butam praetorium, cui post patrimonium ingens consumptum Tiberius paupertatem confitenti ‘sero’ inquit ‘exspectatus es’. (11) Recitabat Montanus Iulius carmen, tolerabilis poeta et amicitia Tiberi notus et frigore. Ortus et occasus libentissime inserebat; itaque cum indignaretur quidam illum totodie recitasse et negaret accedendum ad recitationes eius, Natta Pinarius ait: 'numquid possum liberalius agere? paratus sum illum audire ab ortu ad occasum'.

(12) Cum hos uersus recitasset
incipit ardentes Phoebus producere flammās, spargere <se> rubicunda dies; iam tristis hirundo argutis reditura cibos inmittere nidis
incipit et molli partitos ore ministrat,

Varus eques Romanus, M. Vinicii comes, cenarum bonarum adsectator, quasinprobitate linguae merebatur, exclamauit 'incipit Buta dormire'. (13) Deinde cum subinde recitasset

iam sua pastores stabulis armenta locarunt,
iam dare sopitis nox pigra silentia terris

idem Varus inquit 'quid dicis? iam nox est? ibo et Butam salutabo'. Nihil erat notius hac eius uita in contrarium circumacta; quam, ut dixi, multi eodem tempore egerunt. (14) Causa autem est ita uiuendi quibusdam, non quia aliquid existiment noctem ipsam habere iucundius, sed quia nihil uiuat solitum, et grauis malae conscientiae lux est, et omnia concupiscentia ut contemnenti prout magno aut paruo empta sunt fastidio est lumen gratuitum. Praeterea luxuriosi uitam suam esse in sermonibus dum uiuunt uolunt; nam si tacetur, perdere se putant operam. Itaque aliquotiens faciunt quod excitet famam. Multi bona comedunt, multi amicas habent: ut inter istos nomen inuenias, opus est non tantum luxuriosam rem sed notabilem facere; in tam occupata ciuitate fabulas uulgaris nequitia non inuenit. (15) Pedonem Albinouanum narrantem audieramus (erat autem fabulator elegantissimus) habitasse sesupra domum Sex. Papini. Is erat ex hac turba lucifugarum. 'Audio' inquit 'circa horam tertiam noctis flagellorum sonum. Quaero quid faciat: dicitur rationes accipere. Audio circa horam sextam noctis clamorem concitatum. Quaero quid sit: dicitur uocem exercere.

Quaero circa horam octauam noctisquid sibi ille sonus rotarum uelit: gestari dicitur. (16) Circa lucem discurritur,pueri uocantur, cellarii, coqui tumultuantur. Quaero quid sit: dicitur mulsum et halicam poposcisse, a balneo exisse. “Excedebat” inquit “huiusdiem cena. “ Minime; ualde enim frugaliter uiuebat; nihil consumebat nisi noctem. ‘ Itaque Peto dicentibus illum quibusdam auarum et sordidum ‘uos’inquit ‘illum et lychnobium dicetis’. (17) Non debes admirari si tantas inuenis uitiorum proprietates: uariasunt, innumerabiles habent facies, conprendi eorum genera non possunt. Simplex recti cura est, multiplex prauis, et quantumuis nouas declinationes capit. Idem moribus euenit: naturam sequentium faciles sunt, soluti sunt,exiguas differentias habent; (his) distorti plurimum et omnibus et inter se dissident. (18) Causa tamen praecipua mihi uidetur huius morbi uitae communis fastidium. Quomodo cultu se a ceteris distinguunt, quomodo elegantiae cenarum, munditiis uehiculorum, sic uolunt separari etiam temporum dispositione. Nolunt solita peccare quibus peccandi praemium infamia est. Hanc petunt omnes isti qui, ut ita dicam, retro uiuunt. (19) Ideo, Lucili, tenenda nobis uia est quam natura praescripsit, nec ab illa declinandum: illamsequentibus omnia facilia, expedita sunt, contra illam nitentibus non alia uita est quam contra aquam remigantibus. Vale.

(1) Itinere confectus incommodo magis quam longo in Albanum meum multanocte perueni: nihil habeo parati nisi me. Itaque in lectulo lassitudinempono, hanc coci ac pistoris moram boni consulo. Mecum enim de hoc ipsoloquor, quam nihil sit graue quod leuiter excipias, quam indignandum nihil<dum nihil> ipse indignando adstruas. (2) Non habet panem meus pistor;sed habet uilicus, sed habet atriensis, sed habet colonus. ‘Malum panem’inquis. Expecta: bonus fiet; etiam illum tibi tenerum et siligineum famesreddet. Ideo non est ante edendum quam illa imperat. Expectabo ergo necante edam quam aut bonum panem habere coepero aut malum fastidire desiero. (3) Necessarium est paruo adsuescere: multae difficultates locorum, multaetemporum etiam locupletibus et instructis ~aduobus optantem prohibent et~occurrent. Quidquid uult habere nemo potest, illud potest, nolle quod nonhabet, rebus oblatis hilaris uti. Magna pars libertatis est bene moratusuenter et contumeliae patiens. (4) Aestimari non potest quantam uoluptatemcapiam ex eo quod lassitudo mea sibi ipsa adquiescit: non unctores, nonbalineum, non ullum aliud remedium quam temporis quaero. Nam quod laborcontraxit quies tollit. Haec qualiscumque cena aditali iucundior erit. (5) ~Aliquod enim~ experimentum animi sumpsi subito; hoc enim est simpliciuset uerius. Nam ubi se praeparauit et indixit sibi patientiam, non aequaeapparet quantum habeat uerae firmitatis: illa sunt certissima argumentaquae ex tempore dedit, si non tantum aequus molestias sed placidus aspexit;si non excanduit, non litigauit; si quod dari deberet ipse sibi non desiderandosuppleuit et cogitauit aliquid consuetudini suae, sibi nihil deesse.

iam sic peregrinantur ut illos Numidarum praecurrat equitatus, ut agmen cursorum antecedit: turpe est nullos esse qui occurrentis uia deiciant, (ut) qui honestum hominem uenire magno puluere ostendant. Omnes iam mulos habent qui crustallina et murrina et caelata magnorum artificum manu portent: turpe est uideri eas te habere sarcinas solas quae tuto concuti possint. Omnium paedagogia oblita facie uehantur ne sol, ne frigus teneram cutem laedat: turpe est neminem esse in comitatu tuo puerorum cuius sana facies medicamentum desideret.

(8) Horum omnium sermo uitandus est: hi sunt qui uitia tradunt et alio aliunde transferunt. Pessimum genus (horum) hominum uidebatur qui uerbage starent: sunt quidam qui uitia gestant. Horum sermo multum nocet; nam etiam si non statim proficit, semina in animo relinquit sequiturque nos etiam cum ab illis discessimus, resurrecturum postea malum. (9) Quemadmodum qui audierunt synphoniam ferunt secum in auribus modulationem illam ad dulcedinem cantuum, quae cogitationes impedit nec ad seria patitur intendi, sic adulatorum et praua laudantium sermo diutius haeret quam auditur. Nec facile est animo dulcem sonum excutere: prosequitur et durat et ex interuallo recurrit. Ideo cludendae sunt aures malis uocibus et quidem primis; nam cum initium fecerunt admissaeque sunt, plus audent. (10) Inde ad haec peruenitur uerba: 'uirtus et philosophia et iustitia uerborum inanum crepitus est; una felicitas est bene uitae facere; esse, bibere, frui patrimonio, hoc est uiuere, hoc est se mortalem esse meminisse. Fluunt dies et irreparabilis uita decurrit. Dubitamus? Quid iuuat sapere et aetati non semper uoluptates recepturae interim, dum potest, dum poscit, ingerere frugalitatem? ~Eo~ mortem praecurre et quidquid illa ablatura est iam sibi ~interere~. Non amicam habes, non puerum qui amicae moueat inuidiam; cottidie sobrius prodis; sic cenas tamquam ephemeridem patri adprobaturus: non est istud uiuere sed alienae uitae interesse. (11) Quanta dementia est heredis sui res procurare et sibi negare omnia ut tibi ex amico inimicum magna faciat hereditas; plus enim gaudebit tua morte quo plus acceperit. Istos tristes et superciliosos alienae uitae censors, suae hostes, publicos paedagogos assis ne feceris nec dubitaueris bonam uitam quam opinionem bonam malle. ' (12) Hae uoces non aliter fugiendae sunt quam illae quas Ulixes nisi alligatus praeteruehinoluit. Idem possunt: abducunt a patria, a parentibus, ab amicis, a uirtutibus, et ~inter spem uitam misera nisi turpis inludunt~. Quanto satius est rectumsequi limitem et eo se perducere ut ea demum sint tibi iucunda quae honesta! (13) Quod adsequi poterimus si scierimus duo esse genera rerum quae nos aut inuitent aut fugent. Inuitant (ut) diuitiae, uoluptates, forma, ambitio, cetera blanda et adridentia: fugat labor, mors, dolor, ignominia, uictus adstrictior. Debemus itaque exerceri ne haec timeamus, ne illa cupiamus. In contrarium pugnemus et ab inuitantibus recedamus, aduersus potentia concitemur.

(14) Non uides quam diuersus sit descendendum habitus et ascendendum? qui per primum eunt resupinant corpora, qui in arduum, incumbunt. Nam si descendas, pondus suum in priorem partem dare, si ascendas, retro abducere, cum uitio, Lucili, consentire est. In uoluptates descenditur, in aspera et dura subeundum est: hic impellamus corpora, illic refrenemus. (15) Hoc nunc me existimas dicere, eos tantum perniciosos esse auribus nostris qui uoluptatem laudant, qui doloris metus, per se formidabiles res, incutiunt? Illos quoque nocere nobis existimo qui nos sub specie Stoicae sectae hortantur ad uitia. Hoc enim iactant: solum sapientem et doctum esse amatorem. ‘Solutus aptus est ad hanc artem; aequum conbibendi et conuiuendi sapiens est peritissimus. Quaeramus ad quam usque aetatem iuuenes amandisint. ‘ (16) Haec Graecae consuetudini data sint, nos ad illa potius aures derigamus: ‘nemo est casu bonus: discenda uirtus est. Voluptas humilis res et pusilla est et in nullo habenda pretio, communis cum mutis animalibus, ad quam minima et contemptissima aduolant. Gloria uanum et uolubile quiddam est auraque mobilius. Paupertas nulli malum est nisi repugnanti. Mors malum non est: quid <sit> quaeris? sola ius aequum generis humani. Superstitio error insanus est: amandos timet, quos colit uiolat. Quid enim interest utrum deos neget an infames? ‘ (17) Haec discenda, immo ediscenda sunt: non debet excusationes uitio philosophia suggerere. Nullam habet spem salutis aeger quem ad intemperantiam medicus hortatur. Vale.

CXXIV. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM.

(1) Possum multa tibi ueterum praecepta referre,
ni refugis tenuisque piget cognoscere curas.

Non refugis autem nec ulla te subtilitas abigit: non est elegantiae tuae tantum magna sectari, sicut illud probo, quod omnia ad aliquem profectum redigis et tunc tantum offenderis ubi summa subtilitate nihil agitur. Quod ne nunc quidem fieri laborabo.

Quaeritur utrum sensu comprehendatur an intellectu bonum; huic adiunctum est in mutis animalibus et infantibus non esse. (2) Quicumque uoluptatem in summo ponunt sensibile iudicant bonum, nos contra intellegibile, qui illud animo damus. Si de bono sensus iudicarent, nullam uoluptatem reiceremus; nulla enim non inuitat, nulla non delectat; et e contrario nullum dolorem uolentes subiremus; nullus enim non offendit sensum. (3) Praeterea non essent digni reprehensione quibus nimium uoluptas placet quibusque summus est doloris timor. Atqui inprobamus gulae ac libidini addictos et contemni musillos qui nihil uiriliter ausuri sunt doloris metu. Quid autem peccant si sensibus, id est iudicibus boni ac mali, parent? his enim tradidistis ad petitionis et fugae arbitrium. (4) Sed uidelicet ratio isti rei praeposita est: illa quemadmodum de beata uita, quemadmodum de uirtute, de honesto, sic et de bono maloque constituit. Nam apud istos uilissimae parti datur de meliore sententia, ut de bono pronuntiet sensus, obtusa res et hebes et in homine quam in aliis animalibus tardior. (5) Quid si quis uellet non oculis sed tactu minuta discernere? Subtilior adhuc acies nulla quam oculorum et intentior daret bonum malumque dinoscere. Vides in quanta ignorantia ueritatis uersetur et quam humi sublimia ac diuina proiecerit apud quem de summo, bono malo, iudicat tactus. (6) ‘Quemadmodum’ inquit ‘omnis scientia atque ars aliquid debet habere manifestum sensuque comprehensum ex quo oriatur et crescat, sic beata uita fundamentum et initium a manifestis ducit et eo quod sub sensum cadat. Nempe uos a manifestis beatam uitam initium sui capere dicitis. ‘ (7) Dicimus beata esse quae secundum naturam sint; quid autem secundum naturam sit palam et protinus apparet, sicut quid sit integrum. Quod secundum naturam est, quod contigit protinus nato, non dico bonum, sed initium boni. Tu summum bonum, uoluptatem, infantiae donas, ut inde incipiat nascens quo consummatus homo peruenit; cacumen radicis loco ponis. (8) Si quis diceret illum in materno utero latentem, sexus quoque incerti, tenerum et imperfectum et informem iam in aliquo bono esse, aperte uideretur errare. Atqui quantulum interest inter eum qui cum (que) maxime uitam accipit et illum qui maternorum uiscerum latens onus est? Uterque, quantum ad intellectum boni ac mali, aequè maturus est, et non magis infans adhuc boni capax est quam arbor aut mutum aliquod animal. Quare autem bonum in arbore animalique muto non est? quia nec ratio. Ob hoc in infante quoque non est; nam et huic deest. Tunc ad bonum perueniet cum ad rationem peruenerit. (9) Est aliquod inrationale animal, est aliquod nondum rationale, est rationale sed imperfectum: in nullo horum bonum, ratio illud secum adfert. Quid ergo inter ista quaeret tuli distat? In eo quod inrationale est numquam erit bonum; in eo quod nondum rationale est tunc esse bonum non potest; <in eo quod rationale est> sed imperfectum iam potest bonum <esse>, sed non est. (10) Ita dico, Lucili: bonum non in quolibet corpore, non in qualibet aetate inuenitur et tantum abest ab infantia quantum a primo ultimum, quantum ab initio perfectum; ergo nec in tenero, modo coalescente corpusculo est. Quidni non sit? non magis quam in semine. (11) Hoc sic dicas: aliquod arboris ac sati bonum nouimus: hoc non est in prima fronde quae emissa cum maxime solum rumpit. Est aliquod bonum tritici: hoc nondum est in herba lactente nec cum folliculo se exerit spica mollis, sed cum frumentum aestas et debita maturitas coxit. Quemadmodum omnis natura bonum suum nisi consummata non profert, ita hominis bonum non est in homine nisi cum illi ratio perfecta est. (12) Quod autem hoc bonum? Dicam: liber animus, erectus, alia subiciens sibi, se nulli. Hoc bonum adeo non recipit infantia ut pueritia non speret, adulescentia inprobe speret; bene agitur cum senectute si ad illud longo studio intentoque peruenit. Si hoc est bonum, et intellegibile est. (13) ‘Dixisti’ inquit ‘aliquod bonum esse arboris, aliquod herbae; potest ergo aliquod esse et infantis. ‘ Verum bonum nec in arboribus nec in mutis animalibus: hoc quod in illis bonum est precario bonum dicitur. ‘Quod est?’ inquis. Hoc quod secundum cuiusque naturam

est. Bonum quidem cadere in mutum animal nullo modo potest; felicioris meliorisque naturae est. Nisi ubi rationi locus est, bonum non est. (14) Quattuor hae naturae sunt, arboris, animalis, hominis, dei: haec duo, quae rationalia sunt, eandem naturam habent, illo diuersa sunt quod alterum immortale, alterum mortale est. Ex his ergo unius bonum natura perficit, dei scilicet, alterius cura, hominis. Cetera tantum in sua natura perfecta sunt, non uere perfecta, a quibus abest ratio. Hoc enim demum perfectum est quod secundum uniuersam naturam perfectum, uniuersa autem natura rationalis est: cetera possunt in suo genere esse perfecta. (15) In quo non potest beata uita esse nec id potest quo beata uita efficitur; beata autem uita bonis efficitur. Inmuto animali non est beata uita <nec id quo beata uita> efficitur: inmuto animali bonum non est. (16) Mutum animal sensu comprehendit praesentia; praeteritorum reminiscitur cum <in> id incidit quo sensus admoneretur, tamquam equus reminiscitur uiae cum ad initium eius admotus est. In stabulo quidem nulla illi uia est quamuis saepe calcatae memoria (est) . Tertium uero tempus, id est futurum, ad muta non pertinet. (17) Quomodo ergo potest eorum uideri perfecta natura quibus usus perfecti temporis non est? Tempus enim tribus partibus constat, praeterito, praesente, uenturo. Animalibus tantum quod breuissimum est <et> in transcurso datum, praesens: praeteriti rara memoria est nec umquam reuocatur nisi praesentium occursum. (18) Non potest ergo perfectae naturae bonum in imperfecta esse natura, aut si natura talis (habet) hoc habet, habent et sata. Nec illud nego, ad ea quae uidentur secundum naturam magnos esse mutis animalibus impetus et concitatos, sed inordinatos ac turbidos; numquam autem aut inordinatum est bonum aut turbidum. (19) ‘Quid ergo?’ inquis ‘muta animalia perturbate et indisposite mouentur?’ Dicerem illa perturbate et indisposite moueri si natura illorum ordinem caperet: nunc mouentur secundum naturam suam. Perturbatum enim id est quod esse aliquando et non perturbatum potest; sollicitum est quod potest esse securum. Nulli uitium est nisi cui uirtus potest esse: mutis animalibus talis ex natura sua motus est. (20) Sed ne te diu teneam, erit aliquod bonum in muto animali, erit aliqua uirtus, erit aliquid perfectum, sed nec bonum absolute nec uirtus nec perfectum. Haec enim rationalibus solis contingunt, quibus datum est scire quare, quatenus, quemadmodum.

Ita bonum in nullo est nisi in quo ratio. (21) Quo nunc pertineat ista disputatio quaeris, et quid animo tuo profutura sit? Dico: et exercet illum et acuit et utique aliquid acturum occupatione honesta tenet. Prodest autem etiam quo moratur ad praua properantes. Sed <et> illud dico: nullo modo prodesse possum magis quam si tibi bonum tuum ostendo, si te a mutis animalibus separo, si cum deo pono. (22) . (23) Vis tu relictis in quibus uinci te necesse est, dum in aliena niteris, ad bonum reuerti tuum? Quod est hoc? animus scilicet emendatus ac purus, aemulator dei, super humana se extollens, nihil extra se sui ponens. Rationale animal es. Quod ergo in te bonum est? perfecta ratio. Hanc tu ad suum finem hinc euoca, <sine> in quantum potest plurimum crescere. (24) Tunc beatum esse te iudica cum tibi ex te gaudium omne nascetur, cum uisis quae homines eripiunt, optant, custodiunt, nihil inueneris, nondico quod malis, sed quod uelis. Breuem tibi formulam dabo qua te metiaris, qua perfectum esse iam sentias: tunc habebis tuum cum intelleges infelicissimos esse felices. Vale.

(1) Exigis a me frequentiores epistulas. Rationes conferamus: soluendoneon eris. Conuenerat quidem ut tua priora essent: tu scriberes, ego rescriberem. Sed non ero difficilis: bene credi tibi scio. Itaque in antecessum dabonec faciam quod Cicero, uir disertissimus, facere Atticum iubet, ut etiam'si rem nullam habebit, quod in buccam uenerit scribat'. (2) Numquam potestdeesse quod scribam, ut omnia illa quae Ciceronis implent epistulas transeam:quis candidatus laboret; quis alienis, quis suis uiribus pugnet; quis consulatumfiducia Caesaris, quis Pompei, quis arcae petat; quam durus sit feneratorCaecilius, a quo minoris centesimis propinqui nummum mouere non possint. Sua satius est mala quam aliena tractare, se excutere et uidere quam multarumrerum candidatus sit, et non suffragari. (3) Hoc est, mi Lucili, egregium,hoc securum ac liberum, nihil petere et tota fortunae comitia transire. Quam putas esse iucundum tribubus uocatis, cum candidati in templis suispendeant et alius nummos pronuntiet, alius per sequestrem agat, alius eorummanus osculis conterat quibus designatus contingendam manum negaturus est,omnes attoniti uocem praeconis expectent, stare otiosum et spectare illasnundinas nec ementem quicquam nec uendentem? (4) Quanto hic maiore gaudiofruitur qui non praetoria aut consularia comitia securus intuetur, sedmagna illa in quibus alii honores anniuersarios petunt, alii perpetuaspotestates, alii bellorum euentus prosperos triumphosque, alii diuitias,alii matrimonia ac liberos, alii salutem suam suorumque! Quanti animi reseat solum nihil petere, nulli supplicare, et dicere, 'nihil mihi tecum,fortuna; non facio mei tibi copiam. Scio apud te Catones repelli, Vatiniosfieri. Nihil rogo. ' Hoc est priuatam facere fortunam. (5) Licet ergo haec in uicem scribere et hanc semper integram egereremateriam circumspicientibus tot milia hominum inquieta, qui ut aliquidpestiferi consequantur per mala nituntur in malum petuntque mox fugiendaaaut etiam fastidienda. (6) Cui enim adsecuto satis fuit quod optanti nimiumuidebatur? Non est, ut existimant homines, auida felicitas sed pusilla;itaque neminem satiat. Tu ista credis excelsa quia longe ab illis iaces;ei uero qui ad illa peruenit humilia sunt. Mentior nisi adhuc quaerit escendere: istud quod tu summum putas gradus est. (7) Omnes autem male habet ignorantia ueri. Tamquam ad bona feruntur decepti rumoribus, deinde mala esse aut inania aut minora quam sperauerint adepti ac multa passi uident; maiorque pars miratur ex interuallo fallentia, et uulgo bona pro magnis sunt.

(8) Hoc ne nobis quoque eueniat, quaeramus quid sit bonum. Varia eius interpretatio fuit, alius illud aliter expressit. Quidam ita finiunt: 'bonum est quod inuitat animos, quod ad se uocat'. Huic statim opponitur: quid si inuitat quidem sed in perniciem? scis quam multa mala blanda sint. Verum et ueri simile inter se differunt. Ita quod bonum est uero iungitur; non est enim bonum nisi uerum est. At quod inuitat ad se et ad licefacit uerisimile est: subrepat, sollicitat, adtrahit. (9) Quidam ita finierunt: 'bonum est quod ad petitionem sui mouet, uel quod impetum animi tendentis ad semouet'. 'Et huic idem opponitur; multa enim impetum animi mouent quae petantur petentium malo. Melius illi qui ita finierunt: 'bonum est quod ad se impetum animi secundum naturam mouet et ita demum petendum est cum coepit esse expetendum'. Iam et honestum est; hoc enim est perfecte petendum. (10) Locus ipse me admonet ut quid intersit inter bonum honestumque dicam. Aliquid inter se mixtum habent et inseparabile: nec potest bonum esse nisi cuius aliquid honesti inest, et honestum utique bonum est. Quid ergo inter duos interest? Honestum est perfectum bonum, quo beata uita completur, cuius contactu alia quoque bona fiunt. (11) Quod dico tale est: sunt quaedam neque bona neque mala, tamquam militia, legatio, iurisdictio. Haec cum honeste administrata sunt, bona esse incipiunt et ex dubio in bonum transeunt. Bonum societate honesti fit, honestum per se bonum est; bonum ex honesto fluit, honestum ex se est. Quod bonum est malum esse potuit; quod honestum est nisi bonum esse non potuit.

exiguum. Unde ad cognoscitur bonum? si perfecte secundum naturam est. (13) 'Fateris' inquis 'quod bonum est secundum naturam esse; haec eius proprietas est. Fateris et alia secundum naturam quidem esse sed bona non esse. Quomodo ergo illud bonum est cum haec non sint? quomodo ad aliam proprietatem peruenit cum utrique praecipuum illud commune sit, secundum naturam esse?'

(14) Ipsa scilicet magnitudine. Nec hoc nouum est, quaedam crescendo mutari. Infans fuit; factus est pubes: alia eius proprietas fit; ille enim irrationalis est, hic rationalis. Quaedam incremento non tantum in maius exeunt sed in aliud. (15) 'Non fit' inquit 'aliud quod maius fit. Utrum lagonam an dolium impleas uino, nihil refert: in utroque proprietas uini est. Et exiguum mellis pondus et magnum saporem non differt. ' Diuersa ponis exempla; in istis enim eadem qualitas est; quamuis augeantur, manet. (16) Quaedam amplificata in suo genere et in sua proprietate perdurant; quaedam post multa incrementa ultima demum uertit adiectio et nouam illis aliamque quam in qua fuerunt condicionem imprimit. Unus lapis facit fornicem, ille qui latera inclinata cuneauit et interuentus uinxit. Summa adiectio quare plurimum facit uel exigua? quia non auget sed implet. (17) Quaedam processu priorem exuunt formam et in nouam transeunt. Ubi aliquid animus diu protulit et magnitudinem eius sequendo lassatus est, infinitum coepit uocari; quod longe aliud factum est quam fuit cum magnum uideretur sed finitum. Eodem modo aliquid difficulter secari cogitauimus: nouissime crescente hac difficultate insecabile inuentum est. Sic ab eo quod uix et aegre mouebatur processimus ad immobile. Eadem ratione aliquid secundum naturam fuit: hoc in aliam proprietatem magnitudo sua transtulit bonum fecit. Vale.

(1) Quotiens aliquid inueni, non expecto donec dicas ‘in commune’: ipse mihi dico. Quid sit quod inuenerim quaeris? Sinum laxa, merum lucrum est. Docebo quomodo fieri diues celerrime possis. Quam ualde cupis audire! nec inmerito: ad maximas te diuitias compendiaria ducam. Opus erit tamen tibi creditore: ut negotiari possis, aes alienum facias oportet, sed nolo per intercessorem mutueris, nolo proxenetae nomen tuum iactent. (2) Paratum tibi creditorem dabo Catonianum illum, a te mutuum sumes. Quantulumcumque est, satis erit si, quidquid deerit, id a nobis petierimus. Nihil enim, mi Lucili, interest utrum non desideres an habeas. Summa rei in utroque eadem est: non torqueberis. Nec illud praecipio, ut aliquid naturae neges — contumax est, non potest uinci, suum poscit — sed ut quidquid naturam excedit scias precarium esse, non necessarium.

(3) Esurio: edendum est. Utrum hic panis sit plebeius an siligineus ad naturam nihil pertinet: illa uentrem non delectari uult sed impleri. Sitio: utrum haec aqua sit quam ex lacu proximo excepero an ea quam multa niue clusero, ut rigore refrigeretur alieno, ad naturam nihil pertinet. Illa hoc unum iubet, sitim extinguere; utrum sit aureum poculum an crustallinum an murreum an Tiburtinus calix an manus concaua, nihil refert. (4) Finem omnium rerum specta, et superuacua dimittes. Fames me appellat: ad proxima quaeque porrigatur manus; ipsa mihi commendabit quodcumque conprendero. Nihil contemnit esuriens. (5) Quid sit ergo quod me delectauerit quaeris? Videtur mihi egregie dictum, ‘sapiens diuitiarum naturalium est quaesitor acerrimus’. ‘Inanime’ inquis ‘lance muneras. Quid est istud? Ego iam paraueram fiscos; circumspiciebam in quod me mare negotiaturus inmitterem, quod publicum agitare, quas arcesserem merces.

Decipere est istud, docere paupertatem cum diuitias promiseris. ‘Ita tu pauperem iudicas cui nihil deest? ‘Suo’ inquis ‘et patientiae suae beneficio, non fortunae. ‘ Ideo ergo illum non iudicas diuitem quia diuitiae eius desinere non possunt? (6) Utrum mauis habere multum an satis? Qui multum habet plus cupit, quod est argumentum nondum illum satis habere; qui satis habet consecutus est quod

numquam diuiti contigit, finem. An has ideo non putas esse diuitias quia propter illas nemo proscriptus est? quia propter illas nulli uenenum filius, nulli uxor inpegit? quia in bello tutae sunt? quia in pace otiosae? quia nec habere illas periculosum est nec operosum disponere?

(7) 'At parum habet qui tantum non alget, non esurit, non sitit. ' Plus Iuppiter non habet. Numquam parum est quod satis est, et numquam multum est quod satis non est. Post Dareum et Indos pauper est Alexander. Mentior? Quaerit quod suum faciat, scrutatur maria ignota, in oceanum classes nouas mittit et ipsa, ut ita dicam, mundi claustra perrumpit. Quod naturae satis est homini non est. (8) Inuentus est qui concupisceret aliquid post omnia: tanta est caecitas mentium et tanta initiorum suorum unicuique, cum processit, obliuio. Ille modo ignobilis anguli non sine controuersia dominus tacto fine terrarum per suum rediturus orbem tristis est. (9) Neminem pecunia diuitem fecit, immo contra nulli non maiorem sui cupidinem incussit. Quaeris quae sit huius rei causa? plus incipit habere posse qui plus habet. Ad summam quem uoles mihi ex his quorum nomina cum Crasso Licinoque numerantur in medium licet protrahas; adferat census et quidquid habet et quidquid sperat simul computet: iste, si mihi credis, pauper est, si tibi, potest esse. (10) At hic qui se ad quod exigit natura composuit non tantum extra sensum est paupertatis sed extra metum. Sed ut scias quam difficile sit res suas ad naturalem modum coartare, hic ipse quem circumcidimus, quem tu uocas pauperem, habet aliquid et superuacui. (11) At excaecant populum et in se conuertunt opes, si numerati multum ex aliqua domo effertur, si multum auri tecto quoque eius inlinitur, si familia aut corporibus electa aut spectabilis cultu est. Omnium istorum felicitas in publicum spectat: ille quem nos et populo et fortunae subduximus beatus introsum est. (12) Nam quod ad illos pertinet apud quos falso diuitiarum nomen inuasit occupata paupertas, sic diuitias habent quomodo habere dicimur febrem, cum illa nos habeat. E contrario dicere solemus 'febris illum tenet': eodem modo dicendum est 'diuitiae illum tenent'. Nihil ergo monuisse te malim quam hoc, quod nemo monetur satis, ut omnia naturalibus desideriis metiaris, quibus aut gratis satis fiat aut paruo: tantum miscere uitia desideriis noli. (13) Quaeris quali mensa, quali argento, quam paribus ministeriis et leuibus adferatur cibus? Nihil praeter cibum natura desiderat.

Num, tibi cum fauces urit sitis, aurea quaeris
pocula? num esuriens fastidis omnia praeter
pauonem rhombumque?

(14) Ambitiosa non est fames, contenta desinere est; quo desinat non nimis curat. Infelicis luxuriae ista tormenta sunt: quaerit quemadmodum post saturitatem quoque esuriat, quemadmodum non impleat uentrem sed farciat, quemadmodum sitim prima potione sedatam reuocet. Egregie itaque Horatius negat ad sitim pertinere quo poculo (aquae) aut quam eleganti manu ministretur. Nam si pertinere ad te iudicas quam crinitus puer et quam perlucidum tibi poculum porrigat, non sitis.

(15) Inter reliqua hoc nobis praestitit natura praecipuum, quod necessitati fastidium excussit. Recipiunt superuacua dilectum: 'hoc parum decens, illud parum lautum, oculos hoc meos laedit'. Id actum est ab illo mundi conditore, qui nobis uiuendi iura discripsit, ut salui essemus, non ut delicati: ad salutem omnia parata sunt et in promptu, delicis omnia misere ac sollicite comparantur. (16) Utamur ergo hoc naturae beneficio inter magna numerando et cogitemus nullo nomine melius illam meruisse de nobis quam quia quidquid ex necessitate desideratur sine fastidio sumitur. Vale.

CXX. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM.

(1) Epistula tua per plures quaestiunculas uagata est sed in una constitit hanc expediri desiderat, quomodo ad nos boni honestique notitia peruenerit. Haec duo apud alios diuersa sunt, apud nos tantum diuisa. (2) Quid sithoc dicam. Bonum putant esse aliqui id quod utile est. Itaque hoc et diuitiiset equo et uino et calceo nomen inponunt; tanta fit apud illos boni uilitaset adeo in sordida usque descendit. Honestum putant cui ratio recti officiconstat, tamquam pie curatam patris senectutem, adiutam amici paupertatem, fortem expeditionem, prudentem moderatamque sententiam. (3) <nos> istaduo quidem facimus, sed ex uno.

Nihil est bonum nisi quod honestum est; quod honestum, est utique bonum. Superuacuum iudico adicere quid interista discriminis sit, cum saepe dixerim. Hoc unum dicam, nihil nobis uideri <bonum> quo quis et male uti potest; uides autem diuitiis, nobilitate, uiribus quam multi male utantur. Nunc ergo ad id reuertor de quo desideras dici, quomodo ad nos primaboni honestique notitia peruenerit. (4) Hoc nos natura docere non potuit: semina nobis scientiae dedit, scientiam non dedit. Quidam aiunt nos innotitiam incidisse, quod est incredibile, uirtutis alicui speciem casu occurrisse. Nobis uidetur obseruatio collegisse et rerum saepe factarum inter se conlatio; per analogian nostri intellectum et honestum et bonum iudicant. Hoc uerbum cum Latini grammatici ciuitate donauerint, ego damnandum non puto, <immo> in ciuitatem suam redigendum. Utar ergo illo non tantum tamquam recepto sed tamquam usitato. Quae sit haec analogia dicam. (5) Noueramus corporis sanitatem: ex hac cogitauimus esse aliquam et animi. Noueramus uires corporis: ex his collegimus esse et animi robur. Aliqua benigna facta, aliqua humana, aliqua fortia nos obstupescerant: haec coepimus tamquam perfecta mirari. Suberant illis multa uitia quae species conspicua licuius facti fulgorque celabat: haec dissimulauimus. Natura iubet augere laudanda, nemo non gloriam ultra uerum tulit: ex his ergo speciem ingentis boni traximus. (6) Fabricius Pyrrhi regis aurum reppulit maiusque regno iudicauit regias opes posse contemnere. Idem medico Pyrrhi promittente uenenum se regi daturum monuit Pyrrhum

Eiusdem animi fuit auro non uinci, ueneno non uincere. Admirati sumus ingentem uirum quem non regis, non contra regem promissa flexissent, boni exempli tenacem, quod difficillimum est, in bello innocentem, qui aliquod esse crederet etiam in hostes nefas, qui in summa paupertate quam sibi decus fecerat non aliter refugit diuitias quam uenenum. 'Viue' inquit 'beneficio meo, Pyrrhe, et gaude quod adhuc dolebas, Fabricium non posse corrumpi. ' (7) Horatius Cocles solus impleuit pontis angustias adimique a tergo sibi reditum, dummodo iter hosti auferretur, iussit et tam diu prementibus restitit donec reuulsa ingenti ruina tigna sonuerunt. Postquam respexit et extra periculum esse patriam periculo suo sensit, 'ueniat, si quis uult' inquit 'sic euntem sequi' iecitque se in praeceps et non minus sollicitus in illo rapido alueo fluminis ut armatus quam ut saluus exiret, retento armorum uictricium decorem tam tutus redit quam si ponte uenisset. (8) Haec et eiusmodi facta imaginem nobis ostendere uirtutis.

Adiciam quod mirum fortasse uideatur: mala interdum speciem honesti obtulere et optimum ex contrario enituit. Sunt enim, ut scis, uirtutibus uitia confinia, et perditis quoque ac turpibus recti similitudo est: sic mentitur prodigus liberalem, cum plurimum intersit utrum quis dare sciat an seruare nesciat. Multi, inquam, sunt, Lucili, qui non donant sed proiciunt: non uoco ego liberalem pecuniae suae iratum. Imitatur negligentia facilitatem, temeritas fortitudinem. (9) Haec nos similitudo coegit adtendere et distinguere specie quidem uicina, re autem plurimum inter se dissidentia. Dum obseruamus eos quos insignes egregium opus fecerat, coepimus adnotare quis rem aliquam generoso animo fecisset et magno impetu, sed semel. Hunc uidimus in bello fortem, in foro timidum, animose paupertatem ferentem, humiliter infamiam: factum laudauimus, contempsimus uirum.

facereposset, sed nisi recte facere non posset. (11) Intelleximus in illo perfectam esse uirtutem. Hanc in partes diuisimus: oportebat cupiditates refrenari, metus conprimi, facienda prouideri, reddenda distribui: comprehendimus temperantiam, fortitudinem, prudentiam, iustitiam et suum cuique dedimus officium. Ex quo ergo uirtutem intelleximus? ostendit illam nobis ordo eius et decor et constantia et omnium inter se actionum concordia et magnitudo super omnia efferens sese. Hinc intellecta est illa beata uita secundo defluens cursu, arbitrii sui tota. (12) Quomodo ergo hoc ipsum nobis apparuit? dicam. Numquam uir ille perfectus adeptusque uirtutem fortunae maledixit, numquam accidentia tristis exceperit, ciuem esse se uniuersi et militem credens labores uelut imperatos subit. Quidquid inciderat non tamquam malum aspernatusest et in se casu delatum, sed quasi delegatum sibi. 'Hoc qualecumque est' inquit 'meum est; asperum est, durum est, in hoc ipso nauemus operam. (13) Necessario itaque magnus apparuit qui numquam malis ingemuit, numquam de fato suo questus est; fecit multis intellectum sui et non aliter quam in tenebris lumen effulsit aduertitque in se omnium animos, cum esset placidus et lenis, humanis diuinisque rebus pariter aequus. (14) Habebat perfectum animum et ad summam sui adductum, supra quam nihil est nisi mens dei, ex quo pars et in hoc pectus mortale defluxit; quod numquam magis diuinum est quam ubi mortalitatem suam cogitat et scit in hoc natum hominem, ut uita defungeretur, nec domum esse hoc corpus sed hospitium, et quidem breue hospitium, quod relinquendum est ubi te grauem esse hospiti uideas.

potest? Nihil satis est morituris, immo morientibus; cotidie enim propius ab ultimo stamus, et illo unde nobiscadendum est hora nos omnis inpellit. (18) Vide in quanta caecitate mens nostra sit: hoc quod futurum dico cum maxime fit, et pars eius magna iam facta est; nam quod uiximus tempus eo loco est quo erat antequam uiximus. Erramus autem qui ultimum timemus diem, cum tantumdem in mortem singuli conferant. Non ille gradus lassitudinem facit in quo deficimus, sed ille profitetur; ad mortem dies extremus peruenit, accedit omnis; carpit nos illa, non corripit. Ideo magnus animus conscius sibi melioris naturae dat quidem operam ut in hac statione qua positus est honeste se atque industrie gerat, ceterum nihil horum quae circa sunt suum iudicat, sed ut commodatus sit, peregrinus et properans.

saepe decem seruos; modo reges atque tetrarchas,
omnia magna loquens, modo 'sit mihi mensa tripes et
concha salis puri, toga quae defendere frigus
quamuis crassa queat'. Decies centena dedisses
huic parco, paucis contento: quinque diebus
nil erat.

(21) Homines multi tales sunt qualem hunc describit Horatius Flaccus, numquam eundem, ne similem quidem sibi; adeo in diuersum aberrat. Multos dixi? prope est ut omnes sint. Nemo non cotidie et consilium mutat et uotum: modo uxorem uult habere, modo amicam, modo regnare uult, modo id agit ne quis sit officiosior seruus, modo dilatat se usque ad inuidiam, modo subsidit

contrahitur infra humilitatem uere iacentium, nunc pecuniam spargit, nunc rapit. (22) Sic maxime coarguitur animus imprudens: alius prodit atque alius et, quo turpius nihil iudico, inpar sibi est. Magnam rem puta unum hominem agere. Praeter sapientem autem nemo unum agit, ceteri multiformes sumus. Modo frugi tibi uidebimur et graues, modo prodigi et uani; mutamus subinde personam et contrariam ei sumimus quam exuimus. Hoc ergo a te exige, ut qualem institueris praestare te, talem usque ad exitum serues; effice ut possis laudari, si minus, ut agnosci. De aliquo quem here uidisti meriti dici potest 'hic qui est?': tanta mutatio est. Vale.

(3) Cum <quaero> quare hominemnatura produxerit, quare praetulerit animalibus ceteris, longe me iudicasmores reliquisse? falsum est. Quomodo enim scies qui habendi sint nisi quid homini sit optimum inueneris, nisi naturam eius inspexeris? Tunc demumintelleges quid faciendum tibi, quid uitandum sit, cum didiceris quid naturaetae debeas. (4) ‘Ego’ inquis ‘uolo discere quomodo minus cupiam, minustimeam. Superstitionem mihi excute; doce leue esse uanumque hoc quod felicitasdictur, unam illi syllabam facillime accedere. ‘ Desiderio tuo satis faciam:et uirtutes exhortabor et uitia conuerberabo. Licet aliquis nimium inmoderatumquein hac parte me iudicet, non desistam persequi nequitiam et adfectus efferatissimosinhibere et uoluptates ituras in dolorem conpescere et uotis obstrepere. Quidni? cum maxima malorum optauerimus, et ex gratulatione natum sit quidquidadloquimur.

(7) 'Ideo' inquit 'partes suas animalia apte mouent quia, si aliter mouerint, dolorem sensura sunt. Ita, ut uos dicitis, coguntur, metusque illa in rectum, non uoluntas mouet. 'Quod est falsum; tarda enim sunt quae necessitate inpelluntur, agilitas sponte motis est. Adeo autem non adigit illa ad hoc doloris timor ut in naturalem motum etiam dolore prohibente nitantur. (8) Sic infans qui stare meditatur et ferre se adsuescit, simul temptare uires suas coepit, cadit et cum fletu totiens resurgit donec seper dolorem ad id quod natura poscit exercuit. Animalia quaedam tergi durioris in uersa tam diu se torquent ac pedes exerunt et obliquant donec ad locum reponantur. Nullum tormentum sentit supina testudo, inquieta est tamend desiderio naturalis status nec ante desinit niti, quater se, quam in pedes constitit. (9) Ergo omnibus constitutionis suae sensus est et inde membrorum tam expedita tractatio, nec ullum maius indicium habemus cum hac illa aduiendum uenire notitia quam quod nullum animal ad usum sui rude est.

(14) ‘Dicitis’ inquit ‘omne animal primum constitutioni suae conciliari,hominis autem constitutionem rationalem esse et ideo conciliari hominemsibi non tamquam animali sed tamquam rationali; ea enim parte sibi carusest homo qua homo est. Quomodo ergo infans conciliari constitutioni rationalipotest, cum rationalis nondum sit?’ (15) Unicuique aetati sua constitutioest, alia infanti, alia puero, <alia adulescenti>, alia seni: omnesei constitutioni conciliantur in qua sunt. Infans sine dentibus est: huicconstitutioni suae conciliatur. Enati sunt dentes: huic constitutioni conciliatur. Nam et illa herba quae in segetem frugemque uentura est aliam constitutionemhabet tenera et uix eminens sulco, aliam cum conualuit et molli quidemculmo, sed quo ferat onus suum, constitit, aliam cum flauescit et ad areamspectat et spica eius induruit: in quamcumque constitutionem uenit, eamtuetur, in eam componitur. (16) Alia est aetas infantis, pueri, adulescentis,senis; ego tamen idem sum qui et infans fui et puer et adulescens. Sic,quamuis alia atque alia cuique constitutio sit, conciliatio constitutionissuae eadem est. Non enim puerum mihi aut iuuenem aut senem, sed me naturacommendat. Ergo infans ei constitutioni suae conciliatur quae tunc infantiest, non quae futura iuueni est; neque enim si aliquid illi maius in quodtranseat restat, non hoc quoque in quo nascitur secundum naturam est. (17) Primum sibi ipsum conciliatur animal; debet enim aliquid esse ad quod aliareferantur. Voluptatem peto. Cui? mihi; ergo mei curam ago. Dolorem refugio. Pro quo? pro me; ergo mei curam ago. Si omnia propter curam mei facio,ante omnia est mei cura. Haec animalibus inest cunctis, nec inseritur sedinnascitur. (18) Producit fetus suos natura, non abicit; et quia tutelacertissima ex proximo est, sibi quisque commissus est. Itaque, ut in prioribusepistulis dixi, tenera quoque animalia et materno utero uel ouo modo effusaquid sit infestum ipsa protinus norunt et mortifera deuitant; umbram quoquetransuolantium reformidant obnoxia auibis raptu uiuentibus. Nullum animalad uitam prodit sine metu mortis.

(19) ‘Quemadmodum’ inquit ‘editum animal intellectum habere

aut salutaris aut mortiferae rei potest? ‘ Primum quaeritur an intellegat, non quemadmodum intellegat. Esse autem illis intellectum ex eo apparet quod nihil amplius, si intellexerint, facient. Quid est quare pauonem, quare anserem gallinam non fugiat, at tanto minorem et ne notum quidem sibi accipitrem? quare pulli faem timeant, canem non timeant? Apparet illis inesse nocituris scientiam non experimento collectam; nam antequam possint experisci, cauent. (20) Deinde ne hoc casu existimes fieri, nec metuunt alia quam debent necumquam obliuiscuntur huius tutelae et diligentiae: aequalis est illis apernicioso fuga. Praeterea non fiunt timidiora uiuendo; ex quo quidem apparet non usu illa in hoc peruenire sed naturali amore salutis suae. Et tardum est et uarium quod usus docet: quidquid natura tradit et aequale omnibus est et statim. (21) Si tamen exigis, dicam quomodo omne animal perniciosum intellegere cogatur. Sentit se carne constare; itaque sentit quid sit quod secari caro, quo uri, quo obteri possit, quae sint animalia armata ad nocendum: horum speciem trahit inimicam et hostilem. Inter se ista coniuncta sunt; simul enim conciliatur saluti suae quidque et iuuatura petit, laesura formidat. Naturales ad utilia impetus, naturales a contrariis aspernationes sunt; sine ulla cogitatione quae hoc dictet, sine consilio fit quidquid natura praecepit. (22) Non uides quanta sit subtilitas apibus ad fingenda domicilia, quanta diuidui laboris obeundi undique concordia? Non uides quam nulli mortalium imitabilis illa aranei textura, quanti operis sit fila disponere, alia in rectum inmissa firmamenti loco, alia in orbem currentia ex densiora, qua minora animalia, in quorum perniciem illa tenduntur, uelut retibus implicata teneantur? (23) Nascitur ars ista, non discitur. Itaque nullum est animal altero doctius: uidebis araneorum pares telas, par in fauiculis angulorum omnium foramen. Incertum est et inaequabile quidquid ars tradit: ex aequo uenit quod natura distribuit. Haec nihil magis quam tutelam sui et eius peritiam tradidit, ideoque etiam simul incipiunt et discere et uiuere. (24) Nec est mirum cum eo nasci illa sine quo frustra nascerentur. Primum hoc instrumentum <in> illa natura contulit ad permanendum, (in) conciliationem et caritatem sui. Non poterant salua esse nisi uellent; nec (non) hoc per se profuturum erat, sed sine hoc nulla res profuisset. Sed in nullo dependes utilitatem sui, <ne> neglegentiam quidem; tacitis quoque et brutis, quamquam in cetera

sibi ipsa non deesse. Vale.

CXXII. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM.

(1) Detrimentum iam dies sensit; resiliuit aliquantum, ita tamen ut liberale adhuc spatium sit si quis cum ipso, ut ita dicam, die surgat. Officiosiormeliorque si quis illum expectat et lucem primam excipit: turpis qui altosole semisomnus iacet, cuius uigilia medio die incipit; et adhuc multishoc antelucanum est. (2) Sunt qui officia lucis noctisque peruerterintnec ante diducant oculos hesterna graues crapula quam adpetere nox coepit. Qualis illorum condicio dicitur quos natura, ut ait Vergilius, pedibusnostris subditos e contrario posuit, nosque ubi primus equis Oriens adflauit anhelis,

talis horum contraria omnibus non regio sed uita est. (3) Sunt quidam ineadem urbe antipodes qui, ut M. Cato ait, nec orientem umquam solem uideruntnec occidentem. Hos tu existimas scire quemadmodum uiuendum sit, qui nesciuntquando?

Et hi mortem timent, in quam se uiui condiderunt? tam infausti ominisquam nocturnae aues sunt. Licet in uino unguentoque tenebras suas exigant,licet epulis et quidem in multa fericula discoctis totum peruersae uigiliaetempus educant, non conuiuantur sed iusta sibi faciunt. Mortuis certe interdiuparentatur. At mehercules nullus agenti dies longus est. Extendamus uitam:huius et officium et argumentum actus est. Circumscribatur nox et aliquidex illa in diem transferatur. (4) Aues quae conuiuiis comparantur, ut in motaefacile pinguescant, in obscuro continentur; ita sine ulla exercitationeiacentibus tumor pigrum corpus inuadit et ~superba umbra~ iners saginasubcrescit. At istorum corpora qui se tenebris dicauerunt foeda uisuntur,quippe suspectior illis quam morbo pallentibus color est: languidi et euanidialbent, et in uiuis caro morticina est. Hoc tamen minimum in illis malorumdixerim: quanto plus tenebrarum in animo est! ille in se stupet, ille caligat,inuidet caecis. Quis umquam oculos tenebrarum causa habuit?

(5) Interrogas quomodo haec animo prauitas fiat auersandi diem et

totam uitam in noctem transferendi? Omnia uitia contra naturam pugnant, omniadebitum ordinem deserunt; hoc est luxuriae propositum, gaudere peruersis nec tantum discedere a recto sed quam longissime abire, deinde etiam e contrario stare. (6) Non uidentur tibi contra naturam uiuere <qui> ieiunibunt, qui uinum recipiunt inanibus uenis et ad cibum ebrii transeunt? Atqui frequens hoc adulescentium uitium est, qui uires excolunt <ut> in ipso paene balinei limine inter nudos bibant, immo potent et sudorem quem mouerunt potionibus crebris ac feruentibus subinde destringant. Postprandium aut cenam bibere uulgare est; hoc patres familiae rustici faciunt et uerae uoluptatis ignari: merum illud delectat quod non innatat cibo, quod libere penetrat ad neruos; illa ebrietas iuuat quae in uacuum uenit. (7) Non uidentur tibi contra naturam uiuere qui commutant cum feminis uestem? Non uiuunt contra naturam qui spectant ut pueritia splendeat tempore alieno? Quid fieri crudelius uel miserius potest? numquam uir erit, ut diu uirumpati possit? et cum illum contumeliae sexus eripuisse debuerat, non ne aetas quidem eripiet? (8) Non uiuunt contra naturam qui hieme concupiscunt rosam fomentoque aquarum calentium et locorum apta mutatione bruma lilium (florem uernum) exprimunt? Non uiuunt contra naturam qui pomaria in summis turribus serunt? quorum siluae in tectis domuum ac fastigiis nutant, inde ortis radicibus quo inprobe cacumina egissent? Non uiuunt contra naturam qui fundamenta thermarum in mari iaciunt et delicate natare ipsi sibi non uidentur nisi calentia stagna fluctu ac tempestate feriantur? (9) Cum instituerunt omnia contra naturae consuetudinem uelle, nouissime in totum ab illa desciscunt. ‘Lucet: somni tempus est. Quies est: nunc exerceamur, nunc gestemur, nunc prandeamus. Iam lux propius accedit: tempus est cenae. Non oportet id facere quod populus; res sordida est trita ac uulgari uia uiuere. Dies publicus relinquatur: proprium nobis ac peculiare mane fiat.’ (10) Isti uero mihi defunctorum loco sunt; quantulum enim a funere absunt et quidem acerbo qui ad faces et cereos uiuunt? Hanc uitam agere eodem tempore multos meminimus, inter quos et Acilium Butam praetorium, cui post patrimonium ingens consumptum Tiberius paupertatem confitenti ‘sero’ inquit ‘exspectatus es’. (11) Recitabat Montanus Iulius carmen, tolerabilis poeta et amicitia Tiberi notus et frigore. Ortus et occasus libentissime

inserebat; itaque cum indignaretur quidam illum totodie recitasse et negaret accedendum ad recitationes eius, Natta Pinarius ait: 'numquid possum liberalius agere? paratus sum illum audire ab ortu ad occasum'.

(12) Cum hos uersus recitasset
incipit ardentes Phoebus producere flammās,
spargere <se> rubicunda dies; iam tristis hirundo
argutis reditura cibos inmittere nidis
incipit et molli partitos ore ministrat,

Varus eques Romanus, M. Vinicii comes, cenarum bonarum adsectator, quasinprobitate linguae merebatur, exclamauit 'incipit Buta dormire'. (13) Deinde cum subinde recitasset

iam sua pastores stabulis armenta locarunt,

idem Varus inquit 'quid dicis? iam nox est? ibo et Butam salutabo'. Nihil erat notius hac eius uita in contrarium circumacta; quam, ut dixi, multi eodem tempore egerunt. (14) Causa autem est ita uiuendi quibusdam, non quia aliquid existiment noctem ipsam habere iucundius, sed quia nihil uiuat solitum, et grauis malae conscientiae lux est, et omnia concupiscentia ut contemnenti prout magno aut paruo empta sunt fastidio est lumen gratuitum. Praeterea luxuriosi uitam suam esse in sermonibus dum uiuunt uolunt; nam si tacetur, perdere se putant operam. Itaque aliquotiens faciunt quod excitet famam. Multi bona comedunt, multi amicas habent: ut inter istos nomen inuenias, opus est non tantum luxuriosam rem sed notabilem facere; in tam occupata ciuitate fabulas uulgaris nequitia non inuenit. (15) Pedonem Albinouanum narrantem audieramus (erat autem fabulator elegantissimus) habitasse sesupra domum Sex. Papini. Is erat ex hac turba lucifugarum. 'Audio' inquit 'circa horam tertiam noctis flagellorum sonum. Quaero quid faciat: dicitur rationes accipere. Audio circa horam sextam noctis clamorem concitatum. Quaero quid sit: dicitur uocem exercere.

Quaero circa horam octauam noctisquid sibi ille sonus rotarum uelit: gestari dicitur. (16) Circa lucem discurritur,pueri uocantur, cellarii, coqui tumultuantur. Quaero quid sit: dicitur mulsum et halicam poposcisse, a balneo exisse. “Excedebat” inquit “huiusdiem cena. “ Minime; ualde enim frugaliter uiuebat; nihil consumebat nisi noctem. ‘ Itaque Peto dicentibus illum quibusdam avarum et sordidum ‘uos’inquit ‘illum et lychnobium dicetis’. (17) Non debes admirari si tantas inuenis uitiorum proprietates: uariasunt, innumerabiles habent facies, conprendi eorum genera non possunt. Simplex recti cura est, multiplex prauis, et quantumuis nouas declinationes capit. Idem moribus euenit: naturam sequentium faciles sunt, soluti sunt,exiguas differentias habent; (his) distorti plurimum et omnibus et inter se dissident. (18) Causa tamen praecipua mihi uidetur huius morbi uitae communis fastidium. Quomodo cultu se a ceteris distinguunt, quomodo elegantiae cenarum, munditiae uehiculorum, sic uolunt separari etiam temporum dispositione. Nolunt solita peccare quibus peccandi praemium infamia est. Hanc petunt omnes isti qui, ut ita dicam, retro uiuunt. (19) Ideo, Lucili, tenenda nobis uia est quam natura praescripsit, nec ab illa declinandum: illamsequentibus omnia facilia, expedita sunt, contra illam nitentibus non alia uita est quam contra aquam remigantibus. Vale.

(1) Itinere confectus incommodo magis quam longo in Albanum meum multanocte perueni: nihil habeo parati nisi me. Itaque in lectulo lassitudinempono, hanc coci ac pistoris moram boni consulo. Mecum enim de hoc ipsoloquor, quam nihil sit graue quod leuiter excipias, quam indignandum nihil<dum nihil> ipse indignando adstruas. (2) Non habet panem meus pistor;sed habet uilicus, sed habet atriensis, sed habet colonus. ‘Malum panem’inquis. Expecta: bonus fiet; etiam illum tibi tenerum et siligineum famesreddet. Ideo non est ante edendum quam illa imperat. Expectabo ergo necante edam quam aut bonum panem habere coepero aut malum fastidire desiero. (3) Necessarium est paruo adsuescere: multae difficultates locorum, multaetemporum etiam locupletibus et instructis ~aduobus optantem prohibent et~occurrent. Quidquid uult habere nemo potest, illud potest, nolle quod nonhabet, rebus oblatis hilaris uti. Magna pars libertatis est bene moratusuenter et contumeliae patiens. (4) Aestimari non potest quantam uoluptatemcapiam ex eo quod lassitudo mea sibi ipsa adquiescit: non unctores, nonbalineum, non ullum aliud remedium quam temporis quaero. Nam quod laborcontraxit quies tollit. Haec qualiscumque cena aditali iucundior erit. (5) ~Aliquod enim~ experimentum animi sumpsi subito; hoc enim est simpliciuset uerius. Nam ubi se praeparauit et indixit sibi patientiam, non aequaeapparet quantum habeat uerae firmitatis: illa sunt certissima argumentaquae ex tempore dedit, si non tantum aequus molestias sed placidus aspexit;si non excanduit, non litigauit; si quod dari deberet ipse sibi non desiderandosuppleuit et cogitauit aliquid consuetudini suae, sibi nihil deesse.

iam sic peregrinantur ut illos Numidarum praecurrat equitatus, ut agmen cursorum antecedit: turpe est nullos esse qui occurrentis uia deiciant, (ut) qui honestum hominem uenire magno puluere ostendant. Omnes iam mulos habent qui crustallina et murrina et caelata magnorum artificum manu portent: turpe est uideri eas te habere sarcinas solas quae tuto concuti possint. Omnium paedagogia oblita facie uehantur ne sol, ne frigus teneram cutem laedat: turpe est neminem esse in comitatu tuo puerorum cuius sana facies medicamentum desideret.

(8) Horum omnium sermo uitandus est: hi sunt qui uitia tradunt et alio aliunde transferunt. Pessimum genus (horum) hominum uidebatur qui uerbagescunt: sunt quidam qui uitia gestant. Horum sermo multum nocet; nam etiam si non statim proficit, semina in animo relinquit sequiturque nos etiam cum ab illis discessimus, resurrecturum postea malum. (9) Quemadmodum qui audierunt synphoniam ferunt secum in auribus modulationem illam ad dulcedinem cantuum, quae cogitationes impedit nec ad seria patitur intendi, sic adulatorum et praua laudantium sermo diutius haeret quam auditur. Nec facile est animo dulcem sonum excutere: prosequitur et durat et ex interuallo recurrit. Ideo claudendae sunt aures malis uocibus et quidem primis; nam cum initium fecerunt admissaeque sunt, plus audient. (10) Inde ad haec perueniunt uerba: 'uirtus et philosophia et iustitia uerborum inanium crepitus est; una felicitas est bene uitae facere; esse, bibere, frui patrimonio, hoc est uiuere, hoc est se mortalem esse meminisse. Fluunt dies et irreparabilis uita decurrit. Dubitamus? Quid iuuat sapere et aetati non semper uoluptates recepturae interim, dum potest, dum poscit, ingerere frugalitatem? ~Eo~ mortem praecurre et quidquid illa ablatura est iam sibi ~interere~. Non amicam habes, non puerum qui amicae moueat inuidiam; cottidie sobrius prodis; sic cenas tamquam ephemeridem patri adprobaturus: non est istud uiuere sed alienae uitae interesse. (11) Quanta dementia est heredis sui res procurare et sibi negare omnia ut tibi ex amico inimicum magna faciat hereditas; plus enim gaudebit tua morte quo plus acceperit. Istos tristes et superciliosos alienae uitae censors, suae hostes, publicos paedagogos assis ne feceris nec dubitaueris bonam uitam quam opinionem bonam malle. ' (12) Hae uoces non aliter fugiendae sunt quam illae quas Ulixes nisi alligatus praeteruehinoluit. Idem possunt: abducunt a patria, a parentibus, ab amicis, a uirtutibus, et ~inter spem uitam misera nisi turpis inludunt~. Quanto satius est rectumsequi limitem et eo se perducere ut ea demum sint tibi iucunda quae honesta! (13) Quod adsequi poterimus si scierimus duo esse genera rerum quae nos aut inuitent aut fugent. Inuitant (ut) diuitiae, uoluptates, forma, ambitio, cetera blanda et adridentia: fugat labor, mors, dolor, ignominia, uictus adstrictior. Debemus itaque exerceri ne haec timeamus, ne illa cupiamus. In contrarium pugnemus et ab inuitantibus recedamus, aduersus potentia concitemur.

(14) Non uides quam diuersus sit descendendum habitus et ascendendum? qui per primum eunt resupinant corpora, qui in arduum, incumbunt. Nam si descendas, pondus suum in priorem partem dare, si ascendas, retro abducere, cum uitio, Lucili, consentire est. In uoluptates descenditur, in aspera et dura subeundum est: hic impellamus corpora, illic refrenemus. (15) Hoc nunc me existimas dicere, eos tantum perniciosos esse auribus nostris qui uoluptatem laudant, qui doloris metus, per se formidabiles res, incutiunt? Illos quoque nocere nobis existimo qui nos sub specie Stoicae sectae hortantur ad uitia. Hoc enim iactant: solum sapientem et doctum esse amatorem. ‘Solutus aptus est ad hanc artem; aequus conbibendi et conuiuendi sapiens est peritissimus. Quaeramus ad quam usque aetatem iuuenes amandisint. ‘ (16) Haec Graecae consuetudini data sint, nos ad illa potius aures derigamus: ‘nemo est casus bonus: discenda uirtus est. Voluptas humilis res et pusilla est et in nullo habenda pretio, communis cum mutis animalibus, ad quam minima et contemptissima aduolant. Gloria uanum et uolubile quiddam est auraque mobilius. Paupertas nulli malum est nisi repugnanti. Mors malum non est: quid <sit> quaeris? sola ius aequum generis humani. Superstitio error insanus est: amandos timet, quos colit uiolat. Quid enim interest utrum deos neget an infames? ‘ (17) Haec discenda, immo ediscenda sunt: non debet excusationes uitio philosophia suggerere. Nullam habet spem salutis aeger quem ad intemperantiam medicus hortatur. Vale.

CXXIV. SENECA LVCILIO SVO SALVTEM.

(1) Possum multa tibi ueterum praecepta referre,
ni refugis tenuisque piget cognoscere curas.

Non refugis autem nec ulla te subtilitas abigit: non est elegantiae tuae tantum magna sectari, sicut illud probo, quod omnia ad aliquem profectum redigis et tunc tantum offenderis ubi summa subtilitate nihil agitur. Quod ne nunc quidem fieri laborabo.

Quaeritur utrum sensu comprehendatur an intellectu bonum; huic adiunctum est in mutis animalibus et infantibus non esse. (2) Quicumque uoluptatem in summo ponunt sensibile iudicant bonum, nos contra intellegibile, qui illud animo damus. Si de bono sensus iudicarent, nullam uoluptatem reiceremus; nulla enim non inuitat, nulla non delectat; et e contrario nullum dolorem uolentes subiremus; nullus enim non offendit sensum. (3) Praeterea non essent digni reprehensione quibus nimium uoluptas placet quibusque summus est doloris timor. Atqui inprobamus gulae ac libidini addictos et contemni musillos qui nihil uiriliter ausuri sunt doloris metu. Quid autem peccant si sensibus, id est iudicibus boni ac mali, parent? his enim tradidistis ad petitionis et fugae arbitrium. (4) Sed uidelicet ratio isti rei praeposita est: illa quemadmodum de beata uita, quemadmodum de uirtute, de honesto, sic et de bono maloque constituit. Nam apud istos uilissimae parti datur de meliore sententia, ut de bono pronuntiet sensus, obtusa res et hebes et in homine quam in aliis animalibus tardior. (5) Quid si quis uellet non oculis sed tactu minuta discernere? Subtilior adhuc acies nulla quam oculorum et intentior daret bonum malumque dinoscere. Vides in quanta ignorantia ueritatis uersetur et quam humi sublimia ac diuina proiecerit apud quem de summo, bono malo, iudicat tactus. (6) ‘Quemadmodum’ inquit ‘omnis scientia atque ars aliquid debet habere manifestum sensuque comprehensum ex quo oriatur et crescat, sic beata uita fundamentum et initium a manifestis ducit et eo quod sub sensum cadat. Nempe uos a manifestis beatam uitam initium sui capere dicitis. ‘ (7) Dicimus beata esse quae secundum naturam sint; quid autem secundum naturam sit palam et protinus apparet, sicut quid sit integrum. Quod secundum naturam est, quod contigit protinus nato, non dico bonum, sed initium boni. Tu summum bonum, uoluptatem, infantiae donas, ut inde incipiat nascens quo consummatus homo peruenit; cacumen radicis loco ponis. (8) Si quis diceret illum in materno utero latentem, sexus quoque incerti, tenerum et imperfectum et informem iam in aliquo bono esse, aperte uideretur errare. Atqui quantulum interest inter eum qui cum (que) maxime uitam accipit et illum qui maternorum uiscerum latens onus est? Uterque, quantum ad intellectum boni ac mali, aequè maturus est, et non magis infans adhuc boni capax est quam arbor aut mutum aliquod animal. Quare autem bonum in arbore animalique muto non est? quia nec ratio. Ob hoc in infante quoque non est; nam et huic deest. Tunc ad bonum perueniet cum ad rationem peruenerit. (9) Est aliquod inrationale animal, est aliquod nondum rationale, est rationale sed imperfectum: in nullo horum bonum, ratio illud secum adfert. Quid ergo inter ista quaeret tuli distat? In eo quod inrationale est numquam erit bonum; in eo quod nondum rationale est tunc esse bonum non potest; <in eo quod rationale est> sed imperfectum iam potest bonum <esse>, sed non est. (10) Ita dico, Lucili: bonum non in quolibet corpore, non in qualibet aetate inuenitur et tantum abest ab infantia quantum a primo ultimum, quantum ab initio perfectum; ergo nec in tenero, modo coalescente corpusculo est. Quidni non sit? non magis quam in semine. (11) Hoc sic dicas: aliquod arboris ac sati bonum nouimus: hoc non est in prima fronde quae emissa cum maxime solum rumpit. Est aliquod bonum tritici: hoc nondum est in herba lactente nec cum folliculo se exerit spica mollis, sed cum frumentum aestas et debita maturitas coxit. Quemadmodum omnis natura bonum suum nisi consummata non profert, ita hominis bonum non est in homine nisi cum illi ratio perfecta est. (12) Quod autem hoc bonum? Dicam: liber animus, erectus, alia subiciens sibi, se nulli. Hoc bonum adeo non recipit infantia ut pueritia non speret, adulescentia inprobe speret; bene agitur cum senectute si ad illud longo studio intentoque peruenit. Si hoc est bonum, et intellegibile est. (13) ‘Dixisti’ inquit ‘aliquod bonum esse arboris, aliquod herbae; potest ergo aliquod esse et infantis. ‘ Verum bonum nec in arboribus nec in mutis animalibus: hoc quod in illis bonum est precario bonum dicitur. ‘Quod est?’ inquis. Hoc quod secundum cuiusque naturam

est. Bonum quidem cadere in mutum animal nullo modo potest; felicius meliorisque naturae est. Nisi ubi rationi locus est, bonum non est. (14) Quattuor hae naturae sunt, arboris, animalis, hominis, dei: haec duo, quae rationalia sunt, eandem naturam habent, illo diuersa sunt quod alterum immortale, alterum mortale est. Ex his ergo unius bonum natura perficit, dei scilicet, alterius cura, hominis. Cetera tantum in sua natura perfecta sunt, non uere perfecta, a quibus abest ratio. Hoc enim demum perfectum est quod secundum uniuersam naturam perfectum, uniuersa autem natura rationalis est: cetera possunt in suo genere esse perfecta. (15) In quo non potest beata uita esse nec id potest quo beata uita efficitur; beata autem uita bonis efficitur. Inmuto animali non est beata uita <nec id quo beata uita> efficitur: inmuto animali bonum non est. (16) Mutum animal sensu comprehendit praesentia; praeteritorum reminiscitur cum <in> id incidit quo sensus admoneretur, tamquam equus reminiscitur uiae cum ad initium eius admotus est. In stabulo quidem nulla illi uia est quamuis saepe calcatae memoria (est) . Tertium uero tempus, id est futurum, ad muta non pertinet. (17) Quomodo ergo potest eorum uideri perfecta natura quibus usus perfecti temporis non est? Tempus enim tribus partibus constat, praeterito, praesente, uenturo. Animalibus tantum quod breuissimum est <et> in transcurso datum, praesens: praeteriti rara memoria est nec umquam reuocatur nisi praesentium occursum. (18) Non potest ergo perfectae naturae bonum in imperfecta esse natura, aut si natura talis (habet) hoc habet, habent et sata. Nec illud nego, ad ea quae uidentur secundum naturam magnos esse mutis animalibus impetus et concitatos, sed inordinatos ac turbidos; numquam autem aut inordinatum est bonum aut turbidum. (19) ‘Quid ergo?’ inquis ‘muta animalia perturbate et indisposite mouentur?’ Dicerem illa perturbate et indisposite moueri si natura illorum ordinem caperet: nunc mouentur secundum naturam suam. Perturbatum enim id est quod esse aliquando et non perturbatum potest; sollicitum est quod potest esse securum. Nulli uitium est nisi cui uirtus potest esse: mutis animalibus talis ex natura sua motus est. (20) Sed ne te diu teneam, erit aliquod bonum in muto animali, erit aliqua uirtus, erit aliquid perfectum, sed nec bonum absolute nec uirtus nec perfectum. Haec enim rationalibus solis contingunt, quibus datum est scire quare, quatenus, quemadmodum.

Ita bonum in nullo est nisi in quo ratio. (21) Quo nunc pertineat ista disputatio quaeris, et quid animo tuo profutura sit? Dico: et exercet illum et acuit et utique aliquid acturum occupatione honesta tenet. Prodest autem etiam quo moratur ad praua properantes. Sed <et> illud dico: nullo modo prodesse possum magis quam si tibi bonum tuum ostendo, si te a mutis animalibus separo, si cum deo pono. (22) . (23) Vis tu relictis in quibus uinci te necesse est, dum in aliena niteris, ad bonum reuerti tuum? Quod est hoc? animus scilicet emendatus ac purus, aemulator dei, super humana se extollens, nihil extra se sui ponens. Rationale animal es. Quod ergo in te bonum est? perfecta ratio. Hanc tu ad suum finem hinc euoca, <sine> in quantum potest plurimum crescere. (24) Tunc beatum esse te iudica cum tibi ex te gaudium omne nascetur, cum uisis quae homines eripiunt, optant, custodiunt, nihil inueneris, nondico quod malis, sed quod uelis. Breuem tibi formulam dabo qua te metiaris, qua perfectum esse iam sentias: tunc habebis tuum cum intelleges infelicissimos esse felices. Vale.

1. Exegisti a me, Nouate, ut scriberem quemadmodum posset ira leniri, nec inmerito mihi uideris hunc praecipue adfectum pertimuisse maxime ex omnibus taetrum ac rabidum. Ceteris enim aliquid quieti placidique inest, hic totus concitatus et in impetu est, doloris armorum, sanguinis suppliciorum minime humana furens cupiditate, dum alteri noceat sui neglegens, in ipsa inruens tela et ultionis secum ultorem tracturae auidus.

2. Quidam itaque e sapientibus uiris iram dixerunt breuem insaniam; aequae enim inpotens sui est, decoris oblita, necessitudinum immemor, in quod coepit pertinax et intenta, rationi consiliisque praeclusa, uanis agitata causis, ad dispectum aequi uerique inhabilis, ruinis simillima quae super id quod oppressere franguntur. 3. Vt scias autem non esse sanos quos ira possedit, ipsum illorum habitum intueri; nam ut furentium certa indicia sunt audax et minax uultus, tristis frons, torua facies, citatus gradus, inquietae manus, color uersus, crebra et uehementius acta suspiria, ita irascentium eadem signa sunt: 4. flagrant ac micant oculi, multus ore toto rubor exaestuante ab imis praecordiis sanguine, labra quatiuntur, dentes comprimuntur, horrent ac surriguntur capilli, spiritus coactus ac stridens, articulorum se ipsos torquentium sonus, gemitus mugitusque et parum explanatis uocibus sermo praeruptus et conplosae saepius manus et pulsata humus pedibus et totum concitum corpus magnasque irae minas agens, foeda uisu et horrenda facies deprauantium se atque intumescentium — nescias utrum magis detestabile uitium sit an deforme.

5. Cetera licet abscondere et in abdito alere: ira se profert et in faciem exit, quantoque maior, hoc efferuescit manifestius. Non uides ut omnium animalium, simul ad nocendum insurrexerunt, praecurrant notae ac tota corpora solitum quietumque egrediantur habitum et feritatem suam exasperent? 6. Spumant apris ora, dentes acuuntur adtritu, taurorum cornua iactantur in uacuum et harena pulsu pedum spargitur, leones fremunt, inflantur iritatis colla serpentibus, rabidarum canum tristis aspectus est: nullum est animal tam horrendum tam perniciosumque natura ut non appareat in illo, simul ira inuasit, nouae feritatis accessio. 7. Nec ignoro ceteros quoque adfectus uix occultari, libidinem metumque et audaciam dare sui signa et posse praenosci; neque enim ulla uehementior intrat agitatio quae nihil moueat in uultu. Quid ergo interest? quod alii adfectus apparent, hic eminent.

II.

1. Iam uero si effectus eius damnaque intueri uelis, nulla pestis humano generi pluris stetit. Videbis caedes ac uenena et reorum mutuas sordes et urbium clades et totarum exitia gentium et principum sub ciuili hasta capita uenalia et subiectas tectis faces nec intra moenia coercitos ignes sed ingentia spatia regionum hostili flamma relucentia. 2. Aspice nobilissimarum ciuitatum fundamenta uix notabilia: has ira deiecit. Aspice solitudines per multa milia sine habitatore desertas: has ira exhaustit. Aspice tot memoriae proditos duces mali exempla fati: alium ira in cubili suo confodit, alium intra sacra mensae iura percussit, alium intra leges celebrisque spectaculum fori lancinauit, alium filii parricidio dare sanguinem iussit, alium seruili manu regalem aperire iugulum, alium in cruce membra diffindere. 3. Et adhuc singulorum supplicia narro: quid si tibi libuerit, relictis in quos ira uiritim exarsit, aspicere caesas gladio contiones et plebem inmisso milite contrucidatam et in perniciem promiscuam totos populos capitis damna<tos> * * *?

Ira omnia ex optimo et iustissimo in contrarium mutat. Quemcumque obtinuerit, nullius eum meminisse officii sinit: da eam patri, inimicus est; da filio, parricida est; da matri, nouerca est; da ciui, hostis est; da regi, tyrannus est.

Lactant. De Ira Dei 17.13

Ira est cupiditas ulciscendae iniuriae aut, ut ait Posidonius, cupiditas puniendi eius a quo te inique putes laesum. Quidam ita finierunt: ira est incitatio animi ad nocendum ei qui aut nocuit aut nocere uoluit.

4. * * * tamquam aut curam nostram deserentibus aut auctoritatem contemnentibus. Quid? gladiatoribus quare populus irascitur, et tam inique ut iniuriam putet quod non libenter pereunt? contemni se iudicat et uultu gestu ardore ex spectatore in aduersarium uertitur. 5. Quidquid est tale, non est ira, sed quasi ira, sicut puerorum qui, si ceciderunt, terram uerberari uolunt et saepe ne sciunt quidem cur irascantur, sed tantum irascuntur, sine causa et sine iniuria, non tamen sine aliqua iniuriae specie nec sine aliqua poenae cupiditate. Deluduntur itaque imitatione plagarum et simulatis deprecantium lacrimis placantur et falsa ultione falsus dolor tollitur.

III.

1. 'Irascimur' inquit 'saepe non illis qui laeserunt, sed iis qui laesuri sunt; ut scias iram non ex iniuria nasci.' Verum est irasci nos laesuris, sed ipsa cogitatione nos laedunt, et iniuriam qui facturus est iam facit. 2. 'Vt scias' inquit 'non esse iram poenae cupiditatem, infirmissimi saepe potentissimis irascuntur nec poenam concupiscunt quam non sperant.' Primum diximus cupiditatem esse poenae exigendae, non facultatem; concupiscunt autem homines et quae non possunt. Deinde nemo tam humilis est qui poenam uel summi hominis sperare non possit: ad nocendum <omnes> potentes sumus.

3. Aristotelis finitio non multum a nostra abest; ait enim iram esse cupiditatem doloris reponendi. Quid inter nostram et hanc finitionem intersit, exequi longum est. Contra utramque dicitur feras irasci nec iniuria inritatas nec poenae dolorisue alieni causa; nam etiam si haec efficiunt, non haec petunt. 4. Sed dicendum est feras ira carere et omnia praeter hominem; nam cum sit inimica rationi, nusquam tamen nascitur nisi ubi rationi locus est. Impetus habent ferae, rabiem feritatem incursum, iram quidem non magis quam luxuriam, et in quasdam uoluptates intemperantiores homine sunt. 5. Non est quod credas illi qui dicit:

cerua nec armentis incurrere fortibus ursi.

Irasci dicit incitari, inpingi; irasci quidem non magis sciunt quam ignoscere. 6. Muta animalia humanis adfectibus carent, habent autem similes illis quosdam impulsus; alioqui, si amor in illis esset et odium, esset amicitia et simultas, dissensio et concordia; quorum aliqua in illis quoque extant uestigia, ceterum humanorum pectorum propria bona malaque sunt. 7. Nulli nisi homini concessa prudentia est, prouidentia diligentia cogitatio, nec tantum uirtutibus humanis animalia sed etiam uitiiis prohibita sunt. Tota illorum ut extra ita intra forma humanae dissimilis est; regium est illud et principale aliter ductum. Vt uox est quidem, sed non explanabilis et perturbata et uerborum inefficax, ut lingua, sed deuincta nec in motus uarios soluta, ita ipsum principale parum subtile, parum exactum. Capit ergo uisus speciesque rerum quibus ad impetus euocetur, sed turbidas et confusas. 8. Ex eo procursus illorum tumultusque uehementes sunt, metus autem sollicitudinesque et tristitia et ira non sunt, sed his quaedam similia; ideo cito cadunt et mutantur in contrarium et, cum acerrime saeuierunt expaueruntque, pascuntur, et ex fremitu discursuque uesano statim quies soporque sequitur.

IV.

1. Quid esset ira satis explicitum est. Quo distet ab iracundia apparet: quo ebrius ab ebrioso et timens a timido. Iratus potest non esse iracundus: iracundus potest aliquando iratus non esse. 2. Cetera quae pluribus apud Graecos nominibus in species iram distinguunt, quia apud nos uocabula sua non habent, praeteribo, etiam si amarum nos acerbumque dicimus, nec minus stomachosum rabiosum clamosum difficilem asperum, quae omnia irarum differentiae sunt; inter hos morosum ponas licet, delicatum iracundiae genus. 3. Quaedam enim sunt irae quae intra clamorem considant, quaedam non minus pertinaces quam frequentes, quaedam saevae manu uerbis parciores, quaedam in uerborum maledictorumque amaritudinem effusae; quaedam ultra querellas et auersationes non exeunt, quaedam altae grauesque sunt et introrsus uersae: mille aliae species sunt mali multiplicis.

V.

1. Quid esset ira quaesitum est, an in ullum aliud animal quam in hominem caderet, quo ab iracundia distaret, quot eius species essent: nunc quaeramus an ira secundum naturam sit et an utilis atque ex aliqua parte retinenda.

2. An secundum naturam sit manifestum erit, si hominem inspexerimus. Quo quid est mitius, dum in recto animi habitus est? quid autem ira crudelius est? Quid homine aliorum amantius? quid ira infestius? Homo in adiutorium mutuum genitus est, ira in exitium; hic congregari uult, illa discedere, hic prodesse, illa nocere, hic etiam ignotis succurrere, illa etiam carissimos petere; hic aliorum commodis uel inpendere se paratus est, illa in periculum, dummodo deducat, descendere. 3. Quis ergo magis naturam rerum ignorat quam qui optimo eius operi et emendatissimo hoc ferum ac perniciosum uitium adsignat? Ira, ut diximus, auida poenae est, cuius cupidinem inesse pacatissimo hominis pectori minime secundum eius naturam est. Beneficiis enim humana uita constat et concordia, nec terrore sed mutuo amore in foedus auxiliumque commune constringitur.

VI.

1. 'Quid ergo? non aliquando castigatio necessaria est?' Quidni? sed haec sine ira, cum ratione; non enim nocet sed medetur specie nocendi. Quemadmodum quaedam hastilia detorta ut corrigamus adurimus et adactis cuneis, non ut frangamus sed ut explicemus, elidimus, sic ingenia uitio praua dolore corporis animique corrigimus. 2. Nempe medicus primo in leuibus uitiiis temptat non multum ex cotidiana consuetudine inflectere et cibis potionibus exercitationibus ordinem inponere ac uoletudinem tantum mutata uitae dispositione firmare. Proximum est ut modus proficiat. Si modus et ordo non proficit, subducit aliqua et circumcidit; si ne adhoc quidem respondet, interdicit cibis et abstinentia corpus exonerat; si frustra molliora cesserunt, ferit uenam membrisque, si adhaerentia nocent et morbum diffundunt, manus adfert; nec ulla dura uidetur curatio cuius salutaris effectus est. 3. Ita legum praesidem ciuitatisque rectorem decet, quam diu potest, uerbis et his mollioribus ingenia curare, ut facienda suadeat cupiditatemque honesti et aequi conciliet animis faciatque uitiorum odium, pretium uirtutum; transeat deinde ad tristiore orationem, qua moneat adhuc et exprobet; nouissime ad poenas et has adhuc leues, reuocabiles decurrat; ultima supplicia sceleribus ultimis ponat, ut nemo pereat nisi quem perire etiam pereuntis intersit. 4. Hoc uno medentibus erit dissimilis, quod illi quibus uitam non potuerunt largiri facilem exitum praestant, hic damnatos cum dedecore et traductione uita exigit, non quia delectetur ullius poena — procul est enim a sapiente tam inhumana feritas — sed ut documentum omnium sint, et quia uiui noluerunt prodesse, morte certe eorum res publica utatur.

Non est ergo natura hominis poenae adpetens; ideo ne ira quidem secundum naturam hominis, quia poenae adpetens est. 5. Et Platonis argumentum adferam — quid enim nocet alienis uti ea parte qua nostra sunt? 'Vir bonus' inquit 'non laedit.' Poena laedit; bono ergo poena non conuenit, ob hoc nec ira, quia poena irae conuenit. Si uir bonus poena non gaudet, non gaudebit ne eo quidem adfectu cui poena uoluptati est; ergo non est naturalis ira.

1. Numquid, quamuis non sit naturalis ira, adsumenda est, quia utilis saepe fuit? Extollit animos et incitat, nec quicquam sine illa magnificum in bello fortitudo gerit, nisi hinc flamma subdita est et hic stimulus peragitauit misitque in pericula audaces. Optimum itaque quidam putant temperare iram, non tollere, eoque detracto quod exundat ad salutarem modum cogere, id uero retinere sine quo languebit actio et uis ac uigor animi resoluatur. 2. Primum facilius est excludere perniciose quam regere et non admittere quam admissa moderari; nam cum se in possessione posuerunt, potentiora rectore sunt nec recidi se minuiue patiuntur. 3. Deinde ratio ipsa, cui freni traduntur, tam diu potens est quam diu diducta est ab adfectibus; si miscuit se illis et inquinauit, non potest continere quos summouere potuisset. Commota enim semel et excussa mens ei seruit quo inpellitur. 4. Quarundam rerum initia in nostra potestate sunt, ulteriora nos ui sua rapiunt nec regressum relinquunt. Vt in praeceps datis corporibus nullum sui arbitrium est nec resistere morariue deiecta potuerunt, sed consilium omne et paenitentiam inreuocabilis praecipitatio abscidit et non licet eo non peruenire quo non ire licuisset, ita animus, si in iram amorem aliosque se proiecit adfectus, non permittitur reprimere impetum; rapiat illum oportet et ad imum agat pondus suum et uitiorum natura procliuis.

VIII.

1. Optimum est primum inritamentum irae protinus spernere ipsisque repugnare seminibus et dare operam ne incidamus in iram. Nam si coepit ferre transuersos, difficilis ad salutem recursus est, quoniam nihil rationis est ubi semel adfectus inductus est iusque illi aliquod uoluntate nostra datum est: faciet de cetero quantum uolet, non quantum permiseris. 2. In primis, inquam, finibus hostis arcendus est; nam cum intrauit et portis se intulit, modum a captiuis non accipit. Neque enim sepositus est animus et extrinsecus speculatur adfectus, ut illos non patiatul ultra quam oportet procedere, sed in adfectum ipse mutatur ideoque non potest utilem illam uim et salutarem proditam iam infirmatamque reuocare. 3. Non enim, ut dixi, separatas ista sedes suas diductasque habent, sed adfectus et ratio in melius peiusque mutatio animi est. Quomodo ergo ratio occupata et oppressa uitii resurget, quae irae cessit? aut quemadmodum ex confusione se liberabit in qua peiorum mixtura praeualuit? 4. ‘Sed quidam’ inquit ‘in ira se continent.’ Vtrum ergo ita ut nihil faciant eorum quae ira dictat an ut aliquid? Si nihil faciunt, apparet non esse ad actiones rerum necessariam iram, quam uos, quasi fortius aliquid ratione haberet, aduocabatis. 5. Denique interrogo: ualentior est quam ratio an infirmior? Si ualentior, quomodo illi modum ratio poterit inponere, cum parere nisi inbecilliora non soleant? Si infirmior est, sine hac per se ad rerum effectus sufficit ratio nec desiderat inbecillioris auxilium. 6. ‘At irati quidam constant sibi et se continent.’ Quando? cum iam ira euanescit et sua sponte decedit, non cum in ipso feruore est; tunc enim potentior est. 7. ‘Quid ergo? non aliquando in ira quoque et dimittunt incolumes intactosque quos oderunt et a nocendo abinent?’ Faciunt: quando? cum adfectus repercussit adfectum et aut metus aut cupiditas aliquid inpetrauit. Non rationis tunc beneficio quieuit, sed adfectuum infida et mala pace.

IX.

1. Deinde nihil habet in se utile nec acuit animum ad res bellicas; numquam enim uirtus uitio adiuuanda est se contenta. Quotiens impetu opus est, non irascitur sed exurgit et in quantum putauit opus esse concitatur remittiturque, non aliter quam quae tormentis exprimuntur tela in potestate mittentis sunt in quantum torqueantur.

2. 'Ira' inquit Aristoteles 'necessaria est, nec quicquam sine illa expugnari potest, nisi illa inplet animum et spiritum accendit; utendum autem illa est non ut duce sed ut milite.' Quod est falsum; nam si exaudit rationem sequiturque qua ducitur, iam non est ira, cuius proprium est contumacia; si uero repugnat et non ubi iussa est quiescit sed libidine ferociaque prouehitur, tam inutilis animi minister est quam miles qui signum receptui neglegit.

3. Itaque si modum adhiberi sibi patitur, alio nomine appellanda est, desit ira esse, quam effrenatam indomitamque intellego; si non patitur, perniciosa est nec inter auxilia numeranda: ita aut ira non est aut inutilis est.

4. Nam si quis poenam exigit non ipsius poenae auidus sed quia oportet, non est adnumerandus iratis. Hic erit utilis miles qui scit parere consilio; adfectus quidem tam mali ministri quam duces sunt.

X.

1. Ideo numquam adsumet ratio in adiutorium inprouidos et uiolentos impetus apud quos nihil ipsa auctoritatis habeat, quos numquam comprimere possit nisi pares illis similisque opposuerit, ut irae metum, inertiae iram, timori cupiditatem. 2. Absit hoc a uirtute malum, ut umquam ratio ad uitia confugiat! Non potest hic animus fidele otium capere, quatiatur necesse est fluctueturque, qui malis suis tutus est, qui fortis esse nisi irascitur non potest, industrius nisi cupit, quietus nisi timet: in tyrannide illi uiuendum est in alicuius adfectus uenienti seruitutem. Non pudet uirtutes in clientelam uitiorum demittere? 3. Deinde desinit quicquam posse ratio, si nihil potest sine adfectu, et incipit par illi similisque esse. Quid enim interest, si aequae adfectus inconsulta res est sine ratione quam ratio sine adfectu inefficax? Par utrumque est, ubi esse alterum sine altero non potest. Quis autem sustineat adfectum exaequare rationi? 4. 'Ita' inquit 'utilis adfectus est, si modicus est.' Immo si natura utilis est. Sed si inpatiens imperii rationisque est, hoc dumtaxat moderatione consequetur, ut quo minor fuerit minus noceat; ergo modicus adfectus nihil aliud quam malum modicum est.

XI.

1. 'Sed aduersus hostes' inquit 'necessaria est ira.' Nusquam minus: ubi non effusos esse oportet impetus sed temperatos et oboedientes. Quid enim est aliud quod barbaros tanto robustiores corporibus, tanto patientiores laborum comminuat nisi ira infestissima sibi? Gladiatores quoque ars tuetur, ira denudat. 2. Deinde quid opus est ira, cum idem proficiat ratio? An tu putas uenatorem irasci feris? atqui et uenientis excipit et fugientis persequitur, et omnia illa sine ira facit ratio. Quid Cimbrorum Teutonorumque tot milia superfusa Alpibus ita sustulit ut tantae cladis notitiam ad suos non nuntius sed fama pertulerit, nisi quod erat illis ira pro uirtute? Quae ut aliquando propulit strauitque obuia, ita saepius sibi exitio est. 3. Germanis quid est animosius? Quid ad incursum acrius? Quid armorum cupidius, quibus innascuntur innutriunturque, quorum unica illis cura est in alia negligentibus? Quid induratus ad omnem patientiam, ut quibus magna ex parte non tegimenta corporum prouisa sint, non suffugia aduersus perpetuum caeli rigorem? 4. Hos tamen Hispani Gallicque et Asiae Syriaeque molles bello uiri, antequam legio uisatur, caedunt ob nullam aliam rem opportunos quam iracundiam. Agedum illis corporibus, illis animis delicias luxum opes ignorantibus da rationem, da disciplinam: ut nil amplius dicam, necesse erit certe nobis mores Romanos repetere. 5. Quo alio Fabius adfectas imperii uires recreauit quam quod cunctari et trahere et morari sciit, quae omnia irati nesciunt? Perierat imperium, quod tunc in extremo stabat, si Fabius tantum ausus esset quantum ira suadebat: habuit in consilio fortunam publicam et aestimatis uiribus, ex quibus iam perire nihil sine uniuerso poterat, dolorem ultionemque seposuit, in unam utilitatem et occasiones intentus; iram ante uicit quam Hannibalem. 6. Quid Scipio? non relicto Hannibale et Punico exercitu omnibusque quibus irascendum erat bellum in Africam transtulit, tam lentus ut opinionem luxuriae segnitiaeque malignis daret? 7. Quid alter Scipio? non circa Numantiam multum diuque sedit et hunc suum publicumque dolorem aequo animo tulit, diutius Numantiam quam Carthaginem uinci? Dum circumuallat et includit hostem, eo compulit ut ferro ipsi suo caderent. 8. Non est itaque utilis ne in proeliis quidem aut bellis ira; in temeritatem enim prona est et pericula, dum inferre uult, non cauet. Illa certissima est uirtus quae se diu multumque circumpexit et rexit et ex lento ac destinato prouexit.

XII.

1. 'Quid ergo?' inquit 'uir bonus non irascitur, si caedi patrem suum uiderit, si rapi matrem?' Non irascetur, sed uindicabit, sed tuebitur. Quid autem times ne parum magnus illi stimulus etiam sine ira pietas sit? Aut dic eodem modo: 'quid ergo? cum uideat secari patrem suum filiumue, uir bonus non flebit nec linquetur animo?' Quae accidere feminis uidemus, quotiens illas leuis periculi suspicio perculit. 2. Officia sua uir bonus exequetur inconfusus, intrepidus; et sic bono uiro digna faciet ut nihil faciat uiro indignum. Pater caedetur: defendam; caesus est: exequar, quia oportet, non quia dolet. 3. 'Irascuntur boni uiri pro suorum iniuriis.' Cum hoc dicis, Theophraste, quaeris inuidiam praeceptis fortioribus et relicto iudice ad coronam uenis: quia unusquisque in eiusmodi suorum casu irascitur, putas iudicatuos homines id fieri debere quod faciunt; fere enim iustum quisque adfectum iudicat quem agnoscit. 4. Sed idem faciunt, si calda non bene praebetur, si uitreum fractum est, si calceus luto sparsus est. Non pietas illam iram sed infirmitas mouet, sicut pueris, qui tam parentibus amissis flebunt quam nucibus. 5. Irasci pro suis non est pii animi sed infirmi: illud pulchrum dignumque, pro parentibus liberis amicis ciuibus prodire defensorem ipso officio ducente, uolentem iudicantem prouidentem, non impulsus et rabidum. Nullus enim adfectus uindicandi cupidior est quam ira, et ob id ipsum ad uindicandum inhabilis: praerapida et amens, ut omnis fere cupiditas, ipsa sibi in id in quod properat opponitur. Itaque nec in pace nec in bello umquam bono fuit; pacem enim similem belli efficit, in armis uero obliuiscitur Martem esse communem uenitque in alienam potestatem dum in sua non est.

6. Deinde non ideo uitia in usum recipienda sunt quia aliquando aliquid effecerunt; nam et febres quaedam genera uoletudinis leuant, nec ideo non ex toto illis caruisse melius est: abominandum remedi genus est sanitatem debere morbo. Simili modo ira, etiam si aliquando ut uenenum et praecipitatio et naufragium ex inopinato profuit, non ideo salutaris iudicanda est; saepe enim saluti fuere pestifera.

XIII.

1. Deinde quae habenda sunt, quo maiora eo meliora et optabiliora sunt. Si iustitia bonum est, nemo dicet meliorem futuram si quid detractum ex ea fuerit; si fortitudo bonum est, nemo illam desiderabit ex aliqua parte deminui. 2. Ergo et ira quo maior hoc melior; quis enim ullius boni accessionem recusauerit? Atqui augeri illam inutile est; ergo et esse; non est bonum quod incremento malum fit.

3. 'Vtilis' inquit 'ira est, quia pugnaciores facit.' Isto modo et ebrietas; facit enim proteruos et audaces multique meliores ad ferrum fuere male sobrii; isto modo dic et phrenesin atque insaniam uiribus necessariam, quia saepe ualidiores furor reddit. 4. Quid? non aliquotiens metus ex contrario fecit audacem, et mortis timor etiam inertissimos excitauit in proelium? Sed ira ebrietas metus aliaque eiusmodi foeda et caduca inritamenta sunt nec uirtutem instruunt, quae nihil uitii eget, sed segnem alioqui animum et ignauum paulum adleuant. 5. Nemo irascendo fit fortior, nisi qui fortis sine ira non fuisset; ita non in adiutorium uirtutis uenit, sed in uicem. Quid quod si bonum esset ira, perfectissimum quemque sequeretur? Atqui iracundissimi infantes senesque et aegri sunt, et inualidum omne natura querulum est.

XIV.

1. 'Non potest' inquit 'fieri' Theophrastus 'ut non uir bonus irascatur malis.' Isto modo quo melior quisque, hoc iracundior erit: uide ne contra placidior solutusque adfectibus et cui nemo odio sit. 2. Peccantis uero quid habet cur oderit, cum error illos in eiusmodi delicta compellat? Non est autem prudentis errantis odisse; alioqui ipse sibi odio erit. Cogitet quam multa contra bonum morem faciat, quam multa ex iis quae egit ueniam desiderent: iam irascetur etiam sibi. Neque enim aequus iudex aliam de sua, aliam de aliena causa sententiam fert. 3. Nemo, inquam, inuenietur qui se possit absolvere, et innocentem quisque se dicit respiciens testem, non conscientiam. Quanto humanius mitem et patrium animum praestare peccantibus et illos non persequi sed reuocare! Errantem per agros ignorantia uiae melius est ad rectum iter admouere quam expellere.

XV.

1. Corrigendus est itaque qui peccat et admonitione et ui, et molliter et aspere, meliorque tam sibi quam aliis faciendus non sine castigatione, sed sine ira; quis enim cui medetur irascitur? At corrigi nequeunt nihilque in illis lene aut spei bonae capax est: tollantur e coetu mortalium facturi peiora quae contingunt, et quo uno modo possunt desinant mali esse, sed hoc sine odio. 2. Quid enim est cur oderim eum cui tum maxime prosum cum illum sibi eripio? Num quis membra sua tunc odit cum abscidit? Non est illa ira, sed misera curatio. Rabidos effligimus canes et trucem atque inmansuetum bouem occidimus et morbidis pecoribus, ne gregem polluant, ferrum demittimus; portentosos fetus extinguimus, liberos quoque, si debiles monstrosique editi sunt, mergimus; nec ira sed ratio est a sanis inutilia discernere. 3. Nil minus quam irasci punientem decet, cum eo magis ad emendationem poena proficiat, si iudicio ~lata~ est. Inde est quod Socrates seruo ait ‘caederem te, nisi irascerer’. Admonitionem serui in tempus sanius distulit, illo tempore se admonuit. Cuius erit tandem temperatus adfectus, cum Socrates non sit ausus se irae committere?

XVI.

1. Ergo ad coercionem errantium sceleratorumque irato castigatore non opus est; nam cum ira delictum animi sit, non oportet peccata corrigere peccantem. ‘Quid ergo? non irascar latroni? Quid ergo? non irascar uenefico?’ Non; neque enim mihi irascor, cum sanguinem mitto. Omne poenae genus remedi loco admoueo. 2. ‘Tu adhuc in prima parte uersaris errorum, nec grauiter laberis sed frequenter: obiurgatio te primum secreta deinde publicata emendare temptabit. Tu longius iam processisti quam ut possis uerbis sanari: ignominia contineberis. Tibi fortius aliquid et quod sentias inurendum est: in exilium et loca ignota mitteris. In te duriora remedia iam solida nequitia desiderat: et uincula publica et carcer adhibebitur. 3. Tibi insanabilis animus et sceleribus scelera contexens, et iam non causis, quae numquam malo defuturæ sunt, inpelleris, sed satis tibi est magna ad peccandum causa peccare; perbibisti nequitiam et ita uisceribus inmiscuisti ut nisi cum ipsis exire non possit; olim miser mori quaeris: bene de te merebimur, auferemus tibi istam qua uexas uexaris insaniam et per tua alienaque uolutato supplicia id quod unum tibi bonum superest repraesentabimus, mortem.’ Quare irascar cui cum maxime prosum? interim optimum misericordiae genus est occidere. 4. Si intrassem ualetudinarium exercitus [et sciens] aut domus diuitis, non idem imperassem omnibus per diuersa aegrotantibus: uaria in tot animis uitia uideo et ciuitati curandae adhibitus sum; pro cuiusque morbo medicina quaeratur, hunc sanet uerecundia, hunc peregrinatio, hunc dolor, hunc egestas, hunc ferrum. 5. Itaque et, si peruersa induenda magistratui uestis et conuocanda classico contio est, procedam in tribunal non furens nec infestus sed uultu legis et illa sollemnia uerba leni magis grauique quam rabida uoce concipiam et <lege> agi iubebo non iratus sed seuerus; et cum ceruicem noxio imperabo praecidi et cum parricidas insuam culleo et cum mittam in supplicium militare et cum Tarpeio proditorem hostemue publicum inponam, sine ira eo uultu animoque ero quo serpentes et animalia uenenata percutio. 6. ‘Iracundia opus est ad puniendum.’ Quid? tibi lex uidetur irasci iis quos non nouit, quos non uidit, quos non futuros sperat? Illius itaque sumendus est animus, quae non irascitur sed constituit. Nam si bono uiro ob mala facinora irasci conuenit, et ob secundas res malorum hominum inuidere conueniet. Quid enim est indignius quam florere quosdam et eos indulgentia fortunae abuti quibus nulla potest satis mala inueniri fortuna? Sed tam commoda illorum sine inuidia uidebit quam scelera sine ira; bonus iudex damnat improbanda, non odit. 7. 'Quid ergo? non, cum eiusmodi aliquid sapiens habebit in manibus, tangetur animus eius eritque solito commotior?' Fateor: sentiet leuem quendam tenuemque motum; nam, ut dicit Zenon, in sapientis quoque animo, etiam cum uulnus sanatum est, cicatrix manet. Sentiet itaque suspiciones quasdam et umbras adfectuum, ipsis quidem carebit.

XVII.

1. Aristoteles ait adfectus quosdam, si quis illis bene utatur, pro armis esse. Quod uerum foret, si uelut bellica instrumenta sumi deponique possent induentis arbitrio: haec arma quae Aristoteles uirtuti dat ipsa per se pugnant, non expectant manum, et habent, non habentur. 2. Nil aliis instrumentis opus est, satis nos instruxit ratione natura. Hoc dedit telum, firmum perpetuum obsequens, nec anceps nec quod in dominum remitti posset. Non ad prouidendum tantum, sed ad res gerendas satis est per se ipsa ratio; etenim quid est stultius quam hanc ab iracundia petere praesidium, rem stabilem ab incerta, fidelem ab infida, sanam ab aegra? 3. Quid quod <ad> actiones quoque, in quibus solis opera iracundiae uidetur necessaria, multo per se ratio fortior est? Nam cum iudicauit aliquid faciendum, in eo perseuerat; nihil enim melius inuentura est se ipsa quo mutetur; ideo stat semel constitutis. 4. Iram saepe misericordia retro egit; habet enim non solidum robur sed uanum tumorem uiolentisque principiis utitur, non aliter quam qui a terra uenti surgunt et fluminibus paludibusque concepti sine pertinacia uehementes sunt: 5. incipit magno impetu, deinde deficit ante tempus fatigata, et, quae nihil aliud quam crudelitatem ac noua genera poenarum uersauerat, cum animaduertendum est, iam [ira] fracta lenisque est. Adfectus cito cadit, aequalis est ratio. 6. Ceterum etiam ubi perseuerauit ira, nonnumquam, si plures sunt qui perire meruerunt, post duorum triumue sanguinem occidere desinit. Primi eius ictus acres sunt: sic serpentium uenena a cubili erepentium nocent, innoxii dentes sunt cum illos frequens morsus exhaustit. 7. Ergo non paria patiuntur qui paria commiserant, et saepe qui minus commisit plus patitur, quia recentiori obiectus est. Et in totum inaequalis est: modo ultra quam oportet excurrit, modo citerius debito resistit; sibi enim indulget et ex libidine iudicat et audire non uult et patrocinio non relinquit locum et ea tenet quae inuasit et eripi sibi iudicium suum, etiam si prauum est, non sinit.

XVIII.

1. Ratio utrique parti tempus dat, deinde aduocationem et sibi petit, ut excutiendae ueritati spatium habeat: ira festinat. Ratio id iudicare uult quod aequum est: ira id aequum uideri uult quod iudicauit. 2. Ratio nil praeter ipsum de quo agitur spectat: ira uanis et extra causam obuersantibus commouetur. Vultus illam securior, uox clarius, sermo liberior, cultus delicatior, aduocatio ambitiosior, fauor popularis exasperant; saepe infesta patrono reum damnat; etiam si ingeritur oculis ueritas, amat et tuetur errorem; coargui non uult, et in male coeptis honestior illi pertinacia uidetur quam paenitentia.

3. Cn. Piso fuit memoria nostra uir a multis uitis integer, sed prauus et cui placebat pro constantia rigor. Is cum iratus duci iussisset eum qui ex commeatu sine commilitone redierat, quasi interfecisset quem non exhibebat, roganti tempus aliquid ad conquirendum non dedit. Damnatus extra uallum productus est et iam ceruicem porrigebat, cum subito apparuit ille commilito qui occisus uidebatur. 4. Tunc centurio supplicio praepositus condere gladium speculatorem iubet, damnatum ad Pisonem reducit redditurus Pisoni innocentiam; nam militi fortuna reddiderat. Ingenti concursu deducuntur complexi alter alterum cum magno gaudio castrorum commilitones. Conscondit tribunal furens Piso ac iubet duci utrumque, et eum militem qui non occiderat et eum qui non perierat. 5. Quid hoc indignius? quia unus innocens apparuerat, duo peribant. Piso adiecit et tertium; nam ipsum centurionem qui damnatum reducerat duci iussit. Constituti sunt in eodem illo loco perituri tres ob unius innocentiam. 6. O quam sollers est iracundia ad fingendas causas furoris! 'Te' inquit 'duci iubeo, quia damnatus es; te, quia causa damnationis commilitoni fuisti; te, quia iussus occidere imperatori non paruisti.' Excogitauit quemadmodum tria crimina faceret, quia nullum inuenerat.

XIX.

1. Habet, inquam, iracundia hoc mali: non uult regi. Irascitur ueritati ipsi, si contra uoluntatem suam apparuit; cum clamore et tumultu et totius corporis iactatione quos destinauit insequitur adiectis conuiciis maledictisque. 2. Hoc non facit ratio; sed si ita opus est, silens quietaque totas domus funditus tollit et familias rei publicae pestilentes cum coniugibus ac liberis perdit, tecta ipsa diruit et solo exaequat et inimica libertati nomina exstirpat: hoc non frendens nec caput quassans nec quicquam indecorum iudici faciens, cuius tum maxime placidus esse debet et in statu uultus cum magna pronuntiat. 3. 'Quid opus est' inquit Hieronymus 'cum uelis caedere aliquem, tua prius labra mordere?' Quid si ille uidisset desilientem de tribunali proconsulem et fasces lictori auferentem et suamet uestimenta scindentem, quia tardius scindebantur aliena? 4. Quid opus est mensam euertere? quid pocula adfligere? quid se in columnas inpingere? quid capillos auellere, femur pectusque percutere? ~Quantam~ iram putas, quae, quia in alium non tam cito quam uult erumpit, in se reuertitur? Tenentur itaque a proximis et rogantur ut sibi ipsi placentur.

5. Quorum nil facit quisquis uacuis ira meritam cuique poenam iniungit. Dimittit saepe eum cuius peccatum deprendit: si paenitentia facti spem bonam pollicetur, si intellegit non ex alto uenire nequitiam sed summo, quod aiunt, animo inhaerere, dabit inpunitatem nec accipientibus nocituram nec dantibus; 6. nonnumquam magna scelera leuius quam minora compescet, si illa lapsu, non crudelitate commissa sunt, his inest latens et operta et inueterata calliditas; idem delictum in duobus non eodem malo adficiet, si alter per negligentiam admisit, alter curauit ut nocens esset. 7. Hoc semper in omni animaduersione seruabit, ut sciat alteram adhiberi ut emendet malos, alteram ut tollat; in utroque non praeterita sed futura intuebitur (nam, ut Plato ait, nemo prudens punit quia peccatum est, sed ne peccetur; reuocari enim praeterita non possunt, futura prohibentur) et quos uolet nequitiae male cedentis exempla fieri palam occidet, non tantum ut pereant ipsi, sed ut alios pereundo deterreant. 8. Haec cui expendenda aestimandaque sunt,

XX.

1. Ne illud quidem iudicandum est, aliquid iram ad magnitudinem animi conferre. Non est enim illa magnitudo: tumor est; nec corporibus copia uitiosi umoris intentis morbus incrementum est sed pestilens abundantia. 2. Omnes quos uecors animus supra cogitationes extollit humanas altum quiddam et sublime spirare se credunt; ceterum nil solidi subest, sed in ruinam prona sunt quae sine fundamentis creuere. Non habet ira cui insistat; non ex firmo mansuroque oritur, sed uentosa et inanis est, tantumque abest a magnitudine animi quantum a fortitudine audacia, a fiducia insolentia, ab austeritate tristitia, a seueritate crudelitas. 3. Multum, inquam, interest inter sublimem animum et superbum. Iracundia nihil amplum decorumque molitur; contra mihi uidetur ueternosi et infelicis animi, inbecillitatis sibi consciï, saepe indolescere, ut exulcerata et aegra corpora quae ad tactus leuissimos gemunt. Ita ira muliebre maxime ac puerile uitium est. ‘At incidit et in uiros.’ Nam uiris quoque puerilia ac muliebria ingenia sunt. 4. ‘Quid ergo? non aliquae uoces ab iratis emittuntur quae magno emissae uideantur animo?’ <Immo> ueram ignorantibus magnitudinem, qualis illa dira et abominanda ‘oderint, dum metuant’. Sullano scias saeculo scriptam. Nescio utrum sibi peius optauerit ut odio esset an ut timori. ‘Oderint.’ Occurrit illi futurum ut execrentur insidientur opprimant: quid adiecit? Di illi male faciant, adeo repperit dignum odio remedium. ‘Oderint’ — quid? ‘dum pareant’? Non. ‘dum probent’? Non. Quid ergo? ‘dum timeant’. Sic ne amari quidem uellem. 5. Magno hoc dictum spiritu putas? Falleris; nec enim magnitudo ista est sed immanitas. Non est quod credas irascentium uerbis, quorum strepitus magni, minaces sunt, intra mens pauidissima. 6. Nec est quod existimes uerum esse quod apud disertissimum uirum <T.> Liuium dicitur: ‘uir ingenii magni magis quam boni.’ Non potest istud separari: aut et bonum erit aut nec magnum, quia magnitudinem animi inconcussam intellego et introrsus solidam et ab imo parem firmamque, qualis inesse malis ingeniis non potest. 7. Terribilia enim esse et tumultuosa et exitiosa possunt: magnitudinem quidem, cuius firmamentum roburque bonitas est, non habebunt. 8. Ceterum sermone, conatu et omni extra paratu facient magnitudinis fidem; eloquentur aliquid quod tu magni <animi> putes, sicut C. Caesar, qui iratus caelo quod obstreperetur pantomimis, quos imitabatur studiosius quam spectabat, quodque comessatio sua fulminibus terreretur (prorsus parum certis), ad pugnam uocauit Iouem et quidem sine missione, Homericum illum exclamans uersum:

9. Quanta dementia fuit! Putauit aut sibi noceri ne ab Ioue quidem posse aut se nocere etiam Ioui posse. Non puto parum momenti hanc eius uocem ad incitandas coniuratorum mentes addidisse; ultimae enim patientiae uisum est eum ferre qui Iouem non ferret.

XXI.

1. Nihil ergo in ira, ne cum uidetur quidem uehemens et deos hominesque despiciens, magnum, nihil nobile est. Aut si uidetur alicui magnum animum ira producere, uideatur et luxuria — ebore sustineri uult, purpura uestiri, auro tegi, terras transferre, maria concludere, flumina praecipitare, nemora suspendere; 2. uideatur et auaritia magni animi — aceruis auri argentique incubat et prouinciarum nominibus agros colit et sub singulis uilicis latiores habet fines quam quos consules sortiebantur; 3. uideatur et libido magni animi — transnat freta, puerorum greges castrat, sub gladium mariti uenit morte contempta; uideatur et ambitio magni animi — non est contenta honoribus annuis; si fieri potest, uno nomine occupare fastus uult, per omnem orbem titulos disponere. 4. Omnia ista, non refert in quantum procedant extendantque se, angusta sunt, misera depressa; sola sublimis et excelsa uirtus est, nec quicquam magnum est nisi quod simul placidum.

1. Primus liber, Nouate, benigniorem habuit materiam; facilis enim in procliui uitiorum decursus est. Nunc ad exiliora ueniendum est; quaerimus enim ira utrum iudicio an impetu incipiat, id est utrum sua sponte moueatur an quemadmodum pleraque quae intra nos <non> insciis nobis oriuntur. 2. Debet autem in haec se demittere disputatio ut ad illa quoque altiora possit exsurgere; nam et in corpore nostro ossa neruique et articuli, firmamenta totius et uitalia, minime speciosa uisu, prius ordinantur, deinde haec ex quibus omnis in faciem aspectumque decor est; post haec omnia, qui maxime oculos rapit, color ultimus perfecto iam corpore adfunditur.

3. Iram quin species oblata iniuriae moueat non est dubium; sed utrum speciem ipsam statim sequatur et non accedente animo excurrat, an illo adsentiente moueatur quaerimus. 4. Nobis placet nihil illam per se audere sed animo adprobante; nam speciem capere acceptae iniuriae et ultionem eius concupiscere et utrumque coniungere, nec laedi se debuisse et uindicari debere, non est eius impetus qui sine uoluntate nostra concitatur. Ille simplex est, hic compositus et plura continens: intellexit aliquid, indignatus est, damnauit, ulciscitur: haec non possunt fieri, nisi animus eis quibus tangebatur adsensus est.

II.

1. 'Quorsus' inquis 'haec quaestio pertinet?' Vt sciamus quid sit ira; nam si inuitis nobis nascitur, numquam rationi succumbet. Omnes enim motus qui non uoluntate nostra fiunt inuicti et ineuitabiles sunt, ut horror frigida adpersis, ad quosdam tactus aspernatio; ad peiores nuntios surriguntur pili et rubor ad inproba uerba suffunditur sequiturque uertigo praerupta cernentis: quorum quia nihil in nostra potestate est, nulla quominus fiant ratio persuadet. 2. Ira praeceptis fugatur; est enim uoluntarium animi uitium, non ex his quae condicione quadam humanae sortis eueniunt ideoque etiam sapientissimis accidunt, inter quae et primus ille ictus animi ponendus est qui nos post opinionem iniuriae mouet. 3. Hic subit etiam inter ludicra scaenae spectacula et lectiones rerum uetustarum. Saepe Clodio Ciceronem expellenti et Antonio occidenti uidemur irasci. Quis non contra Mari arma, contra Sullae proscriptionem concitatur? Quis non Theodoto et Achillae et ipsi puero non puerile auso facinus infestus est? 4. Cantus nos nonnumquam et citata modulatio instigat Martiusque ille tubarum sonus; mouet mentes et atrox pictura et iustissimorum suppliciorum tristis aspectus; 5. inde est quod adridemus ridentibus et contristat nos turba maerentium et efferuescimus ad aliena certamina. Quae non sunt irae, non magis quam tristitia est quae ad conspectum mimici naufragii contrahit frontem, non magis quam timor qui Hannibale post Cannas moenia circumsidente lectorum percurrit animos, sed omnia ista motus sunt animorum moueri nolentium, nec adfectus sed principia proludentia adfectibus. 6. Sic enim militaris uiri in media pace iam togati aures tuba suscitatur equosque castrenses erigit crepitus armorum. Alexandrum aiunt Xenophanto canente manum ad arma misisse.

III.

1. Nihil ex his quae animum fortuito inpellunt adfectus uocari debet: ista, ut ita dicam, patitur magis animus quam facit. Ergo adfectus est non ad oblatas rerum species moueri, sed permittere se illis et hunc fortuitum motum prosecui. 2. Nam si quis pallorem et lacrimas procidentis et iniritationem umoris obsceni altumue suspirium et oculos subito acriores aut quid his simile indicium adfectus animique signum putat, fallitur nec intellegit corporis hos esse pulsus. 3. Itaque et fortissimus plerumque uir dum armatur expalluit et signo pugnae dato ferocissimo militi paulum genua tremuerunt et magno imperatori antequam inter se acies arietarent cor exiluit et oratori eloquentissimo dum ad dicendum componitur summa riguerunt. 4. Ira non moueri tantum debet sed excurrere; est enim impetus; numquam autem impetus sine adsensu mentis est, neque enim fieri potest ut de ultione et poena agatur animo nesciente. Putauit se aliquis laesum, uoluit ulcisci, dissuadente aliqua causa statim resedit: hanc iram non uoco, motum animi rationi parentem: illa est ira quae rationem transsilit, quae secum rapit. 5. Ergo prima illa agitatio animi quam species iniuriae incussit non magis ira est quam ipsa iniuriae species; ille sequens impetus, qui speciem iniuriae non tantum accepit sed adprobauit, ira est, concitatio animi ad ultionem uoluntate et iudicio pergentis. Numquam dubium est quin timor fugam habeat, ira impetum; uide ergo an putes aliquid sine adsensu mentis aut peti posse aut caueri.

IV.

1. Et ut scias quemadmodum incipiant adfectus aut crescant aut efferantur, est primus motus non uoluntarius, quasi praeparatio adfectus et quaedam comminatio; alter cum uoluntate non contumaci, tamquam oporteat me uindicari cum laesus sim, aut oporteat hunc poenas dare cum scelus fecerit; tertius motus est iam inpotens, qui non si oportet ulcisci uult sed utique, qui rationem euicit. 2. Primum illum animi ictum effugere ratione non possumus, sicut ne illa quidem quae diximus accidere corporibus, ne nos oscitatio aliena sollicitet, ne oculi ad intimationem subitam digitorum comprimantur: ista non potest ratio uincere, consuetudo fortasse et adsidua observatio extenuat. Alter ille motus, qui iudicio nascitur, iudicio tollitur.

V.

1. Illud etiamnunc quaerendum est, ii qui uulgo saeuiunt et sanguine humano gaudent, an irascantur cum eos occidunt a quibus nec acceperunt iniuriam nec accepisse ipsos existimant: qualis fuit Apollodorus aut Phalaris. 2. Haec non est ira, feritas est; non enim quia accepit iniuriam nocet, sed parata est dum noceat uel accipere, nec illi uerbera lacerationesque in ultionem petuntur sed in uoluptatem. 3. Quid ergo? Origo huius mali ab ira est, quae ubi frequenti exercitatione et satietate in obliuionem clementiae uenit et omne foedus humanum eiecit animo, nouissime in crudelitatem transit; rident itaque gaudentque et uoluptate multa perfruuntur plurimumque ab iratorum uultu absunt, per otium saeui. 4. Hannibalem aiunt dixisse, cum fossam sanguine humano plenam uidisset, ‘o formosum spectaculum!’ Quanto pulchrius illi uisum esset, si flumen aliquod lacumque conplesset! Quid mirum si hoc maxime spectaculo caperis, innatus sanguini et ab infante caedibus admotus? Sequetur te fortuna crudelitati tuae per uiginti annos secunda dabitque oculis tuis gratum ubique spectaculum; uidebis istud et circa Trasumenum et circa Cannas et nouissime circa Carthaginem tuam. 5. Volesus nuper, sub diuo Augusto proconsul Asiae, cum trecentos uno die securi percussisset, incedens inter cadauera uultu superbo, quasi magnificum quiddam conspiciendumque fecisset, graece proclamauit ‘o rem regiam!’ Quid hic rex fecisset? Non fuit haec ira sed maius malum et insanabile.

VI.

1. 'Virtus' inquit 'ut honestis rebus propitia est, ita turpibus irata esse debet.' Quid si dicat uirtutem et humilem et magnam esse debere? Atqui hoc dicit qui illam extolli uult et deprimi, quoniam laetitia ob recte factum clara magnificaque est, ira ob alienum peccatum sordida et angusti pectoris est. 2. Nec umquam committet uirtus ut uitia dum compescit imitetur; iram ipsam castigandam habet, quae nihilo melior est, saepe etiam peior iis delictis quibus irascitur. Gaudere laetarique proprium et naturale uirtutis est: irasci non est ex dignitate eius, non magis quam maerere; atqui iracundiae tristitia comes est et in hanc omnis ira uel post paenitentiam uel post repulsam reuoluitur. 3. Et si sapientis est peccatis irasci, magis irascetur maioribus et saepe irascetur: sequitur ut non tantum iratus sit sapiens sed iracundus. Atqui si nec magnam iram nec frequentem in animo sapientis locum habere credimus, quid est quare non ex toto illum hoc adfectu liberemus? 4. Modus enim esse non potest, si pro facto cuiusque irascendum est; nam aut iniquus erit, si aequaliter irascetur delictis inaequalibus, aut iracundissimus, si totiens excanduerit quotiens iram scelera meruerint.

VII.

1. Et quid indignius quam sapientis adfectum ex aliena pendere nequitia? Desinet ille Socrates posse eundem uultum domum referre quem domo extulerat? Atqui si irasci sapiens turpiter factis debet et concitari contristarique ob scelera, nihil est aerumnosius sapiente: omnis illi per iracundiam maeroremque uita transibit. 2. Quod enim momentum erit quo non improbanda uideat? Quotiens processerit domo, per sceleratos illi auarosque et prodigos et inpudens et ob ista felices incedendum erit; nusquam oculi eius flectentur ut non quod indignantur inueniant: deficiet si totiens a se iram quotiens causa poscet exegerit. 3. Haec tot milia ad forum prima luce properantia, quam turpes lites, quanto turpiores aduocatos habent! Alius iudicia patris accusat, quae <non> mereri satius fuit, alius cum matre consistit, alius delator uenit eius criminis cuius manifestior reus est; et iudex damnaturus quae fecit eligitur et corona pro mala causa <stat> bona patroni uoce corrupta.

VIII.

1. Quid singula persequor? Cum uideris forum multitudine refertum et saepta concursu omnis frequentiae plena et illum circum in quo maximam sui partem populus ostendit, hoc scito, istic tantundem esse uitiorum quantum hominum. 2. Inter istos quos togatos uides nulla pax est: alter in alterius exitium leui compendio ducitur; nulli nisi ex alterius iniuria quaestus est; felicem oderunt, infelicem contemnunt; maiorem grauantur, minori graues sunt; diuersis stimulantur cupiditatibus; omnia perdita ob leuem uoluptatem praedamque cupiunt. Non alia quam in ludo gladiatorio uita est cum isdem uiuentium pugnantiumque. 3. Ferarum iste conuentus est, nisi quod illae inter se placidae sunt morsuque similium abstinent, hi mutua laceratione satiantur. ~Hoc uno~ ab animalibus mutis differunt, quod illa mansuescunt alentibus, horum rabies ipsos a quibus est nutrita depascitur.

IX.

1. Numquam irasci desinet sapiens, si semel coeperit: omnia sceleribus ac uitiiis plena sunt; plus committitur quam quod possit coercitione sanari; certatur ingenti quidem nequitiae certamine. Maior cotidie peccandi cupiditas, minor uerecundia est; expulso melioris aequiorisque respectu quocumque uisum est libido se inpingit, nec furtiua iam scelera sunt: praeter oculos eunt, adeoque in publicum missa nequitia est et in omnium pectoribus eualuit ut innocentia non rara sed nulla sit. 2. Numquid enim singuli aut pauci rupere legem? undique uelut signo dato ad fas nefasque miscendum coorti sunt:

non hospes ab hospite tutus, non socer a genero; fratrum quoque gratia rara est;
imminet exitio uir coniugis, illa mariti;
lurida terribiles miscent aconita nouercae, filius ante diem patrios inquirat in annos.

3. Et quota ista pars scelerum est? Non descripsit castra ex una parte contraria et parentium liberorumque sacramenta diuersa, subiectam patriae ciuis flammam et agmina infestorum equitum ad conquirendas proscriptorum latebras circumuolitantia et uiolatos fontes uenenis et pestilentiam manu factam et praeductam obsessis parentibus fossam, plenos carceres et incendia totas urbes concremantia dominationesque funestas et regnorum publicorumque exitiorum clandestina consilia, et pro gloria habita quae, quam diu opprimi possunt, scelera sunt, raptus ac stupra et ne os quidem libidini exceptum. 4. Adde nunc publica periuria gentium et rupta foedera et in praedam ualidioris quidquid non resistebat abductum, circumscriptiones furta fraudes infitiationes quibus trina non sufficiunt fora. Si tantum irasci uis sapientem quantum scelerum indignitas exigit, non irascendum illi sed insaniendum est.

1. Illud potius cogitabis, non esse irascendum erroribus. Quid enim si quis irascatur in tenebris parum uestigia certa ponentibus? Quid si quis surdis imperia non exaudientibus? Quid si pueris, quod neglecto dispectu officiorum ad lusus et ineptos aequalium iocos spectent? Quid si illis irasci uelis qui aegrotant senescunt fatigantur? Inter cetera mortalitatis incommoda et hoc est, caligo mentium nec tantum necessitas errandi sed errorum amor. 2. Ne singulis irascaris, uniuersis ignoscendum est, generi humano uenia tribuenda est. Si irasceris iuuenibus senibusque quod peccant, irascere infantibus: peccaturi sunt. Numquis irascitur pueris, quorum aetas nondum nouit rerum discrimina? maior est excusatio et iustior hominem esse quam puerum. 3. Hac condicione nati sumus, animalia obnoxia non paucioribus animi quam corporis morbis, non quidem obtusa nec tarda, sed acumine nostro male utentia, alter alteri uitiorum exempla: quisquis sequitur priores male iter ingressos, quidni habeat excusationem, cum publica uia errauerit? 4. In singulos seueritas imperatoris destringitur, at necessaria uenia est ubi totus deseruit exercitus. Quid tollit iram sapientis? turba peccantium. Intellegit quam et iniquum sit et periculosum irasci publico uitio.

5. Heraclitus quotiens prodierat et tantum circa se male uiuentium, immo male pereuntium uiderat, flebat, miserebatur omnium qui sibi laeti felicesque occurrebant, miti animo, sed nimis inbecillo: et ipse inter deplorandos erat. Democritum contra aiunt numquam sine risu in publico fuisse; adeo nihil illi uidebatur serium eorum quae serio gerebantur. Vbi istic irae locus est? aut ridenda omnia aut flenda sunt.

6. Non irascetur sapiens peccantibus. Quare? quia scit neminem nasci sapientem sed fieri, scit paucissimos omni aeuo sapientis euadere, quia condicionem humanae uitae perspectam habet; nemo autem naturae sanus irascitur. Quid enim si mirari uelit non in siluestribus dumis poma pendere? Quid si miretur spineta sentesque non utili aliqua fruge conpleri? Nemo irascitur ubi uitium natura defendit. 7. Placidus itaque sapiens et aequus erroribus, non hostis sed corrector peccantium, hoc cotidie procedit animo: 'multi mihi occurrent uino dediti, multi libidinosi, multi ingrati, multi auari, multi furiis ambitionis agitati.' Omnia ista tam propitius aspiciet quam aegros suos medicus. 8. Numquid ille cuius nauigium multam undique laxatis compagibus aquam trahit nautis ipsique nauigio irascitur? occurrit potius et aliam excludit undam, aliam egerit, manifesta foramina praecludit, latentibus et ex occulto sentinam ducentibus labore continuo resistit, nec ideo intermittit quia quantum exhaustum est subnascitur. Lento adiutorio opus est contra mala continua et fecunda, non ut desinant, sed ne uincant.

XI.

1. 'Vtilis est' inquit 'ira, quia contemptum effugit, quia malos terret.' Primum ira, si quantum minatur ualeat, ob hoc ipsum quod terribilis est et inuisa est; periculosius est autem timeri quam despici. Si uero sine uiribus est, magis exposita contemptui est et derisum non effugit; quid enim est iracundia in superuacuum tumultuante frigidius? 2. Deinde non ideo quaedam, quia sunt terribiliora, potiora sunt, nec hoc sapienti dici uelim: 'quod ferae, sapientis quoque telum est, timeri.' Quid? non timetur febris, podagra, ulcus malum? Numquid ideo quicquam in istis boni est? At contra omnia despecta foedaeque et turpia ~ipso quo~ timentur. Sic ira per se deformis est et minime metuenda, at timetur a pluribus sicut deformis persona ab infantibus. 3. Quid quod semper in auctores redundat timor nec quisquam metuitur ipse securus? Occurrat hoc loco tibi Laberianus ille uersus qui medio ciuili bello in theatro dictus totum in se populum non aliter conuertit quam si missa esset uox publici adfectus:

necesse est multos timeat quem multi timent.

4. Ita natura constituit ut quidquid alieno metu magnum est a suo non uacet. Leonum quam pauida sunt ad leuissimos sonos pectora! acerrimas feras umbra et uox et odor insolitus exagitat: quidquid terret et trepidat. Non est ergo quare concupiscat quisquam sapiens timeri, nec ideo iram magnum quiddam putet quia formidini est, quoniam quidem etiam contemptissima timentur, ut uenena et ossa pestifera et morsus. 5. Nec mirum est, cum maximos ferarum greges linea pinnis distincta contineat et in insidias agat, ab ipso adfectu dicta formido; uanis enim uana terrori sunt. Curriculi motus rotarumque uersata facies leones redegit in caueam, elephantos porcina uox terret. 6. Sic itaque ira metuitur quomodo umbra ab infantibus, a feris rubens pinna. Non ipsa in se quicquam habet firmum aut forte, sed leues animos mouet.

XII.

1. 'Nequitia' inquit 'de rerum natura tollenda est, si uelis iram tollere; neutrum autem potest fieri.' Primum potest aliquis non algere, quamuis [ex rerum natura] hiemps sit, et non aestuare, quamuis menses aestiui sint: aut loci beneficio aduersus intemperiem anni tutus est aut patientia corporis sensum utriusque peruicit. 2. Deinde uerte istud: necesse est prius uirtutem ex animo tollas quam iracundiam recipias, quoniam cum uirtutibus uitia non coeunt, nec magis quisquam eodem tempore et iratus potest esse et uir bonus quam aeger et sanus. 3. 'Non potest' inquit 'omnis ex animo ira tolli, nec hoc hominis natura patitur.' Atqui nihil est tam difficile et arduum quod non humana mens uincat et in familiaritatem perducatur adsidua meditatio, nullique sunt tam feri et sui iuris adfectus ut non disciplina perdomentur. 4. Quodcumque sibi imperauit animus optinuit: quidam ne umquam riderent consecuti sunt; uino quidam, alii uenere, quidam omni umore interdixere corporibus; alius contentus breui somno uigiliam indefatigabilem extendit; didicerunt tenuissimis et aduersis funibus currere et ingentia uixque humanis toleranda uiribus onera portare et in inmensam altitudinem mergi ac sine ulla respirandi uice perpeti maria. Mille sunt alia in quibus pertinacia impedimentum omne transcendit ostenditque nihil esse difficile cuius sibi ipsa mens patientiam indiceret. 5. Istis quos paulo ante rettuli aut nulla tam pertinacis studii aut non digna merces fuit — quid enim magnificum consequitur ille qui meditatus est per intentos funes ire, qui sarcinae ingenti ceruices supponere, qui somno non submittere oculos, qui penetrare in imum mare? — et tamen ad finem operis non magno auctoramento labor peruenit: 6. nos non aduocabimus patientiam, quos tantum praemium expectat, felicitis animi inmotae tranquillitas? Quantum est effugere maximum malum, iram, et cum illa rabiem saeuitiam crudelitatem furorem, alios comites eius adfectus!

XIII.

1. Non est quod patrociniū nobis quaeramus et excusatam licentiam, dicentes aut utile id esse aut ineuitabile; cui enim tandem uitio aduocatus defuit? Non est quod dicas excidi non posse: sanabilibus aegrotamus malis ipsaque nos in rectum genitos natura, si emendari uelimus, iuuat. Nec, ut quibusdam uisum est, arduum in uirtutes et asperum iter est: plano adeuntur. 2. Non uanae uobis auctor rei uenio. Facilis est ad beatam uitam uia: inite modo bonis auspiciis ipsisque dis bene iuuantibus. Multo difficilius est facere ista quae facitis. Quid est animi quiete otiosius, quid ira laboriosius? Quid clementia remissius, quid crudelitate negotiosius? Vacat pudicitia, libido occupatissima est. Omnium denique uirtutum tutela facilis est, uitia magno coluntur. 3. Debet ira remoueri — hoc ex parte fatentur etiam qui dicunt esse minuendam: tota dimittatur, nihil profutura est. Sine illa facilius rectiusque scelera tollentur, mali punientur et transducentur in melius. Omnia quae debet sapiens sine ullius malae rei ministerio efficiet nihilque admiscebit cuius modum sollicitius obseruet.

XIV.

1. Numquam itaque iracundia admittenda est, aliquando simulanda, si segnes audientium animi concitandi sunt, sicut tarde consurgentis ad cursum equos stimulis facibusque subditis excitamus. Aliquando incutiendus est iis metus apud quos ratio non proficit: irasci quidem non magis utile est quam maerere, quam metuere. 2. 'Quid ergo? non incidunt causae quae iram lacesant?' Sed tunc maxime illi opponendae manus sunt. Nec est difficile uincere animum, cum athletae quoque, in uilissima sui parte occupati, tamen ictus doloresque patientur ut uires caedentis exhauriant, nec cum ira suadet feriunt, sed cum occasio. 3. Pyrrhum, maximum praeceptorem certaminis gymnici, solitum aiunt iis quos exercebat praecipere ne irascerentur; ira enim perturbat artem et qua noceat tantum aspicit. Saepe itaque ratio patientiam suadet, ira uindictam, et qui primis defungi malis potuimus in maiora deuoluimur. 4. Quosdam unius uerbi contumelia non aequo animo lata in exilium proiecit, et qui leuem iniuriam silentio ferre noluerant grauissimis malis obruti sunt, indignatique aliquid ex plenissima libertate deminui seruile in sese adtraxerunt iugum.

XV.

1. 'Vt scias' inquit 'iram habere in se generosi aliquid, liberas uidebis gentes quae iracundissimae sunt, ut Germanos et Scythas.' Quod euenit quia fortia solidaque natura ingenia, antequam disciplina molliantur, prona in iram sunt. Quaedam enim non nisi melioribus innascuntur ingeniis, sicut ualida arbusta et laeta quamuis neglecta tellus creat et alta fecundi soli silua est; 2. itaque et ingenia natura fortia iracundiam ferunt nihilque tenue et exile capiunt ignea et feruida, sed imperfectus illis uigor est ut omnibus quae sine arte ipsius tantum naturae bono exsurgunt, sed nisi cito domita sunt, quae fortitudini apta erant audaciae temeritque consuescunt. 3. Quid? non mitioribus animis uitia leniora coniuncta sunt, ut misericordia et amor et uerecundia? Itaque saepe tibi bonam indolem malis quoque suis ostendam; sed non ideo uitia non sunt si naturae melioris indicia sunt. 4. Deinde omnes istae feritate liberae gentes leonum luporumque ritu ut seruire non possunt, ita nec imperare; non enim humani uim ingenii, sed feri et intractabilis habent; nemo autem regere potest nisi qui et regi. 5. Fere itaque imperia penes eos fuere populos qui mitiore caelo utuntur: in frigora septemtrionemque uergentibus 'inmansueta ingenia' sunt, ut ait poeta, suoque simillima caelo.

XVI.

1. 'Animalia' inquit 'generosissima habentur quibus multum inest irae.' Errat qui ea in exemplum hominis adducit quibus pro ratione est impetus: homini pro impetu ratio est. Sed ne illis quidem omnibus idem prodest: iracundia leones adiuuat, pauor ceruos, accipitrem impetus, columbam fuga.
2. Quid quod ne illud quidem uerum est, optima animalia esse iracundissima? Feras putem, quibus ex raptu alimenta sunt, meliores quo iratiores: patientiam laudauerim boum et equorum frenos sequentium. Quid est autem cur hominem ad tam infelicia exempla reuoces, cum habeas mundum deumque, quem ex omnibus animalibus, ut solus imitetur, solus intellegit?
3. 'Simplicissimi' inquit 'omnium habentur iracundi.' Fraudulentis enim et uersutis comparantur et simplices uidentur quia expositi sunt. Quos quidem non simplices dixerim sed incautos: stultis luxuriosis nepotibusque hoc nomen inponimus et omnibus utiis parum callidis.

XVII.

1. 'Orator' inquit 'iratus aliquando melior est.' Immo imitatus iratum; nam et histriones in pronuntiando non irati populum mouent, sed iratum bene agentes; et apud iudices itaque et in contione et ubicumque alieni animi ad nostrum arbitrium agendi sunt, modo iram, modo metum, modo misericordiam, ut aliis incutiamus, ipsi simulabimus, et saepe id quod ueri adfectus non effecissent effecit imitatio adfectuum.

2. 'Languidus' inquit 'animus est qui ira caret.' Verum est, si nihil habeat ira ualentius. Nec latronem oportet esse nec praedam, nec misericordem nec crudelem: illius nimis mollis animus, huius nimis durus est; temperatus sit sapiens et ad res fortius agendas non iram sed uim adhibeat.

XVIII.

1. Quoniam quae de ira quaeruntur tractauimus, accedamus ad remedia eius. Duo autem, ut opinor, sunt: ne incidamus in iram, et ne in ira peccemus. Vt in corporum cura alia de tuenda ualetudine, alia de restituenda praecepta sunt, ita aliter iram debemus repellere, aliter compescere. Vt uitemus, quaedam ad uniuersam uitam pertinentia praecipientur: ea in educationem et in sequentia tempora diuidentur.

2. Educatio maximam diligentiam plurimumque profuturam desiderat; facile est enim teneros adhuc animos componere, difficulter reciduntur uitia quae nobiscum creuerunt.

XIX.

1. Opportunissima ad iracundiam feruidi animi natura est. Nam cum elementa sint quattuor, ignis aquae aeris terrae, potestates pares his sunt, feruida frigida arida atque umida; et locorum itaque et animalium et corporum et morum uarietates mixtura elementorum facit, et proinde aliquo magis incumbunt ingenia prout alicuius elementi maior uis abundauit. Inde quasdam umidas uocamus aridasque regiones et calidas et frigidas. 2. Eadem animalium hominumque discrimina sunt: refert quantum quisque umidi in se calidique contineat; cuius in illo elementi portio praeualebit, inde mores erunt. Iracundos feruida animi natura faciet; est enim actuosus et pertinax ignis: frigidi mixtura timidos facit; pigrum est enim contractumque frigus. 3. Volunt itaque quidam ex nostris iram in pectore moueri efferuescente circa cor sanguine; causa cur hic potissimum adsignetur irae locus non alia est quam quod in toto corpore calidissimum pectus est. 4. Quibus umidi plus inest, eorum paulatim crescit ira, quia non est paratus illis calor sed motu adquiritur; itaque puerorum feminarumque irae acres magis quam graues sunt leuiioresque dum incipiunt. Siccis aetatibus uehemens robustaque est ira, sed sine incremento, non multum sibi adiciens, quia inclinaturum calorem frigus insequitur: senes difficiles et queruli sunt, ut aegri et conualescentes et quorum aut lassitudine aut detractatione sanguinis exhaustus est calor; 5. in eadem causa sunt siti fameque tabidi et quibus exsanguie corpus est maligneque alitur et deficit. Vinum incendit iras, quia calorem auget; pro cuiusque natura quidam ebrii efferuescunt, quidam saucii. Neque ulla alia causa est cur iracundissimi sint flauī rubentesque, quibus talis natura color est qualis fieri ceteris inter iram solet; mobilis enim illis agitatusque sanguis est.

XX.

1. Sed quemadmodum natura quosdam procliues in iram facit, ita multae incidunt causae quae idem possint quod natura: alios morbus aut iniuria corporum in hoc perduxit, alios labor aut continua peruigilia noctesque sollicitae et desideria amoresque; quidquid aliud aut corpori nocuit aut animo, aegram mentem in querellas parat. 2. Sed omnia ista initia causaeque sunt: plurimum potest consuetudo, quae si grauis est alit uitium. Naturam quidem mutare difficile est, nec licet semel mixta nascentium elementa conuertere; sed in hoc nosse profuerit, ut calentibus ingeniis subtrahas uinum, quod pueris Plato negandum putat et ignem uetat igne incitari. Ne cibis quidem implendi sunt; distendentur enim corpora et animi cum corpore tumescent. 3. Labor illos citra lassitudinem exerceat, ut minuatur, non ut consumatur calor nimiusque ille feruor despumet. Lusus quoque proderunt; modica enim uoluptas laxat animos et temperat. 4. Vmidioribus siccioribusque et frigidis non est ab ira periculum, sed inertiora uitia metuenda sunt, pauor et difficultas et desperatio et suspiciones; mollienda itaque fouendaque talia ingenia et in laetitiam euocanda sunt. Et quia aliis contra iram, aliis contra tristitiam remediis utendum est nec dissimillimis tantum ista sed contrariis curanda sunt, semper ei occurremus quod increuerit.

XXI.

1. Plurimum, inquam, proderit pueros statim salubriter institui; difficile autem regimen est, quia dare debemus operam ne aut iram in illis nutriamus aut indolem retundamus. 2. Diligenti obseruatione res indiget; utrumque enim, et quod extollendum et quod deprimendum est, similibus alitur, facile autem etiam adtendentem similia decipiunt. 3. Crescit licentia spiritus, seruitute comminuitur; adsurgit si laudatur et in spem sui bonam adducitur, sed eadem ista insolentiam et iracundiam generant: itaque sic inter utrumque regendus est ut modo frenis utamur modo stimulis. 4. Nihil humile, nihil seruile patiatur; numquam illi necesse sit rogare suppliciter nec prosit rogasse, potius causae suae et prioribus factis et bonis in futurum promissis donetur. 5. In certaminibus aequalium nec uinci illum patiamur nec irasci; demus operam ut familiaris sit iis cum quibus contendere solet, ut in certamine adsuescat non nocere uelle sed uincere; quotiens superauerit et dignum aliquid laude fecerit, attolli non gestire patiamur; gaudium enim exultatio, exultationem tumor et nimia aestimatio sui sequitur. 6. Dabimus aliquod laxamentum, in desidiam uero otiumque non resoluemus et procul a contactu deliciarum retinebimus; nihil enim magis facit iracundos quam educatio mollis et blanda. Ideo unicis quo plus indulgetur, pupillisque quo plus licet, corruptior animus est. Non resistet offensis cui nihil umquam negatum est, cuius lacrimas sollicita semper mater abstersit, cui de paedagogo satisfactum est. 7. Non uides ut maiorem quamque fortunam maior ira comitetur? In diuitibus et nobilibus et magistratibus praecipue apparet, cum quidquid leue et inane in animo erat secunda se aura sustulit. Felicitas iracundiam nutrit, ubi aures superbas adsentatorum turba circumstetit: ‘tibi enim ille respondeat? Non pro fastigio te tuo metiris; ipse te proicis’ et alia quibus uix sanae et ab initio bene fundatae mentes restiterunt. 8. Longe itaque ab adsentatione pueritia remouenda est: audiat uerum. Et timeat interim, uereatur semper, maioribus adsurgat. Nihil per iracundiam exoret: quod flenti negatum fuerit quieto offeratur. Et diuitias parentium in conspectu habeat, non in usu. 9. Exprobrentur illi perperam facta. Pertinebit ad rem praeceptores paedagogosque pueris placidos dari: proximis adplicatur omne quod tenerum est et in eorum similitudinem crescit; nutricum et paedagogorum rettulere mox adulescentium mores. 10. Apud Platonem educatus puer cum ad parentes relatus uociferantem uideret patrem: 'numquam' inquit 'hoc apud Platonem uidi.' Non dubito quin citius patrem imitatus sit quam Platonem. 11. Tenuis ante omnia uictus <sit> et non pretiosa uestis et similis cultus cum aequalibus: non irascetur aliquem sibi comparari quem ab initio multis parem feceris.

XXII.

1. Sed haec ad liberos nostros pertinent; in nobis quidem sors nascendi et educatio nec uitii locum nec iam praecepti habet: sequentia ordinanda sunt. 2. Contra primas itaque causas pugnare debemus; causa autem iracundiae opinio iniuriae est, cui non facile credendum est. Ne apertis quidem manifestisque statim accedendum; quaedam enim falsa ueri speciem ferunt. Dandum semper est tempus: ueritatem dies aperit. 3. Ne sint aures criminantibus faciles; hoc humanae naturae uitium suspectum notumque nobis sit, quod quae inuiti audimus libenter credimus et antequam iudicemus irascimur. 4. Quid quod non criminationibus tantum sed suspicionibus inpellimur et ex uultu risuque alieno peiora interpretati innocentibus irascimur? Itaque agenda est contra se causa absentis et in suspensio ira retinenda; potest enim poena dilata exigi, non potest exacta reuocari.

XXIII.

1. Notus est ille tyrannicida qui, imperfecto opere comprehensus et ab Hippiā tortus ut conscios indicaret, circumstantes amicos tyranni nominavit quibusque maxime curam salutem eius sciebat. Et cum ille singulos, ut nominati erant, occidi iussisset, interrogavit equis superesset: 'tu' inquit 'solus; neminem enim alium cui carus esses reliqui.' Effecit ira ut tyrannus tyrannicidae manus accommodaret et praesidia sua gladio suo caederet. 2. Quanto animosius Alexander! qui cum legisset epistolam matris, qua admonebatur ut a ueneno Philippi medici caueret, acceptam potionem non deterritus bibit: plus sibi de amico suo credidit. Dignus fuit qui innocentem haberet, dignus qui faceret. 3. Hoc eo magis in Alexandro laudo quia nemo tam obnoxius irae fuit; quo rarior autem moderatio in regibus, hoc laudanda magis est. 4. Fecit hoc et C. Caesar ille qui uictoria civili clementissime usus est: cum scrinia deprendisset epistularum ad Cn. Pompeium missarum ab iis qui uidebantur aut in diuersis aut in neutris fuisse partibus, combussit. Quamuis moderate soleret irasci, maluit tamen non posse; gratissimum putauit genus ueniae nescire quid quisque peccasset.

XXIV.

1. Plurimum mali credulitas facit. Saepe ne audiendum quidem est, quoniam in quibusdam rebus satius est decipi quam diffidere. Tollenda ex animo suspicio et coniectura, fallacissima inritamenta: ‘ille me parum humane salutauit; ille osculo meo non adhaesit; ille inchoatum sermonem cito abrupit; ille ad cenam non uocauit; illius uultus auersior uisus est.’ 2. Non deerit suspicioni argumentatio: simplicitate opus est et benigna rerum aestimatione. Nihil nisi quod in oculos incurret manifestumque erit credamus, et quotiens suspicio nostra uana apparuerit, obiurgemus credulitatem; haec enim castigatio consuetudinem efficiet non facile credendi.

XXV.

1. Inde et illud sequitur, ut minimis sordidissimisque rebus non exacerbemur. Parum agilis est puer aut tepidior aqua poturo aut turbatus torus aut mensa negligentius posita: ad ista concitari insania est. Aeger et infelicis uoletudinis est quem leuis aura contraxit, adfecti oculi quos candida uestis obturbat, dissolutus deliciis cuius latus alieno labore condoluit. 2. Mindyriden aiunt fuisse ex Sybaritarum ciuitate qui, cum uidisset fodientem et altius rastrum adleuantem, lassum se fieri questus uetuit illum opus in conspectu suo facere; idem habere se peius questus est, quod foliis rosae duplicatis incubuisset. 3. Vbi animum simul et corpus uoluptates corrumpere, nihil tolerabile uidetur, non quia dura sed quia mollis patitur. Quid est enim cur tussis alicuius aut sternutamentum aut musca parum curiose fugata in rabiem agat aut obuersatus canis aut clauis negligentis serui manibus elapsa? 4. Feret iste aequo animo ciuile conuicium et ingesta in contione curiaue maledicta cuius aures tracti subsellii stridor offendit? Perpetietur hic famem et aestiuae expeditionis sitim qui puero male diluenti niuem irascitur? Nulla itaque res magis iracundiam alit quam luxuria intemperans et inpatiens: dure tractandus animus est ut ictum non sentiat nisi grauem.

XXVI.

1. Irascimur aut iis a quibus ne accipere quidem potuimus iniuriam, aut iis a quibus accipere iniuriam potuimus. 2. Ex prioribus quaedam sine sensu sunt, ut liber quem minutioribus litteris scriptum saepe proiecimus et mendosum lacerauimus, ut uestimenta quae, quia displicebant, scidimus: his irasci quam stultum est, quae iram nostram nec meruerunt nec sentiunt! 3. 'Sed offendunt nos uidelicet qui illa fecerunt.' Primum saepe antequam hoc apud nos distinguamus irascimur. Deinde fortasse ipsi quoque artifices excusationes iustas adferent: alius non potuit melius facere quam fecit, nec ad tuam contumeliam parum didicit; alius non in hoc ut te offenderet fecit. Ad ultimum quid est dementius quam bilem in homines collectam in res effundere? 4. Atqui ut his irasci dementis est quae anima carent, sic mutis animalibus, quae nullam iniuriam nobis faciunt, quia uelle non possunt; non est enim iniuria nisi a consilio profecta. Nocere itaque nobis possunt ut ferrum aut lapis, iniuriam quidem facere non possunt. 5. Atqui contemni se quidam putant, ubi idem equi obsequentes alteri equiti, alteri contumaces sunt, tamquam iudicio, non consuetudine et arte tractandi quaedam quibusdam subiectiora sint. 6. Atqui ut his irasci stultum est, ita pueris et non multum a puerorum prudentia distantibus; omnia enim ista peccata apud aequum iudicem pro innocentia habent inprudenciam.

XXVII.

1. Quaedam sunt quae nocere non possunt nullamque uim nisi beneficam et salutarem habent, ut di immortales, qui nec uolunt obesse nec possunt; natura enim illis mitis et placida est, tam longe remota ab aliena iniuria quam a sua. 2. Dementes itaque et ignari ueritatis illis inputant saeuitiam maris, inmodicos imbres, pertinaciam hiemis, cum interim nihil horum quae nobis nocent prosuntque ad nos proprie derigatur. Non enim nos causa mundo sumus hiemem aestatemque referendi: suas ista leges habent, quibus diuina exercentur; nimis nos suspicimus, si digni nobis uidemur propter quos tanta moueantur. Nihil ergo horum in nostram iniuriam fit, immo contra nihil non ad salutem. 3. Quaedam esse diximus quae nocere non possint, quaedam quae nolint. In iis erunt boni magistratus parentesque et praeceptores et iudices, quorum castigatio sic accipienda est quomodo scalpellum et abstinencia et alia quae profutura torquent. 4. Adfecti sumus poena: succurrat non tantum quid patiamur sed quid fecerimus, in consilium de uita nostra mittamur; si modo uerum ipsi nobis dicere uoluerimus, pluris litem nostram aestimabimus.

XXVIII.

1. Si uolumus aequi rerum omnium iudices esse, hoc primum nobis persuadeamus, neminem nostrum esse sine culpa; hinc enim maxima indignatio oritur: ‘nihil peccauit’ et ‘nihil feci’. Immo nihil fateris. Indignamur aliqua admonitione aut coercitione nos castigatos, cum illo ipso tempore peccemus, quod adicimus malefactis adrogantiam et contumaciam. 2. Quis est iste qui se profitetur omnibus legibus innocentem? Vt hoc ita sit, quam angusta innocentia est ad legem bonum esse! Quanto latius officiorum patet quam iuris regula! Quam multa pietas humanitas liberalitas iustitia fides exigunt, quae omnia extra publicas tabulas sunt! 3. Sed ne ad illam quidem artissimam innocentiae formulam praestare nos possumus: alia fecimus, alia cogitauimus, alia optauimus, aliis fauimus; in quibusdam innocentes sumus, quia non successit. 4. Hoc cogitantes aequiores simus delinquentibus, credamus obiurgantibus; utique bonis ne irascamur (cui enim non, si bonis quoque?), minime dis; non enim illorum <uitio>, sed lege mortalitatis patimur quidquid incommodi accidit. ‘At morbi doloresque incurrunt.’ Vtique aliquo defungendum est domicilium putre sortitis. 5. Dicitur aliquis male de te locutus: cogita an priorfeceris, cogita de quam multis loquaris. Cogitemus, inquam, alios non facere iniuriam sed reponere, alios pro nobis facere, alios coactos facere, alios ignorantes, etiam eos qui uolentes scientesque faciunt ex iniuria nostra non ipsam iniuriam petere: aut dulcedine urbanitatis prolapsus est, aut fecit aliquid, non ut nobis obesset, sed quia consequi ipse non poterat, nisi nos reppulisset; saepe adulatio dum blanditur offendit. 6. Quisquis ad se rettulerit quotiens ipse in suspicionem falsam inciderit, quam multis officiis suis fortuna speciem iniuriae induerit, quam multos post odium amare coeperit, poterit non statim irasci, utique si sibi tacitus ad singula quibus offenditur dixerit ‘hoc et ipse commisi’. 7. Sed ubi tam aequum iudicem inuenies? Is qui nullius non uxorem concupiscit et satis iustas causas putat amandi quod aliena est, idem uxorem suam aspici non uult; et fidei acerrimus exactor est perfidus, et mendacia persequitur ipse periurus, et litem sibi inferri aegerrime calumniator patitur; pudicitiam seruulorum adtemptari non uult qui non pepercit suae. 8. Aliena uitia in oculis habemus, a tergo nostra sunt: inde est quod tempestiua filii conuiuia pater deterior filio castigat, et nihil alienae luxuriae ignoscit qui nihil suae negauit, et homicidae tyrannus irascitur, et punit furta sacrilegus. Magna pars hominum est quae non peccatis irascitur sed peccantibus. Faciet nos moderatiores respectus nostri, si consuluerimus nos: ‘numquid et ipsi aliquid tale commisimus? Numquid sic errauimus? Expeditne nobis ista damnare?’

XXIX.

1. Maximum remedium irae mora est. Hoc ab illa pete initio, non ut ignoscat sed ut iudicet: graues habet impetus primos; desinet, si expectat. Nec uniuersam illam temptaueris tollere: tota uincetur, dum partibus carpitur. 2. Ex iis quae nos offendunt alia renuntiantur nobis, alia ipsi audimus aut uidemus. De iis quae narrata sunt non debemus cito credere: multi mentiuntur ut decipiant, multi quia decepti sunt; alius criminatione gratiam captat et fingit iniuriam ut uideatur doluisse factam; est aliquis malignus et qui amicitias cohaerentis diducere uelit; est ~suspicax~ et qui spectare ludos cupiat et ex longinquo tutoque speculetur quos conlisit. 3. De paruula summa iudicaturus tibi res sine teste non probaretur, testis sine iureiurando non ualeret, utrique parti dares actionem, dares tempus, non semel audires; magis enim ueritas elucet quo saepius ad manum uenit: amicum condemnas de praesentibus? Antequam audias, antequam interroges, antequam illi aut accusatorem suum nosse liceat aut crimen, irascaris? Iam enim, iam utrimque <quid> diceretur audisti? 4. Hic ipse qui ad te detulit desinet dicere, si probare debuerit: 'non est' inquit 'quod me protrahas; ego productus negabo; alioqui nihil umquam tibi dicam.' Eodem tempore et instigat et ipse se certamini pugnaeque subtrahit. Qui dicere tibi nisi clam non uult, paene non dicit: quid est iniquius quam secreto credere, palam irasci?

XXX.

1. Quorundam ipsi testes sumus: in his naturam excutiemus uoluntatemque facientium. Puer est: aetati donetur, nescit an peccet. Pater est: aut tantum profuit ut illi etiam iniuriae ius sit, aut fortasse ipsum hoc meritum eius est quo offendimur. Mulier est: errat. Iussus est: necessitati quis nisi iniquus suscenset? Laesus est: non est iniuria pati quod prior feceris. Iudex est: plus credas illius sententiae quam tuae. Rex est: si nocentem punit, cede iustitiae, si innocentem, cede fortunae. 2. Mutum animal est aut simile muto: imitaris illud, si irasceris. Morbus est aut calamitas: leuius transiliet sustinentem. Deus est: tam perdis operam cum illi irasceris quam cum illum alteri precaris iratum. Bonus uir est qui iniuriam fecit: noli credere. Malus: noli mirari; dabit poenas alteri quas debet tibi, et iam sibi dedit qui peccauit.

XXXI.

1. Duo sunt, ut dixi quae iracundiam concitant: primum, si iniuriam uidemur accepisse — de hoc satis dictum est; deinde, si inique accepisse — de hoc dicendum est. 2. Iniqua quaedam iudicant homines quia pati non debuerint, quaedam quia non sperauerint. Indigna putamus quae inopinata sunt; itaque maxime commouent quae contra spem expectationemque euenerunt, nec aliud est quare in domesticis minima offendant, in amicis iniuriam uocemus negligentiam. 3. ‘Quomodo ergo’ inquit ‘inimicorum nos iniuriae mouent?’ Quia non expectauimus illas aut certe non tantas. Hoc efficit amor nostri nimius: inuiolatos nos etiam inimicis iudicamus esse debere; regis quisque intra se animum habet, ut licentiam sibi dari uelit, in se nolit. 4. Aut ignorantia itaque nos aut insolentia iracundos facit [ignorantia rerum]. Quid enim mirum est malos mala facinora edere? Quid noui est, si inimicus nocet, amicus offendit, filius labitur, seruus peccat? Turpissimam aiebat Fabius imperatori excusationem esse ‘non putau’, ego turpissimam homini puto. Omnia puta, expecta: etiam in bonis moribus aliquid existet asperius. 5. Fert humana natura insidiosos animos, fert ingratos, fert cupidos, fert impios. Cum de unius moribus iudicabis, de publicis cogita. Vbi maxime gaudebis, maxime metues; ubi tranquilla tibi omnia uidentur, ibi nocitura non desunt sed quiescunt. Semper futurum aliquid quod te offendat existima: gubernator numquam ita totos sinus securus explicuit ut non expedite ad contrahendum armamenta disponeret.

6. Illud ante omnia cogita, foedam esse et execrabilem uim nocendi et alienissimam homini, cuius beneficio etiam saeua mansuescunt. Aspice elephantorum iugo colla summissa et taurorum pueris pariter ac feminis persultantibus terga inpune calcata et repentis inter pocula sinusque innoxio lapsu dracones et intra domum ursorum leonumque ora placida tractantibus adulantisque dominum feras: pudebit cum animalibus permutasse mores. 7. Nefas est nocere patriae; ergo ciui quoque, nam hic pars patriae est — sanctae partes sunt, si uniuersum uenerabile est; ergo et homini, nam hic in maiore tibi urbe ciuis est. Quid si nocere uelint manus pedibus, manibus oculi? Vt omnia inter se membra consentiunt quia singula seruari totius interest, ita homines singulis parcent quia ad coetum geniti sunt, salua autem esse societas nisi custodia et amore partium non potest. 8. Ne uiperas quidem et natrices et si qua morsu aut ictu nocent effligeremus, si in reliquum mansuefacere possemus aut efficere ne nobis aliisue periculo essent; ergo ne homini quidem nocebimus quia peccauit, sed ne peccet, nec umquam ad praeteritum sed ad futurum poena referetur; non enim irascitur sed cauet. Nam si puniendus est cuicumque prauum maleficumque ingenium est, poena neminem excipiet.

XXXII.

1. 'At enim ira habet aliquam uoluptatem et dulce est dolorem reddere.' Minime; non enim ut in beneficiis honestum est merita meritis repensare, ita iniurias iniuriis. Illic uinci turpe est, hic uincere. Inhumanum uerbum est et quidem pro iusto receptum ultio [et talio]. Non multum differt nisi ordine qui dolorem regerit: tantum excusatius peccat. 2. M. Catonem ignorans in balineo quidam percussit imprudens; quis enim illi sciens faceret iniuriam? Postea satis facienti Cato, 'non memini' inquit 'me percussum.' Melius putauit non agnoscere quam uindicare. 3. 'Nihil' inquis 'illi post tantam petulantiam mali factum est?' Immo multum boni: coepit Catonem nosse. Magni animi est iniurias despicere; ultionis contumeliosissimum genus est non esse uisum dignum ex quo peteretur ultio. Multi leues iniurias altius sibi demisere dum uindicant: ille magnus et nobilis qui more magnae ferae latratus minutorum canum securus exaudit.

XXXIII.

1. 'Minus' inquit 'contemnemur, si uindicauerimus iniuriam.' Si tamquam ad remedium uenimus, sine ira ueniamus, non quasi dulce sit uindicari, sed quasi utile; saepe autem satius fuit dissimulare quam ulcisci. Potentiorum iniuriae hilari uultu, non patienter tantum ferendae sunt: facient iterum, si se fecisse crediderint. Hoc habent pessimum animi magna fortuna insolentes: quos laeserunt et oderunt.

2. Notissima uox est eius qui in cultu regum consenuerat: cum illum quidam interrogaret quomodo rarissimam rem in aula consecutus esset, senectutem, 'iniurias' inquit 'accipiendo et gratias agendo'. Saepe adeo iniuriam uindicare non expedit ut ne fateri quidem expediat.

3. C. Caesar Pastoris splendidi equitis Romani filium cum in custodia habuisset munditiis eius et cultioribus capillis offensus, rogante patre ut salutem sibi filii concederet, quasi de supplicio admonitus duci protinus iussit; ne tamen omnia inhumane faceret aduersum patrem, ad cenam illum eo die inuitauit.

4. Venit Pastor uultu nihil exprobrante. Propinauit illi Caesar heminam et posuit illi custodem: perdurauit miser, non aliter quam si fili sanguinem biberet. Vnguentum et coronas misit et obseruare iussit an sumeret: sumpsit. Eo die quo filium extulerat, immo quo non extulerat, iacebat conuiuia centesimus et potiones uix honestas natalibus liberorum podagricus senex hauriebat, cum interim non lacrimam emisit, non dolorem aliquo signo erumpere passus est; cenauit tamquam pro filio exorasset.

5. Quaeris quare? habebat alterum. Quid ille Priamus? Non dissimulauit iram et regis genua complexus est, funestam perfusamque cruore fili manum ad os suum rettulit, cenauit? Sed tamen sine unguento, sine coronis, et illum hostis saeuissimus multis solaciis ut cibum caperet hortatus est, non ut pocula ingentia super caput posito custode siccaret.

6. Contempsissem Romanum patrem, si sibi timuisset: nunc iram compescuit pietas. Dignus fuit cui permetteretur a conuiuio ad ossa fili legenda discedere; ne hoc quidem permisit benignus interim et comis adulescens: propinationibus senem crebris, ut cura leniretur admonens, lacescebat. Contra ille se laetum et oblitum quid eo actum esset die praestitit; perierat alter filius, si carnifici conuiuia non placuisset.

XXXIV.

1. Ergo ira abstinendum est, siue par est qui lacesendus est siue superior siue inferior. Cum pare contendere anceps est, cum superiore furiosum, cum inferiore sordidum. Pusilli hominis et miseri est repetere mordentem: mures formicaeque, si manum admoueris, ora conuertunt; inbecillia se laedi putant, si tanguntur. 2. Faciet nos mitiores, si cogitauerimus quid aliquando nobis profuerit ille cui irascimur, et meritis offensa redimetur. Illud quoque occurrat, quantum nobis commendationis allatura sit clementiae fama, quam multos uenia amicos utiles fecerit. 3. Ne irascamur inimicorum et hostium liberis: inter Sullanae crudelitatis exempla est quod ab re publica liberos proscriptorum summouit; nihil est iniquius quam aliquem heredem paterni odii fieri. 4. Cogitemus, quotiens ad ignoscendum difficiles erimus, an expediat nobis omnes inexorabiles esse. Quam saepe ueniam qui negauit petit! Quam saepe eius pedibus aduolutus est quem a suis reppulit! Quid est gloriosius quam iram amicitia mutare? Quos populus Romanus fideliores habet socios quam quos habuit pertinacissimos hostes? Quod hodie esset imperium, nisi salubris prouidentia uictos permiscuisset uictoribus? 5. Irascetur aliquis: tu contra beneficiis prouoca; cadit statim simulas ab altera parte deserta; nisi paria non pugnant. Sed utrimque certabit ira, concurratur: ille est melior qui prior pedem rettulit, uictus est qui uicit. Percussit te: recede; referiendo enim et occasionem saepius feriendi dabis et excusationem; non poteris reuelli, cum uoles.

XXXV.

1. Numquid uelit quisquam tam grauiter hostem ferire ut relinquit manum in uulnere et se ab ictu reuocare non possit? Atqui tale ira telum est: uix retrahitur. Arma nobis expedita prospicimus, gladium commodum et habilem: non uitabimus impetus animi ~hos~ graues et onerosos et inreuocabiles? 2. Ea demum uelocitas placet quae ubi iussa est uestigium sistit nec ultra destinata procurrat flectique et cursu ad gradum reduci potest; aegros scimus neruos esse, ubi inuitis nobis mouentur; senex aut infirmi corporis est qui cum ambulare uult currit: animi motus eos putemus sanissimos ualidissimosque qui nostro arbitrio ibunt, non suo ferentur.

3. Nihil tamen aequè profuerit quam primum intueri deformitatem rei, deinde periculum. Non est ullius adfectus facies turbatio: pulcherrima ora foedauit, toruos uultus ex tranquillissimis reddit; linquit decor omnis iratos, et siue amictus illis compositus est ad legem, trahent uestem omnemque curam sui effundent, siue capillorum natura uel arte iacentium non informis habitus, cum animo inhorrescunt; tumescunt uenae; concutietur crebro spiritus pectus, rabida uocis eruptio colla distendet; tum artus trepidi, inquietae manus, totius corporis fluctuatio. 4. Qualem intus putas esse animum cuius extra imago tam foeda est? Quanto illi intra pectus terribilior uultus est, acrior spiritus, intentior impetus, rupturus se nisi eruperit! 5. Quales sunt hostium uel ferarum caede madentium aut ad caedem euntium aspectus, qualia poetae inferna monstra finxerunt succincta serpentibus et igneo flatu, quales ad bella excitanda discordiamque in populos diuidendam pacemque lacerandam deae taeterrimae inferum exeunt, talem nobis iram figuremus, flamma lumina ardentia, sibilo mugituque et gemitu et stridore et si qua his inuisior uox est perstreptentem, tela manu utraque quatientem (neque enim illi se tegere curae est), toruam cruentamque et cicatricosam et uerberibus suis liuidam, incessus uesani, offusam multa caligine, incursitantem uastantem fugantemque et omnium odio laborantem, sui maxime, si aliter nocere non possit, terras maria caelum ruere cupientem, infestam pariter inuisamque. 6. Vel, si uidetur, sit qualis apud uates nostros est

scissa gaudens uadit Discordia palla

aut si qua magis dira facies excogitari diri adfectus potest.

XXXVI.

1. Quibusdam, ut ait Sextius, iratis profuit aspexisse speculum. Perturbauit illos tanta mutatio sui; uelut in rem praesentem adducti non agnouerunt se: et quantum ex uera deformitate imago illa speculo repercussa reddebat! 2. Animus si ostendi et si in ulla materia perlucere posset, intuentis confunderet ater maculosusque et aestuans et distortus et tumidus. Nunc quoque tanta deformitas eius est per ossa carnesque et tot impedimenta effluentis: quid si nudus ostenderetur? 3. Speculo quidem neminem deterritum ab ira credideris. Quid ergo? qui ad speculum uenerat ut se mutaret, iam mutauerat: iratis quidem nulla est formosior effigies quam atrox et horrida qualesque esse etiam uideri uolunt.

4. Magis illud uidendum est, quam multis ira per se nocuerit. Alii nimio feruore rupere uenas et sanguinem supra uires elatus clamor egressit et luminum suffudit aciem in oculos uehementius umor egestus et in morbos aegri reccidere. Nulla celerior ad insaniam uia est. 5. Multi itaque continuauerunt irae furorem nec quam expulerant mentem umquam receperunt: Aiace in mortem egit furor, in furorem ira. Mortem liberis, egestatem sibi, ruinam domui inprecantur, et irasci se negant non minus quam insanire furiosi. Amicissimis hostes uitandique carissimis, legum nisi qua nocent immemores, ad minima mobiles, non sermone, non officio adiri faciles, per uim omnia gerunt, gladiis et pugnare parati et incumbere.

6. Maximum enim illos malum cepit et omnia exsuperans uitia. Alia paulatim intrant, repentina et uniuersa uis huius est. Omnis denique alios adfectus sibi subicit: amorem ardentissimum uincit, transfoderunt itaque amata corpora et in eorum quos occiderant iacuerunt complexibus; auaritiam, durissimum malum minimeque flexibile, ira calcauit, adactam opes suas spargere et domui rebusque in unum conlatis inicere ignem. Quid? non ambitiosus magno aestimata proiecit insignia honoremque delatum reppulit? Nullus adfectus est in quem non ira dominetur.

I.

1. Quod maxime desiderasti, Nouate, nunc facere temptabimus, iram excidere animis aut certe refrenare et impetus eius inhibere. Id aliquando palam aperteque faciendum est, ubi minor uis mali patitur, aliquando ex occulto, ubi nimium ardet omnique impedimento exasperatur et crescit; refert quantas uires quamque integras habeat, utrum reuerberanda et agenda retro sit an cedere ei debeamus dum tempestas prima desaeuit, ne remedia ipsa secum ferat. 2. Consilium pro moribus cuiusque capiendum erit; quosdam enim preces uincunt, quidam insultant instantque summissis, quosdam terrendo placabimus; alios obiurgatio, alios confessio, alios pudor coepto deiecit, alios mora, lentum praecipitis mali remedium, ad quod nouissime descendendum est. 3. Ceteri enim adfectus dilationem recipiunt et curari tardius possunt, huius incitata et se ipsa rapiens uiolentia non paulatim procedit sed dum incipit tota est; nec aliorum more uitiorum sollicitat animos, sed abducit et inpotentes sui cupidosque uel communis mali exagitat, nec in ea tantum in quae destinauit sed in occurrentia obiter furit. 4. Cetera uitia inpellunt animos, ira praecipitat. Etiam si resistere contra adfectus suos non licet, at certe adfectibus ipsis licet stare: haec, non secus quam fulmina procellaeque et si qua alia inreuocabilia sunt quia non eunt sed cadunt, uim suam magis ac magis tendit. 5. Alia uitia a ratione, hoc a sanitate desciscit; alia accessus lenes habent et incrementa fallentia: in iram deiectus animorum est. Nulla itaque res urget magis attonita et in uires suas prona et siue successit superba, siue frustratur insana; ne repulsa quidem in taedium acta, ubi aduersarium fortuna subduxit, in se ipsa morsus suos uertit. Nec refert quantum sit ex quo surrexerit; ex leuissimis enim in maxima euadit.

II.

1. Nullam transit aetatem, nullum hominum genus excipit. Quaedam gentes beneficio egestatis non nouere luxuriam; quaedam, quia exercitae et uagae sunt, effugere pigritiam; quibus incultus mos agrestisque uita est, circumscriptio ignota est et fraus et quodcumque in foro malum nascitur: nulla gens est quam non ira instiget, tam inter Graios quam inter barbaros potens, non minus perniciose leges metuentibus quam quibus iura distinguit modus uirium. 2. Denique cetera singulos corripiunt, hic unus adfectus est qui interdum publice concipitur. Numquam populus uniuersus feminae amore flagrauit nec in pecuniam aut lucrum tota ciuitas spem suam misit; ambitio uiritim singulos occupat, in potentia non est malum publicum; saepe in iram uno agmine itum est. 3. Viri feminae, senes pueri, principes uulgiusque consensere, et tota multitudo paucissimis uerbis concitata ipsum concitatorem antecessit; ad arma protinus ignesque discursum est et indicta finitimis bella aut gesta cum ciuibus; 4. totae cum stirpe omni crematae domus, et modo eloquio fauorabili habitus in multo honore iram suae contionis excepit; in imperatorem suum legiones pila torserunt; dissedit plebs tota cum patribus; publicum consilium senatus non expectatis dilectibus nec nominato imperatore subitos irae suae duces legit ac per tecta urbis nobiles consecratos uiros supplicium manu sumpsit; 5. uiolatae legationes rupto iure gentium rabiesque infanda ciuitatem tulit, nec datum tempus quo resideret tumor publicus, sed deductae protinus classes et oneratae tumultuario milite; sine more, sine auspiciis populus ductu irae suae egressus fortuita raptaque pro armis gessit, deinde magna clade temeritatem audacis irae luit. 6. Hic barbaris forte inuentibus in bella exitus est: cum mobiles animos species iniuriae perculit, aguntur statim et qua dolor trahit ruinae modo legionibus incidunt, incompositi interriti incauti, pericula adpetentes sua; gaudent feriri et instare ferro et tela corpore urgere et per suum uulnus exire.

III.

1. 'Non est' inquis 'dubium quin magna ista et pestifera sit uis: ideo quemadmodum sanari debeat monstra.' Atqui, ut in prioribus libris dixi, stat Aristoteles defensor irae et uetat illam nobis exsecari: calcar ait esse uirtutis, hac erepta inermem animum et ad conatus magnos pigrum inertemque fieri. 2. Necessarium est itaque foeditatem eius ac feritatem coarguere et ante oculis ponere quantum monstri sit homo in hominem furens quantoque impetu ruat non sine pernicie sua perniciosus et ea deprimens quae mergi nisi cum mergente non possunt. 3. Quid ergo? sanum hunc aliquis uocat qui uelut tempestate correptus non it sed agitur et furenti malo seruit, nec mandat ultionem suam sed ipse eius exactor animo simul ac manu saeuit, carissimorum eorumque quae mox amissa fleturus est carnifex? 4. Hunc aliquis adfectum uirtuti adiutorem comitemque dat, consilia sine quibus uirtus nihil gerit obturbantem? Caducae sinistraeque sunt uires et in malum suum ualidae in quas aegrum morbus et accessio erexit. 5. Non est ergo quod me putes tempus in superuacuis consumere, quod iram, quasi dubiae apud homines opinionis sit, infamem, cum sit aliquis et quidem de inlustribus philosophis qui illi indicat operas et tamquam utilem ac spiritus subministrantem in proelia, in actus rerum, ad omne quodcumque calore aliquo gerendum est uocet. 6. Ne quem fallat tamquam aliquo tempore, aliquo loco profutura, ostendenda est rabies eius effrenata et attonita apparatusque illi reddendus est suus, eculei et fidiculae et ergastula et cruces et circumdati defossis corporibus ignes et cadauera quoque trahens uncus, uaria uinculorum genera, uaria poenarum, lacerationes membrorum, inscriptiones frontis et bestiarum immanium caueae: inter haec instrumenta conlocetur ira dirum quiddam atque horridum stridens, omnibus per quae furit taetrior.

IV.

1. Vt de ceteris dubium sit, nulli certe adfectui peior est uultus, quem in prioribus libris descripsimus: asperum et acrem et nunc subducto retrorsus sanguine fugatoque pallentem, nunc in os omni calore ac spiritu uerso subrubicundum et similem cruento, uenis tumentibus, oculis nunc trepidis et exilientibus, nunc in uno obtutu defixis et haerentibus; 2. adice dentium inter se arietatorum ut aliquem esse cupientium non alium sonum quam est apris tela sua adtritu acuentibus; adice articulorum crepitum cum se ipsae manus frangunt et pulsatum saepius pectus, anhelitus crebros tractosque altius gemitus, instabile corpus, incerta uerba subitis exclamationibus, tremantia labra interdumque compressa et dirum quiddam exsibilantia. 3. Ferarum mehercules, siue illas fames agitat siue infixum uisceribus ferrum, minus taetra facies est, etiam cum uenatorem suum semianimes morsu ultimo petunt, quam hominis ira flagrantis. Age, si exaudire uoces ac minas uacet, qualia excarnificati animi uerba sunt!

4. Nonne reuocare se quisque ab ira uolet, cum intellexerit illam a suo primum malo incipere? Non uis ergo admoneam eos qui iram <in> summa potentia exercent et argumentum uirium existimant et in magnis magnae fortunae bonis ponunt paratam ultionem, quam non sit potens, immo ne liber quidem dici possit irae suae captius? 5. Non uis admoneam, quo diligentior quisque sit et ipse se circumspiciat, alia animi mala ad pessimos quosque pertinere, iracundiam etiam eruditis hominibus et in alia sanis inrepere? adeo ut quidam simplicitatis indicium iracundiam dicant et uulgo credatur facillimus quisque huic <maxime> obnoxius.

V.

1. 'Quorsus' inquis 'hoc pertinet?' Vt nemo se iudicet tutum ab illa, cum lenes quoque natura et placidos in saeuitiam ac uiolentiam euocet. Quemadmodum aduersus pestilentiam nihil prodest firmitas corporis et diligens ualetudinis cura (promiscue enim inbecilla robustaque inuadit), ita ab ira tam inquietis moribus periculum est quam compositis et remissis, quibus eo turpior ac periculosior est quo plus in illis mutat. 2. Sed cum primum sit non irasci, secundum desinere, tertium alienae quoque irae mederi, dicam primum quemadmodum in iram non incidamus, deinde quemadmodum nos ab illa liberemus, nouissime quemadmodum irascentem retineamus placemusque et ad sanitatem reducamus.

3. Ne irascamur praestabimus, si omnia uitia irae nobis subinde proposuerimus et illam bene aestimauerimus. Accusanda est apud nos, damnanda; perscrutanda eius mala et in medium protrahenda sunt; ut qualis sit appareat, comparanda cum pessimis est. 4. Auaritia acquirit et contrahit, quo aliquis melior utatur: ira inpendit, paucis gratuita est. Iracundus dominus quot in fugam seruos egit, quot in mortem! Quanto plus irascendo quam id erat propter quod irascebatur amisit! Ira patri luctum, marito diuortium attulit, magistratui odium, candidato repulsam. 5. Peior est quam luxuria, quoniam illa sua uoluptate fruitur, haec alieno dolore. Vincit malignitatem et inuidiam; illae enim infelicem fieri uolunt, haec facere; illae fortuitis malis delectantur, haec non potest expectare fortunam: nocere ei quem odit, non noceri uult. 6. Nihil est simultatibus grauius: has ira conciliat. Nihil est bello funestius: in hoc potentium ira prorumpit; ceterum etiam illa plebeia ira et priuata inerme et sine uiribus bellum est. Praeterea ira, ut seponamus quae mox secutura sunt, damna insidias perpetuam ex certaminibus mutuis sollicitudinem, dat poenas dum exigit; naturam hominis eiurat: illa in amorem hortatur, haec in odium; illa prodesse iubet, haec nocere. 7. Adice quod, cum indignatio eius a nimio sui suspectu ueniat, ut animosa uideatur, pusilla est et angusta; nemo enim non eo a quo se contemptum iudicat minor est. At ille ingens animus et uerus aestimator sui non uindicat iniuriam, quia non sentit. 8. Vt tela a duro

animum iniuria ad sensum sui adducit, fragilior eo quod petit.
Quanto pulchrius uelut nulli penetrabilem telo omnis iniurias contumeliasque respuere! Ultio doloris confessio est; non est magnus animus quem incuruat iniuria. Aut potentior te aut inbecillior laesit:
si inbecillior, parce illi, si potentior, tibi.

VI.

1. Nullum est argumentum magnitudinis certius quam nihil posse quo instigeris accidere. Pars superior mundi et ordinatio ac propinqua sideribus nec in nubem cogitur nec in tempestatem inpellitur nec uersatur in turbinem; omni tumultu caret: inferiora fulminantur. Eodem modo sublimis animus, quietus semper et in statione tranquilla conlocatus, omnia infra se premens quibus ira contrahitur, modestus et uenerabilis est et dispositus; quorum nihil inuenies in irato. 2. Quis enim traditus dolori et furens non primam reiecit uerecundiam? Quis impetu turbidus et in aliquem ruens non quidquid in se uenerandi habuit abiecit? Cui officiorum numerus aut ordo constitit incitato? Quis linguae temperauit? Quis ullam partem corporis tenuit? Quis se regere potuit inmissum? 3. Proderit nobis illud Democriti salutare praeceptum, quo monstratur tranquillitas si neque priuatim neque publice multa aut maiora uiribus nostris egerimus. Numquam tam feliciter in multa discurrenti negotia dies transit ut non aut ex homine aut ex re offensa nascatur quae animum in iras paret. 4. Quemadmodum per frequentia urbis loca properanti in multos incursitandum est et aliubi labi necesse est, aliubi retineri, aliubi respergi, ita in hoc uitae actu dissipato et uago multa impedimenta, multae querellae incidunt: alius spem nostram fefellit, alius distulit, alius intercept; non ex destinato proposita fluxerunt. 5. Nulli fortuna tam dedita est ut multa temptanti ubique respondeat; sequitur ergo ut is cui contra quam proposuerat aliqua cesserunt inpatiens hominum rerumque sit, ex leuissimis causis irascatur nunc personae, nunc negotio, nunc loco, nunc fortunae, nunc sibi. 6. Itaque ut quietus possit esse animus, non est iactandus nec multarum, ut dixi, rerum actu fatigandus nec magnarum supraque uires adpetitarum. Facile est leuia aptare ceruicibus et in hanc aut illam partem transferre sine lapsu, at quae alienis in nos manibus inposita aegre sustinemus, uicti in proximo effundimus; etiam dum stamus sub sarcina, inpares oneri uacillamus.

VII.

1. Idem accidere in rebus ciuilibus ac domesticis scias. Negotia expedita et habilia sequuntur actorem, ingentia et supra mensuram gerentis nec dant se facile et, si occupata sunt, premunt atque abducunt administrantem tenerique iam uisa cum ipso cadunt: ita fit ut frequenter inrita sit eius uoluntas qui non quae facilia sunt adgreditur, sed uult facilia esse quae adgressus est. 2. Quotiens aliquid conaberis, te simul et ea quae paras quibusque pararis ipse metire; faciet enim te asperum paenitentia operis infecti. Hoc interest utrum quis feruidi sit ingenii an frigidi atque humilis: generoso repulsa iram exprimet, languido inertique tristitiam. Ergo actiones nostrae nec paruae sint nec audaces et improbae, in uicinum spes exeat, nihil conemur quod mox adepti quoque successisse miremur.

VIII.

1. Demus operam ne accipiamus iniuriam, quia ferre nescimus. Cum placidissimo et facillimo et minime anxio morosoque uiuendum est; sumuntur a conuersantibus mores et ut quaedam in contactos corporis uitia transiliunt, ita animus mala sua proximis tradit: ebriosus conuictores in amorem meri traxit, inpudicorum coetus fortem quoque et silice natum uirum emolliit, auaritia in proximos uirus suum transtulit. 2. Eadem ex diuerso ratio uirtutum est, ut omne quod secum habent mitigent; nec tam ualetudini profuit utilis regio et salubrius caelum quam animis parum firmis in turba meliore uersari. 3. Quae res quantum possit intelleges, si uideris feras quoque conuictu nostro mansuescere nullique etiam immani bestiae uim suam permanere, si hominis contubernium diu passa est: retunditur omnis asperitas paulatimque inter placida dediscitur. Accedit huc quod non tantum exemplo melior fit qui cum quietis hominibus uiuit, sed quod causas irascendi non inuenit nec uitium suum exercet. Fugere itaque debet omnis quos irritaturos iracundiam sciet. 'Qui sunt' inquit 'isti?' 4. Multi ex uariis causis idem facturi: offendet te superbus contemptu, dicax contumelia, petulans iniuria, liuidus malignitate, pugnax contentione, uentosus et mendax uanitate; non feres a suspicioso timeri, a pertinace uinci, a delicato fastidiri. 5. Elige simplices faciles moderatos, qui iram tuam nec euocent et ferant; magis adhuc proderunt summissi et humani et dulces, non tamen usque in adulationem, nam iracundos nimia adsentatio offendit: erat certe amicus noster uir bonus sed irae paratioris, cui non magis tutum erat blandiri quam male dicere. 6. Caelium oratorem fuisse iracundissimum constat. Cum quo, ut aiunt, cenabat in cubiculo lectae patientiae cliens, sed difficile erat illi in copulam coniecto rixam eius cui cohaerebat effugere; optimum iudicauit quidquid dixisset sequi et secundas agere. Non tulit Caelius adsentientem et exclamauit, 'dic aliquid contra, ut duo simus!' Sed ille quoque, quod non irasceret iratus, cito sine aduersario desit. 7. Eligamus ergo uel hos potius, si conscii nobis iracundiae sumus, qui uultum nostrum ac sermonem sequantur: facient quidem nos delicatos et in malam consuetudinem inducent nihil contra uoluntatem audiendi, sed proderit uitio suo interuallum et quietem dare. Difficiles quoque et indomiti natura blandientem ferent: nihil asperum tetricumque palpanti est. 8. Quotiens disputatio longior et pugnacior erit, in prima resistamus, antequam robur accipiat: alit se ipsa contentio et demissos altius tenet; facilius est se a certamine abstinere quam abducere.

IX.

1. Studia quoque grauiora iracundis omittenda sunt aut certe citra lassitudinem exercenda, et animus non inter dura uersandus, sed artibus amoenis tradendus: lectio illum carminum obleniat et historia fabulis detineat; mollius delicatiusque tractetur. 2. Pythagoras perturbationes animi lyra componebat; quis autem ignorat lituos et tubas concitamenta esse, sicut quosdam cantus blandimenta quibus mens resoluatur? Confusis oculis prosunt uirentia et quibusdam coloribus infirma acies adquiescit, quorundam splendore praestringitur: sic mentes aegras studia laeta permulcent. 3. Forum aduocationes iudicia fugere debemus et omnia quae exulcerant uitium, aequae cauere lassitudinem corporis; consumit enim quidquid in nobis mite placidumque est et acria concitat. 4. Ideo quibus stomachus suspectus est, processuri ad res agendas maioris negotii bilem cibo temperant, quam maxime mouet fatigatio, siue quia calorem in media compellit et nocet sanguini cursumque eius uenis laborantibus sistit, siue quia corpus attenuatum et infirmum incumbit animo; certe ob eandem causam iracundiores sunt uoletudine aut aetate fessi. Fames quoque et sitis ex isdem causis uitanda est: exasperat et incendit animos. 5. Vetus dictum est a lasso rixam quaeri; aequae autem et ab esuriente et a sitiante et ab omni homine quem aliqua res urit. Nam ut ulcera ad leuem tactum, deinde etiam ad suspicionem tactus condolescunt, ita animus adfectus minimis offenditur, adeo ut quosdam salutatio et epistula et oratio et interrogatio in litem euocent: numquam sine querella aegra tanguntur.

X.

1. Optimum est itaque ad primum mali sensum mederi sibi, tum uerbis quoque suis minimum libertatis dare et inhibere impetum. 2. Facile est autem adfectus suos, cum primum oriuntur, deprehendere: morborum signa praecurrunt. Quemadmodum tempestatis ac pluuiæ ante ipsas notæ ueniunt, ita iræ amoris omniumque istarum procellarum animos uexantium sunt quædam prænuntia. 3. Qui comitali uitio solent corripiri iam aduentare ualetudinem intellegunt, si calor summa deseruit et incertum lumen neruorumque trepidatio est, si memoria sublabitur caputque uersatur; solitis itaque remediis incipientem causam occupant, et odore gustuque quidquid est quod alienat animos repellitur, aut fomentis contra frigus rigoremque pugnatur; aut, si parum medicina profecit, uitauerunt turbam et sine teste ceciderunt. 4. Prodest morbum suum nosse et uires eius antequam spatientur opprimere. Videamus quid sit quod nos maxime concitet: alium uerborum, alium rerum contumeliæ mouent; hic uult nobilitati, hic formæ suæ parci; hic elegantissimus haberi cupit, ille doctissimus; hic superbiæ inpatiens est, hic contumaciæ; ille seruos non putat dignos quibus irascatur, hic intra domum saeuus est, foris mitis; ille rogari iniuriam iudicat, hic non rogari contumeliam. Non omnes ab eadem parte feriuntur; scire itaque oportet quid in te inbecillum sit, ut id maxime protegas.

XI.

1. Non expedit omnia uidere, omnia audire. Multae nos iniuriae transeant, ex quibus plerasque non accipit qui nescit. Non uis esse iracundus? ne fueris curiosus. Qui inquit quid in se dictum sit, qui malignos sermones etiam si secreto habiti sunt eruit, se ipse inquietat. Quaedam interpretatio eo perducit ut uideantur iniuriae; itaque alia differenda sunt, alia deridenda, alia donanda. 2. Circumscribenda multis modis ira est; pleraque in lusum iocumque uertantur. Socraten aiunt colapho percussum nihil amplius dixisse quam molestum esse quod nescirent homines quando cum galea prodire deberent. 3. Non quemadmodum facta sit iniuria refert, sed quemadmodum lata; nec uideo quare difficilis sit moderatio, cum sciam tyrannorum quoque tumida et fortuna et licentia ingenia familiarem sibi saeuitiam repressisse. 4. Pisistratum certe, Atheniensium tyrannum, memoriae proditur, cum multa in crudelitatem eius ebrius conuiuia dixisset nec deessent qui uellent manus ei commodare et alius hinc alius illinc faces subderent, placido animo tulisse et hoc inritantibus respondisse, non magis illi se suscensere quam si quis obligatis oculis in se incucurrisset.

XII.

1. Magna pars querellas manu fecit aut falsa suspicando aut leuia adgrauando. Saepe ad nos ira uenit, saepius nos ad illam. Quae numquam arcessenda est: etiam cum incidit, reiciatur. 2. Nemo dicit sibi, 'hoc propter quod irascor aut feci aut fecisse potui'; nemo animum facientis sed ipsum aestimat factum: atqui ille intuendus est, uoluerit an inciderit, coactus sit an deceptus, odium secutus sit an praemium, sibi morem gesserit an manum alteri commodauerit. Aliquid aetas peccantis facit, aliquid fortuna, ut ferre ac pati aut humanum sit aut utile. 3. Eo nos loco constituamus quo ille est cui irascimur: nunc facit nos iracundos iniqua nostri aestimatio et quae facere uellemus pati nolumus. 4. Nemo se differt; atqui maximum remedium irae dilatio est, ut primus eius feruor relanguescat et caligo quae premit mentem aut residat aut minus densa sit. Quaedam ex his quae te praecipitem ferebant hora, non tantum dies molliet, quaedam ex toto euanescent; si nihil egerit petita aduocatio, apparebit iam iudicium esse, non iram. Quidquid uoles quale sit scire, tempori trade: nihil diligenter in fluctu cernitur. 5. Non potuit inpetrare a se Plato tempus, cum seruo suo irasceretur, sed ponere illum statim tunicam et praebere scapulas uerberibus iussit, sua manu ipse caesurus; postquam intellexit irasci se, sicut sustulerat manum suspensam detinebat et stabat percussuro similis; interrogatus deinde ab amico qui forte interuenerat quid ageret, 'exigo' inquit 'poenas ab homine iracundo.' 6. Velut stupens gestum illum saeuitori deformem sapienti uiro seruabat, oblitus iam serui, quia alium quem potius castigaret inuenerat. Itaque abstulit sibi in suos potestatem et ob peccatum quoddam commotior 'tu,' inquit 'Speusippe, seruulum istum uerberibus obiurga; nam ego irascor.' 7. Ob hoc non cecidit propter quod alius cecidisset. 'Irascor' inquit; 'plus faciam quam oportet, libentius faciam: non sit iste seruus in eius potestate qui in sua non est.' Aliquis uult irato committi ultionem, cum Plato sibi ipse imperium abrogauerit? Nihil tibi liceat dum irasceris. Quare? quia uis omnia licere.

XIII.

1. Pugna tecum ipse: si <uis> uincere iram, non potest te illa. Incipis uincere, si absconditur, si illi exitus non datur. Signa eius obruamus et illam quantum fieri potest occultam secretamque teneamus. 2. Cum magna id nostra molestia fiet (cupit enim exilire et incendere oculos et mutare faciem), sed si eminere illi extra nos licuit, supra nos est. In imo pectoris secessu recondatur, feraturque, non ferat. Immo in contrarium omnia eius indicia flectamus: uultus remittatur, uox lenior sit, gradus lentior; paulatim cum exterioribus interiora formantur. 3. In Socrate irae signum erat uocem summittere, loqui parcius; apparebat tunc illum sibi obstare. Deprendebatur itaque a familiaribus et coarguebatur, nec erat illi exprobratio latitantis irae ingrata. Quidni gauderet quod iram suam multi intellegerent, nemo sentiret? Sensissent autem, nisi ius amicis obiurgandi se dedisset, sicut ipse sibi in amicos sumpserat. 4. Quanto magis hoc nobis faciendum est! Rogemus amicissimum quemque ut tunc maxime libertate aduersus nos utatur cum minime illam pati poterimus, nec adsentiat irae nostrae; contra [nos] potens malum et apud nos gratiosum, dum consipimus, dum nostri sumus, aduocemus. 5. Qui uinum male ferunt et ebrietatis suae temeritatem ac petulantiam metuunt, mandant suis ut e conuiuio auferantur; intemperantiam in morbo suam experti parere ipsis in aduersa uoletudine uetant. 6. Optimum est notis utiis inpedimenta prospicere et ante omnia ita componere animum ut etiam grauissimis rebus subitisque concussus iram aut non sentiat aut magnitudine inopinatae iniuriae exortam in altum retrahat nec dolorem suum profiteatur. 7. Id fieri posse apparebit, si pauca ex turba ingenti exempla protulero, ex quibus utrumque discere licet, quantum mali habeat ira ubi hominum praepotentium potestate tota utitur, quantum sibi imperare possit ubi metu maiore compressa est.

XIV.

1. Cambysen regem nimis deditum uino Praexaspes unus ex carissimis monebat ut parcius biberet, turpem esse dicens ebrietatem in rege, quem omnium oculi auresque sequerentur. Ad haec ille 'ut scias' inquit 'quemadmodum numquam excidam mihi, adprobabo iam et oculos post uinum in officio esse et manus.' 2. Bibit deinde liberalius quam alias capacioribus scyphis et iam grauis ac uinolentus obiurgatoris sui filium procedere ultra limen iubet adleuataque super caput sinistra manu stare. Tunc intendit arcum et ipsum cor adulescentis (id enim petere se dixerat) figit rescissoque pectore haerens in ipso corde spiculum ostendit ac respiciens patrem interrogauit satisne certam haberet manum. At ille negauit Apollinem potuisse certius mittere. 3. Di illum male perdant animo magis quam condicione mancipium! eius rei laudator fuit cuius nimis erat spectatorem fuisse. Occasionem blanditiarum putauit pectus filii in duas partes diductum et cor sub uulnere palpitans: controuersiam illi facere de gloria debuit et reuocare iactum, ut regi liberet in ipso patre certio rem manum ostendere. 4. O regem cruentum! o dignum in quem omnium suorum arcus uerterentur! Cum execrati fuerimus illum conuiuia suppliciis funeribusque soluentem, tamen sceleratius telum illud laudatum est quam missum. Videbimus quomodo se pater gerere debuerit stans super cadauer filii sui caedemque illam cuius et testis fuerat et causa: id de quo nunc agitur apparet, iram suppressi posse. 5. Non male dixit regi, nullum emisit ne calamitosi quidem uerbum, cum aequè cor suum quam filii transfixum uideret. Potest dici merito deuorasse uerba; nam si quid tamquam iratus dixisset, nihil tamquam pater facere potuisset. 6. Potest, inquam, uideri sapientius se in illo casu gessisse quam cum de potandi modo praeciperet <ei> quem satius erat uinum quam sanguinem bibere, cuius manus poculis occupari pax erat. Accessit itaque ad numerum eorum qui magnis cladibus ostenderunt quanti constarent regum amicis bona consilia.

XV.

1. Non dubito quin Harpagus quoque tale aliquid regi suo Persarumque suaserit, quo offensus liberos illi epulandos adposuit et subinde quaesiit an placeret conditura; deinde, ut satis illum plenum malis suis uidit, adferri capita illorum iussit et quomodo esset acceptus interrogauit. Non defuerunt misero uerba, non os concurrat: ‘apud regem’ inquit ‘omnis cena iucunda est.’ Quid hac adulatione profecit? ne ad reliquias inuitaretur. 2. Non ueto patrem damnare regis sui factum, non ueto quaerere dignam tam truci portento poenam, sed hoc interim colligo, posse etiam ex ingentibus malis nascentem iram abscondi et ad uerba contraria sibi cogi. 3. Necessaria ista est doloris refrenatio, utique hoc sortitis uitae genus et ad regiam adhibitis mensam: sic estur apud illos, sic bibitur, sic respondetur; funeribus suis adridendum est. An tanti sit uita uidebimus: alia ista quaestio est. Non consolabimur tam triste ergastulum, non adhortabimur ferre imperia carnificum: ostendemus in omni seruitute apertam libertati uiam. Is aeger animo et suo uitio miser est, cui miserias finire secum licet. 4. Dicam et illi qui in regem incidit sagittis pectora amicorum petentem et illi cuius dominus liberorum uisceribus patres saturat: ‘quid gemis, demens? Quid expectas ut te aut hostis aliquis per exitium gentis tuae uindictet aut rex a longinquo potens aduolet? quocumque respexeris, ibi malorum finis est. Vides illum praecipitem locum? illac ad libertatem descenditur. Vides illud mare, illud flumen, illum puteum? libertas illic in imo sedet. Vides illam arborem breuem retorridam infelicem? pendet inde libertas. Vides iugulum tuum, guttur tuum, cor tuum? effugia seruitutis sunt. Nimis tibi operosos exitus monstro et multum animi ac roboris exigentes? Quaeris quod sit ad libertatem iter? quaelibet in corpore tuo uena.’

XVI.

1. Quam diu quidem nihil tam intolerabile nobis uidetur ut nos expellat e uita, iram, in quocumque erimus statu, remoueamus. Perniciosa est seruientibus; omnis enim indignatio in tormentum suum proficit et imperia grauiora sentit quo contumacius patitur. Sic laqueos fera dum iactat adstringit; sic aues uiscum, dum trepidantes excutiunt, plumis omnibus inlinunt. Nullum tam artum est iugum quod non minus laedat ducentem quam repugnantem: unum est leuamentum malorum ingentium, pati et necessitatibus suis obsequi.

2. Sed cum utilis sit seruientibus adfectuum suorum et huius praecipue rabidi atque effreni continentia, utilior est regibus: perierunt omnia ubi quantum ira suadet fortuna permittit, nec diu potest quae multorum malo exercetur potentia stare; periclitatur enim ubi eos qui separatim gemunt communis metus iunxit. Plerosque itaque modo singuli mactauerunt, modo uniuersi, cum illos conferre in unum iras publicus dolor coegisset.

3. Atqui plerique sic iram quasi insigne regium exercuerunt, sicut Dareus, qui primus post ablatum mago imperium Persas et magnam partem orientis obtinuit. Nam cum bellum Scythis indixisset orientem cingentibus, rogatus ab Oeobazo nobili sene ut ex tribus liberis unum in solacium patri relinqueret, duorum opera uteretur, plus quam rogabatur pollicitus omnis se illi dixit remissurum et occisos in conspectu parentis abiecit, crudelis futurus si omnis abduxisset.

4. At quanto Xerses facilior! qui Pythio quinque filiorum patri unius uacationem petenti quem uellet eligere permisit, deinde quem elegerat in partes duas distractum ab utroque uiae latere posuit et hac uictima lustrauit exercitum. Habuit itaque quem debuit exitum: uictus et late longeque fusus ac stratam ubique ruinam suam cernens medius inter suorum cadauera incessit.

XVII.

1. Haec barbaris regibus feritas in ira fuit, quos nulla eruditio, nullus litterarum cultus inbuerat: dabo tibi ex Aristotelis sinu regem Alexandrum, qui Clitum carissimum sibi et una educatum inter epulas transfodit manu quidem sua, parum adulantem et pigre ex Macedone ac libero in Persicam seruitutem transeuntem. 2. Nam Lysimachum aequae familiarem sibi leoni obiecit. Numquid ergo hic Lysimachus felicitate quadam dentibus leonis elapsus ob hoc, cum ipse regnaret, mitior fuit? 3. Nam Telesphorum Rhodium amicum suum undique decurtatum, cum aures illi nasumque abscidisset, in cauea uelut nouum aliquod animal et inusitatum diu pauit, cum oris detruncati mutilatique deformitas humanam faciem perdidisset; accedebat fames et squalor et inluuies corporis in stercore suo destituti; 4. callosis super haec genibus manibusque, quas in usum pedum angustiae loci cogeabant, lateribus uero adritu exulceratis non minus foeda quam terribilis erat forma eius uisentibus, factusque poena sua monstrum misericordiam quoque amiserat. Tamen, cum dissimillimus esset homini qui illa patiebatur, dissimilior erat qui faciebat.

XVIII.

1. Vtinam ista saeuitia intra peregrina exempla mansisset nec in Romanos mores cum aliis aduenticiis uitis etiam suppliciorum irarumque barbaria transisset! M. Mario, cui uicatim populus statuas posuerat, cui ture ac uino supplicabat, L. Sulla praefringi crura, erui oculos, amputari linguam manus iussit, et, quasi totiens occideret quotiens uulnerabat, paulatim et per singulos artus lacerauit. 2. Quis erat huius imperii minister? quis nisi Catilina iam in omne facinus manus exercens? Is illum ante bustum Quinti Catuli carpebat grauissimus mitissimi uiri cineribus, supra quos uir mali exempli, popularis tamen et non tam inmerito quam nimis amatus, per stilicidia sanguinem dabat. Dignus erat Marius qui illa pateretur, Sulla qui iuberet, Catilina qui faceret, sed indigna res publica quae in corpus suum pariter et hostium et uindicum gladios reciperet. 3. Quid antiqua perscrutor? modo C. Caesar Sex. Papinium, cui pater erat consularis, Betilienum Bassum quaestorem suum, procuratoris sui filium, aliosque et senatores et equites Romanos uno die flagellis cecidit, torsit, non quaestionis sed animi causa; 4. deinde adeo inpatiens fuit differendae uoluptatis, quam ingentem crudelitas eius sine dilatione poscebat, ut in xysto maternorum hortorum (qui porticum a ripa separat) inambulans quosdam ex illis cum matronis atque aliis senatoribus ad lucernam decollaret. Quid instabat? Quod periculum aut priuatum aut publicum una nox minabatur? Quantulum fuit lucem expectare denique, ne senatores populi Romani soleatus occideret!

XIX.

1. Quam superba fuerit crudelitas eius ad rem pertinet scire, quamquam aberrare alicui possimus uideri et in deuium exire; sed hoc ipsum pars erit irae super solita saeuientis. Ceciderat flagellis senatores: ipse effecit ut dici posset ‘solet fieri’. Torserat per omnia quae in rerum natura tristissima sunt, fidiculis talaribus, eculeo igne uultu suo. 2. Et hoc loco respondebitur: ‘magnam rem! si tres senatores quasi nequam mancipia inter uerbera et flammam diuisit homo qui de toto senatu trucidando cogitabat, qui optabat ut populus Romanus unam ceruicem haberet, ut scelera sua tot locis ac temporibus diducta in unum ictum et unum diem cogeret.’ Quid tam inauditum quam nocturnum supplicium? Cum latrocinia tenebris abscondi soleant, animaduersiones quo notiores sunt plus in exemplum emendationemque proficiunt. 3. Et hoc loco respondebitur mihi: ‘quod tanto opere admiraris isti beluae cotidianum est; ad hoc uiuit, ad hoc uigilat, ad hoc lucubrat.’ Nemo certe inuenietur alius qui imperauerit omnibus iis in quos animaduerti iubebat os inserta spongea includi, ne uocis emittendae haberent facultatem. Cui umquam morituro non est relictum qua gemeret? Timuit ne quam liberio rem uocem extremus dolor mitteret, ne quid quod nollet audiret; sciebat autem innumerabilia esse quae obicere illi nemo nisi periturus auderet. 4. Cum spongeae non inuenirentur, scindi uestimenta miserorum et in os farciri pannos imperauit. Quae ista saeuitia est? Liceat ultimum spiritum trahere, da exiturae animae locum, liceat illam non per uulnus emittere. 5. Adicere his longum est quod patres quoque occisorum eadem nocte dimissis per domos centurionibus confecit, id est, homo misericors luctu liberauit. Non enim Gai saeuitiam sed irae propositum est describere, quae non tantum uiritim furit sed gentes totas lancinat, sed urbes et flumina et tuta ab omni sensu doloris conuerberat.

XX.

1. Sic rex Persarum totius populi nares recidit in Syria, unde Rhinocolura loco nomen est. Pepercisse illum iudicas quod non tota capita praecidit? nouo genere poenae delectatus est. 2. Tale aliquid passi forent et Aethiopes, qui ob longissimum uitae spatium Macrobioe appellantur; in hos enim, quia non supinis manibus exceperant seruitutem missisque legatis libera responsa dederant, quae contumeliosa reges uocant, Cambyses fremebat et non prouisis com meatibus, non exploratis itineribus, per inuia, per arentia trahebat omnem bello utilem turbam. Cui intra primum iter deerant necessaria, nec quicquam subministrabat sterilis et inculta humanoque ignota uestigio regio; 3. sustinebant famem primo tenerrima frondium et cacumina arborum, tum coria igne mollita et quidquid necessitas cibum fecerat; postquam inter harenas radices quoque et herbae defecerant apparuitque inops etiam animalium solitudo, decimum quemque sortiti alimentum habuerunt fame saeuus. 4. Agebat adhuc regem ira praecipitem, cum partem exercitus amisisset, partem comedisset, donec timuit ne et ipse uocaretur ad sortem: tum demum signum receptui dedit. Seruabantur interim generosae illi aues et instrumenta epularum camelis uehebantur, cum sortirentur milites eius quis male periret, quis peius uiueret.

XXI.

1. Hic iratus fuit genti et ignotae et inneritae, sensurae tamen: Cyrus flumini. Nam cum Babylona oppugnaturus festinaret ad bellum, cuius maxima momenta in occasionibus sunt, Gynden late fusum amnem uado transire temptauit, quod uix tutum est etiam cum sensit aestatem et ad minimum deductus est. 2. Ibi unus ex iis equis qui trahere regium currum albi solebant abreptus uehementer commouit regem; iurauit itaque se amnem illum regis comitatus auferentem eo redacturum ut transiri calcarique etiam a feminis posset. 3. Hoc deinde omnem transtulit belli apparatus et tam diu adsedit operi donec centum et octoginta cuniculis diuisum alueum in trecentos et sexaginta riuos dispergeret et siccum relinqueret in diuersum fluentibus aquis. 4. Periit itaque et tempus, magna in magnis rebus iactura, et militum ardor, quem inutilis labor fregit, et occasio adgrediendi inparatos, dum ille bellum indictum hosti cum flumine gerit. 5. Hic furor — quid enim aliud uoces? — Romanos quoque contigit. C. enim Caesar uillam in Herculansense pulcherrimam, quia mater sua aliquando in illa custodita erat, diruit fecitque eius per hoc notabilem fortunam; stantem enim praenauigabamus, nunc causa dirutae quaeritur.

XXII.

1. Et haec cogitanda sunt exempla quae uites, et illa ex contrario quae sequaris, moderata, lenia, quibus nec ad irascendum causa defuit nec ad ulciscendum potestas. 2. Quid enim facilius fuit Antigono quam duos manipulares duci iubere, qui incumbentes regis tabernaculo faciebant quod homines et periculosissime et libentissime faciunt, de rege suo male existimabant? Audierat omnia Antigonus, utpote cum inter dicentes et audientem palla interesset; quam ille leuiter commouit et ‘longius’ inquit ‘discedite, ne uos rex audiat.’ 3. Idem quadam nocte, cum quosdam ex militibus suis exaudisset omnia mala inprecantis regi, qui ipsos in illud iter et inextricabile lutum deduxisset, accessit ad eos qui maxime laborabant et cum ignorantis a quo adiuuarentur explicuisset, ‘nunc’ inquit ‘male dicite Antigono, cuius uitio in has miserias incidistis; ei autem bene optate qui uos ex hac uoragine eduxit.’ 4. Idem tam miti animo hostium suorum male dicta quam ciuium tulit. Itaque cum in paruulo quodam castello Graeci obsiderentur et fiducia loci contemnentes hostem multa in deformitatem Antigoni iocarentur et nunc staturam humilem, nunc conlisum nasum deriderent, ‘gaudeo’ inquit ‘et aliquid boni spero, si in castris Silenum habeo.’ 5. Cum hos dicaces fame domuisset, captis sic usus est ut eos qui militiae utiles erant in cohortes describeret, ceteros praeconi subiceret, idque se negauit facturum fuisse, nisi expediret iis dominum habere qui tam malam haberent linguam.

XXIII.

1. Huius nepos fuit Alexander, qui lanceam in conuiuas suos torquebat, qui ex duobus amicis quos paulo ante rettuli alterum ferae obiecit, alterum sibi. Ex his duobus tamen qui leoni obiectus est uixit. 2. Non habuit hoc auitum ille uitium, ne paternum quidem; nam si qua alia in Philippo uirtus, fuit et contumeliarum patientia, ingens instrumentum ad tutelam regni. Demochares ad illum Parrhesiastes ob nimiam et procacem linguam appellatus inter alios Atheniensium legatos uenerat. Audita benigne legatione Philippus ‘dicite’ inquit ‘mihi facere quid possim quod sit Atheniensibus gratum.’ Excepit Demochares et ‘te’ inquit ‘suspendere.’ 3. Indignatio circumstantium ad tam inhumanum responsum exorta erat; quos Philippus contumescere iussit et Thersitam illum saluum incolumemque dimittere. ‘At uos’ inquit ‘ceteri legati, nuntiate Atheniensibus multo superbiores esse qui ista dicunt quam qui inpune dicta audiunt.’

4. Multa et diuus Augustus digna memoria fecit dixitque ex quibus appareat iram illi non imperasse. Timagenes historiarum scriptor quaedam in ipsum, quaedam in uxorem eius et in totam domum dixerat, nec perdiderat dicta; magis enim circumfertur et in ore hominum est temeraria urbanitas. 5. Saepe illum Caesar monuit, moderatius lingua uteretur; perseueranti domo sua interdixit. Postea Timagenes in contubernio Pollionis Asini consenuit ac tota ciuitate directus est: nullum illi limen praeclusa Caesaris domus abstulit. 6. Historias quas postea scripserat recitauit [et combussit] et libros acta Caesaris Augusti continentis in ignem inposuit; inimicitias gessit cum Caesare: nemo amicitiam eius extimuit, nemo quasi fulguritum refugit, fuit qui praeberet tam alte cadenti sinum. 7. Tulit hoc, ut dixi, Caesar patienter, ne eo quidem motus quod laudibus suis rebusque gestis manus attulerat; numquam cum hospite inimici sui questus est. 8. Hoc dumtaxat Pollioni Asinio dixit, ‘theriotropheis’; paranti deinde excusationem obstitit et ‘fruere,’ inquit ‘mi Pollio, fruere!’ et cum Pollio diceret ‘si iubes, Caesar, statim illi domo mea interdican’, ‘hoc me’ inquit ‘putas facturum, cum ego uos in gratiam reduxerim?’ Fuerat enim aliquando Timageni Pollio iratus nec ullam

XXIV.

1. Dicat itaque sibi quisque, quotiens lacessitur: 'numquid potentior sum Philippo? illi tamen inpune male dictum est. Numquid in domo mea plus possum quam toto orbe terrarum diuus Augustus potuit? ille tamen contentus fuit a conuiciatore suo secedere.' 2. Quid est quare ego serui mei clarius responsum et contumaciorem uultum et non peruenientem usque ad me murmurationem flagellis et compedibus expiem? Quis sum, cuius aures laedi nefas sit? Ignouerunt multi hostibus: ego non ignoscam pigris negligentibus garrulis? 3. Puerum aetas excuset, feminam sexus, extraneum libertas, domesticum familiaritas. Nunc primum offendit: cogitemus quam diu placuerit; saepe et alias offendit: feramus quod diu tulimus. Amicus est: fecit quod noluit; inimicus: fecit quod debuit. 4. Prudentiori credamus, stultiori remittamus; pro quocumque illud nobis respondeamus, sapientissimos quoque uiros multa delinquere, neminem esse tam circumspectum cuius non diligentia aliquando sibi ipsa excidat, neminem tam maturum cuius non grauitatem in aliquod feruidius factum casus inpingat, neminem tam timidum offensarum qui non in illas dum uitat incidat.

XXV.

1. Quomodo homini pusillo solacium in malis fuit etiam magnorum uirorum titubare fortunam et aequiore animo filium in angulo fleuit qui uidit acerba funera etiam ex regia duci, sic animo aequiore fert ab aliquo laedi, ab aliquo contemni, cuicumque uenit in mentem nullam esse tantam potentiam in quam non occurrat iniuria. 2. Quod si etiam prudentissimi peccant, cuius non error bonam causam habet? Respiciamus quotiens adulescentia nostra in officio parum diligens fuerit, in sermone parum modesta, in uino parum temperans. Si iratus est, demus illi spatium quo dispicere quid fecerit possit: ipse se castigabit. Denique debeat poenas: non est quod cum illo paria faciamus. 3. Illud non ueniet in dubium, quin se exemerit turbae et altius steterit quisquis despexit lacescentis: proprium est magnitudinis uerae non sentire percussum. Sic immanis fera ad latratum canum lenta respexit, sic inritus ingenti scopulo fluctus adsultat. Qui non irascitur, inconcussus iniuria perstitit, qui irascitur, motus est. 4. At ille quem modo altiore omni incommodo posui tenet amplexu quodam summum bonum, nec homini tantum sed ipsi fortunae respondet: ‘omnia licet facias, minor es quam ut serenitatem meam obducas. Vetat hoc ratio, cui uitam regendam dedi. Plus mihi nocitura est ira quam iniuria. Quidni plus? illius modus certus est, ista quo usque me latura sit dubium est.’

XXVI.

1. 'Non possum' inquis 'pati; graue est iniuriam sustinere.' Mentiris; quis enim iniuriam non potest ferre qui potest iram? Adice nunc quod id agis ut et iram feras et iniuriam. Quare fers aegri rabiem et phrenetici uerba, puerorum proteruas manus? nempe quia uidentur nescire quid faciant. Quid interest quo quisque uitio fiat imprudens? imprudentia par in omnibus patrocinium est. 2. 'Quid ergo?' inquis 'inpune illi erit?' Puta uelle te, tamen non erit; maxima est enim factae iniuriae poena fecisse, nec quisquam grauius adficitur quam qui ad supplicium paenitentiae traditur. 3. Deinde ad condicionem rerum humanarum respiciendum est, ut omnium accidentium aequi iudices simus; iniquus autem est qui commune uitium singulis obiecit. Non est Aethiopis inter suos insignitus color, nec rufus crinis et coactus in nodum apud Germanos uirum dedecet: nihil in uno iudicabis notabile aut foedum quod genti suae publicum est. Et ista quae rettuli unius regionis atque anguli consuetudo defendit: uide nunc quanto in iis iustior uenia sit quae per totum genus humanum uulgata sunt. 4. Omnes inconsulti et inprouidi sumus, omnes incerti queruli ambitiosi — quid lenioribus uerbis ulcus publicum abscondo? — omnes mali sumus. Quidquid itaque in alio reprehenditur, id unusquisque in sinu suo inueniet. Quid illius pallorem, illius maciem notas? pestilentia est. Placidiores itaque inuicem simus: mali inter malos uiuimus. Vna nos res facere quietos potest, mutuae facilitatis conuentio. 5. 'Ille iam mihi nocuit, ego illi nondum.' Sed iam aliquem fortasse laesisti, sed laedes. Noli aestimare hanc horam aut hunc diem, totum inspicere mentis tuae habitum: etiam si nihil mali fecisti, potes facere.

XXVII.

1. Quanto satius est sanare iniuriam quam ulcisci! Multum temporis ultio absumit, multis se iniuriis obicit dum una dolet; diutius irascimur omnes quam laedimur. Quanto melius est abire in diuersum nec uitia uitiiis opponere! Numquis satis constare sibi uideatur, si mulam calcibus repetat et canem morsu? 2. 'Ista' inquis 'peccare se nesciunt.' Primum quam iniquus est apud quem hominem esse ad inpetrandam ueniam nocet! Deinde, si cetera animalia hoc irae tuae subducit quod consilio carent, eodem loco tibi sit quisquis consilio caret; quid enim refert an alia mutis dissimilia habeat, si hoc quod in omni peccato muta defendit simile habet, caliginem mentis? 3. Peccauit: hoc enim primum? hoc enim extremum? Non est quod illi credas, etiam si dixerit 'iterum non faciam': et iste peccabit et in istum alius et tota uita inter errores uolutabitur. Mansuete inmansueta tractanda sunt. 4. Quod in luctu dici solet efficacissime, et in ira dicetur: utrum aliquando desines an numquam? Si aliquando, quanto satius est iram relinquere quam ab ira relinqui! An semper haec agitatio permanebit? Vides quam impacatam tibi denunties uitam? qualis enim erit semper tumentis? 5. Adice nunc quod, cum bene te ipse succenderis et subinde causas quibus stimuleris renouaueris, sua sponte ira discedet et uires illi dies subtrahet: quanto satius est a te illam uinci quam a se!

XXVIII.

1. Huic irasceris, deinde illi; seruis, deinde libertis; parentibus, deinde liberis; notis, deinde ignotis: ubique enim causae supersunt nisi deprecator animus accessit. Hinc te illo furor rapiet, illinc alio, et nouis subinde inritamentis orientibus continuabitur rabies: age, infelix, ecquando amabis? O quam bonum tempus in re mala perdis!

2. Quanto nunc erat satius amicos parare, inimicos mitigare, rem publicam administrare, transferre in res domesticas operam, quam circumspicere quid alicui facere possis mali, quod aut dignitati eius aut patrimonio aut corpori uulnus infligas, cum id tibi contingere sine certamine ac periculo non possit, etiam si cum inferiore concurses!

3. Vinctum licet accipias et ad arbitrium tuum omni patientiae expositum: saepe nimia uis caedentis aut articulum loco mouit aut neruum in iis quos fregerat dentibus fixit; multos iracundia mancos, multos debiles fecit, etiam ubi patientem est nanta materiam. Adice nunc quod nihil tam inbecille natum est ut sine elidentis periculo pereat: inbecillos ualentissimis alias dolor, alias casus exaequat.

4. Quid quod pleraque eorum propter quae irascimur offendunt nos magis quam laedunt? Multum autem interest utrum aliquis uoluntati meae obstet an desit, eripiat an non det. Atqui in aequo ponimus utrum aliquis auferat an neget, utrum spem nostram praecidat an differat, utrum contra nos faciat an pro se, amore alterius an odio nostri.

5. Quidam uero non tantum iustas causas standi contra nos sed etiam honestas habent: alius patrem tuetur, alius fratrem, alius patriam, alius amicum; his tamen non ignoscimus id facientibus quod nisi facerent inprobaremus, immo, quod est incredibile, saepe de facto bene existimamus, de faciente male.

6. At mehercules uir magnus ac iustus fortissimum quemque ex hostibus suis et pro libertate ac salute patriae pertinacissimum suspicit et talem sibi ciuem, talem militem contingere optat.

XXIX.

1. Turpe est odisse quem laudes; quanto uero turpius ob id aliquem odisse propter quod misericordia dignus est, si captiuus in seruitutem subito depressus reliquias libertatis tenet nec ad sordida ac laboriosa ministeria agilis occurrit, si ex otio piger equum uehiculumque domini cursu non exaequat, si inter cotidiana peruigilia fessum somnus oppressit, si rusticum laborem recusat aut non fortiter obiit a seruitute urbana et feriata translatus ad durum opus! 2. Distinguamus utrum aliquis non possit an nolit: multos absoluemus, si coeperimus ante iudicare quam irasci. Nunc autem primum impetum sequimur, deinde, quamuis uana nos concitauerint, perseueramus, ne uideamur coepisse sine causa, et, quod iniquissimum est, pertinaciores nos facit iniquitas irae; retinemus enim illam et augemus, quasi argumentum sit iuste irascentis grauius irasci.

XXX.

1. Quanto melius est initia ipsa perspicere quam leuia sint, quam innoxia! Quod accidere uides animalibus mutis, idem in homine deprendes: friuolis turbamur et inanibus. Taurum color rubicundus excitat, ad umbram aspis exsurgit, ursos leonesque mappa proritat: omnia quae natura fera ac rabida sunt consternantur ad uana. 2. Idem inquietis et stolidis ingeniis euenit: rerum suspitione feriuntur, adeo quidem ut interdum iniurias uocent modica beneficia, in quibus frequentissima, certe acerbissima iracundiae materia est. Carissimis enim irascimur quod minora nobis praestiterint quam mente concepimus quamque alii tulerunt, cum utriusque rei paratum remedium sit. 3. Magis alteri indulsit: nostra nos sine comparatione delectent; numquam erit felix quem torquebit felicior. Minus habeo quam speraui: sed fortasse plus speraui quam debui. Haec pars maxime metuenda est, hinc perniciosissimae irae nascuntur et sanctissima quaeque inuasurae. 4. Dium Iulium plures amici confecerunt quam inimici, quorum non expleuerat spes inexplebiles. Voluit quidem ille — neque enim quisquam liberalius uictoria usus est, ex qua nihil sibi uindicauit nisi dispensandi potestatem — sed quemadmodum sufficere tam improbis desideriis posset, cum tantum omnes concupiscerent quantum unus poterat? 5. Vidit itaque strictis circa sellam suam gladiis commilitones suos, Cimbrum Tillium, acerrimum paulo ante partium defensorem, aliosque post Pompeium demum Pompeianos. Haec res sua in reges arma conuertit fidissimosque eo compulit ut de morte eorum cogitarent pro quibus et ante quos mori uotum habuerant.

XXXI.

1. Nulli ad aliena respicienti sua placent: inde dis quoque irascimur quod aliquis nos antecedit, obliti quantum hominum retro sit et paucis invidentem quantum sequatur a tergo ingentis invidiae. Tanta tamen inopportunitas hominum est ut, quamvis multum acceperint, iniuriae loco sit plus accipere potuisse. 2. 'Dedit mihi praeturam, sed consulatum speraueram; dedit duodecim fasces, sed non fecit ordinarium consulem; a me numerari uoluit annum, sed deest mihi ad sacerdotium; cooptatus in collegium sum, sed cur in unum? consummauit dignitatem meam, sed patrimonio nihil contulit; ea dedit mihi quae debebat alicui dare, de suo nihil protulit.' 3. Age potius gratias pro his quae accepisti; reliqua expecta et nondum plenum esse te gaude: inter uoluptates est superesse quod speres. Omnes uicisti: primum esse te in animo amici tui laetare. Multi te uincunt: considera quanto antecedas plures quam sequaris. Quod sit in te uitium maximum quaeris? falsas rationes conficis: data magno aestimas, accepta paruo.

XXXII.

1. Aliud in alio nos deterreat: quibusdam timeamus irasci, quibusdam uereamur, quibusdam fastidiamus. Magnam rem sine dubio fecerimus, si seruulum infelicem in ergastulum miserimus! Quid properamus uerberare statim, crura protinus frangere? non peribit potestas ista, si differetur. 2. Sine id tempus ueniat quo ipsi iubeamus: nunc ex imperio irae loquemur; cum illa abierit, tunc uidebimus quanto ista lis aestimanda sit. In hoc enim praecipue fallimur: ad ferrum uenimus, ad capitalia supplicia, et uinculis carcere fame uindicamus rem castigandam flagris leuioribus. 3. ‘Quomodo’ inquis ‘nos iubes intueri quam omnia per quae laedi uideamur exigua misera puerilia sint!’ Ego uero nihil magis suaserim quam sumere ingentem animum et haec propter quae litigamus discurrimus anhelamus uidere quam humilia et abiecta sint, nulli qui altum quiddam aut magnificum cogitat respicienda.

XXXIII.

1. Circa pecuniam plurimum uociferationis est: haec fora defetigat, patres liberosque committit, uenena miscet, gladios tam percussoribus quam legionibus tradit; haec est sanguine nostro dilibuta; propter hanc uxorū maritorūque noctes strepunt litibus et tribunalia magistratuum premit turba, reges saeuiunt rapiuntque et ciuitates longo saeculorum labore constructas euertunt ut aurum argentumque in cinere urbium scrutentur. 2. Libet intueri fiscos in angulo iacentis: hi sunt propter quos oculi clamore exprimantur, fremitu iudiciorum basilicae resonent, euocati ex longinquis regionibus iudices sedeant iudicaturi utrius iustior auaritia sit. 3. Quid si ne propter fiscum quidem sed pugnum aeris aut inputatum a seruo denarium senex sine herede moriturus stomacho dirrumpitur? Quid si propter usuram uel milesimam ualetudinarius fenerator distortis pedibus et manibus ad computandum non relictis clamat ac per uadimonia asses suos in ipsis morbi accessionibus uindicat? 4. Si totam mihi ex omnibus metallis quae cum maxime deprimimus pecuniam proferas, si in medium proicias quidquid thesauri tegunt, auaritia iterum sub terras referente quae male egresserat, omnem istam congeriem non putem dignam quae frontem uiri boni contrahat. Quanto risu proseguenda sunt quae nobis lacrimas educunt!

XXXIV.

1. Cedo nunc, perseguere cetera, cibos potiones horumque causa paratas in ambitionem munditias, uerba contumeliosa, motus corporum parum honorificos, contumacia iumenta et pigra mancipia, et suspiciones et interpretationes malignas uocis alienae, quibus efficitur ut inter iniurias naturae numeretur sermo homini datus: crede mihi, leuia sunt propter quae non leuiter excandescimus qualiaque pueros in rixam et iurgium concitant. 2. Nihil ex iis quae tam tristes agimus serium est, nihil magnum: inde, inquam, uobis ira et insania est, quod exigua magno aestimatis. Auferre hic mihi hereditatem uoluit; hic me diu in spem supremam captato criminatus est; hic scortum meum concupiuit: quod uinculum amoris esse debebat seditionis atque odi causa est, idem uelle. 3. Iter angustum rixas transeuntium concitat, diffusa et late patens uia ne populos quidem conludit: ista quae adpetitis, quia exigua sunt nec possunt ad alterum nisi alteri erepta transferri, eadem adfectantibus pugnas et iurgia excitant.

XXXV.

1. Respondisse tibi seruum indignaris libertumque et uxorem et clientem: deinde idem de re publica libertatem sublatam quereris quam domi sustulisti. Rursus, si tacuit interrogatus, contumaciam uocas. 2. Et loquatur et taceat et rideat! 'Coram domino?' inquis. Immo coram patre familiae. Quid clamas? quid uociferaris? quid flagella media cena petis quod serui loquuntur, quod non eodem loco turba contionis est, silentium solitudinis? 3. In hoc habes aures, ut non modulata tantum et mollia et ex dulci tracta compositaque accipiant: et risum audias oportet et fletum, et blanditias et lites, et prospera et tristia, et hominum uoces et fremitus animalium latratusque. Quid miser expauescis ad clamorem serui, ad tinnitum aeris aut ianuae impulsus? cum tam delicatus fueris, tonitrua audienda sunt. 4. Hoc quod de auribus dictum est transfer ad oculos, qui non minus fastidio laborant si male instituti sunt: macula offenduntur et sordibus et argento parum splendido et stagno non ad solum perlucente. 5. Hi nempe oculi, qui non ferunt nisi uarium ac recenti cura nitens marmor, qui mensam nisi crebris distinctam uenis, qui nolunt domi nisi auro pretiosiora calcare, aequissimo animo foris et scabras lutosasque semitas spectant et maiorem partem occurrentium squalidam, parietes insularum exesos rimosos inaequales. Quid ergo aliud est quod illos in publico non offendat, domi moueat, quam opinio illic aequa et patiens, domi morosa et querula?

XXXVI.

1. Omnes sensus perducendi sunt ad firmitatem; natura patientes sunt, si animus illos desit corrumpere, qui cotidie ad rationem reddendam uocandus est. Faciebat hoc Sextius, ut consummato die, cum se ad nocturnam quietem recepisset, interrogaret animum suum: ‘quod hodie malum tuum sanasti? Cui uitio obstitisti? Qua parte melior es?’ 2. Desinet ira et moderatior erit quae sciet sibi cotidie ad iudicem esse ueniendum. Quicquam ergo pulchrius hac consuetudine excutiendi totum diem? Qualis ille somnus post recognitionem sui sequitur, quam tranquillus, quam altus ac liber, cum aut laudatus est animus aut admonitus et speculator sui censorque secretus cognouit de moribus suis! 3. Vtor hac potestate et cotidie apud me causam dico. Cum sublatum e conspectu lumen est et conticuit uxor moris iam mei conscia, totum diem meum scrutor factaque ac dicta mea remetior; nihil mihi ipse abscondo, nihil transeo. Quare enim quicquam ex erroribus meis timeam, cum possim dicere: ‘uide ne istud amplius facias, nunc tibi ignosco. 4. In illa disputatione pugnacius locutus es: noli postea congregi cum imperitis; nolunt discere qui numquam didicerunt. Illum liberius admonuisti quam debebas, itaque non emendasti sed offendisti: de cetero uide, [ne] non tantum an uerum sit quod dicis, sed an ille cui dicitur ueri patiens sit: admoneri bonus gaudet, pessimus quisque rectorem asperrime patitur.

1. In conuiuio quorundam te sales et in dolorem tuum iacta uerba tetigerunt: uitare uulgares conuictus memento; solutior est post uinum licentia, quia ne sobriis quidem pudor est. 2. Iratum uidisti amicum tuum ostiario cauidici alicuius aut diuitis quod intrantem summouerat, et ipse pro illo iratus extremo mancipio fuisti: irascere ergo catenario cani? et hic, cum multum latrauit, obiecto cibo mansuescit. 3. Recede longius et ride! Nunc iste se aliquem putat quod custodit litigatorum turba limen obsessum; nunc ille qui intra iacet felix fortunatusque est et beati hominis iudicat ac potentis indicium difficilem ianuam: nescit durissimum esse ostium carceris. Praesume animo multa tibi esse patienda: numquis se hieme algere miratur, numquis in mari nausiare, in uia concuti? Fortis est animus ad quae praeparatus uenit. 4. Minus honorato loco positus irasci coepisti conuiuatori, uocatori, ipsi qui tibi praeferebatur: demens, quid interest quam lecti premas partem? honestiorem te aut turpiorem potest facere puluinus? 5. Non aequis quendam oculis uidisti, quia de ingenio tuo male locutus est: recipis hanc legem? Ergo te Ennius, quo non delectaris, odisset et Hortensius similitudines tibi indiceret et Cicero, si derideres carmina eius, inimicus esset. Vis tu aequo animo pati candidatus suffragia?’

XXXVIII.

1. Contumeliam tibi fecit aliquis: numquid maiorem quam Diogeni philosopho Stoico, cui de ira cum maxime disserenti adulescens proteruus inspuit? Tulit hoc ille leniter et sapienter: 'non quidem' inquit 'irascor, sed dubito tamen an oporteat irasci.' 2. Quanto <Cato> noster melius! qui, cum agenti causam in frontem mediam quantum poterat adtracta pingui salivā inspisset Lentulus ille patrum nostrorum memoria factiosus et inpotens, abstersit faciem et 'adfirmabo' inquit 'omnibus, Lentule, falli eos qui te negant os habere.'

XXXIX.

1. Contigit iam nobis, Nouate, bene componere animum: aut non sentit iracundiam aut superior est. Videamus quomodo alienam iram leniamus; nec enim sani esse tantum uolumus, sed sanare.

2. Primam iram non audebimus oratione mulcere: surda est et amens; dabimus illi spatium. Remedia in remissionibus prosunt; nec oculos tumentis temptamus uim rigentem mouendo incitaturi, nec cetera uitia dum feruent: initia morborum quies curat. 3. ‘Quantulum’ inquis ‘prodest remedium tuum, si sua sponte desinentem iram placat!’ Primum, ut citius desinat efficit; deinde custodit, ne reccidat; ipsum quoque impetum, quem non audet lenire, fallit: remouebit omnia ultionis instrumenta, simulabit iram ut tamquam adiutor et doloris comes plus auctoritatis in consiliis habeat, moras nectet et, dum maiorem poenam quaerit, praesentem differet. 4. Omni arte requiem furori dabit: si uehementior erit, aut pudorem illi cui non resistat incutiet aut metum; si infirmior, sermones inferet uel gratos uel novos et cupiditate cognoscendi auocabit. Medicum aiunt, cum regis filiam curare deberet nec sine ferro posset, dum tumentem mammam leniter fouet, scalpellum spongia tectum induxisse: repugnasset puella remedio palam admoto, eadem, quia non expectauit, dolorem tulit. Quaedam non nisi decepta sanantur.

XL.

1. Alteri dices ‘uide ne inimicis iracundia tua uoluptati sit’, alteri ‘uide ne magnitudo animi tui creditumque apud plerosque robur cadat. [alteri] Indignor mehercules et non inuenio dolendi modum, sed tempus expectandum est; dabit poenas. Serua istud in animo tuo: cum potueris, et pro mora reddes.’ 2. Castigare uero irascentem et ultro obirasci incitare est: uarie adgredieris blandequē, nisi forte tanta persona eris ut possis iram comminuere, quemadmodum fecit diuus Augustus, cum cenaret apud Vedium Pollionem. Fregerat unus ex seruis eius crustallinum; rapi eum Veditus iussit ne uulgari quidem more periturum: murenis obici iubebatur, quas ingentis in piscina continebat. Quis non hoc illum putaret luxuriae causa facere? saeuitia erat. 3. Euasit e manibus puer et confugit ad Caesaris pedes, nihil aliud petiturus quam ut aliter periret, ne esca fieret. Motus est nouitate crudelitatis Caesar et illum quidem mitti, crustallina autem omnia coram se frangi iussit conplerique piscinam. 4. Fuit Caesari sic castigandus amicus; bene usus est uiribus suis: ‘e conuiuio rapi homines imperas et noui generis poenis lancinari? Si calix tuus fractus est, uiscera hominis distrahentur? Tantum tibi placebis ut ibi aliquem duci iubeas ubi Caesar est?’ 5. Sic cui tantum potentiae est ut iram ex superiore loco adgredi possit, male tractet, at talem dumtaxat qualem modo rettuli, feram immanem sanguinariam, quae iam insanabilis est nisi maius aliquid extimuit.

XLI.

1. Pacem demus animo quam dabit praeceptorum salutarium adsidua meditatio actusque rerum boni et intenta mens ad unius honesti cupiditatem. Conscientiae satis fiat, nil in famam laboremus; sequatur uel mala, dum bene merentis. 2. ‘At uulgi animosa miratur et audaces in honore sunt, placidi pro inertibus habentur.’ Primo forsitan aspectu; sed simul aequalitas uitae fidem fecit non segnitiam illam animi esse sed pacem, ueneratur illos populus idem colitque. 3. Nihil ergo habet in se utile taeter iste et hostilis adfectus, at omnia ex contrario mala, ferrum et ignes. Pudore calcato caedibus inquinuit manus, membra liberorum dispersit, nihil uacuum reliquit a scelere, non gloriae memor, non infamiae metuens, inemendabilis cum ex ira in odium occalluit.

XLII.

1. Careamus hoc malo purgemusque mentem et exstirpemus radicitus quae quamuis tenuia undecumque haeserint renascentur, et iram non temperemus sed ex toto remoueamus — quod enim malae rei temperamentum est? Poterimus autem, adnitamur modo. 2. Nec ulla res magis proderit quam cogitatio mortalitatis. Sibi quisque atque alteri dicat: ‘quid iuuat tamquam in aeternum genitos iras indicere et breuissimam aetatem dissipare? Quid iuuat dies quos in uoluptatem honestam inpendere licet in dolorem alicuius tormentumque transferre? Non capiunt res istae iacturam nec tempus uacat perdere. 3. Quid ruimus in pugnam? Quid certamina nobis arcessimus? Quid inbecillitatis obliti ingentia odia suscipimus et ad frangendum fragiles consurgimus? Iam istas inimicitias quas inplacabili gerimus animo febris aut aliquod aliud malum corporis uetabit geri; iam par acerrimum media mors dirimet. 4. Quid tumultuamur et uitam seditiosi conturbamus? stat supra caput fatum et pereuntis dies inputat propiusque ac propius accedit; istud tempus quod alienae destinas morti fortasse circa tuam est.

XLIII.

1. Quin potius uitam breuem colligis placidamque et tibi et ceteris praestas? Quin potius amabilem te dum uiuis omnibus, desiderabilem cum excesseris reddis? Quid illum nimis ex alto tecum agentem detrahare cupis? Quid illum oblatrantem tibi, humilem quidem et contemptum sed superioribus acidum ac molestum, exterere uiribus tuis temptas? Quid seruo, quid domino, quid regi, quid clienti tuo irasceris? Sustine paulum: uenit ecce mors quae uos pares faciat. 2. Videre solemus inter matutina harenae spectacula tauri et ursi pugnam inter se conligatorum, quos, cum alter alterum uexarunt, suus confector expectat: idem facimus, aliquem nobiscum adligatum lacessimus, cum uicto uictorique finis et quidem maturus immineat. Quieti potius pacatique quantulumcumque superest exigamus; nulli cadauer nostrum iaceat inuisum. 3. Saepe rixam conclamatum in uicinia incendium soluit et interuentus ferae latronem uiatoremque diducit: conluctari cum minoribus malis non uacat, ubi metus maior apparuit. Quid nobis cum dimicatione et insidiis? Numquid amplius isti cui irasceris quam mortem optas? etiam te quiescente morietur. Perdis operam, si facere uis quod futurum est. 4. “Nolo” inquis “utique occidere, sed exilio, sed ignominia, sed damno adficere.” Magis ignosco ei qui uulnus inimici quam qui pusulam concupiscit; hic enim non tantum mali animi est sed pusilli. Siue de ultimis suppliciis cogitas siue de leuioribus, quantulum est temporis quo aut ille poena sua torqueatur aut tu malum gaudium ex aliena percipias! 5. Iam istum spiritum expuemus. Interim, dum trahimus, dum inter homines sumus, colamus humanitatem; non timori cuiquam, non periculo simus; detrimenta iniurias, conuicia uellicationes contemnamus et magno animo breuia feramus incommoda: dum respicimus, quod aiunt, uersamusque nos, iam mortalitas aderit.’

1 Maior pars mortalium, Pauline, de naturae malignitate conqueritur, quod in exiguum aevi gignimur, quod haec tam uelociter, tam rapide dati nobis temporis spatia decurrant, adeo ut exceptis admodum paucis ceteros in ipso uitae apparatu uita destituat. Nec huic publico, ut opinantur, malo turba tantum et imprudens uulgus ingemuit; clarorum quoque uirorum hic affectus querellas euocauit. 2 Inde illa maximi medicorum exclamatio est: “uitam breuem esse, longam artem”. Inde Aristotelis cum rerum natura exigentis minime conueniens sapienti uiro lis: “aetatis illam animalibus tantum indulsisse, ut quina aut dena saecula educerent, homini in tam multa ac magna genito tanto citeriorem terminum stare.” 3 Non exiguum temporis habemus, sed multum perdidimus. Satis longa uita et in maximarum rerum consummationem large data est, si tota bene collocaretur; sed ubi per luxum ac negligentiam diffluit, ubi nulli bonae rei impenditur, ultima demum necessitate cogente, quam ire non intelleximus transisse sentimus. 4 Ita est: non accipimus breuem uitam sed fecimus, nec inopes eius sed prodigi sumus. Sicut amplae et regiae opes, ubi ad malum dominum peruenerunt, momento dissipantur, at quamuis modicae, si bono custodi traditae sunt, usu crescunt: ita aetas nostra bene disponenti multum patet.

II.

1 Quid de rerum natura querimur? Illa se benigne gessit: uita, si uti scias, longa est. [At] alium insatiabilis tenet auaritia; alium in superuacuis laboribus operosa sedulitas; alius uino madet, alius inertia torpet; alium defetigat ex alienis iudiciis suspensa semper ambitio, alium mercandi praeceps cupiditas circa omnis terras, omnia maria spe lucri ducit; quosdam torquet cupido militiae numquam non aut alienis periculis intentos aut suis anxios; sunt quos ingratus superiorum cultus uoluntaria seruitute consumat; 2 multos aut affectatio alienae formae aut suae querella detinuit; plerosque nihil certum sequentis uaga et inconstans et sibi displicens leuitas per noua consilia iactauit; quibusdam nihil quo cursum derigant placet, sed marcentis oscitantisque fata deprendunt, adeo ut quod apud maximum poetarum more oraculi dictum est uerum esse non dubitem: “Exigua pars est uitae qua uiuimus. Ceterum quidem omne spatium non uita sed tempus est. 3 Urgent et circumstant uitia undique nec resurgere aut in dispectum ueri attollere oculos sinunt. Et immersos et in cupiditatem infixos premunt, numquam illis recurrere ad se licet. Si quando aliqua fortuito quies contigit, uelut profundo mari, in quo post uentum quoque uolutatio est, fluctuantur nec umquam illis a cupiditatibus suis otium stat. 4 De istis me putas dicere, quorum in confesso mala sunt? Aspice illos ad quorum felicitatem concurritur: bonis suis effocantur. Quam multis diuitiae graues sunt! Quam multorum eloquentia et cotidiana ostentandi ingenii sollicitatio sanguinem educit! Quam multi continuis uoluptatibus pallent! Quam multis nihil liberi relinquit circumfusus clientium populus! Omnis denique istos ab infimis usque ad summos pererrat: hic aduocat, hic adest, ille periclitatur, ille defendit, ille iudicat, nemo se sibi uindicat, alius in alium consumitur. Interroga de istis quorum nomina ediscuntur, his illos dinosci uidebis notis: ille illius cultor est, hic illius; suus nemo est. 5 Deinde dementissima quorundam indignatio est: queruntur de superiorum fastidio, quod ipsis adire uolentibus non uacauerint! Audet quisquam de alterius superbia queri, qui sibi ipse numquam uacat? Ille tamen te, quisquis es, insolenti quidem uultu sed aliquando respexit, ille aures suas ad tua uerba demisit, ille te ad latus suum recepit: tu non inspicere te umquam, non audire dignatus es. Non est itaque quod ista officia cuiquam imputes, quoniam quidem, cum illa faceres, non esse cum alio uolebas, sed tecum esse non poteras.

III.

1 Omnia licet quae umquam ingenia fulserunt in hoc unum consentiant, numquam satis hanc humanarum mentium caliginem mirabuntur: praedia sua occupari a nullo patiuntur et, si exigua contentio est de modo finium, ad lapides et arma discurrent; in uitam suam incedere alios sinunt, immo uero ipsi etiam possessores eius futuros inducunt; nemo inuenitur qui pecuniam suam diuidere uelit, uitam unusquisque quam multis distribuit! Adstricti sunt in continendo patrimonio, simul ad iacturam temporis uentum est, profusissimi in eo cuius unius honesta auaritia est. 2 Libet itaque ex seniorum turba comprehendere aliquem: “Peruenisse te ad ultimum aetatis humanae uidemus, centesimus tibi uel supra premitur annus: agedum, ad computationem aetatem tuam reuoca. Duc quantum ex isto tempore creditor, quantum amica, quantum rex, quantum cliens abstulerit, quantum lis uxoriam, quantum seruorum coercitio, quantum officiosa per urbem discursatio; adice morbos quos manu fecimus, adice quod et sine usu iacuit: uidebis te pauciores annos habere quam numeras. 3 Repete memoria tecum quando certus consilii fueris, quotus quisque dies ut destinaueras recesserit, quando tibi usus tui fuerit, quando in statu suo uultus, quando animus intrepidus, quid tibi in tam longo aeuo facti operis sit, quam multi uitam tuam diripuerint te non sentiente quid perderes, quantum uanus dolor, stulta laetitia, auida cupiditas, blanda conuersatio abstulerit, quam exiguum tibi de tuo relictum sit: intelleges te immaturum mori.” 4 Quid ergo est in causa? Tamquam semper uicturi uiuitis, numquam uobis fragilitas uestra succurrit, non obseruatis quantum iam temporis transierit; uelut ex pleno et abundanti perditis, cum interim fortasse ille ipse qui alicui uel homini uel rei donatur dies ultimus sit. Omnia tamquam mortales timetis, omnia tamquam immortales concupiscitis. 5 Audies plerosque dicentes: “A quinquagesimo anno in otium secedam, sexagesimus me annus ab officiis dimittet.” Et quem tandem longioris uitae praedem accipis? Quis ista sicut disponis ire patietur? Non pudet te reliquias uitae tibi reseruare et id solum tempus bonae menti destinare quod in nullam rem conferri possit? Quam serum est tunc uiuere incipere cum desinendum est? Quae tam stulta mortalitatis obliuio in quinquagesimum et sexagesimum annum differre sana consilia et inde uelle uitam inchoare quo pauci perduxerunt?

IV.

1 Potentissimis et in altum sublatis hominibus excidere uoces uidebis quibus otium optent, laudent, omnibus bonis suis praeferant. Cupiunt interim ex illo fastigio suo, si tuto liceat, descendere; nam ut nihil extra lacessat aut quatiat, in se ipsa fortuna ruit. 2 Diuus Augustus, cui dii plura quam ulli praestiterunt, non desiit quietem sibi precari et uacationem a re publica petere; omnis eius sermo ad hoc semper reuolutus est, ut speraret otium: hoc labores suos, etiam si falso, dulci tamen oblectabat solacio, aliquando se uicturum sibi. 3 In quadam ad senatum missa epistula, cum requiem suam non uacuum fore dignitatis nec a priore gloria discrepantem pollicitus esset, haec verba inueni: “Sed ista fieri speciosius quam promitti possunt. Me tamen cupido temporis optatissimi mihi prouexit, ut quoniam rerum laetitia moratur adhuc, praeciperem aliquid uoluptatis ex uerborum dulcedine.” 4 Tanta uisa est res otium, ut illam, quia usu non poterat, cogitatione praesumeret. Qui omnia uidebat ex se uno pendentia, qui hominibus gentibusque fortunam dabat, illum diem laetissimus cogitabat quo magnitudinem suam exueret. 5 Expertus erat quantum illa bona per omnis terras fulgentia sudoris exprimerent, quantum occultarum sollicitudinum tegerent: cum ciuibus primum, deinde cum collegis, nouissime cum affinibus coactus armis decernere mari terraque sanguinem fudit. Per Macedoniam, Siciliam, Aegyptum, Syriam Asiamque et omnis prope oras bello circumactus Romana caede lassos exercitus ad externa bella conuertit. Dum Alpes pacat immixtosque mediae paci et imperio hostes perdomat, dum [ut] ultra Rhenum et Euphraten et Danuuium terminos mouet, in ipsa urbe Murenarum, Caepionis Lepidi, Egnatiorum, aliorum in eum mucrones acuebantur. 6 Nondum horum effugerat insidias: filia et tot nobiles iuuenes adulterio uelut sacramento adacti iam infractam aetatem territabant Paulusque et iterum timenda cum Antonio mulier. Haec ulcera cum ipsis membris absciderat: alia subnascebantur; uelut graue multo sanguine corpus parte semper aliqua rumpebatur. Itaque otium optabat, in huius spe et cogitatione labores eius residebant, hoc uotum erat eius qui uoti compotes facere poterat.

1 M. Cicero inter Catilinas, Clodios iactatus Pompeiosque et Crassos, partim manifestos inimicos, partim dubios amicos, dum fluctuatur cum re publica et illam pessum euntem tenet, nouissime abductus, nec secundis rebus quietus nec aduersarum patiens, quotiens illum ipsum consulatum suum non sine causa sed sine fine laudatum detestatur! 2 Quam flebiles uoces exprimit in quadam ad Atticum epistula iam uicto patre Pompeio, adhuc filio in Hispania fracta arma refouente! “Quid agam”, inquit, “hic, quaeris? Moror in Tusculano meo semiliber.” Alia deinceps adicit, quibus et priorem aetatem complorat et de praesenti queritur et de futura desperat. 3 Semiliberum se dixit Cicero: at me hercules numquam sapiens in tam humile nomen procedet, numquam semiliber erit, integrae semper libertatis et solidae, solutus et sui iuris et altior ceteris. Quid enim supra eum potest esse qui supra fortunam est?

VI.

1 Liuius Drusus, uir acer et uehemens, cum leges nouas et mala Gracchana mouisset stipatus ingenti totius Italiae coetu, exitum rerum non peruidens, quas nec agere licebat nec iam liberum erat semel incohatas relinquere, exsecratus inquietam a primordiis uitam dicitur dixisse: uni sibi ne puero quidem umquam ferias contigisse. Ausus est enim et pupillus adhuc et praetextatus iudicibus reos commendare et gratiam suam foro interponere tam efficaciter quidem, ut quaedam iudicia constet ab illo rapta. 2 Quo non erumperet tam immatura ambitio? Scires in malum ingens et priuatum et publicum euasuram tam praecoquem audaciam. Sero itaque querebatur nullas sibi ferias contigisse a puero seditiosus et foro grauis. Disputatur an ipse sibi manus attulerit; subito enim uulnere per inguen accepto collapsus est, aliquo dubitante an mors eius uoluntaria esset, nullo an tempestiua. 3 Superuacuum est commemorare plures qui, cum aliis felicissimi uiderentur, ipsi in se uerum testimonium dixerunt perosi omnem actum annorum suorum; sed his querellis nec alios mutauerunt nec se ipsos: nam cum uerba eruperunt, affectus ad consuetudinem relabuntur. 4 Vestra me hercules uita, licet supra mille annos exeat, in artissimum contrahetur: ista uitia nullum non saeculum deuorabunt; hoc uero spatium, quod quamuis natura currit ratio dilatat, cito uos effugiat necesse est; non enim apprenditis nec retinetis uel ocissimae omnium rei moram facitis, sed abire ut rem superuacua ac reparabilem sinitis.

VII.

1 In primis autem et illos numero qui nulli rei nisi uino ac libidini uacant; nulli enim turpius occupati sunt. Ceteri, etiam si uana gloriae imagine teneantur, speciose tamen errant; licet auaros mihi, licet iracundos enumeres uel odia exercentes iniusta uel bella, omnes isti uiriliter peccant: in uentrem ac libidinem projectorum inhonesta tabes est. 2 Omnia istorum tempora excute, aspice quam diu computent, quam diu insidientur, quam diu timeant, quam diu colant, quam diu colantur, quantum uadimonia sua atque aliena occupent, quantum conuiuia, quae iam ipsa officia sunt: uidebis quemadmodum illos respirare non sinant uel mala sua uel bona. 3 Denique inter omnes conuenit nullam rem bene exerceri posse ab homine occupato, non eloquentiam, non liberales disciplinas, quando districtus animus nihil altius recipit sed omnia uelut inculcata respuit. Nihil minus est hominis occupati quam uiuere: nullius rei difficilior scientia est. Professores aliarum artium uulgo multique sunt, quasdam uero ex his pueri admodum ita percepisse uisi sunt, ut etiam praecipere possent: uiuere tota uita descendum est et, quod magis fortasse miraberis, tota uita descendum est mori. 4 Tot maximi uiri, relictis omnibus impedimentis, cum diuitiis, officiis, uoluptatibus renuntiassent, hoc unum in extremam usque aetatem egerunt ut uiuere scirent; plures tamen ex his nondum se scire confessi uita abierunt, nedum ut isti sciant. 5 Magni, mihi crede, et supra humanos errores eminentis uiri est nihil ex suo tempore delibari sinere, et ideo eius uita longissima est, quia, quantumcumque patuit, totum ipsi uacauit. Nihil inde incultum otiosumque iacuit, nihil sub alio fuit, neque enim quicquam repperit dignum quod cum tempore suo permutaret custos eius parcissimus. Itaque satis illi fuit: iis uero necesse est defuisse ex quorum uita multum populus tulit. 6 Nec est quod putes hinc illos aliquando non intellegere damnum suum: plerosque certe audies ex iis quos magna felicitas grauat inter clientium greges aut causarum actiones aut ceteras honestas miserias exclamare interdum: "Viueri mihi non licet." 7 Quidni non liceat? Omnes illi qui te sibi aduocant tibi abducunt. Ille reus quot dies abstulit? Quot ille candidatus? Quot illa anus efferendis heredibus lassa? Quot ille ad irritandam auaritiam captantium simulatus aeger? Quot ille potentior amicus, qui uos non in amicitiam sed in apparatu habet? Dispunge, inquam, et recense uitae tuae dies: uidebis paucos admodum et reiculos apud te resedis. 8 Assecutus ille quos optauerat fascis cupit ponere et subinde dicit: “Quando hic annus praeteribit?” Facit ille ludos, quorum sortem sibi obtingere magno aestimauit: “Quando”, inquit, “istos effugiam?” Diripitur ille toto foro patronus et magno concursu omnia ultra quam audiri potest complet: “Quando”, inquit, “res proferentur?” Praecipitat quisque uitam suam et futuri desiderio laborat, praesentium taedio. 9 At ille qui nullum non tempus in usus suos confert, qui omnes dies tamquam ultimum ordinat, nec optat crastinum nec timet. Quid enim est quod iam ulla hora nouae uoluptatis possit afferre? Omnia nota, omnia ad satietatem percepta sunt. De cetero fors fortuna ut uolet ordinet: uita iam in tuto est. Huic adici potest, detrahi nihil, et adici sic quemadmodum saturo iam ac pleno aliquid cibi: quod nec desiderat [et] capit. 10 Non est itaque quod quemquam propter canos aut rugas putes diu uixisse: non ille diu uixit, sed diu fuit. Quid enim, si illum multum putes nauigasse quem saeua tempestas a portu exceptum huc et illuc tulit ac uicibus uentorum ex diuerso furentium per eadem spatia in orbem egit? Non ille multum nauigauit, sed multum iactatus est.

VIII.

1 Mirari soleo cum uideo aliquos tempus petentes et eos qui rogantur facillimos; illud uterque spectat propter quod tempus petatum est, ipsum quidem neuter: quasi nihil petatur, quasi nihil datur. Re omnium pretiosissima ludatur; fallit autem illos, quia res incorporalis est, quia sub oculos non uenit ideoque uilissima aestimatur, immo paene nullum eius pretium est. 2 Annua, congiaria homines carissime accipiunt et illis aut laborem aut operam aut diligentiam suam locant: nemo aestimat tempus; utuntur illo laxius quasi gratuito. At eosdem aegros uide, si mortis periculum propius admotum est, medicorum genua tangentes, si metuunt capitale supplicium, omnia sua, ut uiuant, paratos impendere! Tanta in illis discordia affectuum est! 3 Quodsi posset quem-admodum praeteritorum annorum cuiusque numerus proponi, sic futurorum, quomodo illi qui paucos uiderent superesse trepidarent, quomodo illis parcerent! Atqui facile est quamuis exiguum dispensare quod certum est; id debet seruari diligentius quod nescias quando deficiat. 4 Nec est tamen quod putes illos ignorare quam cara res sit: dicere solent eis quos ualdissime diligunt paratos se partem annorum suorum dare: dant nec intellegunt: dant autem ita ut sine illorum incremento sibi detrahant. Sed hoc ipsum an detrahant nesciunt; ideo tolerabilis est illis iactura detrimenti latentis. 5 Nemo restituet annos, nemo iterum te tibi reddet. Ibit qua coepit aetas nec cursum suum aut reuocabit aut supprimet; nihil tumultuabitur, nihil admonebit uelocitatis suae: tacita labetur. Non illa se regis imperio, non fauore populi longius proferet: sicut missa est a primo die, curret, nusquam deuertetur, nusquam remorabitur. Quid fiet? Tu occupatus es, uita festinat; mors interim aderit, cui uelis nolis uacandum est.

IX.

1 Potestne quicquam stultius esse quam quorundam sensus, hominum eorum dico qui prudentiam iactant? Operosius occupati sunt. Vt melius possint uiuere, impendio uitae uitam instruunt. Cogitationes suas in longum ordinant; maxima porro uitae iactura dilatio est: illa primum quemque extrahit diem, illa eripit praesentia dum ulteriora promittit. Maximum uiuendi impedimentum est exspectatio, quae pendet ex crastino, perdit hodiernum. Quod in manu fortunae positum est disponis, quod in tua, dimittis. Quo spectas? Quo te extendis? Omnia quae uentura sunt in incerto iacent: protinus uiue. 2 Clamat ecce maximus uates et uelut diuino horrore instinctus salutare carmen canit:

Optima quaeque dies miseris mortalibus aeu
Prima fugit.

“Quid cunctaris?”, inquit, “Quid cessas? Nisi occupas, fugit.” Et cum occupaueris, tamen fugiet: itaque cum celeritate temporis utendi uelocitate certandum est et uelut ex torrenti rapido nec semper ituro cito hauriendum. 3 Hoc quoque pulcherrime ad exprobandam infinitam cogitationem quod non optimam quamque aetatem sed diem dicit. Quid securus et in tanta temporum fuga lentus menses tibi et annos in longam seriem, utcumque auiditati tuae uisum est, exporris? De die tecum loquitur et de hoc ipso fugiente. 4 Num dubium est ergo quin prima quaeque optima dies fugiat mortalibus miseris, id est occupatis? Quorum puerilis adhuc animos senectus opprimit, ad quam imparati inermesque perueniunt; nihil enim prouisum est: subito in illam necopinantes inciderunt, accedere eam cotidie non sentiebant. 5 Quemadmodum aut sermo aut lectio aut aliqua intentior cogitatio iter facientis decipit et peruenisse ante sciunt quam appropinquasse, sic hoc iter uitae assiduum et citatissimum quod uigilantes dormientesque eodem gradu facimus occupatis non apparet nisi in fine.

1 Quod proposui si in partes uelim et argumenta diducere, multa mihi occurrent per quae probem breuissimam esse occupatorum uitam. Solebat dicere Fabianus, non ex his cathedrariis philosophis, sed ex ueris et antiquis, “contra affectus impetu, non subtilitate pugnandum, nec minutis uulneribus sed incursu auertendam aciem”. Non probabat cauillationes: “enim contundi debere, non uellicari.” Tamen, ut illis error exprobraretur suus, docendi non tantum deplorandi sunt. 2 In tria tempora uita diuiditur: quod fuit, quod est, quod futurum est. Ex his quod agimus breue est, quod acturi sumus dubium, quod egimus certum. Hoc est enim in quod fortuna ius perdidit, quod in nullius arbitrium reduci potest. 3 Hoc amittunt occupati; nec enim illis uacat praeterita respicere, et si uacet iniucunda est paenitendae rei recordatio. Inuiti itaque ad tempora male exacta animum reuocant nec audent ea retemptare quorum uitia, etiam quae aliquo praesentis uoluptatis lenocinio surripiebantur, retractando patescunt. Nemo, nisi quod omnia acta sunt sub censura sua, quae numquam fallitur, libenter se in praeteritum retorquet: 4 ille qui multa ambitiose concupiit superbe contempsit, impotenter uicit insidiosae deceptus, auare rapuit prodige effudit, necesse est memoriam suam timeat. Atqui haec est pars temporis nostri sacra ac dedicata, omnis humanos casus supergressa, extra regnum fortunae subducta, quam non inopia, non metus, non morborum incursus exagitet; haec nec turbari nec eripi potest; perpetua eius et intrepida possessio est. Singuli tantum dies, et hi per momenta, praesentes sunt; at praeteriti temporis omnes, cum iusseritis, aderunt, ad arbitrium tuum inspicere se ac detineri patientur, quod facere occupatis non uacat. 5 Securae et quietae mentis est in omnes uitae suae partes discurrere; occupatorum animi, uelut sub iugo sint, flectere se ac respicere non possunt. Abit igitur uita eorum in profundum; et ut nihil prodest, licet quantumlibet ingeras, si non subest quod excipiat ac seruet, sic nihil refert quantum temporis detur, si non est ubi subsidat: per quassos foratosque animos transmittitur. 6 Praesens tempus breuissimum est, adeo quidem ut quibusdam nullum uideatur; in cursu enim semper est, fluit et praecipitatur; ante desinit esse quam uenit, nec magis moram patitur quam mundus aut sidera, quorum irrequieta semper agitatio numquam in eodem uestigio manet. Solum igitur ad occupatos praesens pertinet tempus, quod tam breue est ut arripi non possit, et id ipsum illis districtis in multa subducitur.

XI.

1 Denique uis scire quam non diu uiuant? Vide quam cupiant diu uiuere. Decrepiti senes paucorum annorum accessionem uotis mendicant: minores natu se ipsos esse fingunt; mendacio sibi blandiuntur et tam libenter se fallunt quam si una fata decipiant. Iam uero cum illos aliqua imbecillitas mortalitatis admonuit, quemadmodum pauentes moriuntur, non tamquam exeant de uita sed tamquam extrahantur. Stultos se fuisse ut non uixerint clamitant et, si modo euaserint ex illa uoletudine, in otio uicturos; tunc quam frustra parauerint quibus non fruerentur, quam in cassum omnis ceciderit labor cogitant. 2 At quibus uita procul ab omni negotio agitur, quidni spatiosa sit? Nihil ex illa delegatur, nihil alio atque alio spargitur, nihil inde fortunae traditur, nihil neglegentia interit, nihil largitione detrahitur, nihil superuacuum est: tota, ut ita dicam, in reditu est. Quantulacumque itaque abunde sufficit, et ideo, quandoque ultimus dies uenerit, non cunctabitur sapiens ire ad mortem certo gradu.

XII.

1 Quaeris fortasse quos occupatos uocem? Non est quod me solos putes dicere quos a basilica immissi demum canes eiciunt, quos aut in sua uides turba speciosius elidi aut in aliena contemptius, quos officia domibus suis euocant ut alienis foribus illidant, [aut] hasta praetoris infami lucro et quandoque suppurato exercet. 2 Quorundam otium occupatum est: in uilla aut in lecto suo, in media solitudine, quamuis ab omnibus recesserint, sibi ipsi molesti sunt: quorum non otiosa uita dicenda est sed desidiosa occupatio. Illum tu otiosum uocas qui Corinthia, paucorum furore pretiosa, anxia subtilitate concinnat et maiorem dierum partem in aeruginosis lamellis consumit? qui in ceromate (nam, pro facinus! ne Romanis quidem uitii laboramus) spectator puerorum rixantium sedet? qui iumentorum suorum greges in aetatum et colorum paria diducit? qui athletas nouissimos pascit? 3 Quid? Illos otiosos uocas quibus apud tonsorem multae horae transmittuntur, dum decerpitur si quid proxima nocte succreuit, dum de singulis capillis in consilium itur, dum aut disiecta coma restituitur aut deficiens hinc atque illinc in frontem compellitur? Quomodo irascuntur, si tonsor paulo neglegentior fuit, tamquam uirum tonderet! Quomodo excandescunt si quid ex iuba sua decisum est, si quid extra ordinem iacuit, nisi omnia in anulos suos reciderunt! Quis est istorum qui non malit rem publicam turbari quam comam suam? qui non sollicitior sit de capitis sui decore quam de salute? qui non comptior esse malit quam honestior? Hos tu otiosos uocas inter pectinem speculumque occupatos? 4 Quid illi qui in componendis, audiendis, discendis canticis operati sunt, dum uocem, cuius rectum cursum natura et optimum et simplicissimum fecit, in flexus modulationis inertissimae torquent, quorum digiti aliquod intra se carmen metientes semper sonant, quorum, cum ad res serias, etiam saepe tristes adhibiti sunt, exauditur tacita modulatio? Non habent isti otium, sed iners negotium. 5 Conuiuia me hercules horum non posuerim inter uacantia tempora, cum uideam quam solliciti argentum ordinent, quam diligenter exoletorum suorum tunicas succingant, quam suspensi sint quomodo aper a coco exeat, qua celeritate signo dato glabri ad ministeria discurrant, quanta arte scindantur aues in frusta non enormia, quam curiose infelices pueruli ebriorum sputa detergeant: ex his elegantiae lautitiaeque fama captatur et usque eo in omnes uitae secessus mala sua illos sequuntur, ut nec bibant sine ambitione nec edant. 6 Ne illos quidem inter otiosos numeraueris qui sella se et lectica huc et illuc ferunt et ad gestationum suarum, quasi deserere illas non liceat, horas occurrunt, quos quando lauari debeant, quando natare, quando cenare alius admonet: [et] usque eo nimio delicati animi languore soluuntur, ut per se scire non possint an esuriant. 7 Audio quendam ex delicatis (si modo deliciae uocandae sunt uitam et consuetudinem humanam dediscere), cum ex balneo inter manus elatus et in sella positus esset, dixisse interrogando: "Iam sedeo?" Hunc tu ignorantem an sedeat putas scire an uiuat, an uideat, an otiosus sit? Non facile dixerim utrum magis miserear, si hoc ignorauit an si ignorare se finxit. 8 Multarum quidem rerum obliuionem sentiunt, sed multarum et imitantur; quaedam uitia illos quasi felicitatis argumenta delectant; nimis humilis et contempti hominis uidetur scire quid facias: i nunc et mimos multa mentiri ad exprobrandam luxuriam puta. Plura me hercules praetereunt quam fingunt et tanta incredibilium uitiorum copia ingenioso in hoc unum saeculo processit, ut iam mimorum arguere possimus negligentiam. Esse aliquem qui usque eo deliciis interierit ut an sedeat alteri credat! 9 Non est ergo hic otiosus, aliud illi nomen imponas; aeger est, immo mortuus est; ille otiosus est cui otii sui et sensus est. Hic uero semiuiuus, cui ad intellegendos corporis sui habitus indice opus est, quomodo potest hic ullius temporis dominus esse?

XIII 1 Persequi singulos longum est quorum aut latrunculi aut pila aut excoquendi in sole corporis cura consumpsere uitam. Non sunt otiosi quorum uoluptates multum negotii habent. Nam de illis nemo dubitabit quin operose nihil agant, qui litterarum inutilium studiis detinentur, quae iam apud Romanos quoque magna manus est. 2 Graecorum iste morbus fuit quaerere quem numerum Ulixes remigum habuisset, prior scripta esset Ilias an Odyssea, praeterea an eiusdem esset auctoris, alia deinceps huius notae, quae siue contineas nihil tacitam conscientiam iuant, siue proferas non doctior uidearis sed molestior. 3 Ecce Romanos quoque inuasit inane studium superuacua discendi; his diebus audiui quendam referentem quae primus quisque ex Romanis ducibus fecisset: primus nauali proelio Duilius uicit, primus Curius Dentatus in triumpho duxit elephantos. Etiam nunc ista, etsi ad ueram gloriam non tendunt, circa ciuiliū tamen operum exempla uersantur; non est profutura talis scientia, est tamen quae nos speciosa rerum uanitate detineat. 4 Hoc quoque quaerentibus remittamus quis Romanis primus persuaserit nauem conscendere (Claudius is fuit, Caudex ob hoc ipsum appellatus quia plurium tabularum contextus caudex apud antiquos uocatur, unde publicae tabulae codices dicuntur et naues nunc quoque ex antiqua consuetudine quae commeatus per Tiberim subuehunt codicariae uocantur); 5 sane et hoc ad rem pertineat, quod Valerius Coruinus primus Messanam uicit et primus ex familia Valeriorum, urbis captae in se translato nomine, Messana appellatus est paulatimque uulgo permutante litteras Messala dictus: 6 num et hoc cuiquam curare permittes quod primus L. Sulla in circo leones solutos dedit, cum alioquin alligati darentur, ad conficiendos eos missis a rege Boccho iaculatoribus? Et hoc sane remittatur: num et Pompeium primum in circo elephantorum duodeuiginti pugnam edidisse commissis more proelii noxiis hominibus, ad ullam rem bonam pertinet? Princeps ciuitatis et inter antiquos principes (ut fama tradidit) bonitatis eximiae memorabile putauit spectaculi genus nouo more perdere homines. Depugnant? Parum est. Lancinantur? Parum est: ingenti mole animalium exterantur! 7 Satius erat ista in obliuionem ire, ne quis postea potens disceret inuideretque rei minime humanae. O quantum caliginis mentibus nostris obicit magna felicitas! Ille se supra rerum naturam esse tunc credidit, cum tot miserorum hominum cateruas sub alio caelo natis beluis obiceret, cum bellum inter tam disparia animalia committeret, cum in conspectum populi Romani multum sanguinis funderet mox plus ipsum fundere coactus; at idem postea Alexandrina perfidia deceptus ultimo mancipio transfodiendum se praeuit, tum demum intellecta inani iactatione cognominis sui. 8 Sed, ut illo reuertar unde decessi et in eadem materia ostendam superuacua quorundam diligentiam, idem narrabat Metellum, uictis in Sicilia Poenis triumphantem, unum omnium Romanorum ante currum centum et uiginti captiuos elephantos duxisse; Sullam ultimum Romanorum protulisse pomerium, quod numquam prouinciali sed Italico agro adquisito proferre moris apud antiquos fuit. Hoc scire magis prodest quam Auentinum montem extra pomerium esse, ut ille affirmabat, propter alteram ex duabus causis, aut quod plebs eo secessisset aut quod Remo auspicante illo loco aues non addixissent, alia deinceps innumerabilia quae aut farta sunt mendaciis aut similia? 9 Nam ut concedas omnia eos fide bona dicere, ut ad praestationem scribant, tamen cuius ista errores minuent? cuius cupiditates prement? quem fortiolem, quem iustiolem, quem liberaliolem facient? Dubitare se interim Fabianus noster aiebat an satius esset nullis studiis admoueri quam his implicari.

XIV.

1 Soli omnium otiosi sunt qui sapientiae uacant, soli uiuunt; nec enim suam tantum aetatem bene tuentur: omne aeuum suo adiciunt; quicquid annorum ante illos actum est, illis adquisitum est. Nisi ingratis sumus, illi clarissimi sacrarum opinionum conditores nobis nati sunt, nobis uitam praeparauerunt. Ad res pulcherrimas ex tenebris ad lucem erutas alieno labore deducimur; nullo nobis saeculo interdictum est, in omnia admittimur et, si magnitudine animi egredi humanae imbecillitatis angustias libet, multum per quod spatiemur temporis est. 2 Disputare cum Socrate licet, dubitare cum Carneade, cum Epicuro quiescere, hominis naturam cum Stoicis uincere, cum Cynicis excedere. Cum rerum natura in consortium omnis aevi patiatur incedere, quidni ab hoc exiguo et caduco temporis transitu in illa toto nos demus animo quae immensa, quae aeterna sunt, quae cum melioribus communia? 3 Isti qui per officia discursant, qui se aliosque inquietant, cum bene insanierint, cum omnium limina cotidie perambulauerint nec ulla apertas fores praeterierint, cum per diuersissimas domos meritoriam salutationem circumtulerint, quotum quemque ex tam immensa et uariis cupiditatibus districta urbe poterunt uidere? 4 Quam multi erunt quorum illos aut somnus aut luxuria aut inhumanitas summoueat! Quam multi qui illos, cum diu torserint, simulata festinatione transcurrant! Quam multi per refertum clientibus atrium prodire uitabunt et per obscuros aedium aditus profugient, quasi non inhumanius sit decipere quam excludere! Quam multi hesternae crapula semisomnes et graues illis miseris suum somnum rumpentibus ut alienum exspectent, uix alleuatis labris insusurratum miliens nomen oscitatione superbissima reddent! 5 Hos in ueris officiis morari putamus, licet dicant, qui Zenonem, qui Pythagoran cotidie et Democritum ceterosque antistites bonarum artium, qui Aristotelen et Theophrastum uolent habere quam familiarissimos. Nemo horum non uacabit, nemo non uenientem ad se beatior, amantiorem sui dimittet, nemo quemquam uacuis a se manibus abire patietur; nocte conueniri, interdiu ab omnibus mortalibus possunt.

XV.

1 Horum te mori nemo coget, omnes docebunt; horum nemo annos tuos conterit, suos tibi contribuit; nullius ex his sermo periculosus erit, nullius amicitia capitalis, nullius sumptuosa obseruatio. Feres ex illis quicquid uoles; per illos non stabit quominus quantum plurimum cupieris haurias. 2 Quae illum felicitas, quam pulchra senectus manet, qui se in horum clientelam contulit! Habebit cum quibus de minimis maximisque rebus deliberet, quos de se cotidie consulat, a quibus audiat uerum sine contumelia, laudetur sine adulatione, ad quorum se similitudinem effingat. 3 Solemus dicere non fuisse in nostra potestate quos sortiremur parentes, forte nobis datos: bonis uero ad suum arbitrium nasci licet. Nobilissimorum ingeniorum familiae sunt: elige in quam adscisci uelis; non in nomen tantum adoptaberis, sed in ipsa bona, quae non erunt sordide nec maligne custodienda: maiora fient quo illa pluribus diuiseris. 4 Hi tibi dabunt ad aeternitatem iter et te in illum locum ex quo nemo deicitur subleuabunt. Haec una ratio est extendendae mortalitatis, immo in immortalitatem uertendae. Honores, monumenta, quicquid aut decretis ambitio iussit aut operibus extruxit cito subruitur, nihil non longa demolitur uetustas et mouet; at iis quae consecrauit sapientia nocere non potest; nulla abolebit aetas, nulla deminuet; sequens ac deinde semper ulterior aliquid ad uenerationem conferet, quoniam quidem in uicino uersatur inuidia, simplicius longe posita miramur. 5 Sapientis ergo multum patet uita; non idem illum qui ceteros terminus cludit; solus generis humani legibus soluitur; omnia illi saecula ut deo seruiunt. Transiit tempus aliquod? hoc recordatione comprehendit; instat? hoc utitur; uenturum est? hoc praecipit. Longam illi uitam facit omnium temporum in unum collatio.

XVI.

1 Illorum breuissima ac sollicitissima aetas est qui praeteritorum obliuiscuntur, praesentia neglegunt, de futuro timent: cum ad extrema uenerunt, sero intellegunt miseri tam diu se dum nihil agunt occupatos fuisse. 2 Nec est quod hoc argumento probari putes longam illos agere uitam, quia interdum mortem inuocant: uexat illos imprudentia incertis affectibus et incurrentibus in ipsa quae metuunt; mortem saepe ideo optant quia timent. 3 Illud quoque argumentum non est quod putes diu uiuentium, quod saepe illis longus uidetur dies, quod, dum ueniat condictum tempus cenae, tarde ire horas queruntur; nam si quando illos deseruerunt occupationes, in otio relictis aestuant nec quomodo id disponant ut extrahant sciunt. Itaque ad occupationem aliquam tendunt et quod interiacet omne tempus graue est, tam me hercules quam cum dies muneris gladiatorii edictus est, aut cum alicuius alterius uel spectaculi uel uoluptatis exspectatur constitutum, transilire medios dies uolunt. 4 Omnis illis speratae rei longa dilatio est; at illud tempus quod amant breue est et praeceps breuiusque multo, suo uitio; aliunde enim alio transfugiunt et consistere in una cupiditate non possunt. Non sunt illis longi dies, sed inuisi; at contra quam exiguae noctes uidentur, quas in complexu scortorum aut uino exigunt! 5 Inde etiam poetarum furor fabulis humanos errores alentium, quibus uisus est Iuppiter uoluptate concubitus delenitus duplicasse noctem; quid aliud est uitia nostra incendere quam auctores illis inscribere deos et dare morbo exemplo diuinitatis excusatam licentiam? Possunt istis non breuissimae uideri noctes quas tam care mercantur? Diem noctis exspectatione perdunt, noctem lucis metu.

XVII I Ipsae uoluptates eorum trepidae et uariis terroribus inquietae sunt subitque cum maxime exsultantis sollicita cogitatio: "Haec quam diu?" Ab hoc affectu reges suam fleuere potentiam, nec illos magnitudo fortunae suae delectauit, sed uenturus aliquando finis exterruit. 2 Cum per magna camporum spatia porrigeret exercitum nec numerum eius sed mensuram comprehenderet Persarum rex insolentissimus, lacrimas profudit, quod intra centum annos nemo ex tanta iuuentute superfuturus esset; at illis admoturus erat fatum ipse qui flebat perditurusque alios in mari alios in terra, alios proelio alios fuga, et intra exiguum tempus consumpturus illos quibus centesimum annum timebat. 3 Quid quod gaudia quoque eorum trepida sunt? Non enim solidis causis innituntur, sed eadem qua oriuntur uanitate turbantur. Qualia autem putas esse tempora etiam ipsorum confessione misera, cum haec quoque quibus se attollunt et super hominem efferunt parum sincera sint? 4 Maxima quaeque bona sollicita sunt nec ulli fortunae minus bene quam optimae creditur; alia felicitate ad tuendam felicitatem opus est et pro ipsis quae succedere uotis uota facienda sunt. Omne enim quod fortuito obuenit instabile est: quod altius surrexerit, opportunius est in occasum. Neminem porro casura delectant; miserrimam ergo necesse est, non tantum breuissimam uitam esse eorum qui magno parant labore quod maiore possideant. 5 Operose assequuntur quae uolunt, anxii tenent quae assecuti sunt; nulla interim numquam amplius redituri temporis ratio est: nouae occupationes ueteribus substituuntur, spes spem excitat, ambitionem ambitio. Miseriarum non finis quaeritur, sed materia mutatur. Nostri nos honores torserunt? plus temporis alieni auferunt; candidati laborare desiimus? suffragatores incipimus; accusandi deposuimus molestiam? iudicandi nanciscimur; iudex desiit esse? quaesitor est; alienorum bonorum mercennaria procuratione consenuit? suis opibus distinetur. 6 Marius caliga dimisit? consulatus exercet; Quintius dictaturam properat peruadere? ab aratro reuocabitur. Ibit in Poenos nondum tantae maturus rei Scipio; uictor Hannibalis uictor Antiochi, sui consulatus decus fraterni sponsor, ni per ipsum mora esset, cum Ioue reponeretur: ciuiles seruatorem agitabunt seditiones et post fastiditos a iuvene diis aequos honores iam senem contumacis exilii delectabit ambitio. Numquam derunt uel felices uel miserae sollicitudinis causae; per occupationes uita trudetur; otium numquam agetur, semper optabitur.

XVIII.

1 Excerpe itaque te uulgo, Pauline carissime, et in tranquillio-rem portum non pro aetatis spatio iactatus tandem recede. Cogita quot fluctus subieris, quot tempestates partim priuatas sustinueris, partim publicas in te conuerteris; satis iam per laboriosa et inquieta documenta exhibita uirtus est; experire quid in otio faciat. Maior pars aetatis, certe melior rei publicae datast: aliquid temporis tui sume etiam tibi. 2 Nec te ad segnem aut inertem quietem uoco, non ut somno et caris turbae uoluptatibus quicquid est in te indolis uiuidae mergas; non est istud adquiescere: inuenies maiora omnibus adhuc strenue tractatis operibus, quae repositus et securus agites. 3 Tu quidem orbis terrarum rationes administras tam abstinenter quam alienas, tam diligenter quam tuas, tam religiose quam publicas. In officio amorem consequeris, in quo odium uitare difficile est; sed tamen, mihi crede, satius est uitae suae rationem quam frumenti publici nosse. 4 Istum animi uigorem rerum maximarum capacissimum a ministerio honorifico quidem sed parum ad beatam uitam apto reuoca, et cogita non id egisse te ab aetate prima omni cultu studiorum liberalium ut tibi multa milia frumenti bene committerentur; maius quiddam et altius de te promiseras. Non derunt et frugalitatis exactae homines et laboriosae operae; tanto aptiora [ex]portandis oneribus tarda iumenta sunt quam nobiles equi, quorum generosam pernecitatem quis umquam graui sarcina pressit?
Cogita praeterea quantum sollicitudinis sit ad tantam te molem obicere: cum uentre tibi humano negotium est; nec rationem patitur nec aequitate mitigatur nec ulla prece flectitur populus esuriens.
Modo modo intra paucos illos dies quibus C. Caesar periit (si quis inferis sensus est) hoc grauissime ferens quod decebat populo Romano superstitute, septem aut octo certe dierum cibaria superesse!
Dum ille pontes nauibus iungit et uiribus imperi ludit, aderat ultimum malorum obsessis quoque, alimentorum egestas; exitio paene ac fame constitit et, quae famem sequitur, rerum omnium ruina furiosi et externi et infeliciter superbi regis imitatio. 6 Quem tunc animum habuerunt illi quibus erat mandata frumenti publici cura, saxa, ferrum, ignes, Gaium excepturi? Summa dissimulatione tantum inter uiscera latentis mali tegebant, cum ratione scilicet: quaedam enim ignorantibus aegris curanda sunt, causa multis moriendi fuit morbum suum nosse.

XIX.

1 Recipe te ad haec tranquilliora, tutiora, maiora! Simile tu putas esse, utrum cures ut incorruptum et a fraude aduehentium et a negligentia frumentum transfundatur in horrea, ne concepto umore uitietur et concalescat, ut ad mensuram pondusque respondeat, an ad haec sacra et sublimia accedas sciturus quae materia sit dei, quae uoluptas, quae condicio, quae forma; quis animum tuum casus exspectet; ubi nos a corporibus dimissos natura componat; quid sit quod huius mundi grauissima quaeque in medio sustineat, supra leuia suspendat, in summum ignem ferat, sidera uicibus suis excitet; cetera deinceps ingentibus plena miraculis? 2 Vis tu relicto solo mente ad ista respicere! Nunc, dum calet sanguis, uigentibus ad meliora eundum est. Exspectat te in hoc genere uitae multum bonarum artium, amor uirtutum atque usus, cupiditatum obliuio, uiuendi ac moriendi scientia, alta rerum quies.

XX.

1 Omnium quidem occupatorum condicio misera est, eorum tamen miserrima, qui ne suis quidem laborant occupationibus, ad alienum dormiunt somnum, ad alienum ambulant gradum, amare et odisse, res omnium liberrimas, iubentur. Hi si uolent scire quam brevis ipsorum uita sit, cogitent ex quota parte sua sit. 2 Cum uideris itaque praetextam saepe iam sumptam, cum celebre in foro nomen, ne inuideris: ista uitae damno parantur. Vt unus ab illis numeretur annus, omnis annos suos conterent. Quosdam antequam in summum ambitionis eniterentur, inter prima luctantis aetas reliquit; quosdam, cum in consummationem dignitatis per mille indignitates erepsissent, misera subiit cogitatio laborasse ipsos in titulum sepulcri; quorundam ultima senectus, dum in nouas spes ut iuuenta disponitur, inter conatus magnos et improbos inualida defecit. 3 Foedus ille quem in iudicio pro ignotissimis litigatoribus grandem natu et imperitae coronae assensiones captantem spiritus liquit; turpis ille qui uiuendo lassus citius quam laborando inter ipsa officia collapsus est; turpis quem accipiendis immorientem rationibus diu tractus risit heres. 4 Praeterire quod mihi occurrit exemplum non possum: Turannius fuit exactae diligentiae senex, qui post annum nonagesimum, cum uacationem procurationis ab C. Caesare ultro accepisset, componi se in lecto et uelut exanimem a circumstante familia plangi iussit. Lugebat domus otium domini senis nec finiuit ante tristitiam quam labor illi suus restitutus est. Adeone iuuat occupatum mori? 5 Idem plerisque animus est; diutius cupiditas illis laboris quam facultas est; cum imbecillitate corporis pugnant, senectutem ipsam nullo alio nomine grauem iudicant quam quod illos seponit. Lex a quinquagesimo anno militem non legit, a sexagesimo senatorem non citat: difficilior homines a se otium impetrant quam a lege. 6 Interim dum rapiuntur et rapiunt, dum alter alterius quietem rumpit, dum mutuo miseri sunt, uita est sine fructu, sine uoluptate, sine ullo profectu animi; nemo in conspicuo mortem habet, nemo non procul spes intendit, quidam uero disponunt etiam illa quae ultra uitam sunt, magnas moles sepulcrorum et operum publicorum dedicationes et ad rogum munera et ambitiosas exsequias. At me hercules istorum funera, tamquam minimum uixerint, ad faces et cereos ducenda sunt.

THE PUMPKINIFICATION OF THE DIVINE CLAUDIUS — Apocolocyntosis divi Claudii

[1] Quid actum sit in caelo ante diem III idus Octobris anno novo, initio saeculi felicissimi, volo memoriae tradere. Nihil nec offensae nec gratiae dabitur. Haec ita vera si quis quaesiverit unde sciam, primum, si noluerō, non respondebo. Quis coacturus est? Ego scio me liberum factum, ex quo suum diem obiit ille, qui verum proverbium fecerat, aut regem aut fatuum nasci oportere. Si libuerit respondere, dicam quod mihi in buccam venerit. Quis unquam ab historico iuratores exegit? Tamen si necesse fuerit auctorem producere, quaerito ab eo qui Drusillam euntem in caelum vidit: idem Claudium vidisse se dicet iter facientem “non passibus aequis.” Velit nolit, necesse est illi omnia videre, quae in caelo aguntur: Appiae viae curator est, qua scis et divum Augustum et Tiberium Caesarem ad deos isse. Hunc si interrogaveris, soli narrabit: coram pluribus nunquam verbum faciet. Nam ex quo in senatu iuravit se Drusillam vidisse caelum ascendentem et illi pro tam bono nuntio nemo credidit, quod viderit, verbis conceptis affirmavit se non indicaturum, etiam si in medio foro hominem occisum vidisset. Ab hoc ego quae tum audiui, certa clara afferō, ita illum salvum et felicem habeam.

[2] Iam Phoebus breviorē via contraxerat arcum lucis, et obscuri crescebant tempora somni, iamque suum victrix augebat Cynthia regnum, et deformis hiemps gratos carpebat honores divitis autumnī, iussoque senescere Baccho carpebat raras serus vindemitor uvas.

Puto magis intellegi, si dixerō: mensis erat October, dies III idus Octobris. Horam non possum certam tibi dicere, facilius inter philosophos quam inter horologia conveniet, tamen inter sextam et septimam erat. Nimis rustice! <Adeo his> adquiescunt omnes poetae, non contenti ortus et occasus describere ut etiam medium diem inquietent, tu sic transibis horam tam bonam?

Iam medium curru Phoebus diviserat orbem:
et propior nocti fessas quatiebat habenas
obliquo flexam deducens tramite lucem:

Claudius animam agere coepit nec invenire exitum poterat.

[3] Tum Mercurius, qui semper ingenio eius delectatus esset, unam e tribus Parcis seducit et ait: “Quid, femina crudelissima, hominem miserum torqueri pateris? Nec unquam tam diu cruciatus cesset? Annus sexagesimus [et] quartus est, ex quo cum anima luctatur. Quid huic et rei publicae invides? Patere mathematicos aliquando verum dicere, qui illum, ex quo princeps factus est, omnibus annis, omnibus mensibus efferunt. Et tamen non est mirum si errant et horam eius nemo novit; nemo enim unquam illum natum putavit. Fac quod faciendum est:

Sed Clotho “ego mehercules” inquit “pusillum temporis adicere illi volebam, dum hos pauculos, qui supersunt, civitate donaret (constituerat enim omnes Graecos, Gallos, Hispanos, Britannos togatos videre), sed quoniam placet aliquos peregrinos in semen relinqui et tu ita iubes fieri, fiat.” Aperit tum capsulam et tres fusos profert: unus erat Augurini, alter Babae, tertius Claudii. “Hos” inquit “tres uno anno exiguis intervallis temporum divisos mori iubebo, nec illum incommittam. Non oportet enim eum, qui modo se tot milia hominum sequentia videbat, tot praecedentia, tot circumfusa, subito solum destitui. Contentus erit his interim convictoribus.”

[4] Haec ait et turpi convolvens stamina fuso abrupit stolidae regalia tempora vitae.

At Lachesis redimita comas, ornata capillos, Pieria crinem lauro frontemque coronans, candida de niveo subtemina vellere sumit felici moderanda manu, quae ducta colorem assumpsere novum. Mirantur pensa sorores:
mutatur vilis pretioso lana metallo, aurea formoso descendunt saecula filo.

Nec modus est illis, felicia vellera ducunt et gaudent implere manus, sunt dulcia pensa.

Sponte sua festinat opus nulloque labore mollia contorto descendunt stamina fuso.
Vincunt Tithoni, vincunt et Nestoris annos.
Phoebus adest cantuque iuvat gaudetque futuris, et laetus nunc plectra movet, nunc pensa ministrat.
Detinet intentas cantu fallitque laborem.
Dumque nimis citharam fraternaue carmina laudant, plus solito nevere manus, humanaue fata laudatum transcendit opus. “Ne demite, Parcae” Phoebus ait “vincat mortalis tempora vitae ille, mihi similis vultu similisque decore nec cantu nec voce minor. Felicia lassis saecula praestabit legumque silentia rumpet.
Qualis discutiens fugientia Lucifer astra aut qualis surgit redeuntibus Hesperus astris, qualis cum primum tenebris Aurora solutis induxit rubicunda diem, Sol aspicit orbem lucidus, et primos a carcere concitat axes:
talis Caesar adest, talem iam Roma Neronem aspiciet. Flagrat nitidus fulgore remisso vultus, et adfuso cervix formosa capillo.”

Haec Apollo. At Lachesis, quae et ipsa homini formosissimo faveret, fecit illud plena manu, et Neroni multos annos de suo donat.
Claudium autem iubent omnes χαίροντας, εὐφημοῦντας ἐκπέμπειν δόμων.

Et ille quidem animam ebulliit, et ex eo desiit vivere videri.
Exspiravit autem dum comoedos audit, ut scias me non sine causa illos timere. Ultima vox eius haec inter homines audita est, cum maiores sonitum emisisset illa parte, qua facilius loquebatur: “vae me, puto, concacavi me.” Quod an fecerit, nescio: omnia certe concacavit.

[5] Quae in terris postea sint acta, supervacuum est referre. Scitis enim optime, nec periculum est ne excidant memoriae quae gaudium publicum impresserit: nemo felicitatis suae obliviscitur. In caelo quae acta sint, audite: fides penes auctorem erit. Nuntiatur Iovi venisse quendam bonae staturae, bene canum; nescio quid illum minari, assidue enim caput movere; pedem dextrum trahere. Quaesisse se, cuius nationis esset: respondisse nescio quid perturbato sono et voce confusa; non intellegere se linguam eius, nec Graecum esse nec Romanum nec ullius gentis notae. Tum Iuppiter Herculem, qui totum orbem terrarum pererraverat et nosse videbatur omnes nationes, iubet ire et explorare, quorum hominum esset. Tum Hercules primo aspectu sane perturbatus est, ut qui etiam non omnia monstra timuerit. Ut vidit novi generis faciem, insolitum incessum, vocem nullius terrestris animalis sed qualis esse marinis beluis solet, raucam et implicatam, putavit sibi tertium decimum laborem venisse. Diligentius intuenti visus est quasi homo. Accessit itaque et quod facillimum fuit Graeculo, ait:

τίς πόθεν εἰς ἀνδρῶν, ποίη πόλις ἡδὲ τοκῆες;

Claudius gaudet esse illic philologos homines, sperat futurum aliquem historiis suis locum. Itaque et ipse Homérico versu Caesarem se esse significans ait:

Ἰλιόθεν με φέρων ἄνεμος Κικόνεσσι πέλασσευ

Erat autem sequens versus verior, aequae Homericus:

ἔνθα δ' ἐγὼ πόλιν ἔπραθον, ὤλεσα δ' αὐτούς.

[6] Et imposuerat Herculi minime vafro nisi fuisset illic Febris, quae fano suo relicto sola cum illo venerat: ceteros omnes deos Romae reliquerat. “Iste “ inquit “mera mendacia narrat. Ego tibi dico, quae cum illo tot annis vixi: Luguduni natus est, Marci municipem vides. Quod tibi narro, ad sextum decimum lapidem natus est a Vienna, Gallus germanus. Itaque quod Gallum facere oportebat, Romam cepit. Hunc ego tibi recipio Luguduni natum, ubi Licinus multis annis regnavit. Tu autem, qui plura loca calcasti quam ullus mulio perpetuarius, Lugudunenses scire debes, et multa milia inter Xanthum et Rhodanum interesse.” Excandescit hoc loco Claudius et quanto potest murmure irascitur. Quid diceret, nemo intellegebat, ille autem Febrim duci iubebat, illo gestu solutae manus et ad hoc unum satis firmæ, quo decollare homines solebat, iusserat illi collum praecidi. Putares omnes illius esse libertos: adeo illum nemo curabat.

[7] Tum Hercules “audi me” inquit “tu desine fatuari. Venisti huc, ubi mures ferrum rodunt. Citius mihi verum, ne tibi alogias excutiam.” Et quo terribilior esset, tragicus fit et ait:

“Exprome propere, sede qua genitus cluas, hoc ne peremptus stipite ad terram accidas;
haec clava reges saepe mactavit feros.
Quid nunc profatu vocis incerto sonas?
Quae patria, quae gens mobile eduxit caput?
Edissere. Equidem regna tergemini petens longinqua regis, unde ab Hesperio mari Inachiam ad urbem nobile advexi pecus, vidi duobus imminens fluviis iugum, quod Phoebus ortu semper obverso videt,
ubi Rhodanus ingens amne praerapido fluit, Ararque dubitans, quo suos cursus agat, tacitus quietis adluit ripas vadis.
Estne illa tellus spiritus altrix tui?”

Haec satis animose et fortiter, nihilo minus mentis suae non est et timet $\mu\omega\rho\omicron\upsilon\ \pi\lambda\eta\gamma\acute{\eta}\nu$. Claudius ut vidit virum valentem, oblitus nugarum intellexit neminem Romae sibi parem fuisse, illic non habere se idem gratiae: gallum in suo sterquilino plurimum posse. Itaque quantum intellegi potuit, haec visus est dicere: “Ego te, fortissime deorum Hercule, speravi mihi adfuturum apud alios, et si qui a me notorem petisset, te fui nominaturus, qui me optime nosti. Nam si memoria repetis, ego eram qui tibi ante templum tuum ius dicebam totis diebus mense Iulio et Augusto. Tu scis, quantum illic miseriarum tulerim, cum causidicos audirem diem et noctem, in quod si incidisses, valde fortis licet tibi videaris, maluisses cloacas Augeae purgare: multo plus ego stercoris exhausti. “Sed quoniam volo” . . . [lacuna]

[8] . . . “non mirum quod in curiam impetum fecisti: nihil tibi clausi est. Modo dic nobis, qualem deum istum fieri velis. Ἐπικούρειος θεός non potest esse: οὔτε αὐτὸς πρᾶγμα ἔχει τι οὔτε ἄλλοις παρέχει; Stoicus? Quomodo potest ‘rotundus’ esse, ut ait Varro, ‘sine capite, sine praeputio’? Est aliquid in illo Stoici dei, iam video: nec cor nec caput habet. Si mehercules a Saturno petisset hoc beneficium, cuius mensem toto anno celebravit, Saturnalicus princeps, non tulisset illud, nedum ab Iove, quem quantum quidem in illo fuit, damnavit incesti. Silanum enim generum suum occidit

propterea quod sororem suam, festivissimam omnium puellarum, quam omnes Venerem vocarent, maluit Iunonem vocare. ‘Quare’ inquis’ quaero enim, sororem suam?’ Stulte, stude : Athenis dimidium licet, Alexandriae totum. ‘Quia Romae’ inquis ‘mures molas lingunt.’ Hic nobis curva corrigit? quid in cubiculo suo faciat, nescio, et iam ‘caeli scrutatur plagas’? Deus fieri vult: parum est quod templum in Britannia habet, quod hunc barbari colunt et ut deum orant $\mu\omega\rho\omicron\tilde{\upsilon}\ \epsilon\upsilon\iota\lambda\acute{\alpha}\tau\omicron\upsilon\ \tau\upsilon\chi\epsilon\tilde{\iota}\nu;$ ”

[9] Tandem Iovi venit in mentem, privatis intra curiam morantibus [senatoribus non licere] sententiam dicere nec disputare. “Ego” inquit “p. c. interrogare vobis permiseram, vos mera mapalia fecistis. Volo ut servetis disciplinam curiae. Hic qualiscunque est, quid de nobis existimabit? Illo dimisso primus interrogatur sententiam Ianus pater. Is designatus erat in kal. Iulias postmeridianus consul, homo quantumvis vafer, qui semper videt a ἅμα πρόσσω καὶ ὀπίσσω. Is multa diserte, quod in foro vivebat, dixit, quae notarius persequi non potuit, et ideo non refero, ne aliis verbis ponam, quae ab illo dicta sunt. Multa dixit de magnitudine deorum: non debere hunc vulgo dari honorem. “Olim” inquit “magna res erat deum fieri: iam Fabam mimum fecistis. Itaque ne videar in personam, non in rem dicere sententiam, censeo ne quis post hunc diem deus fiat ex his, qui ἀρούρης καρπὸν ἔδουσιν aut ex his, quos alit ζείδωρος ἄρουρα. Qui contra hoc senatus consultum deus factus, dictus pictusve erit, eum dedi Larvis et proximo munere inter novos auctoratos ferulis vapulare placet.” Proximus interrogatur sententiam Diespiter Vicae Potae filius, et ipse designatus consul, nummulariolus: hoc quaestu se sustinebat, vendere civitatulas solebat. Ad hunc belle accessit Hercules et auriculam illi tetigit. Censet itaque in haec verba: “Cum divus Claudius et divum Augustum sanguine contingat nec minus divam Augustam aviam suam, quam ipse deam esse iussit, longeque omnes mortales sapientia antecellat, sitque e re publica esse aliquem qui cum Romulo possit ‘ferventia rapa vorare,’ censeo uti divus Claudius ex hac die deus sit, ita uti ante eum qui optimo iure factus sit, eamque rem ad Metamorphosis Ovidi adiciendam.” Varias erant sententiae, et videbatur Claudius sententiam vincere. Hercules enim, qui videret ferrum suum in igne esse, modo huc modo illuc cursabat et aiebat: “Noli mihi invidere, mea res agitur: deinde tu si quid

[10] Tunc divus Augustus surrexit sententiae suae loco dicendae, et summa facundia disseruit: “Ego” inquit “p.c. vos testes habeo, ex quo deus factus sum, nullum me verbum fecisse: semper meum negotium ago. Sed non possum amplius dissimulare, et dolorem, quem graviorem pudor facit, continere. In hoc terra marique pacem peperī? Ideo civilia bella compescui? Ideo legibus urbem fundavi, operibus ornavi, ut — quid dicam p. c. non invenio: omnia infra indignationem verba sunt. Confugiendum est itaque ad Messalae Corvini, disertissimi viri, illam sententiam ‘pudet imperii.’ Hic, p.c., qui vobis non posse videtur muscam excitare, tam facile homines occidebat, quam canis adsidit. Sed quid ego de tot ac talibus viris dicam? Non vacat deflere publicas clades intuenti domestica mala. Itaque illa omittam, haec referam; nam etiam si soror mea Graece nescit, ego scio: ἔγγιον γόνυ κνήμης. Iste quem videtis, per tot annos sub meo nomine latens, hanc mihi gratiam rettulit, ut duas Iulias proneptes meas occideret, alteram ferro, alteram fame; unum abnepotem L. Silanum, videris, Iuppiter, an in causa mala, certe in tua, si aequus futurus es. Dic mihi, dive Claudī, quare quemquam ex his, quos quasque occidisti, antequam de causa cognosceres, antequam audires, damnasti? Hoc ubi fieri solet? In caelo non fit.

et iratus fuit uxori et suspendit illam: numquid occidit? Tu Messalinam, cuius aequae avunculus maior eram quam tuus, occidisti. ‘Nescio’ inquis. Di tibi male faciant: adeo istuc turpius est, quod nescisti, quam quod occidisti. C. Caesarem non desiit mortuum persequi. Occiderat ille socerum: hic et generum. Gaius Crassi filium vetuit Magnum vocari: hic nomen illi reddidit, caput tulit. Occidit in una domo Crassum, Magnum, Scriboniam, +Tristionias, Assarionem, + nobiles tamen, Crassum vero tam fatuum, ut etiam regnare posset. Hunc nunc deum facere vultis? Videte corpus eius dis iratis natum. Ad summam, tria verba cito dicat, et servum me ducat. Hunc deum quis colet? Quis credet? Dum tales deos facitis, nemo vos deos esse credet. Summa rei, p. c., si honeste [me] inter vos gessi, si nulli clarius respondi, vindicate iniurias meas. Ego pro sententia mea hoc censeo:” atque ita ex tabella recitavit: “quandoquidem divus Claudius occidit socerum suum Appium Silanum, generos duos Magnum Pompeium et L. Silanum, socerum filiae suae Crassum Frugi, hominem tam similem sibi quam ovo ovum, Scriboniam socrum filiae suae, uxorem suam Messalinam et ceteros quorum numerus iniri non potuit, placet mihi in eum severe animadverti, nec illi rerum iudicandarum vacationem dari, eumque quam primum exportari, et caelo intra triginta dies excedere, Olympo intra diem tertium.” Pedibus in hanc sententiam itum est. Nec mora, Cyllenius illum collo obtorto trahit ad inferos, [a caelo]

[12] Dum descendunt per viam sacram, interrogat Mercurius, quid sibi velit ille concursus hominum, num Claudii funus esset. Et erat omnium formosissimum et impensa cura, plane ut scires deum efferri: tubicinum, cornicinum, omnis generis aenatorum tanta turba, tantus concentus, ut etiam Claudius audire posset. Omnes laeti, hilares: populus Romanus ambulabat tanquam liber, Agatho et pauci causidici plorabant, sed plane ex animo. Iurisconsulti e tenebris procedebant, pallidi, graciles, vix animam habentes, tanquam qui tum maxime reviviscerent. Ex his unus cum vidisset capita conferentes et fortunas suas deplorantes causidicos, accedit et ait: “dicebam vobis: non semper Saturnalia erunt.” Claudius ut vidit funus suum, intellexit se mortuum esse. Ingenti enim μεγάλῳ χορικῷ nenia cantabatur anapaestis:

“Fundite fletus, edite planctus, resonet tristi clamore forum:
cecidit pulchre cordatus homo quo non alius fuit in toto fortior orbe.
Ille citato vincere cursu poterat celeres, ille rebelles fundere Parthos levibusque sequi Persida telis, certaue manu tendere nervum, qui praecipites vulnere parvo figeret hostes, pictaque Medi terga fugacis.

Ille Britannos ultra noti
litora ponti et caeruleos scuta Brigantas dare Romuleis colla catenis iussit et ipsum nova Romanae iura securis tremere Oceanum.
Deflete virum, quo non alius potuit citius discere causas, una tantum parte audita, saepe et neutra. Quis nunc iudex toto lites audiet anno?
Tibi iam cedit sede relictā, qui dat populo iura silenti, Cretaea tenens oppida centum.
Caedite maestis pectora palmis,
O causicidi, venale genus.
Vosque poetae lugete novi, vosque in primis qui concusso magna parastis lucra fritillo.”

[13] Delectabatur laudibus suis Claudius, et cupiebat diutius spectare. Inicit illi manum Talthybius deorum [nuntius] et trahit capite obvoluto, ne quis eum possit agnoscere, per campum Martium, et inter Tiberim et viam tectam descendit ad inferos. Antecesserat iam compendiarium Narcissus libertus ad patronum excipiendum, et venienti nitidus, ut erat a balineo, occurrit et ait: “Quid di ad homines?” “Celerius” inquit Mercurius “et venire nos nuntia.” Dicto citius Narcissus evolat. Omnia proclivia sunt, facile descenditur. Itaque quamvis podagricus esset, momento temporis pervenit ad ianuam Ditis, ubi iacebat Cerberus vel ut ait Horatius “belua centiceps.” Pusillum perturbatur — subalbam canem in deliciis habere adsueverat — ut illum vidit canem nigrum, villosum, sane non quem velis tibi in tenebris occurrere, et magna voce “Claudius” inquit “veniet.” Cum plausu procedunt cantantes: εὐρήκαμεν, συγχάλομεν. Hic erat C. Silius consul designatus, Iuncus praetorius, Sex. Traulus, M. Helvius, Trogus, Cotta, Vettius Valens, Fabius equites R. quos Narcissus duci iusserat. Medius erat in hac cantantium turba Mnester pantomimus, quem Claudius decoris causa minorem fecerat. Ad Messalinam — cito rumor percrebuit Claudium venisse — convolant: primi omnium liberti Polybius, Myron, Arpocras, Amphaeus, Pheronactus, quos Claudius omnes, necubi imparatus esset, praemiseraat. Deinde praefecti duo Iustus Catonius et Rufrius Pollio. Deinde amici Saturninus Lusius et Pedit Pompeius et Lupus et Celer Asinius consulares. Novissime fratris filia, sororis filia, generi, soceri, socrus, omnes plane consanguinei. Et agmine facto Claudio occurrunt. Quos cum vidisset Claudius, exclamat πάντα φίλων πλήρη quomodo huc venistis vos?” Tum Pedit Pompeius: “Quid dicis, homo crudelissime? Quaeris, quomodo? Quis enim nos alius huc misit quam tu, omnium amicorum interfector? In ius eamus, ego tibi hic sellas ostendam.”

lusuro similis semper semperque petenti, decepere fidem: refugit digitosque per ipsos fallax adsiduo dilabitur alea furto.
Sic cum iam summi tanguntur culmina montis, irrita Sisyphio volvantur pondera collo.

Apparuit subito C. Caesar et petere illum in servitutem coepit; producit testes, qui illum viderant ab illo flagris, ferulis, colaphis vapulantem. Adiudicatur C. Caesari; Caesar illum Aeaco donat. Is Menandro liberto suo tradidit, ut a cognitionibus esset.

1. * * * nobis magno consensu uitia commendant. Licet nihil aliud quod sit salutare temptemus, proderit tamen per se ipsum secedere: meliores erimus singuli. Quid quod secedere ad optimos uiros et aliquod exemplum eligere ad quod uitam derigamus licet? Quod <nisi> in otio non fit: tunc potest optineri quod semel placuit, ubi nemo interuenit qui iudicium adhuc inbecillum populo adiutore detorqueat; tunc potest uita aequali et uno tenore procedere, quam propositis diuersissimis scindimus. 2. Nam inter cetera mala illud pessimum est, quod uitia ipsa mutamus. Sic ne hoc quidem nobis contingit, permanere in malo iam familiari. Aliud ex alio placet uexatque nos hoc quoque, quod iudicia nostra non tantum praua sed etiam leuia sunt: fluctuamur aliudque ex alio comprehendimus, petita relinquimus, relictas repetimus, alternas inter cupiditatem nostram et paenitentiam uices sunt. 3. Pendemus enim toti ex alienis iudiciis et id optimum nobis uidetur quod petitores laudatoresque multos habet, non id quod laudandum petendumque est, nec uiam bonam ac malam per se aestimamus sed turba uestigiorum, in quibus nulla sunt redeuntium.

4. Dices mihi: 'quid ais, Seneca? deseris partes? Certe Stoici uestri dicunt: "usque ad ultimum uitae finem in actu erimus, non desinemus communi bono operam dare, adiuuare singulos, opem ferre etiam inimicis senili manu. Nos sumus qui nullis annis uacationem damus et, quod ait ille uir disertissimus,

nos sumus apud quos usque eo nihil ante mortem otiosum est ut, si res patitur, non sit ipsa mors otiosa." Quid nobis Epicuri praecepta in ipsis Zenonis principiis loqueris? Quin tu bene gnauiter, si partium piget, transfugis potius quam prodis?' 5. Hoc tibi in praesentia respondebo: 'numquid uis amplius quam ut me similem ducibus meis praestem? Quid ergo est? non quo miserint me illi, sed quo duxerint ibo.'

II.

1. Nunc probabo tibi non desciscere me a praeceptis Stoicorum; nam ne ipsi quidem a suis descuerunt, et tamen excusatissimus essem, etiam si non praecepta illorum sequerer sed exempla. Hoc quod dico in duas diuidam partes: primum, ut possit aliquis uel a prima aetate contemplationi ueritatis totum se tradere, rationem uiuendi quaerere atque exercere secreto; 2. deinde, ut possit hoc aliquis emeritis stipendiis, profligatae aetatis, iure optimo facere et ~ad alios actus animos~ referre, uirginum Vestalium more, quae annis inter officia diuisis discunt facere sacra et cum didicerunt docent.

III.

1. Hoc Stoicis quoque placere ostendam, non quia mihi legem dixerim nihil contra dictum Zenonis Chrysippiae committere, sed quia res ipsa patitur me ire in illorum sententiam, quoniam si quis semper unius sequitur, non in curia sed in factione est. Vtinam quidem iam tenerentur omnia et in aperto et confesso ueritas esset nihilque ex decretis mutaremus! nunc ueritatem cum eis ipsis qui docent quaerimus.

2. Duae maxime et in hac re dissident sectae, Epicureorum et Stoicorum, sed utraque ad otium diuersa uia mittit. Epicurus ait: ‘non accedet ad rem publicam sapiens, nisi si quid interuenerit’; Zenon ait: ‘accedet ad rem publicam, nisi si quid impedierit.’ 3. Alter otium ex proposito petit, alter ex causa; causa autem illa late patet. Si res publica corruptior est quam <ut> adiuuari possit, si occupata est malis, non nitetur sapiens in superuacuum nec se nihil profuturus inpendet; si parum habebit auctoritatis aut uirium nec illum erit admissura res publica, si ualetudo illum impediet, quomodo nauem quassam non deduceret in mare, quomodo nomen in militiam non daret debilis, sic ad iter quod inhabile sciet non accedet. 4. Potest ergo et ille cui omnia adhuc in integro sunt, antequam ullas experiatur tempestates, in tuto subsistere et protinus commendare se bonis artibus et inlibatum otium exigere, uirtutum cultor, quae exerceri etiam quietissimis possunt. 5. Hoc nempe ab homine exigitur, ut prosit hominibus, si fieri potest, multis, si minus, paucis, si minus, proximis, si minus, sibi. Nam cum se utilem ceteris efficit, commune agit negotium. Quomodo qui se deteriorem facit non sibi tantummodo nocet sed etiam omnibus eis quibus melior factus prodesse potuisset, sic quisquis bene de se meretur hoc ipso aliis prodest quod illis profuturum parat.

IV.

1. Duas res publicas animo complectamur, alteram magnam et uere publicam qua di atque homines continentur, in qua non ad hunc angulum respicimus aut ad illum sed terminos ciuitatis nostrae cum sole metimur, alteram cui nos adscripsit condicio nascendi; haec aut Atheniensium erit aut Carthaginiensium aut alterius alicuius urbis quae non ad omnis pertineat homines sed ad certos. Quidam eodem tempore utrique rei publicae dant operam, maiori minorique, quidam tantum minori, quidam tantum maiori. 2. Huic maiori rei publicae et in otio deseruire possumus, immo uero nescio an in otio melius, ut quaeramus quid sit uirtus, una pluresne sint, natura an ars bonos uiros faciat; unum sit hoc quod maria terrasque et mari ac terris inserta complectitur, an multa eiusmodi corpora deus sparserit; continua sit omnis et plena materia ex qua cuncta gignuntur, an diducta et solidis inane permixtum; quae sit dei sedes, opus suum spectet an tractet, utrumne extrinsecus illi circumfusus sit an toti inditus; immortalis sit mundus an inter caduca et ad tempus nata numerandus. Haec qui contemplatur, quid deo praestat? ne tanta eius opera sine teste sint.

V.

1. Solemus dicere summum bonum esse secundum naturam uiuere: natura nos ad utrumque genuit, et contemplationi rerum et actioni. Nunc id probemus quod prius diximus. Quid porro? hoc non erit probatum, si se unusquisque consuluerit quantam cupidinem habeat ignota noscendi, quam ad omnis fabulas excitetur? 2. Nauigant quidam et labores peregrinationis longissimae una mercede perpetiuntur cognoscendi aliquid abditum remotumque. Haec res ad spectacula populos contrahit, haec cogit praeclusa rimari, secretiora exquirere, antiquitates euoluere, mores barbararum audire gentium. 3. Curiosum nobis natura ingenium dedit et artis sibi ac pulchritudinis suae conscia spectatores nos tantis rerum spectaculis genuit, perditura fructum sui, si tam magna, tam clara, tam subtiliter ducta, tam nitida et non uno genere formosa solitudini ostenderet. 4. Vt scias illam spectari uoluisse, non tantum aspici, uide quem nobis locum dederit: in media nos sui parte constituit et circumspectum omnium nobis dedit; nec erexit tantummodo hominem, sed etiam habilem contemplationis factura, ut ab ortu sidera in occasum labentia prosequi posset et uultum suum circumferre cum toto, sublime fecit illi caput et collo flexili inposuit; deinde sena per diem, sena per noctem signa producens nullam non partem sui explicuit, ut per haec quae optulerat oculis eius cupiditatem faceret etiam ceterorum. 5. Nec enim omnia nec tanta uisimus quanta sunt, sed acies nostra aperit sibi inuestigandi uiam et fundamenta uero iacit, ut inquisitio transeat ex apertis in obscura et aliquid ipso mundo inueniat antiquius: unde ista sidera exierint; quis fuerit uniuersi status, antequam singula in partes discederent; quae ratio mersa et confusa diduxerit; quis loca rebus adsignauerit, suapte natura grauia descenderint, euolauerint leuia, an praeter nisum pondusque corporum altior aliqua uis legem singulis dixerit; an illud uerum sit quo maxime probatur homines diuini esse spiritus, partem ac ueluti scintillas quasdam astrorum in terram desiluisse atque alieno loco haesisse. 6. Cogitatio nostra caeli munimenta perrumpit nec contenta est id quod ostenditur scire: ‘illud’ inquit ‘scrutor quod ultra mundum iacet, utrumne profunda uastitas sit an et hoc ipsum terminis suis cludatur; qualis sit habitus exclusis, informia et confusa sint, [an] in omnem partem tantundem loci optinentia, an et illa in aliquem cultum discripta sint; huic cohaereant mundo, an longe ab hoc secesserint et hic in uacuo uolutetur; indiuidua sint per quae struitur omne quod natum futurumque est, an continua eorum materia sit et per totum mutabilis; utrum contraria inter se elementa sint, an non pugnent sed per diuersa conspirent.’ 7. Ad haec quaerenda natus, aestima quam non multum acceperit temporis, etiam si illud totum sibi uindicat. Qui licet nihil facilitate eripi, nihil neglegentia patiatur excidere, licet horas suas auarissime seruet et usque in ultimum aetatis humanae terminum procedat nec quicquam illi ex eo quod natura constituit fortuna concutiat, tamen homo ad immortalium cognitionem nimis mortalis est. 8. Ergo secundum naturam uiuo si totum me illi dedi, si illius admirator cultorque sum. Natura autem utrumque facere me uoluit, et agere et contemplationi uacare: utrumque facio, quoniam ne contemplatio quidem sine actione est.

VI.

1. 'Sed refert' inquis 'an ad illam uoluptatis causa accesseris, nihil aliud ex illa petens quam adsiduam contemplationem sine exitu; est enim dulcis et habet inlecebras suas.' Aduersus hoc tibi respondeo: aequè refert quo animo ciuilem agas uitam, an semper inquietus sis nec tibi umquam sumas ullum tempus quo ab humanis ad diuina respicias. 2. Quomodo res adpetere sine ullo uirtutum amore et sine cultu ingeni ac nudas edere operas minime probabile est (misceri enim ista inter se et conseri debent), sic imperfectum ac languidum bonum est in otium sine actu proiecta uirtus, numquam id quod didicit ostendens. 3. Quis negat illam debere profectus suos in opere temptare, nec tantum quid faciendum sit cogitare sed etiam aliquando manum exercere et ea quae meditata est ad uerum perducere? Quodsi per ipsum sapientem non est mora, si non actor deest sed agenda desunt, ecquid illi secum esse permittes? 4. Quo animo ad otium sapiens secedit? ut sciat se tum quoque ea acturum per quae posteris prosit. Nos certe sumus qui dicimus et Zenonem et Chrysippum maiora egisse quam si duxissent exercitus, gessissent honores, leges tulissent; quas non uni ciuitati, sed toti humano generi tulerunt. Quid est ergo quare tale otium non conueniat uiro bono, per quod futura saecula ordinet nec apud paucos contionetur sed apud omnis omnium gentium homines, quique sunt quique erunt? 5. Ad summam, quaero an ex praeceptis suis uixerint Cleanthes et Chrysippus et Zenon. <Non> dubie respondebis sic illos uixisse quemadmodum dixerant esse uiuendum: atqui nemo illorum rem publicam administrauit. 'Non fuit' inquis 'illis aut ea fortuna aut ea dignitas quae admitti ad publicarum rerum tractationem solet.' Sed idem nihilominus non segnem egere uitam: inuenerunt quemadmodum plus quies ipsorum hominibus prodesset quam aliorum discursus et sudor. Ergo nihilominus hi multum egisse uisi sunt, quamuis nihil publice agerent.

1. Praeterea tria genera sunt uitae, inter quae quod sit optimum quaeri solet: unum uoluptati uacat, alterum contemplationi, tertium actioni. Primum deposita contentione depositoque odio quod inplacabile diuersa sequentibus indiximus, uideamus ut haec omnia ad idem sub alio atque alio titulo perueniant: nec ille qui uoluptatem probat sine contemplatione est, nec ille qui contemplationi inseruit sine uoluptate est, nec ille cuius uita actionibus destinata est sine contemplatione est. 2. 'Plurimum' inquis 'discriminis est utrum aliqua res propositum sit an propositi alterius accessio.' Sit sane grande discrimen, tamen alterum sine altero non est: nec ille sine actione contemplatur, nec hic sine contemplatione agit, nec ille tertius, de quo male existimare consensimus, uoluptatem inertem probat sed eam quam ratione efficit firmam sibi; ita et haec ipsa uoluptaria secta in actu est. 3. Quidni in actu sit, cum ipse dicat Epicurus aliquando se recessurum a uoluptate, dolorem etiam adpetiturum, si aut uoluptati imminebit paenitentia aut dolor minor pro grauiore sumetur? 4. Quo pertinet haec dicere? ut appareat contemplationem placere omnibus; alii petunt illam, nobis haec statio, non portus est.

VIII.

1. Adice nunc [huc] quod e lege Chrysippi uiuere otioso licet: non dico ut otium patiat, sed ut eligat. Negant nostri sapientem ad quamlibet rem publicam accessurum; quid autem interest quomodo sapiens ad otium ueniat, utrum quia res publica illi deest an quia ipse rei publicae, si omnibus defutura res publica est? Semper autem deerit fastidiose quaerentibus. 2. Interrogo ad quam rem publicam sapiens sit accessurus. Ad Atheniensium, in qua Socrates damnatur, Aristoteles ne damnetur fugit? in qua opprimit inuidia uirtutes? Negabis mihi accessurum ad hanc rem publicam sapientem. Ad Carthaginiensium ergo rem publicam sapiens accedet, in qua adsidua seditio et optimo cuique infesta libertas est, summa aequi ac boni uilitas, aduersus hostes inhumana crudelitas, etiam aduersus suos hostilis? Et hanc fugiet. 3. Si percensere singulas uolueris, nullam inueniam quae sapientem aut quam sapiens pati possit. Quodsi non inuenitur illa res publica quam nobis fingimus, incipit omnibus esse otium necessarium, quia quod unum praeferri poterat otio nusquam est. 4. Si quis dicit optimum esse nauigare, deinde negat nauigandum in eo mari in quo naufragia fieri soleant et frequenter subitae tempestates sint quae rectorem in contrarium rapiant, puto hic me uetat nauem soluere, quamquam laudet nauigationem. * * *

1. Scribere de clementia, Nero Caesar, institui, ut quodam modo speculi vice fungerer et te tibi ostenderem perventurum ad voluptatem maximam omnium. Quamvis enim recte factorum verus fructus sit fecisse nec ullum virtutum pretium dignum illis extra ipsas sit, iuvat inspicere et circumire bonam conscientiam, tum immittere oculos in hanc immensam multitudinem discordem, seditiosam, impotentem, in perniciem alienam suamque pariter exsultaturam, si hoc iugum fregerit, et ita loqui secum: 2. 'Egone ex omnibus mortalibus placui electusque sum, qui in terris deorum vice fungerer? Ego vitae necisque gentibus arbiter; qualem quisque sortem statumque habeat, in mea manu positum est; quid cuique mortalium Fortuna datum velit, meo ore pronuntiat; ex nostro responso laetitiae causas populi urbesque concipiunt; nulla pars usquam nisi volente propitioque me floret; haec tot milia gladiatorum, quae pax mea comprimit, ad nutum meum stringentur; quas nationes funditus excidi, quas transportari, quibus libertatem dari, quibus eripi, quos reges mancipia fieri quorumque capiti regium circumdari decus oporteat, quae ruant urbes, quae oriantur, mea iuris dictio est. 3. In hac tanta facultate rerum non ira me ad iniqua supplicia compulit, non iuvenilis impetus, non temeritas hominum et contumacia, quae saepe tranquillissimis quoque pectoribus patientiam extorsit, non ipsa ostentandae per terrores potentiae dira, sed frequens magnis imperiis gloria. Conditum, immo constrictum apud me ferrum est, summa parsimonia etiam vilissimi sanguinis; nemo non, cui alia desunt, hominis nomine apud me gratosus est. 4. Severitatem abditam, at clementiam in procinctu habeo; sic me custodio, tamquam legibus, quas ex situ ac tenebris in lucem evocavi, rationem redditurus sim. Alterius aetate prima motus sum, alterius ultima; alium dignitati donavi, alium humilitati; quotiens nullam inveneram misericordiae causam, mihi peperci. Hodie dis immortalibus, si a me rationem repetant, adnumerare genus humanum paratus sum.'

5. Potes hoc, Caesar, audacter praedicare: omnia, quae in fidem tutelamque tuam venerunt, tuta haberi, nihil per te neque vi neque clam adimi rei publicae. Rarissimam laudem et nulli adhuc principum concessam concupisti innocentiam. Non perdit operam nec bonitas ista tua singularis ingratos aut malignos aestimatores nancta est. Refertur tibi gratia; nemo unus homo uni homini tam carus umquam fuit, quam tu populo Romano, magnum longumque eius bonum. 6. Sed ingens tibi onus imposuisti; nemo iam divum Augustum nec Ti. Caesaris prima tempora loquitur nec, quod te imitari velit, exemplar extra te quaerit; principatus tuus ad gustum exigitur. Difficile hoc fuisset, si non naturalis tibi ista bonitas esset, sed ad tempus sumpta. Nemo enim potest personam diu ferre, ficta cito in naturam suam recidunt; quibus veritas subest quaeque, ut ita dicam, ex solido enascuntur, tempore ipso in maius meliusque procedunt.

7. Magnam adibat aleam populus Romanus, cum incertum esset, quo se ista tua nobilis indoles daret; iam vota publica in tuto sunt; nec enim periculum est, ne te subita tui capiat oblivio. Facit quidem avidos nimia felicitas, nec tam temperatae cupiditates sunt umquam, ut in eo, quod contigit, desinant; gradus a magnis ad maiora fit, et spes improbissimas conplectuntur insperata adsecuti; omnibus tamen nunc civibus tuis et haec confessio exprimitur esse felices et illa nihil iam his accedere bonis posse, nisi ut perpetua sint. 8. Multa illos cogunt ad hanc confessionem, qua nulla in homine tardior est: securitas alta, adfluens, ius supra omnem iniuriam positum; obversatur oculis laetissima forma rei publicae, cui ad summam libertatem nihil deest nisi pereundi licentia. 9. Praecipue tamen aequalis ad maximos imosque pervenit clementiae tuae admiratio; cetera enim bona pro portione fortunae suae quisque sentit aut exspectat maiora minoraque, ex clementia omnes idem sperant; nec est quisquam, cui tam valde innocentia sua placeat, ut non stare in conspectu clementiam paratam humanis erroribus gaudeat.

II.

1. Esse autem aliquos scio, qui clementia pessimum quemque putent sustineri, quoniam nisi post crimen supervacua est et sola haec virtus inter innocentes cessat. Sed primum omnium, sicut medicinae apud aegros usus, etiam apud sanos honor est, ita clementiam, quamvis poena digni invocent, etiam innocentes colunt. Deinde habet haec in persona quoque innocentium locum, quia interim fortuna pro culpa est; nec innocentiae tantum clementia succurrit, sed saepe virtuti, quoniam quidem condicione temporum incidunt quaedam, quae possint laudata puniri. Adice, quod magna pars hominum est, quae reverti ad innocentiam possit, si poenae remissio fuerit>. 2. Non tamen volgo ignoscere decet; nam ubi discrimen inter malos bonosque sublatum est, confusio sequitur et vitiorum eruptio; itaque adhibenda moderatio est, quae sanabilia ingenia distinguere a deploratis sciat. Nec promiscuam habere ac volgarem clementiam oportet nec abscisam; nam tam omnibus ignoscere crudelitas quam nulli. Modum tenere debemus; sed quia difficile est temperamentum, quidquid aequo plus futurum est, in partem humaniorem praeponderet.

III.

1. Sed haec suo melius loco dicentur. Nunc in tres partes omnem hanc materiam dividam. Prima erit manumissionis; secunda, quae naturam clementiae habitumque demonstret: nam cum sint vitia quaedam virtutes imitantia, non possunt secerni, nisi signa, quibus dinoscantur, impresseris; tertio loco quaeremus, quomodo ad hanc virtutem perducatur animus, quomodo confirmet eam et usu suam faciat.

2. Nullam ex omnibus virtutibus homini magis convenire, cum sit nulla humanior, constet necesse est non solum inter nos, qui hominem sociale animal communi bono genitum videri volumus, sed etiam inter illos, qui hominem voluptati donant, quorum omnia dicta factaque ad utilitates suas spectant; nam si quietem petit et otium, hanc virtutem naturae suae nactus est, quae pacem amat et manus retinet. 3. Nullum tamen clementia ex omnibus magis quam regem aut principem decet. Ita enim magnae vires decori gloriaeque sunt, si illis salutaris potentia est; nam pestifera vis est valere ad nocendum. Illius demum magnitudo stabilis fundataque est, quem omnes tam supra se esse quam pro se sciunt, cuius curam excubare pro salute singulorum atque universorum cottidie experiuntur, quo procedente non, tamquam malum aliquod aut noxium animal e cubili prosilierit, diffugiunt, sed tamquam ad clarum ac beneficum sidus certatim advolant. Obicere se pro illo mucronibus insidiantium paratissimi et substernere corpora sua, si per stragem illi humanam iter ad salutem struendum sit, somnum eius nocturnis excubiis muniunt, latera obiecti circumfusique defendunt, incurrentibus periculis se opponunt.

4. Non est hic sine ratione populis urbibusque consensus sic protegendum amandique reges et se suaque iactandi, quocumque desideravit imperantis salus; nec haec vilitas sui est aut dementia pro uno capite tot milia excipere ferrum ac multis mortibus unam animam redimere nonnumquam senis et invalidi.

5. Quemadmodum totum corpus animo deservit et, cum hoc tanto maius tantoque speciosius sit, ille in occulto maneat tenuis et in qua sede latitet incertus, tamen manus, pedes, oculi negotium illi gerunt, illum haec cutis munit, illius iussu iacemus aut inquieti discurremus, cum ille imperavit, sive avarus dominus est, mare lucri causa scrutamur, sive ambitiosus, iam dudum dextram flammis obieci- mus aut voluntarii terram subsiluimus, sic haec immensa multitudo unius animae circumdata illius spiritu regitur, illius ratione flectitur pressura se ac fractura viribus suis, nisi consilio sustineretur.

IV.

1. Suam itaque incolumitatem amant, cum pro uno homine denas legiones in aciem deducunt, cum in primam frontem procurrunt et adversa vulneribus pectora ferunt, ne imperatoris sui signa vertantur. Ille est enim vinculum, per quod res publica cohaeret, ille spiritus vitalis, quem haec tot milia trahunt nihil ipsa per se futura nisi onus et praeda, si mens illa imperii subtrahatur.

Rege incolumi mens omnibus una;
amisso rupere fidem.

2. Hic casus Romanae pacis exitium erit, hic tanti fortunam populi in ruinas aget; tam diu ab isto periculo aberit hic populus, quam diu sciet ferre frenos, quos si quando abruperit vel aliquo casu discussos reponi sibi passus non erit, haec unitas et hic maximi imperii contextus in partes multas dissiliet, idemque huic urbi finis dominandi erit, qui parendi fuerit. 3. Ideo principes regesque et quocumque alio nomine sunt tutores status publici non est mirum amari ultra privatas etiam necessitudines; nam si sanis hominibus publica privatis potiora sunt, sequitur, ut is quoque carior sit, in quem se res publica convertit. Olim enim ita se induit rei publicae Caesar, ut seduci alterum non posset sine utriusque perniciem; nam et illi viribus opus est et huic capite.

V.

1. Longius videtur recessisse a proposito oratio mea, at mehercules rem ipsam premit. Nam si, quod adhuc colligit, tu animus rei publicae tuae es, illa corpus tuum, vides, ut puto, quam necessaria sit clementia; tibi enim parcis, cum videris alteri parcere. Parcendum itaque est etiam improbandis civibus non aliter quam membris languentibus, et, si quando misso sanguine opus est, sustinenda est manus, ne ultra, quam necesse sit, incidat. 2. Est ergo, ut dicebam, clementia omnibus quidem hominibus secundum naturam, maxime tamen decora imperatoribus, quanto plus habet apud illos, quod servet, quantoque in maiore materia apparet. Quantulum enim nocet privata crudelitas! principum saevitia bellum est. 3. Cum autem virtutibus inter se sit concordia nec ulla altera melior aut honestior sit, quaedam tamen quibusdam personis aptior est. Decet magnanimitas quemlibet mortalem, etiam illum, infra quem nihil est; quid enim maius aut fortius quam malam fortunam retundere? Haec tamen magnanimitas in bona fortuna laxiorem locum habet meliusque in tribunali quam in plano conspicitur.

4. Clementia, in quamcumque domum pervenerit, eam felicem tranquillamque praestabit, sed in regia, quo rarior, eo mirabilior. Quid enim est memorabilius quam eum, cuius irae nihil obstat, cuius graviori sententiae ipsi, qui pereunt, adsentiuntur, quem nemo interpellaturus est, immo, si vehementius excanduit, ne deprecaturus est quidem, ipsum sibi manum inicere et potestate sua in melius placidiusque uti hoc ipsum cogitantem: 'Occidere contra legem nemo non potest, servare nemo praeter me'? 5. Magnam fortunam magnus animus decet, qui, nisi se ad illam extulit et altior stetit, illam quoque infra ad terram deducit; magni autem animi proprium est placidum esse tranquillumque et iniurias atque offensiones superne despicere. Muliebre est furere in ira, ferarum vero nec generosarum quidem praemordere et urguere proiectos. Elephanti leonesque transeunt, quae impulerunt; ignobilis bestiae pertinacia est. 6. Non decet regem saeva nec inexorabilis ira, non multum enim supra eum eminet, cui se irascendo exaequat; at si dat vitam, si dat dignitatem periclitantibus et meritis amittere, facit, quod nulli nisi rerum potenti

VI.

1. Cogitato, in hac civitate, in qua turba per latissima itinera sine intermissione defluens eliditur, quotiens aliquid obstitit, quod cursum eius velut torrentis rapidi moraretur, in qua tribus eodem tempore theatris caveae postuluntur, in qua consumitur quicquid terris omnibus aratur, quanta solitudo ac vastitas futura sit, si nihil relinquitur, nisi quod iudex severus absolverit. 2. Quotus quisque ex quaesitoribus est, qui non ex ipsa ea lege teneatur, qua quaerit? quotus quisque accusator vacat culpa? Et nescio, an nemo ad dandam veniam difficilior sit, quam qui illam petere saepius meruit. 3. Peccavimus omnes, alii gravia, alii leviora, alii ex destinato, alii forte impulsu aut aliena nequitia ablati; alii in bonis consiliis parum fortiter stetimus et innocentiam inviti ac retinentes perdidimus; nec deliquimus tantum, sed usque ad extremum aevi delinquemus. 4. Etiam si quis tam bene iam purgavit animum, ut nihil obturbare eum amplius possit ac fallere, ad innocentiam tamen peccando pervenit.

VII.

1. Quoniam deorum feci mentionem, optime hoc exemplum principi constituam, ad quod formetur, ut se talem esse civibus, quales sibi deos velit. Expedit ergo habere inexorabilia peccatis atque erroribus numina, expedit usque ad ultimam infesta perniciem? Et quis regum erit tutus, cuius non membra haruspices colligant? 2. Quod si di placabiles et aequi delicta potentium non statim fulminibus persequuntur, quanto aequius est hominem hominibus praepositum miti animo exercere imperium et cogitare, uter mundi status gravior oculis pulchriorque sit, sereno et puro die, an cum fragoribus crebris omnia quatiuntur et ignes hinc atque illinc micant! Atqui non alia facies est quieti moratique imperii quam sereni caeli et nitentis. 3. Crudele regnum turbidum tenebrisque obscurum est, inter tremantes et ad repentinum sonitum expavescentes ne eo quidem, qui omnia perturbat, inconcusso. Facilius privatis ignoscitur pertinaciter se vindicantibus; possunt enim laedi, dolorque eorum ab iniuria venit; timent praeterea contemptum, et non rettulisse laedentibus gratiam infirmitas videtur, non clementia; at cui ultio in facili est, is omissa ea certam laudem mansuetudinis consequitur. 4. Humili loco positus exercere manum, litigare, in rixam procurrere ac morem irae suae gerere liberius est; leves inter paria ictus sunt; regi vociferatio quoque verborumque intemperantia non ex maiestate est.

VIII.

1. Grave putas eripi loquendi arbitrium regibus, quod humillimi habent. 'Ista' inquis 'servitus est, non imperium.' Quid? tu non experiris istud nobis esse, tibi servitutem? Alia condicio est eorum, qui in turba, quam non excedunt, latent, quorum et virtutes, ut appareant, diu luctantur et vitia tenebras habent; vestra facta dictaque rumor excipit, et ideo nullis magis curandum est, qualem famam habeant, quam qui, qualemcumque meruerint, magnam habituri sunt.

2. Quam multa tibi non licent, quae nobis beneficio tuo licent! Possum in qualibet parte urbis solus incedere sine timore, quamvis nullus sequatur comes, nullus sit domi, nullus ad latus gladius; tibi in tua pace armato vivendum est. Aberrare a fortuna tua non potes; obsidet te et, quocumque descendis, magno apparatu sequitur.

3. Est haec summae magnitudinis servitus non posse fieri minorem; sed cum dis tibi communis ipsa necessitas est. Nam illos quoque caelum adligatos tenet, nec magis illis descendere datum est quam tibi tutum: fastigio tuo adfixus es.

4. Nostros motus pauci sentiunt, prodire nobis ac recedere et mutare habitum sine sensu publico licet; tibi non magis quam soli latere contingit. Multa circa te lux est, omnium in istam conversi oculi sunt; prodire te putas? Oriris.

5. Loqui non potes, nisi ut vocem tuam, quae ubique sunt gentes, excipiant; irasci non potes, nisi ut omnia tremant, quia neminem adfligere, nisi ut, quidquid circa fuerit, quatiatur. Ut fulmina paucorum periculo cadunt, omnium metu, sic animadversiones magnarum potestatum terrent latius quam nocent, non sine causa; non enim, quantum fecerit, sed quantum facturus sit, cogitatur in eo, qui omnia potest.

6. Adice nunc, quod privatos homines ad accipiendas iniurias opportuno acceptarum patientia facit, regibus certior est ex mansuetudine securitas, quia frequens vindicta paucorum odium opprimit, omnium inritat.

7. Voluntas oportet ante saeviendi quam causa deficiat; alioqui, quemadmodum praecisae arbores plurimis ramis repullulant et multa satorum genera, ut densiora surgant, reciduntur, ita regia crudelitas auget inimicorum numerum tollendo; parentes enim liberique eorum, qui interfecti sunt, et propinqui et amici in locum singulorum succedunt.

IX.

1. Hoc quam verum sit, admonere te exemplo domestico volo. Divus Augustus fuit mitis princeps, si quis illum a principatu suo aestimare incipiat; in communi quidem rei publicae gladium movit. Cum hoc aetatis esset, quod tu nunc es, duodevicensimum egressus annum, iam pugiones in sinum amicorum absconderat, iam insidiis M. Antonii consulis latus petierat, iam fuerat collega proscriptionis. 2. Sed cum annum quadragensimum transisset et in Gallia moraretur, delatum est ad eum indicium L. Cinnae, stolidi ingenii virum, insidias ei struere; dictum est, et ubi et quando et quemadmodum adgredi vellet; unus ex consociis deferebat. 3. Constituit se ab eo vindicare et consilium amicorum advocari iussit. Nox illi inquieta erat, cum cogitaret adolescentem nobilem, hoc detracto integrum, Cn. Pompei nepotem, damnandum; iam unum hominem occidere non poterat, cui M. Antonius proscriptionis edictum inter cenam dictarat. 4. Gemens subinde voces varias emittebat et inter se contrarias: 'Quid ergo? Ego percussorem meum securum ambulare patiar me sollicito? Ergo non dabit poenas, qui tot civilibus bellis frustra petatum caput, tot navalibus, tot pedestribus proeliis incolume, postquam terra marique pax parata est, non occidere constituat, sed immolare?' (nam sacrificantem placuerat adorari.) 5. Rursus silentio interposito maiore multo voce sibi quam Cinnae irascebatur: 'Quid vivis, si perire te tam multorum interest? Quis finis erit suppliciorum? Quis sanguinis? Ego sum nobilibus adolescentulis expositum caput, in quod mucrones acuant; non est tanti vita, si, ut ego non peream, tam multa perdenda sunt.' 6. Interpellavit tandem illum Livia uxor et: 'Admittis' inquit 'muliebre consilium? Fac, quod medici solent, qui, ubi usitata remedia non procedunt, temptant contraria. Severitate nihil adhuc profecisti; Salvidienum Lepidus secutus est, Lepidum Murena, Murenam Caepio, Caepionem Egnatius, ut alios taceam, quos tantum ausos pudet. Nunc tempta, quomodo tibi cedat clementia; ignosce L. Cinnae. Deprensus est; iam nocere tibi non potest, prodesse famae tuae potest.' 7. Gavisus, sibi quod advocatum invenerat, uxori quidem gratias egit, renuntiari autem extemplo amicis, quos in consilium rogaverat, imperavit et

Cinnam unum ad se accersit dimissisque omnibus e cubiculo, cum alteram Cinnae poni cathedram iussisset: ‘Hoc’ inquit ‘primum a te peto, ne me loquentem interpelles, ne medio sermone meo proclames; dabitur tibi loquendi liberum tempus. 8. Ego te, Cinna, cum in hostium castris invenissem, non factum tantum mihi inimicum sed natum, servavi, patrimonium tibi omne concessi. Hodie tam felix et tam dives es, ut victo victores invideant. Sacerdotium tibi petenti praeteritis compluribus, quorum parentes mecum militaverant, dedi; cum sic de te meruerim, occidere me constituisti.’ 9. Cum ad hanc vocem exclamasset procul hanc ab se abesse dementiam: ‘Non praestas’ inquit ‘fidem, Cinna; convenerat, ne interloquereris. Occidere, inquam, me paras’; adiecit locum, socios, diem, ordinem insidiarum, cui commissum esset ferrum. 10. Et cum defixum videret nec ex conventionem iam, sed ex conscientia tacentem: ‘Quo’ inquit ‘hoc animo facis? ut ipse sis princeps? male mehercules cum populo Romano agitur, si tibi ad imperandum nihil praeter me obstat. Domum tueri tuam non potes, nuper libertini hominis gratia in privato iudicio superatus es; adeo nihil facilius potes quam contra Caesarem advocare. Cedo, si spes tuas solus impedio, Paulusne te et Fabius Maximus et Cossi et Servilii ferent tantumque agmen nobilium non inania nomina praeferentium, sed eorum, qui imaginibus suis decori sint?’

X.

1. Ignovit abavus tuus victis; nam si non ignovisset, quibus imperasset? Sallustium et Cocceios et Deillios et totam cohortem primae admissionis ex adversariorum castris conscripsit; iam Domitios, Messalas, Asinios, Cicerones, quidquid floris erat in civitate, clementiae suae debebat. Ipsum Lepidum quam diu mori passus est! Per multos annos tulit ornamenta principis retinentem et pontificatum maximum non nisi mortuo illo transferri in se passus est; maluit enim illum honorem vocari quam spoliū. 2. Haec eum clementia ad salutem securitatemque perduxit; haec gratum ac favorabilem reddidit, quamvis nondum subactis populi Romani cervicibus manum imposuisset; haec hodieque praestat illi famam, quae vix vivis principibus servit. 3. Deum esse non tamquam iussi credimus; bonum fuisse principem Augustum, bene illi parentis nomen convenisse fatemur ob nullam aliam causam, quam quod contumelias quoque suas, quae acerbiores principibus solent esse quam iniuriae, nulla crudelitate exsequebatur, quod probrosis in se dictis adrisit, quod dare illum poenas apparebat, cum exigeret, quod, quoscumque ob adulterium filiae suae damnaverat, adeo non occidit, ut dimissis, quo tutiores essent, diplomata daret. 4. Hoc est ignoscere, cum scias multos futuros, qui pro te irascantur et tibi sanguine alieno gratificentur, non dare tantum salutem, sed praestare.

XI.

1. Haec Augustus senex aut iam in senectutem annis vergentibus; in adulescentia caluit, arsit ira, multa fecit, ad quae invitus oculos retorquebat. Comparare nemo mansuetudini tuae audebit divum Augustum, etiam si in certamen iuvenilium annorum deduxerit senectutem plus quam maturam; fuerit moderatus et clemens, nempe post mare Actiacum Romano cruore infectum, nempe post fractas in Sicilia classes et suas et alienas, nempe post Perusinas aras et proscriptiones. 2. Ego vero clementiam non voco lassam crudelitatem; haec est, Caesar, clementia vera, quam tu praestas, quae non saevitiae paenitentia coepit, nullam habere maculam, numquam civilem sanguinem fudisse; haec est in maxima potestate verissima animi temperantia et humani generis comprehendens ut sui amor non cupiditate aliqua, non temeritate ingenii, non priorum principum exemplis corruptum, quantum sibi cives suos liceat, experiendo temptare, sed hebetare aciem imperii sui. 3. Praestitisti, Caesar, civitatem incruentam, et hoc, quod magno animo gloriatus es nullam te toto orbe stillam cruoris humani misisse, eo maius est mirabiliusque, quod nulli umquam gladius commissus est.

4. Clementia ergo non tantum honestiores sed tutiores praestat ornamentumque imperiorum est simul et certissima salus. Quid enim est, cur reges consenuerint liberisque ac nepotibus tradiderint regna, tyrannorum execrabilis ac brevis potestas sit? Quid interest inter tyrannum ac regem (species enim ipsa fortunae ac licentia par est), nisi quod tyranni in voluptatem saeviunt, reges non nisi ex causa ac necessitate?

XII.

1. 'Quid ergo? Non reges quoque occidere solent?' Sed quotiens id fieri publica utilitas persuadet; tyrannis saevitia cordi est. Tyrannus autem a rege factis distat, non nomine; nam et Dionysius maior iure meritoque praeferri multis regibus potest, et L. Sullam tyrannum appellari quid prohibet, cui occidendi finem fecit inopia hostium? 2. Descenderit licet e dictatura sua et se togae reddiderit, quis tamen umquam tyrannus tam avidae humanum sanguinem bibit quam ille, qui septem milia civium Romanorum contrucidari iussit et, cum in vicino ad aedem Bellonae sedens exaudisset conclamationem tot milium sub gladio gementium, exterrito senatu: 'Hoc agamus' inquit, 'P.C.; seditiosi pauculi meo iussu occiduntur'? 3. Hoc non est mentitus; pauci Sullae videbantur. Sed mox de Sulla, cum quaeremus, quomodo hostibus irascendum sit, utique si in hostile nomen cives et ex eodem corpore abrupti transierint; interim, hoc quod dicebam, clementia efficit, ut magnum inter regem tyrannumque discrimen sit, uterque licet non minus armis valletur; sed alter arma habet, quibus in munimentum pacis utitur, alter, ut magno timore magna odia compescat, nec illas ipsas manus, quibus se commisit, securus adspicit. 4. Contrariis in contraria agitur; nam cum invisus sit, quia timetur, timeri vult, quia invisus est, et illo execrabili versu, qui multos praecipites dedit, utitur: Oderint, dum metuant, ignarus, quanta rabies oriatur, ubi supra modum odia creverunt.

Temperatus enim timor cohibet animos, adsiduus vero et acer et extrema admovens in audaciam iacentes excitat et omnia experiri suadet. 5. Sic feras linea et pinnae clusas contineant, easdem a tergo eques telis incessat: temptabunt fugam per ipsa, quae fugerant, proculcabuntque formidinem. Acerrima virtus est, quam ultima necessitas extundit. Relinquat oportet securi aliquid metus multoque plus spei quam periculorum ostendet; alioqui, ubi quiescenti paria metuuntur, incurrere in pericula iuvat et ut aliena anima abuti.

XIII.

1. Placido tranquilloque regi fida sunt auxilia sua, ut quibus ad communem salutem utatur, gloriosusque miles (publicae enim securitati se dare operam videt) omnem laborem libens patitur ut parentis custos; at illum acerbum et sanguinarium necesse est graventur stipatores sui. 2. Non potest habere quisquam bonae ac fidae voluntatis ministros, quibus in tormentis ut eculeo et ferramentis ad mortem paratis utitur, quibus non aliter quam bestiis homines obiectat, omnibus reis aerumnosior ac sollicitior, ut qui homines deosque testes facinorum ac vindices timeat, eo perductus, ut non liceat illi mutare mores. Hoc enim inter cetera vel pessimum habet crudelitas: perseverandum est nec ad meliora patet regressus; scelera enim sceleribus tuenda sunt. Quid autem eo infelicius, cui iam esse malo necesse est? 3. O miserabilem illum, sibi certe! nam ceteris misereri eius nefas sit, qui caedibus ac rapinis potentiam exercuit, qui suspecta sibi cuncta reddidit tam externa quam domestica, cum arma metuat, ad arma confugiens, non amicorum fidei credens, non pietati liberorum; qui, ubi circumspexit, quaeque fecit quaeque facturus est, et conscientiam suam plenam sceleribus ac tormentis adaperuit, saepe mortem timet, saepius optat, invisior sibi quam servientibus. 4. E contrario is, cui curae sunt universa, qui alia magis, alia minus tuetur, nullam non rei publicae partem tamquam sui nutrit, inclinatus ad mitiora, etiam, si ex usu est animadvertere, ostendens, quam invitus aspero remedio manus admoveat, in cuius animo nihil hostile, nihil efferum est, qui potentiam suam placide ac salutariter exercet adprobare imperia sua civibus cupiens, felix abunde sibi visus, si fortunam suam publicarit, sermone adfabilis, aditu accessuque facilis, voltu, qui maxime populos demeretur, amabilis, aequis desideriis propensus, etiam inquis non acerbus, a tota civitate amatur, defenditur, colitur. 5. Eadem de illo homines secreto loquuntur quae palam; tollere filios cupiunt et publicis malis sterilitas indicta recluditur; bene se meritum de liberis suis quisque non dubitat, quibus tale saeculum ostenderit. Hic princeps suo beneficio tutus nihil praesidiis eget, arma ornamenti causa habet.

XIV.

1. Quod ergo officium eius est? Quod bonorum parentium, qui obiurgare liberos non numquam blande, non numquam minaciter solent, aliquando admonere etiam verberibus. Numquid aliquis sanus filium a prima offensa exheredat? nisi magnae et multae iniuriae patientiam evicerunt, nisi plus est, quod timet, quam quod damnat, non accedit ad decretorium stilum; multa ante temptat, quibus dubiam indolem et peiore iam loco positam revocet; simul deploratum est, ultima experitur. Nemo ad supplicia exigenda pervenit, nisi qui remedia consumpsit. 2. Hoc, quod parenti, etiam principi faciendum est, quem appellavimus Patrem Patriae non adulatione vana adducti. Cetera enim cognomina honori data sunt; Magnos et Felices et Augustos diximus et ambitiosae maiestati quicquid potuimus titulorum congegimus illis hoc tribuentes; Patrem quidem Patriae appellavimus, ut sciret datam sibi potestatem patriam, quae est temperantissima liberis consulens suaque post illos reponens. 3. Tarde sibi pater membra sua abscidat, etiam, cum absciderit, reponere cupiat et in abscidendo gemat cunctatus multum diuque; prope est enim, ut libenter damnet, qui cito; prope est, ut inique puniat, qui nimis.

XV.

1. Trichonem equitem Romanum memoria nostra, quia filium suum flagellis occiderat, populus graphiis in foro confodit; vix illum Augusti Caesaris auctoritas infestis tam patrum quam filiorum manibus eripuit. 2. Tarium, qui filium deprensum in parricidii consilio damnavit causa cognita, nemo non suspexit, quod contentus exsilio et exsilio delicato Massiliae parricidam continuit et annua illi praestitit, quanta praestare integro solebat; haec liberalitas effecit, ut, in qua civitate numquam deest patronus peioribus, nemo dubitaret, quin reus merito damnatus esset, quem is pater damnare potuisset, qui odisse non poterat.

3. Hoc ipso exemplo dabo, quem compares bono patri, bonum principem. Cogniturus de filio Tarius advocavit in consilium Caesarem Augustum; venit in privatos penates, adsedit, pars alieni consilii fuit, non dixit; 'Immo in meam domum veniat'; quod si factum esset, Caesaris futura erat cognitio, non patris. 4. Audita causa excussisque omnibus, et his, quae adulescens pro se dixerat, et his, quibus arguebatur, petit, ut sententiam suam quisque scriberet, ne ea omnium fieret, quae Caesaris fuisset; deinde, priusquam aperirentur codicilli, iuravit se Tarii, hominis locupletis, hereditatem non aditurum. 5. Dicit aliquis: 'Pusillo animo timuit, ne videretur locum spei suae aperire velle filii damnatione.' Ego contra sentio; quilibet nostrum debuisset adversus opiniones malignas satis fiducia habere in bona conscientia, principes multa debent etiam famae dare. Iuravit se non aditurum hereditatem. 6. Tarius quidem eodem die et alterum heredem perdidit, sed Caesar libertatem sententiae suae redemit; et postquam adprobavit gratuitam esse severitatem suam, quod principi semper curandum est, dixit relegandum, quo patri videretur. 7. Non culleum, non serpentes, non carcerem decrevit memor, non de quo censeret, sed cui in consilio esset; mollissimo genere poenae contentum esse debere patrem dixit in filio adulescentulo impulso in id scelus, in quo se, quod proximum erat ab innocentia, timide gessisset; debere illum ab urbe et a parentis oculis submoveri.

XVI.

1. O dignum, quem in consilium patres advocarent! O dignum, quem coheredem innocentibus liberis scriberent! Haec clementia principem decet; quocumque venerit, mansuetiora omnia faciat.

Nemo regi tam vilis sit, ut illum perire non sentiat; qualiscumque pars imperii est. 2. In magna imperia ex minoribus petamus exemplum. Non unum est imperandi genus; imperat princeps civibus suis, pater liberis, praeceptor discentibus, tribunus vel centurio militibus. 3. Nonne pessimus pater videbitur, qui adsiduis plagis liberos etiam ex levissimis causis compescet? Uter autem praeceptor liberalibus studiis dignior, qui excarnificabit discipulos, si memoria illis non constiterit aut si parum agilis in legendo oculus haeserit, an qui monitionibus et verecundia emendare ac docere malit? Tribunum centurionemque da saevum: desertores faciet, quibus tamen ignoscitur. 4. Numquidnam aequum est gravius homini et durius imperari, quam imperatur animalibus mutis? Atqui equum non crebris verberibus exterret domandi peritus magister; fiet enim formidolosus et contumax, nisi eum blandiente tactu permulseris. 5. Idem facit ille venator, quique instituit catulos vestigia sequi quique iam exercitatis utitur ad excitandas vel persequendas feras: nec crebro illis minatur (contundet enim animos et, quicquid est indolis, comminuetur trepidatione degeneri) nec licentiam vagandi errandique passim concedit. Adicias his licet tardiora agentes iumenta, quae, cum ad contumeliam et miserias nata sint, nimia saevitia cogantur iugum detractare.

XVII.

1. Nullum animal morosius est, nullum maiore arte tractandum quam homo, nulli magis parcendum. Quid enim est stultius quam in iumentis quidem et canibus erubescere iras exercere, pessima autem condicione sub homine hominem esse? Morbis medemur nec irascimur; atqui et hic morbus est animi; mollem medicinam desiderat ipsumque medentem minime infestum aegro. 2. Mali medici est desperare, ne curet: idem in iis, quorum animus adfectus est, facere debet is, cui tradita salus omnium est, non cito spem proicere nec mortifera signa pronuntiare; luctetur cum vitiis, resistat, aliis morbum suum exprobret, quosdam molli curatione decipiat citius meliusque sanaturus remediis fallentibus; agat princeps curam non tantum salutis, sed etiam honestae cicatricis. 3. Nulla regi gloria est ex saeva animadversione (quis enim dubitat posse?), at contra maxima, si vim suam continet, si multos irae alienae eripuit, neminem suae impendit.

XVIII.

1. Servis imperare moderate laus est. Et in mancipio cogitandum est, non quantum illud impune possit pati, sed quantum tibi permittat aequi bonique natura, quae parcere etiam captivis et pretio paratis iubet. Quanto iustius iubet hominibus liberis, ingenuis, honestis non ut mancipiis abuti sed ut his, quos gradu antecedas quorumque tibi non servitus tradita sit, sed tutela. 2. Servis ad statuam licet confugere; cum in servum omnia liceant, est aliquid, quod in hominem licere commune ius animantium vetet. Quis non Vedium Pollionem peius oderat quam servi sui, quod muraenas sanguine humano saginabat et eos, qui se aliquid offenderant, in vivarium, quid aliud quam serpentium, abici iubebat? O hominem mille mortibus dignum, sive devorandos servos obiciebat muraenis, quas esurus erat, sive in hoc tantum illas alebat, ut sic aleret.

3. Quemadmodum domini crudeles tota civitate commonstrantur invisique et detestabiles sunt, ita regum et iniuria latius patet et infamia atque odium saeculis traditur; quanto autem non nasci melius fuit, quam numerari inter publico malo natos!

XIX.

1. Excogitare nemo quicquam poterit, quod magis decorum regenti sit quam clementia, quocumque modo is et quocumque iure praepositus ceteris erit. Eo scilicet formosius id esse magnificentiusque fatebimur, quo in maiore praestabitur potestate, quam non oportet noxiam esse, si ad naturae legem componitur. 2. Natura enim commenta est regem, quod et ex aliis animalibus licet cognoscere et ex apibus; quarum regi amplissimum cubile est medioque ac tutissimo loco; praeterea opere vacat exactor alienorum operum, et amisso rege totum dilabitur, nec umquam plus unum patiuntur melioremque pugna quaerunt; praeterea insignis regi forma est dissimilisque ceteris cum magnitudine tum nitore. 3. Hoc tamen maxime distinguitur: iracundissimae ac pro corporis captu pugnacissimae sunt apes et aculeos in vulnere relinquunt, rex ipse sine aculeo est; noluit illum natura nec saevum esse nec ultionem magno constaturam petere telumque detraxit et iram eius inermem reliquit.

Exemplar hoc magnis regibus ingens; est enim illi mos exercere se in parvis et ingentium rerum documenta in minima parere. 4. Pudeat ab exiguis animalibus non trahere mores, cum tanto hominum moderatior esse animus debeat, quanto vehementius nocet. Utinam quidem eadem homini lex esset et ira cum telo suo frangeretur nec saepius liceret nocere quam semel nec alienis viribus exercere odia! Facile enim lassaretur furor, si per se sibi satis faceret et si mortis periculo vim suam effunderet. 5. Sed ne nunc quidem illi cursus tutus est; tantum enim necesse est timeat, quantum timeri voluit, et manus omnium observet et eo quoque tempore, quo non captatur, peti se iudicet nullumque momentum immune a metu habeat. Hanc aliquis agere vitam sustinet, cum liceat innoxium aliis, ob hoc securum, salutare potentiae ius laetis omnibus tractare? Errat enim, si quis existimat tutum esse ibi regem, ubi nihil a rege tutum est; securitas securitate mutua paciscenda est. 6. Non opus est instruere in altum editas arces nec in adscensum arduos colles emunire nec latera montium abscidere, multiplicibus se muris turribusque saepire: salvum regem clementia in aperto praestabit. Unum est

7. Quid pulchrius est quam vivere optantibus cunctis et vota non sub custode nuncupantibus? Si paulum valetudo titubavit, non spem hominum excitari, sed metum? Nihil esse cuiquam tam pretiosum, quod non pro salute praesidis sui commutatum velit? 8. O ne ille, cui contingit ut sibi quoque vivere debeat? In hoc adsiduis bonitatis argumentis probavit non rem publicam suam esse, sed se rei publicae. Quis huic audeat struere aliquod periculum? Quis ab hoc non, si possit, fortunam quoque avertere velit, sub quo iustitia, pax, pudicitia, securitas, dignitas florent, sub quo opulenta civitas copia bonorum omnium abundat? Nec alio animo rectorem suum intuetur, quam si di immortales potestatem visendi sui faciant, intueamur venerantes colentesque. 9. Quid autem? Non proximum illis locum tenet is, qui se ex deorum natura gerit, beneficus ac largus et in melius potens? Hoc adfectare, hoc imitari decet, maximum ita haberi, ut optimus simul habeare.

XX.

1. A duabus causis punire princeps solet, si aut se vindicat aut alium. Prius de ea parte disseram, quae ipsum contingit; difficilius est enim moderari, ubi dolori debetur ultio, quam ubi exemplo. 2. Supervacuum est hoc loco admonere, ne facile credat, ut verum excutiat, ut innocentiae faveat et, ut appareat, non minorem agi rem periclitantis quam iudicis sciat; hoc enim ad iustitiam, non ad clementiam pertinet; nunc illum hortamur, ut manifeste laesus animum in potestate habeat et poenam, si tuto poterit, donet, si minus, temperet longeque sit in suis quam in alienis iniuriis exorabilior. 3. Nam quemadmodum non est magni animi, qui de alieno liberalis est, sed ille, qui, quod alteri donat, sibi detrahit, ita clementem vocabo non in alieno dolore facilem, sed eum, qui, cum suis stimulis exagitetur, non prosilit, qui intellegit magni animi esse iniurias in summa potentia pati nec quicquam esse gloriosius principe impune laeso.

XXI.

1. Ultio duas praestare res solet: aut solacium adfert ei, qui accepit iniuriam, aut in reliquum securitatem. Principis maior est fortuna, quam ut solacio egeat, manifestiorque vis, quam ut alieno malo opinionem sibi virium quaerat. Hoc dico, cum ab inferioribus petitus violatusque est; nam si, quos pares aliquando habuit, infra se videt, satis vindicatus est. Regem et servus occidit et serpens et sagitta; servavit quidem nemo nisi maior eo, quem servabat. 2. Uti itaque animose debet tanto munere deorum dandi auferendique vitam potens. In iis praesertim, quos scit aliquando sibi par fastigium obtinuisse, hoc arbitrium adeptus ultionem implevit perfecitque, quantum verae poenae satis erat; perdidit enim vitam, qui debet, et, quisquis ex alto ad inimici pedes abiectus alienam de capite regnoque sententiam exspectavit, in servatoris sui gloriam vivit plusque eius nomini confert incolumis, quam si ex oculis ablatum esset. Adsidium enim spectaculum alienae virtutis est; in triumpho cito transisset. 3. Si vero regnum quoque suum tuto relinqui apud eum potuit reponique eo, unde deciderat, ingenti incremento surgit laus eius, qui contentus fuit ex rege victo nihil praeter gloriam sumere. Hoc est etiam ex victoria sua triumphare testarique nihil se, quod dignum esset victore, apud victos invenisse. 4. Cum civibus et ignotis atque humilibus eo moderatius agendum est, quo minoris est adflixisse eos. Quibusdam libenter parcas, a quibusdam te vindicare fastidias et non aliter quam ab animalibus parvis sed obterentem inquinantibus reducenda manus est; at in iis, qui in ore civitatis servati punitique erunt, occasione notae clementiae utendum est.

XXII.

1. Transeamus ad alienas iniurias, in quibus vindicandis haec tria lex secuta est, quae princeps quoque sequi debet: aut ut eum, quem punit, emendet, aut ut poena eius ceteros meliores reddat, aut ut sublatis malis securiores ceteri vivant. Ipsos facilius emendabis minore poena; diligentius enim vivit, cui aliquid integri superest. Nemo dignitati perditae parcit; impunitatis genus est iam non habere poenae locum. 2. Civitatis autem mores magis corrigit parcitas animadversionum; facit enim consuetudinem peccandi multitudo peccantium, et minus gravis nota est, quam turba damnationum levat, et severitas, quod maximum remedium habet, adsiduitate amittit auctoritatem. 3. Constituit bonos mores civitati princeps et vitia eluit, si patiens eorum est, non tamquam probet, sed tamquam invitus et cum magno tormento ad castigandum veniat. Verecundiam peccandi facit ipsa clementia regentis; gravior multo poena videtur, quae a miti viro constituitur.

XXIII.

1. Praeterea videbis ea saepe committi, quae saepe vindicantur. Pater tuus plures intra quinquennium culleo insuit, quam omnibus saeculis insutos accepimus. Multo minus audebant liberi nefas ultimum admittere, quam diu sine lege crimen fuit. Summa enim prudentia altissimi viri et rerum naturae peritissimi maluerunt velut incredibile scelus et ultra audaciam positum praeterire quam, dum vindicant, ostendere posse fieri; itaque parricidae cum lege coeperunt, et illis facinus poena monstravit; pessimo vero loco pietas fuit, postquam saepius culleos vidimus quam cruces. 2. In qua civitate raro homines puniuntur, in ea consensus fit innocentiae et indulgetur velut publico bono. Putet se innocentem esse civitas, erit; magis irascetur a communi frugalitate desciscentibus, si paucos esse eos viderit. Periculosum est, mihi crede, ostendere civitati, quanto plures mali sint.

XXIV.

1. Dicta est aliquando a senatu sententia, ut servos a liberis cultus distingueret; deinde apparuit, quantum periculum immineret, si servi nostri numerare nos coepissent. Idem scito metuendum esse, si nulli ignoscitur; cito apparebit, pars civitatis deterior quanto praegravet. Non minus principi turpia sunt multa supplicia quam medico multa funera; remissius imperanti melius paretur. 2. Natura contumax est humanus animus et in contrarium atque arduum nitens sequiturque facilius quam ducitur; et ut generosi ac nobiles equi melius facili freno reguntur, ita clementiam voluntaria innocentia impetu suo sequitur, et dignam putat civitas, quam servet sibi. Plus itaque hac via proficitur.

XXV.

1. Crudelitas minime humanum malum est indignumque tam miti animo; ferina ista rabies est sanguine gaudere ac vulneribus et abiecto homine in silvestre animal transire. Quid enim interest, oro te, Alexander, leoni Lysimachum obicias an ipse laceres dentibus tuis? Tuum illud os est, tua illa feritas. O quam cuperes tibi potius ungues esse, tibi rictum illum edendorum hominum capacem! Non exigimus a te, ut manus ista, exitium familiare certissimum, ulli salutaris sit, ut iste animus ferox, insatiabile gentium malum, citra sanguinem caedemque satietur; clementia iam vocatur, ad occidendum amicum cum carnifex inter homines eligitur. 2. Hoc est, quare vel maxime abominanda sit saevitia, quod excedit fines primum solitos, deinde humanos, nova supplicia conquirat, ingenium advocat, ut instrumenta excogitet, per quae varietur atque extendatur dolor, delectatur malis hominum; tunc illi dirus animi morbus ad insaniam pervenit ultimam, cum crudelitas versa est in voluptatem et iam occidere hominem iuvat. 3. Matura talem virum a tergo sequitur aversio, odia, venena, gladii; tam multis periculis petitur, quam multorum ipse periculum est, privatisque non numquam consiliis, alias vero consternatione publica circumvenitur. Levis enim et privata perniciēs non totas urbes movet; quod late furere coepit et omnes adpetit, undique configitur. 4. Serpentes parvolae fallunt nec publice conquiruntur; ubi aliqua solitam mensuram transit et in monstrum excrevit, ubi fontes sputu inficit et, si adflavit, deurit obteritque, quacumque incessit, ballistis petitur. Possunt verba dare et evadere pusilla mala, ingentibus obviam itur. 5. Sic unus aeger ne domum quidem perturbat; at ubi crebris mortibus pestilentiam esse apparuit, conclamatio civitatis ac fuga est, et dis ipsis manus intentantur. Sub uno aliquo tecto flamma apparuit: familia vicinique aquam ingerunt; at incendium vastum et multas iam domos depastum parte urbis obruitur.

XXVI.

1. Crudelitatem privatorum quoque serviles manus sub certo crucis periculo ultae sunt; tyrannorum gentes populique et, quorum erat malum, et ei, quibus imminebat, excindere adgressi sunt. Aliquando sua praesidia in ipsos consurrexerunt perfidiamque et impietatem et feritatem et, quidquid ab illis didicerant, in ipsos exercuerunt. Quid enim potest quisquam ab eo sperare, quem malum esse docuit? Non diu nequitia apparet nec, quantum iubetur, peccat. 2. Sed puta esse tutam crudelitatem, quale eius regnum est? Non aliud quam captarum urbium forma et terribiles facies publici metus. Omnia maesta, trepida, confusa; voluptates ipsae timentur; non convivia securi ineunt, in quibus lingua sollicite etiam ebriis custodienda est, non spectacula, ex quibus materia criminis ac periculi quaeritur. Apparentur licet magna impensa et regiis opibus et artificum exquisitis nominibus, quem tamen ludi in carcere iuvent?

3. Quod istud, di boni, malum est occidere, saevire, delectari sono catenarum et civium capita decidere, quocumque ventum est, multum sanguinis fundere, adspectu suo terrere ac fugare! Quae alia vita esset, si leones ursique regnarent, si serpentibus in nos ac noxiosissimo cuique animali daretur potestas? 4. Illa rationis expertia et a nobis immanitatis crimine damnata abstinent suis, et tuta est etiam inter feras similitudo: horum ne a necessariis quidem sibi rabies temperat, sed externa suaque in aequo habet, quo plus se exercitat, eo incitator. A singulorum deinde caedibus in exitia gentium serpit et inicere tectis ignem, aratrum vetustis urbibus inducere potentiam putat; et unum occidi iubere aut alterum parum imperatorium credit; nisi eodem tempore grex miserorum sub ictu stetit, crudelitatem suam in ordinem coactam putat.

5. Felicitas illa multis salutem dare et ad vitam ab ipsa morte revocare et mereri clementia civicam. Nullum ornamentum principis fastigio dignius pulchriusque est quam illa corona ob cives servatos, non hostilia arma detracta victis, non currus barbarorum sanguine cruenti, non parta bello spolia. Haec divina potentia est gregatim ac publice servare; multos quidem occidere et indiscretos incendii ac ruinae potentia est.

LIBER II

I.

1. Ut de clementia scriberem, Nero Caesar, una me vox tua maxime compulit, quam ego non sine admiratione et, cum diceretur, audisse memini et deinde aliis narrasse, vocem generosam, magni animi, magnae lenitatis, quae non composita nec alienis auribus data subito erupit et bonitatem tuam cum fortuna tua litigantem in medium adduxit. 2. Animadversurus in latrones duos Burrus praefectus tuus, vir egregius et tibi principi natus, exigebat a te, scriberes, in quos et ex qua causa animadverti velles; hoc saepe dilatum ut aliquando fieret, instabat. Invitus invito cum chartam protulisset traderetque, exclamasti: ‘Vellem litteras nescirem!’ 3. O dignam vocem, quam audirent omnes gentes, quae Romanum imperium incolunt quaeque iuxta iacent dubiae libertatis quaeque se contra viribus aut animis attollunt! O vocem in contionem omnium mortalium mittendam, in cuius verba principes regesque iurarent! O vocem publica generis humani innocentia dignam, cui redderetur antiquum illud saeculum! 4. Nunc profecto consentire decebat ad aequum bonumque expulsa alieni cupidine, ex qua omne animi malum oritur, pietatem integritatemque cum fide ac modestia resurgere et vitia diuturno abusa regno dare tandem felici ac puro saeculo locum.

II.

1. Futurum hoc, Caesar, ex magna parte sperare et confidere libet. Tradetur ista animi tui mansuetudo diffundeturque paulatim per omne imperii corpus, et cuncta in similitudinem tuam formabuntur. A capite bona valetudo: inde omnia vegeta sunt atque erecta aut languore demissa, prout animus eorum vivit aut marcet. Erunt cives, erunt socii digni hac bonitate, et in totum orbem recti mores revertentur; parceretur ubique manibus tuis. 2. Diutius me morari hic patere, non ut blandum auribus tuis (nec enim hic mihi mos est; maluerim veris offendere quam placere adulando); quid ergo est? Praeter id, quod bene factis dictisque tuis quam familiarissimum esse te cupio, ut, quod nunc natura et impetus est, fiat iudicium, illud mecum considero multas voces magnas, sed detestabiles, in vitam humanam pervenisse celebresque volgo ferri, ut illam: 'oderint, dum metuant,' cui Graecus versus similis est, qui se mortuo terram misceri ignibus iubet, et alia huius notae. 3. Ac nescio quomodo ingenia in immani et invisa materia secundiore ore expresserunt sensus vehementes et concitados; nullam adhuc vocem audii ex bono lenique animosam. Quid ergo est? Ut raro, invitus et cum magna cunctatione, ita aliquando scribas necesse est istud, quod tibi in odium litteras adduxit, sed, sicut facis, cum magna cunctatione, cum multis dilationibus.

III.

1. Et ne forte decipiat nos speciosum clementiae nomen aliquando et in contrarium abducat, videamus, quid sit clementia qualisque sit et quos fines habeat.

Clementia est temperantia animi in potestate ulciscendi vel lenitas superioris adversus inferiorem in constituendis poenis. Plura proponere tutius est, ne una finitio parum rem comprehendat et, ut ita dicam, formula excidat; itaque dici potest et inclinatio animi ad lenitatem in poena exigenda. 2. Illa finitio contradictiones inveniet, quamvis maxime ad verum accedat, si dixerimus clementiam esse moderationem aliquid ex merita ac debita poena remittentem: reclamabitur nullam virtutem cuiquam minus debito facere. Atqui hoc omnes intellegunt clementiam esse, quae se flectit citra id, quod merito constitui posset.

IV.

1. Huic contrariam imperiti putant severitatem; sed nulla virtus virtuti contraria est. Quid ergo opponitur clementiae? Crudelitas, quae nihil aliud est quam atrocitas animi in exigendis poenis. ‘Sed quidam non exigunt poenas, crudeles tamen sunt, tamquam qui ignotos homines et obvios non in compendium, sed occidendi causa occidunt nec interficere contenti saeviunt, ut Busiris ille et Procrustes et piratae, qui captos verberant et in ignem vivos imponunt.’ 2. Haec crudelitas quidem; sed quia nec ultionem sequitur (non enim laesa est) nec peccato alicui irascitur (nullum enim antecessit crimen), extra finitionem nostram cadit; finitio enim continebat in poenis exigendis intemperantiam animi. Possumus dicere non esse hanc crudelitatem, sed feritatem, cui voluptati saevitia est; possumus insaniam vocare: nam varia sunt genera eius et nullum certius, quam quod in caedes hominum et lincinationes pervenit. 3. Illos ergo crudeles vocabo, qui puniendi causam habent, modum non habent, sicut in Phalari, quem aiunt non quidem in homines innocentes, sed super humanum ac probabilem modum saevisse. Possumus effugere cavillationem et ita finire, ut sit crudelitas inclinatio animi ad asperiora. Hanc clementia repellit longe iussam stare a se; cum severitate illi convenit.

4. Ad rem pertinet quaerere hoc loco, quid sit misericordia; plerique enim ut virtutem eam laudant et bonum hominem vocant misericordem. Et haec vitium animi est. Utraque circa severitatem circaque clementiam posita sunt, quae vitare debemus; per speciem enim severitatis in crudelitatem incidimus, per speciem clementiae in misericordiam. In hoc leviori periculo erratur, sed par error est a vero recedentium.

V.

1. Ergo quemadmodum religio deos colit, superstitio violat, ita clementiam mansuetudinemque omnes boni viri praestabunt, misericordiam autem vitabunt; est enim vitium pusilli animi ad speciem alienorum malorum succidentis. Itaque pessimo cuique familiarissima est; anus et mulierculae sunt, quae lacrimis nocentissimorum moventur, quae, si liceret, carcerem effringerent. Misericordia non causam, sed fortunam spectat; clementia rationi accedit.

2. Scio male audire apud imperitos sectam Stoicorum tamquam duram nimis et minime principibus regibusque bonum daturam consilium; obicitur illi, quod sapientem negat misereri, negat ignoscere. Haec, si per se ponantur, invisa sunt; videntur enim nullam relinquere spem humanis erroribus, sed omnia delicta ad poenam deducere. 3. Quod si est quidnam haec scientia, quae dediscere humanitatem iubet portumque adversus fortunam certissimum mutuo auxilio cludit? Sed nulla secta benignior leniorque est, nulla amantior hominum et communis boni attentior, ut propositum sit usui esse et auxilio nec sibi tantum, sed universis singulisque consulere. 4. Misericordia est aegritudo animi ob alienarum miseriarum speciem aut tristitia ex alienis malis contracta, quae accidere immerentibus credit; aegritudo autem in sapientem virum non cadit; serena eius mens est, nec quicquam incidere potest, quod illam obducatur. Nihilque aequè hominem quam magnus animus decet; non potest autem magnus esse idem ac maestus. 5. Maeror contundit mentes, abicit, contrahit; hoc sapienti ne in suis quidem accidet calamitatibus, sed omnem fortunae iram reverberabit et ante se franget; eandem semper faciem servabit, placidam, inconcussam, quod facere non posset, si tristitiam reciperet.

VI.

1. Adice, quod sapiens et providet et in expedito consilium habet; numquam autem liquidum sincerumque ex turbido venit. Tristitia inhabilis est ad dispiciendas res, utilia excogitanda, periculosa vitanda, aequa aestimanda; ergo non miseretur, quia id sine miseria animi non fit. 2. Cetera omnia, quae, qui miserentur, volo facere, libens et altus animo faciet; succurret alienis lacrimis, non accedet; dabit manum naufrago, exsuli hospitium, egenti stipem, non hanc contumeliosam, quam pars maior horum, qui misericordes videri volunt, abicit et fastidit, quos adiuvat, contingique ab iis timet, sed ut homo homini ex communi dabit; donabit lacrimis maternis filium et catenas solvi iubebit et ludo eximet et cadaver etiam noxium sepeliet, sed faciet ista tranquilla mente, voltu suo. 3. Ergo non miserebitur sapiens, sed succurret, sed proderit, in commune auxilium natus ac bonum publicum, ex quo dabit cuique partem. Etiam ad calamitosos pro portione improbandosque et emendandos bonitatem suam permittet; adflctis vero et forte laborantibus multo libentius subveniet. Quotiens poterit, fortunae intercedet; ubi enim opibus potius utetur aut viribus, quam ad restituenda, quae casus impulit? Voltum quidem non deiciet nec animum ob crus alicuius aridum aut pannosam maciem et innixam baculo senectutem; ceterum omnibus dignis proderit et deorum more calamitosos propitius respiciet.

4. Misericordia vicina est miseriae; habet enim aliquid trahitque ex ea. Imbecillos oculos esse scias, qui ad alienam lippitudinem et ipsi subfunduntur, tam mehercules quam morbum esse, non hilaritatem, semper adridere ridentibus et ad omnium oscitationem ipsum quoque os diducere; misericordia vitium est animorum nimis miseria paventium, quam si quis a sapiente exigit, prope est, ut lamentationem exigit et in alienis funeribus gemitus.

1. 'At quare non ignoscet?' Agedum constituamus nunc quoque, quid sit venia, et sciemus dari illam a sapiente non debere. Venia est poenae merita remissio. Hanc sapiens quare non debeat dare, reddunt rationem diutius, quibus hoc propositum est; ego ut breviter tamquam in alieno iudicio dicam: Ei ignoscitur, qui puniri debuit; sapiens autem nihil facit, quod non debet, nihil praetermittit, quod debet; itaque poenam, quam exigere debet, non donat. 2. Sed illud, quod ex venia consequi vis, honestiore tibi via tribuet; parcet enim sapiens, consulet et corrigit; idem faciet, quod, si ignosceret, nec ignoscet, quoniam, qui ignoscit, fatetur aliquid se, quod fieri debuit, omisisse. Aliquem verbis tantum admonebit, poena non adficiet aetatem eius emendabilem intuens; aliquem invidia criminis manifeste laborantem iubebit incolumem esse, quia deceptus est, quia per vinum lapsus; hostes dimittet salvos, aliquando etiam laudatos, si honestis causis pro fide, pro foedere, pro libertate in bellum acciti sunt. 3. Haec omnia non veniae, sed clementiae opera sunt. Clementia liberum arbitrium habet; non sub formula, sed ex aequo et bono iudicat; et absolvere illi licet et, quanti vult, taxare litem. Nihil ex his facit, tamquam iusto minus fecerit, sed tamquam id, quod constituit, iustissimum sit. Ignoscere autem est, quem iudices puniendum, non punire; venia debitae poenae remissio est. Clementia hoc primum praestat, ut, quos dimittit, nihil aliud illos pati debuisse pronuntiet; plenior est quam venia, honestior est. 4. De verbo, ut mea fert opinio, controversia est, de re quidem convenit. Sapiens multa remittet, multos parum sani, sed sanabilis ingenii servabit. Agricolas bonos imitabitur, qui non tantum rectas procerasque arbores colunt; illis quoque, quas aliqua depravavit causa, adminicula, quibus derigantur, adplicat; alias circumcidunt, ne proceritatem rami premant, quasdam infirmas vitio loci nutriunt, quibusdam aliena umbra laborantibus caelum aperiunt. 5. Videbit, quod ingenium qua ratione tractandum sit, quo modo in rectum prava flectantur. * * *

I.

1. Viuere, Gallio frater, omnes beate uolunt, sed ad peruidendum quid sit quod beatam uitam efficiat caligant; adeoque non est facile consequi beatam uitam ut eo quisque ab ea longius recedat quo ad illam concitatus fertur, si uia lapsus est; quae ubi in contrarium ducit, ipsa uelocitas maioris interualli causa fit.

Proponendum est itaque primum quid sit quod adpetamus; tunc circumspectiendum qua contendere illo celerrime possimus, intellecturi in ipso itinere, si modo rectum erit, quantum cotidie profligetur quantoque propius ab eo simus ad quod nos cupiditas naturalis inpellit. 2. Quam diu quidem passim uagamur non ducem secuti sed fremitum et clamorem dissonum in diuersa uocantium, conteretur uita inter errores, breuis etiam si dies noctesque bonae menti laboremus. Decernatur itaque et quo tendamus et qua, non sine perito aliquo cui explorata sint ea in quae procedimus, quoniam quidem non eadem hic quae in ceteris peregrinationibus condicio est: in illis comprehensus aliquis limes et interrogati incolae non patiuntur errare, at hic tritissima quaeque uia et celeberrima maxime decipit. 3. Nihil ergo magis praestandum est quam ne pecorum ritu sequamur antecedentium gregem, pergentes non quo eundum est sed quo itur. Atqui nulla res nos maioribus malis implicat quam quod ad rumorem componimur, optima rati ea quae magno adsensu recepta sunt, quodque exempla <nobis pro> bonis multa sunt nec ad rationem sed ad similitudinem uiuimus. 4. Inde ista tanta coaceruatio aliorum super alios ruentium. Quod in strage hominum magna euenit, cum ipse se populus premit — nemo ita cadit ut non et alium in se adtrahat, primique exitio sequentibus sunt — hoc in omni uita accidere uideas licet. Nemo sibi tantummodo errat, sed alieni erroris et causa et auctor est; nocet enim adplicari antecedentibus et, dum unusquisque mauult credere quam iudicare, numquam de uita iudicatur, semper creditur, uersatque nos et praecipitat traditus per manus error. Alienis perimus exemplis: sanabimur, [si] separemur modo a coetu. 5. Nunc uero stat contra rationem defensor mali sui populus. Itaque id euenit quod in comitiis, in quibus eos factos esse praetores idem qui fecere mirantur, cum se mobilis fauor circumegit:

eadem probamus, eadem reprehendimus; hic exitus est omnis iudicii in quo secundum plures datur.

II.

1. Cum de beata uita agetur, non est quod mihi illud discessionum more respondeas: 'haec pars maior esse uidetur.' Ideo enim peior est. Non tam bene cum rebus humanis agitur ut meliora pluribus placeant: argumentum pessimi turba est. 2. Quaeramus ergo quid optimum factu sit, non quid usitatissimum, et quid nos in possessione felicitatis aeternae constituat, non quid uulgo, ueritatis pessimo interpreti, probatum sit. Vulgum autem tam chlamydatos quam coronatos uoco; non enim colorem uestium quibus praetexta sunt corpora aspicio. Oculis de homine non credo, habeo melius et certius lumen quo a falsis uera diiudicem: animi bonum animus inueniat. Hic, si umquam respirare illi et recedere in se uacauerit, o quam sibi ipse uerum tortus a se fatebitur ac dicet: 3. 'quidquid feci adhuc infectum esse mallet, quidquid dixi cum recogito, mutis inuideo, quidquid optauit inimicorum execrationem puto, quidquid timui, di boni, quanto leuius fuit quam quod concupii! Cum multis inimicitias gessi et in gratiam ex odio, si modo ulla inter malos gratia est, redii: mihi ipsi nondum amicus sum. Omnem operam dedi ut me multitudini educerem et aliqua dote notabilem facerem: quid aliud quam telis me opposui et maleuolentiae quod morderet ostendi? 4. Vides istos qui eloquentiam laudant, qui opes sequuntur, qui gratiae adulantur, qui potentiam extollunt? omnes aut sunt hostes aut, quod in aequo est, esse possunt; quam magnus mirantium tam magnus inuidientium populus est. Quin potius quaero aliquod usu bonum, quod sentiam, non quod ostendam? ista quae spectantur, ad quae consistitur, quae alter alteri stupens monstrat, foris nitent, introrsus misera sunt.'

III.

1. Quaeramus aliquod non in speciem bonum, sed solidum et aequale et a secretiore parte formosius; hoc eruamus. Nec longe positum est: inuenietur, scire tantum opus est quo manum porrigas; nunc uelut in tenebris uicina transimus, offensantes ea ipsa quae desideramus.

2. Sed ne te per circumitus traham, aliorum quidem opiniones praeteribo — nam et enumerare illas longum est et coarguere: nostram accipe. Nostram autem cum dico, non alligo me ad unum aliquem ex Stoicis proceribus: est et mihi censendi ius. Itaque aliquem sequar, aliquem iubebo sententiam diuidere, fortasse et post omnes citatus nihil inprobabo ex iis quae priores decreuerint et dicam ‘hoc amplius censeo’. 3. Interim, quod inter omnis Stoicos conuenit, rerum naturae adsentior; ab illa non deerrare et ad illius legem exemplumque formari sapientia est.

Beata est ergo uita conueniens naturae suae, quae non aliter contingere potest quam si primum sana mens est et in perpetua possessione sanitatis suae, deinde fortis ac uehemens, tunc pulcherrime patiens, apta temporibus, corporis sui pertinentiumque ad id curiosa non anxie, tum aliarum rerum quae uitam instruunt diligens sine admiratione cuiusquam, usura fortunae muneribus, non seruitura. 4. Intellegis, etiam si non adiciam, sequi perpetuam tranquillitatem, libertatem, depulsis iis quae aut irritant nos aut terriant; nam uoluptatibus et * * * pro illis quae parua ac fragilia sunt et ~ipsis flagitiis noxia~ ingens gaudium subit, inconcussum et aequale, tum pax et concordia animi et magnitudo cum mansuetudine; omnis enim ex infirmitate feritas est.

IV.

1. Potest aliter quoque definiri bonum nostrum, id est eadem sententia non isdem comprehendi uerbis. Quemadmodum idem exercitus modo latius panditur modo in angustum coartatur et aut in cornua sinuata media parte curuatur aut recta fronte explicatur, uis illi, utcumque ordinatus est, eadem est et uoluntas pro eisdem partibus standi, ita finitio summi boni alias diffundi potest et exporrigi, alias colligi et in se cogi. 2. Idem itaque erit, si dixerō ‘summum bonum est animus fortuita despiciens, uirtute laetus’ aut ‘inuicta uis animi, perita rerum, placida in actu cum humanitate multa et conuersantium cura’. Licet et ita finire, ut beatum dicamus hominem eum cui nullum bonum malumque sit nisi bonus malusque animus, honesti cultorem, uirtute contentum, quem nec extollant fortuita nec frangant, qui nullum maius bonum eo quod sibi ipse dare potest nouerit, cui uera uoluptas erit uoluptatum contemptio. 3. Licet, si euagari uelis, idem in aliam atque aliam faciem salua et integra potestate transferre; quid enim prohibet nos beatam uitam dicere liberum animum et erectum et interritum ac stabilem, extra metum, extra cupiditatem positum, cui unum bonum sit honestas, unum malum turpitudine, cetera uilis turba rerum nec detrahens quicquam beatæ uitæ nec adiciens, sine auctu ac detrimento summi boni ueniens ac recedens? 4. Hunc ita fundatum necesse est, uelit nolit, sequatur hilaritas continua et lætitia alta atque ex alto ueniens, ut qui suis gaudeat nec maiora domesticis cupiat. Quidni ista bene penset cum minutis et friuolis et non perseuerantibus corpusculi motibus? Quo die infra uoluptatem fuerit, et infra dolorem erit; uides autem quam malam et noxiosam seruitutem seruiturus sit quem uoluptates doloresque, incertissima dominia inpotentissimaque, alternis possidebunt: ergo exeundum ad libertatem est. 5. Hanc non alia res tribuit quam fortunæ negligentia: tum illud orietur inæstimabile bonum, quies mentis in tuto conlocatæ et sublimitas expulsisque erroribus ex cognitione ueræ gaudium grande et inmotum comitasque et diffusio animi, quibus delectabitur non ut bonis sed ut ex bono suo ortis.

V.

1. Quoniam liberaliter agere coepi, potest beatus dici qui nec cupit nec timet beneficio rationis, quoniam et saxa timore et tristitia carent nec minus pecudes; non ideo tamen quisquam felicia dixerit quibus non est felicitatis intellectus. 2. Eodem loco pone homines quos in numerum pecorum et animalium redegit hebes natura et ignoratio sui. Nihil interest inter hos et illa, quoniam illis nulla ratio est, his praua et malo suo atque in peruersum sollers; beatus enim dici nemo potest extra ueritatem proiectus. 3. Beata ergo uita est in recto certoque iudicio stabilita et inmutabilis. Tunc enim pura mens est et soluta omnibus malis, quae non tantum lacerationes sed etiam uellicationes effugerit, statura semper ubi constitit ac sedem suam etiam irata et infestante fortuna uindicatura. 4. Nam quod ad uoluptatem pertinet, licet circumfundatur undique et per omnis uias influat animumque blandimentis suis leniat aliaque ex aliis admoueat quibus totos partesque nostri sollicitet, quis mortalium, cui ullum superest hominis uestigium, per diem noctemque titillari uelit et deserto animo corpori operam dare?

VI.

1. 'Sed animus quoque' inquit 'uoluptates habebit suas.' Habeat sane sedeatque luxuriae et uoluptatum arbiter; inpleat se eis omnibus quae oblectare sensus solent, deinde praeterita respiciat et exoletarum uoluptatum memor exultet prioribus futurisque iam immineat ac spes suas ordinet et, dum corpus in praesenti sagina iacet, cogitationes ad futura praemittat: hoc mihi uidebitur miserior, quoniam mala pro bonis legere dementia est. Nec sine sanitate quisquam beatus est nec sanus cui futura pro optimis adpetuntur. 2. Beatus ergo est iudicii rectus; beatus est praesentibus qualiacumque sunt contentus amicusque rebus suis; beatus est is cui omnem habitum rerum suarum ratio commendat.

VII.

1. Vident et in iliis qui summum bonum dixerunt quam turpi illud loco posuerint. Itaque negant posse uoluptatem a uirtute diduci et aiunt nec honeste quemquam uiuere ut non iucunde uiuat, nec iucunde ut non honeste quoque. Non uideo quomodo ista tam diuersa in eandem copulam coiciantur. Quid est, oro uos, cur separari uoluptas a uirtute non possit? uidelicet, quia omne bonis ex uirtute principium est, ex huius radicibus etiam ea quae uos et amatis et expetitis oriuntur? Sed si ista indiscreta essent, non uideremus quaedam iucunda sed inhonesta, quaedam uero honestissima sed aspera, per dolores exigenda. 2. Adice nunc quod uoluptas etiam ad uitam turpissimam uenit, at uirtus malam uitam non admittit, et infelices quidam non sine uoluptate, immo ob ipsam uoluptatem sunt; quod non eueniret si uirtuti se uoluptas inmiscuisset, qua uirtus saepe caret, numquam indiget. 3. Quid dissimilia, immo diuersa componitis? Altum quiddam est uirtus, excelsum et regale, inuictum infatigabile: uoluptas humile seruire, inbecillum caducum, cuius statio ac domicilium fornices et popinae sunt. Virtutem in templo conuenies, in foro in curia, pro muris stantem, puluerulentam coloratam, callosas habentem manus: uoluptatem latitantem saepius ac tenebras captantem circa balinea ac sudatoria ac loca aedilem metuentia, mollem eneruem, mero atque unguento madentem, pallidam aut fucatam et medicamentis pollinctam. 4. Summum bonum immortale est, nescit exire, nec satietatem habet nec paenitentiam; numquam enim recta mens uertitur nec sibi odio est nec quicquam ~mutauit~ optima. At uoluptas tunc cum maxime delectat extinguitur; non multum loci habet, itaque cito inplet et taedio est et post primum impetum marcet. Nec id umquam certum est cuius in motu natura est: ita ne potest quidem ulla eius esse substantia quod uenit transitque celerrime in ipso usu sui periturum; eo enim pertendit ubi desinat, et dum incipit spectat ad finem.

VIII.

1. Quid quod tam bonis quam malis uoluptas inest nec minus turpes dedecus suum quam honestos egregia delectant? Ideoque praeceperunt ueteres optimam sequi uitam, non iucundissimam, ut rectae ac bonae uoluntatis non dux sed comes sit uoluptas. Natura enim duce utendum est; hanc ratio obseruat, hanc consulit. 2. Idem est ergo beate uiuere et secundum naturam. Hoc quid sit iam aperiam: si corporis dotes et apta naturae conseruauimus diligenter et inpauide tamquam in diem data et fugacia, si non subierimus eorum seruitutem nec nos aliena possederint, si corpori grata et aduenticia eo nobis loco fuerint quo sunt in castris auxilia et armaturae leues — seruiant ista, non imperent — ita demum utilia sunt menti. 3. Incorruptus uir sit externis et insuperabilis miratorque tantum sui, fidens animo atque in utrumque paratus, artifex uitae; fiducia eius non sine scientia sit, scientia non sine constantia; maneant illi semel placita nec ulla in decretis eius litura sit. Intellegitur, etiam si non adiecero, compositum ordinatumque fore talem uirum et in iis quae aget cum comitate magnificum. ~erat uera. 4. Ratio uera~ sensibus inritata et capiens inde principia — nec enim habet aliud unde conetur aut unde ad uerum impetum capiat — in se reuertatur. Nam mundus quoque cuncta complectens rectorque uniuersi deus in exteriora quidem tendit, sed tamen introsum undique in se redit. Idem nostra mens faciat: cum secuta sensus suos per illos se ad externa porrexerit, et illorum et sui potens sit. 5. Hoc modo una efficietur uis ac potestas concors sibi et ratio illa certa nascetur, non dissidens nec haesitans in opinionibus comprehensionibusque nec in persuasionibus, quae cum se disposuit et partibus suis consensit et, ut ita dicam, concinuit, summum bonum tetigit. 6. Nihil enim prauum, nihil lubricum superest, nihil in quo arietet aut labet; omnia faciet ex imperio suo nihilque inopinatum accidet, sed quicquid agetur in bonum exibat facile et parate et sine tergiuersatione agentis; nam pigritia et haesitatio pugnam et inconstantiam ostendit. Quare audaciter licet profitearis summum bonum esse animi concordiam; uirtutes enim ibi esse debebunt ubi consensus atque unitas erit: dissident uitia.

IX.

1. ‘Sed tu quoque’ inquit ‘uirtutem non ob aliud colis quam quia aliquam ex illa speras uoluptatem.’ Primum non, si uoluptatem praestatura uirtus est, ideo propter hanc petitur; non enim hanc praestat, sed et hanc, nec huic laborat, sed labor eius, quamuis aliud petat, hoc quoque adsequetur. 2. Sicut in aruo quod segeti proscissum est aliqui flores internascuntur, non tamen huic herbulae, quamuis delectet oculos, tantum operis insumptum est — aliud fuit serenti propositum, hoc superuenit — sic uoluptas non est merces nec causa uirtutis sed accessio, nec quia delectat placet, sed, si placet, et delectat. 3. Summum bonum in ipso iudicio est et habitu optimae mentis, quae cum suum inpleuit et finibus se suis cinxit, consummatum est summum bonum nec quicquam amplius desiderat; nihil enim extra totum est, non magis quam ultra finem. 4. Itaque erras cum interrogas quid sit illud propter quod uirtutem petam; quaeris enim aliquid supra summum. Interrogas quid petam ex uirtute? ipsam. Nihil enim habet melius [enim], ipsa pretium sui. An hoc parum magnum est? Cum tibi dicam ‘summum bonum est infragilis animi rigor et prouidentia et sublimitas et sanitas et libertas et concordia et decor’, aliquid etiamnunc exis maius ad quod ista referantur? Quid mihi uoluptatem nominas? hominis bonum quaero, non uentris, qui pecudibus ac beluis laxior est.

X.

1. 'Dissimulas' inquit 'quid a me dicatur; ego enim nego quemquam posse iucunde uiuere nisi simul et honeste uiuit, quod non potest mutis contingere animalibus nec bonum suum cibo metientibus. Clare, inquam, ac palam testor hanc uitam quam ego iucundam uoco non nisi adiecta uirtute contingere.' 2. Atqui quis ignorat plenissimos esse uoluptatibus uestris stultissimos quosque et nequitiam abundare iucundis animumque ipsum genera uoluptatis praua et multa suggerere? — in primis insolentiam et nimiam aestimationem sui tumoremque elatum super ceteros et amorem rerum suarum caecum et inprouidum et ex minimis ac puerilibus causis exultationem, iam dicacitatem ac superbiam contumeliis gaudentem, desidiam dissolutionemque segnis animi, deliciis fluentis, indormientis sibi. 3. Haec omnia uirtus discutit et aurem peruellit et uoluptates aestimat antequam admittat nec quas probauit magni pendit ~utique enim~ admittit nec usu earum sed temperantia laeta est. Temperantia autem, cum uoluptates minuat, summi boni iniuria est. Tu uoluptatem complecteris, ego compesco; tu uoluptate frueris, ego utor; tu illam summum bonum putas, ego nec bonum; tu omnia uoluptatis causa facis, ego nihil.

XI.

1. Cum dico me nihil uoluptatis causa facere, de illo loquor sapiente, cui soli concedimus uoluptatem. Non uoco autem sapientem supra quem quicquam est, nedum uoluptas. Atqui ab hac occupatus quomodo resistet labori et periculo, egestati et tot humanam uitam circumstrepentibus minis? Quomodo conspectum mortis, quomodo dolores feret, quomodo mundi fragores et tantum acerrimorum hostium, a tam molli aduersario uictus? 'Quidquid uoluptas suaserit faciet.' Age, non uides quam multa suasura sit? 2. 'Nihil' inquit 'poterit turpiter suadere, quia adiuncta uirtuti est.' Non uides iterum quale sit summum bonum cui custode opus est ut bonum sit? Virtus autem quomodo uoluptatem reget, quam sequitur, cum sequi parentis sit, regere imperantis? a tergo ponis quod imperat? Egregium autem habet uirtus apud uos officium, uoluptates praegustare! 3. Sed uidebimus an apud quos tam contumeliose tractata uirtus est adhuc uirtus sit, quae habere nomen suum non potest, si loco cessit; interim, de quo agitur, multos ostendam uoluptatibus obsessos, in quos fortuna omnia munera sua effudit, quos fatearis necesse est malos. 4. Aspice Nomentanum et Apicium, terrarum ac maris, ut isti uocant, bona conquirentis et super mensam recognoscentis omnium gentium animalia; uide hos eosdem e suggestu rosae despectantis popinam suam, aures uocum sono, spectaculis oculos, saporibus palatum suum delectantis; mollibus lenibusque fomentis totum lacescitur eorum corpus et, ne nares interim cessent, odoribus uariis inficitur locus ipse in quo luxuriae parentatur. Hos esse in uoluptatibus dices, nec tamen illis bene erit, quia non bono gaudent.

XII.

1. 'Male' inquit 'illis erit, quia multa interuenient quae perturbent animum et opiniones inter se contrariae mentem inquietabunt.' Quod ita esse concedo; sed nihilominus illi ipsi stulti et inaequales et sub ictu paenitentiae positi magnas percipient uoluptates, ut fatendum sit tam longe tum illos ab omni molestia abesse quam a bona mente et, quod plerisque contingit, hilarem insaniam insanire ac per risum furere. 2. At contra sapientium remissae uoluptates et modestae ac paene languidae sunt compressaeque et uix notabiles, ut quae neque accersitae ueniant nec, quamuis per se accesserint, in honore sint neque ullo gaudio percipientium exceptae; miscent enim illas et interponunt uitae ut ludum iocumque inter seria.

3. Desinant ergo inconuenientia iungere et uirtuti uoluptatem implicare, per quod uitium pessimis quibusque adulantur. Ille effusus in uoluptates, ructabundus semper atque ebrius, quia scit se cum uoluptate uiuere, credit et cum uirtute (audit enim uoluptatem separari a uirtute non posse); deinde uitiiis suis sapientiam inscribit et abscondenda profitetur. 4. Itaque non ab Epicuro impulsus luxuriatur, sed uitiiis dediti luxuriam suam in philosophiae sinu abscondunt et eo concurrunt ubi audiant laudari uoluptatem. Nec aestimant uoluptas illa Epicuri — ita enim mehercules sentio - quam sobria ac sicca sit, sed ad nomen ipsum aduolant quaerentes libidinibus suis patrocinium aliquod ac uelamentum. 5. Itaque quod unum habebant in malis bonum perdunt, peccandi uerecundiam; laudant enim ea quibus erubescabant et uitio gloriuntur; ideoque ne resurgere quidem ~adulescentiae~ licet, cum honestus turpi desidiaie titulus accessit. Hoc est cur ista uoluptatis laudatio perniciosa sit, quia honesta praecepta intra latent, quod corrumpit apparet.

XIII.

1. In ea quidem ipse sententia sum — inuitis hoc nostris popularibus dicam — sancta Epicurum et recta praecipere et si propius accesseris tristia; uoluptas enim illa ad paruum et exile reuocatur et quam nos uirtuti legem dicimus, eam ille dicit uoluptati. Iubet illam parere naturae; parum est autem luxuriae quod naturae satis est. 2. Quid ergo est? Ille, quisquis desidiosum otium et gulae ac libidinis uices felicitatem uocat, bonum malae rei quaerit auctorem et, cum illo uenit blando nomine inductus, sequitur uoluptatem non quam audit sed quam attulit, et uitia sua cum coepit putare similia praeceptis, indulget illis non timide nec obscure, luxuriatur etiam inde aperto capite. Itaque non dicam quod plerique nostrorum, sectam Epicuri flagitiorum magistram esse, sed illud dico: male audit, infamis est. ‘At inmerito.’ 3. Hoc scire qui potest nisi interius admissus? frons eius ipsa dat locum fabulae et ad malam spem inritat. Hoc tale est quale uir fortis stolam indutus: constat tibi pudicitia, uiriliter salua est, nulli corpus tuum turpi patientiae uacat, sed in manu tympanum est. Titulus itaque honestus eligatur et inscriptio ipsa excitans animum: quae stat, inuenerunt uitia.

4. Quisquis ad uirtutem accessit, dedit generosae indolis specimen: qui uoluptatem sequitur uidetur eneruis, fractus, ~degenerans uiro~, peruenturus in turpia nisi aliquis distinxerit illi uoluptates, ut sciat quae ex eis intra naturale desiderium resistant, quae praeceptis ferantur infinitaeque sint et quo magis implentur eo magis inexplebiles. 5. Agedum, uirtus antecedit, tutum erit omne uestigium. Et uoluptas nocet nimia: in uirtute non est uerendum ne quid nimium sit, quia in ipsa est modus; non est bonum quod magnitudine laborat sua. Rationalem porro sortitis naturam quae melius res quam ratio proponitur? Et si placet ista iunctura, si hoc placet ad beatam uitam ire comitatu, uirtus antecedit, comitetur uoluptas et circa corpus ut umbra uersetur: uirtutem quidem, excelsissimam dominam, uoluptati tradere ancillam nihil magnum animo capientis est.

XIV.

1. Prima uirtus eat, haec ferat signa: habebimus nihilominus uoluptatem, sed domini eius et temperatores erimus; aliquid nos exorabit, nihil coget. At ei qui uoluptati tradidere principia utroque caruere; uirtutem enim amittunt, ceterum non ipsi uoluptatem, sed ipsos uoluptas habet, cuius aut inopia torquentur aut copia strangulantur, miseri si deseruntur ab illa, miseriores si obruuntur; sicut deprensi mari Syrtico modo in sicco relinquuntur, modo torrente unda fluctuantur. 2. Euenit autem hoc nimia intemperantia et amore caeco rei; nam mala pro bonis petenti periculosum est adsequi. Vt feras cum labore periculoque uenamur et captarum quoque illarum sollicita possessio est — saepe enim laniant dominos — ita habent se magnae uoluptates: in magnum malum euasere captaeque cepere; quae quo plures maioresque sunt, eo ille minor ac plurium seruus est quem felicem uulgi appellat. 3. Permanere libet in hac etiamnunc huius rei imagine. Quemadmodum qui bestiarum cubilia indagat et

latos canibus circumdare saltus, ut illarum uestigia premat, potiora deserit multisque officiis renuntiat, ita qui sectatur uoluptatem omnia postponit et primam libertatem negligit ac pro uentre dependit, nec uoluptates sibi emit sed se uoluptatibus uendit.

XV.

1. 'Quid tamen' inquit 'prohibet in unum uirtutem uoluptatemque confundi et ita effici summum bonum ut idem et honestum et iucundum sit?' Quia pars honesti non potest esse nisi honestum nec summum bonum habebit sinceritatem suam, si aliquid in se uiderit dissimile meliori. 2. Ne gaudium quidem quod ex uirtute oritur, quamuis bonum sit, absoluti tamen boni pars est, non magis quam laetitia et tranquillitas, quamuis ex pulcherrimis causis nascantur; sunt enim ista bona, sed consequentia summum bonum, non consummantia. 3. Qui uero uirtutis uoluptatisque societatem facit et ne ex aequo quidem, fragilitate alterius boni quidquid in altero uigoris est hebetat libertatemque illam, ita demum si nihil se pretiosius nouit inuictam, sub iugum mittit. Nam, quae maxima seruitus est, incipit illi opus esse fortuna; sequitur uita anxia, suspiciosa, trepida, casum pauens, temporum suspensa momentis. 4. Non das uirtuti fundamentum graue, immobile, sed iubes illam in loco uolubili stare; quid autem tam uolubile est quam fortuitorum expectatio et corporis rerumque corpus adficientium uarietas? Quomodo hic potest deo parere et quidquid euenit bono animo excipere nec de fato queri casuum suorum benignus interpretes, si ad uoluptatum dolorumque punctiunculas concutitur? Sed ne patriae quidem bonus tutor aut uindex est nec amicorum propugnator, si ad uoluptates uergit. 5. Illo ergo summum bonum escendat unde nulla ui detrahitur, quo neque dolori neque spei nec timori sit aditus nec ulli rei quae deterius summi boni ius faciat; escendere autem illo sola uirtus potest. Illius gradu cliuus iste frangendus est; illa fortiter stabit et quidquid euenerit feret non patiens tantum sed etiam uolens, omnemque temporum difficultatem sciet legem esse naturae et ut bonus miles feret uulnera, numerabit cicatrices, et transuerberatus telis moriens amabit eum pro quo cadet imperatorem; habebit illud in animo uetus praeceptum: deum sequere. 6. Quisquis autem queritur et plorat et gemit, imperata facere ui cogitur et inuitus rapitur ad iussa nihilominus. Quae autem dementia est potius trahi quam sequi! tam mehercules quam stultitia et ignoratio condicionis est suae dolere quod deest aliquid tibi aut incidit durius, aequè mirari aut indigne ferre ea quae tam bonis accidunt quam malis, morbos dico, funera, debilitates et cetera ex transverso in uitam humanam incurrentia. 7. Quidquid ex uniuerſi constitutione patiendum est, magno suscipiatur animo: ad hoc sacramentum adacti sumus, ferre mortalia nec perturbari iis quae uitare non est nostrae potestatis. In regno nati sumus: deo parere libertas est.

XVI.

1. Ergo in uirtute posita est uera felicitas. Quid haec tibi uirtus suadebit? ne quid aut bonum aut malum existimes quod nec uirtute nec malitia continget; deinde ut sis immobilis et contra malum <et> ex bono, ut qua fas est deum effingas. 2. Quid tibi pro hac expeditione promittit? ingentia et aequa diuinis: nihil cogeris, nullo indigebis, liber eris, tutus indemnus; nihil frustra temptabis, nihil prohibeberis; omnia tibi ex sententia cedent, nihil aduersum accidet, nihil contra opinionem ac uoluntatem. 3. 'Quid ergo? uirtus ad beate uiuendum sufficit?' Perfecta illa et diuina quidni sufficiat, immo superfluat? Quid enim deesse potest extra desiderium omnium posito? Quid extrinsecus opus est ei qui omnia sua in se collegit? Sed ei qui ad uirtutem tendit, etiam si multum processit, opus est aliqua fortunae indulgentia adhuc inter humana luctanti, dum nodum illum exsoluit et omne uinculum mortale. Quid ergo interest? quod arte alligati sunt alii, adstricti [alii], districti quoque: hic qui ad superiora progressus est et se altius extulit laxam catenam trahit, nondum liber, iam tamen pro libero.

XVII.

1. Si quis itaque ex istis qui philosophiam conlatrant quod solent dixerit: 'quare ergo tu fortius loqueris quam uiuis? Quare et superiori uerba summittis et pecuniam necessarium tibi instrumentum existimas et damno moueris et lacrimas audita coniugis aut amici morte demittis et respicis famam et malignis sermonibus tangeris? 2. Quare cultius rus tibi est quam naturalis usus desiderat? Cur non ad praescriptum tuum cenas? Cur tibi nitidior supellex est? Cur apud te uinum aetate tua uetustius bibitur? Cur aurum disponitur? Cur arbores nihil praeter umbram daturae conseruntur? Quare uxor tua locupletis domus censum auribus gerit? Quare paedagogium pretiosa ueste succingitur? Quare ars est apud te ministrare nec temere et ut libet conlocatur argentum sed perite struitur et est aliquis scindendi obsonii magister?' Adice si uis: 'cur trans mare possides? Cur plura quam nosti? <Cur> turpiter aut tam neglegens es ut non noueris pauculos seruos aut tam luxuriosus ut plures habeas quam quorum notitiae memoria sufficiat?' 3. Adiuuabo postmodo conuicia et plura mihi quam putas obiciam, nunc hoc respondeo tibi: non sum sapiens et, ut maliuolentiam tuam pascam, nec ero. Exige itaque a me, non ut optimis par sim, sed ut malis melior: hoc mihi satis est, cotidie aliquid ex uitiiis meis demere et errores meos obiurgare. 4. Non perueni ad sanitatem, ne perueniam quidem; delenimenta magis quam remedia podagrae meae compono, contentus si rarius accedit et si minus uerminatur: uestris quidem pedibus comparatus, debiles, cursor sum. Haec non pro me loquor — ego enim in alto uitiorum omnium sum — sed pro illo cui aliquid acti est.

XVIII.

1. 'Aliter' inquis 'loqueris, aliter uiuis.' Hoc, malignissima capita et optimo cuique inimicissima, Platoni obiectum est, obiectum Epicuro, obiectum Zenoni; omnes enim isti dicebant non quemadmodum ipsi uiuerent, sed quemadmodum esset <et> ipsis uiuendum. De uirtute, non de me loquor, et cum uitiiis conuicium facio, in primis meis facio: cum potuero, uiuam quomodo oportet. 2. Nec malignitas me ista multo ueneno tincta deterrebit ab optimis; ne uirus quidem istud quo alios spargitis, quo uos necatis, me inpediet quominus perseuerem laudare uitam non quam ago sed quam agendam scio, quominus uirtutem adorem et ex interuallo ingenti reptabundus sequar. 3. Expectabo scilicet ut quicquam maliuolentiae inuiolatum sit, cui sacer nec Rutilius fuit nec Cato? Curet aliquis an istis nimis diues uideatur quibus Demetrius Cynicus parum pauper est? Virum acerrimum et contra omnia naturae desideria pugnantem, hoc pauperiorem quam ceteros Cynicos quod, cum sibi interdixerit habere, interdixit et poscere, negant satis egere. Vides enim: non uirtutis scientiam sed egestatis professus est.

XIX.

1. Diodorum, Epicureum philosophum, qui intra paucos dies finem uitae suae manu sua inposuit, negant ex decreto Epicuri fecisse quod sibi gulam praesequit: alii dementia uideri uolunt factum hoc eius, alii temeritatem. Ille interim beatus ac plenus bona conscientia reddidit sibi testimonium uita excedens laudauitque aetatis in portu et ad ancoram actae quietem et dixit quod uos inuiti audistis, quasi uobis quoque faciendum sit:

uixi et quem dederat cursum fortuna peregi.

2. De alterius uita, de alterius morte disputatis et ad nomen magnorum ob aliquam eximiam laudem uirorum, sicut ad occursum ignotorum hominum minuti canes, latratis; expedit enim uobis neminem uideri bonum, quasi aliena uirtus exprobratio delictorum ~omnium~ sit. Inuidi splendida cum sordibus uestris confertis nec intellegitis quanto id uestro detrimento audeatis. Nam si illi qui uirtutem sequuntur auari libidinosi ambitiosique sunt, quid uos estis quibus ipsum nomen uirtutis odio est? 3. Negatis quemquam praestare quae loquitur nec ad exemplar orationis suae uiuere: quid mirum, cum loquantur fortia ingentia, omnis humanas tempestates euadentia? Cum refigere se crucibus conentur — in quas unusquisque uestrum clauos suos ipse adigit — ad supplicium tamen acti stipitibus singulis pendent: hi qui in se ipsi animum aduertunt quot cupiditatibus tot crucibus distrahuntur. At maledici, in alienam contumeliam uenusti sunt. Crederem illis hoc uacare, nisi quidam ex patibulo suo spectatores conspuerent.

XX.

1. 'Non praestant philosophi quae loquuntur.' Multum tamen praestant quod loquuntur, quod honesta mente concipiunt. Vtinam quidem et paria dictis agerent: quid esset illis beatius? Interim non est quod contemnas bona uerba et bonis cogitationibus plena praecordia: studiorum salutarium etiam citra effectum laudanda tractatio est. 2. Quid mirum, si non escendunt in altum ardua adgressi? Sed si uir es, suspice, etiam si decidunt, magna conantis. Generosa res est respicientem non ad suas sed ad naturae suae uires conari alta temptare et mente maiora concipere quam quae etiam ingenti animo adornatis effici possunt. 3. Qui sibi hoc proposuit: 'ego mortem eodem uultu quo audiam uidebo. Ego laboribus, quanticumque illi erunt, parebo, animo fulciens corpus. Ego diuitias et praesentis et absentis aequae contemniam, nec si aliubi iacebunt tristior, nec si circa me fulgebunt animosior. Ego fortunam nec uenientem sentiam nec recedentem. Ego terras omnis tamquam meas uidebo, meas tamquam omnium. Ego sic uiuam quasi sciam aliis esse me natum et naturae rerum hoc nomine gratias agam: quo enim melius genere negotium meum agere potuit? unum me donauit omnibus, uni mihi omnis. 4. Quidquid habebō nec sordide custodiam nec prodige spargam; nihil magis possidere me credam quam bene donata. Non numero nec pondere beneficia nec ulla nisi accipientis aestimatione perpendam; numquam id mihi multum erit quod dignus accipiet. Nihil opinionis causa, omnia conscientiae faciam. Populo spectante fieri credam quidquid me conscio faciam. 5. Edendi mihi erit bibendique finis desideria naturae restringere, non implere aluum et exinanire. Ero amicis iucundus, inimicis mitis et facilis. Exorabor antequam roger, et honestis precibus occurram. Patriam meam esse mundum sciam et praesides deos, hos supra me circaque me stare factorum dictorumque censores. Quandoque aut natura spiritum repetet aut ratio dimittet, testatus exhibo bonam me conscientiam amasse, bona studia, nullius per me libertatem deminutam, minime meam' — qui haec facere proponet, uolet, temptabit, ad deos iter faciet, ne ille, etiam si non tenuerit, magnis tamen excidit ausis.

6. Vos quidem, quod uirtutem cultoremque eius odistis, nihil noui facitis. Nam et solem lumina aegra formidant et auersantur diem splendidum nocturna animalia, quae ad primum eius ortum stupent et latibula sua passim petunt, abduntur in aliquas rimas timida lucis.

Gemite et infelicem linguam bonorum exercete conuicio, hiate commordete: citius multo frangetis dentes quam inprimetis.

XXI.

1. ‘Quare ille philosophiae studiosus est et tam diues uitam agit? Quare opes contemnendas dicit et habet, uitam contemnendam putat et tamen uiuit, ualetudinem contemnendam, et tamen illam diligentissime tuetur atque optimam mauult? Et exilium uanum nomen putat et ait “quid enim est mali mutare regiones?” et tamen, si licet, senescit in patria? Et inter longius tempus et breuius nihil interesse iudicat, tamen, si nihil prohibet, extendit aetatem et in multa senectute placidus uiuet?’ 2. Ait ista debere contemni, non ne habeat, sed ne sollicitus habeat; non abigit illa a se, sed abeuntia securus prosequitur. Diuitias quidem ubi tutius fortuna deponet quam ibi unde sine querella reddentis receptura est? 3. M. Cato cum laudaret Curium et Coruncanium et illud saeculum in quo censorium crimen erat paucae argenti lamellae possidebat ipse quadragies sestertium, minus sine dubio quam Crassus, plus quam censorius Cato. Maiore spatio, si compararentur, proauum uicerat quam a Crasso uinceretur, et, si maiores illi obuenerent opes, non spreuisset. 4. Nec enim se sapiens indignum ullis muneribus fortuitis putat: non amat diuitias sed mauult; non in animum illas sed in domum recipit, nec respuit possessas sed continet, et maiorem uirtuti suae materiam subministrari uult.

XXII.

1. Quid autem dubii est quin haec maior materia sapienti uiro sit animum explicandi suum in diuitiis quam in paupertate, cum in hac unum genus uirtutis sit non inclinari nec deprimi, in diuitiis et temperantia et liberalitas et diligentia et dispositio et magnificentia campum habeat patentem? 2. Non contemnet se sapiens, etiam si fuerit minimae staturae, esse tamen se procerum uolet. Et exilis corpore aut amisso oculo ualebit, malet tamen sibi esse corporis robur, et hoc ita ut sciat esse aliud in se ualentius; malam ualitudinem tolerabit, bonam optabit. 3. Quaedam enim, etiam si in summam rei parua sunt [ait] et subduci sine ruina principalis boni possunt, adiciunt tamen aliquid ad perpetuam laetitiam et ex uirtute nascentem: sic illum adficiunt diuitiae et exhilarant ut nauigantem secundus et ferens uentus, ut dies bonus et in bruma ac frigore apricus locus. 4. Quis porro sapientium — nostrorum dico, quibus unum est bonum uirtus — negat etiam haec quae indifferentia uocamus habere aliquid in se pretii et alia aliis esse potiora? Quibusdam ex iis tribuitur aliquid honoris, quibusdam multum; ne erres itaque, inter potiora diuitiae sunt. 5. ‘Quid ergo’ inquis ‘me derides, cum eundem apud te locum habeant quem apud me?’ Vis scire quam non eundem habeant locum? mihi diuitiae si effluxerint, nihil auferent nisi semet ipsas, tu stupebis et uideberis tibi sine te relictus, si illae a te recesserint; apud me diuitiae aliquem locum habent, apud te summum; ad postremum diuitiae meae sunt, tu diuitiarum es.

XXIII.

1. Desine ergo philosophis pecunia interdicere: nemo sapientiam paupertate damnauit. Habebit philosophus amplas opes, sed nulli detractas nec alieno sanguine cruentas, sine cuiusquam iniuria partas, sine sordidis quaestibus, quarum tam honestus sit exitus quam introitus, quibus nemo ingemescat nisi malignus. In quantum uis exaggera illas: honestae sunt in quibus, cum multa sint quae sua quisque dici uelit, nihil est quod quisquam suum possit dicere. 2. Ille uero fortunae benignitatem a se non summouebit et patrimonio per honesta quaesito nec gloriabitur nec erubescet. Habebit tamen etiam quo gloriatur, si aperta domo et admissa in res suas ciuitate poterit dicere ‘quod quisque agnouerit tollat.’ O magnum uirum, <o> optime diuitem, si post hanc uocem tantundem habuerit! Ita dico: si tuto et securus scrutationem populo praebuerit, si nihil quisquam apud illum inuenerit quoui manus iniciat, audaciter et propalam erit diues. 3. Sapiens nullum denarium intra limen suum admittet male intransentem; idem magnas opes, munus fortunae fructumque uirtutis, non repudiabit nec excludet. Quid enim est quare illis bono loco inuideat? ueniant, hospitentur. Nec iactabit illas nec abscondet — alterum infruniti animi est, alterum timidi et pusilli, uelut magnum bonum intra sinum continentis — nec, ut dixi, eiciet illas e domo. 4. Quid enim dicet? utrumne ‘inutiles estis’ an ‘ego uti diuitiis nescio’? Quemadmodum etiam pedibus suis poterit iter conficere, escendere tamen uehiculum malet, sic pauper [si] poterit esse, diues uolet. Habebit itaque opes, sed tamquam leues et auolaturas, nec ulli alii eas nec sibi graues esse patietur. 5. Donabit — quid erexistis aures, quid expeditis sinum? — donabit aut bonis aut eis quos facere poterit bonos, donabit cum summo consilio dignissimos eligens, ut qui meminerit tam expensorum quam acceptorum rationem esse reddendam, donabit ex recta et probabili causa, nam inter turpes iacturas malum munus est; habebit sinum facilem, non perforatum, ex quo multa exeant et nihil excidat.

XXIV.

1. Errat si quis existimat facilem rem esse donare: plurimum ista res habet difficultatis, si modo consilio tribuitur, non casu et impetu spargitur. Hunc promereor, illi reddo; huic succurro, huius misereor; illum instruo dignum quem non deducat paupertas nec occupatum teneat; quibusdam non dabo quamuis desit, quia etiam si dedero erit defuturum; quibusdam offeram, quibusdam etiam inculcabo. Non possum in hac re esse negligens; numquam magis nomina facio quam cum dono. 2. 'Quid? tu' inquis 'recepturus donas?' Immo non perditurus: eo loco sit donatio unde repeti non debeat, reddi possit. Beneficium conlocetur quemadmodum thesaurus alte obrutus, quem non eruas nisi fuerit necesse. 3. Quid? domus ipsa diuitis uiri quantam habet bene faciendi materiam! Quis enim liberalitatem tantum ad togatos uocat? hominibus prodesse natura me iubet. Serui liberine sint hi, ingenui an libertini, iustae libertatis an inter amicos datae, quid refert? ubicumque homo est, ibi benefici locus est. Potest itaque pecunia etiam intra limen suum diffundi et liberalitatem exercere, quae non quia liberis debetur sed quia a libero animo proficiscitur ita nominata est. Haec apud sapientem nec umquam in turpes indignosque inpingitur nec umquam ita defetigata errat ut non, quotiens dignum inuenerit, quasi ex pleno fluat.

4. Non est ergo quod perperam exaudiat is quae honeste fortiter animose a studiosis sapientiae dicuntur. Et hoc primum adtendite: aliud est studiosus sapientiae, aliud iam adeptus sapientiam. Ille tibi dicit: 'optime loquor, sed adhuc inter mala uolutor plurima. Non est quod me ad formulam meam exigas: cum maxime facio me et formo et ad exemplar ingens attollo; si processero quantumcumque proposui, exige ut dictis facta respondeant.' Adsecutus uero humani boni summam aliter tecum aget et dicit: 'primum non est quod tibi permittas de melioribus ferre sententiam; mihi iam, quod argumentum est recti, contigit malis displicere. 5. Sed ut tibi rationem reddam qua nulli mortalium inuideo, audi quid promittam et quanti quaeque aestimem. Diuitias nego bonum esse; nam si essent, bonos facerent: nunc, quoniam quod apud malos deprenditur dici bonum non potest, hoc illis nomen nego. Ceterum et habendas

XXV.

1. Quid ergo sit quare illas non in bonis numerem, et quid praestem in illis aliud quam uos, quoniam inter utrosque conuenit habendas, audite. Pone in opulentissima me domo, pone <ubi> aurum argentumque in promiscuo usu sit: non suspiciam me ob ista quae, etiam si apud me, extra me tamen sunt. In Sublicium pontem me transfer et inter egentes abice: non ideo tamen me despiciam quod in illorum numero consedero qui manum ad stipem porrigunt. Quid enim ad rem an frustum panis desit cui non deest mori posse? Quid ergo est? domum illam splendidam malo quam pontem. 2. Pone <in> instrumentis splendentibus et delicato apparatu: nihilo me feliciorem credam quod mihi molle erit amiculum, quod purpura conuiuis meis substernetur. Muta stragula mea: nihilo miserius ero si lassa ceruix mea in maniculo faeni adquiescet, si super Circense tomentum per sarturas ueteris lintei effluens incubabo. Quid ergo est? malo quid mihi animi sit ostendere praetextatus et ~causatus~ quam nudis scapulis aut ~sententis~. 3. Omnes mihi ex uoto dies cedant, nouae gratulationes prioribus subtexantur: non ob hoc mihi placebo. Muta in contrarium hanc indulgentiam temporis, hinc illinc percutiatur animus damno luctu incursionibus uariis, nulla hora sine aliqua querella sit: non ideo me dicam inter miserrima miserum, non ideo aliquem execrabor diem; prouisum est enim a me ne quis mihi ater dies esset. Quid ergo est? malo gaudia temperare quam dolores compescere.'

4. Hoc tibi ille Socrates dicet: 'fac me uictorem uniuersarum gentium, delicatus ille Liberi currus triumphantem usque ad Thebas a solis ortu uehat, iura reges ~penatium~ petant: me hominem esse maxime cogitabo, cum deus undique consalutabor. Huic tam sublimi fastigio coniunge protinus praecipitem mutationem; in alienum inponar fericulum exornaturus uictoris superbi ac feri pompam: non humilior sub alieno curru agar quam in meo steteram. Quid ergo est? uincere tamen quam capi malo. 5. Totum fortunae regnum despiciam, sed ex illo, si dabitur electio, meliora sumam. Quidquid ad me uenerit bonum fiet, sed malo faciliora ac iucundiora ueniant et minus uexatura tractantem. Non est enim quod existimes ullam esse sine labore uirtutem, sed quaedam uirtutes stimulis, quaedam frenis egent. 6. Quemadmodum corpus in procliui retineri debet, aduersus ardua inpelli, ita quaedam uirtutes in procliui sunt, quaedam cliuum subeunt. An dubium est quin escendat nitatur obluctetur patientia fortitudo perseuerantia et quaecumque alia duris opposita uirtus est et fortunam subigit? 7. Quid ergo? non aequè manifestum est per deum ire liberalitatem temperantiam mansuetudinem? In his continemus animum ne prolabatur, in illis exhortamur incitamusque acerrime. Ergo paupertati adhibebimus illas quae pugnare sciunt fortiores, diuitiis illas diligentiores quae suspensum gradum ponunt et pondus suum sustinent. 8. Cum hoc ita diuisum sit, malo has in usu mihi esse quae exercendae tranquillius sunt quam eas quarum experimentum sanguis et sudor est. Ergo non ego aliter' inquit sapiens 'uiuo quam loquor, sed uos aliter auditis; sonus tantummodo uerborum ad aures uestras peruenit: quid significet non quaeritis.'

XXVI.

1. 'Quid ergo inter me stultum et te sapientem interest, si uterque habere uolumus?' Plurimum: diuitiae enim apud sapientem uirum in seruitute sunt, apud stultum in imperio; sapiens diuitiis nihil permittit, uobis diuitiae omnia; uos, tamquam aliquis uobis aeternam possessionem earum promiserit, adsuescitis illis et cohaeretis, sapiens tunc maxime paupertatem meditatur cum in mediis diuitiis constitit. 2. Numquam imperator ita paci credit ut non se praeparet bello quod, etiam si non geritur, indictum est: uos domus formonsa, tamquam nec ardere nec ruere possit, insolentes, uos opes, tamquam periculum omne transcenderint maioresque sint uobis quam quibus consumendis satis uirum habeat fortuna, obstupefaciunt. 3. Otiosi diuitiis luditis nec prouidetis illarum periculum, sicut barbari plerumque inclusi et ignari machinarum segnes laborem obsidentium spectant nec quo illa pertineant quae ex longinquo struuntur intellegunt. Idem uobis euenit: marcetis in uestris rebus nec cogitatis quot casus undique immineant iam iamque pretiosa spolia laturi. Sapientis quisquis abstulerit diuitias, omnia illi sua relinquet; uiuit enim praesentibus laetus, futuri securus.

4. 'Nihil magis' inquit ille Socrates aut aliquis alius cui idem <adfectus> aduersus humana atque eadem potestas est 'persuasi mihi quam ne ad opiniones uestras actum uitae meae flecterem. Solita conferte undique uerba: non conuiciari uos putabo sed uagire uelut infantes miserrimos.' 5. Haec dicet ille cui sapientia contigit, quem animus uitiorum immunis increpare alios, non quia odit, sed in remedium iubet. Adiciet his illa: 'existimatio me uestra non meo nomine sed uestro mouet, quia ~clamitatis~ odisse et lacescere uirtutem bonae spei eiuratio est. Nullam mihi iniuriam facitis, sed ne dis quidem hi qui aras euertunt. Sed malum propositum apparet malumque consilium etiam ibi ubi nocere non potuit. 6. Sic uestras halucinationes fero quemadmodum Iuppiter optimus maximus ineptias poetarum, quorum alius illi alas inposuit, alius cornua, alius adulterum illum induxit et abnoctantem, alius saeuum in deos, alius iniquum in homines, alius raptorem ingenuorum et cognatorum quidem, alius parricidam et regni alieni paternique expugnatorem:

quibus nihil aliud actum est quam ut pudor hominibus peccandi demeretur, si tales deos credidissent. 7. Sed quamquam ista me nihil laedant, uestra tamen uos moneo causa: suspicite uirtutem, credite iis qui illam diu secuti magnum quiddam ipsos et quod in dies maius appareat sequi clamant, et ipsam ut deos ac professores eius ut antistites colite et, quotiens mentio sacrarum litterarum interuenerit, fauete linguis. Hoc uerbum non, ut plerique existimant, a fauore trahitur, sed imperat silentium ut rite peragi possit sacrum nulla uoce mala obstrepente; quod multo magis necessarium est imperari uobis, ut quotiens aliquid ex illo proferetur oraculo, intenti et compressa uoce audiatis. 8. Cum sistrum aliquis concutiens ex imperio mentitur, cum aliquis secandi lacertos suos artifex brachia atque umeros suspensa manu cruentat, cum aliqua genibus per uiam repens ululat laurumque linteatus senex et medio lucernam die praeferens conclamat iratum aliquem deorum, concurritis et auditis ac diuinum esse eum, inuicem mutuum alentes stuporem, adfirmatis.’

Ecce Socrates ex illo carcere quem intrando purgavit omnique honestiorem curia reddidit proclamat: ‘qui iste furor, quae ista inimica dis hominibusque natura est infamare uirtutes et malignis sermonibus sancta uiolare? Si potestis, bonos laudate, si minus, transite; quod si uobis exercere taetram istam licentiam placet, alter in alterum incursitate. Nam cum in caelum insanitis, non dico sacrilegium facitis sed operam perditis. 2. Praebui ego aliquando Aristophani materiam iocorum, tota illa comicorum poetarum manus in me uenenatos sales suos effudit: inlustrata est uirtus mea per ea ipsa per quae petebatur; produci enim illi et temptari expedit, nec ulli magis intellegunt quanta sit quam qui uires eius lacessendo senserunt: duritia silicis nullis magis quam ferientibus nota est. 3. Praebeo me non aliter quam rupes aliqua in uadoso mari destituta, quam fluctus non desinunt, undecumque moti sunt, uerberare, nec ideo aut loco eam mouent aut per tot aetates crebro incursu suo consumunt. Adsilite, facite impetum: ferendo uos uincam. In ea quae firma et inexsuperabilia sunt quidquid incurrit malo suo uim suam exercet: proinde quaerite aliquam mollem cedentemque materiam in qua tela uestra figantur.

4. Vobis autem uacat aliena scrutari mala et sententias ferre de quoquam? “Quare hic philosophus laxius habitat? quare hic lautius cenat?” Papulas obseruatis alienas, obsiti plurimis ulceribus? hoc tale est quale si quis pulcherrimorum corporum naeuos aut uerrucas derideat quem foeda scabies depascitur. 5. Obicite Platoni quod petierit pecuniam, Aristoteli quod acceperit, Democrito quod neglexerit, Epicuro quod consumpserit; mihi ipsi Alcibiaden et Phaedrum obiectate, ~o uos usu~ maxime felices, cum primum uobis imitari uitia nostra contigerit. 6. Quin potius mala uestra circumspicitis, quae uos ab omni parte confodiunt, alia grassantia extrinsecus, alia in uisceribus ipsis ardentia? Non eo loco res humanae sunt, etiam si statum uestrum parum nostis, ut uobis tantum otii supersit ut in probra meliorum agitare linguam uacet.

XXVIII.

1. Hoc uos non intellegitis et alienum fortunae uestrae uultum geritis, sicut plurimi quibus in circo aut theatro desidentibus iam funesta domus est nec adnuntiatur malum. At ego ex alto prospiciens uideo quae tempestates aut immineant uobis paulo tardius rupturae nimbum suum aut iam uicinae uos ac uestra rapturae propius accesserint. Quid porro? nonne nunc quoque, etiam si parum sentitis, turbo quidam animos uestros rotat et inuoluit fugientes petentesque eadem et nunc in sublime adleuatos nunc in infima adlisos cir * * * ?’

1. * * * nobis magno consensu uitia commendant. Licet nihil aliud quod sit salutare temptemus, proderit tamen per se ipsum secedere: meliores erimus singuli. Quid quod secedere ad optimos uiros et aliquod exemplum eligere ad quod uitam derigamus licet? Quod <nisi> in otio non fit: tunc potest optineri quod semel placuit, ubi nemo interuenit qui iudicium adhuc inbecillum populo adiutore detorqueat; tunc potest uita aequali et uno tenore procedere, quam propositis diuersissimis scindimus. 2. Nam inter cetera mala illud pessimum est, quod uitia ipsa mutamus. Sic ne hoc quidem nobis contingit, permanere in malo iam familiari. Aliud ex alio placet uexatque nos hoc quoque, quod iudicia nostra non tantum praua sed etiam leuia sunt: fluctuamur aliudque ex alio comprehendimus, petita relinquimus, relictas repetimus, alternas inter cupiditatem nostram et paenitentiam uices sunt. 3. Pendemus enim toti ex alienis iudiciis et id optimum nobis uidetur quod petitores laudatoresque multos habet, non id quod laudandum petendumque est, nec uiam bonam ac malam per se aestimamus sed turba uestigiorum, in quibus nulla sunt redeuntium.

4. Dices mihi: 'quid ais, Seneca? deseris partes? Certe Stoici uestri dicunt: "usque ad ultimum uitae finem in actu erimus, non desinemus communi bono operam dare, adiuuare singulos, opem ferre etiam inimicis senili manu. Nos sumus qui nullis annis uacationem damus et, quod ait ille uir disertissimus,

nos sumus apud quos usque eo nihil ante mortem otiosum est ut, si res patitur, non sit ipsa mors otiosa." Quid nobis Epicuri praecepta in ipsis Zenonis principiis loqueris? Quin tu bene gnauiter, si partium piget, transfugis potius quam prodis?' 5. Hoc tibi in praesentia respondebo: 'numquid uis amplius quam ut me similem ducibus meis praestem? Quid ergo est? non quo miserint me illi, sed quo duxerint ibo.'

II.

1. Nunc probabo tibi non desciscere me a praeceptis Stoicorum; nam ne ipsi quidem a suis descuerunt, et tamen excusatissimus essem, etiam si non praecepta illorum sequerer sed exempla. Hoc quod dico in duas diuidam partes: primum, ut possit aliquis uel a prima aetate contemplationi ueritatis totum se tradere, rationem uiuendi quaerere atque exercere secreto; 2. deinde, ut possit hoc aliquis emeritis stipendiis, profligatae aetatis, iure optimo facere et ~ad alios actus animos~ referre, uirginum Vestalium more, quae annis inter officia diuisis discunt facere sacra et cum didicerunt docent.

III.

1. Hoc Stoicis quoque placere ostendam, non quia mihi legem dixerim nihil contra dictum Zenonis Chrysippiae committere, sed quia res ipsa patitur me ire in illorum sententiam, quoniam si quis semper unius sequitur, non in curia sed in factione est. Vtinam quidem iam tenerentur omnia et in aperto et confesso ueritas esset nihilque ex decretis mutaremus! nunc ueritatem cum eis ipsis qui docent quaerimus.

2. Duae maxime et in hac re dissident sectae, Epicureorum et Stoicorum, sed utraque ad otium diuersa uia mittit. Epicurus ait: ‘non accedet ad rem publicam sapiens, nisi si quid interuenerit’; Zenon ait: ‘accedet ad rem publicam, nisi si quid impedierit.’ 3. Alter otium ex proposito petit, alter ex causa; causa autem illa late patet. Si res publica corruptior est quam <ut> adiuuari possit, si occupata est malis, non nitetur sapiens in superuacuum nec se nihil profuturus inpendet; si parum habebit auctoritatis aut uirium nec illum erit admissura res publica, si ualetudo illum impediet, quomodo nauem quassam non deduceret in mare, quomodo nomen in militiam non daret debilis, sic ad iter quod inhabile sciet non accedet. 4. Potest ergo et ille cui omnia adhuc in integro sunt, antequam ullas experiatur tempestates, in tuto subsistere et protinus commendare se bonis artibus et inlibatum otium exigere, uirtutum cultor, quae exerceri etiam quietissimis possunt. 5. Hoc nempe ab homine exigitur, ut prosit hominibus, si fieri potest, multis, si minus, paucis, si minus, proximis, si minus, sibi. Nam cum se utilem ceteris efficit, commune agit negotium. Quomodo qui se deteriorem facit non sibi tantummodo nocet sed etiam omnibus eis quibus melior factus prodesse potuisset, sic quisquis bene de se meretur hoc ipso aliis prodest quod illis profuturum parat.

IV.

1. Duas res publicas animo complectamur, alteram magnam et uere publicam qua di atque homines continentur, in qua non ad hunc angulum respicimus aut ad illum sed terminos ciuitatis nostrae cum sole metimur, alteram cui nos adscripsit condicio nascendi; haec aut Atheniensium erit aut Carthaginensium aut alterius alicuius urbis quae non ad omnis pertineat homines sed ad certos. Quidam eodem tempore utrique rei publicae dant operam, maiori minorique, quidam tantum minori, quidam tantum maiori. 2. Huic maiori rei publicae et in otio deseruire possumus, immo uero nescio an in otio melius, ut quaeramus quid sit uirtus, una pluresne sint, natura an ars bonos uiros faciat; unum sit hoc quod maria terrasque et mari ac terris inserta complectitur, an multa eiusmodi corpora deus sparserit; continua sit omnis et plena materia ex qua cuncta gignuntur, an diducta et solidis inane permixtum; quae sit dei sedes, opus suum spectet an tractet, utrumne extrinsecus illi circumfusus sit an toti inditus; immortalis sit mundus an inter caduca et ad tempus nata numerandus. Haec qui contemplatur, quid deo praestat? ne tanta eius opera sine teste sint.

V.

1. Solemus dicere summum bonum esse secundum naturam uiuere: natura nos ad utrumque genuit, et contemplationi rerum et actioni. Nunc id probemus quod prius diximus. Quid porro? hoc non erit probatum, si se unusquisque consuluerit quantam cupidinem habeat ignota noscendi, quam ad omnis fabulas excitetur? 2. Nauigant quidam et labores peregrinationis longissimae una mercede perpetiuntur cognoscendi aliquid abditum remotumque. Haec res ad spectacula populos contrahit, haec cogit praeclusa rimari, secretiora exquirere, antiquitates euoluere, mores barbararum audire gentium. 3. Curiosum nobis natura ingenium dedit et artis sibi ac pulchritudinis suae conscia spectatores nos tantis rerum spectaculis genuit, perditura fructum sui, si tam magna, tam clara, tam subtiliter ducta, tam nitida et non uno genere formosa solitudini ostenderet. 4. Vt scias illam spectari uoluisse, non tantum aspici, uide quem nobis locum dederit: in media nos sui parte constituit et circumspectum omnium nobis dedit; nec erexit tantummodo hominem, sed etiam habilem contemplationis factura, ut ab ortu sidera in occasum labentia prosequi posset et uultum suum circumferre cum toto, sublime fecit illi caput et collo flexili inposuit; deinde sena per diem, sena per noctem signa producens nullam non partem sui explicuit, ut per haec quae optulerat oculis eius cupiditatem faceret etiam ceterorum. 5. Nec enim omnia nec tanta uisimus quanta sunt, sed acies nostra aperit sibi inuestigandi uiam et fundamenta uero iacit, ut inquisitio transeat ex apertis in obscura et aliquid ipso mundo inueniat antiquius: unde ista sidera exierint; quis fuerit uniuersi status, antequam singula in partes discederent; quae ratio mersa et confusa diduxerit; quis loca rebus adsignauerit, suapte natura grauia descenderint, euolauerint leuia, an praeter nisum pondusque corporum altior aliqua uis legem singulis dixerit; an illud uerum sit quo maxime probatur homines diuini esse spiritus, partem ac ueluti scintillas quasdam astrorum in terram desiluisse atque alieno loco haesisse. 6. Cogitatio nostra caeli munimenta perrumpit nec contenta est id quod ostenditur scire: ‘illud’ inquit ‘scrutor quod ultra mundum iacet, utrumne profunda uastitas sit an et hoc ipsum terminis suis cludatur; qualis sit habitus exclusis, informia et confusa sint, [an] in omnem partem tantundem loci optinentia, an et illa in aliquem cultum descripta sint; huic cohaereant mundo, an longe ab hoc secesserint et hic in uacuo uolutetur; indiuidua sint per quae struitur omne quod natum futurumque est, an continua eorum materia sit et per totum mutabilis; utrum contraria inter se elementa sint, an non pugnent sed per diuersa conspirent.’ 7. Ad haec quaerenda natus, aestima quam non multum acceperit temporis, etiam si illud totum sibi uindicat. Qui licet nihil facilitate eripi, nihil negligentia patiatur excidere, licet horas suas auarissime seruet et usque in ultimum aetatis humanae terminum procedat nec quicquam illi ex eo quod natura constituit fortuna concutiat, tamen homo ad immortalium cognitionem nimis mortalis est. 8. Ergo secundum naturam uiuo si totum me illi dedi, si illius admirator cultorque sum. Natura autem utrumque facere me uoluit, et agere et contemplationi uacare: utrumque facio, quoniam ne contemplatio quidem sine actione est.

VI.

1. 'Sed refert' inquis 'an ad illam uoluptatis causa accesseris, nihil aliud ex illa petens quam adsiduam contemplationem sine exitu; est enim dulcis et habet inlecebras suas.' Aduersus hoc tibi respondeo: aequè refert quo animo ciuilem agas uitam, an semper inquietus sis nec tibi umquam sumas ullum tempus quo ab humanis ad diuina respicias. 2. Quomodo res adpetere sine ullo uirtutum amore et sine cultu ingeni ac nudas edere operas minime probabile est (misceri enim ista inter se et conseri debent), sic imperfectum ac languidum bonum est in otium sine actu proiecta uirtus, numquam id quod didicit ostendens. 3. Quis negat illam debere profectus suos in opere temptare, nec tantum quid faciendum sit cogitare sed etiam aliquando manum exercere et ea quae meditata est ad uerum perducere? Quodsi per ipsum sapientem non est mora, si non actor deest sed agenda desunt, ecquid illi secum esse permittes? 4. Quo animo ad otium sapiens secedit? ut sciat se tum quoque ea acturum per quae posteris prosit. Nos certe sumus qui dicimus et Zenonem et Chrysippum maiora egisse quam si duxissent exercitus, gessissent honores, leges tulissent; quas non uni ciuitati, sed toti humano generi tulerunt. Quid est ergo quare tale otium non conueniat uiro bono, per quod futura saecula ordinet nec apud paucos contionetur sed apud omnis omnium gentium homines, quique sunt quique erunt? 5. Ad summam, quaero an ex praeceptis suis uixerint Cleanthes et Chrysippus et Zenon. <Non> dubie respondebis sic illos uixisse quemadmodum dixerant esse uiuendum: atqui nemo illorum rem publicam administrauit. 'Non fuit' inquis 'illis aut ea fortuna aut ea dignitas quae admitti ad publicarum rerum tractationem solet.' Sed idem nihilominus non segnem egere uitam: inuenerunt quemadmodum plus quies ipsorum hominibus prodesset quam aliorum discursus et sudor. Ergo nihilominus hi multum egisse uisi sunt, quamuis nihil publice agerent.

1. Praeterea tria genera sunt uitae, inter quae quod sit optimum quaeri solet: unum uoluptati uacat, alterum contemplationi, tertium actioni. Primum deposita contentione depositoque odio quod inplacabile diuersa sequentibus indiximus, uideamus ut haec omnia ad idem sub alio atque alio titulo perueniant: nec ille qui uoluptatem probat sine contemplatione est, nec ille qui contemplationi inseruit sine uoluptate est, nec ille cuius uita actionibus destinata est sine contemplatione est. 2. 'Plurimum' inquis 'discriminis est utrum aliqua res propositum sit an propositi alterius accessio.' Sit sane grande discrimen, tamen alterum sine altero non est: nec ille sine actione contemplatur, nec hic sine contemplatione agit, nec ille tertius, de quo male existimare consensimus, uoluptatem inertem probat sed eam quam ratione efficit firmam sibi; ita et haec ipsa uoluptaria secta in actu est. 3. Quidni in actu sit, cum ipse dicat Epicurus aliquando se recessurum a uoluptate, dolorem etiam adpetiturum, si aut uoluptati imminebit paenitentia aut dolor minor pro grauiore sumetur? 4. Quo pertinet haec dicere? ut appareat contemplationem placere omnibus; alii petunt illam, nobis haec statio, non portus est.

1. Adice nunc [huc] quod e lege Chrysippi uiuere otioso licet: non dico ut otium patiat, sed ut eligat. Negant nostri sapientem ad quamlibet rem publicam accessurum; quid autem interest quomodo sapiens ad otium ueniat, utrum quia res publica illi deest an quia ipse rei publicae, si omnibus defutura res publica est? Semper autem deerit fastidiose quaerentibus. 2. Interrogo ad quam rem publicam sapiens sit accessurus. Ad Atheniensium, in qua Socrates damnatur, Aristoteles ne damnetur fugit? in qua opprimit inuidia uirtutes? Negabis mihi accessurum ad hanc rem publicam sapientem. Ad Carthaginiensium ergo rem publicam sapiens accedet, in qua adsidua seditio et optimo cuique infesta libertas est, summa aequi ac boni uilitas, aduersus hostes inhumana crudelitas, etiam aduersus suos hostilis? Et hanc fugiet. 3. Si percensere singulas uolueris, nullam inueniam quae sapientem aut quam sapiens pati possit. Quodsi non inuenitur illa res publica quam nobis fingimus, incipit omnibus esse otium necessarium, quia quod unum praeferri poterat otio nusquam est. 4. Si quis dicit optimum esse nauigare, deinde negat nauigandum in eo mari in quo naufragia fieri soleant et frequenter subitae tempestates sint quae rectorem in contrarium rapiant, puto hic me uetat nauem soluere, quamquam laudet nauigationem. * * *

[1] Quantum inter philosophiam interest, Lucili uirorum optime, et ceteras artes, tantum interesse existimo in ipsa philosophia, inter illam partem quae ad homines, et hanc quae ad deos, spectat. Altior est haec, et animosior: multum permisit sibi: non fuit oculis contenta. Maius esse quiddam suspicata est, ac pulchrius, quod extra conspectum natura posuisset.

[2] Denique tantum inter duas interest, quantum inter Deum et hominem. Altera docet, quid in terris agendum sit: altera, quid agatur in coelo. Altera errores nostros discutit, et lumen admouet, quo discernantur ambigua uitae: altera multo supra hanc caliginem in qua uolutamur excedit, et e tenebris ereptos illo perducit, unde lucet.

[5] O quam contempta res est homo, nisi supra humana surrexit! Quamdiu cum affectibus colluctamur, quid magnifici facimus? etiamsi superiores sumus, portenta uincimus? Quid est, cur suspiciamus nosmetipsos, quia dissimiles deterrimis sumus? non uideo quare sibi placeat, qui robustior est ualetudinario.

[6] Multum interest inter uires et bonam ualetudinem. Effugisti uitia animi: non est tibi frons ficta, nec in alienam uoluntatem sermo compositus, nec cor inuolutum, nec auaritia, quae quidquid omnibus abstulit, sibi ipsi negat; nec luxuria pecuniam turpiter amittens, quam turpius reparet; nec ambitio, quae te ad dignitatem nisi per indigna non ducet. Nihil adhuc consecutus es; multa effugisti, te nondum! Virtus enim ista, quam affectamus, magnifica est non quia per se beatum est malo caruisse, sed quia animum laxat, ac praeparat ad cognitionem coelestium, dignumque efficit, qui in consortium Dei ueniat. [7] Tunc consummatum habet plenumque bonum sortis humanae, cum, calcato omni malo, petit altum, et in interiorem naturae sinum uenit. Tunc iuuat inter sidera ipsa uagantem, diuitum pauimenta ridere, et totam cum auro suo terram: non illo tantum, dico, quod egressit, et signandum monetae dedit, sed et illo, quod in occulto seruat posterorum auaritiae.

[8] Non potest ante contemnere porticus, et lacunaria ebore fulgentia, et tonsiles siluas, et deriuata in domos flumina, quam totum circumeat mundum, et terrarum orbem superne despiciens angustum, et magna ex parte opertum mari, etiam qua exstat, late squalidum, et aut ustum aut rigentem. Sibi ipse ait: Hoc est illud punctum quod inter tot gentes ferro et igni diuiditur?

[9] O quam ridiculi sunt mortalium termini! Ultra Istrum Dacus non exeat: Strymo Thracas includat: Parthis obstet Euphrates: Danubius Sarmatica ac Romana distermine: Rhenus Germaniae modum faciat: Pyrenaeus medium inter Gallias et Hispanias iugum extollat: inter Aegyptum et Aethiopias arenarum inculta uastitas iaceat!

[10] Si quis formicis det intellectum hominis, nonne et illae unam aream in multas prouincias diuident? Cum te in illa uere magna sustuleris; quoties uidebis exercitus subrectis ire uexillis et quasi magnum aliquid agatur, equitem modo ulteriora explorantem, modo a lateribus affusum, libebit dicere: "It nigrum campis agmen": formicarum iste discursus est, in angusto laborantium. Quid illis et nobis interest, nisi exigui mensura corpusculi?

[15] Nec haec intra uulgum dementia est, sapientiam quoque professas contigit. Sunt qui patent, sibi ipsis animum esse, et quidem prouidum ac dispensantem singula, et sua, et aliena: hoc autem uniuersum, in quo nos quoque sumus, expers esse consilii, et aut ferri temeritate quadam, aut natura nesciente quid faciat.

inquis, ista proderunt? Si nihil aliud, hoc certe sciam, omnia angusta esse, mensus Deum. Sed haec deinde.

[1,1] Nunc, ut ad propositum opus ueniam, audi, quid de ignibus sentiam, quos aer transuersos agit. Magna illos ui excuti argumentum est, quod obliqui feruntur et praerapida celeritate: apparet illos non ire sed proici. Ignium multae uariaeque facies sunt.

[1,2] Aristoteles quoddam genus horum capram uocat: si me interrogaueris quare, prior mihi rationem reddas oportet, quare haedi uocentur; si autem, quod commodissimum est, conuenerit inter nos, ne alter alterum interroget, quod scit illum respondere non posse, satius erit de re ipsa quaerere quam mirari, quid ita Aristoteles globum ignis appellauerit capram. Talis enim fuit forma eius, qui bellum aduersus Persen Paulo gerente a lunari magnitudine apparuit.

[1,3] Vidimus nos quoque non semel flammam ingentis pilae specie, quae tamen in ipso cursu suo dissipata est. Vidimus circa diui Augusti excessum simile prodigium, uidimus eo tempore, quo de Seiano actum est; nec Germanici mors sine denuntiatione tali fuit.

[1,4] Dices mihi: ‘Ergo tu in tantis erroribus es, ut existimes deos mortium signa praemittere et quicquam in terris esse tain magnum, quod perire mundus sciat?». Erit aliud istius rei tempus: uidebimus an rerum omnium certus ordo ducatur et alia aliis ita implexa sint, ut quod antecedit aut causa sit sequentium aut signum; uidebimus an diis humana curae sint, an series ipsa, quid factura sit, certis rerum notis nuntiet.

[1,5] Interim illud existimo, eiusmodi ignes existere aere uehementius trito, cum inclinatio eius in alteram partem facta est et non cessit sed inter se pugnavit: ex hac uexatione nascuntur trabes et globi et faces et ardores. At cum leuius collisus et, ut ita dicam, frictus est, minora lumina excutiuntur, ‘crinemque uolantia sidera ducunt».

[1,6] Tunc ignes tenuissimi iter exile designant et caelo producant. Ideo nulla sine eiusmodi spectaculis nox est, non enim opus est ad efficienda ista magno aeris motu. Denique, ut breuiter dicam, eadem ratione fiunt ista, qua fulmina, sed ui minore: quemadmodum nubes collisae mediocriter fulgurationes efficient, maiore impetu impulsae fulmina, sic quanto illas minus presserit minor uis, tanto leuiores fulmina emittent.

[1,7] Aristoteles rationem eiusmodi reddit: 'Varia et multa terrarum orbis expire, quaedam umida quaedam sicca, quaedam calentia quaedam concipiendis ignibus idonea». Nec mirum est, si terrae omnis generis et uaria euaporatio est, cum in caelo quoque non unus appareat color rerum, sed acrior sit Caniculae rubor, Martis remissior, Iouis nullus in lucem puram nitore perducto.

[1,8] Necessesse est ergo in magna copia corpusculorum, quae terrae eiectant et in superiorem agunt partem, aliqua in nubes peruenire alimenta ignium, quae non tantum collisa possint ardere sed etiam afflata radiis solis. Nam apud nos quoque ramenta sulphure aspersa ignem ex interuallo trahunt.

[1,9] Veri ergo simile est talem materiam inter nubes congregatam facile succendi et minores maioresue ignes existere, prout plus illis fuit aut minus uirium. Illud enim stultissimum, existimare aut decidere stellas aut transilire aut aliquid illis auferri et abradi:

[1,10] nam si hoc fuisset, etiam defuissent; nulla enim nox est, qua non plurimae ire et in diuersum uideantur abduci. Atqui quo solet quaeque inuenitur loto, <et> magnitudo sua singulis constat: sequitur ergo, ut infra illas ista nascantur et cito intercidant, quia sine fundamento et sede certa sunt.

[1,11] 'Quare ergo non etiam interdum transferuntur?». Quid, si dicas stellas interdum non esse, quia non apparent? Quemadmodum illae latent et solis fulgore obumbrantur, sic faces quoque transcurrunt et interdum, sed abscondit illas diurni luminis claritas. Si quando tamen tanta uis emicuit, ut etiam aduersus diem uindicare sibi fulgorem suum possint, apparent.

[1,12] Nostra certe aetas non semel uidit diurnas faces, alias ab oriente in occidentem uersas, alias ab occasu in ortum. Argumentum tempestatis nautae putant, cum multae transuolant stellae. Quod si uentorum signum est, ibi est, unde uenti sunt, id est in aere, qui medius inter lunam terrasque est.

[1,13] In magna tempestate apparere quasi stellae solent uelo insidentes; adiuuari se tunc periclitantes aestimant Pollucis et Castoris numine, causa autem melioris spei est, quod iam apparet frangi tempestatem et desinere uentos: alioquin ferrentur ignes, non sederent.

[1,15] nam sereno quoque aliquando caelo tonat ex eadem causa qua nubilo, aere inter se colliso, qui, etiamsi est lucidior ac siccior, coire tamen et facere corpora quaedam similia nubibus potest, quae percussa reddant sonum. Quando ergo fiunt trabes, quando clipei et uastorum imagines ignibm? Ubi in talem materiam similis incidit causa sed maior.

[2,1] Videamus nunc, quemadmodum fiat is fulgor, qui sidera circumuenit. Memoriae proditum est, quo die urbem diuus Augustus’ Apollonia reuersus intrauit, circa solem uisum coloris uarii circulum, qualis esse in arcu solet. Hunc Graeci G-halo uocant, nos dicere coronam aptissime possumus. Quae quemadmodum fieri dicatur, exponam.

[2,3] Ob hoc tales splendores Graeci areas uocauerunt, quia fere terendis frugibus destinata loca rotunda sunt. Non est autem, quod existimemus istas, siue areae siue coronae sunt, in uicinia siderum fieri. Plurimum enim ab his abstint, quamuis cingere ea et coronare uideantur: non longe a terra fit talis effigies, quam uisus noster solita imbecillitate deceptus circa ipsum sidus putat positam.

[2,4] In uicinia autem stellarum et solis nihil tale fieri potest, quia illic tenuis aether est. Nam formae crassis demum spissisque corporibus imprimi solent, in subtilibus non habent, ubi consistant aut haereant: in balneis quoque circa lucernam tale quiddam aspici solet ob aeris densi obscuritatem, frequentissime autem austro, cum caelum maxime graue et spissum est.

[2,5] Nonnumquam paulatim diluuntur et desinunt, nonnumquam ab aliqua parte rumpuntur et inde uentum nautici expectant, unde contextus coronae periit: si a septemtrione discessit, aquilo erit, si ab occidente, fauonius. Quod argumentum est intra eam partem caeli has fieri coronas, intra quam uenti quoque esse solent: superiora non habent coronas, quia ne uentos quidem.

[2,6] His argumentis et illud adice, numquam coronam colligi nisi stabili aere et pigro uento; aliter non solet aspici. Nam qui stat aer, impelli et diduci et in aliquam faciem fingi potest; is autem qui fluit ne feritur quidem lumine (non enim resistit nec formatur, quia prima quaeque pars eius dissipatur):

[2,7] numquam ergo ullum sidus talem sibi effigiem circumdabit, nisi cum aer erit densus atque immotus et ob hoc custodiens incidentem in se rotundi lineam luminis. Nec sine causa; repete enim exemplum, quod paulo ante' proposui: lapillus in piscinam aut lacum et alligatam aquam missus circulos facit innumerabiles; at hoc idem non faciet in flumine (quare? Quia omnem figuram fugiens aqua disturbat): idem ergo in aere euenit, ut ille, qui manet, possit figurari, at ille, qui rapitur et currit, non det sui potestatem et omnem ictum uenientemque formam ex eo turbet.

[2,9] Quare id accadat, ex his, quae iam exposui, intellegi potest. Nam si facies uniuersa subsedit, apparet temperatum esse aera, et sic placidum; si ab una parte intercisa est, apparet inde aera incumbere: et ideo illa regio uentum dabit. At cum undique lacerata et concerpta est, manifestum est a pluribus partibus in illam impetum fieri et inquietum aera hinc atque illinc assilire: itaque ex hac inconstantia caeli tam multa temptantis et undique laborantis apparet futura tempestas uentorum plurium.

[2,10] Hae coronae noctibus fere circa lunam et alias stellas notantur, interdiu raro, adeo ut quidam ex Graecis negauerint omnino eas fieri, cum illos historiae coarguant. Causa autem raritatis haec est, quod solis fortius lumen est et aer ipse agitatus ab illo calefactusque solutor: lunae inertior uis est ideoque facilius a circumposito aere sustinetur;

[2,11] aequae cetera sidera infirma sunt nec perrumpere aera ui sua possunt: excipitur itaque illorum imago et in materia solidiore ac minus cedente seruatur. Debet enim aer nec tam spissus esse, ut excludat ac summoueat a se lumen immissum, nec tam tenuis aut solutus, ut nullam uenientibus radiis moram praebeat. Haec noctibus temperatura contingit, cum sidera circumiectum aera luce leni non pugnaciter nec aspere ferunt spissioremq̃ue, quam solet esse interdiu, inficiunt.

[3,1] At contra arcus nocte non fit aut admodum raro, quia luna non habet tantum uirum, ut nubes transeat et illis colorem suffundat, qualem accipiunt sole perstrictae. Sic enim formam arcus discoloris efficiunt: quia aliae partes in nubibus tumidiores sunt aliae summissiores, quaedam crassiores, quam ut solem transmittant, aliae imbecilliores, quam ut excludant, haec inaequalitas alternis lucem umbramque permiscet et exprimit illam mirabilem arcus uarietatem.

[3,2] Altera causa arcus eiusmodi redditur: uidemus, cum fistula aliquo loco rupta est, aquam per tenue foramen elidi, quae sparsa contra solem oblique positum faciem arcus repraesentat. Idem uidebis accidere, si quando uolueris obseruare fullonem: cum os aqua impleuit et uestimenta tendiculis diducta leuiter aspergit, apparet uarios edi colores in illo aere asperso, quales fulgere in arcu solent.

[3,4] Hoc ita esse quidam negant. Poterat enim uerum uideri, si arcus duos tantum haberet colores, si ex lumine umbraque constaret: sed nunc, <ut ait poeta,> “diuersi niteant cum mille colores, transitus ipse tamen spectantia lumina fallit: usque adeo quod tangit idem est, tamen ultima distant”. Videmus in eo aliquid flammei aliquid lutei aliquid caerulei et alia in picturae modum subtilibus lineis ducta, [ut ait poeta,] an dissimiles colores sint, scire non possis, nisi cum primis extrema contuleris: nam commissura decipit, usque eo mira arte naturae; quod a simillimo coepit, in dissimillimo desinit. Quid ergo istic duo colores faciunt lucis atque umbrae, cum innumerabilium ratio reddenda sit?

[3,6] Hoc sic colligunt: pelues, inquit, mille sereno die porte, omnes habebunt imagines solis; in singulis foliis dispone guttas, singulae habebunt imaginem solis. At contra ingens stagnum non amplius habebit quam unam imaginem. Quare? Quia omnis circumscripta leuitas et circumdata suis finibus speculum est. Itaque piscinam ingentis magnitudinis insertis parietibus diuide, totidem illa habebit imagines solis, quot lacus habuerit; relinque illam sic ut est: diffusa semel tibi imaginem reddet. Nihil refert, quam exiguus sit umor aut lacus: si determinatus est, speculum est. Ergo stillicidia illa infinita, quae imber cadens defert, totidem specula sunt, totidem solis facies habent; hae contra intuenti perturbatae apparent, nec dispiciuntur interualla, quibus singulae distant, spatio prohibente discerni; unde pro singulis apparet una facies turbida ex omnibus.

[3,8] Itaque quod in aliis efficit densus aer, in his facit omnis; satis enim ualet qualiscumque ad imbecillam aciem repellendam. Longe autem magis uisum nobis nostrum remittit aqua, quia crassior est et peruinci non potest, sed radios luminum nostrorum moratur et eo, unde exierunt, reflectit. Ergo cum multa stillicidia sint, totidem specula sunt; sed quia parua sunt, solis colorem sine figura exprimunt. Deinde cum in stillicidiis innumerabilibus et sine interuallo cadentibus reddatur idem color, incipit facies esse non multarum imaginum et intermissarum, sed unius longae atque continuae.

[3,9] “Quomodo”, inquis, “tu mihi multa milia imaginum istic esse dicis, ubi ego nullam uideo? Et quare, cum solis color unus sit, imaginum diuersus est?” Ut et haec, quae proposuisti, refellam et alia, quae non minus refellenda sunt, illud dicam oportet: nihil esse acie nostra fallacius non tantum in his, a quibus subtiliter peruidendis illam locorum diuersitas submouet, sed etiam in his quoque, quae ad manum cernit: remus tenui aqua tegitur et fracti speciem reddit; poma per uitrum aspicientibus multo maiora sunt; columnarum interualla porticus longior iungit.

[3,10] Ad ipsum solem reuertere: hunc, quem toto terrarum orbe maiorem probat ratio, acies nostra sic contraxit, ut sapientes uiri pedalem esse contenderent; quem uelocissimum omnium scimus, nemo nostrum moueri uidet, nec ire crederemus, nisi appareret isse. Mundum ipsum praecipiti uelocitate labentem et ortus occasusque intra momentum temporis reuoluentem nemo nostrum sentit procedere. Quid ergo miraris, si oculi nostri imbrium stillicidia non separant et ex ingenti spatio intuentibus minutarum imaginum discrimen interit?

[3,11] Illud dubium esse nulli potest, quin arcus imago solis sit roscida et caua nube concepta. Quod ex hoc tibi appareat: numquam non aduersa soli est, sublimis aut humilis, prout ille se submisit aut sustulit, in contrarium mota; illo enim descendente altior est, alto depressior. Saepe talis nubes a latere solis est nec arcum efficit, quia non ex recto imaginem trahit.

[3,12] Varietas autem non ob aliam causam fit, quam quia pars coloris sole est, pars a nube: in illa umor modo caeruleas lineas modo uirides modo purpurae similes et luteas aut igneas ducit, duobus coloribus hanc uarietatem efficientibus, remisso et intento. Sic enim et purpura eodem conchylio non in unum modum exit: interest, quamdiu macerata sit, crassius medicamentum an aquatius traxerit, saepius mersa sit et excocta an semel tincta.

[3,13] Non est ergo mirum si, cum duae res sint, sol et nubes, id est corpus et speculum, tam multa genera colorum exprimuntur, quam multis generibus possunt ista incitari aut relanguescere: alius est enim color ex igneo lumine, alius ex obtunso et leniore.

[3,14] In aliis rebus uaga inquisitio est, ubi non habemus, quod manu tenere possimus, et late coniectura mittenda est; hic apparet duas causas esse arcus, solem nubemque, quia nec sereno umquam fit nec nubilo ita, ut sol lateat: ergo utique ex his est, quorum sine altero non est.

[4,2] Inter argumenta sic nascentis arcus pono, quod celerrime nascitur. Ingens enim uariumque corpus intra momentum subtexitur caelo et aequè celeriter aboletur; nihil autem tam cito redditur quam a speculo imago; non enim facit quicquam sed ostendit.

[4,3] Parianus Artemidorus adicit etiam, quale genus nubis esse debeat, quod talem solis imaginem reddit: Si speculum, inquit, concauum feceris, quod sit sectae pilae pars, si extra medium constiteris, quicumque iuxta te steterint, inuersi tibi uidebuntur et propiores a te quam a speculo;

[4,4] idem, inquit, euenit, cum rotundam et cauam nubem intuemur <intimo> a latere, ut solis imago a nube discedat propiorque nobis sit et in nos magis conuersa. Color illi igneus a sole est, caeruleus a nube, ceteri utriusque mixturae.

[5,1] Contra haec illa dicuntur. De speculis duae opiniones sunt: alii enim in illis simulacra cerni putant, id est corporum nostrorum figuras a nostris corporibus emissas ac separatas; alii non aiunt imagines in speculo sed ipsa aspici corpora retorta oculorum acie et in se rursus reflexa. Nunc nihil ad rem pertinet, quomodo uideamus quodcumque uidemus;

[5,6] sed, quae modo <est> imago, similis reddi debet e speculo. Quid autem est tam dissimile quam sol et arcus, in quo neque figura solis neque color neque magnitudo apparet? Arcus longe amplior est longeque ea parte, qua fulget, rubicundior quam sol, ceteris uero coloribus diuersus.

[5,3] Deinde cum uelis speculum inesse aeri, des oportet mihi eandem leuitatem corporis, eandem aequalitatem, eandem nitorem. Atqui nullae nubes habent similitudinem speculi: per medias saepe transimus nec in illis nos cernimus; qui montium summa conscendunt, despectant nubem nec tamen imaginem in illa suam aspiciunt.

[5,4] “Singula stillicidia singula specula sunt”. Concedo; sed illud nego, ex stillicidiis constare nubem. Habet enim quaedam, ex quibus fieri stillicidia possint, non ipsa; ne aquam quidem habent nubes sed materiam futurae aquae.

[5,5] Concedamus tibi et guttas innumerabiles nubibus inesse et illas faciem reddere: non tamen unam omnes reddunt, sed singulae singulas. Deinde inter se specula coniunge: in unam imaginem non coibunt, sed unumquodque in se similitudinem uisae rei claudet. Sunt quaedam specula ex multis minutisque composita, quibus si unum ostenderis hominem, populus apparet unaquaque particula faciem suam exprimente; haec cum sint coniuncta et simul collocata, nihilominus seducunt imagines suas et ex uno quidem turbam efficiunt, ceterum cateruam illam non confundunt sed diremptam in facies singulas distrahunt: arcus auteur uno circumscriptus est ductu, una totius est facies.

[5,6] Quid ergo?, inquit. Non et aqua rupta fistula sparsa et remo excussa habere quiddam simile his, quos uidemus in arcu, coloribus solet? Verum est, sed non ex hac causa, ex qua tu uideri uis, quia unaquaeque stilla recipiat imaginem solis. Citius enim cadunt stillae, quam ut concipere imagines possint: standum est, ut id, quod imitantur, excipiant. Quid ergo fit? Colorem, non imaginem ducunt. Alioquin, ut ait Nero Caesar disertissime, “colla Cytheriacae splendent agitata columbae” et uariis coloribus pauonum ceruix, quotiens aliquo deflectitur, nitet: numquid ergo dicemus specula eiusmodi plumas, quarum omnis inclinatio in colores nouos transit?

[5,8] Quid enim simile speculis habent nubes, cum illa non perluceant, hae transmittant lucem, illa densa et coacta, hae rarae sint; illa eiusdem materiae tota, hae e diuersis temere compositae et ob hoc discordes nec diu cohaesurae? Praeterea uidemus ortu solis partem quandam caeli rubere, uidemus nubes aliquando ignei coloris: quid ergo prohibet, quomodo hunc unum colorem accipiunt solis occursu, sic multos ab illis trahi, quamuis non habeant speculi potentiam?

[5,9] Modo, inquit, inter argumenta ponebas semper arcum contra solem excitari, quia ne a speculo quidem imago redderetur nisi aduerso. Hoc, inquit, commune nobis est: nam quemadmodum opponendum est speculo id, cuius in se imaginem transferat, sic, ut nubes infici possint, ita sol ad hoc apte ponendus est; non enim idem facit, undecumque effulsit, et ad hoc opus est radiorum idoneus ictus.

[5,10] Haec dicuntur ab his, qui uideri uolunt nubem colorari. Posidoniu et hi, qui speculari ratione talem effici iudicant uisum, hoc respondent: "Si ullus esset in arcu color, permaneret et uiseretur eo manifestius, quo propius: nunc imago arcus, ex longinquo clara, interit, cum ex uicino uentum est."

[5,13] In eadem sententia sum qua Posidonius, ut arcum iudicem fieri nube formata in modum concaui speculi et rotundi, cui forma sit partis e pila secta. Hoc probari, nisi geometrae adiuuerint, non potest, qui argumentis nihil dubii relinquentibus docent solis illam esse effigiem non similem. Neque enim ommia ad uerum specula respondent.

[5,14] Sunt, quae uidere extimescas (tantam deformitatem corrupta facie uisentium reddunt, seruata similitudine in peius); sunt, quae cum uideris, placere tibi uires tuae possint (in tantum lacerti crescunt et totius corporis super humanam magnitudinem habitus augetur); sunt, quae dextras facies ostendant, sunt, quae sinistras, sunt, quae detorqueant et uertant: quid ergo mirum est eiusmodi speculum in nube quoque fieri, quo solis species uitiosa reddatur?

[6,2] Quare tamen, si imago solis est arcus, longe ipso sole maior apparet? Quia est alicuius speculi natura talis, ut maiora multo, quae uidit, ostendat et in portentuosam magnitudinem augeat formas, alicuius inuicem talis, ut minuat.

[6,3] Illud mihi dic, quare in orbem eat facies, nisi orbi redditur? Dices enim fortasse, unde sit illi color uarius: unde talis figura sit, non dices, nisi aliquod exemplar, ad quod formetur, ostenderis. Nullum autem quam solis est, a quo cum tu quoque fatearis illi colorem dari, sequitur, ut et detur forma. Denique inter me teque conuenit colores illos, quibus caeli regio depingitur, a sole esse; illud unum inter nos non conuenit: tu dicis illum colorem esse, ego uideri; qui siue est, siue uidetur, a sole est. Tu non expadies, quare color ille subito desinat, cum omnes fulgores paulatim discutiantur.

[6,5] At maior aliquanto est arcus quam sol. Dixi modo fieri specula, quae multiplicent omne corpus, quod imitantur. Illud adiciam, omnia per aquam uidentibus longe esse maiora: litterae quamuis minutae et obscurae per uitream pilam aqua plenam maiores clarioresque cernuntur; poma formosiora quam sunt uidentur, si innatant uitro. Sidera ampliora per nubem aspicienti uidentur, quia acies nostra in umido labitur nec apprehendere quod uult fideliter potest. Quod manifestum fiet, si poculum impleueris aqua et in id conieceris anulum: nam cum in ipso fundo anulus iaceat, facies eius in summa aqua redditur.

[6,6] Quicquid uidetur per umorem, longe amplius uero est: quid mirum maiorem reddi imaginem solis, quae in nube umida uisitur, cum ex duabus causis hoc accadat? Quia in nube est aliquid uitro simile, quod potest per lucere, est aliquid et aquae, quam, etiamsi nondum habet, iam parat, id est similis eius natura est, in quam ex sua uertatur.

[7,1] ‘Quoniam’, inquit, ‘uitri fecisti mentionem, ex hoc ipso argumentum contra te sumam. Virgula solet fieri uitrea, striata uel pluribus angulis in modum clauae torosa: haec si in transuersum solem accipit, colorem talem, qualis in arcu uideri solet, reddit, ut scias non imaginem hic solis esse sed coloris imitationem ex percussu’.

[7,2] Primum in hoc argumento multa pro me sunt: quod apparet a sole fieri; quod apparet leue quiddam esse debere et simile speculo, quod solem percutiat; deinde quod apparet non fieri ullum colorem sed speciem falsi coloris, qualem, ut dixi, columbarum ceruix et sumit et ponit, utcumque deflectitur. Hoc autem et in speculo est, cui nullus inditur color, sed simulatio quaedam coloris alieni.

[7,3] Unum hoc tantum mihi soluendum est, quod non uisitur in ista uirgula solis imago; cuius bene exprimendae capax non est: ita conatur quidem reddere imaginem, quia leuis est materia et ad hoc habilis, sed non potest, quia enormiter facta est. Si apta fabricata foret, totidem redderet soles, quot habuisset in se toros. Quae quia discernuntur inter se nec satis in uicem speculi nitent, incohant tantum imagines nec exprimunt et ob ipsam uiciniam turbant et in speciem coloris unius adducunt.

[8,1] At quare arcus non implet orbem, sed pars dimidia eius uidetur, cum plurimum porrigitur incuruaturque? Quidam ita opinantur: “Sol, cum sit multo altior nubibus, a superiore illas tantum percutit parte; sequitur, ut inferior pars earum non tingatur lumine:

ergo cum ab una parte solem accipiant, unam eius partem imitantur, quae numquam dimidia maior est.”

[8,2] Hoc argumentum parum potens est. Quare? Quia, quamvis sol ex superiore parte sit, totam tamen percutit nubem, ergo et tingit. Quidni? cum radios transmittere soleat et omnem densitatem perrumpere. Deinde contrariam rem proposito suo dicunt. Nam si superior est sol et ideo superiori tantum parti nubium affunditur, numquam terra tenus descendet arcus: atqui usque in humum demittitur.

[8,3] Praeterea numquam non contra solem arcus est; nihil autem ad rem pertinet, supra infraue sit, quia totum quod contra est latus uerberatur. Deinde aliquando arcum et occidens facit; tum certe ex inferiore parte nubes ferit terris propinquus: atqui et tunc dimidia pars est, quamvis solem nubes ex humili et sordido accipiant.

[8,4] Nostri, qui sic in nube, quomodo in speculo, lumen uolunt reddi, nubem cauam faciunt et sectae pilae partem, quae non potest totum orbem reddere, quia ipsa pars orbis est. Proposito accedo, argumento non consentio. Nam si in concauo speculo tota facies oppositi orbis exprimitur, et in semiorbe nihil prohibet totam aspici pilam.

[8,5] Etiamnunc diximus circulos apparere soli lunaeque in similitudinem arcus circumdatos: quare ille circulus iungitur, in arcu numquam? Deinde quare semper concauae nubes solem accipiunt, non aliquando planae et tumentes?

[9,1] Nunc de uirgis dicendum est, quas non minus pictas uariasque aequae pluuiarum signa solemus accipere. In quibus non multum operae consumendum est, quia uirgae nihil aliud sunt quam imperfecti arcus. Nam facies illis est quidem picta, sed nihil curuati habens: in rectum iacent.

[9,2] Fiunt autem iuxta solem fere in nube umida et iam se spargente. Itaque idem est in illis qui in arcu color; tantum effigura mutatur, quia nubium quoque, in quibus extenduntur, alia est.

[11,1] Aliud quoque uirgarum genus apparet, cum radii per angusta foramina nubium tenues et intenti distantesque inter se diriguntur: et ipsi signa imbrium sunt.

[11,2] Quomodo nunc me hoc loco geram? Quid uocem imagines solis? Historici soles uocant et binos ternosque apparuisse memoriae tradunt; Graeci parhelia appellant, quia in propinquo fere a sole uisuntur aut quia accedunt ad aliquam similitudinem solis. Non enim totum imitantur sed magnitudinem eius figuramque: ceterum nihil habent ardoris hebetes et languidi. His quod nomen imponimus? An facio quod Vergilius, qui dubitauit de nomine, deinde id, de quo dubitauerat, posuit?

Nihil ergo prohibet illas parhelia uocari.

[11,3] Sunt autem imagines solis in nube spissa et incurua in modum speculi. Quidam parhelion ita definiunt: nubes rotunda et splendida similisque soli. Sequitur enim illum nec umquam longius relinquitur, quam fuit, cum apparuit. Num quis nostrum miratur, si solis effigiem in aliquo fonte aut placido lacu uidit? Non, ut puto. Atqui tam in sublimi facies eius quam inter nos potest reddi, si modo idonea est materia, quae reddat.

[12,2] Quemadmodum ergo utriusque imago in terris aspici potest, ita in aere, cum sic coactus aer et limpidus constitit, ut faciem solis acciperet. Quam et aliae nubes accipiunt sed transmittunt, si aut mobiles sunt aut rariae aut sordidae: mobiles enim spargunt illam; rariae emittunt; sordidae turpesque non sentiunt, sicut apud nos imaginem maculosa non reddunt.

[14,4] Itaque uelut igne continuo totum iter signat, quia uisus nostri tarditas non subsequitur momenta currentis, sed uidet simul et unde exiluerit et quo peruenerit. Quod fit in fulmine: longus nobis uidetur ignis eius, quia cito spatium suum transilit, et oculis nostris occurrit uniuersum per quod deiectus est; at ille non est extenti corporis per omne, qua uenit. Neque enim tam longa et extenuata in impetum ualent.

[14,5] Quomodo ergo prosiliunt? Attritu aeris ignis incensus uento praeceps impellitur; non semper tamen uento attritue fit, nonnumquam et aliqua opportunitate aeris nascitur: multa enim sunt in sublimi sicca calida terrena, inter quae oritur et pabulum suum subsequens defluit ideoque uelociter rapitur.

[14,6] At quale color diuersus est? Quia refert quale sit id, quod incenditur, quantum et quam uehemens, quo incenditur. Ventum autem significant eiusmodi lapsus et quidem ab ea parte, qua

[15,1] ‘Fulgores’, inquis, ‘quomodo fiunt, quos Graeci G-sela appellant?’ Multis, ut aiunt, modis: potest illos uentorum uis edere, potest superioris caeli feruor (nam cum late fusus sit ignis, inferiora aliquando, si sunt idonea accendi, corripit); potest stellarum motus cursu suo excitare ignem et in subiecta transmittere. Quid porro? Non potest fieri, ut aer uim igneam usque in aethera elidat, ex qua fulgor ardorue sit uel stellae similis excursus?

[15,4] At quibus longior mora est et ignis fortior motumque caeli sequens aut etiam proprios cursus agunt, cometas nostri putant, de quibus dictum est. Horum genera sunt pogoniae et cyparissiae et lampades et alia omnia, quorum ignis in exitu sparsus est; dubium, an inter hos ponantur trabes et pithiae raro uisi: multa enim conglobatione ignium indigent, cum ingens illorum orbis aliquantum matutini amplitudinem solis exuperet.

[15,6] De his nemo dubitat, quin habeant flammam, quam ostendunt: certa illis substantia est. De prioribus quaeritur (de arcu dico et coronis), decipiant aciem et mendacio constent an in illis quoque uerum sit, quod apparet.

[15,7] Nobis non placet in arcu aut corona subesse aliquid corporis certi, sed illam iudicamus speculi esse fallaciam alienum corpus nihil aliud quam mentientis. Non est enim quod in speculo ostenditur. Alioquin non exiret nec alia protinus imagine obduceretur, nec innumerabiles modo interirent modo exciperentur formae.

[15,8] Quid ergo? Simulacra ista sunt et inanis uerorum corporum imitatio, quae ipsa a quibusdam ita compositis, ut hoc possint, detorquentur in prauum. Nam, ut dixi, sunt specula, quae faciem prospicientium obliquent, sunt quae in infinitum augeant, ita ut humanum habitum modumque excedant nostrorum corporum.

[16,4] At hercule scelera conspectum sui reformidant. In perditis quoque et ad omne dedecus expositis tenerrima est oculorum uerecundia. Ille, quasi parum esset inaudita et incognita pati, oculos suos ad illa aduocauit nec quantum peccabat uidere contentus, specula sibi per quae flagitia sua diuideret disponderetque circumdedit; et quia non tam diligenter intueri poterat, cum caput merserat inguinibusque alienis obhaeserat, opus sibi suum per imagines offerebat.

[16,6] Est aliqua etiam prostituta modestia et illa corpora publico obiecta ludibrio aliquid, quo infelix patientia lateat obtendunt; adeo in quaedam lupanar quoque uerecundum est. At illud monstrum obscenitatem suam spectaculum fecerat et ea sibi ostentabat, quibus abscondendis nulla satis alta nox est.

[16,9] Si liceret mihi, ad uerum ista perducerem: quia non licet, mendacio pascar. Obscenitas mea plus quam capit uideat et patientiam suam ipsa miretur”. Facinus indignum! Hic fortasse cito et antequam uideret occisus est: ad speculum suum immolandum fuit.

[17,1] Derideantur nunc philosophi, quod de speculi natura disserant; quod inquirant, quid ita facies nostra nobis et quidem in nos obuersa reddatur; quid sibi rerum natura uoluerit, quae, cum uera corpora edidisset, etiam simulacra eorum aspici uoluit;

[17,2] quorsus pertinuerit hanc comparare materiam excipiendarum

imaginum potentem: non in hoc scilicet, ut ad speculum barbam uelleremus aut ut faciem uiri poliremus (in nulla re illa luxuriae negotium concessit); sed primum omnium, quia imbecilli oculi ad sustinendum comminus solem ignoraturi erant formam eius, hebetato illum lumine ostendit. Quamuis enim orientem occidentemque eum contemplari liceat, tamen habitum eius ipsum, qui uerus est, non rubentis sed candida luce fulgentis nesciremus, nisi in aliquo nobis umore lenior et aspici facilius occurreret.

[17,5] Fons cuique perlucidus aut leue saxum imaginera reddit: “nuper me in litore uidi, cum placidum uentis staret mare.” Qualem fuisse cultum putas ad hoc se speculum comentium? Aetas illa simplicior et fortuitis contenta nondum in uitium beneficia detorquebat nec inuenta naturae in libidinem luxumque rapiebat.

[17,6] Primo faciem suam cuique casus ostendit. Deinde cum insitus sui mortalibus amor dulcem aspectum formae suae faceret, saepius ea despexere, in quibus effigies suas uiderant. Postquam deterior populus ipsas subiit terras effossurus obruenda, ferrum primum in usu fuit (et id impune homines eruerant, si solum eruissent), tunc deinde alia terre mala, quorum leuitas aliud agentibus speciem suam obtulit, quam hic in poculo ille in aere ad alios usus comparato uidit; et mox huic proprie ministerio praeparatus est orbis nondum argenti nitor sed fragilis uilisque materia.

[1,1] Omnis de uniuerso quaestio in caelestia, sublimia, et terreae diuiditur.

Prima pars naturam siderum scrutatur, et magnitudinem, et formam ignium, quibus mundus includitur : solidumne sit coelum, ac firmae concretaeque materiae, an ex subtili tenuique nexum; agatur, an agat; et infra se sidera habeat, an in contextu sui fixa; quemadmodum sol anni uices seruet; an retro flectat : cetera deinceps his similia.

[1,2] Secunda pars tractat inter coelum terramque uersantia. Haec sont nubila, imbres, niues, et « humanas motura tonitrua mentes; » quaecumque aer facit patiturue. Haec sublimia dicimus, quia editiora imis sunt. Tertia illa pars de agris, terris, arbustis, satis, quaerit, et, ut iurisconsultorum uerbo utar, de omnibus quae solo continentur.

[1,3] Quomodo, inquis, de terrarum motu quaestionem eo posuisti loco, quo de tonitruis fulgoribusque dicturus? Quia, cum motus terrae fiat spiritu, spiritus autem sit aer agitatus, etsi subeat terras, non ibi spectandus est : cogitetur in ea sede, in qua illum natura disposuit.

[1,4] Dicam, quod magis uidebitur mirum : inter coelestia et de terra dicendum erit. Quare? inquis; quia cum propria terrae excutimus suo loco, utrum lata sit, et inaequalis, et enormiter proiecta, an tota in formam pilae spectet, et in orbem partes suas cogat; alliget aquas, an aquis alligetur ipsa; animal sit, an iners corpus et sine sensu, plenum quidem spiritus, sed alieni; et cetera huiusmodi quoties in manus uenerint, terram sequentur, et in imis collocabuntur.

[2,1] Quoniam dixi de partibus, in quas omnis rerum naturae materia diuiditur, quaedam in commune sunt dicenda, et hoc primum praesumendum, inter ea corpora, a quibus unitas est, aera esse.

[2,2] Quid sit hoc et quare praecipendum fuerit, scies si paulo

altius repetiero, et dixero aliquid esse continuum, aliquid commissum. Continuatio est partium inter se non intermissa coniunctio. Unitas est sine commissura continuatio, et duorum inter se coniunctorum corporum tactus.

[2,4] Vide quomodo auribus tuis parcam. Expedire me poteram, si philosophorum lingua uti uoluisset, ut dicerem unita corpora. Hoc cum tibi remittam, tu inuicem mihi refer gratiam. Quare istud? si quando dixero unum, memineris me non ad numerum referre, sed ad naturam corporis, nulla ope externa, sed unitate sua cohaerentis. Ex hac nota corporum aer est.

[3,1] Omnia que in notitiam nostram cadunt uel cadere possunt, mundus complectitur. Ex bis quaedam sunt partes, quaedam materiae loco relictas; desiderat enim omnis natura materiam, sicut ars omnis quae manu constat.

[3,2] Quid sit hoc, apertius faciam. Pars est nostri oculus, manus, ossa, nerui. Materia sucus recentis cibi iturus in partes. Rursus quasi pars est sanguis nostri, qui et tamen est materia; praeparat enim is alia, et nihilominus in numero eorum est quibus totum corpus efficitur.

[4,1] Sic mundi pars est aer, et quidem necessaria. Hic est enim qui caelum terramque connectit, qui ima ac summa sic separat ut tamen iungat. Separat, quia medius interuenit; iungit quia utrique per hunc inter se consensus est; supra se dat quicquid accepit a terris, rursus uim siderum in terrena transfundit.

[4,2] Quasi partem mundi uoco ut animalia et arbusta. Nam genus animalium arbustorumque pars uniuersi est, quia in consummationem totius assumptum et quia non est sine hoc uniuersum. Vnum autem animal et una arbor quasi pars est, quia, quamuis perierit, tamen id ex quo perit, totum est. Aer autem, ut dicebam, et caelo et terris cohaeret; utrique innatus est. Habet autem unitatem quicquid alicuius rei natua pars est. Nihil enim nascitur

[5,1] Terra et pars est mundi et materia. Pars quare sit, non puto te interrogaturum, aut aequè interroga quare caelum pars sit; quia scilicet non magis sine hoc quam sine illa uniuersum potest esse, quod cum his uniuersum est, ex quibus, id est, tam ex illo quam ex ista, alimenta omnibus animalibus, omnibus satis, omnibus stellis diuiduntur.

[5,2] Hinc quidquid est uirium singulis, hinc ipsi mundo tam multa poscenti subministrantur; hinc profertur quo sustineantur tot sidera tam exercita tam auida per diem noctemque ut in opere ita in pastu. Omnium quidem rerum natura, quantum in nutrimentum sui satis sit, apprehendit, mundus autem, quantum in aeternum desiderabat, inuasit. Pusillum tibi exemplar magnae rei ponam : oua tantum complectuntur humoris quantum ad effectum animalis exituri satis est.

[6,1] Aer continuus terrae est et sic appositus ut statim ibi futurus sit unde illa discesserit. Pars totius est mundi; sed tamen, quicquid terra in alimentum caelestium misit, recipit, ut scilicet materia, non pars, intellegi debeat; ex hoc omnis inconstantia eius tumultusque est.

[6,2] Hunc quidam ex distantibus corpusculis, ut puluerem, struunt plurimumque a uero recedunt. Numquam enim nisi contexti per unitatem corporis nisus est, cum partes consentire ad intentionem debeant et conferre uires. Aer autem, si in atomos inciditur, sparsus est; tendi uero disiecta non possunt.

[6,3] Intentionem aeris ostendent tibi inflata nec ad ictum cedentia; ostendent pondera per magnum spatium ablata gestante uento; ostendent uoces, quae remissae claraeque sunt prout aer se concitauit. Quid enim est uox nisi intentio aeris, ut audiatur, linguae formata percussu?

[6,4] Quid? cursus et motus omnis, nonne intenti spiritus opera sunt? Hic facit uim, neruis, uelocitatem currentibus; hic, cum uehementer concitatus ipse se torsit, arbusta siluasque, conuoluit et aedificia tota corripiens in altum frangit; hic mare per se languidum et iacens incitat.

[6,5] Ad minora ueniamus. Quis sine intentione spiritus cantus est? Cornua et tubae et quae aquarum pressura maiorem sonitum formant quam qui ore reddi potest, nonne aeris intentione partes suas explicant? Consideremus quae ingentem uim per occultum agunt : paruula admodum semina et quorum exilitas in commissura lapidum locum inuenit in tantum conualescunt ut ingentia saxa deturbent et monumenta dissoluant; scopulos interim rupesque radices minutissimae ac tenuissimae findunt. Hoc quid est aliud quam intentio spiritus, sine qua nihil ualidum et contra quam nihil ualidum est?

[6,6] Esse autem unitatem in aere uel ex hoc intellegi potest quod corpora nostra inter se cohaerent. Quid enim est aliud quod teneat illa quam spiritus? Quid est aliud quo animus noster agitetur? Quis est illi motus nisi intentio? Quae intentio nisi ex unitate? Quae unitas, nisi haec esset in aere? Quid autem aliud producit fruges et segetem imbecillam ac uirentes exigit arbores aut distendit in ramos aut in altum erigit quam spiritus intentio et unitas?

[7,1] Quidam aera discernunt et in particulas diducunt ita ut illi inane permisceant. Argumentum autem existimant non pleni corporis sed multum uacui habentis quod auius in illo tamen facilis motus, quod maximis minimisque per illum transcursus est.

[8,1] Nunc autem esse quamdam in rerum natura uehementiam magni impetus est colligendum. Nihil enim non intentione uehementius est, tam mehercule quam nihil intendi ab alio poterit, nisi aliquid per semet fuerit intentum, - dicimus enim eodem modo non posse quicquam ab alio moueri, nisi aliquid fuerit mobile ex semet; - quid autem est quod magis credatur ex se ipso habere intentionem quam spiritus? Hunc intendi quis negabit, cum uiderit iactari terram cum montibus, tecta murosque, magnas cum populis urbes, cum totis maria litoribus?

[9,1] Ostendit intentionem spiritus uelocitas eius et diductio. Oculi statim per multa milia aciem suam mittunt; uox una totas urbes simul percutit; lumen non paulatim prorepat sed semel uniuersis rebus

[9,2] Aqua autem quemadmodum sine spiritu posset intendi? Numquid dubitas quin sparsio illa quae ex fundamentis mediae harenae crescens in summam usque amphitheatri altitudinem peruenit cum intentione aquae flat? Atqui nec manus nec ullum aliud tormentum aquam potest mittere aut agere quam spiritus; huic se commodat; hoc attollitur inserto et cogente; contra naturam suam multa conatur et ascendit, nata defluere.

[9,3] Quid? Nauigia sarcina depressa parum ostendunt non aquam sibi resistere, quo minus mergantur, sed spiritum? Aqua enim cederet nec posset pondera sustinere, nisi ipsa sustineretur. Discus ex loco superiore in piscinam missus non descendit, sed resilit; quemadmodum, nisi spiritu referente?

[9,4] Vox autem qua ratione per parietum munimenta transmittitur, nisi quod solido quoque aer inest, qui sonum extrinsecus missum et accipit et remittit, scilicet spiritu non aperta tantum intendens, sed etiam abdita et inclusa, quod illi facere expeditum est, quia nusquam diuisus est sed per illa ipsa quibus separari uidetur coit secum? Interponas licet muros et mediam altitudinem montium, per omnia ista prohibetur nobis esse peruius, non sibi. Id enim intercluditur tantum per quod illum nos sequi possumus.

[10,1] Ipse quidem per ipsum transit quo scinditur, et media non circumfundit tantum et utrimque cingit, sed permeat. Ab aethere lucidissimo aer in terram usque diffusus est, aggilior quidem tenuiorque et altior terris nec minus aquis, ceterum aethere spissior grauiorque, frigidus per se et obscurus. Lumen illi calorque aliunde sunt.

[10,2] Sed non per omne spatium sui similis est; mutatur a proximis. Summa pars eius siccissima calidissimaque et ob hoc etiam tenuissima est propter uiciniam aeternorum ignium et illos tot motus siderum assiduumque caeli circumactum; illa pars ima et uicina terris densa et caliginosa est, quia terrenas exhalationes receptat; media pars temperatior, si summis imisque conferas, quantum ad siccitatem tenuitatemque pertinet, ceterum utraque parte frigidior.

[10,3] Nam superiora eius calorem uicinarum siderum sentiunt. Inferiora quoque tepent; primum terrarum halitu, qui multum secum calidi affert; deinde quia radii solis replicantur et, quousque redire potuerunt, id duplicato calore benignius fouent; deinde etiam illo spiritu qui omnibus animalibus arbustisque ac satis calidus est, nihil enim uiueret sine calore.

[10,4] Adice nunc ignes, non tantum manufactos et certos, sed opertos terris, quorum aliqui eruperunt, innumerabiles in obscuro et condito flagrant semper. Hae tot partes eius fertiles rerum habent quiddam teporis, quoniam quidem sterile frigus est, calor gignit. Media ergo pars aeris ab his summota in frigore suo manet; natura enim aeris gelida est.

[11,1] Qui cum sic diuisus sit, ima sui parte maxime uariis et inconstans ac mutabilis est. Circa terras plurimum audet, plurimum patitur, exagitat et exagitur; nec tamen eodem modo totus afficitur, sed aliter alibi et partibus inquietus ac turbidus est.

[11,3] Haec necessarium fuit prae loqui dicturo de tonitru fulminibusque ac fulgurationibus. Nam cum in aere fiant, naturam eius explicari oportebat, quo facilius appareret quid facere aut pati posset.

[12,1] Tria sunt quae accidunt, fulgurationes, fulmina, tonitrua, quae una facta serius audiuntur. Fulguratio ostendit ignem, fulminatio emittit. Illa, ut ita dicam, comminatio est et conatio sine ictu; ista iaculatio cum ictu.

[12,2] Quaedam sunt ex his de quibus inter omnes conuenit, quaedam in quibus diuersae sententiae sunt. Conuenit de illis, omnia ista in nubibus et e nubibus fieri. Etiam nunc conuenit et fulgurationes et fulminationes aut igneas esse aut ignea specie.

[12,3] Ad illa nunc transeamus in quibus lis est. Quidam putant ignem inesse nubibus; quidam ad tempus fieri nec prius esse quam mitti. Ne inter illos quidem qui praeparant ignem conuenit; alius enim illum aliunde colligit. Quidam aiunt radios solis intercurrentis recurrentisque et saepius in se relatos ignem excitare. Anaxagoras ait illum ex aethere destillare et ex tanto ardore caeli multa decidere quae nubes diu inclusa custodiant.

[12,4] Aristoteles multo ante ignem colligi non putat, sed eodem momento exilire quo fiat. Cuius sententia talis est. Duae partes mundi in imo iacent, terra et aqua. Vtraque ex se reddit aliquid terrenus uapor siccus est et fumo similis, qui uentos, fulmina, tonitrua facit; aquarum halitus umidus est et in imbres et niues cedit.

[13,1] Falsam autem opinionem esse eorum qui ignem in nubibus seruant, per multa colligi potest. Si de caelo cadit, quomodo non cotidie fit, cum tantumdem semper illic ardeat? Deinde nullam rationem reddiderunt quare ignis, quem natura sursum uocat, defluat. Alia enim condicio nostrorum ignium est, ex quibus fauillae cadunt, quae ponderis aliquid secum habent; ita non descendit ignis, sed praecipitatur et deducitur.

[13,2] Huic simile nihil accidit in illo igne purissimo, in quo nihil est quod deprimatur. Aut si ulla pars eius exciderit, in periculo totus est, quia totum. potest excidere quod potest carpi. Deinde illud quod cadit leue est an graue? Leue est? Non potest ruere quod cadere leuitas prohibet; si in abdito suo tenet graue, quomodo illic esse potuit unde caderet?

[13,3] Quid ergo? non aliqui ignes in inferiora ferri solent, sicut haec ipsa de quibus quaerimus fulmina? Fateor. Non eunt tamen, sed feruntur; aliqua illos potentia deprimit. Quae non est in aethere; nihil enim illic iniuria cogitur, nihil rumpitur, nihil praeter solitum euenit.

[13,4] Ordo rerum est, et expurgatus ignis in custodia mundi summa sortitus oras operis pulcherrimi circumit. Hic descendere non potest, sed ne ab externo quidem deprimi, quia in aethere nulli incerto corpori locus est; certa et ordinata non pugnant.

[14,1] Vos, inquit, dicitis, cum causas stellarum transuolantium redditis, posse aliquas aeris partes ad se trahere ignem ex locis superioribus et hoc ardore accendi. Sed plurimum interest utrum aliquis dicat ignem ex aethere decidere, quod natura non patitur, an dicat ex ignea ui calorem in ea quae subiacent transilire. Non enim illinc ignis cadit, quod non potest fieri, sed hic nascitur.

[15,1] Quidam ex nostris existimant aera, cum in ignem et aquam mutabilis sit, non detrahare aliunde causas flammaram nouas; ipse enim se mouendo accendit et, cum. denses compactosque nubium. sinus dissipat, necessario uastum in tam magnorum corporum diruptione reddit sonum. Illa porro nubium difficulter cedentium pugna aliquid confert ad concitandum ignem sic quemadmodum ferro ad secandum aliquid manus confert, sed secare ferri est.

[17,1] Quidam existimant igneum spiritum per frigida atque umida meantem sonum reddere. Nam ne ferrum quidem ardens silentio, tinguitur, sed, si in aquam feruens massa descendit, cum multo murmure extinguatur. Ita, ut Anaximenes ait, spiritus incidens nubibus tonitrua edit et, dum luctatur per obstantia atque interscissa uadere, ipsa ignem fuga accendit.

[18,1] Anaximandrus omnia ad spiritum rettulit. Tonitrua, inquit, sunt nubis ictae sonus. Quare inaequalia sunt? Quia et ipse ictus inaequalis est. Quare et sereno tonat? Quia tunc quoque per crassum et scissum aera spiritus prosilit. At quare aliquando non fulgurat et tonat? Quia spiritus infirmior non ualuit in flammam, in sonum ualuit. Quid est ergo ipsa fulguratio? Aeris diducentis se corruentisque iactatio languidum ignem nec exiturum pariens. Quid est fulmen? Acrioris densiorisque spiritus cursus.

[19,1] Anaxagoras ait omnia ista sic fieri ut ex aethere aliqua uis in inferiora descendat. Ita ignis impactus nubibus frigidis sonat; at, cum illas interscindit, fulget, et minor uis ignium fulgurationes facit, maior fulmina.

[20,3] Adice nunc quod necesse est impetus fulminis et praemittat spiritus agatque ante se, et a tergo trahat uentum, cum tam uasto ictu aera inciderit. Itaque omnia, antequam feriantur, intremesculit uibrata uento quem ignis ante se pressit.

[21,2] Esse illum ignem calor ostendit, qui non est nisi ex eo.

Ostendit effectus : magnorum enim saepe incendiorum causa fulmen fuit; siluae illo concrematae et urbium partes; etiam quae non percussa sunt, tamen adusta cernuntur; quaedam uero ueluti fuligine colorantur. Quid quod omnibus fulguratis odor sulphuris est?

[21,3] Ergo et utramque rem ignem esse constat et utramque rem inter se meando distare; fulguratio enim est non perlatum usque in terras fulmen, et rursus licet dicas fulmen esse fulgurationem usque in terras perductam.

[21,4] Non ad exercendum uerba diutius hoc idem tracto, sed ut cognata esse ista et eiusdem notae ac naturae probem. Fulmen est quiddam plus quam fulguratio. Vertamus istud: fulguratio est paene fulmen.

[22,1] Quoniam constat utramque rem ignem esse, uideamus quemadmodum ignis fieri soleat apud nos; eadem enim ratione et supra fit. Duobus modis, uno si excitatur sicut e lapide; altero si attritu inuenitur, sicut cum duo ligna inter se diutius trita sunt. Non omnis hoc tibi materia praestabit, sed idonea eliciendis ignibus: sicut laurus, hederæ et alia in hunc usum nota pastoribus.

[22,2] Potest ergo fieri ut nubes quoque ignem eodem modo uel percussae reddant uel attritae. Videamus quantis procellae uiribus ruant, quanto uertantur impetu turbines; id quod obuium, fuit, dissipatur et rapitur et longe a loco suo proicitur.

[22,3] Quid ergo mirum, si tanta uis ignem excutit uel aliunde uel sibi? Vides enim quantum feruorem sensura sint corpora horum transitu trita, nec hoc in his tantum debere credi, ac in ui siderum, quorum ingens et confessa potentia est.

[23,2] Superioribus collegimus in quantum feruorem quaedam attrita perducerentur. Cum autem aer mutabilis in ignem maximis uiribus, id est suis, cum. in uentum conuersus est, atteratur, credibile est uerisimile, ignem excuti caducum et cito interiturum, quia non ex solida materia oritur nec in qua possit consistere. Transit itaque tantumque habet morae quantum itineris et cursus : sine alimento proiectus est.

[24,1] Quomodo, inquit, cum dicatis ignis hanc esse naturam ut

petat superiora, fulmen terram petit? Aut falsum est quod de igne dixistis; est enim illi aeque sursuin iter quam deorsum. Vtrumque uerum potest esse. Ignis enim natura in uerticem surgit et, si nihil illum prohibet, ascendit, sicut a qua natura defertur; si tamen aliqua uis accessit quae illam in contrarium circumageret, illo intenditur unde imbre deiecta est.

[24,2] Fulmen autem cadit eadem necessitate qua excutitur. Id his ignibus accidit quod arboribus quarum cacumina, si tenera sunt, ita deorsum trahi possunt ut etiam terram attingant, sed cum permiseris, in locum suum exilient. Itaque non est quod eum spectes cuiusque rei habitum qui illi non ex uoluntate est.

[24,3] Si ignem permittis ira quo uelit, caelum, id est leuissimi cuiusque sedem, repetet; ubi est aliquid quod eum ferat et ab impetu suo auertat, id non natura, sed seruitus eius fit.

[25,1] Dicis, inquit, nubes attritas edere ignem, cum sint umidae, immo udae; quomodo ergo possunt gignere ignem, quem non magis uerisimile est ex nube quam ex aqua generari?

[26,1] Ex nube nascitur. Primum in nubibus non [^]qua est, sed aer spissus, ad gignendam aquam praeparatus, nondum in illam mutatus, sed iam pronus et uergens. Non est quod existimes eam tum collig", tum effundi. Simul et fit et cadit.

[26,2] Deinde, si concessero umidam esse nubem conceptis aquis plenam, nihil tamen prohibet ignem ex umido quoque educi, immo ex ipso, quod magis mireris, umore. Quidam negauerunt in ignem quicquam posse mutari, priusquam mutatum esset in aquam. Potest ergo nubes, salua quam continet aqua, ignem parte aliqua sui reddere, ut saepe alia pars ligni ardet, alia sudat.

[26,3] Nec hoc dico non contraria inter se ista esse et alterum altero perimi; sed ubi ualentior ignis quam umor est, uincit; rursus, cum copia umoris exsuperat, tunc ignis sine effectum est; itaque non ardent uirentia. Refert ergo quantum aquae sit; exigua enim non resistet nec uim ignis impedit.

[26,4] Quidni? Maiorum nostrorum memoria, ut Posidonius tradidit, cum insula in Aegaeo mari surgeret, spumabat interdum mare et fumus ex alto ferebatur. Nox demum prodebat ignem, non continuum sed ex interuallis emicantem fulminum more, quotiens ardor infernus iacentis super undae pondus euicerat.

[26,5] Deinde saxa euoluta rupesque partim illaesae, quas spiritus, antequam urerentur, expulerat, partim exesae et in leuitatem pumicis uersae. Nouissime cacumen exusti montis emicuit. Postea altitudini adiectum et saxum illud in magnitudinem insulae creuit.

[26,7] Quod si immensa aquarum uis flammaram ex imo subeuntem uim non potuit opprimere, quanto minus impedire poterit ignem nubium tenuis umor et roscidus? Adeo res ista non affert ullam moram ut contra causa ignium sit; quos non uidemus emicare nisi impendente caelo; serenum sine fulmine est. Non lial-et istos metus dies purus, ne nox quidem nis” obscura nubibus.

[26,8] Quid ergo? non aliquando etiam apparentibus stellis et nocte tranquilla fulgurat? Sed scias licet, illic nubes esse unde splendor effertur, quas uideri a nobis terrarum tumor non sinit.

[27,1] Tonitrua distinxere quidam ita ut dicerent unum esse genus cuius graue sit murmur, quale terrarum motum antecedit clauso uento et fremente. Hoc quomodo uideatur illis fieri dicam.

[27,2] Cum spiritum intra se clausere nubes, in concauis partibus earum uolutatus aer similem agit mugitibus sonum, raucum et aequalem et continuum, utique ubi etiam umida illa regio est et exitum claudit; ideo eiusmodi tonitrua uenturi praenuntia imbris sunt.

[27,3] Aliud genus est acre, quod acerbum magis dixerim quam sonorum, quale audire solemus, cum super caput alicuius dirupta uesica est; talia eduptur tonitrua, cum conglobata nubes dissoluitur et eum quo distenta fuerat spiritum emittit. Hic proprie fragor dicitur, subitus et uehemens. Quo edito concidunt homines et exanimantur; quidam uero uiui stupent et in totum sibi excidunt, quos uocamus attonitos, uni mentem sonus ille caelestis loco pepulit.

[27,4] Hic fieri illo quoque modo potest ut inclusus aer caua nube et motu ipso extenuatus diffundatur; deinde, dum. maiorem sibi locum quaerit, a quibus inuolutus est, sonum patitur. Quid autem? non, quemadmodum illisae inter se manus plausum edunt, sic illisarum inter se nubium sonus potest esse, magnus quia magna concurrunt?

[28,1] Videmus, inquit, nubes impingi montibus nec sonum, fieri. Primum. omnium non quocumque modo illisae sunt sonant, sed si apte compo,sitae ad sonum edendum. Auersas inter se manus collide, non plaudent; sed palma cum palma collata plausum. facit; et plurimum interest utrum cauae concutiantur an planae et extentae. Deinde non tantum ire nubes oportet sed agi magna ui et procellosa.

[28,2] Etiamnunc mons non findit nubem, sed digerit et primain quamque partem eius soluit. Ne uesica quidem, quoeumque modo spiritum emisit, sonat : si ferro diuisa est, sine ullo aurium sensu exit; rumpi illam oportet, ut sonet, non secari. Idem de nubibus dico; nisi multo impetu dissolutae, non sonant. Adice nunc quod nubes in montem actae non franguntur, sed circumfunduntur et in aliquas partes montis, in arbores, rames, frutices, aspera saxa et eminentia; et ita discutiuntur, et, si quem habent spiritum, multifariam emittunt, qui, nisi uniuersus erumpit, nec crepat.

[28,3] Hoc ut scias, uentus qui circa arborem finditur sibilat, non tonat; lato, ut ita dicam, ictu et totum globum semel dissipante opus est, ut sonitus erumpat qualis auditur, cum tonat.

[29,1] Praeter haec natura aptus est aer ad uoces. Quidni, cum uox nihil aliud sit quam ictus aer? Debent ergo nubes utrimque conseri, et cauae et intentae. Vides enim quanto uocaliora sint uacua quam plena, quanto intenta quam remissa. Item tympana et cymbala sonant, quia illa repugnantem ex ulteriore parte spiritum pulsant, haec et ipso oere non nisi cauo tinniunt.

[30,1] Quidam, inter quos Asclepiodotus est, iudicant sic quorundam quoque corporum concursu tonitrum et fulmina excuti posse. Aetna aliquando multo igne abundauit, ingentem uim harenae urentis effudit,, inuolutus est dies puluere, populosque subita nox terruit. Aiunt tunc plurima fuisse fulmina et tonitrua quae concursu aridorum corporum facta sunt, non nubium, quas uerisimile est in tanto feruore aeris nullas fuisse.

[30,2] Aliquando Cambyses ad Ammonem misit exercitum, quem harena austro, mota et more niuis incidens textit, deinde obruit; tunc quoque uerisimile est fuisse tonitrum fulminaque attritu harenae sese affricantis.

[30,3] Non repugnat proposito nostro ista opinio. Diximus enim utriusque naturae corpora efflare terras et sicci aliquid et umidi in toto acre uagari; itaque si quid tale interuenit, nubem fecit solidiorem et crassiorem quam si tantum simplici spiritu texeretur. Illa frangi potest et edere sonum.

[30,4] Ista quae dixi, sine incendiis uaporantibus aera repleuerunt, siue uentis terras uerrentibus, necesse est nubem faciant ante quam sonum. Nubem autem tam arida quam umida conserunt; est enim, ut diximus, nubes spissitudo aeris crassi.

[32,3] Quomodo ergo significant, nisi “deo mittuntur? Quomodo aues non in hoc motae ut nobis occurrerent dextrum. auspicium sinistrumque fecerunt. Et illas, inquit, deus mouit. Nimis illum otiosum. et pusillae rei ministrum, facis, si aliis somnia, aliis exta

[32,4] Ista nihilominus diuina ope geruntur, si non a deo pennae auium reguntur nec pecudum, uiscera sub ipsa securi formantur. Alia ratione factorum series explicatur indicia uenturi ubique praemittens, ex quibus quaedam nobis familiaria, quaedam ignota sunt. Quicquid fit, alicuius rei futurae signum est. Fortuita et sine ratione uaga diuinationem non recipiunt; cuius rei ordo est, etiam praedictio est.

[32,6] Auspiciu obseruantis est; ad eum itaque pertinet qui in ea direxit animum. Ceterum fiunt et illa quae pereunt.

[34,1] Summam esse uim fulminis iudicant, quia, quicquid alia portendunt, interuentus fulminis tollit; quicquid ab hoc portenditur, fixum est nec alterius ostenti significatione mutatur; quicquid exta, quicquid aues minabuntur, secundo fulmine abolebitur; quicquid fulmine denuntiatur est, nec extis nec aue contraria refellitur.

[34,2] In quo mihi falli uidentur. Quare? Quia uero uerius nihil est. Si aues futura cecinerunt, non potest hoc auspicium fulmine irritum fieri, aut non futura cecinerunt. Non enim nunc aue comparo et fulmen, sed duo ueri signa, quae, si uerum significant, paria sunt. Itaque, quae fulminis interuentus submouet extorum uel augurii iudicia, male inspecta exta, male seruata auguria sunt. Non enim refert utrius rei species maior sit uel natura potentior; si utraque res ueri attulit signa, quantum ad hoc, par est.

[34,3] Si dicas flammae maiorem uim esse quam fumi, non mentieris; sed, ad indicandum ignem, idem ualet flamma quod fumus. Itaque si hoc dicunt : « Quotiens aliud exta significabunt, aliud fulmina, fulminum. erit auctoritas maior », fortasse consentiam. Si hoc dicunt : « Quamuis altera res uerum praedixisset, fulminis ictus priora deleuit et ad se fidem. traxit, » falsum est. Quare? Quia nihil interest quam multa auspicia sint. Fatum unum est; quod si bene primo auspicio intellectum est, secundo non interit: idem est.

[34,4] Ita dico, non refert idem an aliud sit per quod quidem quaerimus, quoniam de quo quaerimus, idem est.

[35,1] Fatum fulmine mutari non potest. Quidni? Nam fulmen ipsum fati pars est. Quid ergo? expiationes procurationesque quo pertinent, si immutabilia sunt fata? - Permitte mihi illam rigidam sectam tueri eorum, qui excipiunt ista et nihil uota esse aliud quam aegrae mentis solacia existimant.

[35,2] Fata aliter ius suum peragunt nec ulla commouentur prece. Non misericordia flectuntur non gratia. Seruant cursum irreuocabilem: ingressa ex destinato fluunt. Quemadmodum rapidorum aqua torrentium in se non recurrit, nec moratur quidem, quia priorem superueniens praecipitat, sic ordinem fati rerum aeterna series rotat, cuius haec prima lex est, stare decreto.

[37,1] Agere nunc causam eorum uolo qui procuranda existimant fulmina, et expiationes non dubitant prodesse aliquando ad summouenda pericula, aliquando ad leuanda, aliquando ad differenda.

[37,2] Quid sit quod sequatur, paulo post persequar; interim hoc habent commune nobiscum quod nos quoque existimamus uota proficere salua ui ac potestate factorum. Quaedam enim, a diis immortalibus ita suspensa relictas sunt ut in bonum uertant, si admotae diis preces fuerint, si uota suscepta; ita non est hoc contra fatum, sed ipsum quoque in fato est.

[37,3] Aut futurum, inquit, est aut non; si est futurum, etiamsi non susceperis uota, fiet. Si non est futurum, etiamsi non susceperis uota, fiet. Falsa est ista interrogatio, quia illam mediam inter ista exceptionem praeteris : futurum hoc est, sed si uota suscepta fuerint.

[38,1] Hoc quoque, inquit, ipsum necesse est fato comprehensum sit ut aut suscipias uota aut non. Puta me tibi manus dare et fateri hoc quoque fato esse comprehensum ut utique fiant uota; ideo fient.

[38,3] Ista nobis opponi solent ut probetur nihil uoluntati nostrae relictum et omne ius fato traditum. Cum de ista re agetur, dicam quemadmodum manente fato aliquid sit in hominis arbitrio; nunc uero id de quo agitur explicui, quomodo, si fati certus est ordo expiationes procurationesque prodigiorum pericula auertant, quia non cum fato pugnant, sed et ipsae in lege fati sunt.

[38,4] Quid ergo, inquis, aruspex mihi prodest? Utique enim expiare mihi etiam non suadente illo necesse est. - Hoc prodest quod fati minister est. Sic cum sanitas debeatur fato, debetur et medico, quia ad nos beneficium fati per huius manus uenit.

[39,1] Genera fulgurum tria esse ait Caecina, consiliarium, auctoritatis et quod status dicitur. Consiliarium ante rem fit sed post cogitationem, Oum aliquid in animo uersantibus aut suadetur fulminis ictu aut dissuadetur. Auctoritatis est ubi post rem factam uenit, quam bono futuram maloue significat.

[39,2] Status est ubi quietis nec agentibus quicquam nec cogitantibus quidem fulmen interuenit et aut minatur aut promittit aut monet. Hoc monitorium uocat, sed nescio quare non idem sit quod consiliarium, nam et qui monet consilium dat.

[39,3] Sed habeat aliquam distinctionem et ob hoc separetur a consiliario, quia illud suadet dissuadetque, hoc solam euitationem impendentis periculi continet, ut cum timemus ignem, fraudem a proximis, insidias a seruis.

[40,1] Primo omnium non sunt fulminum genera sed significationum. Nam fulminum genera sunt illa, quod terebrat, quod discutit, quod urit. Quod terebrat subtile est et flammeum, oui per angustissimum fuga est ob sinceram et puram flammae tenuitatem.

[40,2] Quod dissipat conglobatum est et habet admixtam uim spiritus coacti ac procellosi. Itaque illud fulmen per id foramen quod ingressum. est redit et euad”t; huius late sparsa uis rumpit icta, non perforat.

[40,3] Tertium illud genus, quod urit, multum terreni habet et igneum magis est quam flammeum; itaque relinquit magnas ignium notas, quae percussis inhaereant. Nullum quidem sine igne fulmen uenit, sed tamen hoc proprie igneum. dicimus quod manifesta ardoris uestigia imprimit, quod aut urit aut fuscet.

[40,4] Tribus modis urit : aut afflat et leui iniuria laedit, aut comburit, aut accendit. Omnia ista urunt sed genere et modo differunt quodeumque combustum est, utique et ustum est at quod ustum est, non utique combustum est.

[40,5] Item quod accensum est, - potest enim illud ipso transitu ignis ussisse, - quis nescit uri quidem nec ardere, nihil autem ardere quod non et uratur? Vnum hoc adiciam : potest aliquid esse combustum nec accensum, potest accensum esse nec combustum.

[40,6] Nunc ad id transeo genus fulminis quo icta fuscantur; hoc aut decolorat aut colorat. Utrique distinctionem suam reddam : decoloratur id cuius color uitatur, non mutatur; coloratur id cuius alia fit quam fuit facies, tamquam caerulea uel nigra uel pallida.

[41,1] Haec adhuc Etruscis philosophisque communia sunt. In illo, dissentiunt quod fulmina a Ioue dicunt mitti et tres illi manubias dant. Prima, ut aiunt, monet et placata est et ipsius Iouis consilio mittitur. Secundam mittit quidem Iupiter, sed ex consilii sententia, duodecim enim deos aduocat; hoc fulmen boni aliquid. aliquando facit, sed tunc quoque non aliter quam ut noceat; ne prodest quidem impune.

[41,2] Tertiam manubiam idem Iupiter mittit, sed adhibitis in consilium diis quos superiores et inuolutos uocant, quia uastat in quae incidit et utique mutat statum priuatum et publicum. quem inuenit; ignis enim nihil esse quod fuit patitur.

[42,1] In his prima specie, si intueri uelis, errat antiquitas. Quid enim tam imperitum est quam credere fulmina e nubibus Iouem mittere, columnas, arbores, nonnumquam statuas suas petere, uti, impunitis sacrilegis, percussis ouibus, incensis aris, pecudes innoxias feriat, et ad suum consilium a Ioue deos, quasi in ipso parum consilii sit aduocari? illa laeta esse et placata fulmina quae solus excutiat, perniciose quibus mittendis maior turba numinum intersit?

[42,2] Si a me quaeris quid sentiam, non existimo tam hebetes fuisse ut crederent Iouem iniquae uoluntatis aut certae minus peritiae. Vtrum enim tunc cum emisit ignes quibus innoxia capita percuteret, scelerata transiret, noluit iustius mittere an non successit?

[42,3] Quid ergo secuti sunt, cum haec dicerent? Ad coercendos imperitorum animos sapientissimi uiri iudicauerunt ineuitabilem. metum, ut aliquid supra nos timeremus. Vtile erat in tanta audacia scelerum esse aduersus quod nemo sibi satis potens uideretur; ad conterrendos itaque eos quibus innocentia nisi metu non placet posuerunt supra caput uindicem, et quidem armatum.

[43,1] Quare ergo id fulmen quod solus Iupiter mittit placabile est, perniciosum id de quo deliberauit et quod aliis quoque diis auctoribus misit? Quia Iouem, id est regem, prodesse etiam solum oportet, nocere non nisi cum pluribus uisum est.

[43,2] Discant hi, quicumque magnam inter homines adepti sunt potentiam, sine consilio ne fulmen quidem mitti; aduocent, considerent multorum, sententias, nociturum temperent, hoc sibi proponant, ubi aliquid percuti debet, ne Ioui quidem suum satis esse consillum.

[44,2] Illos uero altissimos uiros error iste non tenuit, ut existimarent louem modo leuioribus fulminibus et lusoriis telis uti. Sed uoluerunt admonere eos quibus aduersus peccata hominum fulminandum est non eodem modo omnia esse percutienda; quaedam. frangi debere, quaedam allidi ac destringi, quaedam admoueri.

[45,1] Ne hoc quidem crediderunt louem, qualem in Capitolio et in ceteris aedibus colimus, mittere manu sua fulmina, sed eundem quem nos louem intellegunt, rectorem custodemque uniuersi, animum ac spiritum mundi, operis huius dominum. et artificem, cui nomen omne conuenit.

[45,3] Vis illum uocare mundum, non falleris; ipso enim est hoc quod uides totum, partibus suis inditus, et se sustinens et sua. Idem Etruscis quoque uisum est, et ideo fulmina mitti dixerunt a Ioue quia sine illo nihil geritur.

[46,1] At quare Iupiter aut ferienda transit aut innoxia ferit? In maiorem me quaestionem uocas, cui suus dies, suus locus dandus est. Interim. hoc dico fulmina non mitti a Ioue, sed sic omnia esse disposita ut etiam quae ab illo non fiunt tamen sine ratione non fiant, quae illius est. Nam etiamsi Iupiter illa nunc non facit, Iupiter fecit ut fierent. Singulis non adest ad omne, sed manum et uim et causam omnibus dedit.

[47,1] Huic illorum diuisioni non accedo. Aiunt aut perpetua esse fulmina, aut finita, aut prorogatiua. Perpetua, quorum significatio in totam pertinet uitam nec unam rom denuntiat sed contextum rerum per omnem deinceps aetatem futurarum complectitur; haec sunt fulmina quae prima accepto patrimonio et in nouo hominis aut urbis statu fiunt. Finita ad diem utique respondent. Prorogatiua sunt quorum minae differri possunt, auerti tollique non possunt.

[48,1] Dicam quid sit quare huic diuisioni non consentiam. Nam et quod perpetuum uocant fulmen finitum est, - aequae enim ad diem respondet nec ideo minus finitum est quia multa significat -; et quod prorogatiuum uidetur finitum est; nam illorum quoque confessione certum est quousque impetretur dilatio; priuata enim fulgura negant ultra decimum annum, publica ultra tricesimum posse differri; hoc modo et ista finita sunt, quia ultra quod non prorogentur inclusum est. Omnium ergo fulminum. et omnis euentus dies stata sit; non potest enim ulla incerti esse comprehensio. [48,2] Quae inspicienda sint in fulgure, passim et uage dicunt, cum possint sic diuidere quemadmodum ab Attalo philosopho, qui se huic disciplinae dediderat, diuisa sunt, ut inspiciant ubi factum sit, quando, cui, in qua re, quale, quantum. Haec si digerere in partes suas uolueris, quid postea faciam? In immensa procedam.

[49,3] inferna, cum e terra exiliuit ignis; hospitalia, quae sacrificiis ad nos louem arcessunt et, ut uerbo eorum molliore utar, inuitant, - sed non irasceretur inuitatus; mine uenire eum inagno inuitantium periculo affirmant -; auxiliaria, quae inuocata sed aduocantium bono ueniunt.

[50,1] Quanto simplicior diuisio est qua utebatur Attalus noster, uir egregius, qui Etruscorum disciplinam Graeca subtilitate miscuerat : ex fulminibus quaedam sunt quae significant id quod ad nos pertinet, quaedam aut nihil significant aut id cuius intellectus ad nos non peruenit.

[50,3] Mixta aut partem habent boni, partem mali, aut mala in bonum, bona in malum uertunt. Nec aduersa nec laeta sunt quae aliquam nobis actionem significant qua nec terreri nec laetari debemus, ut peregrinationem in qua nec metus quicquam nec spei sit.

[52,1] Pauca adhuc adiciam ad enarrandam uim fulm'nis. Quae non eodem modo omnem materiam uexat. Valentiora, quia resistunt, uehementius dissipat; cedentia nonnumquam sine iniuria transit : cum lapide ferroque et durissimis quibusque confligit, quia uiam necesse est per illa impetu quaerat, itaque facit qua effugiat; at teneris et rarioribus parcit, quamquam flammis opportuna uideantur, quia transitu patente minus saeuit. Loculis itaque integris, ut dixi, pecunia quae in his fuit conflata reperitur, quia ignis tenuissimus per foramina occulta transcurrit, quicquid autem in tigno solidum inuenit et contumax uincit.

[52,2] Non uno autem, ut dixi, modo saeuit, sed quid quaeque uis fecerit, ex ipso genere iniuriae intellegis et fulmen opere cognosces. Interdum in eadem materia multa diuersa eiusdem fulminis uis facit, sicut in arbore quod aridissimum urit, quod durissimum. et solidissimum est terebrat et frangit, summos cortices dissipat, interiores libros rumpit ac scindit, folia pertundit ac stringit. Vinum gelat, ferrum et aes fundit.

[53,1] Illud est mirum quod uinum fulmine gelatum, cum ad priorem habitum redit, potum aut exanimat aut dementes facit. Quare id accadat quaerenti m'hi illud occurrit. Inest uis fulmini pestifera; ex hoc aliquem remanere spiritum in eo umore quem coegit congelauitque simile ueri est; nec enim alligari potuisset, nisi aliquod illi esset additum uinculum.

[53,3] Sed ad haec uacui reuertemur. Fortasse enim libebit ostendere quantum omnia ista a philosophia parente artium fluxere. Illa primum et quaesiuit causas rerum et obseruauit effectus et, quod in fulminis inspectione longe melius est, initiis rerum exitus contulit.

[54,1] Nunc ad opinionem Posidonii reuortor. E terra terrenisque omnibus pars umida effiatur, pars sicca et fumida; haec fulminibus alimentum est, illa imbris. Quicquid in aera sicci fumosique peruenit, id includi se nubibus non fert sed rumpit claudentia; inde est sonus quem nos tonitrum, uocamus.

[54,2] In ipso quoque acre quicquid extenuatur, simul siccatur et calefit; hoc quoque, si inclusum est, aequae fugam quaerit et cum sono euadit, ac modo uniuersum eruptionem facit eoque uehementius intonat, modo per partes et minutatim.

[54,3] Ergo tonitrua hic spiritus exprimit, dum aut rumpit nubes, aut peruolat; uolutatio autem spiritus in nube conclusi ualentissimum est atterendi genus.

[55,1] Tonitrua nihil aliud sunt quam citi aeris sonitus, qui fieri, nisi dum aut terit aut rumpitur, non potest. - Etsi colliduntur inter se, inquit, nubes, tunc is quem desideras ictus. - Sed non uniuersus neque enim tota totis concurrunt, sed partibus partes nec sonant mollia, nisi illa duris sint, itaque non auditur fluctus, nisi impactus est.

[55,2] - Ignis, inquit, missus in aquam sonat, dum extinguitur. Puta ita esse, pro me est; non enim ignis tunc sonum efficit sed spiritus per extinguentia effugiens. Ut dem tibi et fieri ignem in nube et extingui, a spiritu nascitur et attritu.

[55,3] - Quid ergo, inquit, non potest aliqua ex his transcurrentibus stellis incidere, in nubem et extingui? - Existimemus posse aliquando et hoc fieri; nunc naturalem causam quaerimus et assiduam, non raram fortuitamque. Puta enim me confiteri uerum esse quod dicis, aliquando post tonitrua emicare ignes stellis transuersis et cadentibus similes, non ob hoc tonitrua facta sunt, sed, cum hoc fieret, tonitrua facta sunt.

[55,4] Clidemos ait fulgurationem speciem inanem esse, non ignem; sic enim per noctem splendorem motu remorum uideri. Dissimile est exemplum. Illic enim splendor intra ipsam aquam apparet; hic, qui fit in aere, erumpit et exilit.

[56,1] Heraclitus existimat fulgurationem esse uelut apud nos incipientium ignium conatum et primam flammam incertam, modo intereuntem, modo resurgentem; haec antiqui fulgetra dicebant. Tonitrua nos pluraliter dicimus; antiqui autem tonitruum dixerunt aut tonum. Hoc apud Caecinam inuenio, facundum uirum et qui habuisset aliquando in eloquentia nomen, nisi illum Ciceronis umbra pressisset.

[57,1] Quid ipse existimem quaeris; adhuc enim alienis opinionibus commodauī manum. Dicam. Fulgurat, cum repentinum late lumen emicuit; id euenit ubi in ignem aer extenuatis nubibus uertitur, nec uires quibus longius prosiliret inuenit.

[57,2] Non miraris, puto, si aera aut motus extenuat aut extenuatio incendit; sic liquescit excussa glans funda et attritu aeris uelut igne, destillat. Ideo plurima aestate sunt fulmina quia plurimum calidi est; facilius autem attritu calidorum ignis existit.

[57,3] Eodem autem modo fit fulgur, quod tantum splendet, et fulmen, quod mittitur. Sed illi leuior uis alimentique minus est et, ut breuiter dicam quod sentio, fulmen est fulgur intentum. Ergo ubi calidi fumidique natura emissa terris in nubes incidit et diu in illarum sinu uolutata est, nouissime erumpit et, quia uires non habet, splendor est;

[57,4] at ubi illa fulgura plus habuere materiae et malore impetu arserunt, non apparent tantum, sed decidunt.

[58,1] Quidam existimant utique fulmen reuerti, quidam subsidere ubi alimenta praegrauauerunt et fulmen ictu languidiore delatum est.

At quare fulmen subitum apparet nec continuatur assiduus ignis? Quia celere mirique motus simul et nubes rumpit et aera incendit, deinde desinit flamma motu quiescente, Non enim assiduus est spiritus cursus, ut ignis possit extendi. Sed quotiens fortius ipsa iactatione se accendit, fugiendi impetum capit; deinde, cum euasit et pugna desinit, ex eadem causa modo usque ad terram profertur, modo ante dissoluitur, si minore ui pressus est.

[58,2] Quare oblique fertur? Quia spiritu constat, - spiritus autem obliquus est flexuosusque -, et quia natura ignem sursum uocat, iniuria deorsum premit; incipit autem obliquum. esse iter, dum neutra uis alteri cedit et ignis in superiora nititur, in inferiora deprimitur.

[58,3] Quare frequenter cacumina montium feriuntur? Quia opposita sunt nubibus et e caelo cadentibus per haec transeundum est.

[59,1] Intellego quid dudum desideres, quid efflagites. « Malo, inquis, fulmina non timere quam nosse; itaque alios doce quemadmodum fiant; ego mihi metum illorum excuti uolo, non naturam indicari. »

[59,2] Sequar quo uocas. Omnibus enim rebus omnibusque sermonibus aliquid salutare miscendum est. Cum imus per occulta naturae, cum diuina tractamus, uindicandus est a malis suis animus ac subinde firmandus, quod etiam eruditis et hoc unum agentibus necessarium est, non ut effugiamus ictus rerum, - undique enim in in nos tela iaciuntur, - sed ut fortiter constanterque patiamur.

[59,3] Inuicti esse possumus, inconcussi non possumus. Quamquam interim spes subit, inconcussos quoque esse nos posse. Quemadmodum? inquis. Contemne mortem, et omnia quae ad mortem ducunt contempta sunt, siue illa bella sunt, siue naufragia, seu morsus ferarum, seu ruinarum subito lapsu procidentium pondera.

[59,4] Numquid facere amplius possunt quam ut corpus ab animo resoluant? Haec nulla diligentia euitat, nulla felicitas donat, nulla potentia euincit. Alia uaria sorte disponuntur; mors omnes aequae uocat; iratis diis propitiisque moriendum est.

[59,5] Animus ex ipsa desperatione sumatur. Ignauissima animalia, quae natura ad fugam genuit, ubi exitus non patet, temptant pugnam corpore imbelli. Nullus perniciosior hostis est quam quem audacem angustiae faciunt, longeque uiolentius semper ex necessitate quam ex uirtute corrigitur, aut certe paria conantur animus magnus ac perditus.

[59,6] Cogitemus nos, quantum ad mortem, perditos esse. Et sumus.

Ita est, Lucili; omnes reseruamur ad mortem. Totum hunc quem uides populum, totumque quem usquam cogitas esse, cito natura reuocabit et condet, nec de re sed de die quaeritur; eodem citius tardiusue ueniendum est.

[59,7] Quid ergo? Non tibi timidissimus omnium uidetur et insipientissimus qui magno ambitu iogat moram mortis? Nonne contemneres eum qui, inter perituros constitutus, beneficii loco peteret ut ultimus ceruicem praeberet? Idem facimus; magno aestimamus mori tardius.

[59,8] In omnes constitutum est capitale supplicium, et quidem constitutione iustissima, quod maximum solet esse solacium extrema passuris; quorum enim causa, sors eadem est. Sequeremur traditi a iudice aut magistratu et carnifici nostro praestaremus obsequium; quid interest utrum ad mortem iussi eamus an ultronei?

[59,9] O te dementem et oblitum fragilitatis tuae, si tunc mortem times cum tonat! Itane? In hoc salus tua uertitur? Viues si fulmen effugeris? Petet te gladius, petet lapis, petet bilis; non maximum ex periculis tuis sed speciosissimum fulmen est.

[59,10] Male scilicet actum erit tecum, si sensum mortis tuae celeritas infinita praeueniet, si mors tua procuratur, si ne tunc quidem, cum expiras, superuacuis sed alicuius magnae rei signum es. Male scilicet tecum agitur, si cum fulmine conderis.

[59,11] Sed pauescis ad caeli fragorem et ad inane nubilum trepidas et, quotiens aliquid effulsit, expiras. Quid ergo? honestius putas deiectione perire quam fulmine? Eo itaque fortior aduersus caeli minas surge et, cum undique mundus exarserit, cogita nihil habere te tanta morte perdendum.

[59,12] Quodsi tibi parari credis illam caeli confusionem, illam tempestatum discordiam, si propter te ingestae illisaeque nubes strepunt, si in tuum exitium tanta uis ignium excutitur, at tu solacii loco numera tanti esse mortem tuam.

[59,13] Sed non erit huic cogitationi locus; casus iste donat metum. Est inter cetera hoc quoque commodum eius quod expectationem suam antecedit. Nemo umquam timuit fulmen, nisi qui effugit.

LIBER III

DE AQUIS <TERRESTRIBUS>

Praefatio

[1] Non praeterit me, Lucili uirorum optime, quam magnarum rerum fundamenta ponam senex, qui mundum circuire constitui et causas secretaque eius eruere atque aliis noscenda producere: quando tam multa consequar, tam sparsa colligam, tam occulta perspiciam?

[2] Premit a tergo senectus et obicit annos inter uana studia consumptos. Tanto magis urgeamus et damna aetatis male exemptae labor sarciat; nox ad diem accedat, occupationes recidantur, patrimonii longe a domino iacentis cura soluatur, sibi totus animus uacet et ad contemplationem sui saltem in ipso fine respiciat.

[3] Faciet ac sibi instabit et cotidie breuitatem temporis metietur; quicquid amissum est, id diligenti usu praesentis uitae recolliget: fidelissimus est ad honesta ex paenitentia transitus. Libet igitur mihi exclamare illum poetae incliti uersum : “tollimus ingentes animos et maxima paruo tempore molimur.” Hoc dicerem, si puer iuuenisque molirer (nullum enim non tam magnis rebus tempus angustum est): nunc uero ad rem seriam, grauem, immensam post meridianas horas accessimus.

[4] Faciamus quod in itinere fieri solet: qui tardius exierunt, uelocitate pensant moram. Festinemus et opus nescio an superabile, magnum certe, sine aetatis excusatione tractemus. Crescit animus, quotiens coepti magnitudinem attendit, et cogitat quantum proposito, non quantum sibi supersit.

[5] Consumpsere se quidam, dum acta regum externorum componunt quaeque passi inuicem ausique sunt populi. Quanto satius est sua mala extinguere quam aliena posteris tradere! Quanto potius deorum opera celebrare quam Philippi aut Alexandri latrocinia ceterorumque, qui exitio gentium clari non minores fuere pestes mortalium quam inundatio, qua planum omne perfusum est, quam conflagratio, qua magna pars animantium exarsit!

[6] Quemadmodum Hannibal Alpes superiecerit scribunt, quemadmodum confirmatum Hispaniae cladibus bellum Italiae inopinatus intulerit fractisque rebus, etiam post Carthaginem pertinax, reges pererrauerit contra Romanos ducem promittens, exercitum petens; quemadmodum non desierit omnibus angulis bellum senex quaerere: adeo sine patria pati poterat, sine hoste non poterat!

[8] Quid exultas? Ista, quibus eueheris in summum, nescis ubi te relictura sint: habebunt suum, non tuum finem. Quid iaces? Ad imum delatus es: nunc locus est resurgendi; in melius aduersa, in deterius optata flectuntur.

[11] Quid est praecipuum? Erigere animum supra minas et promissa fortunae; nihil dignum putare, quod speres. Quid enim habet, quod concupiscas? qui a diuinorum conuersatione quotiens ad humana recideris, non aliter caligabis quam quorum oculi in densam umbram ex claro sole redierunt.

[12] Quid est praecipuum? Posse laeto animo aduersa tolerare; quicquid acciderit, sic ferre, quasi tibi uolueris accidere (debuisses enim uelle, si scisses omnia ex decreto dei fieri: flere, queri et gemere desciscere est).

[13] Quid est praecipuum? Animus contra calamitates fortis et contumax, luxuriae non auersus tantum sed infestus, nec auidus periculi nec fugax, qui sciat fortunam non expectare sed facere et aduersus utramque intrepidus inconfususque prodire, nec illius tumultu nec huius fulgore percussus.

[14] Quid est praecipuum? Non admittere in animo mala consilia, puras ad caelum manus tollere, nullum bonum petere quod, ut ad te transeat, aliquis dare debet aliquis amittere, optare quod sine aduersario optatur: bonam mentem; cetera magno aestimata mortalibus, etiamsi quis domum casus adtulerit, sic intueri quasi exitura qua uenerint.

[15] Quid est praecipuum? Altos supra fortuita spiritus tollere, hominis meminisse, ut, siue felix eris, scias hoc non futurum diu, siue infelix, scias hoc te non esse, si non putes.

[16] Quid est praecipuum? In primis labris animam habere: haec res efficit non e iure Quiritium liberum sed e iure naturae. Liber est autem, qui seruitutem suam effugit: haec est assidua et ineluctabilis et per diem ac noctem aequaliter premens, sine interuallo, sine com meatu.

ingentia per diem noctemque decurrant; quare alia hibernis aquis intumescant, alia in defectu ceterorum amnium crescant.

[1,2] Nilum interim seponemus a turba, propriae naturae ac singularis, et illi suum diem dabimus. Nunc uulgares aquas persequamur, tam frigidas quam calentes: in quibus [calentibus] quaerendum erit, utrum calidae nascentur an fiant. De ceteris quoque disseremus, quas insignes aut sapor aut aliqua reddit utilitas: quaedam enim oculos, quaedam neruos iuuant; quaedam inueterata et desperata a medicis uitia percurant; quaedam medentur ulceribus; quaedam interiora potu fouent et pulmonis ac uiscerum querelas leuant; quaedam supprimunt sanguinem: tam uarius singulis usus quam gustus est.

[2,1] Aut stant omnes aquae aut eunt aut colliguntur aut uarias habent uenas. Aliae dulces sunt, aliae uarie asperae; quippe interueniunt salsae amaraeque aut medicatae, ex quibus sulphuratas dicimus, ferratas, aluminosas: indicat uim sapor.

[1] Ut stet aqua aut fluat, loci positio efficit: in deuexo fluit, in plano et defosso continetur et stagnat. Aliquando in aduersum spiritu impellitur: tunc cogitur, non fluit. Colligitur ex imbribus, ex suo fonte natiua est. Nihil tamen prohibet eodem loco aquam colligi et nasci; quod in Fucino uidemus, in quem montes circumiecti, quicquid fudit pluuias, deriuant, sed et magnae in ipso latentesque uenae sunt: itaque etiam cum hiberni defluxere torrentes, faciem suam seruat.

[4,1] Primum ergo quaeramus quomodo ad continuandos fluminum cursus terra sufficiat, unde tantum aquarum exeat. Miramur, quod accessionem fluminum maria non sentiant; aequae mirandum est, quod detrimentum exeuntium terra non sentit. Quid est, quod illam aut sic impleuerit, ut praebere tantum ex recondito possit, aut subinde sic suppleat? Quamcumque rationem reddiderimus de flumine, eadem erit riuorum ac fontium.

[5,1] Quidam iudicant terram quicquid aquarum emisit rursus accipere et ob hoc maria non crescere, quia quod influxit, non in suum uertunt sed protinus reddunt. Occulto enim itinere subit terras et palam uenit, secreto reuertitur, colaturque in transitu mare, quod per multiplices terrarum anfractus euerberatum amaritudinem ponit et prauitatem: in tanta soli uarietate saporem exuit et in sinceram aquam transit.

[6,1] Quidam existimant, quicquid ex imbribus terra concepit, id illam rursus emittere et hoc argumenti loco ponunt, quod paucissima flumina in his sunt locis, quibus rarus est imber.

[6,2] Ideo siccas aiunt Aethiopiae solitudines esse paucosque inueniri in interiore Africa fontes, quia feruida natura caeli sit et paene semper aestiua; squalidae itaque sine arbore, sine cultore harenae iacent raris imbribus sparsae, quos statim combibunt. At contra constat Germaniam Galliamque et proxime ab illis Italiam abundare fluminibus et riuis, quia caelo umido utuntur et ne aestas quidem imbribus caret.

[7,1] Aduersus hoc multa posse dici uides. Primum ego tibi uinearum diligens fossor affirmo nullam pluuiam esse tam magnam, quae terram ultra decem in altitudinem pedes madefaciat; omnis umor intra primam crustam consumitur nec in inferiora descendit:

[7,2] quomodo ergo imber suggerere potest amnibus uires, qui summam humum tinguunt? Pars maior eius per fluminum alueos in mare aufertur; exiguum est quod sorbeat terra, nec id seruat: aut enim arida est et absumit in se quicquid infusum est, aut satiata, si quid supra desiderium cecidit, excludit, et ideo primis imbribus non augentur amnes, quia totos in se terra sitiens trahit.

[7,4] Illo quoque argumento haec opinio refellitur, quod quidam fontes in summo montis cacumine redundant: apparet illos sursum agi aut ibi concipi, cum omnis pluuialis aqua decurrat.

[8,1] Quidam existimant, quemadmodum in exteriori parte terrarum uastae paludes iacent magnique et nauigabiles lacus, quemadmodum ingenti spatio maria porrecta sunt infusa uallibus, sic interiora terrarum abundare aquis dulcibus nec minus illas late stagnare quam apud nos oceanum et sinus eius, immo eo latius, quo plus terra in altum patet. Ergo ex illa profunda copia isti amnes egeruntur: quos quid miraris, si terra detractos non sentit, cum adiectos maria non sentiant?

[9,1] Quibusdam haec placet causa: aiunt habere terram intra se recessus cauos et multum spiritus, qui necessario frigescit umbra graui pressus, deinde piger et immotus in aquam, cum se desiit ferre, conuertitur: quemadmodum supra nos mutatio aeris imbrem facit, ita infra terras flumen aut riuum;

[9,3] Placet nobis terram esse mutabilem. Haec quoque quicquid effluit, quia non libero aere concipitur, crassescit protinus et in umorem conuertitur: habes primam aquarum sub terra nascentium causam.

[10,1] Adicias etiam licet quod fiunt omnia ex omnibus, ex aqua aer, ex aere aqua, ignis ex aere, ex igne aer: quare ergo non ex terra fiat aqua? quae si in alia mutabilis, est etiam in aquam, immo maxime in hanc: utraque enim cognata res est, utraque grauis, utraque densa, utraque in extremum mundi compulsa. Ex aqua terra fit: cur non aqua fiat e terra?

[10,2] At magna flumina sunt. Cum uideris quanta sint, rursus ex quanto prodeant adspice. Miraris, cum labantur assidue, quaedam uero concitata rapiantur, quod praesto sit illis aqua semper noua: quid, si mireris, quod, cum uenti totum aera impellant, non deficit spiritus sed per dies noctesque aequaliter fluit, nec (ut flumina) certo alueo fertur sed per uastum caeli spatium lato impetu uadit? Quid, si ullam undam superesse mireris, quae superueniat tot fluctibus fractis?

[10,3] Nihil deficit quod in se redit: omnium elementorum alterni recursus sunt; quicquid alteri perit, in alterum transit, et natura partes suas uelut in ponderibus constitutas examinat, ne portionum aequitate turbata mundus praeponderet.

[10,4] Omnia in omnibus sunt: non tantum aer in ignem transit sed numquam sine igne est (detrahe illi calorem: rigescet, stabit, durabitur); transit aer in umorem sed nihilominus non sine umore est; et aera et aquam facit terra sed non magis umquam sine aqua est quam sine aere. Et ideo facilius est inuicem transitus, quia illis, in quae transeundum est, iam mixta sunt.

[10,5] Habet ergo terra umorem, hunc exprimit; habet aera, hunc umbra hiberni frigoris densat, ut faciat umorem; ipsa quoque mutabilis est in umorem: natura sua utitur.

[11,2] Apud nos solet euenire, ut amisso canali suo flumina primum refundantur, deinde quia perdidierunt uiam faciant. Hoc ait accidisse Theophrastus in Coryco monte, in quo post terrarum tremorem noua uis fontium emersit.

[11,3] Sicut alias quoque causas interuenire opinatur, quae aliter euocent aquas aut cursu suo deiciant et auertant; fuit aliquando aquarum inops Haemus, sed cum Gallorum gens a Cassandro obsessa in illum se contulisset et suas cecidisset, ingens aquarum copia apparuit, quas uidelicet in alimentum suum nemora ducebant; quibus euersis umor, qui desiit in arbusta consumi, superfluitus est.

[11,4] Idem ait et circa Magnesiam accidisse. Sed pace Theophrasti dixisse liceat: non est hoc simile ueri, quia fere aquosissima sunt quaecumque umbrosissima; quod non eueniret, si aquas arbusta siccarent, quibus alimentum ex proximo est (fluminum uero uis ex intimo manat ultraque concipitur quam radicibus euagari licet). Deinde succisae arbores plus umoris desiderant: non enim tantum id, quo uiuant, sed quo crescant trahunt.

[11,5] Idem ait circa Arcadium, quae urbs in Creta insula fuit, fontes et riuos substitisse, quia desierit coli terra diruta urbe, postea uero

quam cultores receperit, aquas quoque recepisse. Causam siccitatis hanc ponit, quod obduruerit constricta tellus nec potuerit imbres inagitata transmittere. Quomodo ergo plurimos uidemus in locis desertissimis fontes?

[11,6] Plura denique inuenimus, quae propter aquas coli coeperunt quam quae aquas habere coeperint, quia colebantur. Non esse enim pluuialem hanc, quae uastissima flumina a fonte statim magnis apta nauigiis defert, ex hoc intellegas licet, quod per hiemem aestatemque par est a capite deiectus. Pluuia potest facere torrentem, non potest amnem aequali inter ripas suas tenore labentem, quem non faciunt imbres sed incitant.

[12,1] Paulo repetamus hoc altius, si uidetur, et scies te non habere quod quaeras, cum ad ueram annium originem accesseris. Flumen nempe facit copia cursusque aquae perennis. Ergo quaeris a me quomodo aqua fiat: interrogabo inuicem quomodo aer fiat aut terra.

[12,2] Sed si in rerum natura elementa sunt quattuor, non potes interrogare unde aqua sit: quarta enim pars naturae est. Quid ergo miraris, si rerum naturae tam magna portio potest aliquid ex se semper effundere?

[12,3] Quomodo aer, et ipse quarta pars mundi, uentos et auras mouet, sic aqua riuos et flumina: si uentus est fluens aer, et flumen est fluens aqua. Satis et multum illi uirium dedi, cum dixi: “elementum est”: intellegis quod ab illo proficiscitur non posse deficere.

[13,1] Adiciam, ut Thales ait, “ualentissimum elementum est.” Hoc fuisse primum putat, ex hoc surrexisse omnia. Sed nos quoque aut in eadem sententia aut in uicinia eius sumus: dicimus enim ignem esse qui occupet mundum et in se cuncta conuertat, hunc euanidum languentemque considerare et nihil relinqui aliud in rerum natura igne restincto quam umorem, in hoc futuri mundi spem latere:

[13,2] ita ignis exitus mundi est, umor primordium. Miraris ex hoc posse amnes semper exire, qui pro omnibus fuit et ex quo sunt omnia? Hic umor in diductione rerum ad quartas redactus est, sic positus, ut sufficere fluminibus edendis, ut riuus, ut fontibus posset.

[14,1] Quae sequitur Thaletis inepta sententia est. Ait enim terrarum orbem aqua sustineri et uehi more nauigii mobilitateque eius fluctuare tunc, cum dicitur tremere: non est ergo mirum, si abundat umor ad flumina profundenda, cum mundus in umore sit totus.

[14,2] Hanc ueterem et rudem sententiam explode: nec est quod credas in hunc orbem aquam subire per rimas et facere sentinam. Aegyptii quattuor elementa fecerunt, deinde ex singulis bina paria: aera marem iudicant qua uentus est, feminam qua nebulosus et iners; aquam uirilem uocant mare, muliebrem omnem aliam; ignem uocant masculum, qua ardet flamma, et feminam, qua lucet innoxius tactu; terram fortiorem marem uocant, saxa cautesque, feminae nomen assignant huic tractabili et cultae.

[14,3] Mare unum est, ab initio scilicet ita constitutum; habet suas uenas, quibus impletur atque aestuat. Quomodo maris sic et huius aquae mitioris uasta in occulto uis est, quam nullius fluminis cursus exhauriet. Abdita est uirium ratio: tantum ex illa, quantum semper fluere <pos>sit, emittitur.

[15,1] Quaedam ex istis sunt, quibus assentire possumus. Sed hoc amplius censeo: placet natura regi terram et quidem ad nostrorum corporum exemplar, in quibus et uenae sunt et arteriae, illae sanguinis, hae spiritus receptacula. In terra quoque sunt alia itinera per quae aqua, alia per quae spiritus currit; adeoque ad similitudinem illa humanorum corporum natura formauit, ut maiores quoque nostri aquarum appellauerint uenas.

[15,3] (hinc est omnis metallorum fructus, ex quibus petit aurum argentumque auaritia), et quae in lapidem ex liquore uertuntur; in quaedam uero terra umorque putrescunt, sicut bitumen et cetera huic similia. Haec est causa aquarum secundum legem naturae uoluntatemque nascentium.

[15,5] Ergo ut in corporibus nostris sanguis, cum percussa uena est, tam diu manat donec omnis effluxit aut donec uenae scissura subsedit atque iter elusit, uel aliqua alia causa retro dedit sanguinem, ita in terra solutis ac patefactis uenis riuus aut flumen effunditur.

[15,6] Interest quanta aperta sit uena: quae modo consumpta aqua deficit, modo excaecatur aliquo impedimenta, modo coit uelut in cicatricem comprimitque quam perfecerat uiam; modo illa uis terrae, quam esse mutabilem diximus, desinit posse alimenta in umorem conuertere.

[15,7] Aliquando autem exhausta replentur modo per se uiribus recollectis, modo aliunde translatis: saepe enim inania apposita plenis umorem in se auocauerunt; saepe terra, si facilis est in tabem, ipsa soluitur et umescit; <saepe> idem euenit sub terra quod in nubibus, ut spissetur <aer> grauiorque, quam ut manere in natura sua possit, gignat umorem; saepe colligitur roris modo tenuis et dispersus liquor, qui ex multis in unum locis confluit (sudorem aquileges uocant, quia guttae quaedam uel pressura loci eliduntur uel aestu euocantur).

[15,8] Haec tenuis unda uix fonti sufficit: et ex magnis caueis magnisque conceptibus excidunt amnes, nonnumquam leuiter emissi, si aqua pondere suo se tantum detulit, nonnumquam uehementer et cum sono, si illam spiritus intermixtus eiecit.

[16,3] Ecquid hic mirum est, cum uideas ordinem rerum et naturam per constituta procedere? Hiems numquam aberrauit, aestas suo tempore incaluit, autumnus uerisque, unde solet, facta mutatio est; tam solstitium quam aequinoctium suos dies rettulit.

[16,4] Sunt et sub terra minus nota nobis iura naturae sed non minus certa: crede infra quicquid uides supra. Sunt et illic specus uasti ingentesque recessus ac spatia suspensis hinc et inde montibus laxa; sunt abrupti in infinitum hiatus, qui saepe illapsas urbes receperunt et ingentem ruinam in alto condiderunt

[17,1] Multa hoc loco tibi in mentem ueniunt quibus urbane in re incredibili fabulae dicas, “non cum retibus aliquem nec cum hamis sed cum dolabra ire piscatum! Expecto ut aliquis in mari uenetur.” Quid est autem quare non pisces in terram transeant, si nos maria transimus? Permutabimus sedes!

[17,2] Hoc miraris accidere: quanto incredibiliora sunt opera luxuriae, quotiens naturam aut mentitur aut uincit? In cubili natant pisces, et sub ipsa mensa capitur qui statim transferatur in mensam: parum uidetur recens nullus, nisi qui in conuiuiae manu moritur; uitreis ollis inclusi afferuntur et obseruatur morientium color, quem in multas mutationes mors luctante spiritu uertit; alios necant in garo et condiunt uiuos.

[17,3] Hi sunt qui fabulas putant piscem uiuere posse sub terra et effodi, non capi! Quam incredibile illis uideretur, si audirent natare in garo piscem nec cenae causa occidi sed super cenam, cum multum in deliciis fuit et oculos ante quam gulam pauit?

[18,1] Permite mihi quaestione seposita castigare luxuriam. Nihil est, inquis, mullo expirante illis formosius: ipsa colluctatione animae deficientis rubor primum, deinde pallor subfunditur, squamaeque uariantur et <in> incertas facies inter uitam ac mortem coloris est uagatio. Languor somnulosae inertisque luxuriae quam<quam> sero expectatus circumscribi se et fraudari tanto bono sensit: hoc adhuc tam pulchro spectaculo piscatores fruebantur.

[18,2] “ Quo coctum piscem? quo exanimem? In ipso ferculo expiret.” Mirabamur tantum illis inesse fastidium, ut nollent attingere nisi eodem die captum, qui, ut aiunt, saperet ipsum mare: ideo cursu aduehebatur, ideo gerulis cum anhelitu et clamore properantibus dabatur uia.

[18,4] Illa audiebamus: “Nihil est melius saxatili mullo,” at nunc audimus: “Nihil est moriente formosius; da mihi in manus uitreum, in quo exsultet et trepidet.” Ubi multum diuque laudatus est, ex illo perlucido uiuario extrahitur.

[18,5] Tunc, ut quisque peritior est, monstrat: “Uide quomodo exarserit rubor omni acrior minio! uide quas per latera uenas agat! ecce sanguineum putes uentrem! quam lucidum quiddam caeruleumque sub ipso tempore effulsit! iam porrigitur et pallet et in unum colorem componitur.”

[19,1] Sed ut ad propositum reuertar, accipe argumentum, magnam uira aquarum in subterraneis oculi fertilem foedorum situ piscium: si quando erupit, effert secum immensam animalium turbam, horridam aspici et turpem ac noxiam gustu.

[19,3] Nasci autem posse pisces in illo terrarum profundo sit indicium, quod anguillae latebrosis locis nascuntur, grauis et ipsae cibus ob ignauiam, utique si altitudo illas luti penitus abscondit.

[19,4] Habet ergo non tantum uenas aquarum terra, ex quibus conriuatis flumina effici possint, sed amnes magnitudinis uastae, quorum aliis semper in occulto cursus est, donec aliquo sinu terrae deuorentur, alii sub aliquo lacu emergunt. Nam quis ignorat esse quaedam stagna sine fundo? Quorsus hoc pertinet? ut appareat hanc aquam magnis annibus aeternam esse materiam, cuius non tanguntur extrema sicut fluminum fontes.

[20,1] At quare aquis sapor uarius? Propter quattuor causas: ex solo prima est, per quod fertur; secunda ex eodem, si mutatione eius nascitur; tertia ex spiritu, qui in aquam transfiguratus est; quarta ex uitio, quod saepe concipiunt corruptae per iniuriam.

[20,2] Hae causae saporem dant aquis uarium, hae medicatam potentiam, hae grauera spiritum odoremque pestiferum, hae leuitatem grauitatemque, <hae> aut calorem aut nimium rigorem. Interest utrum loca sulphure an nitro an bitumine plena transierint; hac ratione corruptae cum uitae periculo bibuntur.

[21,1] In quosdam specus qui despexere, moriuntur; tam uelox

malum est, ut transuolantes aues deiciat: talis est aer, talis locus, ex quo letalis aqua destillat. Quod si remissior fuit aeris et loci pestis, ipsa quoque temperatior noxa nihil amplius quam temptat neruos uelut ebrietate torpentes.

[21,2] Nec miror, si locus atque aer aquas inficit similesque regionibus reddit, per quas et ex quibus ueniunt: pabuli sapor apparet in lacte, et uini uis existit in aceto. Nulla res est, quae non eius, quo nascitur, notas reddat.

[23,1] Haec est ergo aquarum diuisio, ut quibusdam uidetur: prosiliunt ex superioribus caelestes, quas nubila excutiant; ex terrenis aliae sunt ut ita dicam supernatantes, quae in summa humo repunt, aliae abditae, quarum reddita est ratio.

[24,1] Quare quaedam aquae caleant, quaedam etiam ferueant in tantum, ut non possint esse usui, nisi aut in aperto euauerunt aut mixtura frigidae intepuerunt, plures causae redduntur. Empedocles existimat ignibus, quos multis locis terra opertos tegit, aquam calescere, si subiecti sunt ei solo, per quod aquis transcursus est.

[24,3] Idem sub terra Empedocles existimat fieri, quem non falli crede Baianis, quibus balnearia sine igne calefiunt: spiritus in illa feruens loco aestuante infunditur; hic per tubos lapsus non aliter quam igne subdito parietes et uasa balnei calefacit, omnis denique frigida transitu mutatur in calidam nec trahit saporem e uaporario, quia clausa praelabatur.

[24,4] Quidam existimant per loca sulphure plena uel nitro euntes aquas calorem beneficio materiae, per quam fluunt, trahere: quod ipso odore gustuque testantur; reddunt enim qualitatem eius, qua caluere, materiae. Quod ne accidere mireris, uiuae calci aquam infunde: feruebit.

[25,1] Quaedam aquae mortiferae sunt nec odore notabiles nec sapore. Circa Nonacrin in Arcadia Styx appellata ab incolis aduenas fallit, quia non facie, non odore suspecta est: qualia sunt magnorum artificum uenena, quae deprehendi nisi morte non possunt. Haec autem, de qua paulo ante rettuli, aqua summa celeritate corrumpit, nec remedio locus est, quia protinus hausta duratur, nec aliter quam gypsum sub umore constringitur et alligat uiscera.

[25,2] Est aequae a noxia aqua in Thessalia circa Tempe, quam et fera et pecus omne deuitat; per ferrum et aes exit, tanta uis illi est etiam dura mordendi; nec arbusta quidem ulla alit et herbas necat.

[25,3] Quibusdam fluminibus uis inest mira: alia enim sunt, quae pota inficiunt greges ouium intraque certum tempus, quae fuere nigra, albam ferunt lanam, quae albae uenerant, nigrae abeunt. Hoc in Boeotia amnes duo efficiunt, quorum alteri ab effectu Melas nomen est: uterque ex eodem lacu exeunt diuersa facturi.

[25,5] Quosdam lacus esse, qui nandi imperitos ferant, notum est: erat in Sicilia, est adhuc in Syria stagnum, in quo natant lateres et mergi proiecta non possunt, licet grauias sint. Huius rei palam causa est: quamcumque uis rem expende et contra aquam statue, dummodo utriusque par sit modus: si aqua grauior est, leuiorem rem, quam ipsa est, fert, et tanto supra se extollet quanto erit leuior; grauiora descendant. At si aquae et eius rei, quam contra pensabis, par pondus erit, nec pessum ibit nec extabit sed exaequabitur aquae et natabit quidem sed paene mersa ac nulla eminens parte.

[25,6] Hoc est cur quaedam tigna supra aquam paene tota efferantur, quaedam ad medium submissa sint, quaedam ad aequilibrium aquae descendant. Namque cum utriusque pondus par est, neutra res alteri cedit, grauiora descendunt, leuiora gestantur. Graue autem et leue est non aestimatione nostra, sed comparatione eius, quo uehi debet.

[25,7] Itaque ubi aqua grauior est hominis corpore aut saxo, non sinit id, quo non uincitur, mergi: sic euenit, ut in quibusdam stagnis ne lapides quidem pessum eant. De solidis et duris loquor. Sunt enim multi pumicosi et leues, ex quibus quae constant insulae in Lydia, natant: Theophrastus est auctor.

[25,8] Ipse ad Cutilias natantem insulam uidi, et alia in Uadimonis lacu uehitur (lacus in Statoniensi est). Cutiliarum insula et arbores habet et herbas nutrit: tamen aqua sustinetur et in hanc atque illam partem non uento tantum sed aura compellitur, nec umquam illi per diem ac noctem uno loco statio est: adeo mouetur leui flatu.

[25,9] Huic duplex causa est: aquae grauitas medicatae et ob hoc ponderosae, et ipsius insulae materia uectabilis, quae non est corporis solidi, quamuis arbores alat. Fortasse enim leues truncos frondesque in lacu sparsas pinguis umor apprehendit ac uinxit.

[25,10] Itaque etiam si qua in illa saxa sunt, inuenies exesa et fistulosa, qualia sunt quae duratus umor eficit, utique circa medicatorum fontium <ripas> riuosque, ubi purgamenta aquarum coaluerunt et spuma solidatur: necessario leue est quod ex uentoso inanique concretum est.

[25,11] Quorundam causa non potest reddi: quare aqua Nilotica fecundiores feminas faciat, adeo ut quarundam uiscera longa sterilitate praeclusa ad conceptum relaxauerit; quare quaedam in Lycia aquae conceptum feminarum custodiant, quas solent petere, quibus parum tenax uulua est. Quod ad me attinet, pono ista inter temere uulgata. Creditum est quasdam aquas scabiem afferre corporibus, quasdam uitiliginem et foedam ex albo uarietatem, siue infusa siue pota sit: quod uitium dicunt habere aquam ex rore collectam.

[25,12] Quis non grauissimas esse aquas credat, quae in crystallum coeunt? Contra autem est: tenuissimis enim hoc euenit, quas frigus ob ipsam tenuitatem facillime gelat. Unde autem fiat eiusmodi lapis, apud Graecos ex ipso nomine apparet: G-krustallon enim appellant aequae hunc perlucidum lapidem quam illam glaciem, ex qua fieri lapis creditur. Aqua enim caelestis minimum in se terreni habens cum induruit, longioris frigoris pertinacia spissatur magis ac magis, donec omni aere excluso in se tota compressa est, et umor qui fuerat, lapis effectus est.

[26,1] Aestate quaedam flumina augentur ut Nilus, cuius alias ratio reddetur. Theophrastus est auctor in Ponto quoque quosdam amnes crescere tempore aestiuo. Quattuor esse iudicant causas: aut quia tunc maxime in umorem mutabilis terra sit, aut quia maiores in remoto imbres sint, quorum aqua per secretos cuniculos reddita tacite suffunditur.

[26,2] Tertia, si crebrioribus uentis ostium caeditur et reuerberatus fluctu amnis resistit, qui crescere uidetur, quia non effunditur. Quarta siderum ratio est: haec enim quibusdam mensibus magis urgent et exhauriunt flumina; cum longius recesserunt, minus consumunt atque trahunt: ita quod impendio solebat, id incremento accidit.

[26,3] Quaedam flumina palam in aliquem specum decidunt et sic ex oculis auferuntur. Quaedam consumuntur paulatim et intercidunt; eadem ex interuallo reuertuntur recipiuntque et nomen et cursum. Causa manifesta est: sub terra uacat locus, omnis autem natura umor ad inferius et ad marie defertur. Illo itaque recepta flumina cursus egere secreto, sed cum primum aliquid solidi quod obstaret occurrit, perrupta parte, quae minus ad exitum repugnauit, repetiere cursum suum.

[26,4] “Sic ubi terreno Lycus est potatus hiatu, existit procul hinc alioque renascitur ore. Sic modo combibitur, tacito modo gurgite lapsus redditur Argolicis ingens Erasinus in undis.” Idem et in Oriente Tigris facit: absorbetur et desideratus diu tandem longe remoto loco, non tamen dubius an idem sit, emergit.

[26,5] Quidam fontes certo tempore purgamenta eiectione, ut Arethusa in Sicilia quinta quaque aestate per Olympia. Inde opinio est Alpheon ex Achaia eo usque penetrare et agere sub mare cursum nec ante quam in Syracusano litore emergere, ideoque his diebus, quibus Olympia sunt, uictimarum stercus secundo traditum flumini illic redundare.

[26,6] Hoc et a te creditum est, ut in prima parte <dixi>, Lucili carissime, et a Uergilio, qui alloquitur Arethusam: “sic tibi, cum fluctus subter labere Sicanos, Doris amara suas non intermisceat undas.” Est in Chersoneso Rhodiorum fons, qui post magnum interuallum temporis foeda quaedam turbidus ex intimo fundat, donec liberatus eliquatusque est.

[26,7] Hoc quibusdam locis fontes faciunt, ut non tantum lutum sed folia testasque et quicquid putre iacuit expellant. Ubique autem facit mare, cui haec natura est, ut omne immundum stercorosumque litoribus impingat. Quaedam uero partes maris certis temporibus hoc faciunt, ut circa Messenen et Mylas fimo quiddam simile turbulenta uis maris profert feruetque et aestuat non sine colore foedo, unde illic stabulare Solis boues fabula est.

[26,8] Sed difficilis ratio est quorundam, utique ubi tempus eius rei, de qua quaeritur, inobseruatum incertum est. Itaque proxima quidem inueniri et uicina non potest causa; ceterum publica est illa: omnis aquarum stantium clausarumque natura se purgat. Nam in his, quibus cursus est, non possunt uitia consistere, quae secunda uis defert et exportat; illae, quae non emittunt quicquid insedit, magis minusue aestuant. Mare uero cadauera stramentaue et naufragorum reliqua similia ex intimo trahit, nec tantum tempestate fluctuque sed tranquillum quoque placidumque purgatur.

[27,3] Quicquid ex hoc statu rerum natura flexerit, in exitium mortalium satis est. Ergo cum affuerit illa necessitas temporis, multas simul fata causas mouent. Neque enim sine concussione mundi tanta mutatio est, ut quidam putant, inter quos Fabianus est.

[27,4] Primo immodici cadunt imbres et sine ullis solibus triste nubilo caelum est nebulaque continua et ex umido spissa caligo numquam exiccantibus uentis. Inde uitium satis est, segetum sine fruge surgentium marcor. Tunc corruptis quae seruntur manu, palustris omnibus campis herba succrescit.

[27,5] Mox iniuriam et ualidiora sentire: solutis quippe radicibus arbusta procumbunt, et uitis atque omne uirgultum non tenetur solo, quod molle fluidumque est. Iam nec gramina aut pabula laeta aquis sustinet. Fame laboratur et manus ad antiqua alimenta porrigitur: qua ilex est et quercus excutitur et quaecumque in arduis arbor commissura astricta lapidum stetit.

[27,6] Labant ac madent tecta, et in imum usque receptis aquis fundamenta desidunt ac tota humus stagnat. Frustra titubantium fultura temptatur; omne enim firmamentum in lubrica figitur et lutosa humo; nihil stabile est.

[27,8] Flumina uero suapte natura uasta et tempestatibus rapida alueos reliquerunt. Quid tu esse Rhodanum, qui putas Rhenum atque Danuim, quibus torrens etiam in canali suo cursus est, cum superfusi nouas sibi fecere ripas ac scissa humo simul excessere alueo?

[27,9] Quanta cum praecipitatione uoluuntur, ubi per campestria fluens Rhenus ne spatio quidem languit, sed latissimas uelut per angustum aquas impulit; cum Danuius non iam radices nec media montium stringit, sed iuga ipsa sollicitat ferens secum madefacta montium latera rupesque disiectas et magnarum promontoria regionum, quae fundamentis laborantibus a continenti recesserunt, deinde non inueniens exitum (omnia enim ipse sibi praecluserat), in orbem redit, ingentemque terrarum ambitum atque urbium uno uertice inuoluit.

[27,10] Interim permanent imbres, fit caelum grauius ac sic diu malum ex malo colligit: quod olim fuerat nubilum, nox est et quidem horrida ac terribilis intercurso luminis diri. Crebra enim micant fulmina, procellaeque quatiunt mare tunc primum auctum fluminum accessu et sibi angustum: iam enim promouet litus nec continetur suis finibus; sed prohibent exire torrentes aguntque fluctum retro. Pars tamen maior ut maligno ostio retenta restagnat et agros in formam unius lacu redigit.

[27,11] Iam omnia, qua prospici potest, aquis obsidentur: omnis tumultus in profundo latet et immensa ubique altitudo est. Tantum in summis montium iugis uada sunt: in [ea] excelsissima cum liberis coniugibusque fugerunt actis ante se gregibus. Diremptum inter miseros commercium ac transitus, quoniam quicquid submissius erat, id unda compleuit.

[27,12] Editissimis quibusque adhaerebant reliquiae generis humani, quibus in extrema perductis hoc unum solacio fuit, quod transierat in stuporem metus. Non uacabat timere mirantibus, nec dolor quidem habebat locum, quippe uim suam perdit in eo, qui ultra sensum mali miser est.

[27,14] Non est res satis sobria lasciuire deuorato orbe terrarum. Dixit ingentia et tantae confusionis imaginem cepit, cum dixit: “expatiata ruunt per apertos flumina campos, ... pressaeque labant sub gurgite turres.” Magnifice haec, si non curauerit quid oues et lupi faciant. Natari autem in diluuio et in illa rapina potest? aut non eodem impetu pecus omne, quo raptum erat, mersum est?

[27,15] Concepisti imaginem quantam debebas obrutis omnibus terris caelo ipso in terram ruente. Perfer: scies quid deceat, si cogitaueris orbem terrarum natum.

[28,1] Nunc ad propositum reuertamur. Sunt qui existiment immodicis imbris uexari terras posse, non obrui; magne, impetu magna ferienda sunt; faciet pluuiæ segetes malas, fructum grande, decutiet, intumescunt riuis flumina, sed resident.

[28,2] Quibusdam placet moueri mare et illinc causam tantæ cladis accersere: non potest torrentium aut imbrium aut fluminum iniuria fieri tam grande naufragium. Ubi instat illa perniciēs mutarique humanum genus placuit, fluere assiduos imbres et non esse modum pluuiis concesserim, suppressis aquilonibus et flatu sicciore austris nubes et amnes abundare. Sed adhuc in damna profectum est: “sternuntur segetes et deplorata colonis uota iacent longique perit labor irritus anni.”

[28,3] Non lædi terræ debent sed abscondi. Itaque cum per ista prolusum est, crescunt maria, sed super solitum, et fluctum ultra extremum tempestatis maximæ uestigium mittunt. Deinde a tergo uentis surgentibus ingens æquor euoluunt, quod longe a conspectu ueteris litoris frangitur. Deinde ubi litus bis terque prolatum est et pelagus in alieno constitit, uelut admoto malo comminus procurrit aestus ex imo recessu maris.

[28,4] Nam ut aeris, ut ætheris, sic huius elementi larga materia est multoque in abdito plenior. Haec fati mota, non aestu (nam aestus fati ministerium est), attollit uaste, sinu fretum agitque ante se. Deinde in miram altitudinem erigitur et illis tutis hominum receptaculis superest. Nec id aquis arduum est, quoniam æquo terris fastigio ascendunt.

[28,5] Si quis excelsa perlibret, maria paria sunt: nam par undique sibi ipsa tellus est (caua eius et plana inferiora sunt, sed istis adeo in rotundum orbis æquatus est); in parte autem eius et maria sunt, quæ in unius æqualitatem pilæ coeunt. Sed quemadmodum campos intuentem quæ paulatim deuexa sunt fallunt, sic non intellegimus curuaturas maris et uidetur planum quicquid apparet. At illud æquale terris est ideoque, ut effluat, non magna mole se tollet, dum satis est illi, ut supra paria ueniat; leuiter exsurgere; nec a litore, ubi inferius est, sed a medio, ubi ille cumulus est, defluit.

[28,6] Ergo ut solet aestus æquinoctilis sub ipsum lunæ solisque coitum omnibus aliis maior undare, sic hic, qui ad occupandas terras emittitur, solitis maximisque uiolentior, plus aquarum trahit nec, antequam supra cacumina eorum, quos perfusurus est, montium

creuit, deuoluitur. Per centena milia quibusdam locis aestus excurrit innoxius et ordinem seruat (ad mensuram enim crescit iterumque decrescit):

[28,7] at illo tempore solutus legibus sine modo fertur. Qua ratione?, inquis: eadem qua conflagratio futura est. Utrumque fit, cum deo uisum ordiri meliora, uetera finire. Aqua et ignis terrenis dominantur; ex his ortus, ex his interitus est: ergo quandoque placuere res nouae mundo, sic in nos mare emittitur desuper, ut feruor ignisque, cum aliud genus exitii placuit.

[29,1] Quidam existimant terram quoque concuti et dirupto solo noua fluminum capita detegere, quae amplius ut e pleno profundant. Berosos, qui Belum interpretatus est, ait ista cursu siderum fieri; adeo quidem affirmat, ut conflagrationi atque diluuio tempus assignet: arsura enim terrena contendit, quandoque omnia sidera, quae nunc diuersos agunt cursus, in Cancrum conuenerint, sic sub eodem posita uestigio, ut recta linea exire per orbem omnium possit; inundationem futuram, cum eadem siderum turba in Capricornum conuenerit. Illic solstitium, hic bruma conficitur: magnae potentiae signa, quando in ipsa mutatione anni momenta sunt.

[29,2] Et istas ego receperim causas (neque enim ex uno est tanta perniciēs), et illam, quae in conflagratione nostris placet, hoc quoque transferendam puto: siue animal est mundus siue corpus natura gubernabile, ut arbores, ut sata, ab initio eius usque ad exitum quicquid facere quicquid pati debeat, inclusum est.

[29,3] Ut in semine omnis futuri hominis ratio comprehensa est et legem barbae canorumque nondum natus infans habet (totius enim corporis et sequentis auctus in paruo occultoque liniamenta sunt), sic origo mundi non minus solem et lunam et uices siderum et animalium ortus quam quibus mutarentur terrena continuit. In his fuit inundatio, quae non secus quam hiems, quam aestas, lege mundi uenit.

[29,4] Itaque non pluuias istud fiet sed pluuias quoque, non incursu maris maris quoque incursu, non terrae motu sed terrae quoque motu: omnia adiuuabunt naturam, ut naturae constituta peragantur. Maximam tamen causam ad se inundandam terra ipsa praestabit, quam diximus esse mutabilem et solui in uorem.

[29,5] Ergo quandoque erit terminus rebus humanis, cum partes eius interire debuerint abolerique funditus totae, ut de integro totae rudes innoxiaeque generentur nec supersit in deteriora praeceptor, plus umoris quam semper fuit fiet. Nunc enim elementa ad id quod debetur pensa surit: aliquid oportet alteri accedat, ut quae libramento stant, inaequalitas turbet. Accedet umori; nunc enim habet quo ambiat terras, non quo obruat: quicquid illi adieceris, necesse est in alienum locum exundet.

[29,6] Uide ergo ne terra debeat minui, ut ualidiori infirma succumbat. Incipiet ergo putrescere, dehinc laxata ire in umorem et assidua tabe defluere. Tunc exilient sub montibus flumina ipsosque impetu quatient; inde aura tacta manabunt;

[29,7] solum omne aquas reddet, summi scaturient montes. Quemadmodum in morbum transeunt sana et ulceri uicina consentiunt, ut quaeque proxima terris fluentibus fuerint, ipsa eluentur stillabuntque, deinde current et, hiant pluribus locis saxo, [per] fretum saliet et maria inter se componet. Nihil erunt Adria, nihil Siculi aequoris fauces, nihil Charybdis, nihil Scylla: omnes nouum mare fabulas obruet et hic qui terras cingit oceanus extrema sortitus ueniet in medium.

[29,8] Quid ergo est? Nihilominus tenebit alienos menses hiems, aestas prohibebitur, et quodcumque terras sidus exsiccat, compresso ardore cessabit. Peribunt tot nomina, Caspium et Rubrum mare, Ambracii et Cretici sinus, Propontis et Pontus; peribit omne discrimen; confundetur quicquid in suas partes natura digessit. Non muri quemquam, non turre tuebuntur. Non proderunt templa supplicibus nec urbium summa, quippe fugientes unda praeueniet et ex ipsis arcibus deferet.

[29,9] Alia ab occasu, alia ab oriente concurrent. Unus humanum genus condet dies; quicquid tam longa fortunae indulgentia excoluit, quicquid supra ceteros extulit, nobilia pariter atque adornata magnarumque gentium regna pessundabit.

[30,1] Sunt omnia, ut dixi, facilia naturae, utique <quae> a primo facere constituit, ad quae non subito sed ex denuntiato uenit. Iam autem a primo die mundi, cum in hunc habitum ex informi unitate discederet, quando mergerentur terrena decretum est; et ne sit quandoque uelut in nouo opere dura molitio, olim ad hoc maria se exercent.

[30,2] Non uides ut fluctus in litora tamquam exiturus incurrat? Non uides ut aestus fines suos transeat et in possessionem terrarum mare inducat? Non uides ut illi perpetua cum claustris suis pugna sit? Quid porro? Istinc, unde tantum tumultum uides, metus est, e mari et magno spiritu erumpentibus fluuiis.

[30,3] Ubi non umorem natura disposuit, ut undique nos, cum uoluisset, aggredi posset? Mentior, nisi eruentibus terram umor occurrit et, quotiens nos aut auaritia defodit aut aliqua causa penetrare altius cogit, eruendi finis aliquando est. Adice quod immanes sunt in abdito lacus et multum maris conditi, multum fluminum per operta labentium.

[30,4] Undique ergo erit causa diluuio, cum aliae aquae subterfluant terras, aliae circumfluant, quae diu coercitae uincent et amnes amnibus iungent, paludibus stagna. Omnium tunc mare ora fontium im implebit et maiore hiatu soluet. Quemadmodum corpora nostra ad egestum uenter exhaurit, quemadmodum in sudorem eunt uires, ita tellus liquefiet et aliis causis quiescentibus intra se quo mergatur inueniet. Sed magis omnia coitura crediderim.

[30,5] Nec longa erit mora exitii: temptatur diuelliturque concordia. Cum semel aliquid ex hac idonea diligentia remiserit mundus, statim undique ex aperto et abdito, superne, ab infimo, aquarum fiet irruptio.

[30,8] Omne ex integro animal generabitur dabiturque terris homo inscius scelerum et melioribus auspiciis natus. Sed illis quoque innocentia non durabit, nisi dum noui sunt; cito nequitia subrepat. Uirtus difficilis inuentu est, rectorem ducemque desiderat: etiam sine magistro uitia discuntur.

LIBER IV

DE NILI INCREMENTO

[1] Delectat te, quemadmodum scribis, Lucili uirorum optime, Sicilia et officium procurationis otiosae, delectabitque, si continere id intra fines suos uolueris nec efficere imperium quod est procuratio. Facturum hoc te non dubito; scio quam sis ambitioni alienus, quam familiaris otio et litteris. Turbam rerum hominumque desiderent qui se pati nesciunt: tibi tecum optime conuenit.

[2] Nec est mirum paucis istud contingere. Imperiosi nobis ipsi ac molesti sumus; modo amore nostri, modo taedio laboramus; infelicem animum nunc superbia inflammas, nunc cupiditate distendimus; alias uoluptate lassamus, alias sollicitudine exurimus; quod est miserrimum, numquam sumus singuli. Necesse est itaque assidua sit in tam magno uitiorum contubernio rixa.

[3] Fac ergo, mi Lucili, quod facere consuesti; a turba te, quantum potes, separa, ne adulatoribus latus praebeas. Artifices sunt ad captandos superiores: par illis, etiamsi bene caueris, non eris. Sed mihi crede: proditori, si capieris, ipse te trades.

[5] Sic ergo formare, ut scias non posse te consequi, ut sis impenetrabilis: cum omnia caueris, per ornamenta ferieris. Alius adulatione clam utetur, parce, alius ex aperto, palam, rusticitate simulata, quasi simplicitas illa, non ars sit. Plancus, artifex ante Vitellium maximus, aiebat non esse occulte nec ex dissimulato blandiendum: “Perit, inquit, procari, si latet.”

[6] Plurimum adulator, cum deprehensus est, proficit; plus etiam nunc, si obiurgatus est, si erubuit. Futuros multos in persona tua Plancos cogita et hoc non esse remedium tanti mali, nolle laudari. Crispus Passienus, quo ego nil cognoui subtilius in omnibus quidem rebus, maxime in distinguendis et curandis uitiis, saepe dicebat adulationi nos non claudere ostium sed operire, et quidem sic, quemadmodum opponi amicae solet: quae, si impulit, grata est; gravior, si effregit.

[8] “Te, inquit, longiorem Fido Annaeo iurabo et Apollonio pycete, quamuis staturam habeas pitheci cum Thraece compositi. Hominem quidem non esse ullum liberaliorem non mentiar, cum possis uideri omnibus donasse quicquid dereliquisti.”

[9] Ita est, mi Iunior: quo apertior est adulatio, quo improbior, quo magis frontem suam perfricuit, cecidit alienam, hoc citius expugnat. Eo enim iam dementiae uenimus, ut qui parce adulatur, pro maligno sit.

[10] Solebam tibi dicere Gallionem si, fratrem meum, quem nemo non parum amat, etiam qui amare plus non potest, alia uitia non nosse, hoc eum odisse. Ab omni illum parte temptasti: ingenium suspicere coepisti omnium maximum et dignissimum, quod consecrari mallet quam conteri: pedes abstulit; frugalitatem laudare coepisti, quae sic a nostris moribus resiliuit, ut illos nec habere nec damnare uideatur: prima statim uerba praecidit;

[12] Eo quidem magis hanc eius prudentiam et in euitando ineuitabili malo pertinaciam te suspicere confessus es, quia speraueras posse apertis auribus recipi, quamuis blanda diceres, quia uera dicebas. Sed eo magis intellexit obstandum: semper enim falsis a uero petitur ueri <aucto>ritas. Nolo tamen displiceas tibi, quasi male egeris minium et quasi ille aliquid iocorum aut doli suspicatus sit: non deprehendit te sed reppulit.

[14] Cum cupieris bene laudari, quare hoc ulli debeas? Ipse te lauda, dic: Liberalibus me studiis tradidi. Quamquam paupertas alia suaderet et ingenium eo duceret ubi praesens studii pretium est, ad gratuita carmina deflexi me et ad salutare philosophiae contuli studium.

[15] Ostendi in omne pectus cadere uirtutem et, eluctatus natalium angustias nec sorte me sed animo mensus, par maximis steti. Non mihi in amicitia Gaetulici Gaius fidem eripuit; non in aliorum persona infeliciter amatorum Messallina et Narcissus, diu publici hostes antequam sui, propositum meum potuerunt euertere: ceruicem pro fide opposui; nullum uerbum mihi, quod non salua bona conscientia procederet, excussum est; pro amicis omnia timui, pro me nihil, nisi ne parum bonus amicus fuissem.

[16] Non mihi muliebres fluxere lacrimae; non e manibus ullius supplex pependi; nihil indecorum nec bono nec uiro feci. Periculis meis maior, paratus ire in ea quae minabantur, egi gratias fortunae, quod experiri uoluisset quanti aestimarem fidem (non debebat mihi paruo res tanta constare); ne examinaui quidem diu (neque enim paria pendebant), utrum satius esset me perire pro fide an fidem pro me;

[17] non praecipiti impetu in ultimum consilium, quo me eriperem furori potentium, misi. Uidebam apud Gaium tormenta, uidebam ignes, sciebam olim sub illo in eum statum res humanas decidisse, ut inter misericordiae exempla haberentur occisi: non tamen ferro incubui nec in mare aperto ore desilui, ne uiderer pro fide tantum mori posse.

[18] Adice inuictum muneribus animum et in tanto auaritiae certamme numquam suppositam manum lucro; adice uictus parsimoniam, sermonis modestiam se, aduersus minores humanitatem, aduersus maiores reuerentiam. Post haec ipse te consule, uerane an falsa memoraueris: si uera surit, coram magno teste laudatus es; si falsa, sine teste derisus es.

[19] Possum et ipse nunc uideri te aut captare aut experiri: utrumlibet crede et omnes timere a me incipe. Vergilianum illud exaudi “nusquam tuta fides”, aut Ouidianum “qua terra patet, fera regnat Erinys: in facinus iurasse putes”, aut illud Menandri (quis enim non in hoc magnitudinem ingenii sui concitauit, detestatus consensum humani generis tendentis ad uitia?): omnes ait malos uiuere et in scaenam uelut rusticus poeta prosiluit; non senem excipit, non puerum, non feminam, non uirum, et adicit non singulos peccare nec paucos, sed iam scelus esse contextum.

[20] Fugiendum ergo et in se recedendum est; immo etiam a se recedendum. Hoc tibi, etsi diuidimur mari, praestare temptabo, ut subinde te iniecta manu ad meliora perducam, et, ne solitudinem sentias, hinc tecum miscebo sermones: erimus una, qua parte optimi sumus; dabimus inuicem consilia non ex uultu audientis pendentia;

[1.1] Itaque, ut totum inde te abducam, quamuis multa habeat Sicilia in se circaque se mirabilia, omnes interim prouinciae tuae quaestiones praeteribo et in diuersum cogitationes tuas abstraham. Quaeram enim tecum id quod libro superiore distuli, quid ita Nilus aestiuus mensibus abundet. Cui Danuuuium similem habere naturam philosophi tradiderunt, quod et fontis ignoti et aestate quam hieme maior sit.

[1,2] Utrumque apparuit falsum: nam et caput eius in Germania esse comperimus, et aestate quidem incipit crescere sed, adhuc manente intra mensuram suam Nilo, primis caloribus, cum sol uehementior intra extrema ueris niues molliat, quas ante consumit quam tumescere Nilus incipiat; reliquo uero aestatis minuitur et ad hibernam magnitudinem redit atque ex ea demittitur. At Nilus ante exortum Caniculae augetur mediis aestibus ultra aequinoctium.

[2,1] Hunc nobilissimum amnium natura extulit ante humani generis oculos et ita disposuit, ut eo tempore inundaret Aegyptum quo maxime usta feruoribus terra undas altius traheret, tantum usura quantum siccitati annuae sufficere possit. Nam in ea parte, quae in Aethiopiam uergit, aut nulli imbres sunt aut rari et qui insuetam aquis caelestibus terrain non adiuent.

[2,2] Unam, ut scis, Aegyptus in hoc spem suam habet: proinde aut sterilis annus aut fertilis est, prout ille magnus influxit aut parcior; “nemo aratorum respicit caelum”. Quare non cum poeta meo iocor et illi Ouidium a suum impingo, qui ait “nec Pluuio supplicat herba Ioui”?

[2,3] Unde crescere incipiat si comprehendi posset, causae quoque incrementi inuenirentur: nunc uero magnas solitudines peruagatus et in paludes diffusus <flexibusque in>gentibus sparsus circa Philas primum ex uago et errante colligitur. Philae insula est aspera et undique prearupta; duobus in unum coituris amnibus bus cingitur, qui Nilo mutantur et eius nomen ferunt; urbem totam complectitur.

[2,4] Ab hac Nilus magnus magis quam uiolentus egressus, Aethiopiam harenasque, per quas iter ad commercia Indici maris est, praelabatur. Excipiunt eum Cataractae, nobilis insigni spectaculo locus:

[2,5] ibi per arduas excisasque pluribus locis rupes Nilus insurgit et uires suas concitat. Frangitur enim occurrentibus saxis et per angusta eluctatus, ubicumque uincit aut uincitur, fluctuat et illic excitationis primum aquis, quas sine tumultu leni alueo duxerat, uiolentus et torrens per malignos transitus prosilit dissimilis sibi, quippe ad id lutosus et turbidus fluit; at ubi scopulos et acuta cautium uerberauit, spumat, et illi non ex natura sua sed ex iniuria loci color est, tandemque eluctatus obstantia in uastam altitudinem subito destitutus cadit cum ingenti circumiacentium regionum strepitu. Quem perferre gens ibi a Persis collocata non potuit obtusis assiduo fragore auribus et ob hoc sedibus ad quietiora translatis.

[2,6] Inter miracula fluminis incredibilem incolarum audaciam accepi: bini paruula nauigia conscendunt, quorum alter nauem regit, alter exhaurit; deinde multum inter rapidam insaniam Nili et reciprocos fluctus uolutati tandem tenuissimos canales tenent, per quos angusta rupium effugiunt et, cum toto flumine effusi, nauigium ruens manu temperant magnoque spectantium metu in caput missi, cum iam adploraueris mersosque atque obrutos tanta mole credideris, longe ab eo, in quem cederunt, loco nauigant tormenti modo missi; nec mergit illos cadens unda sed planis aquis tradit.

[2,7] Primum incrementum Nili circa insulam, quam modo rettuli Philas uisitur: exiguo ab hac spatio petra diuiditur (Abaton Graeci uocant, nec illam ulli nisi antistites calcant); illa primum saxa auctum fluminis sentiunt. Post magnum deinde spatium duo eminent scopuli (Nili uenas uocant incolae) ex quibus magna uis funditur, non tamen quanta operire possit Aegyptum. In haec ora stipem sacerdotes et aurea dona praefecti, cum sollemne uenit sacrum, iaciunt.

[2,8] Hinc iam manifestus nouarum uirium Nilus alto ac profundo alueo fertur, ne in latitudinem excedat, obiectu montium pressus. Circa Memphim demum liber et per campestria uagus in plura scinditur flumina manuque canalibus factis, ut sit modus in deriuantium potestate, per totam discurrit Aegyptum. Initio diducitur, deinde continuatis aquis in faciem lati ac turbidi maris stagnat: cursum illi uiolentiamque eripit latitudo regionum in quas extenditur dextra laeuaque totam amplexus Aegyptum.

[2,9] Quantum creuit Nilus, tantum spei in annum est; nec computatio fallit agricolam, adeo ad mensuram fluminis terra respondet, quam fertilem facit Nilus. Is harenoso ac sitiendi solo et aquam inducit et terram: nam cum turbulentus fluat, omnem in siccis atque hiantibus locis faecem relinquit et, quicquid pingue secum tulit, arentibus locis allinit iuuatque agros duabus ex causis, et quod inundat et quod oblimat. Itaque quicquid non adiuit, sterile ac squalidum iacet; si creuit super debitum, nocuit.

[2,10] Mira itaque natura fluminis quod, cum ceteri amnes abluant

terras et euiscerent, Nilus, tanto ceteris maior, adeo nihil exedit nec abradit, ut contra adiciat uires minimumque in eo sit, quod solum temperat: illato enim limo harenas saturat ac iungit, debetque illi Aegyptus non tantum fertilitatem terrarum, sed ipsas.

[2,11] Illa facies pulcherrima est cum iam se in agros Nilus ingessit: latent campi opertaeque sunt ualles, oppida insularum modo exstant, nullum mediterraneis nisi per nauigia commercium est maiorque est laetitia gentibus quo minus terrarum suarum uident.

[2,12] Sic quoque, cum se ripis continet Nilus, per septena ostia in mare emittitur: quodcumque ex his elegeris, mare est. Multos nihilominus ignobiles ramos in aliud atque aliud litus porrigit. Ceterum beluas marinis uel magnitudine uel noxa pares educat, et ex eo quantus sit aestimari potest quod ingentia animalia et pabulo sufficienti et ad uagandum loco continet.

[2,13] Balbillus, uirorum optimus perfectusque in omni litterarum genere rarissime, auctor est, cum ipse praefectus obtineret Aegyptum, Heracleotico ostio Nili, quod est maximum, spectaculo sibi fuisse delphinorum a mari occurrentium et crocodillorum a flumine aduersum agmen agentium uelut pro partibus proelium; crocodillos ab animalibus placidis morsuque innoxiiis uictos.

[2,14] His superior pars corporis dura et impenetrabilis est etiam maiorum animalium dentibus, at inferior mollis ac tenera. Hanc delphini spinis, quas dorso eminentes gerunt, submersi uulnerabant et in aduersum enisi diuidebant; rescissis hoc modo pluribus ceteri uelut acie uersa refugerunt: fugax animal audaci, audacissimum timido!

[2,15] Nec illos Tentyritae generis aut sanguinis proprietate superant, sed contemptu et temeritate. Ultro enim insequuntur fugientesque iniecto trahunt laqueo: plerique pereunt, quibus minus praesens animus ad persequendum fuit.

[2,16] Nilum aliquando marinam aquam detulisse Theophrastus est auctor. Biennio continuo regnante Cleopatra non ascendisse, decimo regni anno et undecimo, constat. Significatam aiunt duobus rerum potentibus defectionem: Antonii enim Cleopatraeque defecit imperium. Per nouem annos non ascendisse Nilum superioribus saeculis Callimachus est auctor.

[2,17] Sed nunc ad inspiciendas causas, propter quas aestate Nilus

crescat, accedam et ab antiquissimis incipiam. Anaxagoras ait ex Aethiopiae iugis solutas niues ad Nilum usque decurrere. In eadem opinione omnis uetustas fuit: hoc Aeschylus, Sophocles, Euripides tradunt. Sed falsum esse argumentis pluribus patet.

[2,18] Primo Aethiopiam feruentissimam esse indicat hominum adustus color et Trogodytae, quibus subterraneae domus sunt. Saxa uelut igni feruescunt non tantum medio sed inclinato quoque die; ardens puluis nec humani uestigii patiens; argentum replumbatur; signorum coagmenta soluuntur; nullum materiae superadornatae manet operimentum. Auster quoque, qui ex illo tractu uenit, uentorum calidissimus est. Nullum ex his animalibus quae latent bruma umquam reconditur, etiam per hiemes in summo et aperto serpens est. Alexandriae quoque, quae longe ab immodicis caloribus posita est, niues non cadunt; superiora pluuiis carent.

[2,19] Quemadmodum ergo regio tantis subiecta feruoribus duraturas per totam aestatem niues recipit? Quas sane aliqui montes illic quoque excipiant: numquid magis quam Alpes, quam Thraciae iuga aut Caucasus? Atqui horum montium flumina uere et prima aestate intumescunt, deinde hibernis minora sunt: quippe uernis temporibus imbres niuem diluunt, reliquias eius primus calor dissipat.

[2,20] Nec Rhenus nec Rhodanus nec Hister nec Caystrus subiacens Tmolo aestate proueniunt: et illis altissimae, ut in septemtrionibus, iugiter sunt niues. Phasis quoque per idem tempus et Borysthenes crescerent, ut niues flumina possent contra aestatem magna producere.

[2,21] Praeterea si haec causa attolleret Nilum, aestate prima plenissimus flueret; tunc enim maxime integrae adhuc niues ex mollissimoque tabes est: Nilus autem per menses quattuor liquitur et illi aequalis accessio est.

[2,22] Si Thaleti credis, etesiae descendenti Nilo resistunt et cursum eius acto contra ostia mari sustinent: ita reuerberatus in se recurrit nec crescit, sed exitu prohibitus resistit et quacumque mox potuit ui congestus erumpit. Euthymenes Massiliensis testimonium dicit: "Nauigauit, inquit, Atlanticum mare: inde Nilus fluit, maior, quamdiu etesiae tempus obseruant; tunc enim eicitur mare instantibus uentis. Cum resederunt, et pelagus conquiescit minorque descendenti inde uis Nilo est. Ceterum dulcis mari sapor est et similes Niloticis beluae”.

[2,23] Quare ergo, si Nilum etesiae prouocant, et ante illos incipit incrementum eius et post eos durat? Praeterea non fit maior quo illi flauere uehementius, nec remittitur incitaturque prout illis impetus fuit: quod fieret, si illorum uiribus cresceret. Quid, quod etesiae litus Aegyptium uerberant et contra illos Nilus descendit, inde uenturus unde illi, si origo ab illis esset? Praeterea ex mari purus et caeruleus efflueret, non ut nunc turbidus ueniret.

[2,24] Adice quod testimonium eius testium turba coarguitur. Tunc erat mendacio locus; cum ignota essent externa, licebat illis fabulas mittere; nunc uero tota exteri maris ora mercatorum nauibus stringitur, quorum nemo narrat initium Nili aut mare saporis alterius: quod natura credi uetat, quia dulcissimum quodque et leuissimum sol trahit.

[2,25] Praeterea quare hieme non crescit? Et tunc potest uentis concitari mare aliquanto quidem maioribus: nam etesiae temperati sunt. Quod si e mari ferretur Atlantico, semel oppleret Aegyptum: at nunc per gradus crescit.

[2,26] Oenopides Chius ait hieme calorem sub terris contineri: ideo et specus calidos esse et tepidiorem puteis aquam, itaque uenas interno calore siccari. Sed in aliis terris augeri imbribus flumina; Nilum, quia nullo imbre adiuuetur, tenuari; deinde crescere per aestatem, quo tempore fripent interiora terrarum et redit rigor fontibus.

[2,27] Quod si uerum esset, aestate flumina crescerent omnia, putei aestate abundarent. Deinde falsum est calorem hieme sub terris esse maiorem. At quare specus et putei tepent? Quia aera frigentem extrinsecus non recipiunt: ita non calorem habent, sed frigus excludunt. Ex eadem causa aestate refrigescunt, quia ad illos remotos seductosque calefactus non peruertit.

[2,28] Diogenes Apolloniates ait: “Sol umorem ad se rapit: hunc adsiccata tellus ex mari ducit, tum ex ceteris aquis. Fieri autem non potest, ut alia sicca sit tellus, alia abundet; sunt enim perforata omnia et inuicem peruia, et sicca ab umidis sumunt. Alioquin, nisi aliquid terra acciperet, exaruisset. Ergo undique sol trahit, sed ex his quae premit maxime; haec meridiana sunt.

[2,29] Terra cum exaruit, plus ad se umoris adducit: ut in lucernis oleum illo fluit ubi exurit, sic aqua illo incumbit quo uis caloris et terrae aestuantis arcessit. Unde ergo trahit? Ex illis scilicet partibus semper hibernis: septentrionales exundant. Ob hoc Pontus in infernum mare assidue fluit rapidus (non ut cetera maria alternatis ultro citro aestibus) in unam partem semper promus et torrens. Quod nisi facile his itineribus quod cuique deest redderetur, quod cuique superest emit, teretur, iam aut sicca essent omnia aut inundata”.

Grandinem hoc modo fieri si tibi affirmauero quo apud nos glacies fit, gelata nube tota, nimis audacem rem fecero. Itaque ex his me testibus numero secundae notae, qui uidisse quidem se negant; aut, quod historici faciunt, et ipse faciam: illi cum multa mentiti sunt ad arbitrium suum, unam aliquam rem nolunt spondere sed adiciunt: “Penes auctores fides erit”.

[3,2] Ergo si mihi parum credis, Posidonius tibi auctoritatem promittit tam in illo quod praeteriit, quam in hoc quod secuturum est: grandinem enim fieri ex nube aquosa iam et in umorem uersa sic affirmabit tamquam interfuerit.

[3,3] Quare autem rotunda sit grando, etiam sine magistro scire possis, cum adnotaueris stillicidium omne glomerari, quod et in speculis apparet, quae umorem halitu colligunt, et in poculis sparsis aliaque omni leuitate; non minus foliis si quae guttae adhaeserunt, in rotundum iacent.

[3,4] “Quid magis est saxo durum? Quid mollius unda? Dura tamen molli saxa cauantur aqua.” Aut, ut alius poeta ait: “stillicidi casus lapidem cauat.” Haec ipsa excauatio rotunda fit; ex quo apparet illud quoque huic simile esse quod cauat: locum enim sibi ad formam et habitum sui exsculpit.

[3,5] Praeterea potest, etiamsi non fuit grando talis, dum defertur, corrotundari et, totiens per spatium aeris densi deuoluta, aequabiliter atque in orbem teri. Quod nix pati non potest, quia non est tam solida, immo quia fusa est, et non per magnam altitudinem cadit sed circa terras initium eius est: ita non longus illi per aera sed ex proximo lapsus est.

[3,6] Quare non et ego mihi idem permittam quod Anaxagoras? Inter nullos magis quam inter philosophos esse debet aequa libertas: grando nihil aliud est quam suspensa glacies, nix [in] pruina pendens [congelatio]. Illud enim iam diximus, quod inter rorem et aquam interest, hoc inter pruinam et glaciem nec non inter niuem et grandinem interesse.

[4,2] hieme aer riget et ideo nondum in aquam uertitur sed in niuem, cui aer propior est; cum uer coepit, maior inclinatio temporis sequitur et calidiore caelo maiora fiunt stillicidia. Ideo (ut ait Vergilius noster) “cum ruit imbriferum uer”, uehementior mutatio est aeris undique patefacti et soluentis se ipso tempore adiuuante: ob hoc nimbi graues magis uastique quam pertinaces deferuntur.

[4,3] Bruma lentas pluuias habet et tenues, quales saepe solent interuenire, cum pluuias rara et minuta niuem quoque admixtam habet; dicimus niualem diem, cum altum frigus et triste caelum est. Praeterea, aquilone flante aut suum caelum habente, minutae pluuias sunt; austro imber improbior est et guttae pleniores.

[5,1] Rem a nostris positam nec dicere audeo, quia infirma uidetur, nec praeterire: quid enim mali est aliquid et faciliori iudici scribere? Immo si omnia argumenta ad obrussam coeperimus exigere, silentium indicetur: pauca enim admodum sunt sine aduersario; cetera, etiamsi uincunt, litigant.

[5,2] Aiunt uere, quicquid circa Scythiam et Pontum et septemtrionalem plagam glaciatum et astrictum est, relaxari; tunc flumina gelata discedere, tunc obrutos montes niuem soluere.

Credibile est ergo frigidus spiritus inde fieri et uerno caelo remiseris.

[5,3] Illud quoque adiciunt, quod nec sum expertus nec experiri cogito (tu quoque, censeo, si uolueris uerum exquirere, niuem in Care experiaris): minus algere aiunt pedes eorum, qui fixam et duram niuem calcant quam eorum, qui teneram et labefactam.

[5,4] Ergo, si non mentiuritur, quicquid ex illis septemtrionalibus locis iam disturbata niue et glacie frangente se fertur, id meridianae partis tepentem iam umidumque aera alligat et praestringit: ita quae pluuias futura erat, grando fit iniuria frigoris.

[6,1] Non tempero mihi quominus omnes nostrorum ineptias proferam. Quosdam peritos obseruandarum nubium esse affirmant et praedicere cum grando uentura sit. Hoc intellegere usu ipso potuerunt, cum colorem nubium notassent, quem grando totiens insequabatur.

[6,3] Hoc rides? Accipe quod magis rideas: si quis nec agnum nec pullum habebat, quod sine damno fieri poterat, manus sibi afferebat, et, ne tu auidas aut crudeles existimes nubes, digitum suum bene acuto graphio pungebat et hoc sanguine litabat; nec minus ab huius agello grando se uertebat quam ab illo, in quo maioribus hostiis exorata erat.

[7,1] Rationem huius rei quaerunt: alteri, ut homines sapientissimos decet, negant posse fieri ut cum grandine aliquis paciscatur et tempestates munusculis redimat, quamuis munera et deos uincant. Alteri suspicari ipsos aiunt esse in ipso sanguine uim quandam potentem auertendae nubis ac repellendae.

[7,2] Sed quomodo in tam exiguo sanguine potest esse uis tanta, ut in altum penetret et illam sentiant nubes? Quanto expeditius erat dicere: mendacium et fabula est. At Cleonaei iudicia reddebant in illos quibus delegata erat cura prouidendae tempestatis, quod neglegentia eorum uineae uapulassent aut segetes procidissent. Et apud nos in XII tabulis cauetur “ne quis alienos fructus excantassit”.

[7,3] Rudis adhuc antiquitas credebat et attrahi cantibus imbres et repelli, quorum nihil posse fieri tam palam est, ut huius rei causa nullius philosophi schola intranda sit.

[8,1] Unam rem ad hoc adiciam et fauere te ac plaudere iuuabit. Aiunt niuem in ea parte aeris fieri quae prope terras est. Hanc enim plus habere caloris ex quattuor causis: una, quod omnis terrarum euaporatio, cum multum in se feruidi aridique habeat, hoc est calidior quo recentior; altera, quod radii solis a terra resiliunt et in se recurrunt: horum duplicatio proxima quaeque a terris calefacit, quae ideo plus habent teporis quia solem bis sentiunt; tertia causa est, quod magis superiora perflantur, at quaecumque depressa sunt minus uentis uerberantur.

[9,1] Accedit bis ratio Democriti: “Omne corpus, quo solidius est hoc calorem citius concipit, diutius seruat. Itaque si in sole posueris aeneum uas et uitreum [et argenteum], aeneo citius calor accedet, diutius haerebit.” Adicit deinde quare hoc existimet fieri.” His, inquit, corporibus, quae duriora et pressiora sunt, necesse est minora foramina esse et tenuiorem in singulis spiritum: sequitur ut, quemadmodum minora balnearia et minora miliaria citius calefiunt, sic haec foramina occulta et oculos effugientia et celerius feruorem sentiant et propter easdem angustias, quicquid receperunt, tardius reddant.”. Haec longe praeparata ad id perducunt, de quo nunc quaeritur.

[11,1] Contra quidam aiunt cacumina montium hoc calidiora esse debere, quo propiora soli sunt: qui mihi uidentur errare, quod Apenninum et Alpes et alios notos ob eximiam altitudinem montes in tantum putant crescere, ut illorum magnitudo sentire solis uiciniam possit:

[11,2] excelsa sunt ista, quamdiu nobis comparantur; at uero, ubi ad

uniuersum respexeris, manifesta est omnium humilitas. Inter se uincuntur et uincunt; ceterum in tantum nihil attollitur, ut in collatione totius ulla sit uel maximis portio: quod nisi esset, non diceremus totum orbem terrarum pilam esse.

[11,5] Montes isti, quos suspicimus, et uertices aeterna niue obsessi nihilominus in imo sunt; et propius quidem est a sole mons quam campus aut uallis, sed sic quomodo est pilus pilo crassior. Isto enim modo et arbor alia magis quam alia dicetur uicina caelo. Quod est falsum, quia inter pusilla non potest magnum esse discrimen, nisi dum inter se comparantur. Ubi ad collationem immensi corporis uentum est, nihil interest quanto sit alterum altero malus, quia, etiamsi magno discrimine, tamen minima uincuntur.

[12,1] Sed ut ad propositum reuertar, propter has quas rettuli causas plerisque placuit in ea parte aeris niuem concipi quae uicina terris est, et ideo minus alligari quia minore rigore coit. Nam uicinus aer et plus habet frigoris quam ut in aquam imbremque transeat, et minus quam ut duretur in grandinem: hoc medio frigore non nimis intento niues fiunt coactis aquis.

[13,1] “Quid istas, inquis, ineptias, quibus litteratior est quisque, non melior, tam operose persequeris? Quomodo fiant niues dicis, cum multo magis ad nos dici a te pertineat quare emendae non sint niues.” Iubes me tandem cum luxuria litigare? Cotidianum istud et sine effectu iurgium est. Litigemus tamen, etiamsi superior futura est: pugnantes ac reluctantes uincat.

[13,2] Quid porro? Hanc ipsam inspectionem naturae nihil iudicas ad id, quod uis, conferre? Cum quaeramus quomodo nix fiat et dicimus illam pruinae similem habere naturam, plus illi spiritus quam aquae inesse, non putas exprobrari illis, cum emere aquam turpe sit, si ne aquam quidem emunt?

[13,5] Unde ad hoc peruentum sit ut nulla nobis aqua satis frigida uideretur quae flueret, dicam. Quamdiu sanus et salubris cibi capax stomachus est impleturque, non premitur, naturalibus fomentis contentus est: ubi cotidianis cruditatibus perustus non temporis aestus sed suos sentit, ubi ebrietas continua uisceribus insedit et praecordia bile, in quam uertitur, torret, aliquid necessario quaeritur, quo aestus ille frangatur, qui ipsis aquis incalescit: remediis incitatur uitium. Itaque non aestate tantum sed et media hieme niuem hac causa bibunt.

[13,6] Quae huius rei causa est nisi intestinum malum et luxu corrupta praecordia? Quibus nullum interuallum umquam, quo interquiescerent, datum est, sed prandia cenis usque in lucem perductis ingesta sunt et distentos copia ferculorum ac uarietate comessatio altius mersit; deinde numquam intermissa intemperantia quicquid animi decoxerat efferauit et in desiderium semper noui rigoris accendit.

[13,7] Itaque quamuis cenationem uelis ac specularibus muniant et igne multo doment hiemem, nihilominus stomachus ille solutus et aestu suo languidus quaerit aliquid quo erigatur. Nam sicut animo relictos stupentesque frigida spargimus, ut ad sensum sui redeant, ita uiscera istorum uitiiis torpentia nihil sentiunt, nisi frigore illa uehementiore perusseris.

[13,8] Inde est, inquam, quod ne niue quidem contenti sunt, sed glaciem, uelut certior illi ex solido rigor sit, exquirunt ac saepe repetitis aquis diluunt: quae non e summo tollitur sed, ut uim maiorem habeat et pertinacius frigus, ex abdito effoditur. Itaque ne unum quidem eius est pretium, sed habet institores aqua et annonam (pro pudor!) uariam.

[13,9] Unguentarios Lacedaemonii urbe expulerunt et propere cedere finibus suis iusserunt, quia oleum disperderent: quid illi fecissent, si uidissent reponendae niuis officinas et tot iumenta portandae aquae deseruientia, cuius colorem saporemque paleis, quibus custodiunt, inquinant?

[13,10] At, dii boni, quam facile est extinguere sitim sanam! Sed quid sentire possunt emortuae fauces et occallatae cibis ardentibus? Quemadmodum nihil illis satis frigidum, sic nihil satis calidum est, sed ardentes boletos et raptim indumento suo mersatos demittunt paene fumantes, quos deinde restinguant niuatis potionibus. Videbis, inquam, quosdam graciles et palliolo focalique circumdatos, pallentes et aegros non sorbere solum niuem sed etiam esse et frustra eius in scyphos suos deicere, ne tepescant inter ipsam bibendi moram.

[13,11] Sitim istam esse putas? Febris est, et quidem eo acrior quod non tactu uenarum nec in cutem effuso calore deprehenditur sed cor ipsum excoquit. Luxuria inuictum malum et ex molli fluidoque durum atque patiens. Non intellegis omnia consuetudine uim suam perdere? Itaque nix ista, in qua iam etiam natatis, eo peruenit usu et cotidiana stomachi seruitute, ut aquae locum obtineat. Aliquid adhuc quaerite illa frigidius, quia pro nihilo est familiaris rigor.

[1,1] Uentus est fluens aer. Quidam ita definierunt: uentus est aer fluens in unam partem. Haec definitio uidetur diligentior, quia numquam aer tam immobilis est ut non in aliqua sit agitatione; sic tranquillum mare dicitur, cum leuiter commouetur nec in unam partem inclinatur: itaque si legeris “cum placidum uentis staret mare”, scito illud non stare sed succuti leuiter et dici tranquillum, quia nec hoc nec illo impetum capiat.

[1,2] Idem et de aere iudicandum est, non esse umquam immobilem, etiamsi quietus sit. Quod ex hoc intellegas licet: cum sol in aliquem clausum locum infusus est, uidemus corpuscula minima in aduersum ferri, alia sursum, alia deorsum uarie concursantia.

[1,3] Ergo ut parum diligenter comprehendet quod uult, qui dixerit: “fluctus est maris agitatio”, quia tranquillum quoque agitur, at ille abunde sibi cauerit, cuius definitio haec fuerit: “fluctus est maris in unam partem agitatio”; sic in hac quoque re, quam cum maxime quaerimus, non circumscribetur qui ita se gesserit ut dicat: “uentus est fluens in unam partem aer” aut “aer fluens impetu” aut “uis aeris in unam partem euntis” aut “cursus aeris aliquo concitior”.

[1,4] Scio quid responderi pro altera definitione possit: quid necesse est adicere te “in unam partem”? Utique enim quod fluit in unam partem fluit; nemo aquam fluere dicit, si tantum intra se mouetur, sed si aliquo fertur: potest ergo aliquid moueri et non fluere, et e contrario non potest fluere nisi in unam partem.

[1,5] Sed siue haec breuitas satis a calumnia tuta est, hac utamur; siue aliquis circumspector est, uerbo non parcat, cuius adiectio cauillationem omnem poterit excludere. Nunc ad ipsam rem accedamus, quoniam satis de formula disputatum est.

[2,1] Democritus ait, cum in angusto inani multa sint corpuscula, quae ille atomos uocat, sequi uentum; at contra quietum et placidum aeris statum esse, cum in multo inani pauca sint corpuscula. Nam quemadmodum in foro aut uico, quamdiu paucitas est, sine tumultu ambulatur, ubi turba in angustum concurrit, aliorum in alios

incidentium rixa fit: sic in hoc quo circumdati sumus spatio, cum exiguum locum multa corpora impleuerint, necesse est alia aliis incidant et impellant ac repellantur implicenturque et comprimantur, ex quibus nascitur uentus, cum illa quae colluctabantur incubuere et diu fluctuata ac dubia inclinauere se. At ubi in magna laxitate corpora pauca uersantur, nec arietare possunt nec impelli.

[3,1] Hoc falsum esse uel ex eo colligas licet quod tunc minime uentus est, cum aer nubilo grauis est: atqui tunc plurima corpora se in angustum contulerunt, et inde est spissarum nubium grauitas.

[3,2] Adice nunc quod circa flumina et lacus frequens nebula est artatis congestisque corporibus, nec tamen uentus est. Interdum uero tanta caligo effunditur ut conspectum in uicino stantium eripiat, quod non eueniret, nisi in paruum locum corpora se multa compellerent. Atqui nullum tempus magis quam nebulosum caret uento.

[3,3] Adice nunc quod e contrario euenit ut sol matutinum aera spissum et umidum ortu suo tenuet; tunc surgit aura, cum datum est laxamentum corporibus et stipatio illorum ac turba resoluta est.

[4,1] Quo modo ergo, inquis, uenti fiunt, quoniam hoc negas fieri? - Non uno modo: alias enim terra ipsa magnam uim aeris eicit et ex abdito spirat, alias, cum magna et continua ex imo euaporatio in altum egit quae emiserat, mutatio ipsa halitus mixti in uentum uertitur.

[4,2] Illud enim nec ut credam mihi persuaderi potest nec ut taceam: quomodo in nostris corporibus cibo fit inflatio (quae non sine magna narium iniuria emittitur et uentrem interdum cum sonos exonerat, interdum secretus), sic putant et hanc magnam rerum naturam alimenta mutantem emittere spiritum. Bene nobiscum agitur quod semper concoquit: alioquin immundius aliquid timeremus.

[4,3] Numquid ergo hoc uerius est dicere, multa ex omni parte terrarum et assidua ferri corpuscula? Quae cum coaceruata sunt, deinde extenuari sole coeperunt, quia omne quod in angusto dilatatur, spatium maius desiderat, uentus existit.

nec aliunde concipere sed inesse illi, ut aliarum rerum, ita huius potentiam.

[5,2] An hoc existimas, nobis quidem datas uires quibus nos moueremus, aera autem relictum inertem et inagitabilem esse, cum aqua motum suum habeat etiam uentis quiescentibus? Nec enim aliter animalia ederet; muscum quoque innasci aquis et herbosa quaedam uidemus summo innatantia: est ergo aliquid in aqua uitale.

[6,1] De aqua dico? Ignis, qui omnia consumit, quaedam creat et, quod uideri non potest simile ueri, tamen uerum est, animalia igne generari. Habet ergo aliquam uim uitalem aer et ideo modo spissat se modo expandit et purgat et alias contrahit diducit ac differt. Hoc ergo interest inter aera et uentum quod inter lacum et flumen. Aliquando per se ipse sol causa uenti est fundens rigentem aera et ex denso coactoque explicans.

[7,1] In uniuersum de uentis diximus: nunc uiritim incipiamus illos excutere. Fortasse apparebit quemadmodum fiant, si apparuerit quando et unde procedant. Primum ergo antelucanos flatus inspiciamus, qui aut ex fluminibus aut ex conuallibus aut aliquo sinu feruntur.

[7,2] Nullus ex his pertinax est sed cadit fortiore iam sole nec fert ultra terrarum conspectum. Hoc uentorum genus incipit uere, non ultra aestatem durat et inde maxime uenit ubi aquarum plurimum et montium est. Plana, licet abundant aquis, carent aura; hac, dico, quae pro uento ualet.

[8,1] Quomodo ergo talis flatus concipitur quem Graeci Gegkolpian uocant? Quicquid ex se paludes et flumina remittunt (id autem et multum est et assiduum), per diem solis alimentum est, nocte non exhauritur et montibus inclusum in unam regionem colligitur; cum illam impleuit et iam se non capit, exprimitur aliquo et in unam partem procedit: hinc uentus est. Itaque eo incumbit quo liberior exitus inuitat et loci laxitas, in quam coaceruata decurrant.

[8,2] Huius rei argumentum est, quod prima noctis parte non spirat: incipit enim fieri illa collectio, quae circa lucem iam plena est; onerata quaerit quo defluat, et eo potissimum exit ubi plurimum uacui est et magna ac patens area. Adicit autem ei stimulos ortus solis feriens gelidum aera; nam etiam antequam appareat, lumine ipso ualet et nondum quidem radiis aera impellit, iam tamen lacessit et irritat luce praemissa;

[8,3] nam cum ipse processit, alia superius rapiuntur, alia diffunduntur tepore: ideo non ultra matutinum illis datur fluere; omnis illorum uis conspectu solis extinguitur. Etiam si uiolentiores flauere, circa medium tamen diem relanguescunt, nec unquam usque in meridiem aura producit; alia autem imbecillior ac breuior est, prout ualentioribus minoribusue collecta causis est.

[9,1] Quare tamen tales uenti uere et aestate ualidiores sunt? - (leuissimi enim cetera parte anni nec qui uela impleant surgunt): quia uer aquosum est ex pluuiarum aquis, locisque ob umidam caeli naturam saturis et redundantibus maior euaporatio est.

[9,3] Facit autem uentum ortus non calore tantum sed etiam ictu: lux enim, ut dixi, quae solem antecedit, nondum aera calefacit sed percutit tantum, percussus autem in latus cedit. Quamquam ego ne illud quidem concesserim, lucem ipsam sine calore esse, cum ex calore sit:

[9,4] non habet forsitan tantum teporis, quantum tactu appareat, opus tamen suum facit et densa diducit ac tenuat; propterea loca, quae aliqua iniquitate naturae ita clausa sunt ut solem accipere non possint, illa quoque nubila et tristi luce calefiunt et per diem minus quam noctibus rigent.

[9,5] Etiam nunc natura calor omnis abigit nebulas et a se repellit: ergo sol quoque idem facit, et ideo, ut quibusdam uidetur, inde flatus est unde sol.

[10,1] Hoc falsum esse ex eo apparet quod aura in omnem partem uehit et contra ortum plenis uelis nauigatur: quod non eueniret, si semper uentus ferretur a sole. Etesiae quoque, qui in argumentum a quibusdam aduocantur, non nimis propositum adiuuant.

[10,2] Dicam primum quid illis placeat, deinde cur displiceat mihi. Etesiae, inquiunt, hieme non sunt, quia breuissimis diebus sol desinit, priusquam frigus euincatur (itaque niues et ponuntur et durant):

aestate incipiunt flare, cum et longius extenditur dies et recti in nos radii diriguntur.

[10,3] Ueri ergo simile est concussas calore magno niues plus umidi efflare, item terras exoneratas niue repectasque spirare liberius: ita plura ex septemtrionali parte caeli corpora exire et in haec loca, quae sunt summissiora ac tepidiora, deferri; sic impetum etesias sumere.

[10,4] Et ob hoc a solstitio illis initium est (ultraque ortum Caniculae non ualent), quia iam multum e frigida caeli parte in hanc egestum est ac sol mutato cursu in nostram rector tendit et alteram partem aeris attrahit, alteram uero impellit. Sic ille etesiarum flatus aestatem frangit et a mensium feruentissimorum grauitate defendit.

[11,1] Nunc (quod promisi) dicendum est quare etesiae nos non adiuuent nec quicquam huic conferant causae. Diximus ante lucem auram incitari, eandem subsidere, cum illam sol attigit. Atqui etesiae ob hoc somnulosi a nautis et delicati uocantur quod, ut ait Gallio, “mane nesciunt surgere”: eo tempore fere incipiunt prodire quo ne pertinax quidem aura est. Quod non accideret, si ut auram ita illos comminueret sol.

[12,1] Sunt quaedam genera uentorum quae ruptae nubes et in prouum solutae emittunt: hos Graeci uentos G-eknephias uocant. Qui hoc, ut puto, modo fiunt: cum magna inaequalitas ac dissimilitudo corporum, quae uapor terrenus emittit, in sublime eat et alia ex his corporibus sicca sint, alia umida, ex tanta discordia corporum inter se pugnantium, cum in unum conglobata sunt, uerisimile est quasdam cauas effici nubes et interualla inter illas relinqui fistulosa et in modum tibiae angusta.

[12,2] His interuallis tenuis includitur spiritus, qui maius desiderat spatium, cum euerberatus cursu parum libero incaluit et ob hoc amplior fit, scinditque cingentia et erumpit in uentum, qui fere procellosus est, quia superne demittitur, et in nos cadit uehemens et acer, quia non fusus nec per apertum uenit sed laborat et iter sibi ui ac pugna parat. Hic fere breuis flatus est, quia receptacula nubium, per quae ferebatur, ac munimenta perrumpit: ideo tumultuosus uenit,

[12,3] Hi uenti multo maiores diurnioresque sunt, si alios quoque flatus ex eadem causa ruentes in se abstulerunt et in unum confluxere plures; sicut torrentes modicae magnitudinis sunt, quamdiu separatis suis cursus est, cum uero plures in se aquas conuerterunt, fluminum iustorum ac perennium magnitudinem excedunt:

[12,4] idem credibile est fieri et in procellis, ut breues sint, quamdiu singulae sunt; ubi uero sociauerunt uires et ex pluribus caeli partibus elisus spiritus eodem se contulit, et impetus illis accedit et mora.

[13,2] Sic uentus, quamdiu nihil obstitit, uires suas effundit: ubi aliquo promontorio percussus est aut locorum coeuntium in canalem deuexum tenuemque collectus, saepius in se uolutatur similemque illis, quas diximus conuerti, aquis facit uerticem.

[13,4] Etiamnunc quidam uenti diuersos ex se generant et impulsum aera in alias quoque partes, quam in quas ipsi inclinauere, dispergunt. Illud quoque dicam quod mihi occurrit: quemadmodum stillicidia, quamuis iam inclinent se et labantur, nondum tamen efficere lapsum, sed ubi plura coiere et turba uires dedit, tunc fluere et ire dicuntur, sic, quamdiu leues sunt aeris motus agitati pluribus locis, nondum uentus est; tunc esse incipit; cum omnes illos miscuit et in unum impetum contulit. Spiritum a uento modus separat: uehementior enim spiritus uentus est, inuicem spiritus leniter fluens aer.

[14,1] Repetam nunc quod in primo dixeram: edi e specu uentos recessuque interiore terrarum. Non tota solido contextu terra in imum usque fundatur, sed multis partibus caua et caecis suspensa latebris, <aliubi abundat aquas,> aliubi habet inania sine umore.

[14,2] Ibi etiamsi nulla lux discrimen aeris monstrat, dicam tamen nubes nebulasque in obscuro consistere. Nam ne haec quidem supra terras, quia uidentur, sunt, sed quia sunt, uidentur: illic quoque nihilo minus ob id sunt, quod non uidentur, flumina; illic scias licet nostris paria sublabi, alia leniter ducta, alia in confragosis locis praecipitando sonantia. Quid ergo? Non illud aequae dabis, esse aliquos et sub terra lacus et quasdam aquas sine exitu stagnare?

[14,3] Quae si ita sunt, necesse est et illud: aera onerari oneratumque incumbere et uentum propulsu suo concitare. Et ex illis ergo subterraneis nubibus sciemus nutriri inter obscura flatus, dum tantum uirium ceperint quanto aut terrae obstantiam auferant aut aliquod apertum ad hos efflatus iter occupent et per hanc cauernam in nostras sedes efferantur.

[15,1] Nunc mihi permittite narrare fabulam. Asclepiodotus auctor est demissos quam plurimos a Philippo in metallum antiquum olim destitutum, ut explorarent quae ubertas eius esset, quis status, an aliquid futuris reliquisset uetus auaritia; descendisse illos cum multo lumine et multos duraturo dies, deinde longa uia fatigatos uidisse flumina ingentia et conceptus aquarum inertium uastos, pares nostris nec compressos quidem terra supereminente sed liberae laxitatis, non sine horrore uisos.

[15,2] Cum magna hoc legi uoluptate; intellexi enim saeculum nostrum non nouis uitis sed iam inde antiquitus traditis laborare, nec nostra aetate primum auaritiam uenas terrarum lapidumque rimatam in tenebris male abstrusa quaesisse: illi maiores nostri, quos celebramus laudibus, quibus dissimiles esse nos querimur, spe ducti montes ceciderunt et supra lucrum sub ruina steterunt.

[15,3] ante Philippum Macedonum<que> reges fuere qui pecuniam in altissimis usque latebris sequerentur et recto spiritu liberoque in illos se demitterent specus, in quos nullum noctium perueniret dierumque discrimen. A tergo lucem relinquere quae tanta spes fuit? Quae tanta necessitas hominem ad sidera erectum incuruauit et defodit et in fundum telluris intimae mersit, ut erueret aurum non minore periculo quaerendum quam possidendum?

[16,2] Uel, si breuius illos complecti mauis, in unam tempestatem, quod fieri nullo modo potest, congregentur: “una Eurusque Notusque ruunt creberque procellis Africus” et, qui locum in illa rixa non habuit, Aquilo.

[16,4] Qui surgit ab oriente aequinoctiali, subsolanus apud nos dicitur, Graeci illum G-aphelioten uocant. Ab oriente hiberno eurus exit, quem nostri uocauere uulturnum et Liuius hoc illum nomine appellat in illa pugna Romanis parum prospera, in qua Hannibal et contra solem orientera exercitum nostrum, et contra uentum constitutum uenti adiutorio ac fulgoris praestringentis oculos hostium uicit; Uarro quoque hoc nomen usurpat, sed et eurus iam ciuitate donatus est et nostro sermoni non tamquam alienus interuenit. Ab oriente solstitiali excitatum G-kaikian Graeci appellant, apud nos sine nomine est.

[16,5] Aequinoctialis occidens fauonium mittit, quem zephyrum esse dicent tibi etiam qui Graece nesciunt loqui. A solstitiali occidente corus uenit, qui apud quosdam argestes dicitur: mihi non uidetur, quia cori uiolenta uis est et in unam partem rapax, argestes fere mollis est et tam euntibus communis quam redeuntibus. Ab occidente hiberno africanus furibundus et ruens, apud Graecos G-lips dicitur.

[16,6] A septentrionali latere summus est aquilo, medius septentrio, imus G-thrascias: huic deest apud nos uocabulum. A meridiano axe G-euronotos est; deinde G-notos, Latine auster; deinde G-leukonotos, qui apud nos sine nomine est.

[17,2] Qui duodecim uentos esse dixerunt, hoc secuti sunt, totidem uentorum esse quot caeli discrimina. Caelum autem diuiditur in circulos quinque, qui per mundi cardines eunt: est septentrionalis, est solstitialis, est aequinoctialis, est brumalis, est contrarius septentrionali. His sextus accedit, qui superiorem partem mundi ab inferiore secernit (ut scis enim, dimidia pars mundi semper supra, dimidia infra est):

[17,3] hanc lineam, quae inter aperta et occulta est, id est hunc circulum Graeci G-horizonta uocant, nostri finitorem esse dixerunt, alii finientem. Adiciendus est adhuc meridianus circulus, qui horizonta rectis angulis secat. Ex his quidam circuli in transuersa currunt et alios interuentu suo scindunt; necesse est autem tot aeris discrimina esse quot partes:

[17,4] ergo G-horizon, siue finiens circulus, quinque illos orbes quos modo dixi finiens, efficit decem partes, quinque ab ortu, quinque ab occasu; meridianus circulus, qui in horizonta incurrit, regiones duas adicit: sic duodecim aer discrimina accipit et totidem facit uentos.

[17,5] Quidam sunt quorundam locorum proprii, qui non transmittunt sed in proximum ferunt; non est illis a latere uniuersi mundi impetus: atabulus Apuliam infestat, Calabriam iapyx, Athenas sciron, Pamphyliam crageus, Galliam circius (cui aedificia quassanti tamen incolae gratias agunt, tamquam salubritatem caeli sui debeant ei: diuus certe Augustus templum illi, cum in Gallia moraretur, et uouit et fecit). Infinitum est, si singulos uelim persequi; nulla enim propemodum regio est quae non habeat aliquem flatum ex se nascentem et circa se cadentem.

[18,1] Inter cetera itaque prouidentiae opera hoc quoque aliquis ut dignum admiratione suspexerit: non enim ex una causa uentos aut inuenit aut per diuersa disposuit, sed primum ut aera non sinerent pigrescere sed assidua uexatione utilem redderent uitalemque tracturis,

[18,2] deinde ut imbres terris subministrarent idemque nimios compescerent. Nam modo adducunt nubes, modo deducunt, ut per totum orbem pluuiæ diuidi possint: in Italiam auster impellit, aquilo in Africam reicit, etesiae non patiuntur apud nos nubes consistere; idem totam Indiam et Aethiopiam continuus per id tempus aquis irrigant.

[18,3] Quid, quod fruges percoqui non possent, nisi flatu superuacua inmixta seruandis uentilarentur, nisi esset quod segetem excitaret et latentem frugem ruptis uelamentis suis (folliculos agricolae uocant) adaperiret?

[18,4] Quid, quod omnibus inter se populis commercium dedit et gentes dissipatas locis miscuit? Ingens naturae beneficium, si illud in iniuriam suam non uertat hominum furor! Nunc quod de C. Mario uulgo dictatum est et a Tito Liuiο positum, in incerto esse utrum illum magis nasci an non nasci reipublicae profuerit, dici etiam de uentis potest; adeo quicquid ex illis utile et necessarium est non potest his repensari quae in perniciem suam generis humani dementia excogitat.

[18,5] Sed non ideo non sunt ista natura bona, si uitio male utentium nocent: non in hoc prouidentia ac dispositor ille mundi deus aera uentis exercendum dedit et illos ab omni parte, ne quid esset situ squalidum, effudit, ut nos classes partem freti occupaturas compleremus milite armato et hostem in mari aut post mare quaereremus.

[18,6] Quae nos dementia exagitat et in mutuuum componit exitium? Uela uentis damus bellum petitori et periclitamur periculi causa, incertam fortunam experimur, uim tempestatum nulla ope humana superabilem et mortem sine spe sepulturae.

[18,8] Quid in arma cogimus populos? Quid exercitus scribimus directuros aciem in mediis fluctibus? Quid maria inquietamus? Parum uidelicet ad mortes nostras terra late patet. Nimis delicate fortuna nos tractat, nimis dura dedit nobis corpora, felicem uoletudinem; non depopulatur nos casus incurrens, emetiri cuique annos suos ex commodo licet et ad senectutem decurrere: itaque eamus in pelagus et uocemus in nos fata cessantia.

[18,9] Miseri, quid quaeritis? mortem, quae ubique superest? Petet illa uos et ex lectulo, sed innocentes petat; occupabit uos in uestra domo, sed occupet nullum molientes malum. Hoc uero quid aliud quis dixerit quam insaniam, circumferre pericula et ruere in ignotos, iratum sine iniuria occurrentia deuastantem ac ferarum more occidere quem non oderis? Illis tamen in ultionem aut ex fame morsus est: nos sine ulla parsimonia nostri alienique sanguinis mouemus manum et nauigia deducimus, salutem committimus fluctibus, secundos optamus uentos, quorum felicitas est ad bella perferri.

[18,10] Quousque nos mala nostra rapuerunt? Parum est intra tra orbem suum furere: sic Persarum rex stolidissimus in Graeciam traiciet, quam exercitus non uincet, cum impleuerit. Sic Alexander ulterior Bactris et Indis uolet quaeretque quid sit ultra magnum mare, et indignabitur esse aliquid ultimum sibi. Sic Crassum auaritia Parthis dabit, non horrebit reuocantis diras tribuni, non tempestates longissimi maris, non circa Euphratem praesaga fulmina et deos resistentes: per hominum et deorum iras ad aurum ibitur.

[18,11] Ergo non immerito quis dixerit rerum naturam melius acturam fuisse nobiscum, si uentos flare uetuisset et inhibito discursu furentium in sua quemque terra stare iussisset: si nihil aliud, certe suo quisque tantum ac suorum malo nasceretur; nunc parum mihi domestica, externis quoque laborandum est.

[18,14] Dedit uentos ad ulteriora noscenda: fuisset enim imperitum animal et sine magna experientia rerum homo, si circumscriberetur natalis soli fine. Dedit uentos, ut commoda cuiusque regionis fierent communia, non ut legiones equitemque gestarent nec ut perniciose gentes arma transueherent.

[18,15] Si beneficia naturae utentium prauitate perpendimus, nihil non nostro malo accepimus: cui uidere expedit? cui loqui? cui non uita tormentum est? Nihil inuenies tam manifestae utilitatis quod non in contrarium transeat culpa. Sic uentos quoque natura bono futuros inuenerat: ipsi illos contrarios fecimus.

[18,16] Omnes in aliquod nos malum ducunt. Non eadem est his et illis causa soluendi, sed iusta nulli. Diuersis enim irritamentis ad temptandum mare impellimur, utique alicui uitio nauigatur. Egregie Plato dicit, qui nobis circa exitum iam testium loco dandus est, minima esse quae homines emant uita. Immo, Lucili carissime, si bene illorum furorem aestimaueris, id est nostrum (in eadem enim turba uolutamur), magis ridebis, cum cogitaueris uitae parari in quae uita consumitur.

DE TERRAE MOTU

[1,1] Pompeios, celebrem Campaniae urbem, in quam ab altera parte Surrentinum Stabianumque litus, ab altera Herculansense conueniunt et mare ex aperto reductum amoeno sinu cingunt, consedissee terrae motu uexatis quaecumque adiacebant regionibus, Lucili, uirorum optime, audiuius, et quidem hibernis diebus, quos uacare a tali periculo maiores nostri solebant promittere.

[1,2] Nonis Februariis hic fuit motus Regulo et Uerginio consulibus, qui Campaniam, numquam securam huius mali, indemnem tamen et totiens defunctam metu, magna strage uastauit: nam et Herculansenis oppidi pars ruit dubieque stant etiam quae relictas sunt, et Nucerinorum colonia ut sine clade ita non sine querela est; Neapolis quoque priuatim multa, publice nihil amisit leuiter ingenti malo perstricta: uillae uero prorutae, passim sine iniuria tremuere.

[1,3] Adiciuntur his illa: sexcentarum ouium gregem exanimatum et diuisas statuas, motae post hoc mentis aliquos atque impotentes sui errasse. Quorum ut causas excutiamus, et propositi operis contextus exigit et ipse in hoc tempus congruens casus.

[1,4] Quaerenda sunt trepidis solacia et demendus ingens timor. Quid enim cuiquam satis tutum uideri potest, si mundus ipse concutitur et partes eius solidissimae labant? Si quod unum immobile est in illo fixumque, ut cuncta in se intenta sustineat, fluctuatur; si quod proprium habet terra perdidit, stare: ubi tandem resident metus nostri? Quod corpora receptaculum inuenient, quo sollicita confugiant, si ab imo metus nascitur et funditus trahitur?

[1,5] Consternatio omnium est, ubi tecta crepuerunt et ruina signum dedit. Tunc praeceps quisque se proripit et penates suos deserit ac se publico credit: quam latebram prospicimus, quod auxilium, si orbis ipse ruinas agit, si hoc quod nos tuetur ac sustinet, supra quod urbes sitae sunt, quod fundamentum quidam mundi esse dixerunt, discedit ac titubat?

[1,6] Quid tibi esse non dico auxilii sed solacii potest, ubi timor fugam perdidit? Quid est, inquam, satis munitum, quid ad tutelam alterius ac sui firmum? Hostem muro repellam, et praeruptae altitudinis castella uel magnos exercitus difficultate aditus morabuntur; a tempestate nos uindicat portus; nimborum uim effusam et sine fine cadentes aquas tecta propellunt; fugientes non sequitur incendium; aduersus tonitruum et minas caeli subterraneae domus et defossi in altum specus remedia sunt (ignis ille caelestis non transuerberat terram sed exiguo eius obiectu retunditur); in pestilentia mutare sedes licet: nullum malum sine effugio est.

[1,7] Numquam fulmina populos perusserunt; pestilens caelum exhaisit urbes, non abstulit: hoc malum latissime patet ineuitabile, auidum, publice noxium. Non enim domos solum aut familias aut urbes singulas haurit, gentes totas regionesque submergit et modo ruinis operit, modo in altam uoraginem condit ac ne id quidem relinquit ex quo appareat quod non est saltem fuisse, sed supra nobilissimas urbes sine ullo uestigio prioris habitus solum extenditur.

[1,8] Nec desunt qui hoc genus mortis magis timeant quo in abruptum cum sedibus suis eunt et e uiuorum numero uiui auferuntur, tamquam non omne fatum ad eundem terminum ueniat. Hoc habet inter cetera iustitiae suae natura praecipuum quod, cum ad exitum uentum est, omnes in aequo sumus.

[1,9] Nihil itaque interest utrum me lapis unus elidat, an monte toto premar; utrum supra me domus unius onus ueniat et sub exiguo eius cumulo ac puluere exspirem, an totus caput meum terrarum orbis abscondat; in luce hunc et in aperto spiritum reddam an in uasto terrarum dehiscentium sinu; solus in illud profundum an cum magno comitatu populorum concadentium ferar; nihil interest mea quantus circa mortem meam tumultus sit: ipsa ubique tantundem est.

[1,10] Proinde magnum sumamus animum aduersus istam cladem, quae nec euitari nec prouideri potest, desinamusque audire istos, qui Campaniae renuntiauerunt quique post hunc casum emigrauerunt negantque ipsos umquam in illam regionem accessuros: quis enim illis promittit melioribus fundamentis hoc aut illud solum stare?

[1,11] Omnia eiusdem sortis sunt et, si nondum mota, tamen mobilia: hunc fortasse in quo securius consistitis locum haec nox aut hic ante noctem dies scindet. Unde scis an <non> melior eorum locorum condicio sit in quibus iam uires suas fortuna consumpsit et quae in futurum ruina sua fulta sunt?

[1,13] Tyros aliquando infamis ruinis fuit, Asia duodecim urbes simul perdidit; anno priore in Achaïam et Macedoniam, quaecumque est ista uis mali quae incurrit, nunc Campaniam laesit: circumit fatum et, si quid diu praeteriit, repetit. Quaedam rarius sollicite, saepius quaedam: nihil immune esse et innoxium sinit.

[1,14] Non homines tantum, qui breuis et caduca res nascimur, urbes oraeque terrarum et litora et ipsum mare in seruitutem fati uenit. Nos tamen nobis permansura promittimus bona fortunae, et felicitatem, cuius ex omnibus rebus humanis uelocissima est leuitas, habituram in aliquo pondus ac moram credimus;

[1,15] et perpetua sibi omnia promittentibus in mentem non uenit id ipsum supra quod stamus stabile non esse. Neque enim Campaniae istud aut Achaïae sed omnis soli uitium est, male cohaerere et ex causis pluribus solui et summa manere, partibus ruere.

[2,1] Quid ago? Solacium aduersus pericula rara promiseram: ecce undique timenda denuntio, nego quicquam esse quietis aeternae, quod perire possit et perdere. Ego uero hoc ipsum solacii loco pono et quidem ualentissimi, quando quidem sine remedio timor stultis est: ratio terrorem prudentibus excutit; imperitis magna fit ex desperatione securitas.

[2,2] Hoc itaque generi humano dictum puta quod illis subita captiuitate inter ignes et hostem stupentibus dictum est: “una salus uictis nullam sperare salutem.”

[2,3] Si uultis nihil timere, cogitate omnia esse metuenda; circumspicite quam leuibus causis discutiamur: non cibus nobis, non umor, non uigilia, non somnus sine mensura quadam salubria sunt; iam intellegitis nugatoria esse nos et imbecilla corpuscula, fluida, non magna molitione perdenda. Sine dubio id unum periculi nobis est quod tremunt terrae, quod subito dissipantur ac superposita deducunt!

[2,4] Magni se aestimat qui fulmina et motus terrarum hiatusque formidat. Uult ille imbecillitatis sibi suae conscius timere pituitam? Ita uidelicet nati sumus, tam felicia sortiti membra, in hanc magnitudinem creuimus! Et ob hoc, nisi mundi partibus motis, nisi caelum intonuerit, nisi terra subsederit, perire non possumus!

[2,5] Unguiculi nos et ne totius quidem dolor sed aliqua ab latere eius scissura conficit! Et ego timeam terras trementes, quem crassior saliu suffocat? Ego extimescam emotum sedibus suis mare, et ne aestus maiore quam solet cursu plus aquarum trahens superueniat, cum quosdam strangulauerit potio male lapsa per fauces? Quam stultum est mare horrere, cum scias stillicidio perire te posse!

[2,6] Nullum maius solacium est mortis quam ipsa mortalitas, nullum autem omnium istorum quae extrinsecus terrent quam quod innumerabilia pericula in ipso sinu sunt. Quid enim dementius quam ad tonitrua succidere et sub terram correpere fulminum metu? Quid stultius quam timere nutationem terrae aut subitos montium lapsus et irruptiones maris extra litus eiecti, cum mors ubique praesto sit et undique occurrat nihilque sit tam exiguum quod non in perniciem generis humani satis ualeat?

[2,7] Adeo non debent nos ista confundere, tamquam plus in se mali habeant quam uulgaris mors, ut contra, cum sit necessarium e uita exire et aliquando emittere animam, maiore perire ratione iuuat. Necesse est mori ubicumque, quandoque: stet licet ista humus et se teneat suis finibus nec ulla iactetur iniuria, supra me quandoque erit. <Quid> interest, ego illam mihi an ipsa se mihi imponat?

[2,8] Diducitur et ingenti potentia nescio cuius mali rumpitur et me in immensam altitudinem abducit; quid porro? Mors leuior in plano est? Quid habeo quod querar, si rerum natura me non uult iacere ignobili leto, si mihi inicit sui partem?

[2,9] Egregie Uagellius meus in illo inclito carmine: “Si cadendum est”, inquit, “e caelo cecidisse uelim”. Idem licet dicere: si cadendum est, cadam orbe concusso, non quia fas est optare publicam cladem, sed quia ingens mortis solacium est terram quoque uidere mortalem.

[3,1] Illud quoque proderit praesumere animo, nihil horum deos facere, nec ira numinum aut caelum concuti aut terram: suas ista causas habent nec ex imperio saeuiunt sed quibusdam uitii ut corpora nostra turbantur et tunc, cum facere uidentur iniuriam,

[3,2] Nobis autem ignorantibus uerum omnia terribiora sunt, utique quorum metum raritas auget: leuius accidunt familiaria, at ex insolito formido maior est. Quare autem quicquam nobis insolitum est? Quia naturam oculis, non ratione, comprehendimus nec cogitamus quid illa facere possit, sed tantum quid fecerit. Damus itaque huius neglegentiae poenas tamquam nouis territi, cum illa non sint noua sed insolita.

[3,3] Quid ergo? Non religionem incutit mentibus, et quidem publice, siue deficere sol uisus est, siue luna, cuius obscuratio frequentior, aut parte sui aut tota delituit? Longeque magis illa, actae in transuersum faces et caeli magna pars ardens et crinita sidera et plures solis orbes et stellae per diem uisae subitque transcursus ignium multam post se lucem trahentium? [3,4] Nihil horum sine timore miramur: et cum timendi sit causa nescire, non est tanti scire, ne timeas? Quanto satius est causas inquirere, et quidem toto in hoc intentum animo! Neque enim illo quicquam inueniri dignius potest, cui se non tantum commodet sed impendat.

[5,1] Causam qua terra concutitur alii in aqua esse, alii in ignibus, alii in ipsa terra, alii in spiritu putauerunt, alii in pluribus, alii in omnibus his; quidam liquere ipsis aliquam ex istis causam esse dixerunt, sed non liquere quae esset.

[5,2] Nunc singula persequar. Illud ante omnia mihi dicendum est, opiniones ueteres parum exactas esse et rudes: circa uerum adhuc errabatur; tur; noua omnia erant primo temptantibus; postea eadem illa limata sunt et, si quid inuentum est, illis nihilominus referri debet acceptum: magni animi res fuit rerum naturae latebras dimouere nec contentum exteriori eius aspectu introspicere et in deorum secreta descendere. Plurimum ad inueniendum contulit qui sperauit posse reperiri.

[5,3] Cum excusatione itaque ueteres audiendi sunt: nulla res consummata est, dum incipit; nec in hac tantum re omnium maxima atque inuolutissima (in qua, etiam cum multum acti erit, omnis tamen aetas quod agat inueniet) sed et in omni alio negotio longe semper a perfecto fuere principia.

[6,2] Superuacuum est reddere causas propter quas existimat grauissimam partem mundi non posse spiritu tam tenui fugacique gestari; non enim nunc de situ terrarum sed de motu agitur. Illud argumenti loco ponit aquas esse in causa quibus hic orbis agitur, quod in omni maiore motu erumpunt fere noui fontes (sicut in nauigiis quoque euenit ut, si inclinata sunt et abierunt in latus, aquam sorbeant, quae enormi eorum onere quae uehit, si immodice depressa sunt, aut superfunditur aut certe dextra sinistraque solito magis surgit).

[6,3] Hanc opinionem falsam esse non est diu colligendum: nam si terra aqua sustineretur, et ea aliquando concuteretur <et> semper moueretur, nec agitari illam miraremur sed manere; deinde tota concuteretur, non ex parte (numquam enim navis dimidia iactatur); nunc uero terrarum non uniuersarum sed ex parte motus est: quomodo ergo fieri potest ut, quod totum uehitur, totum non agitetur, si eo quo uehitur agitatum est?

[6,4] “At quare aquae erumpunt?”. Primum omnium saepe tremuit terra et nihil umoris noui fluxit; deinde si ex hac causa unda prorumperet, a lateribus terrae circumfunderetur (sicut in fluminibus ac mari uidemus incidere, ut incrementum aquarum, quotiens nauigia desidunt, in lateribus maxime appareat); ad ultimum non tam exigua fieret quam tu dicis eruptio nec uelut per rimam sentina subreperet, sed fieret ingens inundatio ut ex infinito liquore et ferente uniuersa.

[7,1] Quidam motum terrarum aquae imputauerunt, sed non ex eadem causa. Per omnem, inquit, terram multa aquarum genera decurrunt: aliubi perpetui amnes, quorum nauigabilis etiam sine adiutorio imbrium magnitudo est: hinc Nilus, per aestatem ingentes aquas inuehit; hinc, qui medius inter pacata et hostilia fluit, Danuuus ac Rhenus, alter Sarmaticos impetus cohibens et Europam Asiamque distermians, alter Germanos, auidam belli gentem, repellens.

[7,5] Iam uero nimis oculis permittit nec ultra illos scit producere animum, qui non credit esse in abdito terrae sinus maris uasti. Nec enim uideo quid prohibeat aut obstet quo minus habeat aliquod etiam in abdito litus et per occultos aditus receptum mare, quod illic quoque tantundem loci teneat aut fortassis hoc amplius quod superiora cum tot animalibus erant diuidenda: abstrusa enim et sine possessore deserta liberius undis uacant.

[7,6] Quas quid uetat illic fluctuare et uentis, quos omne interuallum terrarum et omnis aer creat, impelli? Potest ergo maior solito exorta tempestas aliquam partem terrarum impulsam uehementius commouere. Nam apud nos quoque multa quae procul a mari fuerant subito eius accessu uapulauerunt et uillas in prospectu collocatas fluctus qui longe audiebatur inuasit; illic quoque potest accedere ac recedere pelagus infernum: quorum neutrum fit sine motu superstantium.

[8,1] Non quidem existimo diu te haesitaturum an credas esse subterraneos amnes et mare absconditum: unde enim ista prorepunt, unde ad nos ueniunt, nisi quod origo umoris inclusa est?

[8,2] Age, cum uides interruptum Tigrin in medio itinere siccari et non uniuersum auerti, sed paulatim non apparentibus damnis minui primum, deinde consumi, quo illum putas abire nisi in obscura terrarum, utique cum uideas emergere iterum non minorem eo qui prius fluxerat? Quid, cum uides Alpheon, celebratum poetis, in Achaia mergi et in Sicilia rursus traiecto mari effundere amoenissimum fontem Arethusam?

[8,3] Nescis autem inter opiniones, quibus enarratur Nili aestiua inundatio, et hanc esse, a terra illum erumpere et augeri non supernis aquis sed ex intimo redditis? Ego quidem centuriones duos, quos Nero Caesar, ut aliarum uirtutum ita ueritatis in primis amantissimus, ad inuestigandum caput Nili miserat, audiui narrantes longum illos iter peregissee, cum a rege Aethiopiae instructi auxilio commendatique proximis regibus penetrassent ad ulteriorem.

[8,5] Sed siue caput illa siue accessio est Nili, siue tunc nascitur siue in terras ex priore recepta cursu redit, nonne tu credis illam, quicquid est, ex magno terrarum lacu ascendere? Habeant enim oportet pluribus locis sparsum umorem et in uno coactum, ut eructare tanto impetu possint.

[9,1] Ignem causam motus quidam iudicant, imprimis Anaxagoras, qui existimat simili paene ex causa et aera concuti et terram: cum in inferiore parte spiritus crassum aera et in nubes coactum eadem ui qua apud nos quoque nubila frangi solent rupit et ignis ex hoc collisu nubium cursuque elisi aeris emicuit, hic ipse in obuia incurrit exitum quaerens ac diuellit repugnantia, donec per angustum aut nactus est uiam exeundi ad caelum aut ui et iniuria fecit.

[9,3] Hoc apud nos quoque uidemus accidere, quotiens incendio laborat pars ciuitatis: cum exustae trabes sunt aut corrupta quae superioribus firmamentum dabant, tunc diu agitata fastigia concidunt et tam diu deferuntur atque incerta sunt, donec in solido resederunt.

[10,2] Itaque quemadmodum in aedificiis ueteribus quasdam non percussa tamen decidunt, cum plus ponderis habuere quam uirium, ita in hoc uniuerso terrae corpore euenit ut partes eius uetustate soluantur, solutae cadant et tremorem superioribus afferant: primum, dum abscedunt (nihil enim utique magnum sine motu eius cui haesit absciditur); deinde, cum deciderunt, solido exceptae resiliunt pilae more (quae, cum cecidit, exultat ac saepius pellitur, totiens a solo in nouum impetum missa); si uero in stagnantibus aquis delatae sunt, hic ipse casus uicina concutit fluctu, quem subitum uastumque illisum ex alto pondus eiecit.

[11,1] Quidam ignibus quidem assignant hunc tremorem, sed aliter. Nam cum pluribus locis ferueant, necesse est ingentem uaporem sine exitu uoluant, qui ui sua spiritum intendit et, si acrius institit, opposita diffindit, si uero remissior fuit, nihil amplius quam mouet. Uidemus aquam spumare igne subiecto: quod in hac aqua facit inclusa et angusta, multo magis illum facere credamus, cum uiolentus ac uastus ingentes aquas excitat: tunc illa euaporatione fluctuantium undarum quicquid pulsauit, agitur.

[12,1] Spiritum esse qui moueat et plurimis et maximis auctoribus placet. Archelaus, uir quidem satis diligens, ait ita: Uenti in concaua terrarum deferuntur; deinde, ubi iam omnia spatia plena sunt et in quantum aer potuit densatus est, is qui superuertit spiritus priorem premit et elidit ac frequentibus plagis primo cogit, deinde proturbat;

[12,2] tunc ille quaerens locum omnes angustias dimouet et claustra sua conatur effringere: sic euenit ut terrae, spiritu luctante et fugam quaerente, moueantur. Itaque cum terrae motus futurus est, praecedit aeris tranquillitas et quies, uidelicet quia uis spiritus, quae concitare uentos solet, in inferna sede retinetur. Nunc quoque, cum hic motus in Campania fuit, quamuis hiberno tempore et inquieto, per superiores dies caelo aer stetit.

[12,3] Quid ergo? Numquam flante uento terra concussa est? Admodum raro; duo <si> simul flauere uenti fieri; tamen et potest et solet. Quod si recipimus et constat duos uentos rem simul gerere, quidni accidere possit ut alter superiorem aera agitet, alter infernum?

[13,1] In hac sententia licet portas Aristotelem et discipulum eius Theophrastum (non, ut Graecis uisum est, diuini, tamen et dulcis eloquii uirum et nitidi sine labore). Quid utrique placeat exponam. Semper aliqua euaporatio est e terra, quae modo arida est, modo umido mixta; haec ab infimo edita et in quantum potuit elata, cum ulteriorem locum in quem exeat non habet, retro fertur atque in se reuoluitur; deinde rixa spiritus reciprocantis iactat obstantia et, siue interclusus siue per angusta enisus est, motum ac tumultum ciet.

[13,2] Straton ex eadem schola est, qui hanc partem philosophiae maxime coluit et rerum naturae inquisitor fuit; huius tale decretum

est. Frigidum et calidum semper in contraria abeunt, una esse non possunt: eo frigidum confluit unde uis calidi discessit, et inuicem ibi calidum est unde frigus expulsum est. Hoc quod dico uerum esse et utrumque in contrarium agi ex hoc tibi appareat:

[13,3] hiberno tempore, cum supra terram frigus est, calent putei nec minus specus atque omnes sub terra recessus, quia illo se calor contulit superiora possidenti frigori cedens; qui, cum in inferiora peruenit et eo se quantum poterat ingessit, quo densior, hoc ualidior est. Frigori cal<idi> uis superuenit, cui necessario congregatus ille iam et in angustum pressus loco cedit.

[13,4] Idem contrario euenit: cum uis maior frigidi illata in cauernis est, quicquid illic calidi latet, frigori cedens abit in angustum et magno impetu agitur, quia non patitur utriusque natura concordiam nec in uno moram. Fugiens ergo et omni modo cupiens excedere proxima quaeque remolitur ac iactat.

[13,5] Ideoque antequam terra moueatur, solet mugitus s audiri uentis in abdito tumultuantibus. Nec enim aliter posset, ut ait noster Uergilius, “sub pedibus mugire solum et iuga celsa moueri”, nisi hoc esset uentorum opus. v [13,6] Uices deinde huius pugnae sunt eadem: fit calidi congregatio ac rursus eruptio; tunc frigida compescuntur et secedunt mox futura potentiora. Dum ergo alterna uis cursat et ultro citroque spiritus commeat, terra concutitur.

[14,1] Sunt qui existiment spiritu quidem et nulla alia ratione tremere terram, sed ex alia causa quam Aristoteli placuit. Quid sit quod ab his dicatur audi: corpus nostrum et sanguine irrigatur et spiritu, qui per sua itinera decurrit. Habemus autem quaedam angustiora receptacula animae per quae nihil amplius quam meat, quaedam patentiora in quibus colligitur et unde diuiditur in partes. Sic hoc totum terrarum omnium corpus et aquis, quae uicem sanguinis tenent, et uentis, quos nihil aliud quis quam animam uocauerit, peruium est. Haec duo aliubi currunt, aliubi consistunt.

uehementius et quassante uenas suas. Nec, ut illi paulo ante dicebant, quibus animal placet esse terram. Nisi hoc est, quemadmodum animal totum uexationem sentiet; neque enim in nobis febris alias partes moratus, alias citius impellit, sed per omnes pari aequalitate discurrit.

[14,3] Uide ergo num quid intret in illam spiritus ex circumfuso aere. Qui, quamdiu habet exitum, sine iniuria labitur; si offendit aliquid et incidit quod uiam clauderet, tunc oneratur primo infundente se a tergo aere, deinde per aliquam rimam maligne fugit et hoc acrius fertur, quo angustius. Id sine pugna non potest fieri, nec pugna sine motu.

[14,4] At si ne rimam quidem per quam efflueret inuenit, conglobatus illic furit et hoc atque illo circumagitur aliaque deicit, alia intercidit, cum tenuissimus idemque fortissimus et irrepit quamuis in obstructa et quicquid intrauit ui sua diducat ac dissipet. Tunc terra iactatur: aut enim datura uento locum discedit, aut, cum dedit, in ipsam qua illum emisit cauernam fundamento spoliata considit.

[15,1] Quidam ita existimant: terra multis locis perforata est nec tantum primos illos aditus habet quos uelut spiramenta ab initio sui recepit, sed multos illi casus imposuit. Aliubi deduxit quicquid superne terreni erat aqua, alia torrentes cecidere, alia aestibus magnis disrupta patuerunt. Per haec interualla intrat spiritus: quem si inclusit mare et altius adegit nec fluctus retro abire permisit, tunc ille exitu simul redituque praecluso uolutatur et, quia in rectum non potest tendere, quod illi naturale est, in sublime se intendit et terram prementem diuerberat.

[16,1] Etiamnunc dicendum est quod plerisque auctoribus placet et in quod fortasse fiet discessio. Non esse terram sine spiritu palam est, non tantum illo dico quo se tenet ac partes sui iungit, qui inest etiam saxis mortuisque corporibus, sed illo dico uitali et uegeto et alente omnia. Hunc nisi haberet, quomodo tot arbustis spiritum infunderet non aliunde uiuentibus et tot satis? Quemadmodum tam diuersas radices aliter atque aliter in se mersas foueret, quasdam summa receptas parte, quasdam altius tractas, nisi multum haberet animae tam multa tam uaria generantis et haustu atque alimento sui educantis?

[16,4] non est ergo dubium quin multum spiritus intus lateat et caeca sub terra spatia aer latus obtineat. Quod si uerum est, necesse est id saepe moueatur quod re mobilissima plenum est: numquid enim dubium esse cuiquam potest quin nihil sit tam inquietum quam aer, tam uersabile et agitatione gaudens?

[17,1] Sequitur ergo ut naturam suam exerceat et quod semper moueri uult, aliquando et alia moueat. Id quando fit? Quando illi cursus interdictus est. Nam quamdiu non impeditur, ita placide; cum offenditur et retinetur, insanit et moras suas abripit, non aliter quam ille “pontem indignatus Araxes”:

[17,2] quamdiu illi facilis et liber est alueus, primas quasque aquas explicat; ubi saxa manu uel casu illata repressere uenientem, tunc impetum mora quaerit et, quo plura opposita sunt, plus inuenit uirium: omnis enim illa unda, quae a tergo superuenit et in se crescit, cum onus suum sustinere non potuit, uim ruina parat et prona cum ipsis quae obiacebant fugit. Idem spiritu fit, qui quo ualentior agiliorque est, citius eripitur et uehementius saeptum omne disturbat: ex quo motus fit, scilicet eius partis sub qua pugnatum est.

[17,3] Quod dicitur uerum esse et illo probatur: saepe, cum terrae motus fuit, si modo pars eius aliqua disrupta est, inde uentus per multos dies fluxit, ut traditur factum eo motu quo Chalcis laborauit: quod apud Asclepiodotum inuenies, auditorem Posidonii, in his ipsis

quaestionum naturalium causis. Inuenies et apud alios auctores hiasse uno loto terram et inde non exiguo tempore spirasse uentum, qui scilicet illud iter ipse sibi fecerat per quod ferebatur.

[18,1] Maxima ergo causa est propter quam terra moueatur spiritus natura citus et locum e loto mutans. Hic quamdiu non impellitur et in uacanti spatio latet, iacet innoxius nec circum ictis molestus est;

[18,2] ubi illum extrinsecus superueniens causa sollicite compellitque et in artum agit, si licet adhuc, cedit tantum et uagatur: ubi erepta discedendi facultas est et undique obsistitur, tunc “magno cum murmure montis circum claustra” fremit, quae diu pulsata conuellit ac iactat, eo acrior quo cum mora ualentiore luctatus est.

[18,3] Deinde cum circa perlustrauit omne quo tenebatur, nec potuit euadere, inde, quo maxime impactus est, resilit et aut per occulta diuiditur ipso terrae motu raritate facta, aut per nouum uulnus emicuit: ita eius non potest uis tanta cohiberi nec uentum tenet ulla compages. Soluit enim quodcumque uinculum et onus omne fert secum infususque per minima laxamentum sibi parat et indomita naturae potentia liberat se, utique cum concitatus sibi ius suum uindicat.

[18,4] Spiritus ueto inuicta res est: nihil erit quod “luctantes uentos tempestatesque sonoras imperio premat ac uinclis et carcere frenet.”

[18,5] Sine dubio poetae hunc uoluerunt uideri carcerem in quo sub terra clausi laterent, sed hoc non intellexerunt, nec id quod clausum est esse adhuc uentum nec id quod uentus est posse iam claudi. Nam quod in clauso est quiescit et aeris statio est; omnis in fuga uentus est.

[19,1] Metrodorum Chium, quia necesse est, audiamus, quod uult sententiae loco dicentem. Non enim permitto mihi ne eas quidem opiniones praeterire quas improbo, cum satius sit omnium copiam fieri et quae improbamus damnare potius quam praeterire.

[19,2] Quid ergo dicit? Quomodo, cum in dolio cantatur, uox illa per totum cum quadam discussione percurrit ac resonat et tam leuiter mota tamen circumit non sine tactu eius tumultuque quo inclusa est, sic speluncarum sub terra pendentium uastitas habet aera suum, quem, simul alius superne incidens percussit, agit, non aliter quam illa, de quibus paulo ante rettuli, inania indito clamore sonuerunt.

[20,1] Ueniamus nunc ad eos qui omnia ista quae rettuli in causa esse dixerunt aut ex his plura. Democritus plura putat. Ait enim motum aliquando spiritu fieri, aliquando aqua, aliquando utroque, et id hoc modo prosequitur. Aliqua pars terrae concaua est; in hanc aquae magna uis confluit. Ex hac est aliquid tenue et ceteris liquidius. Hoc, cum superueniente grauitate reiectum est, illiditur terris et illas mouet, nec enim fluctuari potest sine motu eius in quod impingitur.

[20,2] Etiam nunc quomodo de spiritu dicebamus, de aqua quoque dicendum est. Ubi in unum locum congesta est et capere se desiit, aliquo incumbit et primo uiam pondere aperit, deinde impetu; nec enim exire nisi per deuexum potest diu inclusa nec in directum cadere moderate aut sine concussione eorum per quae uel in quae cadit.

[20,6] Ergo, ut ait, potest terram mouere aqua, si partes aliquas eluit et adrosit, quibus desiit posse extenuatis sustineri quod integris ferebatur. Potest terram mouere impressio spiritus: fortasse enim aer extrinsecus alio intrante aere agitur, fortasse aliqua parte subito decidente percutitur et inde motum capit. Fortasse aliqua pars terrae uelut columnis quibusdam ac pilis sustinetur, quibus uitatis ac recedentibus tremit pondus impositum.

[21,2] Duo genera sunt, ut Posidonio placet, quibus mouetur terra. Utrique nomen est proprium: altera succussio est, cum terra quatitur et sursum ac deorsum mouetur, altera inclinatio, qua in latera nutat alternis nauigii more. Ego et tertium illud existimo quod nostro uocabulo signatum est; non enim sine causa tremorem terrae dixere maiores, qui utrique dissimilis est; nam nec succutiuntur tunc omnia nec inclinantur sed uibrantur, res minime in eiusmodi casu noxia; sicut longe perniciosior est inclinatio concussione: nam nisi celeriter ex altera parte properabit motus qui inclinata restituat, ruina necessario sequitur.

[22,1] Cum dissimiles hi motus inter se sint, causae quoque eorum diuersae sunt. Prius ergo de motu quatiente dicamus. Si quando magna onera per uices uehiculorum plurium tracta sunt et rotae maiore nisu in salebras inciderunt, terram concuti senties.

[22,4] tunc saxa uasti ponderis decidunt; tunc illa praecipitata rupes quicquid ab imo repercutit non passura consistere “<cum> sonitu uenit, et ruere omnia uisa repente”, ut ait Uergilius noster.

[23,1] Huius motus succutientis terras haec erit causa: ad alteram transeo. Rara terrae natura est multumque habens uacui: per has raritates spiritus fertur, qui, ubi maior influxit nec emittitur, concutit terram.

[23,2] Haec placet et aliis, ut paulo ante rettuli, causa, si quid apud te profectura testium turba est: hanc etiam Callisthenes probat, non contemptus uir: fuit enim illi nobile ingenium et furibundi regis impatiens. Hic est Alexandri crimen aeternum, quod nulla uirtus, nulla bellorum felicitas redimet;

[23,3] nam quotiens quis dixerit: “Occidit Persarum multa milia”, opponetur ei “et Callisthenen”; quotiens dictum erit: “Occidit Darium, penes quem tum maximum regnum erat”, opponetur ei “et Callisthenen”; quotiens dictum erit: “Omnia oceano tenus uicit, ipsum quoque temptauit nouis classibus et imperium ex angulo Thraciae usque ad Orientis terminos protulit”, dicitur: “Sed Callisthenen occidit”: omnia licet antiqua ducum regumque exempla transierit, ex his quae fecit nihil tam magnum erit quam scelus.

[23,4] Hic Callisthenes in libris quibus describit quemadmodum Helice Burisque mersae sint, quis illas casus in mare uel in illas mare immiserit, dicit id quod in priore parte dictum est: Spiritus intrat terram per occulta foramina, quemadmodum ubique, ita et sub mari; deinde, cum obstructus ille est trames per quem descenderat, reditum autem illi a tergo resistens aqua abstulit, huc et illuc refertur et sibi ipse occurrens terram labefactat. Ideo frequentissime mari apposita uexantur et inde Neptuno haec assignata est terras mouendi potentia. Quisquis primas litteras didicit, scit illum apud Homerum Genosichthona uocari.

[24,1] Spiritum esse huius mali causam et ipse consentio. De illo disputabo: quomodo intret hic spiritus, utrum per tenuia foramina nec oculis comprehensibilia an per maiora ac patentiora, et utrum ab imo an etiam per summa terrarum.

[24,2] Hoc incredibile est. Nam in nostris quoque corporibus cutis spiritum respuit nec est illi introitus nisi per quae trahitur, nec consistere quidem a nobis receptus potest nisi in laxiore corporis parte: non enim inter neruos pulpasue sed in uisceribus et patulo interioris partis recessu commoratur.

[24,3] Idem de terra suspicari licet uel ex hoc quod motus non in summa terra circae summam est sed subter et ab imo. Huius indicium est quod altitudinis profundae maria iactantur, motis scilicet his supra quae fusa sunt: ergo uerisimile est terram ex alto moueri et illic spiritum in cauernis ingentibus concipi.

[24,4] “Immo”, inquit, “ceum, cum frigore inhorruimus, tremor sequitur, sic terras quoque spiritus extrinsecus accidens quassat”. Quod nullo modo potest fieri. Algere enim debet, ut idem illi accidat quod nobis, quos externa causa in horrorem agit. Accidere autem terrae simile quiddam nostrae affectioni, sed non ex simili causa concesserim. Illam interior et altior iniuria debet impellere:

[24,5] cuius rei argumentum uel maximum hoc potest esse quod, cum uehementi motu adaperit ingenti ruina solum est, totas nonnumquam urbes et recipit hiatus ille et abscondit.

[25,1] Cum spiritus magna ui uacuum terrarum locum penitus oppleuit coepitque rixari et de exitu cogitare, latera ipsa inter quae latet saepius percutit, supra quae urbes interdum sitae sunt. Haec nonnumquam adeo concutiuntur ut aedificia superposita procumbant, nonnumquam in tantum ut parietes quibus fertur omne tegimen caui, decidant in illum subteruacantem locum totaeque urbes in immensam altitudinem uergant.

[25,2] Si uelis credere, aiunt aliquando Ossam Olympo cohaesisse, deinde terrarum motu recessisse et fissam unius magnitudinem montis in duas partes. Tunc effluxisse Peneon, qui paludes quibus laborabat Thessalia siccauit, abductis in se quae sine exitu stagnauerant aquis. Ladon flumen inter Elin et Megalenpolin medius est, quem terrarum motus effudit.

[25,3] Per haec quid probo? In laxos specus (quid enim aliud appellem loca uacua?) sub terras spiritum conuenire; quod nisi esset, magna terrarum spatia commouerentur et una multa titubarent: nunc exiguae partes laborant nec umquam per ducenta milia motus extenditur. Ecce hic, qui impleuit fabulis orbem, non transcendit Campaniam.

[25,4] Quid dicam; cum Chalcis tremuit, Thebas stetisse? cum laborauit Aegium, tam propinquas illi Patras de motu audisse? Illa uasta concussio quae duas suppressit urbes, Helicen et Burin, circa Aegium constitit. Apparet ergo in tantum spatium motum pertendere quantum illa sub terris uacantis loci inanitas pateat.

[26,1] Poteram ad hoc probandum abuti auctoritate magnorum uirorum, qui Aegyptum numquam tremuisse tradunt. Rationem autem huius rei hanc reddunt, quod ex limo tota concreuerit. Tantum enim, si Homero fides est, aberat a continenti Pharos quantum nauis diurno cursu metiri plenis lata uelis potest; sed continenti ammota est: turbidus enim defluens Nilus multumque secum caeni trahens et id subinde apponens prioribus terris Aegyptum annuo incremento semper ultra tulit. Inde pinguis et limosi soli est nec ulla interualla in se habet sed creuit in solidum arescente limo; cuius pressa erat et sedens structura, cum partes glutinarentur, nec quicquam inane interuenire poterat, cum solido liquidum ac molle semper accederet.

[26,2] Sed mouetur et Aegyptus et Delos, quam Uergilius stare iussit: “immotamque coli dedit et contemnere uentos”; hanc philosophi quoque, credula natio, dixerunt non moueri auctore Pindaro. Thucydides ait antea quidem immotam fuisse sed circa Peloponnesiacum bellum tremuisse;

[26,3] Callisthenes et alio tempore ait hoc accidisse: “Inter multa”, inquit, “prodigia, quibus denuntiata est duarum urbium, Helices et Buris, euersio, fuere maxime notabilia columna ignis immensi et Delos agitata”; quam ideo stabilem uideri uult, quia mari imposita sit habeatque concauas rupes et saxa peruia, quae dent deprehenso aeri reditum: ob hoc et insulas esse certioris soli urbesque eo tutiores quo propius ad mare accesserint.

[26,4] Falsa haec esse Pompei et Herculaneum sensere. Adice nunc quod omnis ora maris obnoxia est motibus: sic Paphos non semel corrui; sic mobilis et huic iam familiaris malo Nicopolis; Cyprum ambit altum mare et agitur; Tyros et ipsa tam mouetur quam diluitur. Hae fere causae redduntur propter quas tremat terra.

[27,1] Quaedam tamen propria in hoc Campano motu accidisse narrantur, quorum ratio reddenda est. Diximus sexcentarum ouium gregem exanimatum in Pompeiana regione. Non est quare hoc putes ouibus illis timore accidisse.

[27,3] Quid, quod aquae quoque inutiles pestilentesque in abdito latent, ut quas numquam usus exerceat, numquam aura liberior euerberet? Crassae itaque et graui caligine sempiternaque tectae nihil nisi pestiferum in se et corporibus nostris contrarium habent. Aer quoque, qui mixtus est illis quique inter illas paludes iacet, cum emersit, late uitium suum spargit et haurientes necat.

[27,4] Facilius autem pecora sentiunt, in quae primum pestilentia incurrere solet, quo audiora sunt: aperto caelo plurimum utuntur et aquis, quarum maxima in pestilentia culpa est. Oues uero mollioris naturae, quo propiora terris ferunt capita, correptas esse non miror, cum afflatus aeris diri circa ipsam humum exceperint. Nocuisset ille et hominibus, si maior exisset; sed illum sinceri aeris copia extinxit, antequam ut ab homine posset trahi surgeret.

[28,1] Multa autem terras habere mortifera uel ex hoc intellege, quod tot uenena nascuntur non manu sparsa sed sponte, solo scilicet habente ut boni ita mali semina. Quid, quod pluribus Italiae locis per quaedam foramina pestilens exhalatur uapor, quem non homini ducere, non ferae tutum est? Aues quoque si in illum inciderunt, antequam caelo meliore leniatur, in ipso uolatu cadunt liuentque corpora et non aliter quam per uim elisae fauces tument.

[28,2] Hic spiritus, quamdiu terra se continet, tenui foramine fluens non plus potentiae habet quam ut despectantia et ultro sibi illata conficiat; ubi per saecula conditus tenebris ac tristitia loci creuit in uitium, ipsa ingrauescit mora, peior quo segnior: cum exitum nactus est, aeternum illud umbrosi frigoris malum et infernam noctem euomit ac regionis nostrae aera infuscat; uincuntur enim meliora peioribus.

[28,3] Tunc etiam ille spiritus purior transit in noxium: inde subitae continuaeque mortes et monstruosa genera morborum, ut ex nouis orta causis. Breuis autem aut longa clades est, prout uitia ualuere, nec prius pestilentia desinit quam spiritum illum grauem exercuit laxitas caeli uentorumque iactatio.

[29,1] Nam aliquos insanis attonitisque similes discurrere fecit metus, qui excutit mentes, ubi priuatus ac modicus est: quid? ubi publice terret, ubi cadunt urbes, populi opprimuntur, terra concutitur, quid mirum est animos inter dolorem et metum destitutos aberrasse?

[29,2] Non est facile inter magna mala consipere. Itaque leuissima fere ingenia in tantum uenere formidinis ut sibi exciderent. Nemo quidem sine aliqua iactura sanitatis expauit, similisque est furentis quisquis timet: sed alios cito timor sibi reddit, alios uehementius perturbat et in dementia transfert.

[30,1] Statuam diuisam non miror, cum dixerim montes a montibus recessisse et ipsum disruptum esse ab imo solum. “Haec loca ui quondam et uasta conuulsa ruina (tantum aeui longinqua ualet mutare uetustas) dissiluisse ferunt, cum protinus utraque tellus una foret. Uenit ingenti ui pontus et ingens Hesperium Siculo latus absceidit aruaque et urbes aequore diductas angusto interluit aestu.”

[30,2] Uides totas regiones a suis sedibus reuelli et trans mare iacere quod in confinio fuerat; uides et urbium fieri gentiumque discidium, cum pars naturae concita est dehiscens et aliquo mare, ignem, spiritum impegit; quorum mira ut ex toto uis est: quamuis enim parte saeuat, mundi tamen uiribus saeuat.

[30,3] Sic et Hispanias a contextu Africae mare eripuit, sic per hanc inundationem, quam poetarum maximi celebrant, ab Italia Sicilia reiecta est. Aliquanto autem plus impetus habent quae ex infimo ueniunt: acriora enim sunt quibus nisus est per angusta.

[30,4] Quantas res hi terrarum tremores quamque mira spectacula ediderint, satis dictum est: cur ergo aliquis ad hoc stupet quod aes unius statuae, ne solidum quidem sed concuum ac tenue, disruptum est, cum fortasse in illud se spiritus quaerens fugam incluserit? Illud uero quis nescit? Diductis aedificia angulis uidimus moueri iterumque componi. Quaedam uero parum aptata positu suo et a fabris neglegentius solutiusque composita terrae motus saepius agitata compegit.

[30,5] Quod si totos parietes et totas findit domos et latera magnarum turrium, quamuis solida sint, scindit et pilas operibus subditas dissipat, quid est quare quisquam dignum adnotari putet sectam esse aequaliter ab imo ad caput in partes duas statuum?

[31,1] Quare tamen per plures dies motus fuit? Non desiit enim assidue tremere Campania, clementius quidem sed cum ingenti damno, quia quassa quatiebat, quibus ad cadendum male stantibus <opus> non erat impelli sed agitari: nondum uidelicet spiritus omnis exierat, sed adhuc, emissa sui parte maiore, oberrabat. Inter argumenta quibus probatur spiritu ista fieri, non est quod dubites et hoc ponere:

[31,3] Hoc quoque dignum memoria iudico ab eruditissimo et grauissimo uiro cognitum (forte enim, cum hoc euenit, lauabatur): uidisse se affirmat in balneo tessellas quibus solum erat stratum alteram ab altera separari iterumque committi et aquam modo recipi in commissuras pauimento recedente, modo compresso bullire et elidi. Eundem audiui narrantem uidisse se macerias mollius crebriusque tremere quam natura duri sinit.

[32,1] Haec, Lucili, uirorum optime, quantum ad ipsas causas: illa nunc quae ad confirmationem animorum pertinent. Quos magis refert nostra fortiores fieri quam doctiores; sed alterum sine altero non fit: non enim aliunde animo uenit robur quam a bonis artibus, quam a contemplatione naturae.

[32,2] Quem enim non hic ipse casus aduersus omnes firmauerit, erexerit? Quid est enim cur ego hominem aut feram, quid est cur sagittam aut lanceam tremam? Maiora me pericula expectant: fulminibus et terris et magnis naturae partibus petimur.

[32,3] Ingenti itaque animo mors prouocanda est, siue nos aequo uastoque impetu aggreditur, siue cotidiano et uulgari exitu. Nihil refert quam minax ueniat quantumque sit quod in nos trahat; quod a nobis petit minimum est: hoc senectus a nobis ablatura est, hoc auriculae dolor, hoc umoris in nobis corrupti abundantia, hoc cibus parum obsequens stomacho, hoc pes leuiter offensus.

[32,5] Quid ad me quam magna sint quibus pereo? Ipsum perire non magnum est. Proinde si uolumus esse felices, si nec hominum nec deorum nec rerum timore uersari, si despiciere fortunam superuacua promittentem, leuia minitantem, si uolumus tranquille degere et ipsis diis de felicitate controuersiam agere, anima in expedito est habenda: siue illam insidiae siue morbi petent siue hostium gladii siue insularum cadentium fragor siue ipsarum ruina terrarum siue uasta uis ignium urbes agrosque pari clade complexa, qui uolet illam accipiat.

[32,6] Quid aliud debeo quam exeuntem hortari et cum bonis ominibus emittere? “Uade fortiter, uade feliciter! Nihil dubitaueris: redderis. Non de re sed de tempore est quaestio, facis quod quandoque faciendum est. Nec rogaueris nec timueris nec te uelut in aliquod malum exiturum tuleris retro: rerum natura te, quae genuit, expectat et locus melior ac tutior.

[32,7] Illic non tremunt terrae nec inter se uenti cum magno nubium fragore concurrunt, non incendia regiones urbesque uastant, non naufragiorum totas classes sorbentium metus est, non arma contrariis disposita uexillis et in mutuam perniciem multorum milium par furor, non pestilentia et ardentes promiscue communes populis cadentibus rogi”. Istud leue est: quid timemus? graue est: potius semel incidat quam semper impendeat.

[32,8] Ego autem perire timeam, cum terra ante me pereat, cum ista quatiuntur quae quatiunt et in iniuriam nostram non sine sua ueniant? Helicen Burinque totas mare accepit: ego de uno corpusculo timeam? Supra oppida duo nauigatur (duo autem quae nouimus, quae in nostram notitiam memoria litteris seruata perduxit: quam multa alia aliis locis mersa sunt, quot populos aut terra aut infra se mare inclusit!): ego recusem mei finem, cum sciam me sine fine non esse? Immo cum sciam omnia esse finita, ego ultimum suspirium timeam?

[32,9] Quantum potes itaque, ipse te cohortare, Lucili, contra metum mortis: hic est qui nos humiles facit; hic est qui uitam ipsam, cui parcit, inquietat ac perdit; hic omnia ista dilatat, terrarum motus et fulmina. Quae omnia feres constanter, si cogitaueris nihil interesse inter exiguum tempus et longum.

[32,10] Horae sunt quas perdimus; puta dies esse, puta menses, puta annos: perdimus illos nempe perituros. Quid, oro te, refert num perueniam ad illos? Fluit tempus et audissimos sui deserit; nec quod futurum est meum est nec quod fuit: in puncto fugientis temporis pendeo, et magni est modicum fuisse.

[32,11] Eleganter ille Laelius sapiens dicenti cuidam “Sexaginta annos habeo”, “Hos”, inquit, “dicis sexaginta quos non habes”. Ne ex hoc quidem intellegimus incomprehensibilis uitae condicionem et sortem temporis semper alieni, quod annos numeramus amissos?

[32,12] Hoc affigamus animo, hoc nobis subinde dicamus: moriendum est. Quando? Quid tua? Mors naturae lex est, mors tributum officiumque mortalium malorumque omnium remedium est: optauit illam quisquis timet. Omnibus omissis, hoc unum, Lucili, meditare, ne mortis nomen reformides; effice illam tibi cogitatione multa familiarem, ut, si ita tulerit, possis illi et obuiam exire.

DE COMETIS

[1,1] Nemo usque eo tardus et hebes et demissus in terram est ut ad diuina non erigatur ac tota mente consurgat, utique ubi nouum aliquod e caelo miraculum fulsit. Nam quamdiu solita decurrunt, magnitudinem rerum consuetudo subducit: ita enim compositi sumus ut nos cotidiana, etiamsi admiratione digna sunt, transeant, contra minimarum quoque rerum, si insolitae prodierunt, spectaculum dulce fiat.

[1,2] Hic itaque coetus astrorum, quibus immensi corporis pulchritudo distinguitur, populum non conuocat: at cum aliquid ex more mutatum est, omnium uultus in caelo est. Sol spectatorem, nisi deficit, non habet; nemo obseruat lunam nisi laborantem: tunc urbes conclamant, tunc pro se quisque superstitione uana strepit.

[1,4] Haec tamen non adnotamus, quamdiu ordo seruatur; si quid turbatum est aut praeter consuetudinem emicuit, spectamus interrogamus ostendimus: adeo naturale est magis noua quam magna mirari.

[1,5] Idem in cometis fit: si rarus et insolitae figurae ignis apparuit, nemo non scire quid sit cupit et, oblitus aliorum, de aduenticio quaerit, ignarus utrum debeat mirari an timere. Non enim desunt qui terreant, qui significationes eius graues praedicunt. Sciscitantur itaque et cognoscere uolunt prodigium sit an sidus.

[1,6] At mehercules non aliud quis aut magnificentius quaesierit aut didicerit utilius quam de stellarum siderumque natura, utrum flamma contracta, quod et uisus noster affirmat et ipsum ab illis fluens lumen et calor inde descendens, an non sint flammei orbes, sed solida quaedam terrenaque corpora, quae per igneos tractus labentia inde splendorem trahant caloremque, non de suo clara.

[1,7] In qua opinione magni fuere uiri, qui sidera crediderunt ex duro concreta et ignem alienum pascentia. Nam per se, inquit, flamma diffugeret, nisi aliquid haberet quod teneret et a quo teneretur, conglobatamque nec stabili inditam corpori profecto iam mundus turbine suo dissipasset.

[2,1] Ad haec inuestiganda proderit quaerere num cometae condicionis sint cuius superiora. Videntur enim cura illis quaedam habere communia: ortus et occasus, ipsam quoque, quam uis spargatur et longius exeat, faciem (aeque enim ignei splendidique sunt).

[2,2] Itaque si omnia terrena sidera sunt, his quoque eadem sors erit; si uero nihil aliud sunt quam purus ignis manensque mensibus senis nec illos conuersio mundi soluit et uelocitas, illa quoque possunt et tenui constare materia nec ob hoc discuti assiduo caeli circumactu.

[2,3] Illo quoque pertinebit haec excussisse ut sciamus utrum mundus terra stante circumeat an mundo stante terra uertatur. Fuerunt enim qui dicerent nos esse quos rerum natura nescientes ferat, nec caeli motu fieri ortus et occasus, nos ipsos oriri et occidere: digna res contemplatione, ut sciamus in quo rerum statu simus, pigerrimam sortiti an uelocissimam sedem, circa nos deus omnia an nos agat.

[3,1] Necessarium est autem ueteres ortus cometarum habere collectos. Deprehendi enim propter raritatem eorum cursus adhuc non potest, nec explorari an uices seruent et illos ad suum diem certus ordo producat. Noua haec caelestium obseruatio est et nuper in Graeciam inuenta.

[3,2] Democritus quoque, subtilissimus antiquorum omnium, suspicari se ait plures stellas esse quae currant, sed nec numerum illarum posuit nec nomina, nondum comprehensis quinque siderum cursibus. Eudoxus primus ab Aegypto hos motus in Graeciam transtulit; hic tamen de cometis nihil dicit: ex quo apparet ne apud Aegyptios quidem, quibus maior caeli cura fuit, hanc partem elaboratam.

[3,3] Canon postea, diligens et ipse inquisitor, defectiones quidem solis seruatas ab Aegyptiis collegit, nullam autem mentionem fecit cometarum, non praetermissurus, si quid explorati apud illos comperisset.

[4.1] Duo certe, qui apud Chaldaeos studuisse se dicunt, Epigenes et Apollonius Myndius, peritissimus inspicendorum natalium, inter se dissident. Hic enim ait cometas in numero stellarum errantium poni a Chaldaeis tenerique cursus eorum. Epigenes contra ait Chaldaeos nihil de cometis habere comprehensi, sed uideri illos accendi turbine quodam aeris concitati et intorti.

[4.2] Primum ergo, si tibi uidetur, opiniones huius ponamus ac refellamus. Huic uidetur plurimum uirium habere ad omnes sublimium motus stella Saturni. Haec, cum proxima signa Marti premit aut in lunae uiciniam transit aut in solis incidit radios, natura uentosa et frigida contrahit pluribus locis aera conglobatque; deinde si radios solis assumpsit, tonat fulguratque; si Martem quoque consentientem habet, fulminat.

[4.4] cum umida terrenaque in se globus aliquis aeris clausit, quem turbinem dicimus, quacumque fertur, praebet speciem ignis extenti, quae tam diu durat quam diu mansit aeris illa complexio umidi intra se terrenique multum uehens.

[5.2] Praeterea turbo omni nube uelocius rapitur et in orbem uertitur; super ista uelociter desinit et ipse se ui sua rumpit. Trabes autem non transcurrunt nec praeteruolant ut faces sed commorantur et in eadem caeli parte collucent.

[5.3] Charmander quoque, in eo libro quem de cometis a composuit, ait Anaxagorae uisum grande insolitumque caelo lumen magnitudine amplae trabis, et id per multos dies fulsisse. Talem effigiem ignis longi fuisse Callisthenes tradit, antequam Burin et Helicen mare absconderet.

[5,4] Aristoteles ait non trabem illam sed cometen fuisse; ceterum ob nimium ardorem non apparuisse sparsum ignem, sed procedente tempore, cum iam minus flagraret, redditam suam cometis faciem. In quo igne multa quidem fuerunt digna quae notarentur, nihil tamen magis quam quod, ut ille fulsit in caelo, statim supra Burin et Helicen mare fuit.

[5,5] Numquid ergo Aristoteles non illam tantum sed omnes trabes cometas esse credebat hanc habentes differentiam quod his continuus ignis est, ceteris sparsus? Trabes enim flammam aequalem habent nec ullo loco intermissam aut languidam, in ultimis uero partibus coactam, qualem fuisse in illa de qua modo rettuli Callisthenes tradit.

[6,1] Duo, inquit Epigenes, cometarum genera sunt: alii ardorem undique effundunt nec locum mutant, alii in unam partem ignem uagum in modum comae porrigunt et stellas praetermeant (quales duo aetate nostra uisi sunt). Illi priores criniti undique et immoti humiles fere sunt et isdem causis quibus trabes facesque conflantur ex intemperie aeris turbidi multa secum arida umidaque terris exhalata uersantis.

[6,3] Ut breuiter autem uoluntatem eius exprimam, eadem fieri ratione hos cometas existimat qua fiunt ignes turbine eiekti; hoc unum interest, quod illi turbines ex superiore parte in terras deprimuntur, hi de terra in superiora eluctantur.

[7,1] Aduersus haec multa dicuntur. Primum si uentus in causa esset, numquam cometes sine uento appareret: nunc autem et quietissimo aere apparet. Deinde si uento fieret, cum uento caderet; et si uento inciperet, cresceret uento eoque esset ardentior quo ille incitator. His accedit illud quoque quod uentus multas aeris partes impellit, cometes uno loco apparet; et uentus in sublime non peruenit, cometae autem uisuntur supra quam ire uentis licet.

[7,2] Transit deinde ad illos quos ait certiore habere stellarum speciem, qui et procedunt et signa praetereunt. Hos ait ex isdem causis fieri quibus illos quos dixit humiliores; hoc tamen interesse, quod terrarum exhalationes multa secum arida ferentes celsiorem petant partem et in editiora caeli aquilone pellantur.

[7,3] <at> si illos aquilo propelleret, ad meridiem semper agerentur, quo uentus hic nititur: atqui uarie cucurrerunt, alii in ortum, alii in occasum, omnes in flexum; quod iter non daret uentus. Deinde si aquilonis illos impetus a terris in altum leuaret, aliis uentis non orirentur cometae: atqui oriuntur.

[8,1] Illam nunc rationem eius (utraque enim utitur) refellamus: Quicquid umidi aridique terra eflauit, cum in unum coit, ipsa discordia corporum spiritum uersat in turbinem; tunc illa uis uenti circumeuntis quicquid intra se comprehendit cursu suo accendit et leuat in altum, ac tam diu manet splendor ignis expressi quamdiu alimenta sufficiunt; quibus desinentibus et ipse subsidit.

[8,2] Qui hoc dicit, non notat qualis sit turbinum cursus et qualis cometarum: illorum rapidus ac uiolentus et ipsis uentis citior est, cometarum lenis et qui per diem noctemque quantum transierit abscondat. Deinde turbinum motus uagus est et disiectus et, ut Salustii uerbis utar, uerticosus, cometarum autem compositus et destinatum iter carpens.

[8,3] Num quis nostrum crederet lunam aut quinque sidera rapi uento aut turbine rotari? Non, ut puto. Quare? Quia non est illis perturbatus et impotens cursus. Ad cometas idem transferamus: non confuse nec tumultuose eunt, ut aliquis credat illos causis turbulentis et inconstantibus pelli.

[8,4] Deinde, etiamsi uertices isti comprehendere terrena umidaque et ex humili in altum exprimere possent, non tamen supra lunam efferrent: omnis illis usque in nubilum uis est; cometas autem immixtos stellis uidemus per superiora labentes. Ergo ueri simile non est in tantum spatium perseuerare turbinem, qui quo maior est maturius corrumpitur.

[9,1] Utrumlibet itaque eligat: aut lenis uis tam alte peruenire non poterit, aut magna et concitata citius ipsa se franget. Praeterea humiliores illi cometae ob hoc (ut putat) non exeunt altius quia plus terreni habent (grauitas illos sua in proximo tenet): atqui necesse est in his cometis diuturnioribus celsioribusque plenior materia sit; neque enim diutius apparerent, nisi maioribus nutrimentis sustinerentur.

[9,2] Dicebam modo non posse diu uerticem permanere nec supra lunam aut usque in stellarum locum crescere. Nempe efficit turbinem plurium uentorum inter ipsos luctatio. Haec diu non potest esse: nam cum uagus et incertus spiritus conuolutatus est, nouissime uni uis omnium cedit;

[9,3] nulla autem tempestas magna perdurat (procellae, quanto plus habent uirium, tanto minus temporis; uenti, cum ad summum uenerunt, remittuntur; omnia uiolenta necesse est ipsa concitatione in exitum sui tendant). Nemo itaque turbinem toto die uidit, ne hora quidem: mira uelocitas eius et mira breuitas est. Praeterea uiolentius celeriusque in terra circaque terram uoluitur; quo excelsior, eo solutior laxiorque est et ob hoc diffunditur.

[9,4] Adice nunc quod, etiamsi in summum pertenderet, ubi sideribus iter est, utique ab eo motu qui uniuersum trahit solueretur: quid enim est illa conuersione mundi citatius? Hac omnium uentorum in unum congesta uis dissiparetur et terrae solida fortisque compages, nedum particula aeris torti.

[10,1] Praeterea manere in alto non potest ignis turbine illatus, nisi ipse quoque permanet turbo. Quid porro tam incredibile est quam in turbine longior mora, utique ubi motus motu contrario uincitur? (Habet enim suam locus ille uertiginem, quae rapit caelum "sideraque alta trahit celerique uolumine torquet"). Et ut des ei aliquam aduocationem, quod fieri nullo modo potest, quid de his cometis dicetur qui senis mensibus apparuerunt?

[10,2] Deinde duo debent esse motus eodem loco, alter ille diuinus et assiduus, suum sine intermissione peragens opus, alter nouus et recens et turbine illatus; necesse est ergo alter alteri impedimentum sit. Atqui <quia> lunaris illa orbita ceterorumque supra lunam meantium motus irreuocabilis est nec haesitat usquam nec resistit nec dat ullam nobis suspicionem obiectae sibi morae, fidem non habet turbinem, uiolentissimum et perturbatissimum tempestatis genus, in medios siderum ordines peruenire et inter disposita ac tranquilla

[10,3] Credamus ignem circumacto turbine accendi et hunc expulsum in sublime praeberere nobis opinionem speciemque sideris longi: puto, talis esse debet quale est id quod ignem efficit; turbine autem rotunda facies est (in eodem enim uestigio uersatur et columnae modo circumagentis se uoluitur): ergo ignem quoque qui inclusus est similem esse illi oportet, atqui longus est et disiectus minimeque similis in orbem coacto.

[11,1] Epigenem relinquamus et aliorum opiniones persequamur. Quas antequam exponere incipiam, illud imprimis praesumendum est, cometas non in una parte caeli aspici nec in signifero tantum orbe sed tam in ortu quam in occasu, frequentissime tamen circa septentrionem.

[11,2] Forma eis, <ut> nomen, est una: quamuis enim Graeci discrimina fecerint eorum quibus in morem barbae flamma dependet, et eorum qui undique circa se uelut comam spargunt, et eorum quibus fusus quidem est ignis sed in uerticem tendens, tamen omnes isti eiusdem notae sunt cometaeque recte dicuntur.

[11,3] Quorum cum post longum tempus appareant formae, inter se eos comparare difficile est: illo ipso tempore quo apparent, inter spectantes de habitu illorum non conuenit sed, prout cuique acrior acies aut hebetior est, ita ait aut lucidiorem esse aut rubicundiorem et crines aut in interiora reductos aut in latera demissos. Sed siue sunt aliquae differentiae illorum siue non sunt, eadem fiant ratione necesse est cometae; illud unum constare debet: praeter solitum aspici nouam sideris faciem circa se dissipatum ignem trahentis.

[12,1] Quibusdam antiquorum haec placet ratio: cum ex stellis errantibus altera se alteri applicuit, confuso in unum duarum lumine facies longioris sideris redditur; nec hoc tunc tantum euenit, cum stella stellam attigit, sed etiam cum appropinquauit: interuallum enim quod inter duas est illustratur ab utraque inflammaturque et longum ignem efficit.

[12,2] His illud respondebimus: certum esse numerum stellarum mobilium, solere autem eodem tempore et has apparere et cometen, ex quo manifestum fit non illarum coitu fieri cometen sed proprium esse et sui iuris.

[12,3] Etiamnunc frequenter stella sub altioris stellae uestigium uenit: et Saturnus aliquando supra Iouem est et Mars Uenerem aut Mercurium recta linea despicit, nec tamen propter hunc illorum concursum, cum alter alterum subit, cometes fit; alioquin annis omnibus fieret (omnibus enim aliquae stellae in eodem signo simul sunt).

[12,4] Si cometen faceret stella stellae superueniens, momento esse desineret. Summa enim uelocitas transeuntium est, ideoque omnis defectio siderum brevis est, quia cito illa idem cursus qui admouerat abstrahit; uidemus solem et lunam intra exiguum tempus, cum obscurari coeperunt, liberari: quanto celerior debet fieri in stellis digressio tanto minoribus? Atqui cometae senis mensibus manent, quod non accideret, si duarum stellarum conuentu gignerentur: illae enim diu cohaerere non possunt et necesse est illas lex celeritatis suae separet.

[12,7] Haec omnia primum magna ui efficiuntur; sol enim est qui ista succendit: stellarum non est eadem potentia. Deinde nihil horum nisi infra lunam in terrarum uicinia nascitur; superiora pura et sincera sunt et coloris sui semper.

[12,8] Praeterea si quid tale accideret, non haberet moram sed extingueretur cito, sicut coronae quae solem lunamue cingunt intra breuissimum spatium exolescent; ne arcus quidem diu perseuerat: si quid esset tale quo medium inter duas stellas spatium confunderetur, aequo cito dilaberetur; utique non in tantum maneret quantum morari cometae solent. Stellis intra signiferum cursus est, hunc premunt gyrum. At cometae ubique cernuntur: non magis certum est illis tempus quo appareant, quam locus ullus ultra quem non exeant.

[13,1] Aduersus haec ab Artemidoro illa dicuntur: non has tantum stellas quinque discurrere, sed has solas obseruatas esse; ceterum innumerabiles ferri per occultum aut propter obscuritatem luminis nobis ignotas aut propter circulorum positionem talem ut tunc demum, cum ad extrema eorum uenere, uisuntur. Ergo intercurrent quaedam stellae, ut ait, nobis nouae, quae lumen suum constantibus misceant et maiorem quam stellis mos est porrigant ignem.

[13,2] Hoc ex his quae mentitur leuissimum est: tota eius enarratio mundi mendacium impudens est. Nam si illi credimus, summa caeli ora solidissima est, in modum tecti durata et alti crassique corporis, quod atomi congestae coaceruataeque fecerunt.

[14,1] Soluere ista quid aliud est quam manum exercere et in uentum iactare brachia? Velim tamen mihi dicat iste, qui mundo tam ferma lacunaria imposuit, quid sit quare credamus illi tantam esse crassitudinem caeli. Quid fuit quod illo tam solida corpora adduceret et ibi detineret?

[14,2] Deinde quod tantae crassitudinis est, necesse est et magni ponderis sit: quomodo ergo in summo manent grauia? Quomodo illa moles non descendit et se onere suo frangit? Fieri enim non potest ut tanta uis ponderis, quantam ille sustinuit, pendeat et leuibz innixa sit.

[14,3] Ne illud quidem potest dici: extrinsecus esse aliqua retinacula quibus cadere prohibeatur, nec rursus de medio aliquid esse oppositi quod imminens corpus excipiat ac fulciat. Illud etiamnunc nemo dicere audebit, mundum ferri per immensum et cadere quidem, sed non apparere an cadat, quia praecipitatio eius aeterna est, nihil habens nouissimum in quod incurrat.

[14,4] Hoc quidam de terra dixerunt, cum rationem nullam inuenirent propter quam pondus in aere staret: Fertur, inquiunt, semper, sed non apparet an cadat, quia infinitum est in quod cadit. Quid est deinde quo probes non quinque tantum stellas moueri sed multas esse et in multis mundi regionibus? Aut si hoc sine ullo probabili argumento licet, respondere: quid est quare non aliquis aut omnes stellas moueri aut nullam dicat? Praeterea nihil te adiuuat ista stellarum passim euntium turba: nam quo plures fuerint, saepius in aliquas incident; rari autem cometae et ob hoc mirabiles sunt.

[15,1] Quid, quod testimonium dicet contra te omnis aetas, quae talium stellarum exortus et adnotauit et posteris tradidit? Post mortem Demetrii Syriae regis, cuius Demetrius et Antiochus liberi fuere, paulo ante Achaicum bellum cometes effulsit non minor sole: primo igneus ac rubicundus orbis fuit clarumque lumen emittens, quanto uinceret noctem; deinde paulatim magnitudo eius districta est et euanuit claritas; nouissime totus intercidit. Quoi ergo coire stellas oportet, ut tantum corpus efficiant? Mille in unum licet congreges, numquam hunc habitum solis aequabunt.

[15,2] Attalo regnante initio cometes modicus apparuit, deinde sustulit se diffuditque et usque in aequinoctialem circulum uenit, ita ut illam plagam caeli, cui lactea nomen est, in immensum extentus aequaret. Quid ergo? <Quot>> conuenisse debent erralicae, ut tam longum caeli tractum occuparent igne continuo?

[16,1] Contra argumenta dictum est, contra testes dicendum est. Nec magna molitione detrahenda est auctoritas Ephoro: historicus est. Quidam incredibilium relatu commendationem parant et lectorem, aliud acturum, si per cotidiana duceretur, miraculo excitant; quidam creduli, quidam negligentes sunt; quibusdam mendacium obrepit, quibusdam placet; illi non euitant, hi appetunt.

[16,2] Haec in commune de tota natione, quae approbari opus suum et fieri populare non putat posse, nisi illud mendacio aspersit. Ephorus uero non est religiosissimae fidei: saepe decipitur, saepius decipit, sicut hunc cometen, qui omnium mortalium oculis custoditus est, quia ingentis rei traxit euentum, cum Helicen et Burin ortu suo merserit, ait illum discessisse in duas stellas, quod praeter illum nemo tradidit.

[16,3] Quis enim posset obseruare illud momentum quo cometes solutus et in duas partes redactus est? Quomodo autem, si est qui uiderit cometen in duas dirimi, nemo uidit fieri ex duabus? Quare autem non adiecit in quas stellas diuisus sit, cum aliqua ex quinque stellis esse debuerit?

[17,1] Apollonius Myndius in diuersa opinione est: ait enim cometen non unum ex multis erraticis effici sed multos cometas erraticos esse. Non est, inquit, species falsa nec duarum stellarum confinio ignis extentus, sed proprium sidus cometae est, sicut solis ac lunae. Talis illi forma est, non in rotundum restricta sed procerior et in longum producta.

[17,2] Ceterum non est illi palam cursus: altiora mundi secatur et tunc demum apparet cum in imum cursus sui uenit. Nec est quod putemus eundem uisum esse sub Claudio quem sub Augusto uidimus, nec hunc qui sub Nerone Caesare apparuit et cometis detraxit infamiam illi similem fuisse qui post excessum diui Iulii ludis Ueneris Genetricis circa undecimam horam diei emersit.

[17,3] Multi uariique sunt, dispares magnitudine, dissimiles colore: aliis rubor est sine ulla luce, aliis candor et purum liquidumque lumen, aliis flamma et haec non sincera nec tenuis sed multum circa se uoluens fumidi ardoris; cruenti quidam minaces<que>, qui omen post se futuri sanguinis ferunt. Hi minuunt augentque lumen suum quemadmodum alia sidera, quae clariora cum descendere sunt maioraque, quia ex loco propiore uisuntur, minora cum redeunt et obscuriora, quia abducunt se longius.

[18,1] Aduersus haec protinus respondetur non idem accidere in cometis quod in ceteris. Cometae enim quo primum die apparuerunt, maximi sunt; atqui deberent crescere, quo propius accederent: nunc autem manet illis prima facies, donec incipiant extinguere. Deinde quod aduersus priores, etiam aduersus hunc dicitur: si erraret cometes essetque sidus, intra signiferi terminos moueretur, intra quos omne sidus cursus suos colligit.

[18,2] Numquam apparet stella per stellam; acies nostra non potest per medium sidus exire, ut per illud superiora perspiciat; per cometen autem non aliter quam per nubem ulteriora cernuntur: ex quo apparet illum non esse sidus sed leuem ignem ac tumultuarium.

[19,1] Zenon noster in illa sententia est: congruere iudicat stellas et radios inter se committere; hac societate luminis existere imaginem stellae longioris. Ergo quidam nullos esse cometas existimant sed speciem illorum per repercussionem uicinarum siderum aut per coniunctionem cohaerentium reddi;

[19,2] quidam aiunt esse quidem sed habere cursus suos et post certa lustra in conspectum mortalium exire; quidam esse quidem sed non quibus siderum nomen imponas, quia dilabuntur nec diu durant et exigui temporis mora dissipantur.

[20,1] In hac sententia sunt plerique nostrorum nec id putant ueritati repugnare. Videmus enim in sublimi uaria ignium concipi genera et modo caelum ardere, modo “longos a tergo flammarm albescere tractus,” modo faces cum igne uasto rapi. Iam ipsa fulmina, etiamsi uelocitate mira simul et praestringunt aciem et relinquunt, ignes sunt aeris triti et impetu inter se maiore collisi: ideo ne resistunt quidem sed expressi fluunt et protinus pereunt.

[20,2] Alii uero ignes diu manent nec ante discedunt quam consumptum est omne quo pascebantur alimentum. Hoc loco sunt illa a Posidonio scripta miracula, columnae clipeique flagrant aliaeque insigni nouitate flammae, quae non aduerterent animos, si ex consuetudine et lege decurrerent: ad haec stupent omnes, quae repentinum ex alto ignem efferunt, siue emicuit aliquid et fugit siue compresso aere et in ardorem coacto loco miraculi stetit.

[20,3] Quid ergo? Non aliquando lacuna secedentis retro aeris patuit et uastum in concauo lumen? Exclamare posses: “quid hoc est? Medium uideo discedere caelum palantesque polo stellas”, quae aliquando non expectata nocte fulserunt et per medium eruperunt diem. Sed alia huius rei ratio est, quare alieno tempore appareant in aere, quas esse, etiam cum latent, constat.

[21,2] Quare ergo non stat cometes sed procedit? Dicam: ignium modo alimentum suum sequitur; quamuis enim illi ad superiora nisus sit, tamen deficiente materia retro iens ipse descendit. In aere quoque non dextram laeuamque premit partem (nulla est enim illi uia), sed, qua illum uena pabuli sui duxit, illa repit nec ut stella procedit sed ut ignis pascitur.

[21,3] Quare ergo per longum tempus apparet et non cito extinguitur? Sex enim mensibus hic quem nos Neronis principatu laetissimo uidimus spectandum se praebuit, in diuersum illi Claudiano circumactus: ille enim a septentrione in uerticem surgens orientem petiit semper obscurior, hic ab eadem parte coepit sed in occidentem tendens ad meridiem flexit et ibi se subduxit oculis.

[21,4] Videlicet ille fumidiora habuit et aptiora ignibus, quae persecutus est; huic rursus uberius fuit et plenior regio, huc itaque descendit inuitante materia, non itinere. Quod apparet duobus quos spectauimus fuisse diuersum, cum hic in dextrum motus sit, ille in sinistrum; omnibus autem stellis in eandem partem cursus est, id est contrarius mundo (hic enim ab ortu uoluitur in occasum, illae ab occasu in ortum eunt), et ob hoc duplex his motus est: ille quo eunt, et hic quo auferuntur.

[22,1] Ego nostris non assentior: non enim existimo cometen subitaneum ignem sed inter aeterna opera naturae. Primum, quaecumque aer creat, breuia sunt: nascuntur enim in re fugaci et mutabili. Quomodo potest aliquid in aere idem diu permanere, cum ipse aer numquam idem diu maneat? Fluit semper, et breuis illi quies est; intra exiguum momentum in alium quam in quo fuerat statum uertitur, nunc pluuius, nunc serenus, nunc inter utrumque uarius. Nubes, quae illi familiarissimae sunt, in quas coit et ex quibus soluitur, modo congregantur, modo digeruntur, numquam immotae iacent. Fieri non potest ut ignis certus in corpore uago sedeat et tam pertinaciter haereat quam quem natura, ne umquam excuteretur, aptauit.

[22,2] Deinde, si alimento suc, haereret, semper descenderet (eo enim crassior est aer quo terris propior): numquam cometes in inum usque demittitur neque appropinquat solo.

[23,1] Etiamnunc ignis aut it quo illum natura sua ducit, id est sursum, aut eo quo trahit materia cui adhaesit et quam depascitur: nullis ignibus ordinariis et caelestibus iter flexum est; sideris proprium est ducere orbem: atqui hoc an cometae alii fecerint nescio, duo nostra aetate fecerunt.

[23,2] Deinde omne quod causa temporalis accendit cito intercidit: sic faces ardent, dum transeunt, sic fulmina in unum ualent ictum, sic quae transuersae dicuntur stellae et cadentes praeteruolant et secant aera: nullis ignibus nisi in suo mora est, illis dico diuinis quos habet mundus aeternos, quia partes eius sunt et opera. Hi autem agunt aliquid et uadunt et tenorem suum seruant paresque sunt. Non alternis diebus maiores minoresue fierent, si ignis esset collecticius et ex aliqua causa repentinus? Minor enim esset ac maior, prout plenius aleretur aut malignius.

[23,3] Dicebam modo nihil diuturnum esse quod exarsit aeris uitio; nunc amplius adicio: morari ac stare nullo modo potest; nam et fax et fulmen et stella transcurrentes et quisquis alius est ignis aere expressus in fuga est nec apparet, nisi dum cadit: cometes habet suam sedem et ideo non cito expellitur sed emetitur spatium suum, nec extinguitur sed excedit.

[24,1] Si erratica, inquit, stella esset, in signifero esset. Quis unum stellis limitem ponit? Quis in angustum diuina compellit? Nempe haec ipsa sidera quae sola moueri creditis, alios et alios circulos habent; quare ergo non aliqua sint quae in proprium iter et ab istis remotum secesserint? Quid est quare in aliqua parte caeli peruium non sit?

[24,2] Quod si iudicas non posse ullam stellam, nisi signiferum attingit, uadere, cometes potest sic alium habere circulum ut in hunc tamen parte aliqua sui incidat, quod fieri non est necessarium sed potest. Vide ne hoc magis deceat magnitudinem mundi, ut in multa itinera diuisus circumeat nec unam deterat semitam, ceteris partibus torpeat.

[24,3] Credis autem in hoc maximo et pulcherrimo corpore, inter innumerabiles stellas quae noctem decore uario distinguunt, quae minime uacuam et inertem esse patiuntur, quinque solas esse quibus exercere se liceat, ceteras stare fixum et immobilem populum?

[25,1] Si quis hoc loco me interrogauerit: Quare ergo non, quemadmodum quinque stellarum, ita harum obseruatus est cursus?, huic ego respondebo: multa sunt quae esse concedimus, qualia sint ignoramus.

[25,2] Habere nos animum, cuius imperio et impellimur et reuocamur, omnes fatebuntur; quid tamen sit animus ille rector dominusque nostri, non magis tibi quisquam expediet quam ubi sit: alius illum dicet spiritum esse, alius concentum quendam, alius uim diuinam et dei partem, alius tenuissimum animae, alius incorporalem potentiam; non deerit qui sanguinem dicat, qui calorem: adeo anime, non potest liquere de ceteris rebus ut adhuc ipse se quaerat.

[25,3] Quid ergo miramur cometas, tam rarum mundi spectaculum, nondum teneri legibus certis nec initia illorum finesque notescere, quorum ex ingentibus interuallis recursus est? Nondum sunt anni mille quingenti, ex quo Graecia “stellis numeros et nomina fecit”, multaeque hodie sunt gentes quae facie tantum nouerunt caelum, quae nondum sciunt cur luna deficiat, quare obumbretur: haec apud nos quoque nuper ratio ad certum perduxit.

[25,4] Veniet tempus quo ista quae nunc latent in lucem dies extrahat et longioris aevi diligentia; ad inquisitionem tantorum aetas una non sufficit, ut tota caelo uacet: quid, quod tam paucos annos inter studia ac uitia non aequa portione diuidimus? Itaque per successiones ista longas explicabuntur.

[25,5] Veniet tempus quo posterī nostri tam aperta nos nescisse mirentur. Harum quinque stellarum, quae se ingerunt nobis, quae alio atque alio occurrentes loco curiosos nos esse cogunt, qui matutini uespertinique ortus sint, quae stationes, quando in rectum ferantur, quare agantur retro, modo coepimus scire; utrum mergeretur Iupiter an occideret an retrogradus esset (nam hoc illi nomen imposuere cedenti), ante paucos annos didicimus.

[25,6] Inuenti sunt qui nobis dicerent: “Erratis, quod ullam stellam aut suppressere cursum iudicatis aut uertere. Non licet stare caelestibus nec auerti; prodeunt omnia: ut semel missa sunt, uadunt; idem erit illis cursus qui sui finis. Opus hoc aeternum irreuocabiles habet motus: qui si quando constiterint, alia aliis incident, quae nunc tenor et aequalitas seruat”.

[25,7] Quid est ergo cur aliqua redire uideantur? Solis occursus speciem illis tarditatis imponit et natura uiarum circulatorumque sic positorum ut certo tempore intuentes fallant: sic naues, quamuis plenis uelis eant, uidentur tamen stare. Erit qui demonstret aliquando in quibus cometae partibus currant, cur tam seducti a ceteris errent, quanti qualesque sint. Contenti simus inuentis: aliquid ueritati et posterī conferant.

[26,1] Per stellas, inquit, ulteriora non cernimus, per cometas aciem transmittimus. Primum si fit istud, non in ea parte fit qua sidus ipsum est spissi ignis ac solidi, sed qua rarus splendor excurrit et in crimes dispergitur: per interualla ignium, non per ipsos uides.

[26,2] Stellae, inquit, omnes rotundae sunt, cometae porrecti, ex quo apparet stellas non esse. Quis enim tibi concedit cometas longos esse? Quorum natura quidem, ut ceterorum siderum, globus est, ceterum fulgor extenditur. Quemadmodum sol radios suos longe lateque dimittit, ceterum ipsi alia est forma, alia ei quod ex ipso fluit lumini, sic cometarum corpus ipsum corrotundatur, splendor autem longior quam ceterorum siderum apparet.

[27,1] Quare? inquis. Dic tu mihi prius quare luna dissimillimum soli lumen accipiat, cum accipiat a sole; quare modo rubeat, modo palleat; quare liuidus illi et ater color sit, cum conspectu solis excluditur.

[27,2] Dic mihi quare omnes stellae inter se dissimilem habeant aliquatenus faciem, diuersissimam soli. Quomodo nihil prohibet ista sidera esse, quamuis similia non sint, sic nihil prohibet cometas aeternos esse et sortis eiusdem cuius cetera, etiamsi faciem illis non habent similem.

[27,3] Quid porro? Mundus ipse, si consideres illum, nonne ex diuersis compositus est? Quid est quare in Leone sol semper ardeat et terras aestibus torreat, in Aquario astringat hiemem, flumina gelu claudat? Et hoc tamen et illud sidus eiusdem condicionis est, cum effectum et natura dissimile sit. Intra breuissimum tempus Aries extollitur, Libra tardissime emergit: et hoc tamen sidus et illud eiusdem naturae est, cum illud exiguo tempore ascendat, illud diu proferatur.

[27,4] Non uides quam contraria inter se elementa sint? Grauius et leuia sunt, frigida et calida, umida et sicca; tota haec mundi concordia ex discordiis constat: negas cometen stellam esse, quia forma eius non respondeat ad exemplar nec sit ceteris similis? Vides enim: simillima est illa quae tricesimo anno reuertitur ad locum suum huic quae intra annum reuolit sedem suam.

[27,5] Non ad unam naturam formam opus suum praestat sed ipsa uarietate se iactat: alia maiora, alia uelociora aliis fecit, alia ualidiora, alia temperatiora, quaedam eduxit a turba, ut singula et conspicua procederent, quaedam in gregem misit. Ignorat naturae potentiam qui illi non putat aliquando licere, nisi quod saepius fecit:

[27,6] cometas non frequenter ostendit, attribuit illis alium locum, alia tempora, dissimiles ceteris motus; uoluit et his magnitudinem operis sui colere. Quorum formosior facies est quam ut fortuitam putes, siue amplitudinem eorum consideres siue fulgorem, qui maior est ardentiorque quam ceteris; facies uero habet insigne quiddam et singulare, non in angustum coniecta et artata sed dimissa liberius et multarum stellarum amplexa regionem.

[28,1] Aristoteles ait cometas significare tempestatem et uentorum intemperantiam atque imbrum. Quid ergo? Non iudicas sidus esse quod futura denuntiat? Non enim sic hoc tempestatis signum est quomodo futurae pluuiæ “scintillare oleum et putres concreescere fungos,” aut quomodo indicium est saeuiri maris, si “marinae in sicco ludunt fulicae notasque paludes deserit atque altam supra uolat ardea nubem,” sed sic quomodo aequinoctium in calorem frigusque flectentis anni, quomodo illa quæ Chaldaei a canunt, quid stella nascentibus triste laetumue constituat.

[28,2] Hoc ut scias ita esse, non statim cometas ortus uentos et pluuias minatur, ut Aristoteles ait, sed annum totum suspectum facit; ex quo apparet illum non ex proximo quæ in proximum daret signa traxisse, sed habere reposita et comprehensa legibus mundi.

[28,3] Fecit hic cometes, qui Paterculo et Vopisco consulibus apparuit, quæ ab Aristotele Theophrastoque sunt prædicta; fuerunt enim maximæ et continuæ tempestates ubique, at in Achaia Macedoniaque urbes terrarum motibus prorutæ sunt.

[29,1] Tarditas, inquit, illorum argumentum est grauioribus esse multumque in se habere terreni. Ipse præterea cursus: fere enim compelluntur in cardines. Utrumque falsum est. De priore dicam prius: Omnia quæ tardius feruntur grauiora sunt. Quid ergo? Stella Saturni, quæ ex omnibus iter suum lentissime efficit, grauis est? Atqui leuitatis argumentum habet quod supra ceteras est.

[29,2] Sed maiore, inquis, ambitu circuit nec tardius it quam ceteræ sed longius. Succurrat tibi idem me de cometis posse dicere, etiamsi segnior illis cursus sit. Sed mendacium est ire eos tardius: nam intra sextum mensem dimidiam partem caeli transcurrit hic proximus, prior intra pauciores menses recepit se.

[29,3] Sed quia graues sunt, inferius deferuntur. Primum non deferitur quod circumfertur. Deinde hic proximus a septentrione motus sui initium facit et per occidentem in meridiana peruertit erigensque cursum suum obliuit, alter ille Claudianus, a septentrione primum uisus, non desiit in rectum assidue celsior ferri, donec excessit. Haec sunt quæ aut alios mouere ad cometas pertinentia aut me: quae an uera sint, dii sciunt, quibus est scientia ueri; nobis rimari illa et coniectura ire in occulta tantum licet, nec cum fiducia inueniendi nec sine spe.

[30,1] Egregie Aristoteles ait numquam nos uerecundiores esse debere quam cum de diis agitur. Si intramus templa compositi, si ad sacrificium accessuri uultum submittimus, togam adducimus, si in omne argumentum modestiae fingimur, quanto hoc magis facere debemus, cum de sideribus de stellis de deorum natura disputamus, ne quid temere, ne quid impudenter aut ignorantes afirmemus aut scientes mentiamur!

[30,2] Nec miremur tam tarde erui quae tam alte iacent. Panaetio et his qui uideri uolunt cometen non esse ordinarium sidus sed falsam sideris faciem, diligenter tractandum est an aequae omnis pars anni edendis cometis satis apta sit, an omnis caeli regio idonea in qua creentur, an quacumque ire ibi etiam concipi possint, et cetera: quae uniuersa tolluntur, cum dico illos non fortuitos esse ignes, sed intextos mundo, quos non frequenter educit sed in occulto mouet.

[30,3] Quam multa praeter hos per secretum eunt numquam humanis oculis orientia! Neque enim omnia deus homini fecit. Quota pars operis tanti nobis committitur? Ipse, qui ista tractat, qui condidit, qui totum hoc fundauit deditque circa se, maiorque est pars sui operis ac melior, effugit oculos:

[30,4] cogitatione uisendus est. Multa praeterea cognata numini summo et uicinam sortita potentiam obscura sunt aut fortasse, quod magis mireris, oculos nostros et implent et effugiunt, siue illis tanta subtilitas est quantam consequi acies humana non possit, siue in sanctiore secessu maiestas tanta delituit et regnum suum, id est se, regit nec ulli dat aditum nisi animo. Quid sit hoc sine quo nihil est, scire non possumus: et miramur si quos igniculos parum nouimus, cum maxima pars mundi, deus, lateat!

[30,5] Quam multa animalia hoc primum cognouimus saeculo, quam multa negotia ne hoc quidem! Multa uenientis aevi populus ignota nobis sciet; multa saeculis tunc futuris, cum memoria nostri exoleuerit, reseruantur: pusilla res mundus est, nisi in illo quod quaerat omnis mundus habeat.

[30,6] Non semel quaedam sacra traduntur: Eleusin seruat quod ostendat reuisentibus. Rerum natura sacra sua non semel tradit; initiatos nos credimus: in uestibulo eius haeremus; illa arcana non promiscue nec omnibus patent: reducta et interiore sacrario clausa sunt, ex quibus aliud haec aetas, aliud quae post nos subibit aspiciet.

[31,1] Quando ergo ista in notitiam nostram perducentur? Tarde magna proueniunt, utique si labor cessat. Id quod unum toto agimus animo, nondum perfecimus, ut pessimi essemus: adhuc in processu uitia sunt; inuenit luxuria aliquid noui, in quod insaniat, inuertit impudicitia nouam contumeliam sibi, inuertit deliciarum dissolutio et tabes aliquid adhuc tenerius molliusque, quo pereat.

[31,2] Nondum satis robur omne proiecimus: adhuc quicquid est boni moris extinguiamus. Leuitate et politura corporum muliebres munditias antecessimus, colores meretricios matronis quidem non induendos uiri sumimus, tenero et molli ingressu suspendimus gradum (non ambulamus sed incedimus, exornamus anulis digitos, in omni articulo gemma disponitur;

[31,3] cotidie comminiscimur per quae uiriliter fiat iniuria, ut traducatur, quia non potest exui: alius genitalia excidit, alius in obscenam ludi partem fugit et locatus ad mortem infame armaturae genus, in quo morbum suum exerceat, legit.

[32,1] Miraris si nondum sapientia omne opus suum impleuit? Nondum tota se nequitia protulit: adhuc nascitur, et huic omnes operam damus, huic oculi nostri, huic manus seruiunt. Ad sapientiam quis accedit? Quis dignam iudicat nisi quam in transitu nouerit? Quis philosophum aut ullum liberale respicit studium, nisi cum ludi intercalantur, cum aliquis pluuius interuenit dies quem perdere libet?

[32,2] Itaque tot familiae philosophorum sine successore deficiunt: Academici et ueteres et minores nullum antistitem reliquerunt; quis est qui tradat praecepta Pyrrhonis? Pythagorica illa inuidiosa turbae schola praeceptorem non inuenit; Sextiorum noua et Romani roboris secta inter initia sua, cum magno impetu coepisset, extincta est.

[32,3] At quanta cura laboratur, ne cuius pantomimi nomen interdicat! Stat per successores Pyladis et Bathylli domus, harum artium multi discipuli sunt multique doctores; priuatum urbe tota sonat pulpitum; in hoc mares, in hoc feminae tripudiant: mares inter se uxoresque contendunt uter det latus mollius. Deinde sub persona cum diu trita frons est, transitur ad galeam.

[32,4] Philosophiae nulla cura est. Itaque adeo nihil inuenitur ex his que parum inuestigata antiqui reliquerunt, ut multa quae inuenta erant oblitterentur. At mehercule, si hoc totis membris premeremus, si in hoc iuuentus sobria incumberet, hoc maiores docerent, hoc minores addiscerent, uix ad fundum ueniretur, in quo ueritas posita est, quam nunc in summa terra et leui manu quaerimus.

LIBER I

[1] Inter multos ac uarios errores temere inconsulteque uiuentium nihil propemodum, uir optime Liberalis, dixerim, [quam] quod beneficia nec dare scimus nec accipere. Sequitur enim, ut male conlocata male debeantur; de quibus non redditis sero querimur; ista enim perierunt, cum darentur. Nec mirum est inter plurima maximaque uitia nullum esse frequentius quam ingrati animi. Id euenire ex causis pluribus uideo. Prima illa est, quod non eligimus dignos, quibus tribuamus. Sed nomina facturi diligenter in patrimonium et uitam debitoris inquirimus, semina in solum effetum et sterile non spargimus: beneficia sine ullo dilectu magis proicimus quam damus. Nec facile dixerim, utrum turpius sit infitiari an repetere beneficium; id enim genus huius crediti est, ex quo tantum recipiendum sit, quantum ultro refertur; decoquere uero foedissimum ob hoc ipsum, quia non opus est ad liberandam fidem facultatibus sed animo; reddit enim beneficium, qui debet. Sed cum sit in ipsis crimen, qui ne confessione quidem grati sunt, in nobis quoque est. Multos experimur ingratos, plures facimus, quia alias graues exprobratores exactoresque sumus, alias leues et quos paulo post muneris sui paeniteat, alias queruli et minima momenta calumniantes; gratiam omnem corrumpimus non tantum postquam dedimus beneficia, sed dum damus. Quis nostrum contentus fuit aut leuiter rogari aut semel? quis non, cum aliquid a se peti suspicatus est, frontem adduxit, uultum auertit, occupationes simulauit, longis sermonibus et de industria non inuenientibus exitum occasionem petendi abstulit et uariis artibus necessitates properantes elusit, in angusto uero conpressus aut distulit, id est timide negauit, aut promisit, sed difficulter, sed subductis superciliis, sed malignis et uix exeuntibus uerbis? Nemo autem libenter debet, quod non accepit, sed expressit. Gratus aduersus eum esse quisquam potest, qui beneficium aut superbe abiecit aut iratus inpegit aut fatigatus, ut molestia careret, dedit? Errat, si quis sperat responsurum sibi, quem dilatione lassauit, expectatione torsit. Eodem animo beneficium debetur, quo datur, et ideo non est negligenter dandum — sibi enim quisque debet, quod a nesciente accepit — ; ne tarde quidem, quia, cum omni in officio magni aestimetur dantis uoluntas, qui tarde fecit, diu noluit; utique non contumeliose: nam cum ita natura comparatum sit, ut altius iniuriae quam merita descendant et illa cito defluant, has tenax memoria custodiat, quid expectat, qui offendit, dum obligat? Satis aduersus illum gratus est, si quis beneficio eius ignoscit. Non est autem, quod tardiores faciat ad bene merendum turba ingratorum. Nam primum, ut dixi, nos illam augemus; deinde ne deos quidem immortales ab hac tam effusa nec cess<ante benign>itate sacrilegi neclegentesque eorum deterrent: utuntur natura sua et cuncta interque illa ipsos munerum suorum malos interpretes iuuant. Hos sequamur duces, quantum humana inbecillitas patitur; demus beneficia, non feneremus. Dignus est decipi, qui de recipiendo cogitauit, cum daret. ‘At male cessit.’ Et liberi et coniuges spem fefellerunt, tamen et educamus et ducimus, adeoque aduersus experimenta pertinaces sumus, ut bella uicti et naufragi maria repetamus. Quanto magis permanere in dandis beneficiis decet! quae si quis non dat, quia non recepit, dedit, ut reciperet, bonamque ingratorum facit causam, quibus turpe est non reddere, si licet. Quam multi indigni luce sunt! tamen dies oritur. Quam multi, quod nati sunt, queruntur! tamen natura subolem nouam gignit ipsosque, qui non fuisse mallent, esse patitur. Hoc et magni animi et boni proprium est, non fructum beneficiorum sequi, sed ipsa et post malos quoque bonum quaerere. Quid magnifici erat multis prodesse, si nemo deciperet? nunc est uirtus dare beneficia non utique reditura, quorum a uiro egregio statim fructus perceptus est. Adeo quidem ista res fugare nos et pigriores ad rem pulcherrimam facere non debet, ut, si spes mihi praecidatur gratum hominem reperiendi, malim non recipere beneficia quam non dare, quia, qui non dat, uitium ingrati antecedit. Dicam, quod sentio: qui beneficium non reddit, magis peccat; qui non dat, citius.

- [2] Beneficia in uolgu cum largiri institueris, Perdenda sunt multa, ut semel ponas bene.

In priore uersu utrumque reprehendas; nam nec in uolgum effundenda sunt, et nullius rei, minime beneficiorum, honesta largitio est; quibus si detraxeris iudicium, desinunt esse beneficia, in aliud quodlibet incident nomen. Sequens sensus mirificus est, qui uno bene posito beneficio multorum amissorum damna solatur. Vide, oro te, ne hoc et uerius sit et magnitudini bene facientis aptius, ut illum hortemur ad danda, etiam si nullum bene positurus est. Illud enim falsum est 'perdenda sunt multa'; nullum perit, quia, qui perdit, computauerat. Beneficiorum simplex ratio est: tantum erogatur; si redit aliquid, lucrum est, si non redit, damnum non est. Ego illud dedi, ut darem. Nemo beneficia in calendario scribit nec auarus exactor ad horam et diem appellat. Numquam illa uir bonus cogitat nisi admonitus a reddente; alioqui in formam crediti transeunt. Turpis feneratio est beneficium expensum ferre. Qualiscumque priorum euentus est, perseuera in alios conferre; melius apud ingratos iacebunt, quos aut pudor aut occasio aut imitatio aliquando gratos poterit efficere. Ne cessaueris, opus tuum perage et partes boni uiri exequere. Alium re, alium fide, alium gratia, alium consilio, alium praeceptis salubribus adiuua. Officia etiam ferae sentiunt, nec ullum tam inmansuetum animal est, quod non cura mitiget et in amorem sui uertat. Leonum ora a magistris inpune tractantur, elephantorum feritatem usque in seruile obsequium demeretur cibus; adeo etiam, quae extra intellectum atque aestimationem beneficii posita sunt, adsiduitas tamen meriti pertinacis euincit. Ingratus est aduersus unum beneficium? aduersus alterum non erit; duorum oblitus est? tertium etiam in eorum, quae exciderunt, memoriam reducet.

[3] Is perdet beneficia, qui cito se perdidisse credit; at qui instat et onerat priora sequentibus, etiam ex duro et inmemori pectore gratiam extundit. Non audebit aduersus multa oculos adtollere; quocumque se conuertit memoriam suam fugiens, ibi te uideat: beneficiis illum tuis cinge. Quorum quae uis quaeue proprietas sit, dicam, si prius illa, quae ad rem non pertinent, transilire mihi permiseris, quare tres Gratiae et quare sorores sint, et quare manibus inplexis, et quare ridentes <et iuuenes> et uirgines solutaeque ac perlucida ueste. Alii quidem uideri uolunt unam esse, quae det beneficium, alteram, quae accipiat, tertiam, quae reddat; alii tria beneficiorum esse genera, promerentium, reddentium, simul accipientium reddentiumque. Sed utrumlibet ex istis iudica uerum: quid ista nos scientia iuuat? Quid ille consertis manibus in se redeuntium chorus? Ob hoc, quia ordo beneficii per manus transeuntis nihilo minus ad dantem reuertitur et totius speciem perdit, si usquam interruptus est, pulcherrimus, si cohaeret et uices seruat. In eo est aliqua tamen maioris dignatio, sicut promerentium. Voltus hilari sunt, quales solent esse, qui dant uel accipiunt beneficia; iuuenes, quia non debet beneficiorum memoria senescere; uirgines, quia incorrupta sunt et sincera et omnibus sancta; in quibus nihil esse adligati decet nec adstricti: solutis itaque tunicis utuntur; perlucidis autem, quia beneficia conspici uolunt. Sit aliquis usque eo Graecis emancipatus, ut haec dicat necessaria; nemo tamen erit, qui etiam illud ad rem iudicet pertinere, quae nomina illis Hesiodus inposuerit. Aglaien maximam natu adpellauit, mediam Euphrosynen, tertiam Thaliā. Horum nominum interpretationem, prout cuique uisum est, deflectit et ad rationem aliquam conatur perducere, cum Hesiodus puellis suis, quod uoluit, nomen inposuerit. Itaque Homerus uni mutauit, Pasithea adpellauit et in matrimonium promisit, ut scias non esse illas uirgines Vestales. Inueniam alium poetam, apud quem praecingantur et spissis aut Phryxianis prodeant. Ergo et Mercurius una stat, non quia beneficia ratio commendat uel oratio, sed quia pictori ita uisum est. Chrysippus quoque, penes quem subtile illud acumen est et in imam penetrans ueritatem, qui rei agenda causa loquitur et uerbis non ultra, quam ad intellectum satis est, utitur, totum librum suum his ineptiis replet, ita ut de ipso officio dandi, accipiendi, reddendi beneficii pauca admodum dicat; nec his fabulas, sed haec fabulis inserit. Nam praeter ista, quae Hecaton transcribit, tres Chrysippus Gratias ait Iouis et Eurynomes filias esse, aetate autem minores quam Horas, sed meliuscula facie et ideo Veneri datas comites. Matris quoque nomen ad rem iudicat pertinere: Eurynomen enim dictam, quia late patentis patrimonii sit beneficia diuidere; tamquam matri post filias soleat nomen inponi aut poetae uera nomina reddant. Quemadmodum nomenclatori memoriae loco audacia est et, cuicumque nomen non potest reddere, inponit, ita poetae non putant ad rem pertinere uerum dicere, sed aut necessitate coacti aut decore corrupti id quemque uocari iubent, quod belle facit ad uersum. Nec illis fraudi est, si aliud in censum detulerunt; proximus enim poeta suum illas ferre nomen iubet. Hoc ut scias ita esse, ecce Thalia, de qua cum maxime agitur, apud Hesiodum Charis est, apud Homerum Musa.

[4] Sed ne faciam, quod reprehendo, omnia ista, quae ita extra rem sunt, ut ne circa rem quidem sint, relinquam. Tu modo nos tuere, si quis mihi obiciet, quod Chrysippum in ordinem coegerim, magnum mehercules uirum, sed tamen Graecum, cuius acumen nimis tenue retunditur et in se saepe replicatur; etiam cum agere aliquid uidetur, pungit, non perforat. Hic uero quod acumen est? De beneficiis dicendum est et ordinanda res, quae maxime humanam societatem adligat; danda lex uitae, ne sub specie benignitatis inconsulta facilitas placeat, ne liberalitatem, quam nec deesse oportet nec superfluere, haec ipsa obseruatio restringat, dum temperat; docendi sunt <libenter dare>, libenter accipere, libenter reddere et magnum ipsis certamen proponere, eos, quibus obligati sunt, re animoque non tantum aequare sed uincere, quia, qui referre gratiam debet, numquam consequitur, nisi praecessit; hi docendi sunt nihil inputare, illi plus debere. Ad hanc honestissimam contentionem beneficiis beneficia uincendi sic nos adhortatur Chrysippus, ut dicat uerendum esse, ne, quia Charites Iouis filiae sunt, parum se grate gerere sacrilegium sit et tam bellis puellis fiat iniuria. Tu me aliquid eorum doce, per quae beneficentior graviorque aduersus bene merentes fiam, per quae obligantium obligatorumque animi certent, ut, qui praestiterunt, obliuiscantur, pertinax sit memoria debentium. Ista uero ineptiae poetis relinquuntur, quibus aures oblectare propositum est et dulcem fabulam nectere. At qui ingenia sanare et fidem in rebus humanis retinere, memoriam officiorum ingerere animis uolunt, serio loquantur et magnis uiribus agant; nisi forte existimas leui ac fabuloso sermone et anilibus argumentis prohiberi posse rem perniciosissimam, beneficiorum nouas tabulas.

[5] Sed quemadmodum superuacua transcurram, ita exponam necesse est hoc primum nobis esse discendum, quid accepto beneficio debeamus. Debere enim se <ait> alius pecuniam, quam accepit, alius consulatum, alius sacerdotium, alius prouinciam. Ista autem sunt meritorum signa, non merita. Non potest beneficium manu tangi: res animo geritur. Multum interest inter materiam beneficii et beneficium; itaque nec aurum nec argentum nec quicquam eorum, quae pro maximis accipiuntur, beneficium est, sed ipsa tribuentis uoluntas. Inperiti autem id, quod oculis incurrit et quod traditur possideturque, solum notant, cum contra illud, quod in re carum atque pretiosum <est, parui pendunt>. Haec, quae tenemus, quae aspicimus, in quibus cupiditas nostra haeret, caduca sunt, auferre nobis et fortuna et iniuria potest; beneficium etiam amisso eo, per quod datum est, durat; est enim recte factum, quod inritum nulla uis efficit. Amicum a piratis redemi, hunc alius hostis excepit et in carcerem condidit: non beneficium, sed usum beneficii mei sustulit. Ex naufragio alicui raptos uel ex incendio liberos reddidi, hos uel morbus uel aliqua fortuita iniuria eripuit: manet etiam sine illis, quod in illis datum est. Omnia itaque, quae falsum beneficii nomen usurpant, ministeria sunt, per quae se uoluntas amica explicat. Hoc in aliis quoque rebus euenit, ut aliubi sit species rei, aliubi ipsa res. Imperator aliquem torquibus, murali et ciuica donat: quid habet per se corona pretiosum? quid praetexta? quid fasces? quid tribunal et currus? Nihil horum honor est, sed honoris insigne. Sic non est beneficium id, quod sub oculos uenit, sed beneficii uestigium et nota.

[6] Quid est ergo beneficium? Beneuola actio tribuens gaudium capiensque tribuendo in id, quod facit, prona et sponte sua parata. Itaque non, quid fiat aut quid detur, refert, sed qua mente, quia beneficium non in eo, quod fit aut datur, consistit, sed in ipso dantis aut facientis animo. Magnum autem esse inter ista discrimen uel ex hoc intellegas licet, quod beneficium utique bonum est, id autem, quod fit aut datur, nec bonum nec malum est. Animus est, qui parua extollit, sordida inlustrat, magna et in pretio habita dehonestat; ipsa, quae adpetuntur, neutram naturam habent, nec boni nec mali: refert, quo illa rector inpellat, a quo forma rebus datur. Non est beneficium ipsum, quod numeratur aut traditur, sicut ne in uictimis quidem, licet opimae sint auroque praefulgeant, deorum est honor sed <in> recta ac pia uoluntate uenerantium. Itaque boni etiam farre ac fitilla religiosi sunt; mali rursus non effugiunt impietatem, quamuis aras sanguine multo cruentauerint.

[7] Si beneficia in rebus, non in ipsa bene faciendi uoluntate consistenter, eo maiora essent, quo maiora sunt, quae accipimus. Id autem falsum est; non numquam enim magis nos obligat, qui dedit parua magnifice, qui 'regum aequauit opes animo', qui exiguum tribuit sed libenter, qui paupertatis suae oblitus est, dum meam respicit, qui non uoluntatem tantum iuuandi habuit sed cupiditatem, qui accipere se putauit beneficium, cum daret, qui dedit tamquam

<non> recepturus, recepit, tamquam non dedisset, qui occasionem, qua prodesset, et occupauit et quaesiit. Contra ingrata sunt, ut dixi, licet re ac specie magna uideantur, quae danti aut extorquentur aut excidunt, multoque gratius uenit, quod facili quam quod plena manu datur. Exiguum est, quod in me contulit, sed amplius non potuit; at hic quod dedit, magnum est, sed dubitauit, sed distulit, sed, cum daret, gemuit, sed superbe dedit, sed circumtulit et placere non ei, cui praestabat, uoluit; ambitioni dedit, non mihi.

[8] Socrati cum multa pro suis quisque facultatibus offerrent, Aeschines, pauper auditor: 'Nihil' inquit 'dignum te, quod dare tibi possim, inuenio et hoc uno modo pauperem esse me sentio. Itaque dono tibi, quod unum habeo, me ipsum. Hoc munus rogo, qualecumque est, boni consulas cogitesque alios, cum multum tibi darent, plus sibi reliquisse.' Cui Socrates: 'Quidni tu' inquit 'magnum munus mihi dederis, nisi forte te paruo aestimas? Habebo itaque curae, ut te meliorem tibi reddam, quam accepi.' Vicit Aeschines hoc munere Alcibiadis parem diuitiis animum et omnem iuuenum opulentorum munificentiam.

[9] Vides, quomodo animus inueniat liberalitatis materiam etiam inter angustias? Videtur mihi dixisse: 'Nihil egisti, fortuna, quod me pauperem esse uoluisti; expediam dignum nihilo minus huic uiro munus, et quia de tuo non possum, de meo dabo.' Neque est, quod existimes illum uilem sibi fuisse: pretium se sui fecit. Ingeniosus adulescens inuenit, quemadmodum Socraten sibi daret. Non quanta quaeque sint, sed a quali profecta, prospiciendum. Callidus non difficilem aditum praebuit inmodica cupientibus spesque inprobas nihil re adiuturus uerbis fouit; at peior opinio, si lingua asper, uultu grauis cum inuidia fortunam suam explicuit. Colunt enim detestanturque felicem et, si potuerint, eadem facturi odere facientem. Coniugibus alienis ne clam quidem sed aperte ludibrio habitis suas aliis permisere. Rusticus, inhumanus ac mali moris et inter matronas abominandus conuicio est, si quis coniugem suam in sella prostare uetuit et uulgo admissis inspectoribus uehi perspicuam undique. Si quis nulla se amica fecit insignem nec alienae uxori annum praestat, hunc matronae humilem et sordidae libidinis et ancillariolum uocant. Inde decentissimum sponsaliorum genus est adulterium et in consensu uiduitas caelibatusque: nemo uxorem duxit, nisi qui abduxit. Iam rapta spargere, sparsa fera et acri auaritia recolligere certant, nihil pensi habere, paupertatem alienam contemnere, suam <magis> quam ullum aliud uereri malum, pacem iniuriis perturbare, inbecilliores ui ac metu premere. Nam prouincias spoliari et nummarium tribunal audita utrimque licitatione alteri addici non mirum, quoniam, quae emeris, uendere gentium ius est.

[10] Sed longius nos inpetus euehit prouocante materia; itaque sic finiamus, ne in nostro saeculo culpa subsidat. Hoc maiores nostri questi sunt, hoc nos querimur, hoc posterius nostri querentur, euersos mores, regnare nequitiam, in deterius res humanas et omne nefas labi; at ista eodem stant loco stabuntque, paulum dumtaxat ultro aut citro mota, ut fluctus, quos aestus accedens longius extulit, recedens interiore litorum uestigio tenuit. Nunc in adulteria magis quam in alia peccabitur, abrumpetque frenos pudicitia; nunc conuiuiorum uigebit furor et foedissimum patrimoniorum exitium, culina; nunc cultus corporum nimius et formae cura prae se ferens animi deformitatem; nunc in petulantiam et audaciam erumpet male dispensata libertas; nunc in crudelitatem priuatam ac publicam ibitur bellorumque ciuiliū insaniam, qua omne sanctum ac sacrum profanetur; habebitur aliquando ebrietati honor, et plurimum meri cepisse uirtus erit. Non expectant uno loco uitia, sed mobilia et inter se dissidentia tumultuantur, pellunt in uicem fuganturque; ceterum idem semper de nobis pronuntiare debemus, malos esse nos, malos fuisse, - inuitus adiciam, et futuros esse. Erunt homicidae, tyranni, fures, adulteri, raptores, sacrilegi, proditores; infra omnia ista ingratus est, nisi quod omnia ista ab ingrato sunt, sine quo uix ullum magnum facinus adcreuit. Hoc tu caue tamquam maximum crimen ne admittas, ignosce tamquam leuissimo, si admissum est. Haec est enim iniuriae summa: beneficium perdidisti. Saluum est enim tibi ex illo, quod est optimum: dedisti. Quemadmodum autem curandum est, ut in eos potissimum beneficia conferamus, qui grate responsuri erunt, ita quaedam, etiam si male de illis sperabitur, faciemus tribuimusque, non solum si iudicabimus ingratos fore, sed si sciemus fuisse. Tamquam si filios alicui restituere potero magno periculo liberatos sine ullo meo, non dubitabo. Dignum etiam impendio sanguinis mei tuebor et in partem discriminis ueniam; indignum si eripere latronibus potero clamore sublato, salutarem uocem homini non

[11] Sequitur, ut dicamus, quae beneficia danda sint et quemadmodum. Primum demus necessaria, deinde utilia, deinde iocunda, utique mansura. Incipiendum est autem a necessariis; aliter enim ad animum peruenit, quod uitam continet, aliter, quod exornat aut instruit. Potest in eo aliquis fastidiosus esse aestimator, quo facile cariturus est, de quo dicere licet: 'Recipe, non desidero; meo contentus sum.' Interim non reddere tantum libet, quod acceperis, sed abicere. Ex his, quae necessaria sunt, quaedam primum optinent locum, sine quibus non possumus uiuere, quaedam secundum, sine quibus non debemus, quaedam tertium, sine quibus nolumus. Prima huius notae sunt: hostium manibus eripi et tyrannicae irae et proscriptioni et aliis periculis, quae uaria et incerta humanam uitam obsident. Quidquid horum discusserimus, quo maius ac terribilius erit, hoc maiorem inibimus gratiam; subit enim cogitatio, quantis sint liberati malis, et lenocinium est muneris antecedens metus. Nec tamen ideo debemus tardius quemquam seruare, quam possumus, ut muneri nostro timor inponat pondus. Proxima ab his sunt, sine quibus possumus quidem uiuere, sed ut mors potior sit, tamquam libertas et pudicitia et mens bona. Post haec habebimus coniunctione ac sanguine usuque et consuetudine longa cara, ut liberos, coniuges, penates, cetera, quae usque eo animus sibi adplicuit, ut ab illis quam uita diuelli grauius existimet. Subsecuntur utilia, quorum uaria et lata materia est; hic erit pecunia non superfluens sed ad sanum modum habendi parata; hic erit honor et processus ad altiora tendentium; nec enim utilius quicquam est quam sibi utilem fieri. Iam cetera ex abundanti ueniunt delicatos factura; in his sequemur, ut opportunitate grata sint, ut non uolgaria, quaeque aut pauci habuerint aut pauci intra hanc aetatem aut hoc modo, quae, etiam si natura pretiosa non sunt, tempore aut loco fiant. Videamus, quid oblatum maxime uoluptati futurum sit, quid frequenter occurrurum habenti, ut totiens nobiscum quotiens cum illo sit; utique cauebimus, ne munera superuacua mittamus, ut feminae aut seni arma uenatoria, ut rustico libros, ut studiis ac litteris dedito retia. Aequae ex contrario circumspeciemus, ne, dum grata mittere uolumus, suum cuique morbum exprobratura mittamus, sicut ebrioso uina et uoletudinario medicamenta. Maledictum enim incipit esse, non munus, in quo uitium accipientis adgnoscutur.

[12] Si arbitrium dandi penes nos est, praecipue mansura quaeremus, ut quam minime mortale munus sit. Pauci enim sunt tam grati, ut, quid acceperint, etiam si non uident, cogitent. Ingratos quoque memoria cum ipso munere incurrit, ubi ante oculos est et obliuisci sui non sinit, sed auctorem suum ingerit et inculcat. Eo quidem magis duratura quaeramus, quia numquam admonere debemus; ipsa res euanescentem memoriam excitet. Libentius donabo argentum factum quam signatum; libentius statuas quam uestem et quod usus breuis deterat. Apud paucos post rem manet gratia; plures sunt, apud quos non diutius in animo sunt donata, quam in usu. Ego, si fieri potest, consumi munus meum nolo; extet, haereat amico meo, conuiuat. Nemo tam stultus est, ut monendus sit, ne cui gladiatores aut uenationem iam munere edito mittat et uestimenta aestiua bruma, hiberna solstitio. Sit in beneficio sensus communis; tempus, locum obseruet, personas, quia momentis quaedam grata et ingrata sunt. Quanto acceptius est, si id damus, quod quis non habet, quam cuius copia abundat? quod diu quaerit nec inuenit, quam quod ubique uisurus est? Munera non tam pretiosa quam rara et exquisita sint, quae etiam apud diuitem sibi locum faciant, sicut gregalia quoque poma et post paucos dies itura in fastidium delectant, si prouenere maturius. Illa quoque non erunt sine honore, quae aut nemo illis alius dedit aut nos nulli alii.

[13] Alexandro Macedoni, cum uictor Orientis animos supra humana tolleret, Corinthii per legatos gratulati sunt et ciuitate illum sua donauerunt. Cum risisset hoc Alexander officii genus, unus ex legatis: 'Nulli' inquit 'ciuitatem umquam dedimus alii quam tibi et Herculi.' Libens accepti non dilutum honorem et legatos inuitatione aliaque humanitate prosecutus cogitauit, non qui sibi ciuitatem darent, sed cui dedissent; et homo gloriae deditus, cuius nec naturam nec modum nouerat, Herculis Liberique uestigia sequens ac ne ibi quidem resistens, ubi illa defecerant, ad socium honoris sui respexit a dantibus, tamquam caelum, quod mente uanissima complectebatur, teneret, quia Herculi aequabatur. Quid enim illi simile habebat uesanus adulescens, cui pro uirtute erat felix temeritas? Hercules nihil sibi uicit; orbem terrarum transiuit non concupiscendo, sed iudicando, quid uinceret, malorum hostis, bonorum uindex, terrarum marisque pacator; at hic a pueritia latro gentiumque uastator, tam hostium pernicies quam amicorum, qui summum bonum duceret terrori esse cunctis mortalibus, oblitus non ferocissima tantum, sed ignauissima quoque animalia timeri ob malum uirus.

[14] Ad propositum nunc reuertamur. Beneficium qui quibuslibet dat, nulli gratum dat; nemo se stabularii aut cauponis hospitem iudicat nec conuiuium dantis epulum, ubi dici potest: 'Quid enim in me contulit? Nempe hoc, quod et in illum uix bene notum sibi et in illum etiam inimicum ac turpissimum hominem. Numquid enim me dignum iudicauit? morbo suo morem gessit.' Quod uoles gratum esse, rarum effice: quis patitur sibi inputari <uolgaria>? Nemo haec ita interpretetur, tamquam reducam liberalitatem et frenis artioribus reprimam; illa uero, in quantum libet, exeat, sed eat, non erret. Licet ita largiri, ut unusquisque, etiam si cum multis accepit, in populo se esse non putet. Nemo non habeat aliquam familiarem notam, per quam speret se propius admissum; dicat: 'Accepi idem, quod ille, sed ultro. Accepi, quod ille, sed ego intra breue tempus, cum ille diu meruisset. Sunt, qui idem habeant, sed non eisdem uerbis datum, non eadem comitate tribuentis. Ille accepit, cum rogasset; ego non rogaram. Ille accepit, sed facile redditurus, sed cuius senectus et libera orbitas magna promittebat; mihi plus dedit, quamuis idem dederit, quia sine spe recipiendi dedit.' Quemadmodum meretrix ita inter multos se diuidet, ut nemo non aliquod signum familiaris animi ferat, ita, qui beneficia sua amabilia esse uult, excogitet, quomodo et multi obligentur et tamen singuli habeant aliquid, quo se ceteris praeferant.

[15] Ego uero beneficiis non obicio moras; quo plura maioraque fuerint, plus adferent laudis. At sit iudicium; neque enim cordi esse cuiquam possunt forte ac temere data. Quare si quis existimat nos, cum ista praecipimus, benignitatis fines introrsus referre et illi minus laxum limitem aperire, ne perperam monitiones nostras exaudit. Quam enim uirtutem magis ueneramur? cui magis stimulos addimus? quibusue tam conuenit haec adhortatio quam nobis societatem generis humani sancientibus? Quid ergo est? Cum sit nulla honesta uis animi, etiam si a recta uoluntate incepit, nisi quam uirtutem modus fecit, ueto liberalitatem nepotari. Tunc iuuat accepisse beneficium et supinis quidem manibus, ubi illud ratio ad dignos perducit, non quolibet casus et consilii indigens inpetus defert; quod ostentare libet et inscribere sibi. Beneficia tu uocas, quorum auctorem fateri pudet? At illa quanto gratiora sunt quantoque in partem interiorem animi numquam exitura descendunt, cum delectant cogitantem magis a quo, quam quid acceperis? Crispus Passienus solebat dicere quorundam se iudicium malle quam beneficium, quorundam beneficium malle quam iudicium, et subiciebat exempla: ‘Malo’ aiebat ‘diui Augusti iudicium, malo Claudii beneficium.’ Ego uero nullius puto expetendum esse beneficium, cuius uile iudicium est. Quid ergo? non erat accipiendum a Claudio, quod dabatur? Erat, sed sicut a fortuna, quam scires posse statim malam fieri. Quid ista inter se mixta diuidimus? Non est beneficium, cui deest pars optima, datum esse iudicio; alioqui pecunia ingens, si non ratione nec recta uoluntate donata est, non magis beneficium est quam thesaurus. Multa sunt autem, quae oportet accipere nec debere.

LIBER II

[1] Inspiciamus, Liberalis uirorum optime, id quod ex priori parte adhuc superest, quemadmodum dandum sit beneficium; cuius rei expeditissimam uideor monstraturus uiam: sic demus, quomodo uellemus accipere. Ante omnia libenter, cito, sine ulla dubitatione; ingratum est beneficium, quod diu inter dantis manus haesit, quod quis aegre dimittere uisus est et sic dare, tamquam sibi eriperet. Etiam si quid interuenit morae, euitemus omni modo, ne deliberasse uideamur; proximus est a negante, qui dubitauit, nullamque iniit gratiam. Nam cum in beneficio iucundissima sit tribuentis uoluntas, quia nolentem se tribuisse ipsa cunctatione testatus est, non dedit sed aduersus ducentem male retinuit; multi autem sunt, quos liberales facit frontis infirmitas. Gratissima sunt beneficia parata, facilia, occurrentia, ubi nulla mora fuit nisi in accipientis uerecundia. Optimum est antecedere desiderium cuiusque, proximum sequi; illud melius, occupare ante quam rogemur, quia, cum homini probo ad rogandum os concurrat et subfundatur rubor, qui hoc tormentum remittit, multiplicat munus suum. Non tulit gratis, qui, cum rogasset, accepit, quoniam quidem, ut maioribus nostris grauissimis uiris uisum est, nulla res carius constat, quam quae precibus empti est. Vota homines parcius facerent, si palam facienda essent; adeo etiam deos, quibus honestissime supplicamus, tacite malumus et intra nosmet ipsos precari.

[2] Molestum uerbum est, onerosum, demisso uultu dicendum, rogo. Huius facienda est gratia amico et quemcumque amicum sis promerendo facturus; properet licet, sero beneficium dedit, qui roganti dedit. Ideo diuinanda cuiusque uoluntas et, cum intellecta est, necessitate grauissima rogandi liberanda est; illud beneficium iucundum uicturum in animo scias, quod obuiam uenit. Si non contigit praeuenire, plura rogantis uerba intercidamus; ne rogati uideamur sed certiores facti, statim promittamus facturosque nos, etiam ante quam interpellemur, ipsa festinatione adprobemus. Quemadmodum in aegris opportunitas cibi salutaris est et aqua tempestiue data remedii locum optinuit, ita, quamuis leue et uolgare beneficium est, si praesto fuit, si proximam quamque horam non perdidit, multum sibi adicit gratiamque pretiosi sed lenti et diu cogitati muneris uincit. Qui tam parate facit, non est dubium, quin libenter faciat; itaque laetus facit et induit sibi animi sui uultum.

[3] Ingentia quorundam beneficia silentium aut loquendi tarditas imitata grauitatem et tristitiam corrumpit, cum promitterent uultu negantium; quanto melius adicere bona uerba rebus bonis et praedicatione humana benignaque commendare, quae praestes! Vt ille se castiget, quod tardior in rogando fuit, adicias licet familiarem querellam: 'Irascor tibi, quod, cum aliquid desiderasses, non olim scire me uoluisti, quod tam diligenter rogasti, quod quemquam adhibuisti. Ego uero gratulor mihi, quod experiri animum meum libuit; postea, quidquid desiderabis, tuo iure exiges; semel rusticitati tuae ignoscitur.' Sic efficies, ut animum tuum pluris aestimet quam illud, quidquid est, ad quod petendum uenerat. Tunc est summa uirtus tribuentis, tunc benignitas, ubi ille, qui discessit, dicet sibi: 'Magnum hodie lucrum feci; malo, quod illum talem inueni, quam si multiplicatum hoc ad me, de quo loquebar, alia uia peruenisset; huic eius animo numquam parem gratiam referam.'

[4] At plerique sunt, qui beneficia asperitate uerborum et supercilio in odium adducunt eo sermone usi, ea superbia, ut inpetrasse paeniteat. Aliae deinde post rem promissam secuntur morae; nihil autem est acerbius, quam ubi quoque, <quod> inpetrastisti, rogandum est. Repraesentanda sunt beneficia, quae a quibusdam accipere difficilius est quam inpetrare. Hic rogandus est, ut admoneat, ille, ut consummet; sic unum munus per multorum manus teritur, ex quo gratiae minimum apud promittentem remanet, quia auctori detrahit, quisquis post illum rogandus est. Hoc itaque curae hebebis, si grate aestimari, quae praestabis, uoles, ut beneficia tua inlibata, ut integra ad eos, quibus promissa sunt, perueniant, sine ulla, quod aiunt, deductione. Nemo illa intercipiat, nemo detineat; nemo in eo, quod daturus es, gratiam suam facere potest, ut non tuam minuat.

semel faciunt; iniuriae illorum praecipites, lenta beneficia sunt. Quare uerissimum existima, quod ille comicus dixit:

Quid? tu non intellegis
tantum te gratiae demere, quantum morae adicis?

Inde illae uoces, quas ingenuus dolor exprimit: 'Fac, si quid facis' et: 'Nihil tanti est; malo mihi iam neges.' Vbi in taedium adductus animus incipit beneficium odisse, dum expectat, potest ob id gratus esse? Quemadmodum acerbissima crudelitas est, quae trahit poenam, et misericordiae genus est cito occidere, quia tormentum ultimum finem sui secum adfert, quod antecedit tempus, maxima uenturi supplicii pars est, ita maior est muneris gratia, quo minus diu pependit. Est enim etiam bonarum rerum sollicita expectatio, et cum plurima beneficia remedium alicuius rei adferant, qui aut diutius torqueri patitur, quem protinus potest liberare, aut tardius gaudere, beneficio suo manus adfert. Omnis benignitas properat, et proprium est libenter facientis cito facere; qui tarde et diem de die extrahens profuit, non ex animo fecit. Ita duas res maximas perdidit, et tempus et argumentum amicae uoluntatis; tarde uelle nolentis est.

[6] In omni negotio, Liberalis, non minima portio est, quomodo quidque aut dicatur aut fiat. Multum celeritas adiecit, multum abstulit mora. Sicut in telis eadem ferri uis est, sed infinitum interest, utrum excusso lacerto torqueantur an remissa manu effluant, gladius idem et stringit et transforat, quam presso articulo uenerit, refert, <ita> idem est, quod datur, sed interest, quomodo detur. Quam dulce, quam pretiosum est, si gratias sibi agi non est passus, qui dedit, si dedisse, dum dat, oblitus est! Nam corripere eum, cui cum maxime aliquid praestes, dementia est et inserere contumeliam meritis. Itaque non sunt exasperanda beneficia nec quicquam illis triste miscendum. Etiam si quid erit, de quo uelis admonere, aliud tempus eligito.

[7] Fabius Verrucosus beneficium ab homine duro aspere datum panem lapidosum uocabat, quem esurienti accipere necessarium sit, esse acerbum. Ti. Caesar rogatus a Nepote Mario praetorio, ut aeri alieno eius succurreret, edere illum sibi nomina creditorum iussit; hoc non est donare sed creditores conuocare. Cum edita essent, scripsit Nepoti iussisse se pecuniam solui adiecta contumeliosa admonitione; effecit, ut Nepos nec aes alienum haberet nec beneficium: liberauit illum a creditoribus, sibi non obligauit. Aliquid Tiberius secutus est; puto, noluit plures esse, qui idem rogaturi concurrerent. Ista fortasse efficax ratio fuerit ad hominum improbas cupiditates pudore reprimendas, beneficium uero danti tota alia sequenda est uia. Omni genere, quod des, quo sit acceptatius, adornandum est; hoc uero non est beneficium dare, deprehendere est.

[8] Et ut in transitu de hac quoque parte dicam, quid sentiam, ne principi quidem satis decorum est donare ignominiae causa. 'Tamen' inquit 'effugere Tiberius ne hoc quidem modo, quod uitabat, potuit; nam aliquot postea, qui idem rogarent, inuenti sunt, quos omnes iussit reddere in senatu aeris alieni causas, et ita illis certas summas dedit.' Non est illud liberalitas, censura est; auxilium est, principale tributum est: beneficium non est, cuius sine rubore meminisse non possum. Ad iudicem missus sum; ut inpetrarem, causam dixi.

[10] Interdum etiam ipse, qui iuuatur, fallendus est, ut habeat nec, a quo acceperit, sciat. Arcesilan aiunt amico pauperi et paupertatem suam dissimulanti, aegro autem et ne hoc quidem confitenti deesse sibi in sumptum ad necessarios usus, clam succurrendum iudicasse; puluino eius ignorantis sacculum subiecit, ut homo inutiliter uerecundus, quod desiderabat, inueniret potius quam acciperet. 'Quid ergo? ille nesciet, a quo acceperit?' Primum nesciat, si hoc ipsum beneficii pars est; deinde multa alia faciam, multa tribuam, per quae intellegat et illius auctorem; denique ille nesciet accepisse se, ego sciam me dedisse. 'Parum est' inquis. Parum, si fenerare cogitas; sed si dare, quo genere accipienti maxime profuturum erit, dabis. Contentus eris te teste; alioqui non bene facere delectat sed uideri bene fecisse. 'Volo utique sciat.' Debitorem quaeris. 'Volo utique sciat.' Quid? si illi utilius est nescire, si honestius, si gratius, non in aliam partem abibis? 'Volo sciat.' Ita tu hominem non seruabis in tenebris? Non nego, quotiens patitur res, respiciendum gaudium ex accipientis uoluntate; sin adiuuari illum et oportet et pudet, si, quod praestamus, offendit, nisi absconditur, beneficium in acta non mitto. Quidni? ego illi non sum indicaturus me dedisse, cum inter prima praecepta ac maxime necessaria sit, ne umquam exprobrem, immo ne admoneam quidem. Haec enim beneficii inter duos lex est: alter statim obliuisci debet dati, alter accepti numquam.

[11] Lacerat animum et premit frequens meritorum conmemoratio. Libet exclamare, quod ille triumphali proscriptione seruatus a quodam Caesaris amico exclamauit, cum superbiam eius ferre non posset: ‘Redde me Caesari!’ Quousque dices: ‘Ego te seruauit, ego eripui morti’? istud, si meo arbitrio memini, uita est, si tuo, mors est; nihil tibi debeo, si me seruasti, ut haberes, quem ostenderes. Quousque me circumducis? quousque obliuisci fortunae meae non sinis? semel in triumpho ductus essem. Non est dicendum, quid tribuerimus: qui admonet, repetit; non est instandum, non est memoria renouanda, nisi ut aliud dando prioris admoneas. Ne aliis quidem narrare debemus; qui dedit beneficium, taceat, narret, qui accepit. Dicitur enim, quod illi ubique iactanti beneficium suum: ‘Non negabis’ inquit ‘te recepisse’; et cum respondisset: ‘Quando?’ ‘Saepe quidem’ inquit ‘et multis locis, id est, quotiens et ubicumque narrasti.’ Quid opus est eloqui, quid alienum occupare officium? est, qui istud facere honestius possit, quo narrante et hoc laudabitur, quod ipse non narras. Ingratum me iudicas, si istud te tacente nemo sciturus est. Quod adeo non est conmittendum, ut etiam, si quis coram nobis narrabit, respondendum sit: ‘Dignissimus quidem ille est maioribus beneficiis, sed ego magis uelle me scio omnia illi praestare quam adhuc praestitisse’; et haec ipsa non uerniliter nec ea figura, qua quidam reiciunt, quae magis ad se uolunt adtrahere. Deinde adicienda omnis humanitas. Perdet agricola, quod sparsit, si labores suos destituit in semine; multa cura sata perducuntur ad segetem; nihil in fructum peruenit, quod non a primo usque ad extremum aequalis cultura prosequitur. Eadem beneficiorum condicio est. Numquid ulla maiora possunt esse, quam quae in liberos patres conferunt? haec tamen inrita sunt, si in infantia deserantur, nisi longa pietas munus suum nutrit. Eadem ceterorum beneficiorum condicio est: nisi illa adiuueris, perdes; parum est dedisse, fouenda sunt. Si gratos uis habere, quos obligas, non tantum des oportet beneficia, sed ames. Praecipue, ut dixi, parcamus auribus; admonitio taedium facit, exprobratio odium. Nihil aequè in beneficio dando uitandum est quam superbia. Quid opus adrogantia uultus, quid tumore uerborum? ipsa res te extollit. Detrahenda est inanis iactatio; res loquentur nobis tacentibus. Non tantum ingratum, sed inuisum est beneficium superbe datum.

[12] C. Caesar dedit uitam Pompeio Penno, si dat, qui non aufert; deinde absoluto et agenti gratias porrexit osculandum sinistrum pedem. Qui excusant et negant id insolentiae causa factum, aiunt socculum auratum, immo aureum, margaritis distinctum ostendere eum uoluisse. Ita prorsus: quid hic contumeliosum est, si uir consularis aurum et margaritas osculatus est alioquin nullam partem in corpore eius electurus, quam purius oscularetur? Homo natus in hoc, ut mores liberae ciuitatis Persica seruitute mutaret, parum iudicauit, si senator, senex, summis usus honoribus in conspectu principum supplex sibi eo more iacuisset, quo hostes uicti hostibus iacueret; inuenit aliquid infra genua, quo libertatem detruderet. Non hoc est rem publicam calcare, et quidem, licet id aliquis non putet ad rem pertinere, sinistro pede? Parum enim foede furioseque insolens fuerat, qui de capite consularis uiri soccatus audiebat, nisi in os senatoris ingessisset imperator epigros suos.

[13] O superbia, magnae fortunae stultissimum malum! ut a te nihil accipere iuuat! ut omne beneficium in iniuriam conuertis! ut te omnia dedecent! quoque altius te subleuasti, hoc depressior es ostendisque tibi non datum adgnosce ista bona, quibus tantum inflaris; quidquid das, corrumpis. Libet itaque interrogare, quid se tanto opere resupinet, quid uultum habitumque oris peruertat, ut malit personam habere quam faciem? Iucunda sunt, quae humana fronte, certe leni placidaeque tribuuntur, quae cum daret mihi superior, non exultauit supra me, sed quam potuit benignissimus fuit descenditque in aequum et detraxit muneri suo pompam, si obseruauit idoneum tempus, ut in occasione potius quam in necessitate succurreret. Vno modo istis persuadebimus, ne beneficia sua insolentia perdant, si ostenderimus non ideo uideri maiora, quod tumultuosius data sunt; ne ipsos quidem ob id cuiquam posse maiores uideri; uanam esse superbiae magnitudinem et quae in odium etiam amanda perducant.

[14] Sunt quaedam nocitura inpetrantibus, quae non dare sed

negare beneficium est; aestimabimus itaque utilitatem potius quam uoluntatem petentium. Saepe enim noxia concupiscimus, nec dispicere, quam perniciosa sint, licet, quia iudicium interpellat adfectus; sed cum subsedit cupiditas, cum inpetus ille flagrantis animi, qui consilium fugat, cecidit, detestamur perniciosos malorum munerum auctores. Vt frigidam aegris negamus et lugentibus ac sibi iratis ferrum, ut amentibus, quidquid contra se usurus ardor petit, sic omnium, quae nocitura sunt, inpense ac submisce, non numquam etiam miserabiliter rogantibus perseuerabimus non dare. Cum initia beneficiorum suorum spectare tum etiam exitus decet et ea dare, quae non tantum accipere, sed etiam accepisse delectet. Multi sunt, qui dicant: 'Scio hoc illi non profuturum, sed quid faciam?' rogat, resistere precibus eius non possum; uiderit: de se, non de me queretur.' Falsum est: immo de te et merito quidem; cum ad mentem bonam redierit, cum accessio illa, quae animum inflammabat, remiserit, quidni eum oderit, a quo in damnum ac periculum suum adiutus est? Exorari in perniciem rogantium saeua bonitas est. Quemadmodum pulcherrimum opus est etiam inuitos nolentesque seruare, ita rogantibus pestifera largiri blandum et adfabile odium est. Beneficium demus, quod in usu magis ac magis placeat, quod numquam in malum uertat. Pecuniam non dabo, quam numeraturum adulterae sciam, nec in societate turpis facti aut consilii inueniar; si potero, reuocabo, si minus, non adiuuabo scelus. Siue illum ira, quo non debeat, inpellet, siue ambitionis calor abducet a tutis, in nullum malum uires a <me> sumere ipsas patiar nec conmittam, ut possit quandoque dicere: 'Ille amando me occidit.' Saepe nihil interest inter amicorum munera et hostium uota; quidquid illi accidere optant, in id horum intempestiua indulgentia inpellit atque instruit. Quid autem turpius quam quod euenit frequentissime, ut nihil intersit inter odium et beneficium?

[15] Numquam in turpitudinem nostram reditura tribuamus. Cum summa amicitiae sit amicum sibi aequare, utrique simul consulendum est: dabo egenti, sed ut ipse non egeam; succurram perituro, sed ut ipse non peream, nisi si futurus ero magni hominis aut magnae rei merces. Nullum beneficium dabo, quod turpiter peterem. Nec exiguum dilatabo nec magna pro paruis accipi patiar; nam ut qui, quod <dedit>, inputat, gratiam destruit, ita qui, quantum det, ostendit, munus suum commendat, non exprobrat. Respiciendae sunt cuique facultates suae uiresque, ne aut plus praestemus, quam possumus, aut minus. Aestimanda est eius persona, cui damus; quaedam enim minora sunt, quam ut exire a magnis uiris debeant, quaedam accipiente maiora sunt. Vtriusque itaque personam confer et ipsum inter illas, quod donabis, examina, numquid aut danti graue sit aut parum, numquid rursus, qui accepturus est, aut fastidiat aut non capiat.

[16] Urbem cuidam Alexander donabat, uesanus et qui nihil animo nisi grande conciperet. Cum ille, cui donabatur, se ipse mensus tanti muneris inuidiam refugisset dicens non conuenire fortunae suae: ‘Non quaero’ inquit, ‘quid te accipere deceat, sed quid me dare.’ Animosa uox uidetur et regia, cum sit stultissima. Nihil enim per se quemquam decet; refert, qui det, cui, quando, quare, ubi, et cetera, sine quibus facti ratio non constabit. Tumidissimum animal! si illum accipere hoc non decet, nec te dare; habetur personarum ac dignitatum portio et, cum sit ubique uirtus modus, aequè peccat, quod excedit, quam quod deficit. Liceat istud sane tibi et te in tantum fortuna sustulerit, ut congiaria tua urbes sint (quas quanto maioris animi fuit non capere quam spargere!): est tamen aliquis minor, quam <ut> in sinu eius condenda sit ciuitas.

[17] Ab Antigono Cynicus petit talentum: respondit plus esse, quam quod Cynicus petere deberet; repulsus petit denarium: respondit minus esse, quam quod regem deceret dare. ‘Turpissima eiusmodi cauillatio est: inuenit, quomodo neutrum daret. In denario regem, in talento Cynicum respexit, cum posset et denarium tamquam Cynico dare et talentum tamquam rex. Vt sit aliquid maius, quam quod Cynicus accipiat, nihil tam exiguum est, quod non honeste regis humanitas tribuat.’ Si me interrogas, probò; est enim intolerabilis res poscere nummos et contemnere. Indixisti pecuniae odium; hoc professus es, hanc personam induisti: agenda est. Iniquissimum est te pecuniam sub gloria egestatis adquirere. Adspicienda ergo non minus sua cuique persona est quam eius, de quo iuuando quis cogitat. Volo Chrysippi nostri uti similitudine de pilae lusu, quam cadere non est dubium aut mittentis uitio aut excipientis; tum cursum suum seruat, ubi inter manus utriusque apte ab utroque et iactata et excepta uersatur. Necesse est autem lusor bonus aliter illam conlusori longo, aliter breui mittat. Eadem beneficii ratio est: nisi utrique personae, dantis et accipientis, aptatur, nec ab hoc exhibit nec ad illum perueniet, ut debet. Si cum exercitato et docto negotium est, audacius pilam mittemus; utcumque enim uenerit, manus illam expedita et agilis repercutiet; si cum tirone et indocto, non tam rigide nec tam excusse sed languidius et in ipsam eius derigentes manum remisse occurremus. Idem faciendum est in beneficiis: quosdam doceamus et satis iudicemus, si conantur, si audent, si uolunt. Facimus autem plerumque ingratos et, ut sint, fauemus, tamquam ita demum magna sint beneficia nostra, si gratia illis referri non potuit; ut malignis lusoribus propositum est conlusorem traducere, cum damno scilicet ipsius lusus, qui non potest, nisi consentitur, extendi. Multi sunt tam prauae naturae, ut malint perdere, quae praestiterunt, quam uideri recepissee, superbi et inputatores; quanto melius quantoque humanius id agere, ut illis quoque partes suae constent, et fauere, ut gratia sibi referri possit, benigne omnia interpretari, gratias agentem non aliter, quam si referat, audire, praebere se facilem ad hoc, ut, quem obligauit, etiam exolui uelit! Male audire solet fenerator, si acerbe exigit, aequae, si in recipiendo tardus ac difficilis moras quaerit. Beneficium tam recipiendum est quam non exigendum. Optimus ille, qui facile dedit, numquam exegit, reddi gauisus est, bona fide, quid praestitisset, oblitus, qui accipientis animo recepit.

[18] Quidam non tantum dant beneficia superbe, sed etiam accipiunt, quod non est committendum; iam enim transeamus ad alteram partem tractaturi, quomodo se gerere homines in accipiendis beneficiis debeant. Quodcumque ex duobus constat officium, tantundem ab utroque exigit: qualis pater esse debeat, cum inspexeris, scies non minus operis illic superesse, ut dispicias, qualem esse oporteat filium; sunt aliquae partes mariti, sed non minores uxoris. In uicem ista, quantum exigunt, praestant et parem desiderant regulam, quae, ut ait Hecaton, difficilis est; omne enim honestum in arduo est, etiam quod uicinum honesto est; non enim tantum fieri debet, sed ratione fieri. Hac duce per totam uitam eundum est, minima maximaque ex huius consilio gerenda; quomodo haec suaserit, dandum. Haec autem hoc primum censebit non ab omnibus accipiendum. A quibus ergo accipiemus? Vt breuiter tibi respondeam: ab his, quibus dedissemus. Videamus, num etiam maiore dilectu quaerendus sit, cui debeamus, quam cui praestemus. Nam ut non sequantur ulla incommoda (secuntur autem plurima), graue tamen tormentum est debere, cui nolis; contra iucundissimum ab eo accepisse beneficium, quem amare etiam post iniuriam possis, ubi amicitiam alioqui iucundam causa fecit et iustam. Illud uero homini uerecundo et probro miserrimum est, si eum amare oportet, quem non iuuat. Totiens admoneam necesse est non loqui me de sapientibus, quos, quidquid oportet, et iuuat, qui animum in potestate habent et legem sibi, quam uolunt, dicunt, quam dixerunt, seruant, sed de imperfectis hominibus honestam uiam sequi uolentibus, quorum adfectus saepe contumaciter parent. Itaque eligendum est, a quo beneficium accipiam; et quidem diligentius quaerendus beneficii quam pecuniae creditor. Huic enim reddendum est, quantum accepi, et, si reddidi, solutus sum ac liber; at illi et plus soluendum est, et nihilo minus etiam relata gratia cohaeremus; debeo enim, cum reddidi, rursus incipere, manetque amicitia; <et ut in amicitiam> non reciperem indignum, sic ne in beneficiorum quidem sacratissimum ius, ex quo amicitia oritur. ‘Non semper’ inquit ‘mihi licet dicere: nolo; aliquando beneficium accipiendum est et inuito. Dat tyrannus crudelis et iracundus, qui munus suum fastidire te iniuriam iudicaturus est: non accipiam? eodem loco latronem pone, piratam, regem animum latronis ac piratae habentem. Quid faciam? parum dignus est, cui debeam?’ Cum eligendum dico, cui debeas, uim maiorem et metum excipio, quibus adhibitis electio perit. Si liberum est tibi, si arbitrii tui est, utrum uelis an non, id apud te ipse perpendes; si necessitas tollit arbitrium, scies te non accipere, sed parere. Nemo id accipiendo obligatur, quod illi repudiare non licuit; si uis scire, an uelim, effice, ut possim nolle. ‘Vitam tamen tibi dedit.’ Non refert, quid sit, quod datur, nisi a uolente, nisi uolenti datur; si seruasti me, non ideo seruator es. Venenum aliquando pro remedio fuit; non ideo numeratur inter salubria. Quaedam prosunt nec obligant: tuber quidam tyranni gladio diuisit, qui ad occidendum eum uenerat; non ideo illi tyrannus gratias egit, quod rem, quam medicorum manus reformidauerant nocendo sanauit.

[19] Vides non esse magnum in ipsa re momentum, quoniam non uidetur dedisse beneficium, qui a malo animo profuit; casus enim beneficium est, hominis iniuria. Leonem in amphitheatro spectauimus, qui unum e bestiariis agnitum, cum quondam eius fuisset magister, protexit ab insetu bestiarum; num ergo beneficium est ferae auxilium? minime, quia nec uoluit facere nec faciendi animo fecit. Quo loco feram posui, tyrannum pone: et hic uitam dedit et illa, nec hic nec illa beneficium. Quia non est beneficium accipere cogi, non est beneficium debere, cui nolis. Ante des oportet mihi arbitrium mei, deinde beneficium.

[20] Disputari de M. Bruto solet, an debuerit accipere ab diuo Iulio uitam, cum occidendum eum iudicaret. Quam rationem in occidendo secutus sit, alias tractabimus; mihi enim, cum uir magnus in aliis fuerit, in hac re uidetur uehementer errasse nec ex institutione Stoica se egisse; qui aut regis nomen extimuit, cum optimus ciuitatis status sub rege iusto sit, aut ibi sperauit libertatem futuram, ubi tam magnum praemium erat et imperandi et seruiendi, aut existimauit ciuitatem in priorem formam posse reuocari amissis pristinis moribus futuramque ibi aequalitatem ciuilis iuris et staturas suo loco leges, ubi uiderat tot milia hominum pugnancia, non an seruirent, sed utri. Quanta uero illum aut rerum naturae aut urbis suae tenuit obliuio, qui uno interempto defuturum credidit alium, qui idem uellet, cum Tarquinius esset inuentus post tot reges ferro ac fulminibus occisos! Sed uitam accipere debuit, ob hoc tamen <non> habere illum parentis loco, quia in ius dandi beneficii iniuria uenerat; non enim seruauit is, qui non interfecit, nec beneficium dedit, sed missionem.

[21] Illud magis uenire in aliquam disputationem potest, quid faciendum sit captiuo, cui redemptionis pretium homo prostituti corporis et infamis ore promittit. Patiar me ab impuro seruari? seruatus deinde quam illi gratiam referam? uiuam cum obsceno? non uiuam cum redemptore? Quid ergo placeat, dicam: etiam a tali accipiam pecuniam, quam pro capite dependam, accipiam autem tamquam creditum, non tamquam beneficium; soluam illi pecuniam et, si occasio fuerit seruandi periclitantem, seruabo; in amicitiam, quae similes iungit, non descendam, nec seruatoris illum loco numerabo sed feneratoris, cui sciam reddendum, quod accepi. Est aliquis dignus, a quo beneficium accipiam, sed danti nociturum est; ideo non accipiam, quia ille paratus est mihi cum incommodo aut etiam periculo suo prodesse. Defensurus est me reum, sed illo patrocinio regem sibi facturus inimicum; inimicus sum, si, cum ille pro me periclitari uelit, ego, quod facilius est, non facio, ut sine illo periclitem. Ineptum et friuolum hoc Hecaton ponit exemplum Arcesilai, quem ait a filio familiae adlatam pecuniam non accepisse, ne ille patrem sordidum offenderet; quid fecit laude dignum, quod furtum non recepit, quod maluit non accipere quam reddere? Quae est enim alienam rem non accipere moderatio? Si exemplo magni animi opus est, utamur Graecini Iulii, uiri egregii, quem C. Caesar occidit ob hoc unum, quod melior uir erat, quam esse quemquam tyranno expedit. Is cum ab amicis conferentibus ad inpensam ludorum pecunias acciperet, magnam pecuniam a Fabio Persico missam non accepit et obiurgantibus iis, qui non aestimant mittentes, sed missa, quod repudiasset: 'Ego' inquit 'ab eo beneficium accipiam, a quo propinationem accepturus non sum?' Cum illi Rebilus consularis, homo eiusdem infamiae, maiorem summam misisset instaretque, ut accipi iuberet: 'Rogo' inquit 'ignoscas; et a Persico non accepi.' Vtrum hoc munera accipere est an senatum legere?

[22] Cum accipiendum iudicauerimus, hilares accipiamus profitentes gaudium, et id danti manifestum sit, ut fructum praesentem capiat; iusta enim causa laetitiae est laetum amicum uidere, iustior fecisse; quam grate ad nos peruenisse indicemus effusis adfectibus, quos non ipso tantum audiente sed ubique testemur. Qui grate beneficium accipit, primam eius pensionem soluit.

[23] Sunt quidam, qui nolint nisi secreto accipere; testem beneficii et conscium uitant; quos scias licet male cogitare. Quomodo danti in tantum producenda notitia est muneris sui, in quantum delectatura est, cui datur, ita accipienti adhibenda contio est; quod pudet debere, ne acceperis. Quidam furtive gratias agunt et in angulo et ad aurem; non est ista uerecundia, sed infitiandi genus; ingratus est, qui remotis arbitris agit gratias. Quidam nolunt nomina secum fieri nec interponi pararios nec signatores aduocari, <uix> chirographum dare; idem faciunt, qui dant operam, ut beneficium in ipsos conlatum quam ignotissimum sit. Verentur palam ferre, ut sua potius uirtute quam alieno adiutorio consecuti dicantur; rariores in eorum officiis sunt, quibus uitam aut dignitatem debent, et, dum opinionem clientium

[24] Alii pessime locuntur de optime meritis. Tutius est quosdam offendere quam demeruisse; argumentum enim nihil debentium odio quaerunt; atqui nihil magis praestandum est, quam ut memoria nobis meritorum haereat, quae subinde reficienda est, quia nec referre potest gratiam, nisi qui meminit, <et>, qui meminit,> eam refert. Nec delicate accipiendum est nec submisce et humiliter; nam qui negligens est in accipiendo, cum omne beneficium recens pateat, quid faciat, cum prima eius uoluptas refrixit? Alius accipit fastidiose, tamquam qui dicat: 'Non quidem mihi opus est, sed quia tam ualde uis, faciam tibi mei potestatem'; alius supine, ut dubium praestanti relinquat, an senserit; alius uix labra diduxit et ingrator, quam si tacuisset, fuit. Loquendum est pro magnitudine rei inpensius et illa adicienda: 'Plures, quam putas, obligasti' (nemo enim non gaudet beneficium suum latius patere); 'nescis, quid mihi praestiteris, sed scire te oportet, quanto plus sit, quam existimas' (statim gratus est, qui se onerat); 'numquam tibi referre gratiam potero; illud certe non desinam ubique confiteri me referre non posse.'

[25] Nullo magis Caesarem Augustum demeruit et ad alia inpetranda facilem sibi reddidit Furnius, quam quod, cum patri Antonianas partes secuto ueniam inpetrasset, dixit: 'Hanc unam, Caesar, habeo iniuriam tuam: effecisti, ut et uiuerem et morerer ingratus.' Quid est tam grati animi, quam nullo modo sibi satisfacere, quam ne ad spem quidem exaequandi umquam beneficii accedere? His atque eiusmodi uocibus id agamus, ut uoluntas nostra non lateat, sed aperiatur et luceat. Verba cessent licet: si, quemadmodum debemus, adfecti sumus, conscientia eminebit in uultu. Qui gratus futurus est, statim, dum accipit, de reddendo cogitet. Chrysippus quidem ait illum uelut in certamen cursus conpositum et carceribus inclusum opperiri debere tempus suum, ad quod uelut dato signo prosiliat; et quidem magna illi contentione opus est, magna celeritate, ut consequatur antecedentem.

[26] Videndum est nunc, quid maxime faciat ingratos. Facit aut nimius sui suspectus et insitum mortalitati uitium se suaue mirandi aut auiditas aut inuidia. Incipiamus a primo. Nemo non benignus est sui iudex; inde est, ut omnia meruisse se existimet et in solutum accipiat nec satis suo pretio se aestimatum putet. 'Hoc mihi dedit, sed quam sero, sed post quot labores? quanto consequi plura potuissem, si illum aut illum ita me colere maluissem? non hoc speraueram; in turbam coniectus sum; tam exiguo dignum

[27] me iudicauit? honestius praeteriri fuit.' Cn. Lentulus augur, diuitiarum maximum exemplum, ante quam illum libertini pauperem facerent, hic, qui quater miliens sestertium suum uidit (proprie dixi; nihil enim amplius quam uidit), ingenii fuit sterilis, tam pusilli quam animi. Cum esset auarissimus, nummos citius emittebat quam uerba: tanta illi inopia erat sermonis. Hic cum omnia incrementa sua diuo Augusto deberet, ad quem adtulerat paupertatem sub onere nobilitatis laborantem, princeps iam ciuitatis et pecunia et gratia subinde <de> Augusto solebat queri dicens a studiis se abductum; nihil tantum in se congestum esse, quantum perdidisset relicta eloquentia. At illi inter alia hoc quoque diuus Augustus praestiterat, quod illum derisu et labore inrito liberauerat. Non patitur auditas quemquam esse gratum; numquam enim improbae spei, quod datur, satis est, et maiora cupimus, quo maiora uenerunt, multoque concitator est auaritia in magnarum opum congestu conlocata, ut flammae infinito acrior uis est, quo ex maiore incendio emicuit. Aeque ambitio non patitur quemquam in ea mensura honorum conquiescere, quae quondam eius fuit inprudens uotum: nemo agit de tribunatu gratias, sed queritur, quod non est ad praeturam usque perductus; nec haec grata est, si deest consulatus; ne hic quidem satiat, si unus est. Ultra se cupiditas porrigit et felicitatem suam non intellegit, quia non, unde uenerit, respicit, sed quo tendat.

[28] Omnibus his uehementius et inportunius malum est inuidia, quae nos inquietat, dum conparat: 'Hoc mihi praestitit, sed illi plus, sed illi maturius'; et deinde nullius causam agit, contra omnes sibi fauet. Quanto est simplicius, quanto prudentius beneficium acceptum augere, scire neminem tanti ab alio, quanti a se ipso aestimari! 'Plus accipere debui, sed illi facile non fuit plus dare; in multos diuidenda liberalitas erat; hoc initium est, boni consulamus et animum eius grate excipiendo euocemus; parum fecit, sed saepius faciet; illum mihi praetulit, et me multis; ille non est mihi par uirtutibus nec officiis, sed habuit suam Venerem; querendo non efficiam, ut maioribus dignus sim, sed ut datis indignus. Plura illis hominibus turpissimis data sunt; quid ad rem? quam raro fortuna iudicat?

Cottidie querimur malos esse felices; saepe, quae agellos pessimi cuiusque transierat, optimorum uirorum segetem grando percussit; fert sortem suam quisque ut in ceteris rebus ita in amicitiiis.' Nullum est tam plenum beneficium, quod non uellicare malignitas possit, nullum tam angustum, quod non bonus interpretes extendat. Numquam deerunt causae querendi, si beneficia a deteriore parte spectaueris.

[29] Vide, quam iniqui sint diuinorum munerum aestimatores et quidem professi sapientiam: queruntur, quod non magnitudine corporum aequemus elephantos, uelocitate ceruos, leuitate aues, inpetu tauros, quod solida sit cutis beluis, decentior dammis, densior ursis, mollior fibris, quod sagacitate nos narium canes uincant, quod acie luminum aquilae, spatio aetatis corui, multa animalia nandi facilitate. Et cum quaedam ne coire quidem in idem natura patiatur, ut uelocitatem corporum et uires, ex diuersis ac dissidentibus bonis hominem non esse compositum iniuriam uocant et negligentes nostri deos, quod non bona ualetudo etiam uitiiis inexpugnabilis data sit, quod non futuri scientia. Vix sibi temperant, quin eo usque inpudentiae prouehantur, ut naturam oderint, quod infra deos sumus, quod non in aequo illis stetimus. Quanto satius est ad contemplationem tot tantorumque beneficiorum reuerti et agere gratias, quod nos in hoc pulcherrimo domicilio uoluerunt secundas sortiri, quod terrenis praefecerunt! Aliquis ea animalia comparat nobis, quorum potestas penes nos est? Quidquid nobis negatum est, dari non potuit. Proinde, quisquis es iniquus aestimator sortis humanae, cogita, quanta nobis tribuerit parens noster, quanto ualentiora animalia sub iugum miserimus, quanto uelociora consequamur, quam nihil sit mortale non sub ictu nostro positum. Tot uirtutes accepimus, tot artes, animum denique, cui nihil non eodem, quo intendit, momento peruium est, sideribus uelociorem, quorum post multa saecula futuros cursus antecedit; tantum deinde frugum, tantum opum, tantum rerum aliarum super alias aceruatarum. Circumeas licet cuncta et, quia nihil totum inuenies, quod esse te malles, ex omnibus singula excerpas, quae tibi dari uelles: bene aestimata naturae indulgentia confitearis necesse est in deliciis te illi fuisse. Ita est: carissimos nos habuerunt di immortales habentque, et, qui maximus tribui honos potuit, ab ipsis proximos conlocauerunt. Magna accepimus, maiora non cepimus.

[30] Haec, mi Liberalis, necessaria credidi, et quia loquendum aliquid de maximis beneficiis erat, cum de minutis loqueremur, et quia inde manat etiam in cetera huius detestabilis uitii audacia. Cui enim respondebit grate, quod munus existimabit aut magnum aut reddendum, qui summa beneficia spernit? cui salutem, cui spiritum debebit, qui uitam accepisse se a dis negat, quam cottidie ab illis petit? Quicumque ergo gratos esse docet, et hominum causam agit et deorum, quibus nullius rei indigentibus, positis extra desiderium, referre nihilo minus gratiam possumus. Non est, quod quisquam excusationem mentis ingratae ab infirmitate atque inopia petat et dicat: 'Quid enim faciam et quomodo? quando superioribus dominisque rerum omnium gratiam referam?' Referre facile est, si auarus es, sine inpendio, si iners, <sine> opera. Eodem quidem momento, quo obligatus es, si uis, cum quolibet paria fecisti, quoniam, qui libenter beneficium accipit, reddidit.

[31] Hoc ex paradoxis Stoicae sectae minime mirabile, ut mea fert opinio, aut incredibile est eum, qui libenter accipit, beneficium reddidisse. Nam cum omnia ad animum referamus, fecit quisque, quantum uoluit; et cum pietas, fides, iustitia, omnis denique uirtus intra se perfecta sit, etiam si illi manum exerere non licuit, gratus quoque homo esse potest uoluntate. Quotiens, quod proposuit, quisque consequitur, capit operis sui fructum. Qui beneficium dat, quid proponit? prodesse ei, cui dat, et uoluptati esse. Si, quod uoluit, effecit peruenitque ad me animus eius ac mutuo gaudio adfecit, tulit, quod petit. Non enim in uicem aliquid sibi reddi uoluit; aut non fuit beneficium, sed negotiatio. Bene nauigauit, qui quem destinauit portum tenuit; teli iactus certae manus peregit officium, si petita percussit; beneficium qui dat, uult excipi grate: habet, quod uoluit, si bene acceptum est. Sed sperauit emolumentum aliquid: non fuit hoc beneficium, cuius proprium est nihil de reditu cogitare. Quod accipiebam, eo animo accepi, quo dabatur: reddidi. Alioqui pessima optimae rei condicio est: ut gratus sim, ad fortunam mittor. Si illa inuita respondere non possum, sufficit animus animo. 'Quid ergo? non, quidquid potuero, et faciam, ut reddam, et temporum rerumque occasionem sequear et implere eius sinum cupiam, a quo aliquid accepi?' Sed malo loco beneficium est, nisi et excussis manibus esse grato licet.

[32] 'Qui accepit' inquit 'beneficium, licet animo benignissimo acceperit, nondum consummauit officium suum; restat enim pars reddendi; sicut in lusu est aliquid pilam scite ac diligenter excipere, sed non dicitur bonus lusor, nisi qui apte et expedite remisit, quam acceperat.' Exemplum hoc dissimile est; quare? quia huius rei laus in corporis motu est et in agilitate, non in animo; explicari itaque totum debet, de quo oculis iudicatur. Nec tamen ideo non bonum lusorem dicam, qui pilam, ut oportebat, excepit, si per ipsum mora, quo minus remitteret, non fuit. 'Sed quamuis' inquit 'arti ludentis nihil desit, quia partem quidem fecit, sed partem, quam non fecit, potest facere, lusus ipse imperfectus est, qui consummatur uicibus mittendi ac remittendi.' Nolo diutius hoc refellere; existimemus ita esse, desit aliquid lusui, non lusori; sic et in hoc, de quo disputamus, deest aliquid rei datae, cui par alia debetur, non animo, qui animum parem sibi nactus est et, quantum in illo est, quod uoluit, effecit.

[33] Beneficium mihi dedit, accepi non aliter, quam ipse accipi uoluit: iam habet, quod petit, et quod unum petit, ergo gratus sum. Post hoc usus mei restat et aliquod ex homine grato commodum; hoc non imperfecti officii reliqua pars est, sed perfecti accessio. Facit Phidias statuam; alius est fructus artis, alius artificii: artis est fecisse, quod uoluit, artificii fecisse cum fructu; perfecit opus suum Phidias, etiam si non uendidit. Triplex illi fructus est operis sui: unus conscientiae; hunc absoluto opere percipit; alter famae; tertius utilitatis, quem adlatura est aut gratia aut uenditio aut aliqua commoditas. Sic beneficii fructus primus ille est conscientiae: hunc percipit, qui, quo uoluit, munus suum pertulit; secundus <et tertius> est et famae et eorum, quae praestari in uicem possunt. Itaque cum benigne acceptum est beneficium, qui dedit, gratiam quidem iam recepit, mercedem nondum; debeo itaque, quod extra beneficium est, ipsum quidem bene accipiendo persolui.

[34] 'Quid ergo?' inquit 'rettulit gratiam, qui nihil fecit?' Primum fecit: bono animo bonum optulit et, quod est amicitiae, ex aequo. Post deinde aliter beneficium, aliter creditum soluitur; non est, quod expectes, ut solutionem tibi ostendam; res inter animos geritur. Quod dico, non uidebitur durum, quamuis primo contra opinionem tuam pugnet, si te commodaueris mihi et cogitaueris plures esse res quam uerba. Ingens copia est rerum sine nomine, quas non propriis adpellationibus notamus, sed alienis commodatisque: pedem et nostrum dicimus et lecti et ueli et carminis, canem et uenaticum et marinum et sidus; quia non sufficimus, ut singulis singula adsignemus, quotiens opus est, mutuamur. Fortitudo est uirtus pericula iusta contemnens aut scientia periculorum repellendorum, excipiendorum, prouocandorum; dicimus tamen et gladiatorem fortem uirum et seruum nequam, quem in contemptum mortis temeritas inpulit. Parsimonia est scientia uitandi sumptus superuacuos aut ars re familiari moderate utendi; parcissimum tamen hominem uocamus pusilli animi et contracti, cum infinitum intersit inter modum et angustias. Haec alia sunt natura, sed efficit inopia sermonis, ut et hunc et illum parcum uocemus, ut et ille fortis dicatur cum ratione fortuita despiciens et hic sine ratione in pericula excurrens. Sic beneficium est et actio, ut diximus, benefica et ipsum, quod datur per illam actionem, ut pecunia, ut domus, ut praetexta; unum utrique nomen est, uis quidem ac potestas longe alia.

[35] Itaque adtende, iam intellegis nihil me, quod opinio tua refugiat, dicere: illi beneficio, quod actio perficit, relata gratia est, si illud beneuole excipimus; illud alterum, quod re continetur, nondum reddidimus, sed uolumus reddere. Voluntati uoluntate satis fecimus, rei rem debemus. Itaque, quamuis rettulisse illum gratiam dicamus, qui beneficium libenter accipit, iubemus tamen et simile aliquid ei, quod accepit, reddere. A consuetudine quaedam, quae dicimus, abhorrent, deinde alia uia ad consuetudinem redeunt: negamus iniuriam accipere sapientem, tamen, qui illum pugno percusserit, iniuriarum damnabitur; negamus stulti quidquam esse, et tamen eum, qui rem aliquam stulto subripuit, furti condemnabimus; insanire omnes dicimus, nec omnes curamus elleboro; his ipsis, quos uocamus insanos, et suffragium et iuris dictionem committimus. Sic dicimus eum, qui beneficium bono animo accipit, gratiam rettulisse, nihilo minus illum in aere alieno relinquimus gratiam relaturum, etiam cum rettulit. Exhortatio est illa, non infitatio <beneficii, ne> beneficia timeamus, ne ut intolerabili sarcina pressi deficiamus animo. 'Bona mihi donata sunt et fama defensa, detractae sordes, spiritus <seruatus> et libertas spiritu potior: et quomodo referre gratiam potero? quando ille ueniet dies, quo illi animum meum ostendam?' Hic ipse est, quo ille suum ostendit. Excipe beneficium, amplexare, gaude, non quod accipias, sed quod reddas debiturusque sis; non adibis tam magnae rei periculum, ut casus ingratum facere te possit. Nullas tibi proponam difficultates, ne despondeas animum, ne laborum ac longae seruitutis expectatione deficias; non differo te, de praesentibus fiat. Numquam eris gratus, nisi statim es. Quid ergo facies? non arma sumenda sunt: fortasse erunt; non maria emetienda: fortasse etiam uentis minantibus solues. Vis reddere beneficium? benigne accipe; rettulisti gratiam, non ut soluisse te putes, sed ut securior debeas.

LIBER III

[1] Non referre beneficiis gratiam et est turpe et apud omnes habetur, Aebuti Liberalis; ideo de ingratis etiam ingrati queruntur, cum interim hoc omnibus haeret, quod omnibus displicet, adeoque in contrarium itur, ut quosdam habeamus infestissimos non post beneficia tantum sed propter beneficia. Hoc prauitate naturae accidere quibusdam non negauerim, pluribus, quia memoriam tempus interpositum subducit. Nam quae recentia apud illos uiguerunt, ea interiecto spatio obsolescunt; de quibus fuisse mihi tecum disputationem scio, cum tu illos non ingratos uocares sed oblitos, tamquam ea res ingratum excuset, quae facit, aut, quia hoc accidit alicui, non sit ingratus, cum hoc non accadat nisi ingrato. Multa sunt genera ingratorum, ut furum, ut homicidarum, quorum una culpa est, ceterum in partibus uarietas magna; ingratus <est,> qui beneficium accepisse se negat, quod accepit, ingratus est, qui dissimulat, ingratus, qui non reddit, ingratus omnium, qui oblitus est. Illi enim si non soluunt, tamen debent, et extat apud illos uestigium certe meritorum intra malam conscientiam inclusorum; aliquando ad referendam gratiam conuerti ex aliqua causa possunt, si illos pudor admonuerit, si subita honestae rei cupiditas, qualis solet ad tempus etiam in malis pectoribus exurgere, si inuitauerit facilis occasio; hic numquam fieri gratus potest, cui beneficium totum elapsum est. Et utrum tu peiorem uocas, apud quem gratia beneficii intercidit, an apud quem etiam memoria? Vitiosi oculi sunt, qui lucem reformidant, caeci, qui non uident; et parentes suos non amare impietas est, non agnoscere insania.

[2] Quis tam ingratus est, quam qui, quod in prima parte animi positum esse debuit et semper occurrere, ita seposuit et abiecit, ut in ignorantiam uerteret? adparet illum non saepe de reddendo cogitasse, cui obrepsit obliuio. Denique ad reddendam gratiam et uirtute opus est et tempore et facultate et adspirante fortuna; qui meminit, sine inpendio gratus est. Hoc, quod non operam exigit, non opes, non felicitatem, qui non praestat, nullum habet, quo lateat, patrocinium; numquam enim uoluit gratus esse, qui beneficium tam longe proiecit, ut extra conspectum suum poneret. Quemadmodum, quae in usu sunt et manum cottidie tactumque patiuntur, numquam periculum situs adeunt, illa, quae ad oculos non reuocantur, sed extra conuersationem ut superuacua iacuerunt, sordes ipsa colligunt uetustate, ita, quidquid frequens cogitatio exercet ac renouat, memoriae numquam subducitur, quae nihil perdit, nisi ad quod non saepe respexit.

[3] Praeter hanc causam aliae quoque sunt, quae nobis merita non numquam maxima euellant. Prima omnium ac potentissima, quod nouis semper cupiditatibus occupati non, quid habeamus, sed quid petamus, <spectamus;> in id, quod adpetitur, intentis, quidquid est domi, uile est. Sequitur autem, ut, ubi quod acceperis leue nouorum cupiditas fecit, auctor quoque eorum non sit in pretio. Amauimus aliquem et suspeximus et fundatum ab illo statum nostrum professi sumus, quamdiu nobis placebant ea, quae consecuti sumus; deinde inrumpit animum aliorum admiratio, et ad ea inpetus factus est, uti mortalibus mos est ex magnis maiora cupiendi: protinus excidit, quidquid ante apud nos beneficium uocabatur, nec ea intuemur, quae nos aliis praeposuerunt, sed ea sola, quae fortuna praecedentium ostendat. Non potest autem quisquam et inuidere et gratias agere, quia inuidere querentis et maesti est, gratias agere gaudentis. Deinde quia nemo nostrum nouit nisi id tempus, quod cum maxime transit, ad praeterita rari animum retorquent; sic fit, ut praeceptores eorumque beneficia intercidant, quia totam pueritiam reliquimus; sic fit, ut in adulescentiam nostram conlata pereant, quia ipsa numquam retractatur. Nemo, quod fuit, tamquam in praeterito sed tamquam in perditio ponit, ideoque caduca memoria est futuro inminentium.

[4] Hoc loco reddendum est Epicuro testimonium, qui adsidue queritur, quod aduersus praeterita simus ingrati, quod, quaecumque percipimus bona, non reducamus nec inter uoluptates numeremus, cum certior nulla sit uoluptas, quam quae iam eripi non potest. Praesentia bona nondum tota in solido sunt, potest illa casus aliquis incidere; futura pendent et incerta sunt; quod praeteriit, inter tuta sepositum est. Quomodo gratus esse quisquam aduersus beneficia potest, qui omnem uitam suam transilit praesentium totus ac futurorum? Memoria gratum facit; memoriae minimum tribuit, quisquis spei plurimum.

eorum scientia, nisi continuetur), geometriam dico et sublimium cursum et si qua alia propter suptilitatem lubrica sunt, ita beneficia quaedam magnitudo non patitur excidere, quaedam minora sed numero plurima et temporibus diuersa effluunt, quia, ut dixi, non subinde illa tractamus nec libenter, quid cuique debeamus, recognoscimus. Audi uoces petentium: nemo non uicturam semper in animo suo memoriam dixit, nemo non deditum se et deuotum professus est, et si quod aliud humiliter uerbum, quo se obpigneraret, inuenit. Post exiguum tempus idem illi uerba priora quasi sordida et parum libera euitant; perueniunt deinde eo, quo, ut ego existimo, pessimus quisque atque ingratissimus peruenit, ut obliuiscantur. Adeo enim ingratus est, qui oblitus est, ut ingratus sit, cui beneficium in mentem uenit.

[6] Hoc tam inuisum uitium an inpunitum esse debeat, quaeritur, et an haec lex, quae in scholis exercetur, etiam in ciuitate ponenda sit, qua ingrati datur actio; quae uidetur aequa omnibus. ‘Quidni? cum urbes quoque urbibus, quae praestitere, exprobrent et <in> maiores conlata a posteris exigant.’ Nostri maiores, maximi scilicet uiri, ab hostibus tantum res repetierunt, beneficia magno animo dabant, magno perdebant; excepta Macedonum gente non est in ulla data aduersus ingratum actio. Magnumque hoc argumentum est dandam non fuisse, quia aduersus maleficio omne consensimus, et homicidii, ueneficii, parricidii, uiolatarum religionum aliubi atque aliubi diuersa poena est, sed ubique aliqua, hoc frequentissimum crimen nusquam punitur, ubique inprobatur; neque absoluimus illud, sed cum difficilis esset incertae rei aestimatio, tantum odio damnauimus et inter ea reliquimus, quae ad iudices deos mittimus.

[7] Rationes autem multae mihi occurrunt, propter quas crimen hoc in legem cadere non debeat. Primum omnium pars optima beneficii periit, si actio sicut certae pecuniae aut ex conducto et locato datur. Hoc enim in illo speciosissimum est, quod dedimus uel perdituri, quod totum permisimus accipientium arbitrio; si adpello, si ad iudicem uoco, incipit non beneficium esse, sed creditum. Deinde cum res honestissima sit referre gratiam, desinit esse honesta, si necessaria est; non magis enim laudabit quisquam gratum hominem, quam eum, qui depositum reddidit aut, quod debebat, citra iudicem soluit. Ita duas res, quibus in uita humana nihil pulchrius est, corrumpimus, gratum hominem et beneficium; quid enim aut in hoc magnificum est, si beneficium non dat, sed commodat, aut in illo, qui reddit, non quia uult, sed quia necesse est? Non est gloriosa res gratum esse, nisi tutum est ingratum fuisse. Adice nunc, quod huic uni legi omnia fora uix sufficient. Quis erit, qui non agat? quis, cum quo non agatur? omnes sua extollunt, omnes etiam minima, quae in alios contulere, dilatant. Praeterea, quaecumque in cognitionem cadunt, conprendi possunt et non dare infinitam licentiam iudici; ideo melior uidetur condicio causae bonae, si ad iudicem quam si ad arbitrum mittitur, quia illum formula includit et certos, quos non excedat, terminos ponit, huius libera et nullis adstricta uinculis religio et detrahare aliquid potest et adicere et sententiam suam, non prout lex aut iustitia suadet, sed prout humanitas aut misericordia inpulit, regere. Ingrati actio non erat iudicem adligatura sed <in> regno liberrimo positura. Quid sit enim beneficium, non constat, deinde, quantum sit; refert, quam benigne illud interpretetur iudex. Quid sit ingratus, nulla lex monstrat; saepe et qui reddidit, quod accepit, ingratus est, et qui non reddidit, gratus. De quibusdam et inperitus iudex demittere tabellam potest, ubi fecisse aut non fecisse pronuntiandum est, ubi prolatis cautionibus controuersia tollitur, ubi inter disputantes ratio ius dicit; ubi uero animi coniectura capienda est, ubi id, de quo sola sapientia decernit, in controuersiam incidit, non potest sumi ad haec iudex ex turba selectorum, quem census in album et equestris hereditas misit.

[8] Itaque non haec parum idonea res uisa est, quae deduceretur ad iudicem, sed nemo huic rei satis idoneus iudex inuentus est; quod non admiraberis, si excusseris, quid habiturus fuerit difficultatis, quisquis in eiusmodi reum exisset. Donauit aliquis magnam pecuniam, sed diues, sed non sensurus impendium; donauit alius, sed toto patrimonio cessurus; summa eadem est, beneficium idem non est. Etiamnunc adice: hic pecuniam pro addicto dependit, sed cum illam domo protulisset; ille dedit eandem, sed mutuam sumpsit aut rogauit et se obligari ingenti merito passus est; eodem existimas loco esse illum, qui beneficium ex facili largitus est, et hunc, qui accepit, ut daret? Tempore quaedam magna fiunt, non summa: beneficium est donata possessio, cuius fertilitas laxare possit annonam, beneficium est unus in fame panis; beneficium est donare regiones, per quas magna flumina et nauigabilia decurrant, beneficium est arentibus siti et uix spiritum per siccas fauces ducentibus monstrare fontem. Quis inter se ista comparabit? quis expendet? Difficilis est sententia, quae non rem, sed uim rei quaerit; eadem licet sint, aliter data non idem pendent. Dedit hic mihi beneficium, sed non libenter, sed dedisse se questus est, sed superbius me, quam solebat, adspexit, sed tam tarde dedit, ut plus praestaturus fuerit, si cito negasset: horum quomodo iudex inibit aestimationem, cum sermo et dubitatio et uultus meriti gratiam destruant?

[9] Quid, quod quaedam beneficia uocantur, quia nimis concupiscuntur, quaedam non sunt ex hac uolgari nota sed maiora, etiam si minus adparent? Beneficium uocas dedisse potentis populi ciuitatem, in quatuordecim deduxisse et defendisse capitis reum; quid utilia suasisse? quid retinuisse, ne in scelus rueret? quid gladium excussisse morituro? quid efficacibus remediis lugentem et, quos desiderabat, uolentem sequi ad uitae consilium reduxisse? quid adsedisse aegro et, cum ualetudo eius ac salus momentis constaret, excepisse idonea cibo tempora et cadentes uenas uino refecisse et medicum adduxisse morienti? Haec quis aestimabit? quis dissimilibus beneficiis iubebit beneficia pensari? ‘Donauit tibi domum’; sed ego tuam supra te ruere praedixi. ‘Dedi tibi patrimonium’; sed ego naufrago tabulam. ‘Pugnaui pro te et uolnera excepi’; at ego uitam tibi silentio dedi. Cum aliter beneficium detur, aliter reddatur, paria facere difficile est.

[10] Dies praeterea beneficio reddendo non dicitur, sicut pecuniae creditae; itaque potest, qui nondum reddidit, reddere. Dic enim, intra quod tempus deprendatur ingratus. Maxima beneficia probationem non habent, saepe intra tacitam duorum conscientiam latent; an hoc inducimus, ut non demus beneficia sine teste? Quam deinde poenam ingratum constituimus? unam omnibus, cum disparia sint? inaequalem et pro cuiusque beneficio maiorem, minorem? Age, intra pecuniam uersabitur taxatio: quid, quod quaedam uitae beneficia sunt et maiora uita? His quae pronuntiabitur poena? minor beneficio? iniqua est; par et capitalis? quid inhumanius quam cruentos esse beneficiorum exitus?

[11] ‘Quaedam’ inquit ‘priuilegia parentibus data sunt; quomodo horum extra ordinem habita ratio est, sic aliorum quoque beneficorum haberi debet.’ Parentium condicionem sacrauimus, quia expediebat liberos tolli; sollicitandi ad hunc laborem erant incertam adituri fortunam. Non poterat illis dici, quod beneficia dantibus dicitur: ‘Cui des, elige; ipse tecum, si deceptus es, querere; dignum adiua.’ In liberis tollendis nihil iudicio tollentium licet, tota res uoti est; itaque, ut aequiore animo adirent aleam, danda aliqua illis potestas fuit. Deinde alia condicio parentum est, qui beneficia, quibus dederunt, dant nihilo minus daturique sunt, nec est periculum, ne dedisse ipsos mentiantur; in ceteris quaeri debet, non tantum an receperint, sed an dederint, horum in confesso merita sunt, et, quia utile est iuuentuti regi, inposuimus illi quasi domesticos magistratus, sub quorum custodia contineretur. Deinde omnium parentum unum erat beneficium, itaque aestimari semel potuit; alia diuersa sunt, dissimilia, infinitis inter se interuallis distantia; itaque sub nullam regulam cadere potuerunt, cum aequius esset omnia relinqui quam omnia aequari.

[12] Quaedam magno dantibus constant, quaedam accipientibus magna sunt, sed gratuita tribuentibus. Quaedam amicis data sunt, quaedam ignotis; plus est, quamuis idem detur, si ei datur, quem nosse a beneficio tuo incipis. Hic auxilia tribuit, ille ornamenta, ille solacia. Inuenies, qui nihil putet esse iocundius, nihil maius quam habere, in quo calamitas adquiescat; inuenies rursus, qui dignitati suae, quam securitati consuli malit; est, qui plus ei debere se iudicet, per quem tutior est, quam ei, per quem honestior. Proinde ista maiora aut minora erunt, prout fuerit iudex aut huc aut illo inclinatus animo. Praeterea creditorem mihi ipse eligo, beneficium saepe ab eo accipio, a quo nolo, et aliquando ignorans obligor: quid facies? ingratum uocabis eum, cui beneficium inscio et, si scisset, non accepturo inpositum est? non uocabis eum, qui utcumque acceptum non reddidit? Aliquis dedit mihi beneficium, sed idem postea fecit iniuriam: utrum uno munere ad patientiam iniuriarum omnium adstringor, an proinde erit, ac si gratiam rettulerim, quia beneficium suum ipse insequenti iniuria rescidit? Quomodo deinde aestimabis, utrum plus sit, quod accepit, an quo laesus est? Dies me deficiet omnes difficultates persequi temptantem.

contrario occurrat multo tardiores futuros ad accipienda beneficia, si periculum causae dicundae adituri erunt et innocentiam sollicitiore habituri loco. Deinde erimus per hoc ipsi quoque ad danda tardiores; nemo enim libenter dat inuitis, sed quicumque ad bene faciendum bonitate inuitatus est et ipsa pulchritudine rei, etiam libentius dabit nihil debitoris nisi quod uolent. Minuitur enim gloria eius officii, cui diligenter cautum est.

[14] Deinde pauciora erunt beneficia, sed ueriora; quid autem mali est inhiberi beneficiorum temeritatem? Hoc enim ipsum secuti sunt, qui nullam legem huic constituerunt, ut circumspectius donaremus, circumspectius eligeremus eos, in quos merita conferuntur. Etiam atque etiam, cui des, considera: nulla actio erit, nulla repetitio. Erras, si existimas succursurum tibi iudicem; nulla lex te in integrum restituet, solam accipientis fidem specta. Hoc modo beneficia auctoritatem suam tenent et magnifica sunt; pollues illa, si materiam litium feceris. Aequissima uox est et ius gentium prae se ferens: ‘Redde, quod debes’; haec turpissima est in beneficio: ‘Redde!’ Quid? reddet uitam, quam debet? dignitatem? securitatem? sanitatem? Reddi maxima quaeque non possunt. ‘At pro iis’ inquit ‘aliquid, quod tanti sit.’ Hoc est, quod dicebam, interituram tantae rei dignitatem, si beneficium mercem facimus. Non est inritandus animus ad auaritiam, ad querellas, ad discordiam; sua sponte in ista fertur. Quantum possumus, resistamus et quaerenti occasiones amputemus.

[15] Utinam quidem persuadere possemus, ut pecunias creditas tantum a uolentibus acciperent! utinam nulla stipulatio emptorem uenditori obligaret nec pacta conuentaque inpressis signis custodirentur, fides potius illa seruaret et aecum colens animus! Sed necessaria optimis praetulerunt et cogere fidem quam expectare malunt. Adhibentur ab utraque parte testes; ille per tabulas plurium nomina interpositis parariis facit; ille non est interrogatione contentus, nisi reum manu sua tenuit. O turpem humani generis fraudis ac nequitiae publicae confessionem! anulis nostris plus quam animis creditur. In quid isti ornati uiri adhibiti sunt? in quid inprimunt signa? nempe ne ille neget accepisse se, quod accepit. Hos incorruptos uiros et uindices ueritatis existimas? at his ipsis non aliter statim pecuniae committentur. Ita non honestius erat a quibusdam fidem falli, quam ab omnibus perfidiam timeri? Hoc unum deest auaritiae, ut beneficia sine sponsore non demus. Generosi animi est et magnifici iuuare, prodesse; qui dat beneficia, deos imitatur, qui repetit, feneratores. Quid illos, dum uindicamus, in turbam sordidissimam redigimus?

[16] ‘Plures’ inquit ‘ingrati erunt, si nulla aduersus ingratum datur actio.’ Immo pauciores, quia maiore dilectu dabuntur beneficia. Deinde non expedit notum omnibus fieri, quam multi ingrati sint; pudorem enim rei tollet multitudo peccantium, et desinet esse probri loco commune maledictum. Numquid iam ulla repudio erubescit, postquam inlustres quaedam ac nobiles feminae non consulum numero sed maritorum annos suos computant et exeunt matrimonii causa, nubunt repudii? Tamdiu istuc timebatur, quamdiu rarum erat; quia nulla sine diuortio acta sunt, quod saepe audiebant, facere didicerunt. Numquid iam ullus adulterii pudor est, postquam eo uentum est, ut nulla uirum habeat, nisi ut adulterum inritet? Argumentum est deformitatis pudicitia. Quam inuenies tam miseram, tam sordidam, ut illi satis sit unum adulterorum par, nisi singulis diuisit horas? et non sufficit dies omnibus, nisi apud alium gestata est, apud alium mansit. Infrunita et antiqua est, quae nesciat matrimonium uocari unum adulterium. Quemadmodum horum delictorum iam euauit pudor, postquam res latius euagata est, ita ingratos plures efficies et audiores, si numerare se coeperint.

[17] ‘Quid ergo? inpunitus erit ingratus?’ Quid ergo, inpunitus erit inpius? quid malignus? quid auarus? quid inpotens? quid crudelis? Inpunita tu credis esse, quae inuisa sunt, aut ullum supplicium grauius existimas publico odio? Poena est, quod non audet ab ullo beneficium accipere, quod non audet ulli dare, quod omnium designatur oculis aut designari se iudicat, quod intellectum rei optimae ac dulcissimae amisit. An tu infelicem uocas, qui caruit acie, cuius aures morbus obstruxit, non uocas miserum eum, qui sensum beneficiorum amisit? Testes ingratorum omnium deos metuit, urit illum et angit intercepti beneficii conscientia; denique satis haec ipsa poena magna est, quod rei, ut dicebam, iocundissimae fructum non percipit. At quem iuuat acceperisse, aequali perpetuaque uoluptate fruitur et animum eius, a quo accepit, non rem intuens gaudet. Gratum hominem semper beneficium delectat, ingratum semel.

Comparari autem potest utriusque uita, cum alter tristis sit et sollicitus, qualis esse infitiator ac fraudulentus solet, apud quem non parentium, qui debet, honor est, non educatoris, non praeceptorum, alter laetus, hilaris, occasionem referendae gratiae expectans et ex hoc ipso adfectu gaudium grande percipiens nec quaerens, quomodo decoquat, sed quemadmodum plenius uberiusque respondeat non solum parentibus et amicis, sed humilioribus quoque personis? Nam etiam si a seruo suo beneficium accepit, aestimat, non a quo, sed quid acceperit.

[18] Quamquam quaeritur a quibusdam, sicut ab Hecatone, an beneficium dare seruus domino possit. Sunt enim, qui ita distinguant, quaedam beneficia esse, quaedam officia, quaedam ministeria; beneficium esse, quod alienus det (alienus est, qui potuit sine reprehensione cessare); officium esse filii, uxoris, earum personarum, quas necessitudo suscitatur et ferre opem iubet; ministerium esse serui, quem condicio sua eo loco posuit, ut nihil eorum, quae praestat, inputet superiori. [Lacuna?] Praeterea seruus qui negat dare aliquando domino beneficium, ignarus est iuris humani; refert enim, cuius animi sit, qui praestat, non cuius status. Nulli praeclusa uirtus est; omnibus patet, omnes admittit, omnes inuitat, et ingenuos et libertinos et seruos et reges et exules; non eligit domum nec censum, nudo homine contenta est. Quid enim erat tuti aduersus repentina, quid animus magnum promitteret sibi, si certam uirtutem fortuna amitteret? Si non dat beneficium seruus domino, nec regi quisquam suo nec duci suo miles; quid enim interest, quali quis teneatur imperio, si summo tenetur? Nam si seruo, quo minus in nomen meriti perueniat, necessitas obstat et patiendi ultima timor, idem istuc obstat et ei, qui regem habet, et ei, qui ducem, quoniam sub dispari titulo paria in illos licent. Atqui dant regibus suis, dant imperatoribus beneficia: ergo et dominis. Potest seruus iustus esse, potest fortis, potest magni animi: ergo et beneficium dare potest; nam et hoc uirtutis est. Adeo quidem dominis serui beneficia possunt dare, ut ipsos saepe beneficii sui fecerint.

[19] Non est dubium, quin seruus beneficium dare possit cuilibet; quare ergo non et domino suo possit? 'Quia non potest' inquit 'creditor domini sui fieri, si pecuniam illi dederit. Alioqui cottidie dominum suum obligat: peregrinantem sequitur, aegro ministrat, rus eius labore summo colit; omnia tamen ista, quae alio praestante beneficia dicerentur, praestante seruo ministeria sunt. Beneficium enim id est, quod quis dedit, cum illi liceret et non dare; seruus autem non habet negandi potestatem; ita non praestat, sed paret, nec id se fecisse iactat, quod non facere non potuit.' Iam sub ista ipsa lege uincam et eo perducam seruum, ut in multa liber sit; interim dic mihi, si tibi ostendero aliquem pro salute domini sui sine respectu sui dimicantem et confossum uulneribus reliquias tamen sanguinis ab ipsis uitalibus fundentem et, ut ille effugiendi tempus habeat, moram sua morte quaerentem, hunc tu negabis beneficium dedisse, quia seruus est? Si tibi ostendero aliquem, ut secreta domini prodat, nulla tyranni pollicitatione corruptum, nullis territum minis, nullis cruciatibus uictum auertisse, quantum potuerit, suspiciones quaerentis et inpendisse spiritum fidei, hunc tu negabis beneficium domino dedisse, quia seruus est? Vide, ne eo maius sit, quo rarius est exemplum uirtutis in seruis, eoque gratius, quod, cum fere inuisa imperia sint et omnis necessitas grauis, commune seruitutis odium in aliquo domini caritas uicit. Ita non ideo beneficium non est, quia a seruo profectum est, sed ideo maius, quia detertere ab illo ne seruitus quidem potuit.

[20] Errat, si quis existimat seruitutem in totum hominem descendere. Pars melior eius excepta est: corpora obnoxia sunt et adscripta dominis, mens quidem sui iuris, quae adeo libera et uaga est, ut ne ab hoc quidem carcere, cui inclusa est, teneri queat, quo minus inpetu suo utatur et ingentia agat et in infinitum comes caelestibus exeat. Corpus itaque est, quod domino fortuna tradidit; hoc emit, hoc uendit; interior illa pars mancipio dari non potest. Ab hac quidquid uenit, liberum est; nec enim aut nos omnia iubere possumus aut in omnia serui parere coguntur: contra rem publicam imperata non facient, nulli sceleri manus commodabunt.

[21] Quaedam sunt, quae leges nec iubent nec uetant facere; in iis seruus materiam beneficii habet. Quam diu praestatur, quod a seruo exigere solet, ministerium est; ubi plus, quam quod seruo necesse est, beneficium est; ubi in adfectum amici transit, desinit uocari ministerium. Est aliquid, quod dominus praestare seruo debeat, ut cibaria, ut uestiarius; nemo hoc dixit beneficium; at indulsit, liberalius educauit, artes, quibus erudiuntur ingenui, tradidit:

beneficium est. Idem e contrario fit in persona serui: quidquid est, quod seruili officii formulam excedit, quod non ex imperio, sed ex uoluntate praestatur, beneficium est, si modo tantum est, ut hoc uocari potuerit quolibet alio praestante.

[22] Seruus, ut placet Chrysippo, perpetuus mercennarius est. Quemadmodum ille beneficium dat, ubi plus praestat, quam <in> quod operas locauit, sic seruus, ubi beneuolentia erga dominum fortunae suae modum transit et altius aliquid ausus, quod etiam felicius natis decori esset, spem domini antecessit, beneficium est intra domum inuentum. An aecum uidetur tibi, quibus, si minus debito faciant, irascimur, non haberi gratiam, si plus debito solitoque fecerint? Vis scire, quando non sit beneficium? ubi dici potest: 'Quid, si nolle?' Vbi uero id praestitit, quod nolle licuit, uoluisse laudandum est. Inter se contraria sunt beneficium et iniuria; potest dare beneficium domino, si a domino iniuriam accipere. Atqui de iniuriis dominorum in seruos qui audiat positus est, qui et saeuitiam et libidinem et in praebendis ad uictum necessariis auaritiam conpescat. Quid ergo? beneficium dominus a seruo accipit? immo homo ab homine. Denique, quod in illius potestate fuit, fecit: beneficium domino dedit; ne a seruo acceperis, in tua potestate est. Quis autem tantus est, quem non fortuna indigere etiam infimis cogat?

[23] Multa iam beneficiorum exempla referam et dissimilia et quaedam inter se contraria. Dedit aliquis domino suo uitam, dedit mortem, seruauit peritum et, hoc si parum est, pereundo seruauit; alius mortem domini adiuuit, alius decepit. Claudius Quadrigarius in duodeuicensimo annalium tradit, cum obsideretur Grumentum et iam ad summam desperationem uentum esset, duos seruos ad hostem transfugisse et operae pretium fecisse. Deinde urbe capta passim discurrente uictore illos per nota itinera ad domum, in qua seruierant, praecucurrisse et dominam suam ante egissee; quaerentibus, quaenam esset, dominam et quidem crudelissimam ad supplicium ab ipsis duci professos esse. Eductam deinde extra muros summa cura celasse, donec hostilis ira consideret; deinde, ut satius miles cito ad Romanos mores rediit, illos quoque ad suos redisse et dominam sibi ipsos dedisse. Manu misit utrumque e uestigio illa nec indignata est ab his se uitam accepisse, in quos uitae necisque potestatem habuisset. Potuit sibi hoc uel magis gratulari; aliter enim seruata munus notae et uolgaris clementiae habuisset, sic seruata nobilis fabula et exemplum duarum urbium fuit. In tanta confusione captae ciuitatis cum sibi quisque consuleret, omnes ab illa praeter transfugas fugerunt; at hi, ut ostenderent, quo animo facta esset prior illa transitio, a uictoribus ad captiuam transfugerunt personam parricidarum ferentes; quod in illo beneficio maximum fuit, tanti iudicauerunt, ne domina occideretur, uideri dominam occidisse. Non est, mihi crede, condicio seruilis animi egregium factum fama sceleris emisse.

Vettius, praetor Marsorum, ducebatur ad Romanum imperatorem; seruus eius gladium militi illi ipsi, a quo trahebatur, eduxit et primum dominum occidit, deinde: 'Tempus est' inquit 'me et mihi consulere! iam dominum manu misi', atque ita traiecit se uno ictu. Da mihi quemquam, qui magnificentius dominum seruauerit.

[24] Corfinium Caesar obsidebat, tenebatur inclusus Domitius; imperauit medico eidemque seruo suo, ut sibi uenenum daret. Cum tergiuersantem uideret: 'Quid cunctaris' inquit, 'tamquam in tua potestate totum istud sit? mortem rogo armatus.' Tum ille promisit et medicamentum innoxium bibendum illi dedit; quo cum sopitus esset, accessit ad filium eius et: 'Iube' inquit 'me adseruari, dum ex euentu intellegas, an uenenum patri tuo dederim.' Vixit Domitius et seruatus a Caesare est; prior tamen illum seruus seruauerat.

[25] Bello ciuili proscriptum dominum seruus abscondit et, cum anulos eius sibi aptasset ac uestem induisset, speculatoribus occurrit nihilque se deprecari, quo minus imperata peragerent, dixit et deinde ceruicem porrexit. Quanti uiri est pro domino eo tempore mori uelle, quo rara erat fides dominum mori nolle! in publica crudelitate mitem inueniri, in publica perfidia fidelem! cum praemia prodicionis ingentia ostendantur, praemium fidei mortem concupiscere!

[26] Nostri saeculi exempla non praeteribo. Sub Tib. Caesare fuit accusandi frequens et paene publica rabies, quae omni ciuili bello grauius togatam ciuitatem confecit; excipiebatur ebriorum sermo, simplicitas iocantium; nihil erat tutum; omnis saeuiendi placebat occasio, nec iam reorum expectabantur euentus, cum esset unus. Cenabat Paulus praetorius in conuiuio quodam imaginem Tib. Caesaris habens ectypa et eminente gemma. Rem ineptissimam fecero, si nunc uerba quaesiero, quemadmodum dicam illum matellam sumpsisse; quod factum simul et Maro ex notis illius temporis uestigatoribus notauit et seruus eius, quoi nectebantur insidiae, ei ebrio anulum extraxit. Et cum Maro conuiuas testaretur admotam esse imaginem obscenis et iam subscriptionem conponeret, ostendit in manu sua seruus anulum. Si quis hunc seruum uocat, et illum conuiuiam uocabit.

[27] Sub diuo Augusto nondum hominibus uerba sua periculosa erant, iam molesta. Rufus, uir ordinis senatorii, inter cenam optauerat, ne Caesar saluus rediret ex ea peregrinatione, quam parabat; et adiecerat idem omnes et tauros et uitulos optare. Fuerunt, qui illa diligenter audirent. Vt primum diluxit, seruus, qui cenanti ad pedes steterat, narrat, quae inter cenam ebrius dixisset, et hortatur, ut Caesarem occupet atque ipse se deferat. Vsus consilio descendenti Caesari occurrit et, cum malam mentem habuisse se pridie iurasset, id ut in se et in filios suos recideret, optauit et Caesarem, ut ignosceret sibi rediretque in gratiam secum, rogauit. Cum dixisset se Caesar facere: ‘Nemo’ inquit ‘credet te mecum in gratiam redisse, nisi aliquid mihi donaueris’, petitque non fastidiendam etiam a propitio summam et inpetrauit. Caesar ait: ‘Mea causa dabo operam, ne umquam tibi irascar.’ Honestè fecit Caesar, quod ignouit, quod liberalitatem clementiae adiecit; quicumque hoc audierit exemplum, necesse est Caesarem laudet, sed cum seruum ante laudauerit. Non expectas, ut tibi narrem manu missum, qui hoc fecerat; nec tamen gratis: pecuniam pro libertate eius Caesar numerauerat.

[28] Post tot exempla num dubium est, quin beneficium aliquando a seruo dominus accipiat? Quare potius persona rem minuat, quam personam res ipsa cohonestet? Eadem omnibus principia eademque origo; nemo altero nobilior, nisi cui rectius ingenium et artibus bonis aptius. Qui imagines in atrio exponunt et nomina familiae suae longo ordine ac multis stemmatum inligata flexuris in parte prima aedium conlocant, non noti magis quam nobiles sunt? Vnus omnium parens mundus est, siue per splendidos siue per sordidos gradus ad hunc prima cuiusque origo perducitur. Non est, quod te isti decipiant, qui, cum maiores suos recensent, ubicumque nomen inlustre <de>fecit, illo deum <in>fulciunt. Neminem despexeris, etiam si circa illum obsoleta sunt nomina et parum indulgente adiuta fortuna. Siue libertini ante uos habentur siue serui siue exterarum gentium homines, erigite audacter animos et, quidquid in medio sordidi iacet, transilite; expectat uos in summo magna nobilitas. Quid superbia in tantam uanitatem adtollimur, ut beneficia a seruis indignemur accipere et sortem eorum spectemus obliti meritorum? Seruum tu quemquam uocas, libidinis et gulae seruus et adulterae, immo adulterarum commune mancipium? Seruum uocas quemquam tu? Quo tandem ab istis gerulis raperis cubile istud tuum circumferentibus? quo te penulati in militum quidem non uolgarem cultum subornati, quo, inquam, te isti efferunt? ad ostium alicuius ostiarii, ad hortos alicuius ne ordinarium quidem habentis officium; et deinde negas tibi a seruo tuo beneficium dari posse, cui osculum alieni serui beneficium est? Quae est tanta animi discordia? eodem tempore seruos despicias et colis, imperiosus intra limen atque inpotens, humilis foris et tam contemptus quam contemnens; neque enim ulli magis abiciunt animos, quam qui inprobe tollunt, nullique ad calcandos alios paratiores, quam qui contumelias facere accipiendo didicerunt.

[29] Dicenda haec fuerunt ad contundendam insolentiam hominum ex fortuna pendentium uindicandumque ius beneficii dandi seruis, ut filiis quoque uindicaretur. Quaeritur enim, an aliquando liberi maiora beneficia dare parentibus suis possint, quam acceperint. Illud conceditur multos filios maiores potentioresque extitisse quam parentes suos; aequae et illud meliores fuisse. Quod si constat, potest fieri, ut meliora tribuerint, cum et fortuna illis maior esset et melior uoluntas. ‘Quidquid’ inquit ‘est, quod det patri filius, utique minus est, quia hanc ipsam dandi facultatem patri debet. Ita numquam beneficio uincitur, cuius beneficium est ipsum, quod uincitur.’ Primum quaedam initium ab aliis trahunt et tamen initiis suis maiora sunt; nec ideo aliquid non est maius eo, quo coepit, quia non potuisset in tantum procedere, nisi coepisset. Nulla non res principia sua magno gradu transit. Semina omnium rerum causae sunt et tamen minimae partes sunt eorum, quae gignunt. Adspice Rhenum, adspice Euphraten, omnes denique inclutos amnes: quid sunt, si illos illic, unde effluunt, aestimes? quidquid est, quo timentur, quo nominantur, in processu parauerunt. Adspice trabes, siue proceritatem aestimes, altissimas, siue crassitudinem spatiumque ramorum, latissime fusas:

quantulum est his comparatum illud, quod radix tenui fibra conplectitur? Tolle radicem: nemora non surgent, nec tanti montes uestientur. Innituntur fundamentis suis templa excelsa urbis; tamen, quae in firmamentum totius operis iacta sunt, latent. Idem in ceteris euenit: principia sua semper sequens magnitudo obruet. Non potuissem quicquam consequi, nisi parentum beneficium antecessisset; sed non ideo, quidquid consecutus sum, minus est eo, sine quo consecutus non essem. Nisi me nutrix aluisset infantem, nihil eorum, quae consilio ac manu gero, facere potuissem nec in hanc emergere nominis claritatem, quam ciuili ac militari industria merui; numquid tamen ideo maximis operibus praeferes nutricis officium? Atqui quid interest, cum aequae sine patris beneficio quam sine nutricis non potuerim ad ulteriora procedere? Quod si initio meo, quidquid iam possum, debeo, cogita non esse initium mei patrem, ne auum quidem; semper enim erit ulterius aliquid, ex quo originis proximae origo descendat. Atqui nemo dicet me plus debere ignotis et ultra memoriam positis maioribus quam patri; plus autem debeo, si hoc ipsum, quod genuit me pater meus, maioribus debet.

[30] 'Quidquid praestiti patri, etiam si magnum est, infra aestimationem paterni muneris est, quia non esset, si non genuisset.' Isto modo etiam, si quis patrem meum aegrum ac moriturum sanauerit, nihil praestare ei potero, quod non beneficio eius minus sit; non enim genuisset me pater, nisi sanatus esset. Sed uide, ne illud uerius sit aestimari, an id, quod potui, et id, quod feci, meum sit, mearum uirium, meae uoluntatis. Illud, quod natus sum, per se intueri, quale sit: animaduertis exiguum et incertum et boni malique communem materiam, sine dubio primum ad omnia gradum, sed non ideo maiorem omnibus, quia primus est. Seruaui patrem meum et ad summam prouexi dignitatem et principem urbis suae feci nec tantum rebus a me gestis nobilitaui, sed ipsi quoque gerendarum ingentem ac facilem nec tutam minus quam gloriosam dedi materiam; honores, opes, quidquid humanos ad se animos rapit, congessi, et cum supra omnes starem, infra illum steti. Dic nunc: 'Hoc ipsum, quod ista potuisti, patris munus est'; respondebo tibi: 'Est prorsus, si ad ista facienda nasci satis est; sed si ad bene uiuendum minima portio est uiuere et id tribuisti, quod cum feris mihi et animalibus quibusdam minimis, quibusdam etiam foedissimis commune est, noli tibi adserere, quod non ex tuis beneficiis, etiam <si non> sine tuis, oritur.'

[31] Puta me uitam pro uita reddidisse: sic quoque munus tuum uici, cum ego dederim sentienti, cum sentiens me dare, cum uitam tibi non uoluptatis meae causa aut certe per uoluptatem dederim, cum tanto maius sit retinere spiritum quam accipere, quanto leuius mori ante mortis metum. Ego uitam dedi statim illa usuro, tu nescituro, an uiueret; ego uitam dedi mortem timenti, tu uitam dedisti, ut mori possem; ego tibi uitam dedi consummatam, perfectam, tu me expertem rationis genuisti, onus alienum. Vis scire, quam non sit magnum beneficium uitam sic dare? exposuisses; nempe iniuria erat genuisse. Quo quid colligo? minimum esse beneficium patris matrisque concubitus, nisi accesserunt alia, quae prosequerentur hoc initium muneris et aliis officiis ratum facerent. Non est bonum uiuere, sed bene uiuere. At bene uiuo. Sed potui et male; ita hoc tantum est tuum, quod uiuo. Si uitam inputas mihi per se, nudam, egentem consilii, et id ut magnum bonum iactas, cogita te mihi inputare muscarum ac uermium bonum. Deinde, ut nihil aliud dicam, quam bonis artibus me studuisse et cursum ad rectum iter uitae derexisse, in ipso beneficio tuo maius, quam quod dederas, recepisti; tu enim me mihi rudem, inperitum dedisti, ego tibi filium, qualem genuisse gauderes.

[32] Aluit me pater. Si idem praesto, plus reddo, quia non tantum ali se, sed a filio ali gaudet et maiorem ex animo meo quam ex ipsa re percipit uoluptatem, illius alimenta ad corpus tantum meum peruenerunt. Quid? si quis in tantum processit, ut aut eloquentia per gentes notesceret aut iustitia aut bellicis rebus et patri quoque ingentem circumfunderet famam tenebrasque natalium suorum clara luce discuteret, non inaestimabile in parentes suos beneficium contulit? An quisquam Aristonem et Gryllum nisi propter Xenophontem ac Platonem filios nosset? Sophroniscum Socrates expirare non patitur. Ceteros enumerare longum est, qui durant ob nullam aliam causam, quam quod illos liberorum eximia uirtus tradidit posteris. Vtrum maius beneficium dedit M. Agrippae pater ne post Agrippam quidem notus, an patri dedit Agrippa nauali corona insignis, unicum adeptus inter dona militaria decus, qui tot in urbe maxima opera excitauit, quae et priorem magnificentiam uincerent et nulla postea uincerentur? Vtrum Octavius maius beneficium dedit filio an patri diuus Augustus, quamuis illum umbra adoptiui patris abscondit? Quantam cepisset uoluptatem, si illum post debellata arma ciuilia uidisset securae paci praesidentem, non agnoscens bonum suum nec satis credens, quotiens ad se respexisset, potuisse illum uirum in domo sua nasci! Quid nunc ceteros persequar, quos iam consumpsisset obliuio, nisi illos filiorum gloria e tenebris eruisset et adhuc in luce retineret? Deinde, cum quaeramus, non quis filius patri maiora beneficia reddiderit, quam a patre acceperat, sed an aliquis possit maiora reddere, etiam si, quae rettuli, exempla nondum satis faciunt nec beneficia parentum suorum superiaciunt: capit tamen hoc natura, quod nondum ulla aetas tulit. Si singula paternorum meritorum magnitudinem exuperare non possunt, plura in unum congesta superabunt.

[33] Seruauit in proelio patrem Scipio et praetextatus in hostes eum concitauit. Parum est, quod, ut perueniret ad patrem, tot pericula maximos duces cum maxime prementia contempsit, tot obpositas difficultates, quod ad primam pugnam exiturus tiro per ueteranorum corpora cucurrit, quod annos suos transiluit? Adice, ut idem patrem reum defendat et conspirationi inimicorum potentium eripiat, ut alterum illi consulatum ac tertium aliosque honores etiam consularibus concupiscendos congerat, ut pauperi raptas belli iure opes tradat et, quod est militaribus uiris speciosissimum, diuitem illum spoliis etiam hostilibus faciat. Si adhuc parum est, adice, ut prouincias et extraordinaria imperia continuet, adice, ut dirutis maximis urbibus Romani imperii sine aemulo ad ortus occasusque uenturi defensor et conditor maiorem nobilitatem nobili uiro adiciat, dici Scipionis patrem: dubium est, quin generandi uulgare beneficium uicerit eximia pietas et uirtus ipsi urbi nescio utrum maius praesidium adferens an decus? Deinde, si hoc parum est, finge aliquem tormenta patris discussisse, finge in se transtulisse. Licet tibi, in quantum uelis, extendere beneficia filii, cum paternum munus et simplex sit et facile et danti uoluptarium, quod necesse est ille multis dederit, etiam quibus dedisse se nescit, in quo consortem habet, in quo spectauit legem, patriam, praemia patrum, domus ac familiae perpetuitatem, omnia potius quam eum, quo i dabat. Quid? si quis sapientiam consecutus hanc patri tradiderit, etiam nunc

[34] ‘Sed patris’ inquit ‘beneficium est, quidquid facis, quidquid praestare illi potes.’ Et praeceptoris mei, quod institutis liberalibus profeci; ipsos tamen, qui tradiderunt illa, transcendimus, utique eos, qui prima elementa docuerunt, et quamuis sine illis nemo quicquam adsequi posset, non tamen, quantumcumque quis adsecutus est, infra illos est. Multum inter prima ac maxima interest, nec ideo prima maximorum instar sunt, quia sine primis maxima esse non possunt.

[35] Iam tempus est quaedam ex nostra, ut ita dicam, moneta proferre. Qui id beneficium dedit, quo est aliquid melius, potest uinci. Pater dedit filio uitam, est autem aliquid uita melius: ita pater uinci potest, quia dedit beneficium, quo est aliquid melius. Etiamnunc, qui dedit alicui uitam, si et semel et iterum liberatus est mortis periculo, maius accepit beneficium quam dedit; pater autem uitam dedit: potest ergo, si saepius periculo mortis liberatus a filio fuerit, maius beneficium accipere quam dedit. Qui beneficium accipit, maius accipit, quo magis eo indiget; magis autem indiget uita, qui uiuit, quam qui natus non est, ut qui ne indigere quidem omnino possit: maius ergo beneficium accipit pater, si uitam a filio accipit, quam filius a patre, quod natus est. ‘Patris beneficia uinci a filii beneficiis non possunt. Quare? Quia uitam accepit a patre, quam nisi accepisset, nulla dare beneficia potuisset.’ Hoc commune est patri cum omnibus, qui uitam alicui dederunt; non potuissent enim referre gratiam, nisi uitam accepissent. Ergo nec medico gratia in maius referri potest (solet enim et medicus uitam dare), nec nautae, si naufragum sustulit. Atqui et horum et aliorum, qui aliquo modo nobis uitam dederunt, beneficia uinci possunt: ergo et patrum possunt. Si quis mihi beneficium dedit, quod multorum beneficiis adiuuandum esset, ego autem illi beneficium dedi id, quod nullius egeret adiutorio, maius dedi quam accepi; pater filio uitam dedit perituram, nisi multa accessissent, quae illam tuerentur; filius patri si dedit uitam, dedit eam, quae nullius desideraret auxilium in hoc, ut permaneret: ergo maius beneficium accepit a filio pater, qui uitam accepit, quam ipse illi dedit.

est et anteire priores cupit. Alacrior erit pietas, si ad reddenda beneficia cum uincendi spe uenerit. Ipsis patribus id uolentibus laetisque contigerit, quoniam pleraque sunt, in quibus nostro bono uincimur. Vnde certamen tam optabile? unde tantam felicitatem parentibus, ut fateantur ipsos liberorum beneficiis inpares? Nisi hoc ita iudicamus, excusationem damus liberis et illos segniores ad referendam gratiam facimus, quibus stimulos adicere debemus et dicere:

‘Hoc agite, optimi iuuenes! Proposita est inter parentes ac liberos honesta contentio, dederint maiora an receperint. Non ideo uicerunt, quia occupauerunt; sumite modo animum, qualem decet, et deficere nolite: uincetis optantes. Nec desunt tam pulchro certamini duces, qui ad similia uos cohortentur ac per uestigia sua ire ad uictoriam saepe iam partam ex parentibus iubeant.

[37] Vicit Aeneas patrem, ipse eius <in> infantia leue tutumque gestamen, grauem senio per media hostium agmina et per cadentis circa se urbis ruinas ferens, cum complexus sacra ac penates deos religiosus senex non simplici uadentem sarcina premeret; tulit illum per ignes et (quid non pietas potest?) pertulit colendumque inter conditores Romani imperii posuit. Vicere Siculi iuuenes: cum Aetna maiore ui peragitata in urbes, in agros, in magnam insulae partem effudisset incendium, uexerunt parentes suos; discessisse creditum est ignes et utrimque flamma recedente limitem adapertum, per quem transcurrerent iuuenes dignissimi, qui magna tuto auderent. Vicit Antigonus, qui, cum ingenti proelio superasset hostem, praemium belli ad patrem transtulit et imperium illi Cypri tradidit; hoc est regnum nolle regnare, cum possis. Vicit patrem imperiosum quidem Manlius, qui, cum ante ad tempus relegatus esset a patre ob adulescentiam brutam et hebetem, ad tribunum plebis, qui patri suo diem dixerat, uenit petitoque tempore, quod ille dederat sperans fore proditorem parentis inuisi, (et bene meruisse se de iuvene credebat, cuius exilium pro grauissimo crimine inter alia Manlio obiebat) nanctus adulescens secretum stringit occultatum sinu ferrum et: “Nisi iuras” inquit “te diem patri remissurum, hoc te gladio transfodiam. In tua potestate est, utro modo pater meus accusatorem non habeat.” Iurauit tribunus nec fefellit et causam actionis omissae contioni reddidit. Nulli alii licuit inpune tribunum in ordinem redigere.

[38] Alia ex aliis exempla sunt eorum, qui parentes suos periculis eripuerint, qui ex infimo ad summum protulerint et e plebe aceruoque ignobili numquam tacendos saeculis dederint. Nulla ui uerborum, nulla ingenii facultate exprimi potest, quantum opus sit, quam laudabile quamque numquam memoria hominum exiturum, posse hoc dicere: “Parentibus meis parui, cessi imperio eorum, siue aecum siue inicum ac durum fuit, obsequentem submissumque me praebui; ad hoc unum contumax fui, ne beneficiis uincerer.” Certate, obsecro uos, et fessi quoque restituite aciem. Felices, qui uinent, felices, qui uinentur! Quid eo adulescente praeclarius, qui sibi ipsi dicere poterit (neque enim est fas alteri dicere): “Patrem meum beneficiis uici”? Quid eo fortunatius sene, qui omnibus ubique praedicabit a filio se suo beneficiis uictum? Quid autem est felicius quam ibi cedere?”

LIBER IV

1. Ex omnibus, quae tractavimus, Aebutii Liberalis, potest videri nihil tam necessarium aut magis, ut ait Sallustius, cum cura dicendum, quam quod in manibus est : an beneficium dare et in vicem gratiam referre per se res expetendae sint. [2] Inveniuntur, qui honesta in mercedem colant quibusque non placeat virtus gratuita; quae nihil habet in se magnificum, si quicquam venale. Quid enim est turpius, quam aliquem computare, quanti vir bonus sit, cum virtus nec lucro invitet nec absterreat damno adeoque neminem spe ac pollicitatione corrumpam ut contra impendere in se iubeat et saepius in ultro tributis sit? Calcatis ad illam utilitatibus eundum est; quocumque vocavit, quocumque misit, sine respectu rei familiaris, interdum etiam sine ulla sanguinis sui parsimonia vadendum nec umquam imperium eius detractandum. [3] “ Quid consequar,” inquit, “ si hoc fortiter, si hoc grate fecero? “ Quod feceris; nihil tibi extra promittitur. Si quid commodi forte obvenerit, inter accessiones numerabis. Rerum honestarum pretium in ipsis est. Si honestum per se expetendum est, beneficium autem honestum est, non potest alia eius condicio esse, cum eadem natura sit. Per se autem expetendum esse honestum saepe et abunde probatum est.

2. In hac parte nobis pugna est cum Epicureis, delicata et umbratica turba in convivio suo philosophantium, apud quos virtus voluptatum ministra est, illis paret, illis deservit, illas supra se videt. “ Non est,” inquit, “ voluptas sine virtute.” [2] Sed quare ante virtutem est? De ordine putas disputationem esse? De re tota et de potestate eius ambigitur. Non est virtus, si sequi potest; primae partes eius sunt, ducere debet, imperare, summo loco stare; tu illam iubes signum petere! “ Quid,” inquit, “ tua refert? [3] Et ego sine virtute nego beatam vitam posse constare. Ipsam voluptatem, quam sequor, cui me emancipavi, remota illa improbo et damno. De hoc uno disputatur, utrum virtus summi boni causa sit an ipsa summum bonum.” Ut hoc unum quaeratur, ordinis tantum existimas mutationem? Ista vero confusio est et manifesta caecitas primis postrema praeferre. [4] Non indignor, quod post voluptatem ponitur virtus, sed quod omnino cum voluptate, contemptrix eius et hostis et

3. Inserenda haec, mi Liberalis, fuerunt, quia beneficium, de quo nunc agitur, dare virtutis est et turpissimum id causa ullius alterius rei dare, quam ut datum sit. Nam si recipiendi spe tribueremus, locupletissimo cuique, non dignissimo daremus; nunc vero diviti importuno pauperem praeferimus. Non est beneficium, quod ad fortunam spectat. [2] Praeterea, si, ut prodessemus, sola nos invitaret utilitas, minime beneficia distribuere deberent, qui facillime possent, locupletes et potentes et reges aliena ope non indigentes; di vero tot munera, quae sine intermissione diebus ac noctibus fundunt, non darent; in omnia enim illis natura sua sufficit plenosque et tutos et inviolabiles praestat; nulli ergo beneficium dabunt, si una dandi causa est se intueri ac suum commodum. [3] Istud non beneficium, sed fenus est circumspicere, non ubi optime ponas, sed ubi quaestuosissime habeas, unde facillime tollas. Quod cum longe a dis remotum sit, sequitur, ut inliberales sint; nam si una beneficii dandi causa sit dantis utilitas, nulla autem ex nobis utilitas deo speranda est, nulla deo dandi beneficii causa est.

4. Scio, quid hoc loco respondeatur : “ Itaque non dat deus beneficia, sed securus et neclegens nostri, aversus a mundo aliud agit aut, quae maxima Epicuro felicitas videtur, nihil agit, nec magis illum beneficia quam iniuriae tangunt.” [2] Hoc qui dicit, non exaudit precantium voces et undique sublati in caelum manibus vota facientium privata ac publica; quod profecto non fieret, nec in hunc furorem omnes profecto mortales consensissent adloquendi surda numina et inefficaces deos, nisi nossemus illorum beneficia nunc oblata ultro, nunc orantibus data, magna, tempestiva, ingentes minas interventu suo solventia. [3] Quis est autem tam miser, tam neglectus, quis tam duro fato et in poenam genitus, ut non tantam deorum munificentiam senserit? Ipsos illos complorantes sortem suam et querulos circumspice : invenies non ex toto beneficiorum caelestium expertes, neminem esse, ad quem non aliquid ex illo benignissimo fonte manaverit. Parum est autem id, quod nascentibus ex aequo distribuitur? Ut quae secuntur inaequali dispensata mensura transeamus, parum dedit natura, cum se dedit?

5. “ Non dat deus beneficia.” Unde ergo ista, quae possides, quae das, quae negas, quae servas, quae rapis? Unde haec innumerabilia oculos, aures, animum mulcentia? Unde illa luxuriam quoque instruens copia (neque enim necessitatibus tantummodo nostris provisum est; usque in delicias amamus)? [2] Tot arbusta non uno modo frugifera, tot herbae salutare, tot varietates ciborum per totum annum digestae, ut inertibus quoque fortuita terrae alimenta praeberent? Iam animalia omnis generis, alia in sicco solidoque, alia in umido nascentia, alia per sublime demissa, ut omnis rerum naturae pars tributum aliquod nobis conferret? [3] Flumina haec amoenissimis flexibus campos cingentia, illa praebitura commercio viam vasto et navigabili cursu vadentia, ex quibus quaedam aestatis diebus mirabile incrementum trahunt, ut arida et ferventi subiecta caelo loca subita vis aestivi torrentis irriget? Quid mercatorum torrentium venae? Quid in ipsis litoribus aquarum calentium exundatio? Te, Lari maxime, teque, fluctibus et fremitu adsurgens, Benace, marino?

6. Si pauca quis tibi donasset iugera, accepisse te diceres beneficium; immensa terrarum late patentium spatia negas esse beneficium? Si pecuniam tibi aliquis donaverit et arcam tuam, quoniam tibi id magnum videtur, impleverit, beneficium vocabis; tot metalla deus defodit, tot flumina emisit terra, super quae decurrunt sola, aurum vehentia; argenti, aeris, ferri immane pondus omnibus locis obrutum, cuius investigandi tibi facultatem dedit, ac latentium divitiarum in summa terra signa disposuit : negas te accepisse beneficium? [2] Si domus tibi donetur, in qua marmoris aliquid resplendeat et tectum nitidi us auro aut coloribus sparsum, non mediocri munus vocabis. Ingens tibi domicilium sine ullo incendii aut ruinae metu struxit, in quo vides non tenues crustas et ipsa, qua secantur, laminae gracili ores, sed integras lapidis pretiosissimi moles, sed totas variae distinctaeque materiae, cuius tu parvula frusta miraris, tectum vero aliter nocte, aliter interdiu fulgens : negas te ullum munus accepisse? [3] Et cum ista, quae habes, magno aestimes, quod est ingrati hominis, nulli debere te iudicas? Unde tibi istum, quem trahis, spiritum? Unde istam, per quam actus vitae tuae disponis atque ordinas, lucem? Unde sanguinem, cuius cursu vitalis continetur calor? Unde ista palatum tuum saporibus exquisitis ultra satietatem lacessentia? Unde haec irritamenta iam lassae voluptatis? Unde ista quies, in qua putrescis ac marces? [4] Nonne, si gratus es, dices : Deus nobis haec otia fecit, namque erit ille mihi semper deus, illius aram saepe tener nostris ab ovilibus inbuet agnus, ille meas errare boves, ut cernis, et ipsum ludere, quae vellem, calamo permisit agresti. [5] Ille deus est, non qui paucas boves, sed qui per totum orbem armenta dimisit, qui gregibus ubique passim vagantibus pabulum praestat, qui pascua hibernis aestiva substituit, qui non calamo tantum cantare et agreste atque inconditum carmen ad aliquam tamen observationem modulari docuit, sed tot artes, tot vocum varietates, tot sonos alios spiritu nostro, alios externo cantus edituros commentus est. [6] Neque enim nostra ista, quae invenimus, dixeris, non magis, quam quod crescimus, quam quod ad constitutum temporum sua corpori officia respondent : nunc puerilium dentium lapsus, nunc ad surgentem iam aetatem et in robustiorem gradum transeuntem pubertas et ultimus ille dens surgenti iuventae terminum ponens. Insita sunt nobis omnium aetatum, omnium artium semina, magisterque ex occulto deus producit ingenia.

7. “ Natura,” inquit, “ haec mihi praestat.” Non intellegis te, cum hoc dicis, mutare nomen deo? Quid enim aliud est natura quam deus et divina ratio toti mundo partibusque eius inserta? Quotiens voles, tibi licet aliter hunc auctorem rerum nostrarum compellare; et Iovem illum Optimum ac Maximum rite dices et Tonantem et Statorem, qui non, ut historici tradiderunt, ex eo, quod post votum susceptum acies Romanorum fugientium stetit, sed quod stant beneficio eius omnia, stator stabilitorque est. Hunc eundem et Fatum si dixeris, non mentieris; [2] nam cum fatum nihil aliud sit, quam series implexa causarum, ille est prima omnium causa, ex qua ceterae pendent. Quaecumque voles, illi nomina proprie aptabis vim aliquam effectumque caelestium rerum continentia : tot appellationes eius possunt esse, quot munera.

8. Hunc et Liberum patrem et Herculem ac Mercurium nostri putant : Liberum patrem, quia omnium parens sit, cui primum inventa seminum vis est vitae consultura per voluptatem; Herculem, quia vis eius invicta sit quandoque lassata fuerit operibus editis, in ignem recessura; Mercurium, quia ratio penes illum est numerusque et ordo et scientia. Quocumque te flexeris, ibi illum videbis occurrentem tibi; [2] nihil ab illo vacat, opus suum ipse implet. Ergo nihil agis, ingratisse mortalium, qui te negas deo debere, sed naturae, quia nec natura sine deo est nec deus sine natura, sed idem est utrumque, distat officio. [3] Si, quod a Seneca accepisses, Annaeo te debere diceres vel Lucio, non creditorem mutares, sed nomen, quoniam, sive praenomen eius sive nomen dixisses sive cognomen, idem tamen ille esset. Sic nunc naturam voca, fatum, fortunam; omnia eiusdem dei nomina sunt varie utentis sua potestate. Et iustitia, probitas, prudentia, fortitudo, frugalitas unius animi bona sunt; quidquid horum tibi placuit, animus placet.

9. Sed ne aliam disputationem ex obliquo habeam, plurima beneficia ac maxima in nos deus defert sine spe recipiendi, quoniam nec ille conlato eget nec nos ei quidquam conferre possumus; ergo beneficium per se expetenda res est. Una spectatur in eo accipientis utilitas; ad hanc accedamus sepositis commodis nostris. [2] “Dicitis,” inquit, “diligenter eligendos, quibus beneficia demus, quia ne agricolae quidem semina harenis committant; quod si verum est, nostram utilitatem in beneficiis dandis sequimur, quemadmodum in arando serendoque; neque enim serere per se res expetenda est. Praeterea quaeritis, ubi et quomodo detis beneficium, quod non esset faciendum, si per se beneficium dare expetenda res esset, quoniam, quocumque loco et quocumque modo daretur, beneficium erat.” [3] Honestum propter nullam aliam causam quam propter ipsum sequimur; tamen, etiam si nihil aliud sequendum est, quaerimus, quid faciamus et quando et quemadmodum; per haec enim constat. Itaque, cum eligo, cui dem beneficium, id ago, ut quandoque beneficium sit, quia, si turpi datur, nec honestum esse potest nec beneficium.

10. Depositum reddere per se res expetenda est; non tamen semper reddam nec quolibet loco nec quolibet tempore. Aliquando nihil interest, utrum infitier an palam reddam. Intuebor utilitatem eius, cui redditurus sum, et nociturum illi depositum negabo. Idem in beneficio faciam. [2] Videbo, quando dem, cui dem, quemadmodum, quare. Nihil enim sine ratione faciendum est; non est autem beneficium, nisi quod ratione datur, quoniam ratio omnis honesti comes est. Quam saepe hominum donationem suam inconsultam obiurgantium hanc exaudimus vocem: [3] “Mallem perdidisse quam illi dedisse “! Turpissimum genus damni est inconsulta donatio multoque gravius male dedisse beneficium quam non recepisse; aliena enim culpa est, quod non recipimus; quod, cui daremus, non elegimus, nostra. [4] In electione nihil minus quam hoc, quod tu existimas, spectabo, a quo recepturus sim; elige enim eum, qui gratus, non qui redditurus sit, saepe autem et non redditurus gratus est et ingratus, qui reddidit. [5] Ad animum tendit aestimatio mea; ideo locupletem sed indignum praeteribo, pauperi viro bono dabo; erit enim in summa inopia gratus et, cum omnia illi deerunt, supererit animus.

11. Non lucrum ex beneficio capto, non voluptatem, non gloriam; uni placere contentus in hoc dabo, ut quod oportet faciam. Quod oportet autem non est sine electione. Quae qualis futura sit, interrogas? Eligam virum integrum, simplicem, memorem, gratum, alieni abstinenter, sui non avare tenacem, benevolum; hunc ego cum elegero, licet nihil illi fortuna tribuat, ex quo referre gratiam possit, ex sententia gesta res erit. [2] Si utilitas me et sordida computatio liberalem facit, si nulli prosum, nisi ut in vicem ille mihi prosit, non dabo beneficium proficiscenti in diversas longinquasque regiones, afuturo semper; non dabo sic adfecto, ut spes ei nulla sit convalescendi; non dabo ipse deficiens, non enim habeo recipiendi tempus. [3] Atqui ut scias rem per se expetendam esse bene facere, advenis modo in nostrum delatis portum, statim abituris, succurrimus; ignoto naufrago navem, qua revehatur, et damus et struimus. Discedit ille vix satis noto salutis auctore et numquam amplius in conspectum nostrum reversurus debitores nobis deos delegat precaturque, illi pro se gratiam referant; interim nos iuvat sterilis beneficii conscientia. Quid? [4] cum in ipso vitae fine constitimus, cum testamentum ordinamus, non beneficia nihil nobis profutura dividimus? Quantum temporis consumitur, quam diu secreto agitur, quantum et quibus demus! Quid enim interest, quibus demus a nullo recepturi? [5] Atqui numquam diligentius damus, numquam magis iudicia nostra torquemus, quam ubi remotis utilitatibus solum ante oculos honestum stetit, tam diu officiorum mali iudices, quam diu illa depravat spes ac metus et inertissimum vitium, voluptas. Ubi mors interclusit omnia et ad ferendam sententiam incorruptum iudicem misit, quaerimus dignissimos, quibus nostra tradamus, nec quicquam cura sanctiore componimus, quam quod ad nos non pertinet. At mehercules tunc magna voluptas subit cogitantem : [6] “ Hunc ego locupletiore faciam, et huius dignitati adiectis opibus aliquid splendoris adfundam.” Si non damus beneficia nisi recepturi, intestatis moriendum sit!

12. “Dicitis,” inquit, “beneficium creditum insolubile esse; creditum autem non est res per se expetenda.” Cum creditum dicimus, imagine et translatione utimur; sic enim et legem dicimus iusti iniustique regulam esse, et regula non est res per se expetenda. Ad haec verba demonstrandae rei causa descendimus; eum dico creditum, intellegitur tamquam creditum. Vis scire? Adicio insolubile, eum creditum nullum non solvi aut possit aut debeat. [2] Adeo beneficium utilitatis causa dandum non est, ut saepe, quemadmodum dixi, cum damno ac periculo dandum sit. Sic latronibus circumventum defendo, ut tuto transire permittatur; reum gratia laborantem tueor et hominum potentium factionem in me converto, quas illi detraxero sordes, sub accusatoribus isdem fortasse sumpturus, cum abire in partem alteram possim et securus spectare aliena certamina; spondeo pro iudicato et suspensis amici bonis libellum deicio creditoribus eius me obligaturus; ut possim servare proscriptum, ipse proscriptionis periculum adeo. [3] Nemo Tusculanum aut Tiburtinum paraturus salubritatis causa et aestivi secessus, quoto anno empturus sit, disputat; cum erit, tuendum est. [4] Eadem in beneficio ratio est; nam cum interrogaveris, quid reddat, respondebo : bonam conscientiam. Quid reddat beneficium? Dic tu mihi, quid reddat iustitia, quid innocentia, quid magnitudo animi, quid pudicitia, quid temperantia; si quicquam praeter ipsas, ipsas non petis. In quid mundus vices suas solvit? [5] In quid sol diem extendit et contrahit? Omnia ista beneficia sunt, fiunt enim nobis profutura. Quomodo mundi officium est circumagere rerum ordinem, quomodo solis loca mutare, ex quibus oriatur, in quae cadat, et haec salutaria nobis facere sine praemio, ita viri officium est inter alia et beneficium dare. Quare ergo dat? Ne non det, ne occasionem bene faciendi perdat.

13. Vobis voluptas est inertis otii facere corpusculum et securitatem sopitis simillimam appetere et sub densa umbra latitare tenerrimisque cogitationibus, quas tranquillitatem vocatis, animi marcentis obiectare torporem et cibis potionibusque intra hortorum latebram corpora ignavia pallentia saginare; [2] nobis voluptas est dare beneficia vel laboriosa, dum aliorum labores levant, vel periculosa, dum alios periculis extrahant, vel rationes nostras adgravatura, dum aliorum necessitates et angustias laxent. [3] Quid mea interest, an recipiam beneficia? Etiam cum recepero, danda sunt. Beneficium eius commodum spectat, cui praestatur, non nostrum; alioquin nobis illud damus. Itaque multa, quae summam utilitatem aliis adferunt, pretio gratiam perdunt. Mercator urbibus prodest, medicus aegris, mango venalibus; sed omnes isti, quia ad alienum commodum pro suo veniunt, non obligant eos, quibus prosunt. Non est beneficium, quod in quaestum mittitur. “ Hoc dabo et hoc recipiam “ auctio est.

14. Non dicam pudicam, quae amatorem ut incenderet reppulit, quae aut legem aut virum timuit; ut ait Ovidius : Quae, quia non licuit, non dedit, illa dedit. Non immerito in numerum peccantium refertur, quae pudicitiam timori praestitit, non sibi. Eodem modo, qui beneficium ut reciperet dedit, non dedit. [2] Ergo et nos beneficium damus animalibus, quae aut usui aut alimento futura nutrimus! Beneficium damus arbustis, quae colimus, ne siccitate aut immoti et neglecti soli duritia laborent! [3] Nemo ad agrum colendum ex aequo et bono venit nec ad ullam rem, cuius extra ipsam fructus est; ad beneficium dandum non adducit cogitatio avara nec sordida, sed humana, liberalis, cupiens dare, etiam eum dederit, et augere novis ac recentibus vetera, unum habens propositum, quanto ei, cui praestat, bono futura sit; alioqui humile est, sine laude, sine gloria, prodesse, quia expedit. [4] Quid magnifici est se amare, sibi parcere, sibi acquirere? Ab omnibus istis vera beneficii dandi cupido avocat, ad detrimentum iniecta manu trahit et utilitates relinquit ipso bene faciendi opere laetissima.

15. Numquid dubium est, quin contraria sit beneficio iniuria? Quomodo iniuriam facere per se vitanda ac fugienda res est, sic beneficium dare per se expetenda. Illic turpitudine contra omnia praemia in scelus hortantia valet; ad hoc invitat honesti per se efficax species. [2] Non mentiar, si dixero neminem non amare beneficia sua, neminem non ita compositum animo, ut libentius eum videat, in quem multa congessit, cui non causa sit iterum dandi beneficii semel dedisse. Quod non accideret, nisi ipsa nos delectarent beneficia. Quam saepe dicentem audias : [3] “ Non sustineo illum deserere, cui dedi vitam, quem e periculo eripui. Rogat me, ut causam suam contra homines gratiosos agam; nolo, sed quid faciam? Iam illi semel, iterum adfui.” Non vides inesse isti rei propriam quandam vim, quae nos dare beneficia cogit, primum quia oportet, deinde quia dedimus?

16. Idem isti gratiam referre ipsos fatentur, non quia honestum est, sed quia utile. Quod non esse ita minore opera probandum est, quia, quibus argumentis collegimus beneficium dare per se rem expetendam esse, isdem etiam hoc colligimus. [2] Fixum illud est, a quo in cetera probationes nostrae exeunt, honestum ob nullam aliam causam, quam quia honestum sit, coli. Quis ergo controversiam facere audebit, an gratum esse honestum sit? Quis non ingratum detestetur, hominem sibi ipsum inutilem? Quid autem cum tibi narratur, “ Adversus summa beneficia amici sui ingratus est,” quomodo adficeris? Utrum tamquam rem turpem fecerit, an tamquam rem utilem sibi et profuturam omiserit? Puto, nequam hominem existimas, cui poena, non cui curatore opus sit; quod non accideret, nisi gratum esse per se expetendum honestumque esset. [3] Alia fortasse minus dignitatem suam praeferunt et, an sint honesta, interprete egent. Hoc expositum est pulchriusque, quam ut splendor eius dubie ac parum luceat. Quid tam laudabile, quid tam aequaliter in omnium animos receptum quam referre bene meritis gratiam?

17. Ad hoc, dic mihi, quae causa nos perducit? Lucrum? Quod qui non contemnit, ingratus est. Ambitio? Et quae iactatio est solvisse, quod debeas? Metus? Nullus ingrato; huic enim uni rei non posuimus legem, tamquam satis natura cavisset. [2] Quomodo nulla lex amare parentes, indulgere liberis iubet (supervacuum est enim, in quod imus, impelli), quemadmodum nemo in amorem sui cohortandus est, quem adeo, dum nascitur, trahit, ita ne ad hoc quidem, ut honesta per se petat; placent suapte natura, adeoque gratiosa virtus est, ut insitum sit etiam malis probare meliora. Quis est, qui non beneficus videri velit, qui non inter scelera et iniurias opinionem bonitatis adfectet, qui non ipsis, quae impotentissime fecit, speciem aliquam induat recti velitque etiam his videri beneficium dedisse, quos laesit? [3] Gratias itaque agi sibi ab iis, quos adflixere, patiuntur bonosque se ac liberales fingunt, quia praestare non possunt. Quod non facerent, nisi illos honesti et per se expetendi amor cogeret moribus suis opinionem contrariam quaerere et nequitiam abdere, cuius fructus concupiscitur, ipsa vero odio pudorque est; nec quisquam tantum a naturae lege descivit et hominem exuit, ut animi causa malus sit. [4] Dic enim cuilibet ex istis, qui rapto vivunt, an ad illa, quae latrociniiis et furtis consecuntur, malint ratione bona pervenire : optabit ille, cui grassari et transeuntes percutere quaestus est, potius illa invenire quam eripere; neminem reperies, qui non nequitiae praemiis sine nequitia frui malit. Maximum hoc habemus naturae meritum, quod virtus lumen suum in omnium animos permittit; etiam, qui non secuntur illam, vident.

18. Ut scias per se expetendam esse grati animi adfectionem, per se fugienda res est ingratum esse, quoniam nihil aequae concordiam humani generis dissociat ac distrahit quam hoc vitium. Nam quo alio tuti sumus, quam quod mutuis iuvamur officiis? Hoc uno instructor vita contraque incursiones subitas munitior est, beneficiorum commercio. [2] Fac nos singulos, quid sumus? Praeda animalium et victimae ac bellissimus et facillimus sanguis. Quoniam ceteris animalibus in tutelam sui satis virium est, quaecumque vaga nascebantur et actura vitam segregem, armata sunt, hominem imbecilla cutis cingit; non unguium vis, non dentium terribilem ceteris fecit, nudum et infirmum societas munit. Duas deus res dedit, quae illum obnoxium validissimum facerent, rationem et societatem; itaque, qui par esse nulli posset, si seduceretur, rerum potitur. [3] Societas illi dominium omnium animalium dedit; societas terris genitum in alienae naturae transmisit imperium et dominari etiam in mari iussit; hoc morborum impetus arcuit, senectuti adminicula prospexit, solacia contra dolores dedit; hoc fortes nos facit, quod licet contra fortunam advocare. [4] Hanc societatem tolle, et unitatem generis humani, qua vita sustinetur, scindes; tolletur autem, si efficis, ut ingratus animus non per se vitandus sit, sed quia aliquid illi timendum est; quam multi enim sunt, quibus ingratissimum esse tuto licet! Denique ingratum voco, quisquis metu gratus est.

19. Deos nemo sanus timet; furor est enim metuere salutaria, nec quisquam amat, quos timet. Tu denique. Epicure, deum inermem facis, omnia illi tela, omnem detraxisti potentiam et, ne cuiquam metuendus esset, proiecisti illum extra metum. [2] Hunc igitur insaeptum ingenti quidem et inexplicabili muro divisumque a contactu et a conspectu mortalium non habes quare verearis; nulla illi nec tribuendi nec nocendi materia est; in medio intervallo huius et alterius caeli desertus sine animali, sine homine, sine re ruinas mundorum supra se circaque se cadentium evitat non exaudiens vota nec nostri curiosus. [3] Atqui hunc vis videri colere non aliter quam parentem grato, ut opinor, animo; aut, si non vis gratus videri, quia nullum habes illius beneficium, sed te atomi et istae micae tuae forte ac temere conglobaverunt, cur colis? [4] “ Propter maiestatem,” inquis, “ eius eximiam ac singularem naturam.” Ut concedam tibi, nempe hoc facis nullo pretio inductus, nulla spe; est ergo aliquid per se expetendum, cuius te ipsa dignitas ducit, id est honestum. Quid est autem honestius, quam gratum esse? Huius virtutis materia tam late patet quam vita.

20. “ Sed inest,” inquit, “ huic bono etiam utilitas aliqua.” Cui enim virtuti non inest? Sed id propter se expeti dicitur, quod, quamvis habeat aliqua extra commoda, sepositis quoque illis ac remotis placet. Prodest gratum esse; ero tamen gratus, etiam si nocet. Gratus quid sequitur? [2] Ut haec res illi alios amicos, alia beneficia conciliet? Quid ergo? Si quis sibi offensas concitaturus est, si quis intellegit adeo per hoc se nihil consecuturum, ut multa etiam ex reposito adquisitoque perdenda sint, non libens in detrimenta descendit? [3] Ingratus est, qui in referenda gratia secundum datum videt, qui sperat, cum reddit. Ingratum voco, qui aegro adsidit, quia testamentum facturus est, cui de hereditate aut de legato vacat cogitare. Faciat licet omnia, quae facere bonus amicus et memor officii debet : si animo eius obversatur spes lucri, captator est et hamum iacit. Ut aves, quae laceratione corporum aluntur, lassa morbo pecora et casura ex proximo speculantur, ita hic imminet morti et circa cadaver volat.

21. Gratus animus ipsa virtute propositi sui capitur. Vis scire hoc ita esse nec illum utilitate corrumpi? Duo genera sunt grati hominis. Dicitur gratus, qui aliquid pro eo, quod acceperat, reddidit; hic fortasse ostentare se potest, habet, quod iacet, quod proferat. Dicitur gratus, qui bono animo accepit beneficium, bono debet; hic intra conscientiam elusus est. [2] Quae illi contingere potest utilitas ex adfectu latenti? Atqui hic, etiam si ultra facere nil potest, gratus est. Amat, debet, referre gratiam cupit; quidquid ultra desideras, non ipse deest. [3] Artifex est etiam, cui ad exercendam artem instrumenta non suppetunt, nec minus canendi peritus, cuius vocem exaudiri fremitus obstrepentium non sinit. Volo referre gratiam : post hoc aliquid superest mihi, non ut gratus, sed ut solutus sim; saepe enim et qui gratiam rettulit, ingratus est, et qui non rettulit, gratus. Nam ut omnium aliarum virtutum, ita huius ad animum tota aestimatio redit; hic si in officio est, quidquid defuit, fortuna peccat. [4] Quomodo est disertus etiam qui tacet, fortis etiam qui compressis manibus vel etiam adligatis, quomodo gubernator etiam, qui in sicco est, quia consummatae scientiae nihil deest, etiam si quid obstat, quominus se utatur, ita gratus est etiam, qui vult tantum nec habet huius voluntatis suae ullum alium quam se testem. Immo amplius adiciam : [5] est aliquando gratus etiam qui ingratus videtur, quem mala interpretes opinio contrarium tradidit. Hic quid aliud sequitur quam ipsam conscientiam? Quae etiam obruta delectat, quae contioni ac famae reclamationis et in se omnia reponit et, cum ingentem ex altera parte turbam contra sentientium adspexit, non numerat suffragia, sed una sententia vincit. [6] Si vero bonam fidem perfidiae suppliciiis adfici videt, non descendit e fastigio et supra poenam suam consistit. “Habeo,” inquit, “ quod volui, quod petii; nec paenitet nec paenitebit nec ulla iniquitate me eo fortuna perducet, ut hanc vocem audiat : ‘ Quid mihi volui? Quid nunc mihi prodest bona voluntas? ‘ “ Prodest et in eculeo, prodest et in igne; qui si singulis membris admoveatur et paulatim vivum corpus circumeat, licet ipsum cor plenum bona conscientia stillet : placebit illi ignis, per quem bona fides conlucebit.

22. Nunc illud quoque argumentum quamvis dictum iam reducatur : quid est, quare grati velimus esse, cum morimur, quare singulorum perpendamus officia, quare id agamus in omnem vitam nostram memoria decernente, ne cuius officii videamur oblitus? Nihil iam superest, quo spes porrigatur; in illo tamen cardine positi abire e rebus humanis quam gratissimi volumus. [2] Est videlicet magna in ipso opere merces rei et ad adliciendas mentes hominum ingens honesti potentia, cuius pulchritudo animos circumfundit et delenitos admiratione luminis ac fulgoris sui rapit. [3] At multa hoc commoda oriuntur, et tutior est vita melioribus amorque et secundum bonorum iudicium aetasque securior, quam innocentia, quam grata mens prosequitur. Fuisset enim iniquissima rerum natura, si hoc tantum bonum miserum et anceps et sterile fecisset. Sed illud intuere, an ad istam virtutem, quae saepe tuta ac facili aditur via, etiam per saxa et rupes et feris ac serpentibus obsessum iter fueris iturus. [4] Non ideo per se non est expetendum, cui aliquid extra quoque emolumenti adhaeret; fere enim pulcherrima quaeque multis et adventiciis comitata sunt dotibus, sed illas trahunt, ipsa praecedunt.

23. Num dubium est, quin hoc humani generis domicilium circumitus solis ac lunae vicibus suis temperet? Quin alterius calore alantur corpora, terrae relaxentur, immodici umores comprimantur, adligantis omnia hiemis tristitia frangatur, alterius tepore efficaci et penetrabili regatur maturitas frugum? Quin ad huius cursum fecunditas humana respondeat? Quin ille annum observabilem fecerit circumactu suo, haec mensem minoribus se spatiis flectens? [2] Ut tamen detrahas ista, non erat ipse sol idoneum oculis spectaculum dignusque adorari, si tantum praeteriret? Non erat digna suspectu luna, etiam si otiosum sidus transcurreret? Ipse mundus, quotiens per noctem ignes suos fudit et tantum stellarum innumerabilium refulsit, quem non intentum in se tenet? Quis sibi illa tunc, cum miratur, prodesse cogitat? [3] Adspice ista tanto superne coetu labentia, quemadmodum velocitatem suam sub specie stantis atque immoti operis abscondant. Quantum ista nocte, quam tu in numerum ac discrimen dierum observas, agitur! Quanta rerum turba sub hoc silentio evolvitur! [4] Quantam factorum seriem certus limes educit! Ista, quae tu non aliter, quam in decorem sparsa consideras, singula in opere sunt. Nec enim est, quod existimes septem sola discurrere, cetera haerere; paucorum motus comprehendimus, innumerabiles vero longiusque a conspectu seducti di eunt redeuntque, et ex his, qui oculos nostros patiuntur, plerique obscuro gradu pergunt et per occultum aguntur.

24. Quid ergo? Non caperis tantae molis adspectu, etiam si te non tegat, non custodiat, non foveat generetque ac spiritu suo riget? Quemadmodum haec cum primum usum habeant et necessaria vitaliaque sint, maiestas tamen eorum totam mentem occupat, ita omnis illa virtus et in primis grati animi multum quidem praestat, sed non vult ob hoc diligi; amplius quiddam in se habet nec satis ab eo intellegitur a quo inter utilia numeratur. [2] Gratus est, quia expedit? Ergo et quantum expedit? Non recipit sordidum virtus amatorem; soluto ad illam sinu veniendum est. Ingratus hoc cogitat: “ Volebam gratiam referre, sed timeo impensam, timeo periculum, vereor offensam; faciam potius, quod expedit.” Non potest eadem ratio et gratum facere et ingratum; ut diversa illorum opera, ita diversa inter se proposita sunt. Ille ingratus est, quamvis non oporteat, quia expedit; hic gratus est, quamvis non expediat, quia oportet.

25. Propositum est nobis secundum rerum naturam vivere et deorum exemplum sequi. Di autem, quodcumque faciunt, in eo quid praeter ipsam faciendi rationem secuntur? Nisi forte illos existimas fructum operum suorum ex fumo extorum et turis odore percipere! [2] Vide, quanta cotidie moliantur, quanta distribuant; quantis terras fructibus impleant, quam opportunis et in omnes oras ferentibus ventis maria permoveant, quantis imbribus repente deiectis solum molliant venasque fontium arentes redintegrent et infuso per occulta nutrimento novent. Omnia ista sine mercede, sine ullo ad ipsos perveniente commodo faciunt. [3] Hoc nostra quoque ratio, si ab exemplari suo non aberrat, servet, ne ad res honestas conducta veniat. Pudeat ullum venale esse beneficium: gratuitos habemus deos!

26. “ Si deos,” inquit, “ imitaris, da et ingratis beneficia; nam et sceleratis sol oritur et piratis patent maria.” Hoc loco interrogant, an vir bonus daturus sit beneficium ingrato sciens ingratum esse. Permite mihi aliquid interloqui, ne interrogatione insidiosa capiamur. [2] Duos ex constitutione Stoica accipe ingratos. Alter est ingratus, quia stultus est; stultus etiam malus est; quia malus est, nullo vitio caret : ergo et ingratus est. Sic omnes malos intemperantes dicimus, avaros, luxuriosos, malignos, non quia omnia ista singulis magna et nota vitia sunt, sed quia esse possunt; et sunt, etiam si latent. Alter est ingratus, qui volgo dicitur, in hoc vitium natura propensus. [3] Illi ingrato, qui sic hac culpa non caret, quomodo nulla caret, dabit beneficium vir bonus; nulli enim dare poterit, si tales homines submoverit. Huic ingrato, qui beneficiorum fraudator est et in hanc partem procubuit animo, non magis dabit beneficium, quam decoctori pecuniam credet aut depositum committet ei, qui iam pluribus abnegavit.

27. Timidus dicitur aliquis, quia stultus est: et hoc malos sequitur, quos indiscreta et universa vitia circumstant; dicitur timidus proprie natura etiam ad inanes sonos pavidus. Stultus omnia vitia habet, sed non in omnia natura pronus est; alius in avaritiam, alius in luxuriam, alius in petulantiam inclinatur. [2] Itaque errant illi, qui interrogant Stoicos : “ Quid ergo? Achilles timidus est? Quid ergo? Aristides, cui iustitia nomen dedit, iniustus est? Quid ergo? Et Fabius, qui ‘ cunctando restituit rem,’ temerarius est? Quid ergo? Decius mortem timet? Mucius proditor est? Camillus desertor? “ Non hoc dicimus sic omnia vitia esse in omnibus, quomodo in quibusdam singula eminent, sed malum ac stultum nullo vitio vacare; ne audacem quidem timoris absol- vimus, ne prodigum quidem avaritia liberamus. [3] Quomodo homo omnes sensus habet nec ideo tamen omnes homines aciem habent Lynceo similem, sic, qui stultus est, non tam acria et concitata habet omnia, quam quidam quaedam. Omnia in omnibus vitia sunt, sed non omnia in singulis extant. Hunc natura ad avaritiam impellit; hic vino, hic libidini deditus est aut, si nondum deditus, ita formatus, ut in hoc illum mores sui ferant. Itaque, ut ad propositum revertar, nemo non ingratus est, qui malus : [4] habet enim omnia nequitiae semina; tamen proprie ingratus appellatur, qui ad hoc vitium vergit. Huic ergo beneficium non dabo. [5] Quomodo male filiae suae consulet, qui illam contumeliose et saepe repudiate collocavit, malus pater familiae habebitur, qui negotiorum gestorum damnato patrimonii sui curam mandaverit, quomodo dementissime testabitur, qui tutorem filio reliquerit pupillorum spoliatorem, sic pessime beneficia dare dicetur, quicumque ingratos eligit, in quos peritura conferat.

28. “ Di quoque,” inquit, “ multa ingratissimis tribuunt.” Sed illa bonis paraverunt; contingunt autem etiam malis, quia separari non possunt. Sati- us est autem prodesse etiam malis propter bonos, quam bonis deesse propter malos. Ita, quae refert, diem, solem, hiemis aestatisque cursus et media veris autumnique temperamento imbres et fontium haustus, ventorum statos flatus pro universis in- venerunt; excerpere singulos non potuerunt. [2] Rex honores dignis dat, congiarium et indignis; frumentum publicum tam fur quam periurus et adulter accipiunt et sine dilectu morum, quisquis incisus est; quidquid aliud est, quod tamquam civi, non tamquam bono datur, ex aequo boni ac mali ferunt. [3] Deus quoque quaedam munera universo humano generi dedit, a quibus excluditur nemo. Nec enim poterat fieri, ut ventus bonis viris secundus esset, contrarius malis, communi autem bono erat patere commercium maris et regnum humani generis relaxari; nec poterat lex casuris imbribus dici, ne in malorum improborum- que rura defluerent. Quaedam in medio ponuntur. [4] Tam bonis quam malis conduntur urbes; monumenta ingeniorum et ad indignos perventura publicavit editio; medicina etiam sceleratis opem monstrat; compositiones remediorum salutarium nemo suppressit, ne sanarentur indigni. [5] In iis exige censuram et personarum aestimationem, quae separatim tamquam digno dantur, non in his, quae promiscue turbam admittunt. Multum enim refert, utrum aliquem non excludas an eligas. Ius et furi dicitur; pace et homicidae fruuntur; sua repetunt etiam, qui aliena rapuerunt; percussores et domi ferrum exercentes murus ab hoste defendit; legum praesidio, qui pluri- mum in illas peccaverunt, protegentur. [6] Quaedam non poterant ceteris contingere, nisi universis darentur; non est itaque, quod de istis disputes, ad quae publice invitati sumus. Illud, quod iudicio meo ad aliquem pervenire debebit, ei, quem esse ingratum sciam, non dabo.

29. “Ergo,” inquit, “nec consilium deliberanti dabis ingrato nec aquam haurire permittes nec viam monstrabis erranti? An haec quidem facies, sed nihil donabis?” Distinguae istud, certe temptabo distinguere. [2] Beneficium est opera utilis, sed non omnis opera utilis beneficium est; quaedam enim tam exigua sunt, ut beneficii nomen non occupent. Duae res coire debent, quae beneficium efficiant. Primum rei magnitudo; quaedam enim sunt infra huius nominis mensuram. Quis beneficium dixit quadram panis aut stipem aeris abiecti aut ignis accendendi factam potestatem? Et interdum ista plus prosunt, quam maxima; sed tamen vilitas sua illis, etiam ubi temporis necessitate facta sunt neces- saria, detrahit pretium. [3] Deinde hoc, quod potentissimum est, oportet accedat, ut eius causa faciam, ad quem volam pervenire beneficium, dignumque eum iudicem et libens id tribuam percipiensque ex munere meo gaudium, quorum nihil est in istis, de quibus loquebamur; non enim tamquam dignis illa tribuimus, sed neclegenter tamquam parva, et non homini damus, sed humanitati.

30. Aliquando daturum me etiam indignis quaedam non negaverim in honorem aliorum, sicut in petendis honoribus quosdam turpissimos nobilitas industriis sed novis praetulit non sine ratione. Sacra est magnarum virtutum memoria, et esse plures bonos iuvat, si gratia bonorum non cum ipsis cadit. Ciceronem filium quae res consulem fecit nisi pater? [2] Cinnam nuper quae res ad consulatum recepit ex hostium castris, quae Sex. Pompeium aliosque Pompeios, nisi unius viri magnitudo tanta quondam, ut satis alte omnes suos etiam ruina eius attolleret? Quid nuper Fabium Persicum, cuius osculum etiam impudici denotabant, sacerdotem non in uno collegio fecit nisi Verrucosi et Allobrogici et illi trecenti, qui hostium incursioni pro re publica unam domum obiecerant? [3] Hoc debemus virtutibus, ut non praesentes solum illas, sed etiam ablatas e conspectu colamus; quomodo illae id egerunt, ut non in unam aetatem prodessent, sed beneficia sua etiam post ipsas relinquerent, ita nos non una aetate grati simus. Hic magnos viros genuit : dignus est beneficiis, qualis- cumque est; dignos dedit. [4] Hic egregiis maioribus ortus est : qualiscumque est, sub umbra suorum lateat. Ut loca sordida repercussu solis illustrantur, ita inertes maiorum suorum luce resplendeant.

31. Excusare hoc loco tibi, mi Liberalis, deos volo. Interdum enim solemus dicere : “ Quid sibi voluit providentia, quae Arrhidaeum regno imposuit?” [2] Illi putas hoc datum? Patri eius datum est et fratri. “ Quare C12 Caesarem orbi terrarum praefecit, hominem sanguinis humani avidissimum, quem non aliter fluere in conspectu suo iubebat, quam si ore excepturus esset? “ Quid ergo? Tu hoc illi datum existimas? Patri eius Germanico datum, avo pro- avoque et ante hos aliis non minus claris viris, etiam si privati paresque aliis vitam exegerunt. Quid? [3] Tu, cum Mamercum Scaurum consulem faceres, ignorabas ancillarum illum suarum menstruum ore hiantes exceptare? Numquid enim ipse dissimulabat? Numquid purus videri volebat? Referam tibi dictum eius in se, quod circumferri memini et ipso praesente laudari. [4] Pollioni Annio iacenti obsceno verbo usus dixerat se facturum id, quod pati malebat; et eum Pollionis adtractionem vidisset frontem : “ Quidquid,” inquit, “ mali dixi, mihi et capiti meo! “ Hoc dictum suum ipse narrabat. Hominem tam palam obscenum ad fascies et ad tribunal admisisti? [5] Nempe dum veterem illum Scaurum senatus principem cogitas et indigne fers

32. Idem facere deos veri simile est, ut alios indulgentius tractent propter parentes avosque, alios propter futuram nepotum pronepotumque ac longe sequentium posterorum indolem; nota enim illis est operis sui series, omniumque illis rerum per manus suas iturarum scientia in aperto semper est; nobis ex abdito subit, et, quae repentina putamus, illis provisa veniunt ac familiaria. [2] “Sint hi reges, quia maiores eorum non fuerunt, quia pro summo imperio habuerunt iustitiam, abstinentiam, quia non rem publicam sibi, sed se rei publicae dicaverunt. Regnent hi, quia vir bonus quidam ante proavus eorum fuit, qui animum supra fortunam gessit, qui in dissensione civili, quoniam ita expediebat rei publicae, vinci quam vincere maluit; referri gratia illi tam longo spatio non potuit; in illius respectum iste populo praesideat, non quia scit aut potest, sed quia alius pro illo meruit. [3] Hic corpore deformis est, adspectu foedus et ornamenta sua traducturus; iam me homines accusabunt, caecum ac temerarium dicent, nescientem, quo loco, quae summis atque excelsissimis debentur, ponam; at ego scio alii me istud dare, alii olim debitum solvere. [4] Unde isti norunt illum quondam gloriae sequentis fugacissimum, eo vultu ad pericula euntem, quo alii e periculo redeunt, numquam bonum suum a publico distinguentem? ‘Ubi,’ inquis, ‘iste aut quis est? ‘Unde vos scitis? Apud me istae expensorum acceptorumque rationes dispunguntur, ego, quid cui debeam, scio. Aliis post longam diem repono, aliis in antecessum ae prout occasio et rei publicae meae facultas tulit.” Ingrato ergo aliquando quaedam, sed non propter ipsum dabo.

33. “Quid? Si,” inquit, “nescis, utrum ingratus sit an gratus, expectabis, donec scias, an dandi beneficii tempus non amittes? Expectare longum est (nam, ut ait Platon, difficilis humani animi coniectura est), non expectare temerarium est.” [2] Huic respondebimus numquam expectare nos certissimam rerum comprehensionem, quoniam in arduo est veri exploratio, sed ea ire, qua ducit veri similitudo. Omne hac via procedit officium. Sic serimus, sic navigamus, sic militamus, sic uxores ducimus, sic liberos tollimus; cum omnium horum incertus sit eventus, ad ea accedimus, de quibus bene sperandum esse credidimus. Quis enim pollicetur serenti proventum, naviganti portum, militanti victoriam, marito pudicam uxorem, patri pios liberos? Sequimur, qua ratio, non qua veritas traxit. [3] Expecta, ut nisi bene cessura non facias et nisi comperta veritate nil noveris : relicto omni actu vita consistit. Cum veri similia me in hoc aut in illud impellant, non vera, ei beneficium dabo, quem veri simile erit gratum esse.

34. “ Multa,” inquit, “ intervenient, propter quae et malus pro bono surrepat et bonus pro malo displiceat; fallaces enim sunt rerum species, quibus credidimus.” Quis negat? Sed nihil aliud invenio, per quod cogitationem regam. His veritas mihi vestigiis sequenda est, certiora non habeo; haec ut quam diligentissime aestimem, operam dabo nec cito illis adsentiar. [2] Sic enim in proelio potest accidere, ut telum meum in commilitonem manus dirigat aliquo errore decepta et hosti tamquam meo parcam; sed hoc et raro accidet et non vitio meo, cuius propositum est hostem ferire, civem defendere. Si sciam ingratum esse, non dabo beneficium. At obrepsit, at imposuit : nulla hic culpa tribuentis est, quia tamquam grato dedi. [3] “Si promiseris,” inquit, “ te daturum beneficium et postea ingratum esse scieris, dabis an non? Si facis sciens, peccas, das enim, cui non debes dare; si negas, et hoc modo peccas : non das ei, cui promisisti. Conscientia vestra hoc loco titubat et illud superbum promissum numquam sapientem facti sui paenitere nec umquam emendare, quod fecerit, nec mutare consilium,” [4] Non mutat sapiens consilium omnibus his manentibus, quae erant, cum sumeret; ideo numquam illum paenitentia subit, quia nihil melius illo tempore fieri potuit, quam quod factum est, nihil melius constitui, quam constitutum est; ceterum ad omnia cum exceptione venit : “Si nihil inciderit, quod impediat.” Ideo omnia illi succedere dicimus et nihil contra opinionem accidere, quia praesumit animo posse aliquid intervenire, quod destinata pro- hibeat. [5] Imprudentium ista fiducia est fortunam sibi spondere; sapiens utramque partem eius cogitat; scit, quantum liceat errori, quam incerta sint humana, quam multa consiliis obstant; ancipitem rerum ac lubricam sortem suspensus sequitur, consiliis certis incertos eventus expendit. Exceptio autem, sine qua nihil destinat, nihil ingreditur, et hic illum tuetur.

35. Promisi beneficium, nisi si quid incidisset, quare non deberem dare. Quid enim, si, quod illi pollicitus sum, patria sibi dare iusserit? Si lex lata erit, ne id quisquam faciat, quod ego me amico meo facturum promiseram? Promisi tibi in matrimonium filiam; postea peregrinus apparuisti; non est mihi cum externo conubium; eadem res me defendit, quae vetat. [2] Tunc fidem fallam, tunc inconstantiae crimen audiam, si, cum eadem omnia sint, quae erant promittente me, non praestitero promissum; alioquin, quidquid mutatur, libertatem facit de integro consulendi et me fide liberat. Promisi advocacy : postea apparuit per illam causam praeiudicium in patrem meum quaeri; promisi me peregre exiturum : sed iter infestari latrociniiis nuntiatur; in rem praesentem venturus fui : sed aeger filius, sed puerpera uxor tenet. [3] Omnia esse debent eadem, quae fuerunt, eum promitterem, ut promittentis fidem teneas; quae autem maior fieri mutatio potest, quam si te malum virum et ingratum comperi? Quod tamquam digno dabam, indigno negabo et nascendi quoque causam habebō deceptus.

36. Inspiciam tamen et, quantum sit, de quo agitur; dabit mihi consilium promissae rei modus. Si exiguum est, dabo, non quia dignus es, sed quia promisi, nec tamquam munus dabo, sed verba mea redimam et aurem mihi pervellam. Damno castigabo promittentis temeritatem : “ Ecce, ut doleat tibi, ut postea consideratius loquaris! “ Quod dicere sole- mus, linguarium dabo. [2] Si maius erit, non committam, quemadmodum Maecenas ait, ut sestertio centies obiurgatus sim. Inter se enim utrumque comparabo. Est aliquid in eo, quod promiseris, perseverare; est rursus multum in eo, ne indigno beneficium des; hoc tamen quantum est? Si leve, coniveamus; si vero magno mihi aut detrimento aut rubori futurum, malo semel excusare, quare negaverim, quam semper, quare dederim. Totum, inquam, in eo est, quanti promissi mei verba taxentur. [3] Non tantum, quod temere promisi, retinebo, sed, quod non recte dedi, repetam; demens est, qui fidem praestat errori.

37. Philippus Macedonum rex habebat militem manu fortem, cuius in multis expeditionibus utilem expertus operam subinde ex praeda aliquid illi virtutis causa donaverat et hominem venalis animae crebris auctoramentis accendebat. Hic naufragus in possessiones cuiusdam Macedonis expulsus est; quod ut nuntiatum est, accucurrit, spiritum eius recollegit, in villam illum suam transtulit, lectulo suo cessit, adfectum semianimemque recreavit, diebus triginta sua impensa curavit, refecit, viatico instruxit subinde dicentem : “ Gratiam tibi referam, videre tantum mihi imperatorem meum contingat.” [2] Narravit Philippo naufragium suum, auxilium tacuit et protinus petit, ut sibi cuiusdam praedia donaret. Ille quidam erat hospes eius, is ipse, a quo receptus erat, a quo sanatus. Multa interim reges in bello praesertim opertis oculis donant. “ Non sufficit homo iustus tot armatis cupiditatibus, non potest quisquam eodem tempore et bonum virum et bonum ducem agere. Quomodo tot milia hominum insatiabilia satiabuntur? Quid habebunt, si suum quisque habuerit? [3] “ Haec Philippus sibi dixit, cum illum induci in bona, quae petebat, iussit. Expulsus bonis suis ille non ut rusticus iniuriam tacitus tulit contentus, quod non et ipse donatus esset, sed Philippo epistulam strictam ac liberam scripsit; qua accepta ita exarsit, ut statim Pausaniae mandaret, bona priori domino restitueret, ceterum improbissimo militi, ingratisimo hospiti, avidissimo naufrago stigmata inscriberet ingratum hominem testantia. [4] Dignus quidem fuit, cui non inscriberentur illae litterae, sed insculperentur, qui hospitem suum nudo et naufrago similem in id, in 15 quo iacuerat ipse, litus expulerat. Sed videbimus, quis modus poenae servandus fuerit; auferendum utique fuit, quod summo scelere invaserat. Quis autem poena eius moveretur? Id commiserat, propter quod nemo misereri misericors posset.

38. Dabit tibi Philippus, quia promisit, etiam si non debet, etiam si iniuriam facturus est, etiam si scelus facturus est, etiam si uno facto praeclusurus est naufragis litora? Non est levitas a cognito et damnato errore discedere, et ingenue fatendum est : “ Aliud putavi, deceptus sum.” Haec vero superbae stultitiae perseverantia est: “ Quod semel dixi, quaecumque est, fixum ratumque sit.” [2] Non est turpe cum re mutare consilium. Age, si Philippus possessorem illum eorum litorum reliquisset, quae naufragio ceperat, non omnibus miseris aqua et igni interdixerat? “ Potius,” inquit, “ intra fines regni mei tu litteras istas oculis inscribendas durissima fronte circumfer. I, ostende, quam sacra res sit mensa hospitalis; praebe in facie tua legendum istuc decretum, quo cavetur, ne miseros tecto iuvare capital sit. Magis ista constitutio sic rata erit, quam si illam in aes incidissem.”

39. “ Quare ergo,” inquit, “ Zeno vester, cum quingentos denarios cuidam mutuos promisisset et ipse illum parum idoneum comperisset, amicis suadentibus, ne daret, perseveravit credere, quia pro- miserat? [2] “ Primum alia condicio est in credito, alia in beneficio. Pecuniae etiam male creditae exactio est; et appellare debitorem ad diem possum et, si foro cesserit, portionem feram; beneficium et totum perit et statim. Praeterea hoc mali viri est, illud mali patris familiae. Deinde ne Zeno quidem, si maior fuisset summa, credere perseverasset. Quingenti denarii sunt : illud quod dici solet, “ in morbo consumat “; fuit tanti non revocare promissum suum. [3] Ad cenam, quia promisi, ibo, etiam si frigus erit; non quidem, si nives cadent. Surgam ad sponsalia, quia promisi, quamvis non concoxerim; sed non, si febricitavero. Sponsum descendam, quia promisi; sed non, si spondere me in incertum iube- bis, si fisco obligabis. Subest, inquam, tacita exceptio : “Si potero, si debebo, si haec ita erunt.” [4] Effice, ut idem status sit, cum exigis, qui fuit, cum promitterem; destituere levitas erit. Si aliquid intervenit novi, quid miraris, cum condicio promittentis mutata sit, mutatum esse consilium? Eadem mihi omnia praesta, et idem sum. Vadimonium promittimus, tamen deserti non in omnes datur actio : deserentem vis maior excusat.

40. Idem etiam in illa quaestione responsum existima, an omni modo referenda sit gratia, et an beneficium utique reddendum sit. Animum praestare gratum debeo, ceterum aliquando me referre gratiam non patitur mea infelicitas, aliquando felicitas eius, cui debeo. [2] Quid enim regi, quid pauper diviti reddam, utique cum quidam recipere beneficium iniuriam iudicent et beneficia subinde aliis beneficiis onerent? Quid amplius in horum persona possum quam velle? Nec enim ideo beneficium novum reicere debeo, quia nondum prius reddidi. Accipiam tam libenter, quam dabitur, et praebebo me amico meo exercendae boni- tatis suae capacem materiam. Qui nova accipere non vult, acceptis offenditur. Non refero gratiam: [3] quid ad rem? Non est per me mora, si aut occasio mihi deest aut facultas. Ille praestitit mihi, nempe cum occasionem haberet, cum facultatem. Utrum bonus vir est an malus? Apud bonum virum bonam causam habeo, apud malum non ago. [4] Ne illud quidem existimo faciendum, ut referre gratiam etiam invitis his, quibus refertur, properemus et instemus recedentibus. Non est referre gratiam, quod volens acceperis, nolenti reddere. Quidam, cum aliquod illis missum est munusculum, subinde aliud intempestive remittunt et nihil se debere testantur; reiciendi genus est protinus aliud in vicem mittere et munus munere expungere. [5] Aliquando et non reddam beneficium, cum possim. Quando? Si plus mihi detractus ero quam illi conlaturus, si ille non erit sensurus ullam accessionem recepto eo, quo reddito mihi multum abscissurum erit. Qui festinat utique reddere, non habet animum grati hominis, sed debitoris; et, ut breviter, qui nimis cupit solvere, invitatus debet; qui invitatus debet, ingratus est.

LIBER V

1. In prioribus libris videbar consummasse propositum, cum tractassem, quemadmodum dandum esset beneficium, quemadmodum accipiendum; hi enim sunt huius officii fines. Quidquid ultra moror, non servio materiae, sed indulgeo, quae, quo ducit, sequenda est, non quo invitat; subinde enim nascetur, quo lacesat aliqua dulcedine animum, magis non supervacuum quam necessarium. [2] Verum, quia ita vis, perseveremus peractis, quae rem continebant, scrutari etiam ea, quae, si vis verum, conexa sunt, non cohaerentia; quae quisquis diligenter inspicit, nec facit operae pretium nec tamen perdit operam. [3] Tibi autem, homini natura optimo et ad beneficia propenso, Liberalis Aebutii, nulla eorum laudatio satis facit. Neminem umquam vidi tam benignum etiam levissimorum officiorum aestimatorem; iam bonitas tua eo usque prolapsa est, ut tibi dari putes beneficium, quod ulli datur; paratus es, ne quem beneficii paeniteat, pro ingratis dependere. [4] Ipse usque eo abes ab omni iactatione, usque eo statim vis exonerare, quos obligas, ut, quidquid in aliquem confers, velis videri non praestare, sed reddere, ideoque plenius ad te sic data revertentur. Nam fere secuntur beneficia non reposcentem et, ut gloria fugientes magis sequitur, ita fructus beneficiorum gratius respondet, per quos esse etiam ingratis licet. [5] Per te vero non est mora, quominus beneficia, qui acceperunt, ultro repetant, nec recusabis conferre alia et suppressis dissimulatisque plura ac maiora adicere : propositum optimi viri et ingentis animi tam diu ferre ingratum, donec feceris gratum. Nec te ista ratio decipiet; succumbunt vitia virtutibus, si illa non cito odisse properaveris.

2. Illud utique unice tibi placet velut magnifice dictum turpe esse beneficiis vinci. Quod an sit verum, non immerito quaeri solet, longeque aliud est, quam mente concipis. Numquam enim in rerum honestarum certamine superari turpe est, dummodo arma non proicias et victus quoque velis vincere. [2] Non omnes ad bonum propositum easdem adferunt vires, easdem facultates, eandem fortunam, quae optimorum quoque consiliorum dumtaxat exitus temperat; voluntas ipsa rectum petens laudanda est, etiam si illam alius gradu velociori antecessit. Non ut in certaminibus ad spectaculum editis meliorem palma declarat, quamquam in illis quoque saepe deteriore praetulit casus. [3] Ubi de officio agitur, quod uterque a sua parte esse quam plenissimum cupit, si alter plus potuit et ad manum habuit materiam sufficientem animo suo, si illi, quantum conatus est, fortuna permisit, alter autem voluntate par est, etiam si minora, quam accepit, reddidit aut omnia non reddidit, sed vult reddere et toto in hoc intentus est animo, non magis victus est, quam qui in armis moritur, quem occidere facilius hostis potuit quam avertere. [4] Quod turpe existimas, id accidere viro bono non potest, ut vincatur. Numquam enim succumbet, numquam renuntiabit; ad ultimum usque vitae diem stabit paratus et in hac statione morietur magna se accepisse prae se ferens, paria voluisse.

3. Lacedaemonii vetant suos pancratio aut caestu decernere, ubi inferiorem ostendit victi confessio. Cursor cretam prior contigit; velocitate illum, non animo antecessit. Luctator ter abiectus perdidit palmam, non tradidit. Cum invictos esse Lacedaemonii cives suos magno aestimarent, ab iis certaminibus removerunt, in quibus victorem facit non iudex nec per se ipse exitus, sed vox cedentis et tradere iubentis. [2] Hoc, quod illi in suis civibus custodiunt, virtus ac bona voluntas omnibus praestat, ne umquam vincantur, quoniam quidem etiam inter superantia animus invictus est. Ideo nemo trecentos Fabios victos dicit, sed occisos; et Regulus captus est a Poenis, non victus, et quisquis alius saevientis fortunae vi ac pondere oppressus non submittit animum. In beneficiis idem est. [3] Plura aliquis accepit, maiora, frequentiora; non tamen victus est. Beneficia fortasse beneficiis victa sunt, si inter se data et accepta computes; si dantem et accipientem comparaveris, quorum animi et per se aestimandi sunt, penes neutrum erit palma. Solet enim fieri, ut, etiam cum alter multis vulneribus confossus est, alter leviter quidem saucius pares exisse dicantur, quamvis alter videatur inferior.

4. Ergo nemo vinci potest beneficiis, si scit debere, si vult referre : si, quem rebus non potest, animo aequat. Hic quam diu in hoc permanet, quam diu tenet voluntatem gratum animum signis approbandi, quid interest, ab utra parte munuscula plura numerentur? Tu multa dare potes, et ego tantum accipere possum; tecum stat fortuna, mecum bona voluntas; tamen tam par tibi sum, quam multis armatissimis nudi aut leviter armati. [2] Nemo itaque beneficiis vincitur, quia tam gratus est quisque, quam voluit. Nam si turpe est beneficiis vinci, non oportet a praepotentibus viris accipere beneficium, quibus gratiam referre non possis, a principibus dico, a regibus, quos eo loco fortuna posuit, ex quo largiri multa possent pauca admodum et imparia datis recepturi. [3] Reges et principes dixi, quibus tamen potest opera navari et quorum illa excellens potentia per minorum consensum ministeriumque constat. At sunt quidam extra omnem subducti cupiditatem, qui vix ullis humanis desideriis continguntur; quibus nihil potest praestare ipsa fortuna. Necesse est a Socrate beneficiis vincar, necesse est a Diogene, qui per medias Macedonum gazas nudus incessit calcatis regis opibus. [4] O! ne ille tunc merito et sibi et ceteris, quibus ad dispiciendam veritatem non erat obfusa caligo, supra eum eminere visus est, infra quem omnia iacebant. Multo potentior, multo locupletior fuit omnia tunc possidente Alexandro; plus enim erat, quod hic nollet accipere, quam quod ille posset dare.

5. Non est turpe ab his vinci; neque enim minus fortis sum, si cum invulnerabili me hoste committis, nec ideo minus ignis urere potest, si in materiam incidit inviolabilem flammis, nec ideo ferrum secandi vim perdidit, si non recipiens ictum lapis solidusque et invictae adversus dura naturae dividendus est. Idem tibi de homine grato respondeo. Non turpiter vincitur beneficiis, si ab his obligatus est, ad quos aut fortunae magnitudo aut eximia virtus aditum reddituris ad se beneficiis clusit. [2] A parentibus fere vincimur. Nam tam diu illos habemus, quam diu iudicamus graves et quam diu beneficia illorum non intellegimus. Cum iam aetas aliquid prudentiae collegit et apparere coepit propter illa ipsa eos amari a nobis debere, propter quae non amabantur, admonitiones, severitatem et inconsultae adulescentiae diligentem custodiam, rapiuntur nobis. Paucos usque ad verum fructum a liberis percipiendum perduxit aetas; ceteri filios onere senserunt. [3] Non est tamen turpe vinci beneficiis a parente; quidni non sit turpe, eum a nullo sit? Quibusdam enim et pares et impares sumus, pares animo, quem solum illi exigunt, quem nos solum promittimus, impares fortuna, quae si cui obstitit, quominus referret gratiam, non ideo illi tamquam victo erubescendum est. Non est turpe non consequi, dummodo sequaris. [4] Saepe necesse est ante alia beneficia petamus, quam priora reddidimus, nec ideo non petimus aut turpiter, quia non reddituri debebimus, quia non per nos erit mora, quominus gratissimi simus, sed interveniet aliquid extrinsecus, quod prohibeat. Nos tamen nec vincemur animo nec turpiter his rebus superabimur, quae non sunt in nostra potestate.

6. Alexander Macedonum rex gloriari solebat a nullo se beneficiis victum. Non est, quod nimius animi Macedonas et Graecos et Caras et Persas et nationes discriptas in exercitum suspiciat, nec hoc sibi praestitisse regnum a Thraciae angulo porrectum usque ad litus incogniti maris iudicet. Eadem re gloriari Socrates potuit, eadem Diogenes, a quo utique victus est, Quidni victus sit illo die, quo homo super mensuram iam humanae superbiae tumens vidit aliquem, cui nec dare quicquam posset nec eripere? [2] Archelaus rex Socratem rogavit, ut ad se veniret; dixisse Socrates traditur nolle se ad eum venire, a quo acciperet beneficia, cum reddere illi paria non posset. Primum in ipsius potestate erat non accipere; deinde ipse dare beneficium prior incipiebat, veniebat enim rogatus et id dabat, quod utique ille non erat Socrati redditurus. Etiamnunc Archelaus daturus erat aurum et argentum recepturus contemptum auri et argenti: non poterat referre Archelao Socrates gratias? [3] Et quid tantum erat accepturus, quantum dabat, si ostendisset hominem vitae ac mortis peritum utriusque fines tenentem? Si regem in luce media errantem ad rerum naturam admisisset usque eo eius ignarum, ut, quo die solis defectio fuit, regiam eluderet et filium, quod in luctu ac rebus adversis moris est, tenderet? [4] Quantum fuisset beneficium, si timentem e latebris suis extraxisset et bonum animum habere iussisset dicens : “ Non est ista solis defectio, sed duorum siderum coitus, cum luna humiliore currens via infra ipsum solem orbem suum posuit et illum obiectu sui abscondit; quae modo partes eius exiguas, si in transcurso strinxit, obducit, modo plus tegit, si maiorem partem sui obiecit, modo excludit totius adspectum, si recto libramento inter solem terrasque media successit. [5] Sed iam ista sidera hoc et illo diducet velocitas sua; iam recipient diem terrae, et hic ibit ordo per saecula dispositosque ac praedictos dies habet, quibus sol intercurso lunae vetetur omnes radios effundere. Paulum expecta; iam emerget, iam istam velut nubem relinquet, iam exsolutus impeditum lucem suam libere mittet.” [6] Socrates parem gratiam Archelao referre non posset, si illum regnare vetuisset? Parum scilicet magnum beneficium a Socrate accipiebat, si ullum dare Socrati potuisset. Quare ergo hoc Socrates dixit? Vir facetus et cuius per figuras sermo procederet, derisor omnium, maxime potentium, maluit illi nasute negare quam contumaciter aut superbe; dixit se nolle beneficia ab eo accipere, cui non posset paria reddere. Timuit fortasse, ne cogeretur accipere, quae nollet, timuit, ne quid indignum Socrate accipere. Dicet aliquis : “ Negasset, si vellet. [7] “ Sed instigasset in se regem insolentem et omnia sua magno aestimari volentem. Nihil ad rem pertinet, utrum dare aliquid regi nolis an accipere a rege; in aequo utramque ponit repulsam, et superbo fastidiri acerbius est quam non timeri. Vis scire, quid vere voluerit? Noluit ire ad voluntariam servitutem is, cuius libertatem civitas libera ferre non potuit!

7. Satis, ut existimo, hanc partem tractavimus, an turpe esset beneficiis vinci. Quod qui quaerit, scit non solere homines sibi ipsos dare beneficium; mani- festum enim fuisset non esse turpe a se ipsum vinci. [2] Atqui apud quosdam Stoicos et de hoc ambigitur, an possit aliquis sibi beneficium dare, an debeat referre sibi gratiam. Quod ut videretur quaerendum, illa fecerunt : solemus dicere; “ gratias mihi ago “ et “ de nullo queri possum alio quam de me ” et “ ego mihi irascor “ et “ ego a me poenas exigam “ et “ odi me, ” multa praeterea eiusmodi, per quae unusquisque de se tamquam de altero loquitur. [3] “ Si nocere, ” inquit, “ mihi possum, quare non et beneficium mihi dare possim? Praeterea quae, si in alium contulissem, beneficia vocarentur, quare, si in me contuli, non sint? Quod, si ab altero accepissem, deberem, quare, si mihi ipse dedi, non debeam? Quare sim adversus me ingratus, quod non minus turpe est quam in se sordidum esse et in se durum ac saevum et sui negligenter? [4] Tam alieni corporis leno male audit quam sui. Nempe reprehenditur adsentator et aliena subsequens verba, paratus ad falsa laudator; non minus placens sibi et se suspiciens, ut ita dicam, adsentator suus. Vitia non tantum, cum foris pec- eant, invisae sunt, sed cum in se retorquentur. [5] Quem magis admiraberis, quam qui imperat sibi, quam qui se habet in potestate? Gentes facilius est barbaras impatientesque arbitrii alieni regere, quam animum suum continere et tradere sibi. Platon, inquit, agit Socrati gratias, quod ab illo didicit; quare Socrates sibi non agat, quod ipse se docuit? M. Cato ait

: ‘ Quod tibi deerit, a te ipso mutuare.’ Quare donare mihi non possim, si commodare possum? Innumerabilia sunt, in quibus consuetudo nos dividit; [6] dicere solemus : ‘ Sine, loquar tecum ‘ et ‘ Ego mihi aurem pervellam.’ Quae si vera sunt, quemadmodum aliquis sibi irasci debet, sic et gratias agere; quomodo obiurgare se, sic et laudare se; quomodo damno sibi esse, sic et lucro potest. Iniuria et beneficium contraria sunt; si de aliquo dicimus : ‘ Iniuriam sibi fecit,’ poterimus dicere et : ‘ Beneficium sibi dedit.’ “

8. Natura prius est, ut quis debeat, deinde, ut gratiam referat; debitor non est sine creditore, non magis quam maritus sine uxore aut sine filio pater; aliquis dare debet, ut aliquis accipiat. Non est dare nec accipere in dexteram manum ex sinistra trans- ferre. [2] Quomodo nemo se portat, quamvis corpus suum moveat et transferat, quomodo nemo, quamvis pro se dixerit, adfuisse sibi dicitur nec statuam sibi tamquam patrono suo ponit, quomodo aeger, cum cura sua convaluit, mercedem a se non exigit, sic in omni negotio, etiam cum aliquid, quod prodesset sibi, fecerit, non tamen debebit referre gratiam sibi, quia non habebit, cui referat. [3] Ut concedam aliquem dare sibi beneficium, dum dat, et recipit; ut concedam aliquem a se accipere beneficium, dum accipit, reddit. Domi, quod aiunt, versura fit et velut lusorium nomen statim transit; neque enim alius dat quam accipit, sed unus atque idem. Hoc verbum “ debere “ non habet nisi inter duos locum; quomodo ergo in uno consistet, qui se obligando liberat? [4] Ut in orbe ac pila nihil inum est, nihil summum, nihil extremum, nihil primum, quia motu ordo mutatur et quae sequebantur praecedunt et quae occidebant oriuntur, omnia, quomodocumque ierunt, in idem revertuntur, ita in homine existima fieri; cum illum in multa mutaveris, unus est. Cecidit se : iniuriarum cum quo agat, non habet; adligavit et clusit : de vi non tenetur; beneficium sibi dedit : danti protinus reddidit. [5] Rerum natura nihil dicitur perdere, quia, quidquid illi avellitur, ad illam redit, nec perire quicquam potest, quod, quo excidat, non habet, sed eodem revolvitur, unde discedit. “ Quid simile,” inquis, “ hoc exemplum habet huic propositae quaestioni? “ [6] Dicam. Puta te ingratum esse : non perit bene- ficium, habet illud, qui dedit. Puta te recipere nolle : apud te est, antequam redditur. Non potes quicquam amittere, quia, quod detrahitur, nihilo minus tibi acquiritur. Intra te ipsum orbis agitur;

9. “Beneficium,” inquit, “sibi dare oportet; ergo et referre gratiam oportet.” Primum illud falsum est, ex quo pendent sequentia; nemo enim sibi beneficium dat, sed naturae suae paret, a qua ad caritatem sui compositus est, unde summa illi cura est nocitura vitandi, profutura appetendi. [2] Itaque nec liberalis est, qui sibi donat, nec clemens, qui sibi ignoscit, nec misericors, qui malis suis tangitur. Quod aliis praestare liberalitas est, clementia, misericordia, sibi praestare natura est. Beneficium res voluntaria est, at prodesse sibi necessarium est. Quo quis plura beneficia dedit, beneficentior est; quis umquam laudatus est, quod sibi ipse fuisset auxilio? Quod se eripuisset latronibus? Nemo sibi beneficium dat, non magis quam hospitium; nemo sibi donat, non magis quam credit. [3] Si dat sibi quisque beneficium, semper dat, sine intermissione dat, inire beneficiorum suorum non potest numerum. Quando ergo gratiam referet, cum per hoc ipsum, quo gratiam refert, beneficium det? Quomodo enim discernere poteris, utrum det sibi beneficium an reddat, cum intra eundem hominem res geratur? Liberavi me periculo : beneficium mihi dedi. Iterum me periculo libero : utrum do beneficium an reddo? [4] Deinde, ut primum illud concedam dare nos nobis beneficium, quod sequitur, non concedam; nam etiam si damus, non debemus. Quare? Quia statim recipimus. Accipere beneficium me oportet, deinde debere, deinde referre; debendi locus non est, quia sine ulla mora recipimus. Dat nemo nisi alteri, debet nemo nisi alteri, reddit nemo nisi alteri. Id intra unum non potest fieri, quod totiens duos exigit.

10. Beneficium est praestitisse aliquid utiliter; verbum autem “praestitisse” ad alios spectat. Numquid non demens videbitur, qui aliquid sibi vendidisse se dicet? Quia venditio alienatio est et rei suae iurisque in ea sui ad alium translatio. Atqui, quemadmodum vendere, sic dare aliquid a se dimittere est et id, quod tenueris, habendum alteri tradere. Quod si est, beneficium nemo sibi dedit, quia nemo dat sibi; alioqui duo contraria in uno coeunt, ut sit idem dare et accipere. [2] Etiamnunc multum interest inter dare et accipere; quidni? eum ex diverso ista verba posita sint. Atqui si quis sibi beneficium dat, nihil interest inter dare et accipere. Paulo ante dicebam quaedam ad alios pertinere et sic esse formata, ut tota significatio illorum discedat a nobis : frater sum, alterius, nemo est enim suus frater; par sum, sed alicui, quis enim par est sibi? Quod comparatur, sine altero non intellegitur; quod iungitur, sine altero non est; sic et, quod datur, sine altero non est, et beneficium sine altero non est. [3] Idem ipso vocabulo apparet, in quo hoc continetur, “ bene fecisse “; nemo autem sibi bene facit, non magis quam sibi favet, quam suarum partium est. Diutius hoc et pluribus exemplis licet proseguere. [4] Quidni? cum inter ea sit habendum beneficium, quae secundam personam desiderant. Quaedam, cum sint honesta, pulcherrima, summae virtutis, nisi in altero non habent locum. Laudatur et inter maxima humani generis bona fides colitur; num quis ergo dicitur sibi fidem praestitisse?

11. Venio nunc ad ultimam partem. Qui gratiam refert, aliquid debet impendere, sicut, qui solvit, pecuniam; nihil autem impendit, qui gratiam sibi refert, non magis quam consequitur, qui beneficium a se accepit. Beneficium et gratiae relatio ultro citro ire debent; intra unum hominem non est vicissitudo. Qui gratiam refert, invicem prodest ei, a quo consecutus est aliquid. Qui sibi gratiam refert, cui prodest? Sibi. Et quis non alio loco relationem gratiae, alio beneficium cogitat? Qui gratiam refert sibi, sibi prodest. Et quis umquam ingratus hoc noluit facere? Immo quis non ingratus fuit, ut hoc faceret? [2] “Si gratias,” inquit, “nobis agere debemus, et gratiam referre debemus; dicimus autem : ‘ Ago gratias mihi, quod illam uxorem nolui ducere ‘ et ‘ quod cum illo non contraxi societatem.’ “ Cum hoc dicimus, laudamus nos et, ut factum nostrum comprobemus, gratias agentium verbis abutimur. [3] Beneficium est, quod potest, cum datum est, et non reddi; qui sibi beneficium dat, non potest non recipere, quod dedit; ergo non est beneficium. Alio tempore beneficium accipitur, alio redditur. In [4] beneficio et hoc est probabile, hoc suspiciendum, quod aliquis, ut alteri prodesset, utilitatis interim suae oblitus est, quod alteri dedit ablaturus sibi. Hoc non facit, qui beneficium sibi dat. [5] Beneficium dare socialis res est, aliquem conciliat, aliquem obligat, sibi dare non est socialis res, neminem conciliat, neminem obligat, neminem in spem inducit, ut dicat : “ Hic homo colendus est; illi beneficium dedit, dabit et mihi. [6] “ Beneficium est, quod quis non sua causa dat, sed eius, cui dat; is autem, qui sibi beneficium dat, sua causa dat; non est ergo

12. Videor tibi iam illud, quod in principio dixeram, mentitus. Dicis me abesse ab eo, qui operae pretium facit, immo totam operam bona fide perdere. Expecta, et iam hoc verius dices, simul te ad has latebras perduxero, ex quibus cum evaseris, nihil amplius eris adsecutus, quam ut eas difficultates effugeris, in quas licuit non descendere. [2] Quid enim boni est nodos operose solvere, quos ipse, ut solveres, feceris? Sed quemadmodum quaedam in oblectamentum ac iocum sic inligantur, ut eorum solutio imperito difficilis sit, quae illi, qui implicuit, sine ullo negotio paret, quia commissuras eorum et moras novit, nihilo minus illa habent aliquam voluptatem (temptant enim acumen animorum et intentionem excitant), ita haec, quae videntur callida et insidiosa, securitatem ac segnitiam ingeniis auferunt, quibus modo campus, in quo vagentur, sternendus est, modo creperi aliquid et confragosi obiciendum, per quod erepant et sollicite vestigium faciant. [3] Dicitur nemo ingratus esse; id sic colligitur: “ Beneficium est, quod prodest; prodesse autem nemo homini malo potest, ut dicitis Stoici; ergo beneficium non accipit malus, ... ingratus est. “ Etiamnunc beneficium honesta et probabilis res est; apud malum nulli honestae rei aut probabili locus est, ergo nec beneficium; quod si accipere non potest, ne reddere quidem debet, et ideo non fit ingratus. [4] “ Etiamnunc, ut dicitis, bonus vir omnia recte facit; si omnia recte facit, ingratus esse non potest. Malo viro beneficium nemo dare potest. Bonus beneficium reddit, malus non accipit; quod si est, nec bonus quisquam ingratus est nec malus. Ita ingratus in rerum natura est nemo, et hoc inane nomen.”4 [5] Unum est apud nos bonum, honestum. Id pervenire ad malum non potest; desinet enim malus esse, si ad illum virtus intraverit; quam diu autem malus est, nemo illi dare beneficium potest, quia mala bonaque dissentiant nec in unum eunt. Ideo nemo illi prodest, quia, quidquid ad illum pervenit, id pravo usu corrumpitur. [6] Quemadmodum stomachus morbo vitatus et colligens bilem, quoscumque accepit cibos, mutat et omne alimentum in causam doloris trahit, ita animus scaevus, quidquid illi commiseris, id onus suum et perniciem et occasionem miseriae facit. Felieissimis itaque opulentissimisque plurimum aestus subest minusque se inveniunt, quo in maiorem materiam inciderunt, qua fluctuantur. [7] Ergo nihil potest ad malos pervenire, quod prosit, immo nihil, quod non noceat. Quaecumque enim illis con- tigerunt, in naturam suam vertunt et extra speciosa profuturaque, si meliori darentur, illis pestifera sunt. Ideo nec beneficium dare possunt, quoniam nemo potest, quod non habet, dare; hic bene faciendi voluntate caret.

13. Sed quamvis haec ita sint, accipere etiam malus tamen quaedam potest, quae beneficiis similia sint, quibus non redditis ingratus erit. Sunt animi bona, sunt corporis, sunt fortunae. Illa animi bona a stulto ac malo submoventur; ad haec admittitur, quae et accipere potest et debet reddere, et, si non reddit, ingratus est. Nec hoc ex nostra tantum constitutione. Peripatetici quoque, qui felicitatis humanae longe lateque terminos ponunt, aiunt minuta beneficia perventura ad malos; haec qui non reddit, in- gratus est. [2] Nobis itaque beneficia esse non placet, quae non sunt animum factura meliorem; commoda tamen illa esse et expetenda non negamus. Haec et viro bono dare malus potest et accipere a bono, ut pecuniam et vestem et honores et vitam; quae si non reddit, in ingrati nomen incidet. [3] “At quomodo ingratum vocas eo non reddito, quod negas esse beneficium?” Quaedam, etiam si vera non sunt, propter similitudinem eodem vocabulo comprehensa sunt. Sic pyxidem et argenteam et auream dicimus; sic inlitteratum non ex toto rudem, sed ad litteras altiores non perductum; sic, qui male vestitum et pannosum vidit, nudum vidisse se dicit. Beneficia ista non sunt, habent tamen beneficii speciem. [4] “Quomodo ista sunt tamquam beneficia, sic et ille tamquam ingratus est, non ingratus.” Falsum est, quia illa beneficia et qui dat appellat et qui accipit. Ita, qui veri beneficii speciem fefellit, tam ingratus est quam veneficus, qui soporem, cum venenum esse crederet, miscuit.

14. Cleanthes vehementius agit. “Licet,” inquit, “beneficium non sit, quod accepit, ipse tamen ingratus est, quia non fuit redditurus, etiam si ac- cepisset. [2] “Sic latro est etiam antequam manus inquinet, quia ad occidendum iam armatus est et habet spoliandi atque interficiendi voluntatem; exercetur et aperitur opere nequitia, non incipit. Sacrilegi dant poenas, quamvis nemo usque ad deos manus porrigat. [3] “Quomodo,” inquit, “adversus malum ingratus est quisquam, cum a malo dari beneficium non possit?” Ea scilicet ratione, quia ipsum, quod accepit, beneficium non erat, sed vocabatur; qui accipiet ab illo aliquid ex his, quae apud imperitos sunt, quorum et malis copia est, ipse quoque in simili materia gratus esse debet et illa, qualiacumque sunt, cum pro bonis acceperit, pro bonis reddere. [4] Aes alienum habere dicitur et qui aureos debet et qui corium forma publica percussus, quale apud Lacedaemonios fuit, quod usum numeratae pecuniae praestat. Quo genere obligatus es, hoc fidem ex- solve. [5] Quid sint beneficia, an et in hanc sordidam humilemque materiam deduci magnitudo nominis clari debeat, ad vos non pertinet; in alios quaeritur verum. Vos ad speciem veri componite animum et, dum honestum discitis, quidquid est, in quo nomen honesti iactatur, id colite.

15. “ Quomodo,” inquit, “ nemo per vos ingratus est, sic rursus omnes ingrati sunt.” Nam, ut dicimus, omnes stulti mali sunt; qui unum autem habet vitium, omnia habet; omnes autem stulti et mali sunt; omnes ergo ingrati sunt. [2] Quid ergo? Non sunt? Non undique humano generi convicium fit? Non publica querella est perisse beneficia et paucissimos esse, qui de bene merentibus non invicem pessime mereantur? Nec est, quod hanc nostram tantum murmurationem putes pro pessimo pravoque numerantium, quidquid citra recti formulam cecidit. [3] Ecce nescioqui non ex philosophorum domo clamat, ex medio conventu populos gentesque damnatum vox mittitur : Hoc iam amplius est : [4] beneficia in scelus versa sunt, et sanguini eorum non parcitur, pro quibus sanguis fundendus est; gladio ac venenis beneficia sequimur. Ipsi patriae manus adferre et fascibus illam suis premere potentia ac dignitas est; humili se ac depresso loco putat stare, quisquis non supra rem publicam stetit; accepti ab illa exercitus in ipsam convertuntur, et imperatoria contio est : [5] “ Pugmate contra coniuges, pugmate contra liberos! Aras, focos, penates armis incessite! “ Qui ne triumphatum quidem inire urbem iniussu senatus deberetis quibusque victorem exercitum reducentibus curia extra muros praeberetur, nunc civibus caesis perfusi cruore cognato urbem subrectis intrate vexillis. [6] Obmutescat inter militaria signa libertas, et ille victor pacatorque gentium populus remotis procul bellis, omni terrore compresso, intra muros obsessus aquilas suas horreat.

16. Ingratus est Coriolanus, sero et post sceleris paenitentiam pius; posuit arma, sed in medio parricidio posuit. Ingratus Catilina; parum

est illi capere patriam, nisi verterit, nisi Allobrogum in illam cohortes immiserit et trans Alpes accitus hostis vetera et ingenita odia satiaverit ac diu debitas inferias Gallicis bustis duces Romanos persolverit. [2] Ingratus C. Marius ad consulatus a caliga perductus, qui, nisi Cimbricis caedibus Romana funera aequaverit, nisi civilis exitii et trucidationis non tantum dederit signum, sed ipse signum fuerit, parum mutata ac reposita in priorem locum fortunam suam sentiet. [3] Ingratus L. Sulla, qui patriam duri oribus remediis, quam pericula erant, sanavit, qui, cum a Praenestina arce usque ad Collinam portam per sanguinem humanum incessisset, alia edidit in urbe proelia, alias caedes : legiones duas, quod crudele est, post victoriam, quod nefas, post fidem in angulo congestas contrucidavit et proscriptionem commentus est, di magni, ut, qui civem Romanum occidisset, impunitatem, pecuniam, tantum non civicam acciperet! [4] Ingratus Cn. Pompeius, qui pro tribus consulatibus, pro triumphis tribus, pro tot honoribus, quos ex maxima parte immaturus invaserat, hanc gratiam rei publicae reddidit, ut in possessionem eius alios quoque induceret quasi potentiae suae detracturus invidiam, si, quod nulli licere debebat, pluribus licuisset; dum extraordinaria concupiscit imperia, dum provincias, ut eligat, distribuit, dum ita cum tertio rem publicam dividit, ut tamen in sua domo duae partes essent, eo redegit populum Romanum, ut salvus esse non posset nisi beneficio servitutis. [5] Ingratus ipse Pompei hostis ac victor; a Gallia Germaniaeque bellum in urbem circumegit, et ille plebicola, ille popularis castra in circo Flaminio posuit propius, quam Porsinae fuerant. Temperavit quidem ius crudelitatemque victoriae; quod dicere solebat, praestitit: neminem occidit nisi armatum. Quid ergo est? Ceteri arma cruentius exercuerunt, satiata tamen aliquando abiecerunt; hic gladium cito condidit, numquam posuit. [6] Ingratus Antonius in dictatorem suum, quem iure caesum pronuntiavit, interfectores eius in provincias et imperia dimisit; patriam vero proscriptionibus, incursionibus, bellis laceratam post tot mala destinavit ne Romanis quidem regibus, ut, quae Achaeis, Rhodiis, plerisque urbibus claris ius integrum libertatemque cum immunitate reddiderat, ipsa tributum spadonibus penderet!

17. Deficiet dies enumerantem ingratos usque in ultima patriae exitia. Aequè immensum erit, si percurrere coepero, ipsa res publica quam ingrata in optimos ac devotissimos sibi fuerit quamque non minus saepe peccaverit, quam in ipsam peccatum est. [2] Camillum in exilium misit, Scipionem dimisit; exsulavit post Catilinam Cicero, diruti eius penates, bona direpta, factum, quidquid victor Catilina fecisset; Rutilius innocentiae pretium tulit in Asia latere; Catoni populus Romanus praeturam negavit, consulatum pernegavit. [3] Ingrati publice sumus. Se quisque interroget: nemo non aliquem queritur ingratum. Atqui non potest fieri, ut omnes querantur, nisi querendum est de omnibus : omnes ergo ingrati sunt. Ingrati sunt tantum? Et cupidi omnes et maligni omnes et timidi omnes, illi in primis, qui videntur audaces. Adice : et ambitiosi omnes sunt et impii omnes. Sed non est, quod irascaris; ignosce illis, omnes insaniunt. [4] Nolo te ad incerta revocare, ut dicam : “ Vide, quam ingrata sit iuventus! Quis non patris sui supremum diem, ut innocens sit, optat? Ut moderatus sit, expectat? Ut pius, cogitat? Quotus quisque uxoris optimae mortem timet, ut non et computet? Cui, rogo, litigatori defenso tam magni beneficii ultra res proximas memoria duravit? “ [5] Illud in confesso est : quis sine querella moritur? Quis extremo die dicere audet :

Vixi et quem dederat cursum fortuna peregi?

Quis non recusans, quis non gemens exit? Atqui hoc ingrati est non esse contentum praeterito tempore. Semper pauci dies erunt, si illos numeraveris. [6] Cogita non esse summum bonum in tempore; quantumcumque est, boni consules. Ut prorogetur tibi dies mortis, nihil proficitur ad felicitatem, quoniam mora non fit beatior vita sed longior. [7] Quanto satius est gratum adversus perceptas voluptates non aliorum annos computare, sed suos benigne aestimare et in lucro ponere! “ Hoc me dignum iudicavit deus, hoc satis est; potuit plus, sed hoc quoque beneficium est.” Grati simus adversus deos, grati adversus homines, grati adversus eos, qui aliquid nobis praestiterunt, grati etiam adversus eos, qui nostris praestiterunt.

18. “ In infinitum ius,” inquit, “ me obligas, cum dicis : ‘ et nostris ‘; itaque pone aliquem finem. Qui filio beneficium dat, ut dicis, et patri eius dat: primum, de quo quaero. Deinde illud utique mihi determinari volo : si et patri beneficium datur, numquid et fratri?

Numquid et patruo? Numquid et avo? Numquid et uxori et socero? Dic mihi, ubi debeam desinere, quousque personarum senem sequar.” [2] Si agrum tuum coluero, tibi beneficium dederō; si domum tuam ardentem restinxero aut, ne concidat, excepero, tibi beneficium dabo; si servum tuum sanavero, tibi imputabo; si filium tuum servavero, non habebis beneficium meum?

19. “ Dissimilia ponis exempla, quia, qui agrum meum colit, agro beneficium non dat sed mihi; et qui domum meam, quo minus ruat, fulcit, praestat mihi, ipsa enim domus sine sensu est; debitorem me habet, quia nullum habet; et qui agrum meum colit, non illum, sed me demereri vult. Idem de servo dicam : mei mancipii res est, mihi servatur; ideo ego pro illo debeo. Filius ipse beneficii capax est; itaque ille accipit, ego beneficio laetor et contingor, non obligor.” [2] Velim tamen, tu, qui debere te non putas, respondeas mihi. Filii bona valetudo, felicitas, patrimonium pertinet ad patrem; felicior futurus est, si salvum filium habuerit, infelicior, si amiserit. Quid ergo? Qui et felicior fit a me et infelicitatis maximae periculo liberatur, non accipit beneficium? [3] “ Non,” inquit; “ quaedam enim in alios conferuntur, sed ad nos usque permanant; ab eo autem exigī quidque debet, in quem confertur, sicut pecunia ab eo petitur, cui credita est, quamvis ad me illa aliquo modo venerit. Nullum beneficium est, cuius non commodum et proximos tangat, non numquam etiam longius positos; [4] non quaeritur, quo beneficium ab eo, cui datum est, transierit, sed ubi primo collocetur; a reo tibi ipso et a capite repetitio est.” Quid ergo? Oro te, non dicis : “ Filium mihi donasti, et, si hic perisset, victurus non fui “? Pro eius vita beneficium non debes, cuius vitam tuae praeferas? Etiamnunc, cum filium tuum servavi, ad genua procumbis, dis vota solvis tamquam ipse servatus; illae voces exeunt tibi : [5] “ Nihil mea interest, an me servaveris; duos servasti, immo me magis.” Quare ista dicis, si non accipis beneficium? “ Quia et, si filius meus pecuniam mutuam sumpserit, creditori numerabo, non tamen ideo ego debuero; quia et, si filius meus in adulterio deprensus erit, erubescam, non ideo ego ero adulter. [6] Dico me tibi obligatum pro filio, non quia sum, sed quia volo me offerre tibi debitorem voluntarium. At pervenit ad me summa ex incolumitate eius voluptas, summa utilitas, et orbitatis gravissimum vulnus effugi. Non quaeritur nunc, an profueris mihi, sed an beneficium dederis; prodest enim et animal et lapis et herba, nec tamen beneficium dant, quod numquam datur nisi a volente. [7] Tu autem non vis patri, sed filio dare, et interim ne nosti quidem patrem. Itaque cum dixeris: ‘ Patri ergo beneficium non dedi filium eius servando? ‘ contra oppone : ‘ Patri ergo beneficium dedi, quem non novi, quem non cogitavi? ‘ Et quid quod aliquando eveniet, ut patrem oderis, filium serves? Beneficium ei videberis dedisse, cui tunc inimicissimus eras, cum dares? “ [8] Sed ut dialogorum altercatione seposita tamquam iuris consultus respondeam, mens spectanda est dantis; beneficium ei dedit, cui datum voluit. Si in patris honorem fecit, pater accepit beneficium; si filii in usum, pater beneficio in filium conlato non obligatur, etiam si fruitur. Si tamen occasionem habuerit, volet et ipse praestare aliquid, non tamquam solvendi necessitatem habeat, sed tamquam incipiendi causam. Repeti a patre beneficium non debet; si quid pro hoc benigne facit, iustus, non gratus est. [9] Nam illud finire non potest : si patri do beneficium, et matri et avo et avunculo et liberis et adfinibus et amicis et servis et patriae. Ubi ergo beneficium incipit stare? Sontes enim ille inexplicabilis subit, cui difficile est modum imponere, quia paulatim surrepit et non desinit serpere.

20. Illud solet quaeri: “ Fratres duo dissident; si alterum servo, an dem beneficium ei, qui fratrem invisum non perisse moleste laturus est.” Non est dubium, quin beneficium sit etiam invito prodesse, sicut non dedit beneficium, qui invitatus profuit. [2] “ Beneficium,” inquit, “ vocas, quo ille offenditur, quo torquetur? “ Multa beneficia tristem frontem et asperam habent, quemadmodum secare et urere, ut sanes, et vinclis coercere. Non est spectandum, an doleat aliquis beneficio accepto, sed an gaudere debeat; non est malus denarius, quem barbarus et ignarus formae publicae reiecit. Beneficium et odit et accepit, si modo id prodest, si is, qui dabat, ut prodesset, dedit. Nihil refert, an bonam rem malo animo quis accipiat. [3] Agedum, hoc in contrarium verte. Odit fratrem suum, quem illi habere expedit; hunc ego occidi: non est beneficium, quamvis ille dicat esse et gaudeat. Insidiosissime nocet, cui gratiae aguntur pro iniuria! [4] “ Video : prodest aliqua res et ideo beneficium est; nocet et ideo non est beneficium. Ecce, quod nec prosit nec noceat, dabo, et tamen beneficium erit. Patrem alicuius in solitudine exanimem inveni, corpus eius sepelivi. Nec ipsi profui (quid enim illius intererat, quo genere dilaberetur?) nec filio (quid enim illi per hoc commodi accessit?).” Dicam, quid consecutus sit : officio sollemni et necessario per me functus est; [5] praestiti patri eius, quod ipse praestare voluisset nec non et debuisset. Hoc tamen ita beneficium est, si non misericordiae et humanitati dedi, ut quodlibet cadaver absconderem, sed si corpus adgnovi, si filio tunc hoc praestare me cogitavi. At si terram ignoto mortuo inieci, nullum in hoc habeo huius officii debitorem in publicum humanus. [6] Dicet aliquis : “ Quid tanto opere quaeris, cui dederis beneficium, tamquam repetiturus aliquando? Sunt, qui numquam iudicent esse repetendum, et has causas adferunt. Indignus etiam repetenti non reddet, dignus ipse per se referet. Praeterea, si bono viro dedisti, expecta, ne iniuriam illi facias appellando, tamquam sua sponte redditurus non fuisset. Si malo viro dedisti, plectere; beneficium vero ne corruperis creditum faciendo. Praeterea lex, quod non iussit repeti, vetuit.” [7] Verba sunt ista. Quam diu me nihil urguet, quam diu fortuna nihil cogit, perdam potius beneficium quam repetam. Sed si de salute liberorum agitur, si in periculum uxor deducitur, si patriae salus ac libertas mittit me etiam, quo ire nollem, imperabo pudori meo et testabor omnia me fecisse, ne opus esset mihi auxilio hominis ingrati; novissime recipiendi beneficii necessitas repetendi verecundiam vincet. Deinde, eum bono viro beneficium do, sic do tamquam numquam repetiturus, nisi fuerit necesse.

21. “ Sed lex,” inquit, “ non permittendo exigere vetuit.” Multa legem non habent nec actionem, ad quae consuetudo vitae humanae omni lege valentior dat aditum. Nulla lex iubet amicorum secreta non eloqui; nulla lex iubet fidem etiam inimico praestare; quae lex ad id praestandum nos, quod alicui promisimus, adligat? Nulla. Querar tamen cum eo, qui arcanum sermonem non continuerit, et fidem datam nec servatam indignabor. [2] “ Sed ex beneficio,” inquit, “ creditum facis.” Minime; non enim exigo, sed repeto, et ne repeto quidem, sed admoneo. Num ultima quoque me necessitas in hoc aget, ut ad eum veniam, cum quo mihi diu luctandum sit? Si quis tam ingratus est, ut illi non sit satis admoneri, eum transibo nec dignum iudicabo, qui gratus esse cogatur. [3] Quomodo fenerator quosdam debitores non appellat, quos scit decoxisse et in quorum pudorem nihil superest, nisi quod pereat, sic ego quosdam ingratos palam ac pertinaciter praeteribo nec ab ullo beneficium repetam, nisi a quo non ablaturus ero, sed recepturus.

22. Multi sunt, qui nec negare sciant, quod acceperunt, nec referre, qui nec tam boni sunt quam grati nec tam mali quam ingrati, segnes et tardi, lenta nomina, non mala. Hos ego non appellabo, sed commonefaciam et ad officium aliud agentes re- ducam. Qui statim mihi sic respondebunt : “ Ignosce; non mehercules scivi hoc te desiderare, alioqui ultro obtulissem; rogo, ne me ingratum existimes; memini, quid mihi praestiteris.” Hos ego quare dubitem et sibi meliores et mihi facere? Quemcumque potuero, peccare prohibebo; [2] multo magis amicum, et ne peccet et ne in me potissimum peccet. Alterum illi beneficium do, si illum ingratum esse non patior; nec dure illi exprobrabo, quod praestiti, sed quam potuero mollissime. Ut potestatem referendae gratiae faciam, renovabo memoriam eius et petam beneficium; ipse me intelletget repetere. [3] Aliquando utar verbis durioribus, si emendari illum posse speravero; nam deploratum propter hoc quoque non exagitabo, ne ex ingrato inimicum faciam. [4] Quod si admonitionis quoque sugillationem ingratis remittimus, segniore ad reddenda beneficia faciemus; quosdam vero sanabiles et qui fieri boni possint, si quid illos momorderit, perire patiemur admonitione sublata, qua et pater filium aliquando correxit et uxor maritum aberrantem ad se reduxit et amicus languentem amici fidem erexit.

23. Quidam, ut expergiscantur, non feriendi, sed commovendi sunt; eodem modo quorundam ad referendam gratiam fides non cessat, sed languet. Hanc pervellamus. “ Noli munus tuum in iniuriam vertere; iniuria est enim, si in hoc non repetis, ut ingratus sim. Quid, si ignoro, quid desideres? Quid, si occupationibus districtus et in aha vocatus occasionem non observavi? Ostende mihi, quid possim, quid velis. Quare desperes, antequam temptes? [2] Quare properas et beneficium et amicum perdere? Unde scis, nolim an ignorem, animus an facultas desit mihi? Experire.” Admonebo ergo non amare, non palam, sine convicio, sic, ut se redisse in memoriam, non reduci putet.

24. Causam dicebat apud divum Iulium ex veteranis quidam paulo violentior adversus vicinos suos et causa premebatur. “ Meministi,” inquit, “imperator, in Hispania, talum extorsisse te circa Sucronem?” Cum Caesar meminisse se dixisset : “Meministi quidem sub quadam arbore minimum umbrae spargente cum velles residere ferventissimo sole et esset asperrimus locus, in quo ex rupibus acutis unica illa arbor eruperat, quendam ex commilitonibus paenulam suam substravisse?” [2] Cum dixisset Caesar : “Quidni meminerim? Et quidem siti confectus, quia impeditus ire ad fontem proximum non poteram, repere manibus volebam, nisi commilito, homo fortis ac strenuus, aquam mihi in galea sua adtulisset” — , “Potes ergo,” inquit, “imperator, agnoscere illum hominem aut illam galeam?” Caesar ait se non posse galeam agnoscere, hominem pulchre posse, et adiecit, puto obiratus, quod se a cognitione media ad veterem fabulam abduceret : [3] “Tu utique ille non es.” “Merito!” inquit, “Caesar, me non agnoscis; nam cum hoc factum est, integer eram; postea ad Mundam in acie oculus mihi effossus est et in capite lecta ossa. Nec galeam illam, si videris, agnosces; machaera enim Hispana divisa est.” Vetuit illi exhiberi negotium Caesar et agellos, in quibus vicinalis via causa rixae ac litium fuerat, militi suo donavit.

25. Quid ergo? Non repeteret beneficium ab imperatore, cuius memoriam multitudo rerum confuderat, quem fortuna ingentes exercitus disponentem non patiebatur singulis militibus occurrere? Non est hoc repetere beneficium, sed resumere bono loco positum et paratum, ad quod tamen, ut sumatur, manus porrigenda est. Repetam itaque, quia hoc aut ex magna necessitate facturus ero aut illius causa, a quo repetam. [2] Ti. Caesar inter initia dicenti cuidam: “Meministi—” antequam plures notas familiaritatis veteris proferret : “Non memini,” inquit, “quid fuerim.” Ab hoc quidni non esset repetendum beneficium? Optanda erat oblivio; aversabatur omnium amicorum et aequalium notitiam et illam solam praesentem fortunam suam adspici, illam solam cogitari ac narrari volebat. Inquisitorem habebat veterem amicum! [3] Magis tempestive repetendum est beneficium quam petendum. Adhibenda verborum moderatio, ut nec gratus possit offendi nec ingratus dissimulare. Tacendum erat et expectandum, si inter sapientes viveremus; et tamen sapientibus quoque indicare melius fuisset, quid rerum nostrarum status posceret. [4] Deos, quorum notitiam nulla res effugit, rogamus, et illos vota non exorant, sed admonent. Dis quoque, inquam, Homericus ille sacerdos adlegat officia et aras religiose cultas. Moneri velle ac posse secunda virtus est. [5] Equus obsequens facile et parens huc illuc frenis leniter motis flectendus est. Paucis animus sui rector optimus; proximi sunt, qui admoniti in viam redeunt; his non est dux detrahendus. [6] Opertis oculis inest acies, sed sine usu; quam lumen diei iis immissum ad ministeria sua evocat. Instrumenta cessant, nisi illa in opus suum artifex movit. Inest interim animis voluntas bona, sed torpet modo deliciis ac situ, modo officii inscitia. Hanc utilem facere debemus nec irati relinquere in vitio, sed ut magistri patienter ferre offensationes puerorum discentium memoriae labentis; quae quemadmodum saepe subiecto uno aut altero verbo ad contextum reddendae orationis adducta est, sic ad referendam gratiam admonitione revocanda est.

LIBER VI

1. Quaedam, Liberalis, virorum optime, exercendi tantum ingenii causa quaeruntur et semper extra vitam iacent; quaedam et, dum quaeruntur, oblectamento sunt et quaesita usui. Omnium tibi copiam faciam; tu illa, utcumque tibi visum erit, aut peragi iubeto aut ad explicandum ludorum ordinem induci. Quin his quoque, si abire protinus iusseris, non nihil actum erit; nam etiam quae discere supervacuum est, prodest cognoscere. Ex vultu igitur tuo pendebo; prout ille suaserit mihi, alia detinebo diutius, alia expellam et capite agam.

2. An beneficium eripi posset, quaesitum est. Quidam negant posse; non enim res est, sed actio. Quomodo aliud est munus, aliud ipsa donatio, aliud qui navigat, aliud navigatio, et, quamvis in morbo aeger sit, non tamen idem est aeger et morbus, ita aliud est beneficium ipsum, aliud quod ad unum- quemque nostrum beneficio pervenit. Illud incorporale est, irritum non fit; [2] materia vero eius huc et illuc iactatur et dominum mutat. Itaque eum eripis, ipsa rerum natura revocare, quod dedit, non potest. Beneficia sua interrumpit, non rescindit : qui moritur, tamen vixit; qui amisit oculos, tamen vidit. Quae ad nos pervenerunt, ne sint, effici potest, ne fuerint, non potest; pars autem beneficii et quidem certissima est, quae fuit. [3] Non numquam usu beneficii longiore prohibemur, beneficium quidem ipsum non eraditur. Licet omnes in hoc vires suas natura advocet, retro illi agere se non licet. Potest eripi domus et pecunia et mancipium et quidquid est, in quo haesit beneficii nomen; ipsum vero stabile et immotum est; nulla vis efficiet, ne hic dederit, ne ille acceperit.

3. Egrege mihi videtur M. Antonius apud Rabirium poetam, cum fortunam suam transeuntem alio videat et sibi nihil relictum praeter ius mortis, id quoque, si cito occupaverit, exclamare : Hoc habeo, quodcumque dedi. O! quantum habere potuit, si voluisset! Hae sunt divitiae certae in quacumque sortis humanae levitate uno loco permansurae; quae cum maiores fuerint, hoc minorem habebunt invidiam. Quid tamquam tuo parcis? Procurator es. [2] Omnia ista, quae vos tumidos et supra humana elatos oblivisci cogunt vestrae fragilitatis, quae ferreis claustris custoditis armati, quae ex alieno sanguine rapta vestro defenditis, propter quae classes cruentaturas maria deducitis, propter quae quassatis urbes ignari, quantum telorum in aversos fortuna comparet, propter quae ruptis totiens adfinitatis, amicitiae, collegii foederibus inter contententes duos terrarum orbis elisus est, non sunt vestra. In depositi causa sunt iam iamque ad alium dominum spectantia; aut hostis illa aut hostilis animi successor invadet. [3] Quaeris, quomodo illa tua facias? Dona dando. Consule igitur rebus tuis et certam tibi earum atque inexpugnabilem possessionem para honestiores illas, non solum tutiores facturus. [4] Istud, quod suspicis, quo te divitem ac potentem putas, quam diu possides, sub nomine sordido iacet. Domus est, servus est, nummi sunt; cum donasti, beneficium est.

4. Pateris,” inquit, “ nos aliquando beneficium non debere ei, a quo accepimus; ergo ereptum est.” Multa sunt, propter quae beneficium debere desinimus, non quia ablatum sed quia corruptum est. Aliquis reum me defendit, sed uxorem meam per vim stupro violavit; non abstulit beneficium, sed opponendo illi parem iniuriam solvit me debito, et, si plus laesit, quam ante profuerat, non tantum gratia extinguitur, sed ulciscendi querendique libertas fit, ubi in comparatione beneficii praeponderavit iniuria; ita non aufertur beneficium, sed vincitur. Quid? [2] non tam duri quidam et tam scelerati patres sunt, ut illos aversari et eiurare ius fasque sit? Numquid ergo illi abstulerunt, quae dederant? Minime, sed impietas sequentium temporum commendationem omnis prioris officii sustulit. Non beneficium tollitur, sed beneficii gratia, et efficitur, non ne habeam, sed ne debeam. Tamquam pecuniam aliquis mihi credidit, sed domum meam incendit. Pensatum est creditum damno; nec reddidi illi, nec tamen debeo. [3] Eodem modo et hic, qui aliquid benigne adversus me fecit, aliquid liberaliter, sed postea multa superbe, contumeliose, crudeliter, eo me loco posuit, ut proinde liber adversus eum essem, ac si nihil accepissem; vim beneficiis suis attulit. [4] Colonum suum non tenet quamvis tabellis manentibus, qui segetem eius proculcavit, qui succidit arbusta, non quia recepit, quod pepigerat, sed quia, ne reciperet, effecit. Sic debitori suo creditor saepe damnatur, ubi plus ex alia causa abstulit, quam ex crediti petit. [5] Non tantum inter creditorem et debitorem iudex sedet, qui dicat: “

Pecuniam credidisti. Quid ergo est? Pecus abegisti, servum eius occidisti, argentum, quod non emeris, possides; aestimatione facta debitor discede, qui creditor veneras “; inter beneficia quoque et iniurias ratio confertur. [6] Saepe, inquam, beneficium manet nec debetur; si secuta est dantem paenitentia, si miserum se dixit, quod dedisset, si, cum daret, suspiravit, vultum adduxit, perdere se credidit, non donare, si sua causa aut certe non mea dedit, si non desiit insultare, gloriari, ubique iactare et acerbum munus suum facere, manet beneficium, quamvis non debeatur, sicuti quaedam pecuniae, de quibus ius creditori non dicitur, debentur, sed non exiguntur.

5. Dedisti beneficium, iniuriam postea fecisti; et beneficio gratia debebatur et iniuriae ultio; nec ego illi gratiam debeo nec ille mihi poenam : alter ab altero absolvitur. Cum dicimus : [2] “ Beneficium illi reddidi,” non hoc dicimus illud nos, quod acceperamus, reddidisse, sed aliud pro illo. Reddere est enim rem pro re dare; quidni? cum omnis solutio non idem reddat, sed tantundem. Nam et pecuniam dicimur reddidisse, quamvis numeraverimus pro argenteis aureos, quamvis non intervenerint nummi, sed delegatione et verbis perfecta solutio sit. [3] Videris mihi dicere : “ Perdis operam; quorsus enim pertinet scire me, an maneat, quod non debetur? Iuris consultorum istae acutae ineptiae sunt, qui hereditatem negant usu capi posse sed ea, quae in hereditate sunt, tamquam quicquam aliud sit here- ditas, quam ea, quae in hereditate sunt. [4] Illud potius mihi distingue, quod potest ad rem pertinere, cum idem homo beneficium mihi dedit et postea fecit iniuriam, utrum et beneficium illi reddere debeam et me ab illo nihilo minus vindicare ac veluti duobus nominibus separatim respondere an alterum alteri contribuere et nihil negotii habere, ut beneficium iniuria tollatur, beneficio iniuria. Illud enim video in hoc foro fieri; quid in vestra schola iuris sit, vos sciatis. [5] Separantur actiones nec de eo, quod agimus, et de eo, quod nobiscum agitur, confunditur formula. Si quis apud me pecuniam deposuerit, idem postea furtum mihi fecerit, et ego cum illo furti agam et ille mecum depositi.”

6. Quae proposuisti, mi Liberalis, exempla certis legibus continentur, quas necesse est sequi. Lex legi non miscetur, utraque sua via it. Depositum habet actionem propriam tam mehercules quam furtum. Beneficium nulli legi subiectum est, me arbitro utitur; licet mihi inter se comparare, quantum profuerit mihi quisque aut quantum nocuerit, tum pronuntiare, utrum plus debeatur mihi an debeam. [2] In illis nihil est nostrae potestatis, eundem est, qua ducimur; in beneficio tota potestas mea est, ego iudico. Itaque non separo illa nec diduco, sed iniurias et beneficia ad eundem iudicem mitto. Alioqui iubet me eodem tempore et amare et odire et queri et gratias agere, quod natura non recipit. Potius comparatione facta inter se beneficii et iniuriae videbo, an mihi etiam ultro debeatur. [3] Quomodo, si quis scriptis nostris alios superne imprimit versus, priores litteras non tollit, sed abscondit, sic beneficium superveniens iniuria apparere non patitur.

7. Vultus tuus, cui regendum me tradidi, colligit rugas et trahit frontem, quasi longius exeam. Videris mihi dicere : Quo tantum mihi dexter abis? Huc derige cursum, litus ama. Non possum magis. Itaque, si huic satis factum existimas, illo transeamus, an ei debeatur aliquid, qui nobis invitatus profuit. Hoc apertius potui dicere, nisi propositio deberet esse confusior, ut distinctio statim subsequuta ostenderet utrumque quaeri, et an ei deberemus, qui nobis, dum non vult, profuit, et an ei, qui, dum nescit. Nam si quis coactus aliquid boni fecit; [2] quin nos non obliget, manifestius est, quam ut ulla in hoc verba impendenda sint. Et haec quaestio facile expeditur et si qua similis huic moveri potest, si totiens illo cogitationem nostram converterimus beneficium nullum esse, nisi quod ad nos primum aliqua cogitatio defert, deinde amica et benigna. [3] Itaque nec fluminibus gratias agimus, quamvis aut magna navigia patiantur et ad subvehendas copias largo ac perenni alveo currant aut piscosa et amoena pinguibus arvis interfluant; nec quisquam Nilo beneficium debere se iudicat, non magis quam odium, si immodicus superfluit tardeque decessit; nec ventus beneficium dat, licet lenis et secundus adspiret, nec utilis et salubris cibus. Nam qui beneficium mihi daturus est, debet non tantum prodesse, sed velle. Ideo nec mutis animalibus quicquam debetur : et quam multos e periculo velocitas equi rapuit! nec arboribus : et quam multos aestu laborantes ramorum opacitas texit! [4] Quid autem interest, utrum mihi, qui nescit, profuerit, an qui scire non potuit, cum utrique velle defuerit? Quid interest, utrum me iubeas navi aut vehiculo aut lanceae debere beneficium an ei, qui aequae quam ista propositum bene faciendi nullum habuit, sed profuit casu?

8. Beneficium aliquis nesciens accipit, nemo a nesciente. Quomodo multos fortuita sanant nec ideo remedia sunt, et in flumen alicui cecidisse frigore magno causa sanitatis fuit, quomodo quorundam flagellis quartana discussa est et metus repentinus animum in aliam curam avertendo suspectas horas fefellit nec ideo quicquam horum, etiam si saluti fuit, salutare est, sic quidam nobis prosunt, dum nolunt, immo quia nolunt; non tamen ideo illis beneficium debemus, quod perniciose illorum consilia fortuna deflexit in melius. [2] An existimas me debere ei quicquam, cuius manus, cum me peteret, percussit hostem meum, qui nocuisset, nisi errasset? Saepe testis, dum aperte peierat, etiam veris testibus abrogavit fidem et reum velut factione circumventum miserabilem reddidit. [3] Quosdam ipsa, quae premebat, potentia eripuit, et iudices, quem damnaturi erant causae, damnare gratiae noluerunt. Non tamen hi beneficium reo dederunt, quamvis profuerint, quia, quo missum sit telum, non quo pervenerit, quaeritur, et beneficium ab iniuria distinguit non eventus sed animus. [4] Adversarius meus, dum contraria dicit et iudicem superbia offendit et in unum testem temere rem demittit, causam meam erexit; non quaero, an pro me erraverit : contra me voluit.

9. Nempe, ut gratus sim, velle debeo idem facere, quod ille, ut beneficium daret, debuit. Num quid est iniquius homine, qui eum odit, a quo in turba calcatus aut respersus aut, quo nollet, impulsus est? Atqui quid est aliud, quod illum querellae eximat, cum in re sit iniuria, quam nescisse, quid faceret? [2] Eadem res efficit, ne hic beneficium dederit, ne ille iniuriam fecerit; et amicum et inimicum voluntas facit. Quam multos militiae morbus eripuit! Quosdam, ne ad ruinam domus suae occurrerent, inimicus vadimonio tenuit; ne in piratarum manus pervenirent, quidam naufragio consecuti sunt; nec his tamen beneficium debemus, quia extra sensum officii casus est, nec inimico, cuius nos lis servavit, dum vexat ac detinet. [3] Non est beneficium, nisi quod a bona voluntate proficiscitur, nisi illud ad cognoscit, qui dedit. Profuit aliquis mihi, dum nescit: nihil illi debeo. Profuit, cum vellet nocere : imitabor ipsum.

10. Ad primum illum revertamur. Ut gratiam referam, aliquid facere me vis? Ipse, ut beneficium mihi daret, nihil fecit! Ut ad alterum transeamus, vis me huic gratiam referre, ut, quod a nolente accepi, volens reddam? Nam quid de tertio loquar, qui ab iniuria in beneficium delapsus est? [2] Ut beneficium tibi debeam, parum est voluisse te dare; ut non debeam, satis est noluisse. Beneficium enim voluntas nuda non efficit, sed, quod beneficium non esset, si optimae ac plenissimae voluntati fortuna defuisset, id aequae beneficium non est, nisi fortunam voluntas antecessit. Non enim profuisse te mihi oportet, ut ob hoc tibi obliger, sed ex destinato profuisse.

11. Cleanthes exemplo eiusmodi utitur : “ Ad quaerendum,” inquit, “ et accersendum ex Academia Platonem duos pueros misi. Alter totam porticum perscrutatus est, alia quoque loca, in quibus illum inveniri posse sperabat, percucurrit et domum non minus lassus quam irritus redit; [2] alter apud proximum circulatorem resedit et, dum vagus atque erro vernaculis congregatur et ludit, transeuntem Platonem, quem non quaesierat, invenit. Illum, inquit, laudabimus puerum, qui, quantum in se erat, quod iussus est, fecit; hunc feliciter inertem castigabimus.” [3] Voluntas est, quae apud nos ponit officium; cuius vide quae condicio sit, ut me debito obstringat. Parum est illi velle, nisi profuit; parum est profuisse, nisi voluit. Puta enim aliquem donare voluisse nec donasse; animum quidem eius habeo, sed beneficium non habeo, quod consummat et res et animus. [4] Quemadmodum ei, qui voluit mihi quidem pecuniam credere, sed non dedit, nihil debeo, ita ei, qui voluit mihi beneficium dare, sed non potuit, amicus quidem ero sed non obligatus; et volam illi aliquid praestare (nam et ille voluit mihi), ceterum, si benigniore usus fortuna praestitero, beneficium dederò, non gratiam rettulero. Ille mihi gratiam referre debebit; hinc initium fiet, a me numerabitur.

12. Intellego iam, quid velis quaerere; non opus est te dicere; vultus tuus loquitur. “ Si quis sua nobis causa profuit, eine,” inquis, “ debetur aliquid? Hoc enim saepe te conquerentem audio, quod quaedam homines sibi praestant, aliis imputant.” Dicam, mi Liberalis; sed prius istam quaestiunculam dividam et rem aequam ab iniqua separabo. [2] Multum enim interest, utrum aliquis beneficium nobis det sua causa an et sua. Ille, qui totus ad se spectat et nobis prodest, quia aliter prodesse sibi non potest, eo mihi loco est, quo, qui pecori suo hibernum et aestivum pabulum prospicit; eo loco est, quo, qui captivos suos, ut commodius veneant, pascit et ut opimos boves saginat ac defricat, quo lanista, qui familiam summa cura exercet atque ornat. Multum, ut ait Cleanthes, a beneficio distat negotiatio.

13. Rursus non sum tam iniquus, ut ei nihil debeam, qui, cum mihi utilis esset, fuit et sibi; non enim exigo, ut mihi sine respectu sui consulat, immo etiam opto, ut beneficium mihi datum vel magis danti profuerit, dum modo id, qui dabat duos intuens dederit et inter me seque dividerit. [2] Licet id ipse ex maiore parte possideat, si modo me in consortium admisit, si duos cogitavit, ingratus sum, non solum iniustus, nisi gaudeo hoc illi profuisse, quod proderat mihi. Summae malignitatis est non vocare beneficium, nisi quod dantem aliquo incommodo adfecit. [3] Alteri illi, qui beneficium dat sua causa, respondebo : “ Usus me quare potius te mihi profuisse dicas quam me tibi? “ “ Puta,” inquit, “ aliter fieri non posse me magistratum, quam si decem captos cives ex magno captivorum numero redemero; nihil debebis mihi, cum te servitute ac vinculis liberavero? Atqui mea id causa faciam.” Adversus hoc respon- deo : “ Aliquid istic tua causa facis, aliquid mea : [4] tua, quod redimis, mea, quod me redimis; tibi enim ad utilitatem tuam satis est quoslibet redemisse. Itaque debeo, non quod redimis me, sed quod eligis; poteris enim et alterius redemptione idem consequi, quod mea. Utilitatem rei partiris mecum et me in beneficium recipis duobus profuturum. Praefers me aliis; hoc totum mea causa facis. [5] Itaque, si praetorem te factura esset decem captivorum redemptio, decem autem soli captivi essemus, nemo quicquam tibi deberet ex nobis, quia nihil haberes, quod cuiquam imputares, a tua utilitate seductum. Non sum invidus beneficii interpret nec desidero illud mihi tantum dari, sed et mihi.”

14. “ Quid ergo? “ inquit; “ si in sortem nomina vestra coici iussissem, et tuum nomen inter redimen- dos exisset, nihil deberes mihi? [2] “ Immo deberem, sed exiguum; quid sit hoc, dicam. Aliquid istic mea causa facis, quod me ad fortunam redemptionis admittis; quod nomen meum exit, sorti debeo, quod exire potuit, tibi. Aditum mihi ad beneficium tuum dedisti, cuius maiorem partem fortunae debeo, sed hoc ipsum tibi, quod fortunae debere potui. [3] Illos ex toto praeteribo, quorum mercennarium beneficium est, quod qui dat, non computat, cui sed quanti daturus sit, quod undique in se conversum

est. Vendit mihi aliquis frumentum; vivere non possum, nisi emero; sed non debeo vitam, quia emi. [4] Nec, quam necessarium fuerit, aestimo, sine quo victurus non fui, sed quam ingratum, quod non habuissem, nisi emissem, in quo invehendo mercator non cogitavit, quantum auxilii adlaturus esset mihi, sed quantum lucri sibi. Quod emi, non debeo.

15. “Isto modo,” inquit, “nec medico quicquam debere te nisi mercedulam dicis nec praeceptori, quia aliquid numeraveris. Atqui omnium horum apud nos magna caritas, magna reverentia est.” Adversus hoc respondetur quaedam pluris esse, quam emuntur. [2] Emis a medico rem inaestimabilem, vitam ac bonam valetudinem, a bonarum artium praeceptore studia liberalia et animi cultum; itaque his non rei pretium, sed operae solvitur, quod deserviunt, quod a rebus suis avvocati nobis vacant; mercedem non meriti, sed occupationis suae ferunt. [3] Aliud tamen dici potest verius, quod statim ponam, si prius, quomodo istud refelli possit, ostendero. “Quaedam,” inquit, “pluris sunt, quam venierunt, et ob hoc aliquid mihi extra pro illis quamvis empta sunt, debes.” [4] Primum quid interest, quanti sint, cum de pretio inter ementem vendentemque convenerit? Deinde non emi illud suo pretio, sed tuo. “Pluris est,” inquis, “quam venit”; sed pluris venire non potuit. Pretium autem rei cuiusque pro tempore est; eum bene ista laudaveris, tanti sunt, quanto pluris venire non possunt; propterea nihil venditori debet, qui bene emit. [5] Deinde, etiam si pluris ista sunt, non tamen ullum istic tuum munus est, ut non ex usu effectuve, sed ex consuetudine et annona aestimetur. [6] Quod tu pretium ponis traicienti maria et per medios fluctus, cum terra e conspectu recessit, certam secanti viam et prospiciens futuras tempestates et securis omnibus subito iubenti vela substringi, armamenta demitti, paratos ad incursum procellae et repentinum impetum stare? Huic tamen tantae rei praemium vectura persolvit! [7] Quanti aestimas in solitudine hospitium, in imbre tectum, in frigore balneum aut ignem? Scio tamen, quanti ista consecuturus deversorium subeam! Quantum nobis praestat, qui labentem domum suscipit et agentem ex imo rimas insulam incredibili arte suspendit! Certo tamen et levi pretio fultura conducitur. [8] Murus nos ab hostibus tutos et a subitis latronum incursionibus praestat; notum est tamen, illas turres pro securitate publica propugnacula habituras excitaturus faber quid in diem mereat.

16. Infinitum erit, si latius exempla conquiram, quibus appareat parvo magna constare. Quid ergo? Quare et medico et praeceptori plus quiddam debeo nec adversus illos mercede defungor? Quia ex medico et praeceptore in amicum transeunt et nos non arte, quam vendunt, obligant, sed benigna et familiari voluntate. [2] Itaque medico, si nihil amplius quam manum tangit et me inter eos, quos perambulat, ponit sine ullo adfectu facienda aut vitanda praeciens, nihil amplius debeo, quia me non tamquam amicum videt, sed tamquam imperatorem. [3] Ne praeceptorem quidem habeo cur venerer, si me in grege discipulorum habuit, si non putavit dignum propria et peculiari cura, si numquam in me derexit animum, et, cum in medium effunderet, quae sciebat, non didici, sed excepi. Quid ergo est, quare istis multum debeamus? [4] Non quia pluris est, quod vendiderunt, quam emimus, sed quia nobis ipsis aliquid praestiterunt. Ille magis pependit, quam medico necesse est; pro me, non pro fama artis extimuit; non fuit contentus remedia monstrare : et admovit; inter sollicitos adsedit, ad suspecta tempora occurrit; nullum ministerium illi oneri, nullum fastidio fuit; [5] gemitus meos non securus audivit; in turba multorum invocantem ego illi potissima curatio fui; tantum aliis vacavit, quantum mea valetudo permiserat : huic ego non tamquam medico sed tamquam amico obligatus sum. [6] Alter rursus docendo et laborem et taedium tulit; praeter illa, quae a praecipientibus in commune dicuntur, aliqua instillavit ac tradidit, hortando bonam indolem erexit et modo laudibus fecit animum, modo admonitionibus discussit desidia; [7] tum ingenium latens et pigrum iniecta, ut ita dicam, manu extraxit; nec, quae sciebat, maligne dispensavit, quo diutius esset necessarius, sed cupit, si posset, universa transfundere : ingratus sum, nisi illum inter gratissimas necessitudines diligo.

17. Sordidissimorum quoque artificiorum institoribus supra constitutum aliquid adiecimus, si nobis illorum opera enixior visa est; et gubernatori et opifici vilissimae mercis et in diem locanti manus suas corollarium adpersimus. In optimis vero artibus, quae vitam aut conservant aut excolunt, qui nihil se plus existimat debere, quam pepigit, ingratus est. [2] Adice, quod talium studiorum traditio miscet animos; hoc cum factum est, tam medico quam praeceptori pretium operae solvitur, animi debetur.

18. Platon cum flumen nave transisset nec ab illo quicquam portitor exegisset, honori hoc suo datum credens dixit positum illi esse apud Platonem officium; deinde paulo post, cum alium atque alium gratis eadem sedulitate transveheret, negavit illi iam apud Platonem positum officium. [2] Nam ut tibi debeam aliquid pro eo, quod praestas, debes non tantum mihi praestare, sed tamquam mihi; non potes ob id quemquam appellare, quod spargis in populum. Quid ergo? Nihil tibi debebitur pro hoc? Tamquam ab uno nihil; cum omnibus solvam, quod cum omnibus debeo.

19. “Negas,” inquit, “ullum dare beneficium eum, qui me gratuita nave per flumen Padum tulit? “Nego. Aliquid boni facit, beneficium non dat; facit enim aut sua causa aut utique non mea; ad summam ne ipse quidem se mihi beneficium iudicat dare, sed aut rei publicae aut viciniae aut ambitioni suae praestat et pro hoc aliud quoddam commodum expectat, quam quod a singulis recepturus est. “Quid ergo? [2] “inquit, “si princeps civitatem dederit omnibus Gallis, si immunitatem Hispanis, nihil hoc nomine singuli debebunt? “Quidni debeant? debebunt autem non tamquam proprium beneficium, sed tamquam publici partem. “Nullam,” inquit, “habuit cogitationem illo tempore mei, quo universis proderat; [3] noluit mihi civitatem proprie dare nec in me direxit animum; ita quare ei debeam, qui me sibi non substituit, cum facturus esset, quod fecit? [4] “Primum, cum cogitavit Gallis omnibus prodesse, et mihi cogitavit prodesse; eram enim Gallus et me etiam si non mea, publica tamen nota comprehendit. Deinde ego quoque illi non tamquam proprium debebo, sed tamquam commune munus; unus ex populo non tamquam pro me solvam, sed tamquam pro patria conferam. [5] Si quis patriae meae pecuniam credat, non dicam me illius debitorem nec hoc aes alienum profitebor aut candidatus aut reus; ad exsolvendum tamen hoc dabo portionem meam. Sic istius muneris, quod universis datur, debitorem me nego, quia mihi quidem dedit sed non propter me, et mihi quidem, sed nesciens, an mihi daret; nihilo minus aliquid mihi dependendum sciam, quia ad me quoque circumitu longo pervenit. Propter me debet factum esse, quod me obliget.

20. “Isto,” inquit, “modo nec lunae nec soli quicquam debes; non enim propter te moventur.” Sed cum in hoc moveantur, ut universa conservent, et pro me moventur; universorum enim pars sum. Adice nunc, quod nostra et horum condicio dissimilis est; [2] nam qui mihi prodest, ut per me prosit sibi, non dedit beneficium, quia me instrumentum utilitatis suae fecit; sol autem et luna, etiam si nobis prosunt sua causa, non in hoc tamen prosunt, ut per nos prosint sibi; quid enim nos conferre illis possumus?

21. “ Sciam,” inquit, “ solem ac lunam nobis velle prodesse, si nolle potuerint; illis autem non licet non moveri. Ad summam consistant et opus suum intermittant.” Hoc vide quot modis refellatur. Non ideo minus vult, qui non potest nolle; [2] immo maximum argumentum est firmae voluntatis ne mutari quidem posse. Vir bonus non potest non facere, quod facit; non enim erit bonus, nisi fecerit; ergo nec bonus vir beneficium dat, quia facit, quod debet, non potest autem non facere, quod debet. Praeterea multum interest, utrum dicas : [3] “ Non potest hoc non facere,” quia cogitur, an : “ Non potest nolle.” Nam si necesse est illi facere, non debeo ipsi beneficium, sed cogenti; si necesse est illi velle ob hoc, quia nihil habet melius, quod velit, ipse se cogit; ita, quod tamquam coacto non deberem, tamquam cogenti debeo. [4] “ Desinant,” inquit, “ velle.” Hoc loco tibi illud occurrat : Quis tam demens est, ut eam neget voluntatem esse, cui non est periculum desinendi vertendique se in contrarium, cum ex diverso nemo aequè videri debeat velle, quam cuius voluntas usque eo certa est, ut aeterna sit? An, si is quoque vult, qui potest statim nolle, is non videbitur velle, in cuius naturam non cadit nolle?

22. “ Agedum,” inquit, “ si possunt, resistant.” Hoc dicis : “ Omnia ista ingentibus intervallis diducta et in custodiam universi disposita stationes suas deserant; subita confusione rerum sidera sideribus incurrant, et rupta rerum concordia in ruinam divina labantur, contextusque velocitatis citatissimae in tot saecula promissas vices in medio itinere destituat, et, quae nunc alternis eunt redeuntque opportunis libramentis mundum ex aequo temperantia, repentino concrementur incendio, et ex tanta varietate solvantur atque eant in unum omnia; ignis cuncta possideat, quem deinde pigra nox occupet, et profunda vorago tot deos sorbeat.” Est tanti, ut tu coarguaris, ista concidere? Prosunt tibi etiam invito euntque ista tua causa, etiam si maior illis alia ac prior causa est.

23. Adice nunc, quod non externa cogunt deos, sed sua illis in lege aeterna voluntas est. Statuerunt, quae non mutarent; itaque non possunt videri facturi aliquid, quamvis nolint, quia, quidquid desinere non possunt, perseverare voluerunt, nec umquam primi consilii deos paenitet. [2] Sine dubio stare illis et desciscere in contrarium non licet, sed non ob aliud, quam quia vis sua illos in proposito tenet; nec imbecillitate permanent, sed quia non libet ab optimis aberrare et sic ire decretum est. [3] In prima autem illa constitutione, cum universa disponent, etiam nostra videntur rationemque hominis habuerunt; itaque non possunt videri sua tantum causa decurrere et explicare opus suum, quia pars operis et nos sumus. Debemus ergo et soli et lunae et ceteris caelestibus beneficium, quia, etiam si potiora illis sunt, in quae oriuntur, nos tamen in maiora ituri iuvant. [4] Adice, quod ex destinato iuvant, ideoque obligati sumus, quia non in beneficium ignorantium incidimus, sed haec, quae accipimus, accepturos scierunt; et quamquam maius illis propositum sit maiorque actus sui fructus, quam servare mortalia, tamen in nostras quoque utilitates a principio rerum praemissa mens est et is ordo mundo datus, ut appareat curam nostri non inter ultima habitam. [5] Debemus parentibus nostris pietatem, et multi non, ut gignerent, coierant. Di non possunt videri nescisse, quid effecturi essent, eum omnibus alimenta protinus et auxilia providerint, nec eos per neglegentiam genuere, quibus tam multa generabant. Cogitavit nos ante natura, quam fecit, nec tam leve opus sumus, ut illi potuerimus excidere. [6] Vide, quantum nobis permiserit, quam non intra homines humani imperii condicio sit; vide, in quantum corporibus vagari liceat, quae non coercuit fine terrarum, sed in omnem partem sui misit; vide, animi quantum audeant, quemadmodum soli aut noverint deos aut quaerant et mente in altum elata divina comitentur : scies non esse hominem tumultuarium et incogitatum opus. [7] Inter maxima rerum suarum natura nihil habet, quo magis gloriatur, aut certe, cui gloriatur. Quantus iste furor est controversiam dis muneris sui facere! Quomodo adversus eos hic erit gratus, quibus gratia referri sine impendio non potest, qui negat se ab iis accepisse, a quibus cum maxime accepit, qui et semper daturi sunt et numquam recepturi? [8]

Quanta autem perversitas ob hoc alicui non debere, quia etiam infitianti benignus est, et continuationem ipsam sedemque beneficiorum argumentum vocare necessario dantis! “Nolo! Sibi habeat! Quis illum rogat?” et omnes alias impudentis animi voces his adstrue. Non ideo de te minus meretur is, cuius liberalitas ad te etiam, dum negas, pervenit, cuiusque beneficiorum vel hoc maximum est, quod etiam querenti daturus est.

24. Non vides, quemadmodum teneram liberorum infantiam parentes ad salubrium rerum patientiam cogant? Flentium corpora ac repugnandum diligens cura fovant et, ne membra libertas immatura detorqueat, in rectum exitura constringunt et mox liberalia studia inculcant adhibito timore nolentibus; ad ultimum audacem iuventam frugalitati, pudori, moribus bonis, si parum sequitur, coactam applicant. [2] Adulescentibus quoque ac iam potentibus sui, si remedia metu aut intemperantia reiciunt, vis adhibetur ac severitas. Itaque beneficiorum maxima sunt, quae a parentibus accepimus, dum aut nescimus aut nolumus.

25. His ingratis et repudiantibus beneficia, non quia nolunt, sed ne debeant, similes sunt ex diverso nimis grati, qui aliquid incommodi precari solent iis, quibus obligati sunt, aliquid adversi, in quo adfectum me- morem accepti beneficii approbent. [2] An hoc recte faciant et pia voluntate, quaeritur; quorum animus simillimus est pravo amore flagrantibus, qui amicae suae optant exilium, ut desertam fugientemque comi- tentur, optant inopiam, ut magis desiderant donent, optant morbum, ut adsideant, et, quidquid inimicus optaret, amantes vovent. Fere idem itaque exitus est odii et amoris insani. [3] Tale quiddam et his accidit, qui amicis incommoda optant, quae detrahant, et ad beneficium iniuria veniunt, cum satius sit vel cessare, quam per scelus officio locum quaerere. [4] Quid, si gubernator a dis tempestates infestissimas et procellas petat, ut gravior ars sua periculo fiat? Quid, si imperator deos oret, ut magna vis hostium circumfusa castris fossas subito impetu compleat et vallum trepidante exercitu vellat et in ipsis portis infesta signa constituat, quo maiore cum gloria rebus lassis pro- fligatisque succurrat? [5] Omnes isti beneficia sua detestabili via ducunt, qui deos contra eum advocant, cui ipsi adfuturi sunt, et ante illos sterni quam erigi volunt. Inhumana ista perverse grati animi natura est contra eum

26. “Non nocet,” inquit, “illi votum meum, quia simul opto et periculum et remedium.” Hoc dicis non nihil te peccare sed minus, quam si sine remedio periculum optares. Nequitia est ut extrahas mer- gere, evertere ut suscites, ut emittas includere. Non est beneficium iniuriae finis, nec umquam id detraxisse meritum est, quod ipse, qui detraxit, intulerat. [2] Non vulneres me malo quam sanes. Potes inire gratiam, si, quia vulneratus sum, sanas, non, si vulneras, ut sanandus sim. Numquam cicatrix nisi conlata vulnere placuit, quod ita coisse gaudemus, ut non fuisse malletus. Si hoc ei optares, cuius nullum beneficium haberes, inhumanum erat votum; quanto inhumanius ei optas, cui beneficium debes!

27. Simul,” inquit, “ut possim ferre illi opem, precor.” Primum, ut te in media parte voti tui occupem, iam ingratus es; nondum audio, quid illi velis praestare, scio, quid illum velis pati. Sollicitudinem illi et metum et maius aliquod imprecaris malum. Optas, ut ope indigeat : hoc contra illum est; optas, ut ope tua indigeat : hoc pro te est. Non succurrere vis illi, sed solvere : qui sic properat, solvi vult, non solvere. [2] Ita, quod unum in voto tuo honestum videri poterat, ipsum turpe et ingratum est, nolle debere; optas enim, non ut tu facultatem habeas referendae gratiae, sed ut ille necessitatem implorandae. Superiorem te facis et, quod nefas est, bene meritum ad pedes tuos mittis. Quanto satius est honesta voluntate debere, quam rationem per malam solvere! [3] Si infitiareris, quod acceperas, minus peccares; nihil enim, nisi quod dederat, amitteret. Nunc vis illum subici tibi, iactura rerum suarum et status mutatione in id devocari, ut infra beneficia sua iaceat. Gratum te putabo? Coram eo, cui prodesse vis, opta! Votum tu istud vocas, quod inter gratum et inimicum potest dividi, quod non dubites adversarium et hostem fecisse, si extrema taceantur? [4] Hostes quoque optaverunt capere quasdam urbes, ut servarent, et vincere quosdam, ut ignoscerent, nec ideo non hostilia vota, in quibus, quod mitissimum est, post crudelitatem venit. [5] Denique qualia esse iudicas vota, quae nemo minus tibi volet, quam is, pro quo fiunt, succedere? Pessime cum eo agis, cui vis a dis noceri, a te succurri, inique cum ipsis dis; illis enim durissimas partes imponis, tibi humanas; ut tu prosis, di nocebunt. [6] Si accusatorem submitteres, quem deinde removeres, si aliqua illum lite implicares, quam subinde discuteret, nemo de tuo scelere dubitaret. Quid interest, utrum istuc fraude temptetur an voto, nisi quod potentiores illi adversarios quaeris? Non est, quod dicas : “ Quam enim illi iniuriam facio? [7] “ Votum tuum aut supervacuum est aut iniuriosum, immo iniuriosum, etiam si irritum. Quidquid non efficis, dei munus est, iniuria vero, quidquid optas. Sat est; tibi non aliter debemus irasci, quam si profeceris.

28. “ Si vota,” inquit, “ valuissent, et in hoc valuissent, ut tutus esses.” Primum certum mihi optas periculum sub incerto auxilio. Deinde utrumque certum puta : quod nocet, prius est. [2] Praeterea tu condicionem voti tui nosti, me tempestas occupavit portus ac praesidii dubium. Quantum tormentum existimas, etiam si accepero, eguisse? Etiam si servatus fuero, trepidasse? Etiam si absolutus fuero, causam dixisse? Nullius metus tam gratus est finis, ut non gravior sit solida et inconcussa securitas. [3] Opta, ut reddere mihi beneficium possis, cum opus erit, non, ut opus sit. Si esset in tua potestate, quod optas, ipse fecisses.

29. Quanto hoc honestius votum est : “ Opto, in eo statu sit, quo semper beneficia distribuat, numquam desideret; sequatur illum materia, qua tam benigne utitur, largiendi iuvandique; numquam illi sit dandorum beneficiorum inopia, datorum paenitentia; naturam per se pronam ad misericordiam, humanitatem, clementiam irritet ac provocet turba gratorum, quos illi et habere contingat nec experiri necesse sit; ipse nulli implacabilis sit, ipsi nemo placandus; tam aequali in eum fortuna indulgentia perseveret, ut nemo in illum possit esse nisi conscientia gratus.” [2] Quanto haec iustiora vota sunt, quae te in nullam occasionem differunt, sed gratum statim faciunt! Quid enim prohibet referre gratiam prosperis rebus? Quam multa sunt, per quae, quidquid debemus, reddere etiam felicibus possumus! Fidele consilium, adsidua conversatio, sermo comis et sine adulatione iucundus, aures, si deliberari velit, diligentes, tutae, si credere, convictus familiaritas. Neminem tam alte secunda posuerunt, ut non illi eo magis amicus desit, quia nihil absit.

30. Ista tristis et omni voto submovenda occasio ac procul repellenda. Ut gratus esse possis, iratis dis opus est? Ne ex hoc quidem peccare te intellegis, quod melius cum eo agitur, cui ingratus es? Propone animo tuo carcerem, vincula, sordes, servitutem, bellum, egestatem; haec sunt occasiones voti tui. Si quis tecum contraxit, per ista dimittitur! [2] Quin potius eum potentem esse vis, cui plurimum debes, et beatum? Quid enim, ut dixi, vetat te referre etiam summa felicitate praeditis gratiam? Cuius plena tibi occurreret et varia materia. Quid? tu nescis debitum etiam locupletibus solvi? [3] Nec te invitum distringam. Omnia sane excluserit opulenta felicitas, monstrabo tibi, cuius rei inopia laborent magna fastigia, quid omnia possidentibus desit : scilicet ille, qui verum dicat et hominem inter mentientes stupentem ipsaque consuetudine pro rectis blanda audiendi ad ignorantiam veri perductum vindicet a consensu concentuque falsorum. [4] Non vides, quemadmodum illos in praeceps agat extincta libertas et fides in obsequium servile submissa? [5] Dum nemo ex animi sui sententia suadet dissuadetque, sed adulandi certamen est et unum amicorum omnium officium, una contentio, quis blandissime fallat, ignoravere vires suas, et, dum se tam magnos, quam audiunt, credunt, attraxere supervacua et in discrimen rerum omnium perventura bella, utilem et necessariam rupere concordiam, secuti iram, quam nemo revocabat, multorum sanguinem hauserunt fusuri novissime suum; [6] dum vindicant inexplorata pro certis flectique non minus existimant turpe quam vinci et perpetua credunt, quae in summum perducta maxime nutant, ingentia super se ac suos regna fregerunt; nec intellexerunt in illa scena vanis et cito diffluentibus bonis refulgente ex eo tempore ipsos nihil non adversi expectare debuisse, ex quo nihil veri audire potuerunt.

31. Cum bellum Graeciae indiceret Xerxes, animum tumentem oblitumque, quam caducis confideret, nemo non impulit. Alius aiebat non laturos nuntium belli et ad primam adventus famam terga versuros; [2] alius nihil esse dubii, quin illa mole non vinci solum Graecia, sed obrui posset; magis verendum, ne vacuas desertasque urbes invenirent et profugis hostibus vastae solitudines relinquerentur non habituris, ubi tantas vires exercere possent; [3] alius vix illi rerum naturam sufficere, angusta esse classibus maria, militi castra, explicandis equestribus copiis campestria, vix patere caelum satis ad emittenda omni manu tela. [4] Cum in hunc modum multa undique iactarentur, quae hominem nimia aestimatione sui furentem concitarent, Demaratus Lacedaemonius solus dixit ipsam illam, qua sibi placeret, multitudinem indigestam et gravem metuendam esse ducenti; non enim vires habere, sed pondus; immodica numquam regi posse, nec diu durare, quidquid regi non potest. [5] “In primo,” inquit, “statim monte Lacones obiecti dabunt sui experimentum. Tot ista gentium milia trecenti morabuntur; haerebunt in vestigio fixi et commissas sibi angustias armis tuebuntur, corporibus obstruent; tota illos Asia non movebit loco; tantas minas belli et paene totius generis humani ruentis impetum paucissimi sistent. [6] Cum te mutatis legibus suis natura transmiserit, in semita haerebis et aestimans futura damna, cum computaveris, quanti Thermopylarum angusta constiterint; scies te fugari posse, cum sciens posse retineri. [7] Cedent quidem tibi pluribus locis velut torrentis modo ablati, cuius cum magno terrore prima vis defluit; deinde hinc atque illinc coorientur et tuis te viribus prement. [8] Verum est, quod dicitur, maiorem belli apparatus esse, quam qui recipi ab his regionibus possit, quas oppugnare constituis, sed haec res contra nos est. Ob hoc ipsum te Graecia vincet, quia non capit; uti toto te non potes. [9] Praeterea, quae una rebus salus est, occurrere ad primos rerum impetus et inclinatis opem ferre non poteris nec fulcire ac firmare labentia; multo ante vincens, quam victum esse te sentias. [10] Ceterum non est, quod exercitum tuum ob hoc sustineri non putes posse, quia numerus eius duci quoque ignotus est; nihil tam magnum est, quod perire non possit, cui nascitur in perniciem, ut alia quiescant, ex ipsa magnitudine sua causa.” [11] Acciderunt, quae Demaratus praedixerat. Divina atque humana impellentem et mutantem, quidquid obstiterat, trecenti stare iusserunt, stratusque passim per totam Graeciam Perses intellexit, quantum ab exercitu turba distaret. Itaque Xerxes pudore quam damno miserior Demarato gratias egit, quod solus sibi verum dixisset, et permisit petere, quod vellet. [12] Petit ille, ut Sardis, maximam Asiae civitatem, curru vectus intraret rectam capite tiaram gerens; id solis datum regibus. Dignus fuerat praemio, ante quam peteret; sed quam miserabilis gens, in qua nemo fuit, qui verum diceret regi, nisi qui non dicebat sibi!

32. Divus Augustus filiam ultra impudicitiae male- dictum impudicam relegavit et flagitia principalis domus in publicum emisit : admissos gregatim adulteros, pererratam nocturnis comissionibus civitatem, forum ipsum ac rostra, ex quibus pater legem de adulteriis tulerat, filiae in stupra placuisse, cotidianum ad Marsyam concursum, cum ex adultera in quae-

stuariam versa ius omnis licentiae sub ignoto adultero peteret. [2] Haec tam vindicanda principi quam tacenda, quia quarundam rerum turpitudine etiam ad vindicantem redit, parum potens irae publicaverat. Deinde, cum interposito tempore in locum irae subisset verecundia, gemens, quod non illa silentio pressisset, quae tam diu nescierat, donec loqui turpe esset, saepe exclamavit : “ Horum mihi nihil accidisset, si aut Agrippa aut Maecenas vixisset! “ Adeo tot habenti milia hominum duos reparare difficile est. [3] Caesae sunt legiones et protinus scriptae; fracta classis et intra paucos dies natavit nova; saevitum est in opera publica ignibus, surrexerunt meliora consumptis. Tota vita Agrippae et Maecenatis vacavit locus. Quid? Putem defuisse similes, qui adsumerentur, an ipsius vitium fuisse, quia maluit queri quam quaerere? [4] Non est, quod existimemus Agrippam et Maecenatem solitos illi vera dicere; qui si vixissent, inter dissimulantes fuissent. Regalis ingenii mos est in praesentium contumeliam amissa laudare et his virtutem dare vera dicendi, a quibus iam audiendi periculum non est.

33. Sed ut me ad propositum reducam, vides, quam facile sit gratiam referre felicibus et in summo humanarum opum positis. Dic illis, non quod volunt audire, sed quod audisse semper volunt; plenas aures adulationibus aliquando vera vox intret; da consilium utile. Quaeris, quid felici praestare possis? [2] Effice, ne felicitati suae credat, ut sciat illam multis et fidis manibus continendam. Parum in illum contuleris, si illi stultam fiduciam permansurae semper potentiae excusseris docuerisque mobilia esse, quae dedit casus, et maiore cursu fugere, quam veniunt, nec iis portionibus, quibus ad summa perventum est, retro iri, sed saepe inter maximam fortunam et ultimam nihil interesse? [3] Nescis, quantum sit pretium amicitiae, si non intellegis multum te ei daturum, cui dederis amicum, rem non domibus tantum, sed saeculis raram, quae non aliubi magis deest, quam ubi creditur abundare. Quid? [4] Istos tu libros, quos vix nomenclatorum complectitur aut memoria aut manus, amicorum existimas esse? Non sunt isti amici, qui agmine magno ianuam pulsant, qui in primas et secundas admissiones digeruntur.

34. Consuetudo ista vetus est regibus regesque simulantibus populum amicorum describere, et proprium superbiae magno aestimare introitum ac tactum sui liminis et pro honore dare, ut ostio suo propius adsideas, ut gradum prior intra domum ponas, in qua deinceps multa sunt ostia, quae receptos quoque excludant. [2] Apud nos primi omnium C.3 Gracchus et mox Livius Drusus instituerunt segregare turbam suam et alios in secretum recipere, alios cum pluribus, alios universos. Habuerunt itaque isti amicos primos, habuerunt secundos, numquam veros. [3] Amicum vocas, cuius disponitur salutatio? Aut potest huius tibi fides patere, qui per fores maligne apertas non intrat, sed illabitur? Huic pervenire usque ad libertatem destringendam licet, cuius vulgare et publicum verbum et promiscuum ignotis “ Have! “ non nisi suo ordine emittitur? [4] Ad quemcumque itaque istorum veneris, quorum salutatio urbem concutit, scito, etiam si animadverteris obsessos ingenti frequentia vicis et commeantium in utramque partem catervis itinera compressa, tamen venire te in locum hominibus plenum, amicis vacuum. [5] In pectore amicus, non in atrio quaeritur; illo recipiendus, illic retinendus est et in sensus recondendus. Hoc doce : gratus es.

35. Male de te existimas, si inutilis es nisi adflicto, si rebus bonis supervacuum es. Quemadmodum te et in dubiis et in adversis et in laetis sapienter geris, ut dubia prudenter tractes, adversa fortiter, laeta moderate, ita in omnia utilem te exhibere amico potes. Adversa eius nec deserueris nec optaveris; multa nihilo minus, ut non optes, in tanta varietate, quae tibi materiam exercendae fidei praebeant, incident. [2] Quemadmodum, qui optat divitias alicui in hoc, ut illarum ipse partem ferat, quamvis pro illo videatur optare, sibi prospicit, sic, qui optat amico aliquam necessitatem, quam adiutorio suo fideque discutiatur, quod est ingrati, se illi praefert et tanti existimat illum miserum esse, ut ipse gratus sit, ob hoc ipsum ingratus; exonerare enim se vult et gravi sarcina liberare. [3] Multum interest, utrum properes referre gratiam, ut reddas beneficium, an ne debeas. Qui reddere vult, illius se commodo aptabit et idoneum illi venire tempus volet; qui nihil aliud quam ipse liberari vult, quomodocumque ad hoc cupiet pervenire, quod est pessimae voluntatis. [4] “ Ista,” inquit, “ festinatio nimium grati est! “ Id apertius exprimere non possum, quam si repetivero, quod dixi. Non vis reddere acceptum beneficium, sed effugere. Hoc dicere videris : “

Quando isto carebo? Quocumque modo mihi laborandum est, ne isti obligatus sim.” Si optares, ut illi de suo solveres, multum abesse videreris a grato. Hoc, quod optas, iniquius est; execraris enim illum et caput sanctum tibi dira precatatione defigis. [5] Nemo, ut existimo, de immanitate animi tui dubitaret, si aperte illi paupertatem, si captivitatem, si famem ac metum imprecareris; at quid interest, utrum vox ista sit voti tui an vis? Aliquid enim horum optas. I nunc et hoc esse grati puta, quod ne ingratus quidem faceret, qui modo non usque in odium, sed tantum usque ad infitiationem beneficii perveniret!

36. Quis pium dicet Aenean, si patriam capi voluerit, ut captivitati patrem eripiat? Quis Siculos iuvenes ut bona liberis exempla monstrabit, si optaverint, ut Aetna immensam ignium vim super solitum ardens et incensa praecipitet datura ipsis occasionem exhibendae pietatis ex medio parentibus incendio raptis? [2] Nihil debet Scipioni Roma, si Punicum bellum, ut finiret, aluit; nihil Deciis, quod morte patriam servaverunt, si prius optaverant, ut devotioni fortissimae locum ultima rerum necessitas faceret. Gravissima infamia est medici opus quaerere; multi, quos auxerant morbos et irritaverant, ut gloria maiore sanarent, non potuerunt discutere aut cum magna miserorum vexatione vicerunt.

37. Callistratum aiunt (ita certe Hecaton auctor est), cum in exilium iret, in quod multos cum illo simul seditiosa civitas et intemperanter libera expulerat, optante quodam, ut Atheniensibus necessitas restituendi exules esset, abominatum talem reditum. [2] Rutilius noster animosius, cum quidam illum consolaretur et diceret instare arma civilia, brevi futurum, ut omnes exules reverterentur : “ Quid tibi,” inquit, “ mali feci, ut mihi peiorem reditum quam exitum optares? Ut malo, patria exilio meo erubescat, quam reditu maereat! “ Non est istud exilium, cuius neminem non magis quam damnatum pudet. [3] Quemadmodum illi servaverunt bonorum civium officium, qui reddi sibi penates suos noluerunt clade communi, quia satius erat duos iniquo malo adfici quam omnes publico, ita non servat grati hominis adfectum, qui bene de se merentem difficultatibus vult opprimi, quas ipse submoveat, quia, etiam si bene cogitat, male precatur. Ne in patrocinium quidem, nedum in gloriam est incendium extinxisse, quod feceris.

38. In quibusdam civitatibus impium votum sceleris vicem tenuit. Demades certe Athenis eum, qui necessaria funeribus venditabat, damnavit, cum probasset magnum lucrum optasse, quod contingere illi sine multorum morte non poterat. Quaeri tamen solet, an merito damnatus sit. Fortasse optavit, non ut multis venderet, sed ut care, ut parvo sibi constarent, quae venditurus esset. [2] Cum constet negotiatio eius ex empto et vendito, quare votum eius in unam partem trahis, cum lucrum ex utraque sit? Praeterea omnes licet, qui in ista negotiatione sunt, damnes; omnes enim idem volunt, id est, intra se optant. Magnam partem hominum damnabis; cui enim non ex alieno incommodo lucrum? [3] Miles bellum optat, si gloriam; agricolam annonae caritas erigit; eloquentiae pretium excitat litium numerus; medicis gravis annus in quaestu est; institores delicatarum mercium iuventus corrupta locupletat; nulla tempestate tecta, nullo igne laedantur : iacebit opera fabrilis. Unius votum deprensus est, omnium simile est. [4] An tu Arruntium et Haterium et ceteros, qui captandorum testamentorum artem professi sunt, non putas eadem habere quae dissignatores et libitinarios vota? Illi tamen, quorum mortes optent, nesciunt, hi familiarissimum quemque, ex quo propter amicitiam spei plurimum est, mori cupiunt. Illorum damno nemo vivit, hos, quisquis differt, exhaurit; optant ergo non tantum, ut accipiant, quod turpi servitute meruerunt, sed etiam, ut tributo gravi liberentur. [5] Non est itaque dubium, quin hi magis, quod damnatum est in uno, optent, quibus, quisquis morte profuturus est, vita nocet. Omnium tamen istorum tam nota sunt vota quam impunita. Denique se quisque consulat et in secretum pectoris sui redeat et inspiciat, quid tacitus optaverit. Quam multa sunt vota, quae etiam sibi fateri pudet! Quam pauca, quae facere coram teste possimus!

39. Sed non, quidquid reprehendendum, etiam damnandum est, sicut hoc votum amici, quod in manibus est, male utentis bona voluntate et in id vitium incidentis, quod devitat; nam dum gratum animum festinat ostendere, ingratus est. Hoc ait : [2] “ In potestatem meam recidat, gratiam meam desideret, sine me salvus, honestus, tutus esse non possit, tam miser sit, ut illi beneficii loco sit, quidquid redditur.” Haec dis audientibus : “ Circumveniant illum domesticae insidiae, quas ego possim solus opprimere, instet potens inimicus et

40. Vide, quam sis aecus! Horum optares nihil, si tibi beneficium non dedisset. Ut alia taceam, quae graviora committis pessima pro optimis referendo, hoc certe delinquis, quod non expectas suum cuiusque rei tempus, quod aequè peccat, qui non sequitur, quam qui antecedit. Quomodo beneficium non semper recipiendum est, sic non utique reddendum. [2] Si mihi non desideranti redderes, ingratus esses; quanto ingrator es, qui desiderare me cogis! Expecta! Quare subsidere apud te munus meum non vis? Quare obligatum moleste te fers? Quare quasi cum acerbo feneratore signare rationem parem properas? Quid mihi negotium quaeris? Quid in me deos immittis? Quomodo exigeres, qui sic reddis?

41. Ante omnia ergo, Liberalis, hoc discamus, beneficia debere secure et occasiones reddendorum observare, non manu facere. Ipsam hanc cupiditatem primo quoque tempore liberandi se meminerimus ingrati esse; nemo enim libenter reddit, quod invitus debet, et, quod apud se esse non vult, onus iudicat esse, non munus. [2] Quanto melius ac iustius in promptu habere merita amicorum et offerre, non ingerere, nec obaeratum se iudicare, quoniam beneficium commune vinculum est et inter se duos adligat! Dic : “ Nihil moror, quominus tuum revertatur; opto, hilaris accipias. Si necessitas alterutri nostrum imminet fatoque quodam datum est, ut aut tu cogaris beneficium recipere aut ego alterum accipere, det potius, qui solet. Ego paratus sum : Nulla mora in Turno est; ostendam hunc animum, cum primum tempus advenerit; interim di testes sunt.”

42. Soleo, mi Liberalis, notare hunc in te adfectum et quasi manu prendere verentis et aestuantis, ne in ullo officio sis tardior. Non decet gratum animum sollicitudo, contra summa fiducia sui et ex conscientia veri amoris dimissa omnis anxietas. Tam convicium est : “ Recipe “ quam : “ Debes.” Hoc primum beneficii dati sit ius, ut recipiendi tempus eligat, qui dedit. “ At vereor, ne homines de me sequius loquantur.” Male agit, qui famae, non conscientiae gratus est. Duos istius rei iudices habes, illum, quem non debes timere, et te, quem non potes. “ Quid ergo? Si nulla intervenerit occasio, semper debebo? “ Debebis; sed palam debebis, sed libenter debebis, sed cum magna voluptate apud te depositum intueberis. Paenitet accepti beneficii, quem nondum redditi piget. Quare, qui tibi dignus visus est, a quo acciperes, indignus videatur, cui diu debeas?

43. In magnis erroribus sunt, qui ingentis animi credunt proferre, donare, plurium sinum ac domum implere, cum ista interdum non magnus animus faciat, sed magna fortuna; nesciunt, quanto interim maius ac difficilius sit capere, quam fundere. Nam, ut nihil alteri detrahā, quoniam utrumque, ubi virtute fit, par est, non minoris est animi beneficium debere quam dare; eo quidem operosius hoc quam illud, quo maiore diligentia custodiuntur accepta, quam dantur. [2] Itaque non est trepidandum, quam cito reponamus, nec procurrendum intempestive, quia aeque delinquit, qui ad referendam gratiam suo tempore cessat, quam qui alieno properat. Positum est illi apud me; nec illius nomine nec meo timeo. Bene illi cautum est; non potest hoc beneficium perdere nisi mecum, immo ne mecum quidem. Egi illi gratias, id est, rettuli. [3] Qui nimis de reddendo beneficio cogitat, nimis cogitare alterum de recipiendo putat. Praestet se in utrumque facilem. Si vult recipere beneficium, referamus reddamusque laeti; si illud apud nos custodiri mavult, quid thesaurum eius eruimus? Quid custodiam recusamus? Dignus est cui, utrum volet, liceat. Opinionem quidem et famam eo loco habeamus, tamquam non ducere sed sequi debeat.

LIBER VII

1. Bonum, mi Liberalis, habeas animum volo : In manibus terrae; non hic te carmine longo atque per ambages et longa exorsa tenebo. Reliqua hic liber cogit, et exhausta materia circumspicio, non quid dicam, sed quid non dixerim; boni tamen consules, quidquid ibi superest, cum tibi superfuerit. [2] Si voluissem lenocinari mihi, debuit paulatim opus crescere et ea pars in finem reservari, quam quilibet etiam satiatus appeteret. Sed quidquid maxime necessarium erat, in primum conguessi; nunc, si quid effugit, recolligo. Nec mehercules, si me interroges, nimis ad rem existimo pertinere, ubi dicta sunt, quae Tegunt mores, prosequi cetera non in remedium animi, sed in exercitationem ingenii inventa. [3] Egregie enim hoc dicere Demetrius Cynicus, vir meo iudicio magnus, etiam si maximis comparetur, solet plus prodesse, si pauca praecepta sapientiae teneas, sed illa in promptu tibi et in usu sint, quam si multa quidem didiceris, sed illa non habeas ad manum. [4] “ Quemadmodum,” inquit, “ magnus luctator est, non qui omnes numeros nexusque perdidicit, quorum usus sub adversario rarus est, sed qui in uno se aut altero bene ac diligenter exercuit et eorum occasiones intentus expectat (neque enim refert, quam multa sciat, si scit, quantum victoriae satis est), sic in hoc studio multa delectant, pauca vincunt. [5] Licet nescias, quae ratio oceanum effundat ac revocet, quare septimus quisque annus aetati signum imprimat, quare latitudo porticus ex remoto sperantibus non servet portionem suam, sed ultima in angustiis coeant et columnarum novissime intervalla iungantur, quid sit, quod geminorum conceptum separet, partum iungat, utrum unus concubitus spargatur in duos an totiens concepti sint, cur pariter natis fata diversa sint maximisque rerum spatiis distent, quorum inter ortus minimum interest : non multum tibi nocebit transisse, quae nec licet scire nec prodest. Involuta veritas in alto latet. [6] Nec de malignitate naturae queri possumus, quia nullius rei difficilis inventio est, nisi cuius hic unus inventae fructus est invenisse; quidquid nos meliores beatosque facturum est, aut in aperto aut in proximo posuit. [7] Si animus fortuita contempsit, si se supra metus sustulit nec avida spe infinita complectitur, sed didicit a se petere divitias; si deorum hominumque formidinem eiecit et scit non multum esse ab homine timendum, a deo nihil; si contemptor omnium, quibus torquetur vita, dum ornatur, eo perductus est, ut illi liqueat mortem nullius mali materiam esse, multorum finem; si animum virtuti consecravit et, quacumque vocat illa, planum putat; si sociale animal et in commune genitus mundum ut unam omnium domum spectat et conscientiam suam dis aperuit semperque tamquam in publico vivit se magis veritus quam alios : subductus ille tempestatibus in solido ac sereno stetit consummavitque scientiam utilem ac necessariam. Reliqua oblectamenta otii sunt; licet enim iam in tutum retracto animo ad haec quoque excurrere cultum, non robur, ingeniis adferentia.”

2. Haec Demetrius noster utraque manu tenere pro fidentem iubet, haec nusquam dimittere, immo adfigere et partem sui facere eoque cotidiana meditatione perducere, ut sua sponte occurrant salutaria et ubique ac statim desiderata praesto sint et sine ulla mora veniat illa turpis honestique distinctio. [2] Sciat nec malum esse ullum nisi turpe nec bonum nisi honestum. Hac regula vitae opera distribuat; ad hanc legem et agat cuncta et exigat miserrimosque mortalium iudicet, in quantiscumque opibus refulgebunt, ventri ac libidini deditos quorumque animus inertis otio torpet. Dicat sibi ipse : “ Voluptas fragilis est, brevis, fastidio obiecta, quo avidius hausta est citius in contrarium recidens, cuius subinde necesse est aut paeniteat aut pudeat, in qua nihil est magnificum aut quod naturam hominis dis proximi deceat, res humilis, membrorum turpium aut vilium ministerio veniens, exitu foeda. [3] Illa est voluptas et homine et viro digna non implere corpus nec saginare nec cupiditates irritare, quarum tutissima est quies, sed perturbatione carere et ea, quam hominum inter se rixantium ambitus concutit, et ea, quae intolerabilis ex alto venit, ubi de dis famae creditum est vitiisque illos nostris aestimavimus.” [4] Hanc voluptatem aequalem, intrepidam, numquam sensuram sui taedium percipit hic, quem deformamus cum maxime, ut ita dicam, divini iuris atque humani peritus. Hic praesentibus gaudet, ex futuro non pendet; nihil enim firmi habet, qui in incerta propensus est. Magnis itaque curis exemptus et distortis mentem nihil sperat aut cupit nec se mittit in dubium suo contentus. [5] Et ne illum existimes parvo esse contentum, omnia illius sunt, non sic, quemadmodum Alexandri fuerunt, cui, quamquam in litore rubri maris steterat, plus de- erat, quam qua venerat. Illius ne ea quidem erant, quae tenebat aut vicerat, cum in oceano Onesicritus praemissus explorator erraret et bella in ignoto mari quaereret. [6] Non satis apparebat inopem esse, qui extra naturae terminos arma proferret, qui se in profundum inexploratum et immensum aviditate caeca prosus immitteret? Quid interest, quot eripuerit regna, quot dederit, quantum terrarum tributo premat? Tantum illi deest, quantum cupit.

3. Nec hoc Alexandri tantum vitium fuit, quem per Liberi Herculisque vestigia felix temeritas egit, sed omnium, quos fortuna irritavit implendo. Cyrum et Cambysen et totum regni Persici stemma percense. Quem invenies, cui modum imperii satietas fecerit, qui non vitam in aliqua ulterius procedendi cogitatione finierit? Nec id mirum est; quidquid cupiditati contingit, penitus hauritur et conditur, nec interest, quantum eo, quod inexplebile est, congeras. [2] Unus est sapiens, cuius omnia sunt nec ex difficili tuenda. Non habet mittendos trans maria legatos nec metanda in ripis hostilibus castra, non opportunis castellis disponenda praesidia; non opus est legione nec equestribus turmis. Quemadmodum di immortales regnum inermes regunt et illis rerum suarum ex edito tranquilloque tutela est, ita hic officia sua, quamvis latissime pateant, sine tumultu obit et omne humanum genus potentissimus eius optimusque infra se videt. Derideas licet : [3] ingentis spiritus res est, cum Orientem Occidentemque lustraveris animo, quo etiam remota et solitudinibus interclusa penetrantur, cum tot animalia, tantam copiam rerum, quas natura beatissime fundit, adspexeris, emittere hanc dei vocem : “ Haec omnia mea sunt! “ Sic fit, ut nihil cupiat, quia nihil est extra omnia.

4. “ Hoc ipsum,” inquis, “ volui! teneo te! Volo videre, quomodo ex his laqueis, in quos tua sponte decidisti, expliceris. Dic mihi. Quemadmodum potest aliquis donare sapienti, si omnia sapientis sunt? Nam id quoque, quod illi donat, ipsius est. Itaque non potest beneficium dari sapienti, cui, quidquid datur, de suo datur; atqui dicitis sapienti posse donari. Idem autem me scito et de amicis interrogare. Omnia dicitis illis esse communia; ergo nemo quicquam donare amico potest; donat enim illi communia.” [2] Nihil prohibet aliquid et sapientis esse et etiam eius, qui possidet, cui datum et adsignatum est. Iure civili omnia regis sunt, et tamen illa, quorum ad regem pertinet universa possessio, in singulos dominos discripta sunt, et unaquaeque res habet possessorem suum. Itaque dare regi et domum et mancipium et pecuniam possumus nec donare illi de suo dicimur; ad regem enim potestas omnium pertinet, ad singulos proprietates. [3] Fines Atheniensium aut Campanorum vocamus, quos deinde inter se vicini privata terminatione distinguunt; et totus ager utique ullius rei publicae est, pars deinde suo domino quaeque censetur; ideoque donare agros nostros rei publicae possumus, quamvis illius esse dicantur, quia aliter illius sunt, aliter mei. [4] Numquid dubium est, quin servus cum peculio domini sit? Dat tamen domino suo munus. Non enim ideo nihil habet servus, quia non est habiturus, si dominus illum habere noluerit; nec ideo non est munus, cum volens dedit, quia potuit eripi, etiam si noluisset. [5] Quemadmodum probemus omnia? Nunc enim omnia sapientis esse inter duos convenit; illud, quod quaeritur, colligendum est, quomodo liberalitatis materia adversus eum supersit, cuius universa esse concessimus. [6] Omnia patris sunt, quae in liberorum manu sunt; quis tamen nescit donare aliquid et filium patri? Omnia deorum sunt; tamen et dis donum posuimus et stipem iecimus. Non ideo, quod habeo, meum non est, si meum tuum est; potest enim idem meum esse et tuum. [7] “Is,” inquit, “cuius prostitutae sunt, leno est; omnia autem sapientis sunt; inter omnia et prostitutae sunt; ergo prostitutae sapientis sunt. Leno autem est, cuius prostitutae sunt; ergo sapiens leno est,” Sic illum vetant emere, dicunt enim : [8] “Nemo rem suam emit; omnia autem sapientis sunt; ergo sapiens nihil emit.” Sic vetant mutuum sumere, quia nemo usuram pro pecunia sua pendat. Innumerabilia sunt, per quae cavillantur, cum pulcherrime, quid a nobis dicatur, intellegant.

5. Etenim sic omnia sapientis esse dico, ut nihilo minus proprium quisque in rebus suis dominium habeat, quemadmodum sub optimo rege omnia rex imperio possidet, singuli dominio. Tempus istius probandae rei veniet; interim hoc huic quaestioni sat est me id, quod aliter sapientis est, aliter meum est, posse donare sapienti. [2] Nec mirum est aliquid ei, cuius est totum, posse donari. Conduxi domum a te; in hac aliquid tuum est, aliquid meum : res tua est, usus rei tuae meus est. Itaque nec fructus tanges colono tuo prohibente, quamvis in tua pos- sessione nascentur, et, si annona carior fuerit aut fames.

Heu! frustra magnum alterius spectabis acervum in tuo natum, in tuo positum, in horrea iturum tua. [3] Nec conductum meum, quamquam sis dominus, intrabis nec servum tuum, mercennarium meum, abduces et, cum a te raedam conduxero, beneficium accipies, si tibi in vehiculo tuo sedere permisero. Vides ergo posse fieri, ut aliquis accipiendo, quod suum est, munus accipiat.

6. In omnibus istis, quae modo rettuli, uterque eiusdem rei dominus est. Quo modo? Quia alter rei dominus est, alter usus. Libros dicimus esse Ciceronis; eosdem Dorus librarius suos vocat, et utrumque verum est. Alter illos tamquam auctor sibi, alter tamquam emptor adserit; ac recte utriusque dicuntur esse, utriusque enim sunt, sed non eodem modo. Sic potest Titus Livius a Doro accipere aut emere libros suos. [2] Possum donare sapienti, quod viritim meum est, licet illius sint omnia; nam cum regio more cuncta conscientia possideat, singularum autem rerum in unumquemque proprietas sit sparsa, et accipere munus et debere et emere et conducere potest. [3] Caesar omnia habet, fiscus eius privata tantum ac sua; et universa in imperio eius sunt, in patrimonio propria. Quid eius sit, quid non sit, sine diminutione imperii quaeritur; nam id quoque, quod tamquam alienum abiudicatur, aliter illius est. Sic sapiens animo universa possidet, iure ac dominio sua.

7. Bion modo omnes sacrilegos esse argumentis colligit, modo neminem. Cum omnes de saxo deiecturus est, dicit : “ Quisquis id, quod deorum est, sustulit et consumpsit atque in usum suum vertit, sacrilegus est; omnia autem deorum sunt; quod quisque ergo tollit, deorum tollit, quorum omnia sunt; ergo, quisquis tollit aliquid, sacrilegus est. [2] “ Deinde, cum effringi templa et expilari impune Capitolium iubet, dicit nullum sacrilegum esse, quia, quidquid sublatum est, ex eo loco, qui deorum erat, in eum transfertur locus, qui deorum est. [3] Hic respondetur omnia quidem deorum esse, sed non omnia dis dedicata; in iis observari sacrilegium, quae religio numini adscripsit. Sic et totum mundum deorum esse immortalium templum, solum quidem amplitudine illorum ac magnificentia dignum : tamen a sacris profana discerni; non omnia licere in angulo, cui fani nomen impositum est, quae sub caelo et conspectu siderum licent. Iniuriam sacrilegus deo quidem non potest facere, quem extra ictum sua divinitas posuit, sed punitur, quia tamquam deo fecit : opinio illum nostra ac sua obligat poenae. [4] Quomodo ergo sacrilegus videtur, qui aliquid aufert sacri, etiam si, quocumque transtulit, quod surripuerat, intra terminos mundi est, sic et sapienti furtum potest fieri; auferetur enim illi non ex iis, quae universa habet, sed ex iis, quibus dominus inscriptus est, quae viritim ei serviunt. [5] Illam alteram possessionem adgnoscat, hanc nolet habere, si poterit, emittetque illam vocem, quam Romanus imperator emisit, cum illi ob virtutem et bene gestam rem publicam tantum agri decerneretur, quantum arando uno die circumire potuisset : “ Non opus est,” inquit, “ vobis eo cive, cui plus opus sit quam uni civi.” Quanto maioris viri putas respuisse hoc munus, quam meruisse! Multi enim fines aliis abstulerunt, sibi nemo constituit!

8. Ergo cum animum sapientis intuemur potentem omnium et per universa dimissum, omnia illius esse dicimus, cum ad hoc ius cotidianum, si ita res tulerit, capite censebitur. Multum interest, possessio eius animo ac magnitudine aestimetur an censu. [2] Haec universa habere, de quibus loqueris, abominabitur. Non referam tibi Socraten, Chrysippum, Zenonem et ceteros magnos quidem viros, maiores quidem, quia in laudem vetustorum invidia non obstat. Paulo ante Demetrium rettuli, quem mihi videtur rerum natura nostris tulisse temporibus, ut ostenderet nec illum a nobis corrumpi nec nos ab illo corripiri posse, virum exactae, licet neget ipse, sapientiae firmaeque in iis, quae proposuit, constantiae, eloquentiae vero eius, quae res fortissimas deceat, non concinnatae nec in verba sollicitae, sed ingenti animo, prout impetus tulit, res suas prosequentis. [3] Huic non dubito quin providentia et talem vitam et talem dicendi facultatem dederit, ne aut exemplum saeculo nostro aut convicium deesset. Demetrio si res nostras aliquis deorum possidendas velit tradere sub lege certa, ne liceat donare, adfirmaverim repudiaturum dicturumque :

9. “ Ego vero me ad istud inextricabile pondus non adligo nec in altam faecem rerum hunc expeditum hominem demitto. Quid ad me defers populorum omnium mala? Quae ne daturus quidem acciperem, quoniam multa video, quae me donare non deceat. Volo sub conspectu meo ponere, quae gentium oculos regumque praestringunt, volo intueri pretia sanguinis animarumque vestrarum.

[2] Prima mihi luxuriae spolia propone, sive illa Vis per ordinem expandere sive, ut est melius, in unum acervum dare. Video elaboratam scrupulosa distinctione testudinem et foedissimorum pigerrimorumque animalium testas ingentibus pretiis emptas, in quibus ipsa illa, quae placet, varietas subditis medicamentis in similitudinem veri Coloratur. Video istic mensas et aestimatum lignum senatorio censu, eo pretiosius, quo illud in plures nodos arboris infelicitas torsit. [3] Video istic crystallina, quorum accendit fragilitas pretium; omnium enim rerum voluptas apud imperitos ipso, quo fugari debet, periculo crescit. Video murrea pocula; parum scilicet luxuria magno fuerit, nisi, quod vomant, capacibus gemmis inter se propinaverint. [4] Video uniones non singulos singulis auribus comparatos; iam enim exercitatae aures oneri ferundo sunt; iunguntur inter se et insuper alii binis superponuntur. Non satis muliebris insania viros superiecerat, nisi bina ac terna patrimonia auribus singulis pependissent. [5] Video sericas vestes, si vestes vocandae sunt, in quibus nihil est, quo defendi aut corpus aut denique pudor possit, quibus sumptis parum liquido nudam se non esse iurabit. Hae ingenti summa ab ignotis etiam ad commercium gentibus accersuntur, ut matronae nostrae ne adulteris quidem plus sui in cubiculo, quam in publico ostendant.

10. “ Quid agis, avaritia? Quot rerum caritate aurum tuum victum est! Omnia ista, quae rettuli, in maiore honore pretioque sunt. Nunc volo tuas opes recognoscere, lamnas utriusque materiae, ad quam cupiditas nostra caligat. [2] At mehercules terra, quae, quidquid utile futurum nobis erat, protulit, ista defodit et mersit et ut noxiosis rebus ac malo gentium in medium prodituris toto pondere incubuit. Video ferrum ex isdem tenebris esse prolatum, quibus aurum et argentum, ne aut instrumentum in caedes mutuas deesset aut pretium. [3] Et tamen adhuc ista aliquam materiam habent; est, in quo errorem oculorum animus subsequi possit. Video istic diplomata et syngraphas et cautiones, vacua habendi simulacra, umbracula avaritiae quaedam laborantis, per quae decipiat animum inanium opinione gaudentem. Quid enim ista sunt, quid fenus et calendarium et usura, nisi humanae cupiditatis extra naturam quaesita nomina? [4] “Possum de rerum natura queri, quod aurum argentumque non interius absconderit, quod non illis maius, quam quod detrahi posset, pondus iniecerit : quid sunt istae tabellae, quid computationes et venale tempus et sanguinolentae centesimae? Voluntaria mala ex constitutione nostra pendentia, in quibus nihil est, quod subici oculis, quod teneri manu possit, inanis avaritiae somnia. [5] O miserum, si quem delectat patrimonii sui liber magnus et vasta spatia terrarum colenda per vinctos et immensi greges pecorum per provincias ac regna pascendi et familia bellicosus nationibus maior et aedificia privata laxitatem urbium magnarum vincentia! [6] Cum bene ista, per quae divitias suas disposuit ac fudit, circumspexerit superbumque se fecerit, quidquid habet, ei, quod cupit, comparet : pauper est. Dimitte me et illis divitiis meis redde. Ego regnum sapientiae novi, magnum, securum; ego sic omnia habeo, ut omnium sint.”

11. Itaque cum C.1 Caesar illi ducenta donaret, ridens reiecit ne dignam quidem summam iudicans, qua non accepta gloriaretur. Di deaque, quam pusillo animo illum aut honorare voluit aut corrumpere! Reddendum egregio viro testimonium est; [2] ingentem rem ab illo diei audivi, cum miraretur Gai dementiam, quod se putasset tanti posse mutari. “ Si temptare,” inquit, “ me constituerat, toto illi fui experiendus imperio.”

12. Sapienti ergo donari aliquid potest, etiam si sapientis omnia sunt. Aequae nihil prohibet, cum omnia amicis dicamus esse communia, aliquid amico donari. Non enim illi sic cum amico communia omnia sunt, quomodo cum socio, ut pars mea sit, pars illius, sed quomodo patri matrique communes liberi sunt, quibus cum duo sunt, non singuli singulos habent, sed singuli binos. [2] Primum omnium iam efficiam, ut, quisquis est iste, qui me in societatem vocat, sciat se nihil mecum habere commune. Quare? Quia hoc inter sapientes solum consortium est, inter quos amicitia est; ceteri non magis amici sunt quam socii. [3] Deinde pluribus modis communia sunt. Equestria omnium equitum Romanorum sunt; in illis tamen meus fit proprius locus, quem occupavi; hoc si cui cessi, quamvis illi communi re cesserim, tamen aliquid dedisse videor. Quaedam quorundam sub certa condicione sunt. [4] Habeo in equestribus locum, non ut vendam, non ut locem, non ut habitem, in hoc tantum, ut spectem; propterea non mentior, si dico habere me in equestribus locum. Sed cum in theatrum veni, si plena sunt equestria, et iure habeo locum illic, quia sedere mihi licet, et non habeo, quia ab his, cum quibus mihi ius loci commune est, occupatus est. [5] Idem inter amicos puta fieri. Quidquid habet amicus, commune est nobis, sed illius proprium est, qui tenet; uti iis illo nolente non possum. “ Derides me,” inquis; “ si, quod amici est, meum est, liceat mihi vendere.” Non licet; nam nec equestria, et tamen communia tibi cum ceteris equitibus sunt. [6] Non est argumentum ideo aliquid tuum non esse, quia vendere non potes, quia consumere, quia mutare in deterius aut melius; tuum enim est etiam, quod sub lege certa tuum est.

13. ... accepi, sed certe non minus. Ne traham longius, beneficium maius esse non potest; ea, per quae beneficium datur, possunt esse maiora et plura, in quae se denique benevolentia effundat et sic sibi indulgeat, quemadmodum amantes solent, quorum plura oscula et complexus artiores non augent amorem, sed exercent.

14. Haec quoque, quae venit, quaestio profligata est in prioribus; itaque breviter perstringetur; possunt enim in hanc, quae aliis data sunt, argumenta transferri. Quaeritur, an, qui omnia fecit, ut beneficium redderet, reddiderit. [2] “ Ut scias,” inquit, “ illum non reddidisse, omnia fecit, ut redderet; apparet ergo non esse id factum, cuius faciendi occasionem non habuit. Et creditori suo pecuniam non solvit is, qui, ut solveret, ubique quaesivit nec in- venit.” [3] Quaedam eius condicionis sunt, ut effectum praestare debeant; quibusdam pro effectum est omnia temptasse, ut efficerent. Si omnia fecit, ut sanaret, peregit partes suas medicus; etiam damnato reo oratori constat eloquentiae officium, si omni vi usus est; laus imperatoria etiam victo duci redditur, si et prudentia et industria et fortitudo muneribus suis functa est. [4] Omnia fecit, ut beneficium redderet, obstitit illi felicitas tua; nihil incidit durius, quod veram amicitiam experiretur; locupleti donare non potuit, sano adsidere, felici succurrere : gratiam rettulit, etiam si tu beneficium non recepisti. Praeterea huic intentus semper et huius rei tempus opperiens, qui in hoc multum curae, multum sedulitatis impendit, plus laboravit, quam cui cito referre gratiam contigit. [5] Debitoris exemplum dissimile est, cui parum est pecuniam quaesisse, nisi solvit; illic enim stat acerbis super caput creditor, qui nullum diem gratis occidere patiatur; hic benignissimus, qui, te cum viderit concursantem et sollicitum atque anxium, dicat : “ Mitte hanc de pectore curam; desine tibi molestus instare. Omnia a te habeo; iniuriam mihi facis, si me quicquam desiderare amplius iudicas; plenissime ad me pervenit animus tuus.” 2 “ Dic,” inquit, “ mihi : si reddidisset beneficium, diceres illum gratiam rettulisse; eodem ergo loco est, qui reddidit et qui non reddidit? “ Contra nunc illud pone : si oblitus esset accepti beneficii, si ne temptasset quidem gratus esse, negares illum gratiam rettulisse; at hic se diebus noctibusque lassavit et omnibus aliis renuntiavit officiis huic uni imminens et operatus, ne qua se fugeret occasio; eodem ergo loco erunt ille, qui curam referendae gratiae abiecit, et hic, qui numquam ab illa recessit? Iniquus es, si rem a me exigis, cum videas animum non defuisse.

15. Ad summam puta, cum captus esses, me pecuniam mutuatum rebus meis in securitatem creditoris oppositis navigasse hieme tam saeva per infesta latrociniiis litora, emensum, quidquid periculorum adferre potest etiam pacatum mare; peragratis omnibus solitudinibus, cum, quos nemo non fugiebat, ego quaererem, tandem ad piratas perveni; iam te alius redemerat : negabis me gratiam rettulisse? Etiamne, si in illa navigatione pecuniam, quam saluti tuae contraxeram, naufragus perdidisti, etiamne, si in vincula, quae detrahare tibi volui, ipse incidi, negabis me rettulisse gratiam? [2] At mehercules Athenienses Harmodium et Aristogitonem tyrannicidas vocant, et Mucio manus in hostili ara relictas instar occisi Porsinae fuit, et semper contra fortunam luctata virtus etiam citra effectum propositi operis enituit. Plus praestitit, qui fugientes occasiones secutus est et alia atque alia captavit, per quae referre gratiam posset, quam quem sine ullo sudore gratum prima fecit occasio. [3] “ Duas,” inquit, “ res ille tibi praestitit, voluntatem et rem; tu quoque illi duas debes.” Merito istud diceres ei, qui tibi reddidit voluntatem otiosam, huic vero, qui et vult et conatur et nihil intemptatum relinquit, id non potes dicere; utrumque enim praestat, quantum in se est. [4] Deinde non semper numero numerus aequandus est, aliquando una res pro duabus valet; itaque in locum rei succedit tam propensa voluntas et cupida reddendi. Quod si animus sine re ad referendam gratiam non valet, nemo adversus deos gratus est, in quos voluntas sola confertur. 5 “ Dis,” inquit, “ nihil aliud praestare possumus.” Sed si huic quoque, cui referre gratiam debeo, nihil aliud praestare possum, quid est, quare non eo adversus hominem gratus sim, quo nihil amplius in deos confero?

16. Si tamen quaeris, quid sentiam, et vis signare responsum, hic beneficium recepisse se iudicet, ille se sciat non reddidisse; hic illum dimittat, ille se teneat; hic dicat : “ Habeo,” ille respondeat : “ Debeo. [2] “ In omni quaestione propositum sit nobis bonum publicum; praeccludendae sunt excusationes ingratis, ad quas refugere non possint et sub quibus infitiationem suam tegere. “ Omnia feci.” Fac etiamnunc. Quid? [3] tu tam imprudentes iudicas maiores nostros fuisse, ut non intellexerent iniquissimum esse eodem loco haberi eum, qui pecuniam, quam a creditore acceperat, libidini aut aleae adsumpsit, et eum, qui incendio aut latrocinio aut aliquo casu tristiore aliena cum suis perdidit? Nullam excusationem receperunt, ut homines scirent fidem utique praestandam; satius enim erat a paucis etiam iustam excusationem non accipi quam ab omnibus aliquam temptari. Omnia fecisti, ut redderes; [4] hoc illi satis sit, tibi parum. Nam quemadmodum ille, si enixam et sedulam operam transire pro irrita patitur, cui gratia referatur, indignus est, ita tu ingratus es, nisi ei, qui voluntatem bonam in solutum accipit, eo libentius debes, quia dimittens. Non rapias hoc nec testeris; occasiones reddendi nihilo minus quaeras. Redde illi, quia repetit, huic, quia remittit; illi, quia bonus est, huic, quia malus. [5] Ideoque hanc quaestionem non est quod ad te iudices pertinere, an, quod beneficium quis a sapiente accipit, reddere debeat, si ille desiit esse sapiens et in malum versus est. Redderes enim et depositum, quod a sapiente accepisses, etiam malo, redderes creditum. Quid est, cur non et beneficium? Quia mutatus est, ille te mutet? Quid? [6] Si quid a sano accepisses, aegro non redderes, cum plus semper imbecillo amico debeamus? Et hic aeger est animo; adiuvetur, feratur. Stultitia morbus est animi.

17. Drstinguendum hoc, quo magis intellegatur, existimo. Duo sunt beneficia : unum, quod dare nisi sapiens sapienti non potest; hoc est absolutum et verum beneficium; alterum vulgare, plebeium, cuius inter nos imperitos commercium est. [2] De hoc non est dubium, quin illi, qualiscumque est, debeam reddere, sive homicida sive fur sive adulter evasit. Habent scelera leges suas; melius istos iudex quam ingratus emendat. Nemo te malum, quia est, faciat. Malo beneficium proiciam, bono reddam, huic, quia debeo, illi, ne debeam.

18. De altero beneficii genere dubitatur, quod si accipere non potui nisi sapiens, ne reddere quidem nisi sapienti possum. “ Puta enim me reddere : ille non potest recipere, non est iam huius rei capax, scientiam utendi perdidit. Quid, si me remittere maneo pilam iubeas? Stultum est dare alicui, quod accipere non possit.” 6 Ut respondere ab ultimo incipiam : non dabo ulli, quod accipere non poterit; reddam, etiam si recipere non poterit. Obligare enim non possum nisi accipientem; liberari tantum, si reddidi, possum. Ille uti illo non poterit? Viderit; penes illum erit culpa, non penes me.

19. “ Reddere est,” inquit, “ accepturo tradidisse. Quid enim? si cui vinum debeas et hoc ille te infundere reticulo iubeat aut cribro, reddidisse te dices? Aut reddere voles, quod, dum redditur, inter duos pereat? “ [2] Reddere est id, quod debeas, ei, cuius est, volenti dare. Hoc unum mihi praestandum est. Ut quidem habeat, quod a me accepit, iam ulterioris est curae; non tutelam illi, sed fidem debeo, multoque satius est illum non habere, quam me non reddere. [3] Et creditori statim in macellum laturo, quod acceperit, reddam; etiam si mihi adulteram, cui monerem, delegaverit, solvam; et, si nummos, quos accipiet, in sinum suum discinctus infundet, dabo. Reddendum enim mihi est, non servandum, cum reddidero, ac tuendum; beneficii accepti, non reddit, custodiam debeo. Dum apud me est, salvum sit; ceterum, licet accipientis manibus effluat, dandum est reposcenti. Reddam bono, cum expediet, malo, cum petet. [4] “ Tale,” inquit, “ illi beneficium, quale accepisti, non potes reddere; accepisti enim a sapiente, stulto reddis.” Non; reddo illi, quale nunc potest recipere, nec per me fit, quod deterius id, quod accepi, reddam, sed per illum, cui, si ad sapientiam redierit, reddam, quale accepi; dum in malis est, reddam, quale ab illo potest accipi. [5] “ Quid? si,” inquit, “ non tantum malus factus est, sed ferus, sed immanis, qualis Apollodorus aut Phalaris, et huic beneficium, quod acceperas, reddes?” Mutationem sapientis tantam natura non patitur. Non in pessima ab optimis lapsus; necesse est etiam in malo vestigia boni teneat; numquam tantum virtus exstinguitur, ut non certiores animo notas imprimat, quam ut illas eradat ulla mutatio. [6] Ferae inter nos educatae si in silvas eruperunt, aliquid mansuetudinis pristinae retinent tantumque a placidissimis absunt, quantum a veris feris et numquam humanam manum passis. Nemo in summam nequitiam incidit, qui umquam haesit sapientiae; altius infectus est, quam ut ex toto elui et transire in colorem malum possit. [7] Deinde interrogo, utrum iste ferus sit animo tantum, an et in perniciem publicam excurrat? Proposuisti enim mihi Phalarim et alterum tyrannum, quorum si naturam habet intra se malus, quidni ego isti beneficium suum reddam, ne quid mihi cum illo iuris sit amplius? [8] Si vero sanguine humano non tantum gaudet, sed pascitur, sed et suppliciis omnium aetatum crudelitatem insatiabilem exercet nec ira sed aviditate quadam saeviendi furit, si in ore parentium liberos iugulat, si non contentus simplici morte distorquet nec urit solum perituros, sed excoquit, si arx eius cruore semper recenti madet, parum est huic beneficium non reddere! Quidquid erat, quo mihi cohaereret, intercisa iuris humani societas abscidit. [9] Si praestitisset quidem aliquid mihi, sed arma patriae meae inferret, quidquid meruerat, perdidisset, et referre illi gratiam scelus haberetur. Si non patriam meam impugnat, sed suae gravis est et sepositus a mea gente suam exagitat, abscindit, nihilo minus illum tanta pravitas animi, etiam si non inimicum, invisum mihi efficit, priorque mihi ac potior eius officii ratio est, quod humano generi, quam quod uni homini debeo.

20. Sed quamvis hoc ita sit et ex eo tempore omnia mihi in illum libera sint, ex quo corrumpendo fas omne, ut nihil in eum nefas esset, effecerit, illum mihi servandum modum credam, ut, si beneficium illi meum neque vires maiores daturum est in exitium commune nec confirmaturum, quas habet, id autem erit, quod illi reddi sine pernicie publica possit, red- dam. Servabo filium eius infantem; [2] quid hoc beneficium obest cuiquam eorum, quos crudelitas eius lacerat? Pecuniam, quae satellitem stipendio teneat, non subministrabo. Si marmora et vestes desideraverit, nihil oberit cuiquam id, quo luxuria eius in- struitur; militem et arma non suggeram. [3] Si pro magno petet munere artifices scenae et scorta et quae feritatem eius emolliant, libens offeram. Cui triremes et aeratas non mitterem, lusorias et cubiculatas et alia ludibria regum in mari lascivientium mittam. Et si ex toto desperata eius sanitas fuerit, eadem manu beneficium omnibus dabo, illi reddam; quoniam ingeniis talibus exitus remedium est optimumque est abire ei, qui ad se numquam rediturus est. [4] Sed haec rara nequitia est semper portentis loco habita, sicut hiatus terrae et e cavernis maris ignium eruptio; itaque ab illa recedamus, de iis loquamur vitiis, quae detestamur sine horrore. [5] Huic homini malo, quem invenire in quolibet foro possum, quem singuli timent, reddam beneficium, quod accepi. Non oportet mihi nequitiam eius prodesse; quod meum non est, redeat ad dominum. Bonus sit an malus, quid differt? Diligenter istud excuterem, si non redderem, sed darem.

21. Hic locus fabulam poscit. Pythagoricus quidam emerat a sutore phaecasia, rem magnam, non praesentibus nummis. Post aliquot dies venit ad tabernam redditurus et, cum elusam diu pulsaret, fuit, qui diceret : “ Quid perdis operam? Sutor ille, quem quaeris, elatus, combustus est; quod nobis fortasse molestum est, qui in aeternum nostros amittimus, tibi minime, qui scis futurum, ut renascatur,” 10 iocatus in Pythagoricum. At philosophus noster tres aut quattuor denarios non invita manu domum rettulit subinde concutiens; deinde, cum reprehendisset hanc suam non reddendi tacitam voluptatem, intellegens arrisisse illud lucellum sibi redit ad eandem tabernam et ait : “ Ille tibi vivit; redde, quod debes.” Deinde per clostrum, qua se commissura laxaverat, quattuor denarios in tabernam inseruit ac misit poenas a se exigens improbae cupiditatis, ne alieno adsuesceret.

22. Quod debes, quaere, cui reddas, et, si nemo poscet, ipse te appella. Malus an bonus, ad te non pertinet; redde et accusa. Oblitus es, quem- admodum inter vos officia divisa sint : illi oblivio imperata est, tibi meminisse mandavimus. Errat tamen, si quis existimat, cum dicimus eum, qui beneficium dedit, oblivisci oportere, excutere nos illi memoriam rei praesertim honestissimae; quaedam praecipimus ultra modum, ut ad verum et suum redeant. Cum dicimus : [2] “ Meminisse non debet,” hoc volumus intellegi : “ Praedicare non debet nec iactare nec gravis esse.” Quidam enim beneficium, quod dederunt, omnibus circulis narrant; hoc sobrii locuntur, hoc ebrii non continent, hoc ignotis ingerunt, hoc amicis committunt; ut haec nimia et exprobratrix memoria subsideret, oblivisci eum, qui dedit, iussimus et plus imperando, quam praestari poterat, silentium suasimus.

23. Quotiens parum fiducia est in iis, quibus imperes, amplius exigendum est, quam sat est, ut praestetur, quantum sat est. In hoc omnis hyperbole extenditur, ut ad verum mendacio veniat. Itaque ille, cum dixit : Qui candore nives anteirent, cursibus auras, quod non poterat fieri, dixit, ut crederetur, quantum plurimum posset. Et qui dixit : His immobilior scopulis, violentior amne, ne hoc quidem se persuasurum putavit aliquem tam immobilem esse quam scopulum.

[2] Numquam tantum sperat hyperbole, quantum audet, sed incredibilia adfirmat, ut ad credibilia perveniat. Cum dicimus : “ Qui beneficium dedit, obliviscatur,” hoc dicimus : “ Similis sit oblito; memoria eius non appareat nec incurrat.” Cum dicimus beneficium repeti non oportere, non ex toto repetitionem tollimus; [3] saepe enim opus est malis exactore, etiam bonis admonitione. Quid ergo? Occasionem ignoranti non ostendam? Necessitates illi meas non detegam? Quare nescisse se aut mentiatum aut doleat? Interveniat aliquando admonitio, sed verecunda, quae non poscat nec in ius vocet.

24. Socrates amicis audientibus : “ Emissum,” inquit, “ pallium, si nummos haberem.” Neminem poposcit, omnes admonuit. A quo acciperet, ambitus fuit; quidni esset? Quantulum enim erat, quod Socrates accipiebat! At multum erat eum fuisse, a quo Socrates acciperet. Num illos castigare mollius potuit? [2] “ Emissum,” inquit, “ pallium, si nummos haberem.” Post hoc quisquis properaverit, sero dat; iam Socrati defuit. Propter acerbos exactores repetere prohibemus, non, ut numquam fiat, sed ut parce.

25. Aristippus aliquando delectatus unguento : “ Male,” inquit, “ istis effeminatis eveniat, qui rem tam bellam infamaverunt.” Item dicendum est : “ Male istis improbis et importunis beneficiorum suorum quadriplatoribus eveniat, qui tam bellam rem, admonitionem inter amicos, sustulerunt! “ Ego tamen utar hoc iure amicitiae et beneficium ab eo repetam, a quo petissem, qui alterius beneficii loco accepturus est potuisse reddere. [2] Numquam ne querens quidem dicam : eiectum litore, egentem excepi et regni demens in parte locavi. Non est ista admonitio, convicium est; hoc est in odium beneficia perducere, hoc est efficere, ut ingratum esse aut liceat aut iuvet. Satis abundeque est submissis et familiaribus verbis memoriam revocare : si bene quid de te merui, fuit aut tibi quicquam dulce meum. Ille in vicem dicat : “ Quidni merueris? Eiectum litore, egentem excepisti.”

26. “Sed nihil,” inquit, “ proficimus; dissimulat, oblitus est : quid facere debeam? “ Quaeris rem maxime necessariam et in qua hanc materiam consummati decet, quemadmodum ingrati ferendi sint. [2]

Placido animo, mansueto, magno. Numquam te tam inhumanus et immemor et ingratus offendat, ut non tamen dedisse delectet; numquam in has voces iniuria impellat : “ Vellem, non fecissem.” Beneficii tui tibi etiam infelicitas placeat; semper illum pae- nitebit, si te ne nunc quidem paenitet. Non est, quod indigneris, tamquam aliquid novi acciderit; magis mirari deberes, si non accidisset. [3] Alium labor, alium impensa deterret, alium periculum, alium turpis verecundia, ne, dum reddit, fateatur accepisse, alium ignorantia officii, alium pigritia, alium occupatio. Adspice, quemadmodum immensae hominum cupiditates hient semper et poscant; non miraberis ibi neminem reddere, ubi nemo satis accepit. [4] Quis est istorum tam firmæ mentis ac solidæ, ut tuto apud eum beneficia deponas? Alius libidine insanit, alius abdomini servit; alius lucri totus est, cuius summam, non vias, spectat; alius invidia laborat, alius caeca ambitione et in gladios irruente. Adice torporem mentis ac senium et contraria huic inquieti pectoris agitationem tumultusque perpetuos; adice aestimationem sui nimiam et tumorem, ob quæ contemnendus est, insolentem. Quid contumaciam dicam in perversa nitentium, quid levitatem semper aliquo transilientem? [5] Hoc accedat temeritas praeceps et numquam fidele consilium daturus timor et mille errores, quibus volvimur : audacia timidissimorum, discordia familiarissimorum et, publicum malum, incertissimis fidere, fastidire possessa, quæ consequi posse spes non fuit. Inter adfectus inquietissimos rem quietissimam, fidem, quaeris?

27. Si tibi vitae nostræ vera imago succurret, videre videberis tibi captæ cum maxime civitatis faciem, in qua omisso pudoris rectique respectu vires in concilio sunt velut signo ad permiscenda omnia dato. Non igni, non ferro abstinetur; soluta legibus scelera sunt; ne religio quidem, quæ inter arma hostilia supplices textit, ullum impedimentum est ruentium in prædam. [2] Hic ex privato, hic ex publico, hic ex profano, hic ex sacro rapit; hic effringit, hic transilit; hic non contentus angusto itinere ipsa, quibus arcetur, evertit et in lucrum ruina venit; hic sine caede populatur, hic spolia cruenta manu gestat; nemo non fert aliquid ex altero. In hæc aviditate generis humani o ne tu nimis fortunæ communis oblitus es, qui quaeris inter rapientes referentem! [3] Si indignans ingratos esse, indignare luxuriosos, indignare avaros, indignare impudicos, indignare aegros deformes, senes pallidos! Est istuc grave vitium, est intolerabile et quod dissociet homines, quod concordiam, qua imbecillitas nostra fulcitur, scindat ac dissipet, sed usque eo vulgare est, ut illud ne qui queritur quidem effugerit.

28. Cogita tecum, an, quibuscumque debuisti, gratiam rettuleris, an nullum umquam apud te perierit officium, an omnium te beneficiorum memoria comitetur. Videbis, quae puero data sunt, ante adulescentiam elapsa, quae in iuvenem conlata sunt, non perdurasse in senectutem. Quaedam perdidimus, quaedam proiecimus, quaedam e conspectu nostro paulatim exierunt, a quibusdam oculos avertimus. [2] Ut excusem tibi imbecillitatem, imprimis vas fragile est memoria et rerum turbae non sufficit; necesse est, quantum recipit, emittat et antiquissima recentissimis obruat. Sic factum est, ut minima apud te nutricis esset auctoritas, quia beneficium eius longius aetas sequens posuit; sic factum est, ut praeceptoris tibi non esset ulla veneratio; sic evenit, ut circa consularia occupato comitia aut sacerdotiorum candidato quaesturae suffragator excideret. Fortasse vitium, de quo querens, si te diligenter excusseris, in sinu invenies. Inique publico crimini irasceris, stulte tuo; ut absolvaris, ignosce. [3] Meliorem illum facies ferendo, utique peiorem exprobrando. Non est, quod frontem eius indures; sine, si quid est pudoris residui, servet. Saepe dubiam verecundiam vox conviciantis clarior rupit. Nemo id esse, quod iam videtur, timet; deprenso pudor demitur.

29. “ Perdidisti beneficium.” Numquid, quae consecravimus, perdidisse nos dicimus? Inter consecrata beneficium est, etiam si male respondit, bene conlatum. Non est ille, qualem speravimus; simus nos, quales fuimus, ei dissimiles. Damnum non tunc factum : apparuit. Ingratus non sine nostro pudore protrahitur, quoniam quidem querella amissi beneficii non bene dati signum est. [2] Quantum possumus, causam eius apud nos agamus : “ Fortasse non potuit, fortasse ignoravit, fortasse facturus est.” Quaedam nomina bona lentus et sapiens creditor fecit, qui sustinuit ac mora fovit. Idem nobis faciendum est; nutriamus fidem languidam.

30. “ Perdidisti beneficium.” Stulte non nosti detrimenti tui tempora! Perdidisti, sed cum dares; nunc palam factum est. Etiam in his, quae videntur in perditio, moderatio plurimum profuit , ut corporum ita animorum molliter vitia tractanda sunt. Saepe, quod explicari pertinacia potuit, violentia trahentis abruptum est. Quid opus est maledictis? Quid querellis? Quid insectatione? Quare illum liberas? Quare dimittis? Si ingratus est, iam nihil debet. [2] Quae ratio est exacerbare eum, in quem magna contuleris, ut ex amico dubio fiat non dubius inimicus et patrociniū sibi nostra infamia quaerat, nec desit vox: “ Nescio quid est, quod eum, cui tantum debuit, ferre non potuit; subest aliquid “? Nemo non superioris dignitatem querendo, etiam si non inquinavit, adpersit; nec quisquam fingere contentus est levia, cum magnitudine mendacii fidem quaerat.

31. Quanto illa melior via, qua servatur illi species amicitiae et, si reverti ad sanitatem velit, etiam amicitia! Vincit malos pertinax bonitas, nec quisquam tam duri infestique adversus diligenda animi est, ut etiam in iniuria bonos non amet, quibus hoc quoque coepit debere, quod impune non solvit. Ad illa itaque cogitationes tuas flecte : [2] “Non est relata mihi gratia; quid faciam? Quod di, omnium rerum optimi auctores, qui beneficia ignorantī dare incipiunt, ingratīs perseverant. [3] Alius illis obicit neclegentiam nostri, alius iniquitatem; alius illos extra mundum suum proicit et ignavos hebetesque sine luce, sine ullo opere destituit; alius solem, cui debemus, quod inter laborem quietemque tempus divisimus, quod non tenebris mersi confusionem aeternae noctis effugimus, qui annum cursu suo temperat et corpora alit, sata evocat, percoquit fructus, saxum aliquod aut fortuitorum ignium globum et quidvis potius quam deum appellat. [4] Nihilo minus tamen more optimorum parentium, qui maledictis suorum infantium arrident, non cessant di beneficia congerere de beneficiorum auctore dubitantibus, sed aequali tenore bona sua per gentes populosque distribuunt; unam potentiam, prodesse, sortiti spargunt opportunis imbribus terras, maria flatu movent, siderum cursu notant tempora, hiemes aestatesque intervētu lenioris spiritus molliunt, errorem labentium animarum placidi ac propitii ferunt. Imitemur illos; [5] demus, etiam si multa in irritum data sunt; demus nihilo minus aliis, demus ipsis, apud quos facta iactura est. Neminem ad excitandas domos ruina deterruit, et, eum penates ignis absumpsit, fundamenta tepente adhuc area ponimus et urbes haustas saepius eidem solo credimus; adeo ad bonas spes pertinax animus est. Terra marique humana opera cessarent, nisi male temptata retemptare libuisset.

32. Ingratus est: non mihi fecit iniuriam, sed sibi; ego beneficio meo, cum darem, usus sum. Nec ideo pignus dabo, sed diligentius; quod in hoc perdidit, ab aliis recipiam. Sed huic ipsi beneficium dabo iterum et tamquam bonus agricola cura cultuque sterilitatem soli vincam; perit mihi beneficium, iste hominibus. Non est magni animi beneficium dare et perdere; hoc est magni animi perdere et dare.

1 Inquirenti mihi in me quaedam uitia apparebant, Seneca, in aperto posita, quae manu prehenderem, quaedam obscuriora et in recessu, quaedam non continua, sed ex interuallis redeuntia, quae uel molestissima dixerim, ut hostes uagos et ex occasionibus assilientes, per quos neutrum licet, nec tamquam in bello paratum esse nec tamquam in pace securum.

2 Illum tamen habitum in me maxime deprehendo (quare enim non uerum ut medico fatear?), nec bona fide liberatum me iis quae timebam et oderam, nec rursus obnoxium. In statu ut non pessimo, ita maxime querulo et moroso positus sum nec aegroto nec ualeo. 3 Non est quod dicas omnium uirtutum tenera esse principia, tempore illis duramentum et robur accedere. Non ignoro etiam quae in speciem laborant, dignitatem dico et eloquentiae famam et quicquid ad alienum suffragium uenit, mora conualescere: et quae ueras uires parant et quae ad placendum fuco quodam subornantur exspectant annos donec paulatim colorem diuturnitas ducat. Sed ego uereor ne consuetudo, quae rebus affert constantiam, hoc uitium mihi altius figat: tam malorum quam bonorum longa conuersatio amorem induit.

4 Haec animi inter utrumque dubii, nec ad recta fortiter nec ad praua uergentis, infirmitas qualis sit, non tam semel tibi possum quam per partes ostendere. Dicam quae accidant mihi; tu morbo nomen inuenies. 5 Tenet me summus amor parsimoniae, fateor: placet non in ambitionem cubile compositum, non ex arcula prolata uestis, non ponderibus ac mille tormentis splendere cogentibus expressa, sed domestica et uilis, nec seruata nec sumenda sollicite; 6 placet cibus quem nec parent familiae nec spectent, non ante multos imperatus dies nec multorum manibus ministratus, sed parabilis facilisque, nihil habens arcessiti pretiosiue, ubilibet non defuturus, nec patrimonio nec corpori grauis, non rediturus qua intrauerit; 7 placet minister incultus et rudis uernula, argentum graue rustici patris sine ullo nomine artificis, et mensa non uarietate macularum conspicua nec per multas dominorum elegantium successiones ciuitati nota, sed in usum posita, quae nullius conuiuiae oculos nec uoluptate moretur nec accendat inuidia. 8 Cum bene ista placuerunt, praestringit animum apparatus alicuius paedagogii, diligentius quam in tralatu uestita et auro culta mancipia et agmen seruorum nitentium, iam domus etiam qua calcatur pretiosa et, diuitiis per omnes angulos dissipatis, tecta ipsa fulgentia, et assectator comesque patrimoniorum pereuntium populus. Quid perlucentes ad imum aquas et circumfluentes ipsa conuiuia, quid epulas loquar scaena sua dignas? 9 Circumfudit me ex longo frugalitatis situ uenientem multo splendore luxuria et undique circumsonuit: paulum titubat acies, facilius aduersus illam animum quam oculos attollo; recedo itaque non peior, sed tristior, nec inter illa friuola mea tam altus incedo, tacitusque morsus subit et dubitatio numquid illa meliora sint. Nihil horum me mutat, nihil tamen non concutit.

10 Placet imperia praeceptorum sequi et in mediam ire rem publicam; placet honores fascisque non scilicet purpura aut uirgis abductum capessere, sed ut amicis propinquisque et omnibus ciuibus, omnibus deinde mortalibus paratior utiliorque sim: promptus, imperitus, sequor Zenona, Cleanthen, Chrysippum, quorum tamen nemo ad rem publicam accessit, et nemo non misit. 11 Vbi aliquid animum insolitum arietari percussit, ubi aliquid occurrit aut indignum, ut in omni uita humana multa sunt, aut parum ex facili flens, aut multum temporis res non magno aestimandae poposcerunt, ad otium conuertor, et, quemadmodum pecoribus, fatigatis quoque, uelocior domum gradus est. 12 Placet intra parietes rursus uitam coercere: nemo ullum auferat diem, nihil dignum tanto impendio redditurus; sibi ipse animus haereat, se colat, nihil alieni agat, nihil quod ad iudicem spectet; ametur expers publicae priuataeque curae tranquillitas. 13 Sed, ubi lectio fortior erexit animum et aculeos subdiderunt exempla nobilia, prosilire libet in forum, commodare alteri uocem, alteri operam, etiam si nihil profuturam, tamen conaturam prodesse, aliculus coercere in foro superbiain male secundis rebus elati.

14 In studiis puto mehercules melius esse res ipsas intueri et harum causa loqui, ceterum uerba rebus permittere, ut qua duxerint, hac inelaborata sequatur oratio. Quid opus est saeculis duratura componere? Vis tu non id agere, ne te posterius taceant! Morti natus es: minus molestiarum habet funus tacitum. Itaque occupandi temporis causa in usum tuum, non in praeconium, aliquid simplici stilo scribe:

minore labore opus est studentibus in diem. 15 Rursus, ubi se animus cogitationum magnitudine leuauit, ambitiosus in uerba est altiasque ut spirare, ita eloqui gestit, et ad dignitatem rerum exit oratio. Oblitus tum legis pressiorisque iudicii, sublimius feror et ore iam non meo.

16 Ne singula diutius persequar, in omnibus rebus haec me sequitur bonae mentis infirmitas, cui ne paulatim defluam uereor, aut, quod est sollicitius, ne semper casuro similis pendeam et plus fortasse sit quam quod ipse peruideo. Familiariter enim domestica aspiciamus, et semper iudicio fauor officit. 17 Puto multos potuisse ad sapientiam peruenire, nisi putassent se peruenisse, nisi quaedam in se dissimulassent, quaedam opertis oculis transiluissent. Non est enim quod magis aliena iudices adulatione nos perire quam nostra. Quis sibi uerum dicere ausus est? quis non, inter laudantium blandientiumque positus greges, plurimum tamen sibi ipse assentatus est? 18 Rogo itaque, si quod habes remedium quo hanc fluctuationem meam sistas, dignum me putes qui tibi tranquillitatem debeam. Non esse periculosos hos motus animi nec quicquam tumultuosi afferentes scio; ut uera tibi similitudine id de quo queror cxprimam, non tempestate uexor, sed nausea: detrahe ergo quicquid hoc est mali, et succurre in conspectu terrarum laboranti.

II.

1 Quaero mehercules iamdudum, Serene, ipse tacitus, cui talem affectum animi similem putem, nec ulli propius admouerim exemplo quam eorum qui, ex longa et graui uoletudine expliciti, motiunculis leuibusque interim offensis perstringuntur et, cum reliquias effugerunt, suspicionibus tamen inquietantur medicisque iam sani manum porrigunt et omnem calorem corporis sui calumniantur. Horum, Serene, non parum sanum est corpus, sed sanitati parum assueuit, sicut est quidam tremor etiam tranquillī maris motusque, cum ex tempestate requieuit. 2 Opus est itaque non illis durioribus, quae iam transcucurrimus, ut alicubi obstes tibi, alicubi irascaris, alicubi instes grauis, sed illo quod ultimum uenit, ut fidem tibi habeas et recta ire te uia credas, nihil auocatus transuersis multorum uestigiis passim discurrentium, quorundam circa ipsam errantium uiam. 3 Quod desideras autem magnum et summum est deoque uicinum, non concuti.

Hanc stabilem animi sedem Graeci euthymian uocant, de qua Democriti uolumen egregium est, ego tranquillitatem uoco: nec enim imitari et transferre uerba ad illorum formam necesse est; res ipsa de qua agitur aliquo signanda nomine est, quod appellationis graecae uim debet habere, non faciem. 4 Ergo quaerimus quomodo animus semper aequali secundoque cursu eat propitiusque sibi sit et sua laetus aspiciat et hoc gaudium non interrumpat, sed placido statu maneat, nec attollens se umquam nec deprimens. Id tranquillitas erit. Quomodo ad hanc perueniri possit in uniuersum quaeramus; sumes tu ex publico remedio quantum uoles. 5 Totum interim uitium in medium protrahendum est, ex quo agnoscet quisque partem suam. Simul tu intelleges quanto minus negotii habeas cum fastidio tui quam ii quos, ad professionem speciosam alligatos et sub ingenti titulo laborantes, in sua simulatione pudor magis quam uoluntas tenet.

6 Omnes in eadem causa sunt, et hi qui leuitate uexantur ac taedio assiduaeque mutatione propositi, quibus semper magis placet quod reliquerunt, et illi qui marcent et oscitantur. Adice eos qui non aliter quam quibus difficilis somnus est uersant se et hoc atque illo modo componunt, donec quietem lassitudine inueniant: statum uitae suae reformando subinde, in eo nouissime manent, in quo illos non mutandi odium, sed senectus ad nouandum pigra deprehendit. Adice et illos, qui non constantiae uitio parum lenes sunt, sed inertiae, et uiuunt non quomodo uolunt, sed quomodo coeperunt. 7 Innumerabiles deinceps proprietates sunt, sed unus effectus uitii, sibi displicere. Hoc oritur ab intemperie animi et cupiditatibus timidis aut parum prosperis, ubi aut non audent quantum concupiscunt aut non consequuntur, et in spem toti prominent. Semper instabiles mobilesque sunt, quod necesse est accidere pendentibus. Ad uota sua omni uia tendunt et inhonesta se ac difficilia docent coguntque, et, ubi sine praemio labor est, torquet illos irritum dedecus, nec dolent praua, sed frustra uoluisse. 8 Tunc illos et paenitentia coepti tenet et incipiendi timor, subrepique illa animi iactatio non inuenientis exitum, quia nec imperare cupiditatibus suis nec obsequi possunt, et cunctatio uitae parum se explicantis et inter destituta uota torpentis animi situs. 9 Quae omnia grauiora sunt ubi odjo infelicitatis operosae ad otium perfugerunt ac secreta studia, quae pati non potest animus ad ciuilia erectus agendique cupidus et natura inquires, parum scilicet in se solaciorum habens. Ideo, detractis oblectationibus quas ipsae occupationes discurrentibus praebent, domum, solitudinem, parietes non fert; inuitus aspicit se sibi relictum.

10 Hinc illud est taedium et displicentia sui et nusquam residentis animi uolutatio et otii sui tristes atque aegra patientia, utique ubi causas fateri pudet et tormenta introrsus egit uerecundia, in angusto inclusae cupiditates sine exitu se ipsae strangulant; inde maeror marcorque et mille fluctus mentis incertae, quam spes inchoatae suspensam habent, deploratae tristem; inde ille affectus otium suum detestantium querentiumque nihil ipsos habere quod agant, et alienis incrementis inimicissima inuidia (aliter enim liuorem infelix inertia et omnes destrui cupiunt, quia se non potuere prouehere); 11 ex hac deinde auersatione alienorum processuum et suorum desperatione obirascens fortunae animus et de saeculo querens et in angulos se retrahens et poenae incubans suae, dum illum taedet sui pigetque. Natura enim humanus animus agilis est et pronus ad motus. Grata omnis illi excitandi se abstrahendique materia est, gratior pessimis quibusque ingeniis, quae occupationibus libenter deteruntur: ut ulcera quaedam nocituras manus appetunt et tactu gaudent et foedam corporum scabiem delectat quicquid exasperat, non aliter dixerim his mentibus, in quas cupiditates uelut mala ulcera eruperunt, uoluptati esse laborem uexationemque. 12 Sunt enim quaedam quae corpus quoque nostrum cum quodam dolore delectent, ut uersare se et mutare nondum fessum latus et alio atque alio positu umentari: qualis ille homericus Achilles est, modo pronus, modo supinus, in uarios habitus se ipse componens, quod proprium aegri est, nihil diu pati et mutationibus ut remediis uti.

13 Inde peregrinationes suscipiuntur uagae et litora pererrantur et modo mari se, modo terra experitur semper praesentibus infesta leuitas: “Nunc Campaniam petamus.” Iam delicata fastidio sunt: “Inculca uideantur, Bruttios et Lucaniae saltus persequamur.” Aliquid tamen inter deserta amoeni requiritur, in quo luxuriosi oculi longo locorum horrentium squalore releuentur: “Tarentum petatur laudatusque portus et hiberna caeli mitioris et regio uel antiquae satis opulenta turbae.... Iam flectamus cursum ad Urbem: nimis diu a plausu et fragore aures uacauerunt, iuuat iam et humano sanguine frui.” 14 Aliud ex alio iter suscipitur et spectacula spectaculis mutantur. Vt ait Lucretius:

Hoc se quisque modo semper fugit.

Sed quid prodest, si non effugit? Sequitur se ipse et urget grauissimus comes. 15 Itaque scire debemus non locorum uitium esse quo laboramus, sed nostrum: infirmi sumus ad omne tolerandum, nec laboris patientes nec uoluptatis nec nostri nec ullius rei diutius. Hoc quosdam egit ad mortem: quod proposita saepe mutando in eadem reuoluebantur et non reliquerant nouitati locum, fastidio esse illis coepit uita et ipse mundus, et subiit illud tabidarum deliciarum: “Quousque eadem?”

III.

1 Aduersus hoc taedium quo auxillo putem utendum quaeris. Optimum erat, ut ait Athenodorus, actione rerum et rei publicae tractatione et officiis ciuilibus se detinere. Nam, ut quidam sole atque exercitatione et cura corporis diem educunt athleticque longe utilissimum est lacertos suos roburque, cui se uni dicauerunt, maiore temporis parte nutrire, ita nobis, animum ad rerum ciuiliu certamen parantibus, in opere esse nostro longe pulcherrimum est: nam, cum utilem se efficere ciuibz mortalibusque propositum habeat, simul et exercetur et proficit qui in mediis se officiis posuit, communia priuataque pro facultate administrans. 2 “Sed, quia in hac, inquit, tam insana hominum ambitione, tot calumniatoribus in deterius recta torquentibus, parum tuta simplicitas est et plus futurum semper est quod obstet quam quod succedat, a foro quidem et publico recedendum est. Sed habet ubi se etiam in priuato laxè explicet magnus animus, nec, ut leonum animaliumque impetus caueis coercetur, sic hominum, quorum maximae in seducto actiones sunt. 3 Ita tamen delituerit, ut, ubicumque otium suum absconderit, prodesse uelit singulis uniuersisque ingenio, uoce, consilio. Nec enim is solus rei publicae prodest, qui candidatos extrahit et tuetur reos et de pace belloque censet; sed qui iuuentutem exhortatur, qui in tanta bonorum praeceptorum inopia uirtutem insinuat animis, qui ad pecuniam luxuriamque cursu ruentes prensat ac retrahit et, si nihil aliud, certe moratur, in priuato publicum negotium agit. 4 An ille plus praestat, qui inter peregrinos et ciues aut urbanus praetor adeuntibus assessoris uerba pronuntiat, quam qui quid sit iustitia, quid pietas, quid patientia, quid fortitudo, quid mortis contemptus, quid deorum intellectus, quam gratuitum bonum sit bona conscientia? 5 Ergo, si tempus in studia conferas quod subduxeris officiis, non deserueris nec munus detractaueris: neque enim ille solus militat qui in acie stat et cornu dextrum laeuumque defendit, sed et qui portas tuetur et statione minus periculosa, non otiosa tamen fungitur uigiliasque seruat et armamentario praeest quae ministeria, quamuis incruenta sint, in numerum stipendiorum ueniunt. 6 Si te ad studia reuocaueris, omne uitae fastidium effugeris, nec noctem fieri optabis taedio lucis, nec tibi grauis eris nec aliis superuacuus; multos in amicitiam attrahes affluetque ad te optimus quisque. Numquam enim, quamuis obscura, uirtus latet, sed mittit sui signa: quisquis dignus fuerit uestigiis illam colliget. 7 Nam, si omnem conuersionem tollimus et generi humano renuntiamus uiuimusque in nos tantum conuersi, sequetur hanc solitudinem omni studio carentem inopia rerum agendarum: incipiemus aedificia alia ponere, alia subuertere, et mare summouere et aquas contra difficultatem locorum educere, et male dispensare tempus quod nobis natura consumendum dedit. 8 Alii parce illo utimur, alii prodige; alii sic impendimus ut possimus rationem reddere, alii ut nullas habeamus reliquias, qua re nihil turpius est. Saepe grandis natus senex nullum aliud habet argumentum quo se probet diu uixisse, praeter aetatem.”

IV.

1 Mihi, carissime Serene, nimis uidetur summisisse temporibus se Athenodorus, nimis cito refugisse. Nec ego negauerim aliquando cedendum, sed sensim relato gradu et saluis signis, salua militari dignitate: sanctiores tutioresque sunt hostibus suis qui in fidem cum armis ueniunt. 2 Hoc puto uirtuti faciendum studiosoque uirtutis: si praeualebit fortuna et praecidet agendi facultatem, non statim auersus inermisque fugiat, latebras quaerens, quasi ullus locus sit quo non possit fortuna persequi, sed parcius se inferat officiis et cum dilectu inueniat aliquid in quo utilis ciuitati sit. 3 Militare non licet: honores petat. Priuato uiuendum est: sit orator. Silentium indictum est: tacita aduocatione ciues iuuat. Periculosum etiam ingressu forum est: in domibus, in spectaculis, in conuiujs bonum contubernalem, fidelem amicum, temperantem conuiuiam agat. Officia ciuis amisit: hominis exerceat. 4 Ideo magno animo nos non unius urbis moenibus clusimus, sed in totius orbis commercium emisimus patriamque nobis mundum professi sumus, ut liceret latiore uirtuti campum dare. Praeclusum tibi tribunal est et rostris prohiberis aut comitiis: respice post te quantum latissimarum regionum pateat, quantum populorum. Numquam ita tibi magna pars obstruetur, ut non maior relinquatur. 5 Sed uide ne totum istud tuum uitium sit. Non uis enim nisi consul aut prytanis aut ceryx aut sufes administrare rem publicam. Quid si militare nolis nisi imperator aut tribunus? Etiam si alii primam frontem tenebunt, te sors inter triarios posuerit, inde uoce, adhortatione, exemplo, animo milita: praecisis quoque manibus, ille in proelio inuenit quod partibus conferat, qui stat tamen et clamore iuuat. 6 Tale quiddam facias: si a prima te rei publicae parte fortuna summouerit, stes tamen et clamore iuues, et, si quis fauces oppresserit, stes tamen et silentio iuues. Numquam inutilis est opera ciuis boni: auditus est uisusque. Vultu, nutu, obstinatione tacita incessuque ipso prodest. 7 Vt salutaria quaedam citra gustum tactumque odore proficiunt, ita uirtus utilitatem etiam ex longinquo et latens fundit: siue spatiatur et se utitur suo iure, siue precarios habet excessus cogiturque uela contrahere, siue otiosa muta est et anguste circumsaepa, siue adaperata, in quocumque habitu est, proficit. Quid tu parum utile putas exemplum bene quiescentis? 8

Longe itaque optimum est miscere otium rebus, quotiens actiuosa uita impedimentis fortuitis aut ciuitatis condicione prohibebitur; numquam enim usque eo interclusa sunt omnia, ut nulli actioni locus honestae sit.

V.

1 Numquid potes inuenire urbem miseriorem quam Atheniensium fuit, cum illam triginta tyranni diuellerent? Mille trecentos ciues, optimum quemque, occiderant, nec finem ideo faciebant, sed irritabat se ipsa saeuitia. In qua ciuitate erat Areos pagos, religiosissimum iudicium, in qua senatus populusque senatui similis, coibat cotidie carnificum triste collegium et infelix curia tyrannis augusta. Poteratne illa ciuitas conquiescere, in qua tot tyranni erant quot satellites essent? Ne spes quidem ulla recipiendae libertatis animis poterat offerri, nec ulli remedio locus apparebat contra tantam uim malorum: unde enim miserae ciuitati tot Harmodios? 2 Socrates tamen in medio erat, et lugentes patres consolabatur, et desperantes de re publica exhortabatur, et diuitibus opes suas metuentibus exprobrabat seram periculosae auaritiae paenitentiam, et imitari uolentibus magnum circumferebat exemplar, cum inter triginta dominos liber incederet. 3 Hunc tamen Athenae ipsae in carcere occiderunt, et qui tuto insultauerat agmini tyrannorum, eius libertatem libertas non tulit: ut scias et in afflicta re publica esse occasionem sapienti uiro ad se proferendum, et in florenti ae beata petulantium, inuidiam, mille alia inertia uitia regnare. 4 Vtcumque ergo se res publica dabit, utcumque fortuna permittet, ita aut explicabimus nos aut contrahemus, utique mouebimus nec alligati metu torpebimus. Immo ille uir fuerit, qui, periculis undique imminentibus, armis circa et catenis frementibus, non alliserit uirtutem nec absconderit: non est enim seruare se obruere. 5 Vt opinor, Curius Dentatus aiebat malle esse se mortuum quam uiuere: ultimum malorum est e uiuorum numero exire antequam moriaris. Sed faciendum erit, si in rei publicae tempus minus tractabile incideris, ut plus otio ac litteris uindices, nec aliter quam in periculosa nauigatione subinde portum petas, nec exspectes donec res te dimittant, sed ab illis te ipse diiungas.

VI.

1 Inspicere autem debemus primum nosmet ipsos, deinde ea quae aggrediemur negotia, deinde eos quorum causa aut cum quibus. 2 Ante omnia necesse est se ipsum aestimare, quia fere plus nobis uidemur posse quam possumus: alius eloquentiae fiducia prolabitur, alius patrimonio suo plus imperauit quam ferre posset, alius infirmum corpus laborioso pressit officio. 3 Quorundam parum idonea est uerecundia rebus ciuilibus, quae firmam frontem desiderant; quorundam contumacia non facit ad aulam; quidam non habent iram in potestate, et illos ad temeraria uerba quaelibet indignatio effert; quidam urbanitatem nesciunt continere nec periculosis abstinere salibus: omnibus his utilior negotio quies est. Ferox impatiensque natura irritamenta nociturae libertatis euitet. 4 Considerandum est utrum natura tua agendis rebus an otioso studio contemplationique aptior sit, et eo inclinandum quo te uis ingenii feret: Isocrates Ephorum iniecta manu a foro subduxit, utiliorem componendis monumentis historiarum ratus. Male enim respondent coacta ingenia; reluctante natura, irritus labor est.

5 Aestimanda sunt deinde ipsa quae aggredimur, et uires nostrae cum rebus quas tentaturi sumus comparandae. Debet enim semper plus esse uirium in actore quam in opere: necesse est opprimant onera quae ferente maiora sunt. 6 Quaedam praeterea non tam magna sunt quam fecunda multumque negotiorum ferunt: et haec refugienda sunt, ex quibus noua occupatio multiplexque nascetur. Nec accedendum eo unde liber regressus non sit: iis admouenda manus est, quorum finem aut facere aut certe sperare possis relinquenda, quae latius actu procedunt nec ubi proposueris desinunt. 7 Hominum utique dilectus habendus est, an digni sint quibus partern uitae nostrae impendamus, an ad illos temporis nostri iactura perueniat: quidam enim ultro officia nobis nostra imputant. 8 Athenodorus ait ne ad cenam quidem se iturum ad eum qui sibi nihil pro hoc debiturus sit. Puto, intellegis multo minus ad eos iturum qui cum amicorum officiis paria mensa faciunt, qui fericula pro congiariis numerant, quasi in alienum honorem intemperantes sint. Deme illis testes spectatoresque, non delectabit popina secreta....

1 Nihil tamen aequè oblectauit animum quam amicitia fidelis et dulcis. Quantum bonum est, ubi praeparata sunt pectora in quae tuto secretum omne descendat, quorum conscientiam minus quam tuam timeas, quorum sermo sollicitudinem leniat, sententia consilium expediat, hilaritas tristitiam dissipet, conspectus ipse delectet! Quos scilicet uacuos, quantum fieri poterit, a cupiditatibus eligemus: serpunt enim uitia et in proximum quemque transiliunt et contactu nocent. 2 Itaque, ut in pestilentia curandum est ne correptis iam corporibus et morbo flagrantibus assideamus, quia pericula trahemus afflatuque ipso laborabimus, ita in amicorum legendis ingeniis dabimus operam ut quam minime inquinatos assumamus: initium morbi est aegris sana miscere. Nec hoc praeceperim tibi, ut neminem nisi sapientem sequaris aut attrahas: ubi enim istum inuenies, quem tot saeculis quaerimus? Pro optimo est minime malus. 3 Vix tibi esset facultas dilectus felicioris, si inter Platonas et Xenophontas et illum Socratici fetus prouentum bonos quaereres, aut si tibi potestas Catonianae fieret actatis, quae plerosque dignos tulit qui Catonis saeculo nascerentur (sicut multos peiores quam umquam alias maximorumque molitores scelerum; utraque enim turba opus erat, ut Cato posset intellegi: habere debuit et bonos, quibus se approbaret, et malos, in quibus uim suam experiretur). Nunc uero, in tanta bonorum egestate, minus fastidiosa fiat electio. 4 Praecipue tamen uidentur tristes et omnia deplorantes, quibus nulla non causa in querellas placet. Constet illi licet fides et beneuolentia, tranquillitati tamen inimicus est comes perturbatus et omnia gemens.

VIII.

1 Transeamus ad patrimonia, maximam humanarum aerumnarum materiam. Nam, si omnia alia quibus angimur compares, mortes, aegrotationes, metus, desideria, dolorum laborumque patientiam, cum iis quae nobis mala pecunia nostra exhibet, haec pars multum praeagrauabit. 2 Itaque cogitandum est quanto leuior dolor sit non habere quam perdere, et intellegemus paupertati eo minorem tormentorum quo minorem damnorum esse materiam. Erras enim si putas animosius detrimenta diuites ferre: maximis minimisque corporibus par est dolor uulneris. 3 Bion eleganter ait non minus molestum esse caluis quam comatis pilos uelli. Idem scias licet de pauperibus locupletibusque, par illis esse tormentum: utrique enim pecunia sua obhaesit nec sine sensu reuelli potest. Tolerabilius autem est, ut dixi, faciliusque non acquirere quam amittere, ideoque laetiores uidebis quos numquam fortuna respexit quam quos deseruit. 4 Vidit hoc Diogenes, uir ingentis animi, et effecit ne quid sibi eripi posset. Tu istud paupertatem, inopiam, egestatem uoca, quod uoles ignominiosum securitati nomen impone: putabo hunc non esse felicem, si quem mihi alium inueneris cui nihil pereat. Aut ego fallor, aut regnum est inter auaros, circumscriptores, latrones, plagiarios unum esse cui noceri non possit. 5 Si quis de felicitate Diogenis dubitat, potest idem dubitare et de deorum immortalium statu, an parum beate degant quod nec praedia nec horti sint nec alieno colono rura pretiosa nec grande in foro faenus. Non te pudet, quisquis diuitiis astupes? Respice aedem mundum: nudos uidebis deos, omnia dantes, nihil habentes. Hunc tu pauperem putas an diis immortalibus similem, qui se fortuitis omnibus exuit? 6 Feliciorem tu Demetrium Pompeianum uocas, quem non puduit locupletiore esse Pompeio? Numerus illi cotidie seruorum uelut imperatori exercitus referebatur, cui iamdudum diuitiae esse debuerant duo uicarii et cella laxior. 7 At Diogeni seruus unicus fugit nec eum reducere, cum monstraretur, tanti putauit: "Turpe est, inquit, Manen sine Diogene posse uiuere, Diogenem sine Mane non posse." Videtur mihi dixisse: "Age tuum negotium, Fortuna, nihil apud Diogenem iam tui est: fugit mihi seruus, immo liber abii." 8 Familia petit uestiarium uictumque;

tot uentres audissimorum animalium tuendi sunt, emenda uestis et custodiendae rapacissimae manus et flentium detestantiumque ministeriis utendum. Quanto ille felicior, qui nihil ulli debet nisi cui facillime negat, sibi! 9 Sed, quoniam non est nobis tantum roboris, angustanda certe sunt patrimonia, ut minus ad iniurias fortunae simus expositi. Habiliora sunt corpora in bello quae in arma sua contrahi possunt quam quae superfunduntur et undique magnitudo sua uulneribus obicit; optimus pecuniae modus est, qui nec in paupertatem cadit lice procul a paupertate discedit.

IX.

1 Placebit autem haec nobis mensura si prius parsimonia placuerit, sine qua nec ullae opes sufficiunt nec ullae non satis patent, praesertim cum in uicino remedium sit et possit ipsa paupertas in diuitias se, aduocata frugalitate, conuertere. 2 Assuescamus a nobis remouere pompam et usus rerum, non ornamenta metiri. Cibus famem domet, potio sitim, libido qua necesse est fluat. Discamus membris nostris inniti, cultum uictumque non ad noua exempla componere, sed ut maiorum mores suadent. Discamus continentiam augere, luxuriam coercere, gloriam temperare, iracundiam lenire, paupertatem aequis oculis aspicere, frugalitatem colere, etiam si multos pudebit rei eius, desideriis naturalibus paruo parata remedia adhibere, spes effrenatas et animum in futura imminensem uelut sub uinculis habere, id agere, ut diuitias a nobis potius quam a fortuna petamus. 3 Non potest umquam tanta uarietas et iniquitas casuum ita depelli, ut non multum procellarum irruat magna armamenta pendentibus. Cogendae in artum res sunt, ut tela in uanum cadant, ideoque exsilia interim calamitatesque in remedium cessare et leuioribus incommodis grauiora sanata sunt. Vbi parum audit praecepta animus nec curari mollius potest, quidni consulatur, si et paupertas et ignominia et rerum euersio adhibetur? Malo malum opponitur. Assuescamus ergo cenare posse sine populo et seruis paucioribus seruire et uestes parare in quod inuentae sunt et habitare contractius. Non in cursu tantum circique certamine, sed in his spatiis uitae interius flectendum est. 4 Studiorum quoque, quae liberalissima impensa est, tamdiu rationem habet quamdiu modum. Quo innumerabiles libros et bibliothecas, quarum dominus uix tota uita indices perlegit? Onerat discentem turba, non instruit, multoque satius est paucis te auctoribus tradere quam errare per multos. 5 Quadraginta milia librorum Alexandriae arserunt. Pulcherrimum regiae opulentiae monumentum alius laudauerit, sicut et Liuius, qui elegantiae regum curaeque egregium id opus ait fuisse. Non fuit elegantia illud aut cura, sed studiosa luxuria, immo ne studiosa quidem, quoniam non in studium, sed in spectaculum comparauerant, sicut plerisque ignaris etiam puerilium litterarum libri non studiorum instrumenta, sed cenationum ornamenta sunt. Paretur itaque librorum quantum satis sit, nihil in apparatus. 6 (Honestius, inquis, huc se impensae quam in Corinthia pictasque tabulas effuderint.) Vitiosum est ubique quod nimium est. Quid habes cur ignoscas homini armaria e citro atque ebore captanti, corpora conquiriti aut ignotorum auctorum aut improbatorum et inter tot milia librorum oscitanti, cui uoluminum suorum frontes maxime placent titulique? 7 Apud desidiosissimos ergo uidebis quicquid orationum historiarumque est, tecto tenus exstructa loculamenta: iam enim, inter balnearia et thermas, bibliotheca quoque ut necessarium domus ornamentum expolitur. Ignoscerem plane, si studiorum nimia cupidine erraretur; nunc ista conquisita, cum imaginibus suis discripta, sacrorum opera ingeniorum in speciem et cultum parietum comparantur.

1 At in aliquod genus uitae difficile incidisti et tibi ignoranti uel publica fortuna uel priuata laqueum impegit, quem nec soluere possis nec rumpere. Cogita compeditos primo aegre ferre onera et impedimenta crurum; deinde, ubi non indignari illa, sed pati proposuerunt, necessitas fortiter ferre docet, consuetudo facile. Inuenies in quolibet genere uitae oblectamenta et remissiones et uoluptates, si uolueris mala putare leuia potius quam inuidiosa facere. 2 Nullo melius nomine de nobis natura meruit, quae, cum sciret quibus aerumnis nasceremur, calamitatum mollimentum consuetudinem inuenit, cito in familiaritatem grauissima adducens. Nemo duraret, si rerum aduersarum eandem uim assiduitas haberet quam primus ictus. 3 Omnes cum fortuna copulati sumus: aliorum aurea catena est ac laxa, aliorum arta et sordida, sed quid refert? Eadem custodia uniuersos circumdedit alligatique sunt etiam qui alligauerunt, nisi forte tu leuiorem in sinistra catenam putas. Alium honores, alium opes uinciunt; quosdam nobilitas, quosdam humilitas premit; quibusdam aliena supra caput imperia sunt, quibusdam sua; quosdam exsilia uno loco tenent, quosdam sacerdotia. Omnis uita seruitium est. 4 Assuescendum est itaque condicioni suae et quam minimum de illa querendum et quicquid habet circa se commodi apprehendendum: nihil tam acerbum est, in quo non aequus animus solacium inueniat. Exiguæ saepe areae in multos usus describentis arte patuerunt, et quamuis angustum pedem dispositio fecit habitabilem. Adhibe rationem difficultatibus: possunt et dura molliri et angusta laxari et grauia scite ferentes minus premere.

5 Non sunt praeterea cupiditates in longinquum mittendae, sed in uicinum illis egredi permittamus, quoniam includi ex toto non patiuntur. Relictis iis quae aut non possunt fieri aut difficulter possunt, prope posita speique nostrae alludentia sequamur, sed sciamus omnia aequè leuia esse, extrinsecus diuersas facies habentia, introrsus pariter uana. Nec inuideamus altius stantibus: quae excelsa uidebantur praecepta sunt.

6 Illi rursus quos sors iniqua in ancipiti posuit tutiores erunt superbiam detrahendo rebus per se superbis et fortunam suam quam maxime poterunt in planum deferendo. Multi quidem sunt quibus necessario haerendum sit in fastigio suo, ex quo non possunt nisi cadendo descendere; sed hoc ipsum testentur maximum onus suum esse, quod aliis graues esse cogantur, nec subleuatos se, sed suffixos. Iustitia, mansuetudine, humanitate, larga et benigna manu praeparent multa ad secundos casus praesidia, quorum spe securius pendeant. 7 Nihil tamen aequè nos ab his animi fluctibus uindicauerit quam semper aliquem incrementis terminum figere, nec fortunae arbitrium desinendi dare, sed ipsos multo quidem citra consistere. Sic et aliquae cupiditates animum acuent et finitae non in immensum incertumque producent.

XI.

1 Ad imperfectos et mediocres et male sanos hic meus sermo pertinet, non ad sapientem. Huic non timide nec pedetentim ambulandum est: tanta enim fiducia sui est, ut obuiam fortunae ire non dubitet nec umquam loco illi cessurus sit. Nec habet ubi illam timeat, quia non mancipia tantum possessionesque et dignitatem, sed corpus quoque suum et oculos et manum et quicquid cariorem uitam facit seque ipsum inter precaria numerat, uiuitque ut commodatus sibi et reposcentibus sine tristitia redditurus. 2 Nec ideo uilis est sibi, quia scit se suum non esse; sed omnia tam diligenter faciet, tam circumspecte, quam religiosus homo sanctusque solet tueri fidei commissa. 3 Quandoque autem reddere iubebitur, non queretur cum fortuna, sed dicet: “Gratias ago pro eo quod possedi habuique. Magna quidem res tuas mercede colui, sed, quia ita imperas, do, cedo gratus libensque. Si quid habere me tui uolueris etiamnunc, seruabo; si aliud placet, ego uero factum signatumque argentum, domum familiamque meam reddo, restituo.” Appellauerit natura, quae prior nobis creditit, et huic dicemus: “Recipe animum meliorem quam dedisti; non tergiuersor nec refugio. Paratum habes a uolente quod non sentienti dedisti: aufer.” 4 Reuerti unde ueneris quid graue est? Male uiuet quisquis nesciet bene mori. Huic itaque primum rei pretium detrahendum est et spiritus inter uilia numerandus. Gladiatores, ut ait Cicero, inuisos habemus, si omni modo uitam impetrare cupiunt; fauemus, si contemptum eius prae se ferunt. Idem euenire nobis scias: saepe enim causa moriendi est timide mori. 5 Fortuna illa, quae ludos sibi facit: “Quo, inquit, te reseruem, malum et trepidum animal? Eo magis conuulneraberis et confodieris, quia nescis praebere iugulum. At tu et uiues diutius et morieris expeditius, qui ferrum non subducta ceruice nec manibus oppositis, sed animose recipis.” 6 Qui mortem timebit, nihil umquam pro homine uiuo faciet; at qui sciet hoc sibi cum conciperetur statim condictum, uiuet ad formulam et simul illud quoque eodem animi robore praestabit, ne quid ex iis quae eueniunt subitum sit. Quicquid enim fieri potest quasi futurum sit prospiciendo malorum omnium impetus molliet, qui ad praeparatos exspectantesque nihil afferunt noui, securis et beata tantum spectantibus graues ueniunt. 7 Morbus est, captiuitas, ruina, ignis: nihil horum repentinum est. Sciebam in quam tumultuosum me contubernium natura clusisset. Totiens in uicinia mea conclamatatum est; totiens praeter limen immaturas exsequias fax cereusque praecessit; saepe a latere ruentis aedificii fragor sonuit; multos ex iis quos forum, curia, sermo mecum contraxerat, nox abstulit et iunctas sodalium manus copuatas interscidit: mirer ad me aliquando pericula accessisse, quae circa me semper errauerint? 8 Magna pars hominum est quae nauigatura de tempestate non cogitat. Numquam me in re bona mali pudebit auctoris: Publilius, tragicis comicisque uehementior ingeniis quotiens mimicas ineptias et uerba ad summam caueam spectantia reliquit, Inter multa alia cothurno, non tantum sipario fortiora et hoc ait:

Cuius potest accidere quod cuiquam potest.

Hoc si quis in medullas demiserit et omnia aliena mala, quorum ingens cotidie copia est, sic aspexerit tamquam liberum illis et ad se iter sit, multo ante se armabit quam petatur. Sero animus ad periculorum patientiam post pericula instruitur. 9 “Non putaui hoc futurum” et: “Vnquam tu hoc euentum credidisses?” Quare autem non? Quae sunt diuitiae quas non egestas et fames et mendicitas a tergo sequatur? quae dignitas, cuius non praetextam et augurale et lora patricia sordes comitentur et exprobratio notae et mille maculae et extrema contemptio? quod regnum est, cui non parata sit ruina et proculcatio et dominus et carnifex? nec magnis ista interuallis diuisa, sed horae momentum interest inter solium et aliena genua. 10 Scito ergo omnem condicionem uersabilem esse et quicquid in ullum incurrit posse in te quoque incurrere. Locuples es: numquid diuitior Pompeio? Cui cum Gaius, uetus cognatus, hopes nouus, aperuisset Caesaris domum ut suam cluderet, defuit panis, aqua. Cum tot flumina possideret in suo orientia, in suo cadentia, mendicauit stillicidia; fame ac siti periit in palatio cognati, dum illi heres publicum funus esurienti locat. 11 Honoribus summis functus es: numquid aut tam magnis aut tam insperatis aut tam uniuersis quam Seianus? Quo die illum senatus deduxerat, populus in frusta diuisit. In quem quicquid congeri poterat dii hominesque contulerant, ex eo nihil superfuit quod carnifex traheret. 12 Rex es: non ad Croesum te mittam, qui rogam suum et escendit iussus et exstingui uidit, factus non regno tantum, etiam morti suae superstes; non ad Iugurtham, quem populus romanus intra annum quam timuerat spectauit: Ptolemaeum Africae regem, Armeniae Mithridaten inter Gaianas custodias uidimus; alter in exilium missus est, alter ut meliore fide mitteretur optabat. In tanta rerum sursum ac deorsum euntium uersatione, si non quicquid fieri potest pro futuro habes, das in te uires rebus aduersis, quas infregit quisquis prior uidit.

XII.

1 Proximum ab his erit ne aut in superuacuis aut ex superuacuo laboremus, id est ne quae aut non possumus consequi concupiscamus aut adepti uanitatem cupiditatum nostrarum sero post multum sudorem intellegamus, id est ne aut labor irritus sit sine effectum aut effectus labore indignus. Fere enim ex his tristitia sequitur, si aut non successit aut successus pudet. 2 Circumcidenda concursatio, qualis est magnae parti hominum domos et theatra et fora pererrantium: alienis se negotiis offerunt, semper aliquid agentibus similes. Horum si aliquem exeuntem e domo interrogaueris: “Quo tu? quid cogitas?” respondebit tibi: “Non mehercules scio, sed aliquos uidebo, aliquid agam.” 3 Sine proposito uagantur, quaerentes negotia, nec quae destinauerunt agunt, sed in quae incucurrerunt. Inconsultus illis uanusque cursus est, qualis formicis per arbusta repentibus, quae in summum cacumen et inde in imum inanes aguntur. His plerique similem uitam agunt, quorum non immerito quis inquietam inertiam dixerit. 4 Quorundam quasi ad incendium currentium misereberis: usque eo impellunt obuios et se aliosque praecipitant, cum interim cucurrerunt aut salutaturi aliquem non resalutaturum aut funus ignoti hominis prosecuturi, aut ad iudicium saepe litigantis, aut ad sponsalia saepe nubentis, et lecticam assectati quibusdam locis etiam tulerunt. Dein, domum cum superuacua redeuntes lassitudine, iurant nescire se ipsos quare exierint, ubi fuerint, postero die erraturi per eadem illa uestigia. 5 Omnis itaque labor aliquo referatur, aliquo respiciat. Non industria inquietos, ut insanos falsae rerum imagines agitant: nam ne illi quidem sine aliqua spe mouentur; proritat illos alicuius rei species, cuius uanitatem capta mens non coarguit. 6 Eodem modo unumquemque ex his qui ad augendam turbam exeunt inanes et leues causae per urbem circumducunt, nihilque habentem in quod laboret lux orta expellit, et cum, multorum frustra liminibus illisus, nomenclatores persalutauit, a multis exclusus, neminem ex omnibus difficilius domi quam se conuenit. 7 Ex hoc malo dependet illud taeterrimum uitium, auscultatio et publicorum secretorumque inquisitio, et multarum rerum scientia quae nec tuto narrantur nec tuto audiuntur.

XIII.

1 Hoc secutum puto Democritum ita coepisse: “Qui tranquille uolet uiuere nec priuatim agat multa nec publice”, ad superuacua scilicet referentem: nam, si necessaria sunt, et priuatim et publice non tantum multa, sed innumerabilia agenda sunt, ubi uero nullum officium sollemne nos citat, inhibendae actiones. 2 Nam qui multa agit saepe fortunae potestatem sui facit; quam tutissimum est raro experiri, ceterum semper de illa cogitare et nihil sibi de fide eius promittere: “Nauigabo, nisi si quid inciderit” et: “Praetor fiam, nisi si quid obstiterit” et: “Negotiatio mihi respondebit, nisi si quid interuenerit.” 3 Hoc est quare sapienti nihil contra opinionem dicamus accidere: non illum casibus hominum excerpimus, sed erroribus, nec illi omnia ut uoluit cedunt, sed ut cogitauit. Imprimis autem cogitauit aliquid posse propositis suis resistere. Necesse est autem leuius ad animum peruenire destitutae cupiditatis dolorem, cui successum non utique promiseris.

XIV.

1 Faciles etiam nos facere debemus, ne nimis destinatis rebus indulgeamus, transeamusque in ea in quae nos casus deduxerit, nec mutationem aut consilii aut status pertimescamus, dummodo nos leuitas, inimicissimum quieti uitium, non excipiat. Nam et pertinacia necesse est anxia et misera sit, cui fortuna saepe aliquid extorquet, et leuitas multo grauior, nusquam se continens. Vtrumque infestum est tranquillitati, et nihil mutare posse et nihil pati. 2 Vtique animus ab omnibus externis in se reuocandus est: sibi confidat, se gaudeat, sua suspiciat, recedat quantum potest ab alienis, et se sibi applicet; damna non sentiat, etiam aduersa benigne interpretetur. 3 Nuntiato naufragio, Zenon noster, cum omnia sua audiret submersa: “Iubet, inquit, me fortuna expeditius philosophari.” Minabatur Theodoro philosopho tyrannus mortem, et quidem insepultam: “Habes, inquit, cur tibi placeas, hemina sanguinis in tua potestate est; nam quod ad sepulturam pertinet, o te ineptum, si putas mea interesse supra terram an infra putrescam.” 4 Canus Iulius, uir in primis magnus, cuius admirationi ne hoc quidem obstat quod nostro saeculo natus est, cum Gaio diu altercatus, postquam abeunti Phalaris ille dixit: “Ne forte inepta spe tibi blandiaris, duci te iussi. Gratias, inquit, ago, optime princeps.” 5 Quid senserit dubito; multa enim mihi occurrunt. Contumeliosus esse uoluit et ostendere quanta crudelitas esset, in qua mors beneficium erat? An exprobrauit illi cotidianam dementia? Agebant enim gratias et quorum liberi occisi et quorum bona ablata erant. An tamquam libertatem libenter accepit? Quicquid est, magno animo respondit. 6 Dicet aliquis: potuit post hoc iubere illum Gaius uiuere. Non timuit hoc Canus: nota erat Gaii in talibus imperiis fides. Credisne illum decem medios usque ad supplicium dies sine ulla sollicitudine exegisse? Verisimile non est quae uir ille dixerit, quae fecerit, quam in tranquillo fuerit. 7 Ludebat latrunculis. Cum centurio, agmen periturorum trahens, illum quoque excitari iuberet, uocatus numerauit calculos et sodali suo: “Vide, inquit, ne post mortem meam mentiaris te uicisse.” Tum, annuens centurioni: “Testis, inquit, eris uno me antecedere.” Lussisse tu Canum illa tabula putas? Illusit. 8 Tristes erant amici, talem amissuri uirum: “Quid maesti, inquit, estis? Vos quaeritis an immortales animae sint; ego iam sciam.” Nec desiit ueritatem in ipso fine scrutari et ex morte sua quaestionem habere. 9 Prosequebatur illum philosophus suus, nec iam procul erat tumultus in quo Caesari deo nostro fiebat cotidianum sacrum. Is: “Quid, inquit, Cane, nunc cogitas? aut quae tibi mens est? - Obseruare, inquit Canus, proposui illo uelocissimo momento an sensurus sit animus exire se.” Promisitque, si quid explorasset, circumitutum amicos et indicaturum quis esset animarum status. 10 Ecce in media tempestate tranquillitas, ecce animus aeternitate dignus, qui fatum suum in argumentum ueri uocat, qui, in ultimo illo gradu positus, exeuntem animam percontatur, nec usque ad mortem tantum, sed aliquid etiam ex ipsa morte discit: nemo diutius philosophatus est. Non raptim relinquetur magnus uir et cum cura dicendus: dabimus te in omnem memoriam, clarissimum caput, Gaianae cladis magna portio!

XV.

1 Sed nihil prodest priuatae tristitiae causas abiecisse: occupat enim nonnumquam odium generis humani, et occurrit tot scelerum feliciū turba. Cum cogitaueris quam sit rara simplicitas et quam ignota innocentia et uix umquam, nisi cum expedit, fides, et libidinis lucra damnaque pariter inuisa, et ambitio usque eo iam se suis non continens terminis ut per turpitudinem splendeat, agitur animus in noctem et, uelut euersis uirtutibus, quas nec sperare licet nec habere prodest, tenebrae oboriuntur. 2 In hoc itaque flectendi sumus, ut omnia uulgi uitia non inuisa nobis, sed ridicula uideantur, et Democritum potius imitemur quam Heraclitum: hic enim, quotiens in publicum processerat, flebat, ille ridebat; huic omnia quae agimus miseriae, illi ineptiae uidebantur. Eleuanda ergo omnia et facili animo ferenda: humanius est deridere uitam quam deplorare. 3 Adice quod de humano quoque genere melius meretur qui ridet illud quam qui luget: ille et spei bonae aliquid relinquit, hic autem stulte deflet quae corrigi posse desperat; et uniuersa contemplanti maioris animi est qui risum non tenet quam qui lacrimas, quando leuissimum affectum animi mouet et nihil magnum, nihil seuerum, ne miserum quidem ex tanto paratu putat. 4 Singula propter quae laeti ac tristes sumus sibi quisque proponat, et sciet uerum esse quod Bion dixit, omnia hominum negotia simillima initiis esse nec uitam illorum magis sanctam aut seueram esse quam conceptum. 5 Sed satius est publicos mores et humana uitia placide accipere, nec in risum nec in lacrimas excidentem; nam alienis malis torqueri aeterna miseria est, alienis delectari malis uoluptas inhumana. 6 Sicut est illa inutilis humanitas, flere, quia aliquis filium efferat, et frontem suam fingere, in suis quoque malis ita gerere se oportet, ut dolori tantum des quantum natura poscit, non quantum consuetudo. Plerique cum lacrimas fundunt ut ostendant, et totiens siccos oculos habent quotiens spectator defuit, turpe iudicantes non fieri cum omnes faciant: adeo penitus hoc se malum fixit, ex aliena opinione pendere, ut in simulationem etiam res simplicissima, dolor, ueniat.

1 Sequetur pars quae solet non immerito contristare et in sollicitudinem adducere. Vbi bonorum exitus mali sunt, ubi Socrates cogitur in carcere mori, Rutilius in exilio uiuere, Pompeius et Cicero clientibus suis praebere ceruicem, Cato ille, uirtutum uiua imago, incumbens gladio, simul de se ac de re publica palam facere, necesse est torqueri tam iniqua praemia fortunam persoluere. Et quid sibi quisque tunc speret, cum uideat pessima optimos pati? 2 Quid ergo est? Vide quomodo quisque illorum tulerit et, si fortes fuerunt, ipsorum illos animo desidera, si muliebriter et ignaue perierunt, nihil periit. Aut digni sunt quorum uirtus tibi placeat, aut indigni quorum desideretur ignauia. Quid enim est turpius quam si maximi uiri timidos fortiter moriendo faciunt? 3 Laudemus totiens dignum laudibus et dicamus: “Tanto fortior! tanto felicior! Omnes effugisti casus, liuorem, morbum; existi ex custodia; non tu dignus mala fortuna diis nisus es, sed indignus in quem iam aliquid fortuna posset.” Subducentibus uero se et in ipsa morte ad uitam respectantibus manus iniciendae sunt. 4 Neminem flebo laetum, neminem flentem: ille lacrimas meas ipse abstersit, hic suis lacrimis effecit ne ullis dignus sit. Ego Herculem fleam quod uiuus uritur, aut Regulum quod tot clauis configitur, aut Catonem quod uulnera iterat sua? Omnes isti leui temporis impensa inuenerunt quomodo aeterni fierent, et ad immortalitatem moriendo uenerunt.

XVII.

1 Est et illa sollicitudinum non mediocris materia, si te anxie componas nec ullis simpliciter ostendas, qualis multorum uita est, ficta, ostentationi parata: torquet enim assidua obseruatio sui et deprehendi aliter ac solet metuit. Nec umquam cura soluimur, ubi totiens nos aestimari putamus quotiens aspici. Nam et multa incidunt quae inuitos denudant, et, ut bene cedat tanta sui diligentia, non tamen iucunda uita aut secura est semper sub persona uiuentium. 2 At illa quantum habet uoluptatis sincera et per se inornata simplicitas, nihil obtendens moribus suis! Subit tamen et haec uita contemptus periculum, si omnia omnibus patent: sunt enim qui fastidiant quicquid propius adierunt. Sed nec uirtuti periculum est ne admota oculis reuilescat, et satius est simplicitate contemni quam perpetua simulatione torqueri. Modum tamen rei adhibeamus: multum interest, simpliciter uiuas an neglegenter.

3 Multum et in se recedendum est: conuersatio enim dissimilium bene composita disturbat et renouat affectus et quicquid imbecillum in animo nec percuratum est exulcerat. Miscenda tamen ista et alternanda sunt, solitudo et frequentia. Illa nobis faciet hominum desiderium, haec nostri, et erit altera alterius remedium: odium turbae sanabit solitudo, taedium solitudinis turba.

4 Nec in eadem intentione aequaliter retinenda mens est, sed ad iocos deuocanda. Cum puerulis Socrates ludere non erubescibat, et Cato uiuo laxabat animum curis publicis fatigatum, et Scipio triumphale illud ac militare corpus mouebat ad numeros, non molliter se infringens, ut nunc mos est etiam incessu ipso ultra muliebrem mollitiam fluentibus, sed ut antiqui illi uiri solebant inter lusum ac festa tempora uirilem in modum tripudiare, non facturi detrimentum etiam si ab hostibus suis spectarentur. 5 Danda est animis remissio: meliores acrioresque requieti surgent. Vt fertilibus agris non est imperandum (cito enim illos exhauriet numquam intermissa fecunditas), ita animorum impetus assiduus labor franget; uires recipient paulum resoluti et remissi. Nascitur ex assiduitate laborum animorum hebetatio quaedam et languor.

quandam uoluptatem haberet lusus iocusque. Quorum frequens usus omne animis pondus omnemque uim eripiet: nam et somnus refectioni necessarius est, hunc tamen si per diem noctemque continues, mors erit. Multum interest, remittas aliquid an soluas. 7 Legum conditores festos instituerunt dies ut ad hilaritatem homines publice cogere, tamquam necessarium laboribus interponentes temperamentum, et magni iudicii uiri quidam sibi menstruas certis diebus ferias dabant, quiddam nullum non diem inter otium et curas diuidebant. Qualem Pollionem Asinium oratorem magnum meminimus, quem nulla res ultra decumam detinuit: ne epistulas quidem post eam horam legebat, ne quid nouae curae nasceretur, sed totius diei lassitudinem duabus illis horis ponebat. Quidam medio die interiunxerunt et in postmeridianas horas aliquid leuioris operae distulerunt. Maiores quoque nostri nouam relationem post horam decumam in senatu fieri uetabant. Miles uigilias diuidit, et nox immunis est ab expeditione redeuntium. 8 Indulgendum est animo dandumque subinde otium, quod alimenti ac uirium loco sit.

Et in ambulationibus apertis uagandum, ut caelo libero et multo spiritu augeat attollatque se animus; aliquando uectatio iterque et mutata regio uigorem dabunt, conuictusque et liberalior potio. Nonnumquam et usque ad ebrietatem ueniendum, non ut mergat nos, sed ut deprimat: eluit enim curas et ab imo animum mouet et, ut morbis quibusdam, ita tristitiae medetur, Liberque non ob licentiam linguae dictus est inuentor uini, sed quia liberat seruitio curarum animum et asserit uegetatque et audacior in omnes conatus facit. 9 Sed, ut libertatis, ita uini salubris moderatio est. Solonem Arcesilanke indulsisse uino eredunt; Catoni ebrietas obiecta est: facilius efficient crimen honestum quam turpem Catonem. Sed nec saepe faciendum est, ne animus malam consuetudinem ducat, et aliquando tamen in exultationem libertatemque extrahendus tristisque sobrietas remouenda paulisper. 10 Nam, siue graeco poetae credimus, “aliquando et insanire iucundum est”; siue Platoni, “frustra poeticas fores compos sui pepulit”; siue Aristoteli, “nullum magnum ingenium sine mixtura dementiae fuit”. 11 Non potest grande aliquid et super ceteros loqui nisi mota mens. Cum uulgaria et solita contempsit instinctuque sacro surrexit excelsior, tunc demum aliquid cecinit grandius ore mortali. Non potest sublime quicquam et in arduo positum contingere, quamdiu apud se est: desciscat oportet a solito et efferatur et mordeat frenos et rectorem rapiat suum, eoque ferat quo per se timuisset escendere.

12 Habes, Serene carissime, quae possint tranquillitatem tueri, quae restituere, quae subrepentibus uitiiis resistant. Illud tamen scito, nihil horum satis esse ualidum rem imbecillam seruantibus, nisi intenta et assidua cura circumit animum labentem.

1. Quaesisti a me, Lucili, quid ita, si prouidentia mundus ageretur, multa bonis uiris mala acciderent. Hoc commodius in contextu operis redderetur, cum praeesse uniuersis prouidentiam probaremus et interesse nobis deum; sed quoniam a toto particulam reuelli placet et unam contradictionem manente lite integra soluere, faciam rem non difficilem, causam deorum agam. 2. Superuacuum est in praesentia ostendere non sine aliquo custode tantum opus stare nec hunc siderum coetum discursumque fortuiti impetus esse, et quae casus incitat saepe turbari et cito arietare, hanc inoffensam uelocita tem procedere aeternae legis imperio tantum rerum terra marique gestantem, tantum clarissimorum luminum et ex disposito relucantium; non esse materiae errantis hunc ordinem nec quae temere coierunt tanta arte pendere ut terrarum grauissimum pondus sedeat inmotum et circa se properantis caeli fugam spectet, ut infusa uallibus maria molliant terras nec ullum incrementum fluminum sentiant, ut ex minimis seminibus nascantur ingentia. 3. Ne illa quidem quae uidentur confusa et incerta, pluuias dico nubesque et elisorum fulminum iactus et incendia ruptis montium uerticibus effusa, tremores labantis soli aliaque quae tumultuosa pars rerum circa terras mouet, sine ratione, quamuis subita sint, accidunt, sed suas et illa causas habent non minus quam quae alienis locis conspecta miraculo sunt, ut in mediis fluctibus calentes aquae et noua insularum in uasto exilientium mari spatia. 4. Iam uero si quis obseruauerit nudari litora pelago in se recedente eademque intra exiguum tempus operiri, credet caeca quadam uolutione modo contrahi undas et introrsum agi, modo erumpere et magno cursu repetere sedem suam, cum interim illae portionibus crescunt et ad horam ac diem subeunt ampliores minoresque, prout illas lunare sidus elicit, ad cuius arbitrium oceanus exundat. Suo ista tempori reseruentur, eo quidem magis quod tu non dubitas de prouidentia sed quereris. 5. In gratiam te reducam cum dis aduersus optimos optimis. Neque enim rerum natura patitur ut umquam bona bonis noceant; inter bonos uiros ac deos amicitia est conciliante uirtute. Amicitiam dico? immo etiam necessitudo et similitudo, quoniam quidem bonus tempore tantum a deo differt, discipulus eius aemulatorque et uera progenies, quam parens ille magnificus, uirtutum non lenis exactor, sicut seueri patres, durius educat. 6. Itaque cum uideris bonos uiros acceptosque dis laborare sudare, per arduum escendere, malos autem lasciuires et uoluptatibus fluere, cogita filiorum nos modestia delectari, uernularum licentia, illos disciplina tristiori contineri, horum alii audaciam. Idem tibi de deo liqueat: bonum uirum in deliciis non habet, experitur indurat, sibi illum parat.

II.

1. 'Quare multa bonis uiris aduersa eueniunt?' Nihil accidere bono uiro mali potest: non miscentur contraria. Quemadmodum tot amnes, tantum superne deiectionum imbrium, tanta medicamentorum uis fontium non mutant saporem maris, ne remittunt quidem, ita aduersarum impetus rerum uiri fortis non uertit animum: manet in statu et quidquid euenit in suum colorem trahit; est enim omnibus externis potentior. 2. Nec hoc dico, non sentit illa, sed uincit, et alioqui quietus placidusque contra incurrentia attollitur. Omnia aduersa exercitationes putat. Quis autem, uir modo et erectus ad honesta, non est laboris adpetens iusti et ad officia cum periculo promptus? Cui non industrio otium poena est? 3. Athletas uidemus, quibus uirum cura est, cum fortissimis quibusque configere et exigere ab iis per quos certamini praeparantur ut totis contra ipsos uiribus utantur; caedi se uexarique patiuntur et, si non inueniunt singulos pares, pluribus simul obiciuntur. 4. Marcet sine aduersario uirtus: tunc apparet quanta sit quantumque polleat, cum quid possit patientia ostendit. Scias licet idem uiris bonis esse faciendum, ut dura ac difficilia non reformident nec de fato querantur, quidquid accidit boni consulant, in bonum uertant; non quid sed quemadmodum feras interest. 5. Non uides quanto aliter patres, aliter matres indulgeant? illi excitari iubent liberos ad studia obeunda mature, feriatis quoque diebus non patiuntur esse otiosos, et sudorem illis et interdum lacrimas excutiunt; at matres fouere in sinu, continere in umbra uolunt, numquam contristari, numquam flere, numquam laborare. 6. Patrium deus habet aduersus bonos uiros animum et illos fortiter amat et 'operibus' inquit 'doloribus damnis exagitantur, ut uerum colligant robur.' Languent per inertiam saginata nec labore tantum sed motu et ipso sui onere deficiunt. Non fert ullum ictum inlaesa felicitas; at cui adsidua fuit cum incommodis suis rixa, callum per iniurias duxit nec ulli malo cedit, sed etiam si cecidit de genu pugnat. 7. Miraris tu, si deus ille bonorum amantissimus, qui illos quam optimos esse atque excellentissimos uult, fortunam illis cum qua exerceantur adsignat? Ego uero non miror, si aliquando impetum capiunt spectandi magnos uiros conluctantis cum aliqua calamitate.

8. Nobis interdum uoluptati est, si adulescens constantis animi inruentem feram uenabulo excepit, si leonis incursum interritus pertulit, tantoque hoc spectaculum est gratius quanto id honestior fecit. Non sunt ista quae possint deorum in se uultum conuertere, puerilia et humanae oblectamenta leuitatis: 9. ecce spectaculum dignum ad quod respiciat intentus operi suo deus, ecce par deo dignum, uir fortis cum fortuna mala compositus, utique si et prouocauit. Non uideo, inquam, quid habeat in terris Iuppiter pulchrius, si <eo> conuertere animum uelit, quam ut spectet Catonem iam partibus non semel fractis stantem nihilo minus inter ruinas publicas rectum. 10. 'Licet' inquit 'omnia in unius dicionem concesserint, custodiantur legionibus terrae, classibus maria, Caesarianus portas miles obsideat, Cato qua exeat habet: una manu latam libertati uiam faciet. Ferrum istud, etiam ciuili bello purum et innoxium, bonas tandem ac nobiles edet operas: libertatem quam patriae non potuit Catoni dabit. Aggredere, anime, diu meditatam opus, eripe te rebus humanis. Iam Petreius et Iuba concucurrerunt iacentque alter alterius manu caesi, fortis et egregia fati conuentio, sed quae non deceat magnitudinem nostram: tam turpe est Catoni mortem ab ullo petere quam uitam.' 11. Liqueat mihi cum magno spectasse gaudio deos, dum ille uir, acerrimus sui uindex, alienae saluti consulit et instruit discedentium fugam, dum studia etiam nocte ultima tractat, dum gladium sacro pectori infigit, dum uiscera spargit et illam sanctissimam animam indignamque quae ferro contaminaretur manu educit. 12. Inde crediderim fuisse parum certum et efficax uulnus: non fuit dis immortalibus satis spectare Catonem semel; retenta ac reuocata uirtus est ut in difficiliore parte se ostenderet; non enim tam magno animo mors initur quam repetitur. Quidni libenter spectarent alumnum suum tam claro ac memorabili exitu euadentem? mors illos consecrat quorum exitum et qui timent laudant.

III.

1. Sed iam procedente oratione ostendam quam non sint quae uidentur mala: nunc illud dico, ista quae tu uocas aspera, quae aduersa et abominanda, primum pro ipsis esse quibus accidunt, deinde pro uniuersis, quorum maior dis cura quam singulorum est, post hoc uolentibus accidere ac dignos malo esse si nolint. His adiciam fato ista sic ire et eadem lege bonis euenire qua sunt boni. Persuadebo deinde tibi ne umquam boni uiri miserearis; potest enim miser dici, non potest esse. 2. Difficillimum ex omnibus quae proposui uidetur quod primum dixi, pro ipsis esse quibus eueniunt ista quae horremus ac tremimus. ‘Pro ipsis est’ inquis ‘in exilium proici, in egestatem deduci, liberos coniugem ecferre, ignominia adfici, debilitari?’ Si miraris haec pro aliquo esse, miraberis quosdam ferro et igne curari, nec minus fame ac siti. Sed si cogitaueris tecum remedii causa quibusdam et radi ossa et legi et extrahi uenas et quaedam amputari membra quae sine totius perniciie corporis haerere non poterant, hoc quoque patieris probari tibi, quaedam incommoda pro iis esse quibus accidunt, tam mehercules quam quaedam quae laudantur atque adpetuntur contra eos esse quos delectauerunt, simillima cruditatibus ebrietatibusque et ceteris quae necant per uoluptatem. 3. Inter multa magnifica Demetri nostri et haec uox est, a qua recens sum; sonat adhuc et uibrat in auribus meis: ‘nihil’ inquit ‘mihi uidetur infelicius eo cui nihil umquam euenit aduersi.’ Non licuit enim illi se experiri. Vt ex uoto illi fluxerint omnia, ut ante uotum, male tamen de illo di iudicauerunt: indignus uisus est a quo uinceretur aliquando fortuna, quae ignauissimum quemque refugit, quasi dicat: ‘quid ergo? istum mihi aduersarium adsumam? Statim arma summittet; non opus est in illum tota potentia mea, leui comminatione pelletur, non potest sustinere uultum meum. Alius circumspiciatur cum quo conferre possimus manum: pudet congredi cum homine uinci parato. 4. ‘ Ignominiam iudicat gladiator cum inferiore componi et scit eum sine gloria uinci qui sine periculo uincitur. Idem facit fortuna: fortissimos sibi pares quaerit, quosdam fastidio transit. Contumacissimum quemque et rectissimum adgreditur, aduersus quem uim suam intendat: ignem experitur in

Mucio, paupertatem in Fabricio, exilium in Rutilio, tormenta in Regulo, uenenum in Socrate, mortem in Catone. Magnum exemplum nisi mala fortuna non inuenit. 5. Infelix est Mucius quod dextra ignes hostium premit et ipse a se exigit erroris sui poenas, quod regem quem armata manu non potuit exusta fugat? Quid ergo? felicior esset, si in sinu amicae foueret manum? 6. Infelix est Fabricius quod rus suum, quantum a re publica uacauit, fodit? quod bellum tam cum Pyrrho quam cum diuitiis gerit? quod ad focum cenat illas ipsas radices et herbas quas in repurgando agro triumphalis senex uulsit? Quid ergo? felicior esset, si in uentrem suum longinqui litoris pisces et peregrina aucupia congereret, si conchyliis superi atque inferi maris pigritiam stomachi nausiantis erigeret, si ingenti pomorum strue cingeret primae formae feras, captas multa caede uenantium? 7. Infelix est Rutilius quod qui illum damnauerunt cau sam dicent omnibus saeculis? quod aequiore animo passus est se patriae eripi quam sibi exilium? quod Sullae dictatori solus aliquid negauit et reuocatus tantum non retro cessit et longius fugit? ‘Viderint’ inquit ‘isti quos Romae deprehendit felicitas tua: uideant largum in foro sanguinem et supra Seruilianum lacum (id enim proscriptionis Sullanae spoliarium est) senatorum capita et passim uagantis per urbem percussorum greges et multa milia ciuium Romanorum uno loco post fidem, immo per ipsam fidem trucidata; uideant ista qui exulare non possunt.’ 8. Quid ergo? felix est L. Sulla quod illi descendenti ad forum gladio summouetur, quod capita sibi consularium uirorum patitur ostendi et pretium caedis per quaestorem ac tabulas publicas numerat? Et haec omnia facit ille, ille qui legem Corneliam tulit. 9. Veniamus ad Regulum: quid illi fortuna nocuit quod illum documentum fidei, documentum patientiae fecit? Figunt cutem clauis et quocumque fatigatum corpus reclinauit, uulneri incumbit; in perpetuam uigiliam suspensa sunt lumina: quanto plus tormenti tanto plus erit gloriae. Vis scire quam non paeniteat hoc pretio aestimasse uirtutem? refige illum et mitte in senatum: eandem sententiam dicet. 10. Felicior ergo tu Maecenatem putas, cui amoribus anxio et morosae uxoris cotidiana repudia deflenti somnus per symphoniarum cantum ex longinquo lene resonantium quaeritur? Mero se licet sopiat et aquarum fragoribus auocet et mille uoluptatibus mentem anxiam fallat, tam uigilabit in pluma quam ille in cruce; sed illi solacium est pro honesto dura tolerare et ad causam a patientia respicit, hunc uoluptatibus marcidum et felicitate nimia laborantem magis iis quae patitur uexat causa patiendi. 11. Non usque eo in possessionem generis humani uitia uenerunt ut dubium sit an electione fati data plures nasci Reguli quam Maecenates uelint; aut si quis fuerit qui audeat dicere Maecenatem se quam Regulum nasci maluisse, idem iste, taceat licet, nasci se Terentiam maluit. 12. Male tractatum Socratem iudicas quod illam potionem publice mixtam non aliter quam medicamentum immortalitatis obduxit et de morte disputauit usque ad ipsam? Male cum illo actum est quod gelatus est sanguis ac paulatim frigore inducto uenarum uigor constitit? 13. Quanto magis huic inuidendum est quam illis quibus gemma ministratur, quibus exoletus omnia pati doctus exsectae uirilitalis aut dubiae suspensam auro niuem diluit! Hi quidquid biberunt uomitu remetientur tristes et bilem suam regustantes, at ille uenenum laetus et libens hauriet. 14. Quod ad Catonem pertinet, satis dictum est, summamque illi felicitatem contigisse consensus hominum fatebitur, quem sibi rerum natura delegit cum quo metuenda conlideret. 'Inimicitiae potentium graues sunt: opponatur simul Pompeio, Caesari, Crasso. Graue est a deterioribus honore anteiri: Vatinio postferatur. Graue est ciuilibus bellis interesse: toto terrarum orbe pro causa bona tam infeliciter quam pertinaciter militet. Graue est manus sibi adferre: faciat. Quid per haec consequar? ut omnes sciant non esse haec mala quibus ego dignum Catonem putauit.'

IV.

1. Prosperae res et in plebem ac uilia ingenia deueniunt; at calamitates terroresque mortalium sub iugum mittere proprium magni uiri est. Semper uero esse felicem et sine morsu animi transire uitam ignorare est rerum naturae alteram partem. 2. Magnus uir es: sed unde scio, si tibi fortuna non dat facultatem exhibendae uirtutis? Descendisti ad Olympia, sed nemo praeter te: coronam habes, uictoriam non habes; non gratulor tamquam uiro forti, sed tamquam consulatum praeturamue adepto: honore auctus es. 3. Idem dicere et bono uiro possum, si illi nullam occasionem difficilius casus dedit in qua [una] uim animi sui ostenderet: ‘miserum te iudico, quod numquam fuisti miser. Transisti sine aduersario uitam; nemo sciet quid potueris, ne tu quidem ipse.’ Opus est enim ad notitiam sui experimento; quid quisque posset nisi temptando non didicit. Itaque quidam ipsi ultro se cessantibus malis optulerunt et uirtuti iturae in obscurum occasionem per quam enitesceret quaesierunt. 4. Gaudent, inquam, magni uiri aliquando rebus aduersis, non aliter quam fortes milites bello; Triumphum ego murmillonem sub Ti. Caesare de raritate munerum audiui querentem: ‘quam bella’ inquit ‘aetas perit!’ Auida est periculi uirtus et quo tendat, non quid passura sit cogitat, quoniam etiam quod passura est gloriae pars est. Militares uiri gloriantur uulneribus, laeti fluentem meliori casu sanguinem ostentant: idem licet fecerint qui integri reuertuntur ex acie, magis spectatur qui saucius redit. 5. Ipsi, inquam, deus consulit quos esse quam honestissimos cupit, quotiens illis materiam praebet aliquid animose fortiterque faciendi, ad quam rem opus est aliqua rerum difficultate: gubernatorem in tempestate, in acie militem intellegas. Vnde possum scire quantum aduersus paupertatem tibi animi sit, si diuitiis diffuis? Vnde possum scire quantum aduersus ignominiam et infamiam odiumque populare constantiae habeas, si inter plausus senescis, si te inexpugnabilis et inclinatione quadam mentium pronus fauor sequitur? Vnde scio quam aequo animo laturus sis orbitatem, si quoscumque sustulisti uides? Audiui te, cum alios consolareris: tunc conspexissem, si te ipse consolatus esses, si te ipse dolere uetuisses. 6. Nolite, obsecro uos, expauescere ista quae di immortales uelut stimulos admouent animis: calamitas uirtutis occasio est. Illos merito quis dixerit miseros qui nimia felicitate torpescunt, quos uelut in mari lento tranquillitas iners detinet: quidquid illis inciderit, nouum ueniet. 7. Magis urgent saeua inexpertos, graue est tenerae ceruici iugum; ad suspicionem uulneris tiro pallescit, audacter ueteranus cruorem suum spectat, qui scit se saepe uicisse post sanguinem. Hos itaque deus quos probat, quos amat, indurat recognoscit exercet; eos autem quibus indulgere uidetur, quibus parcere, molles uenturis malis seruat. Erratis enim si quem iudicatis exceptum: ueniet <et> ad illum diu felicem sua portio; quisquis uidetur dimissus esse dilatus est. 8. Quare deus optimum quemque aut mala ualetudine aut luctu aut aliis incommodis adficit? quia in castris quoque periculosa fortissimis imperantur: dux lectissimos mittit qui nocturnis hostes adgrediantur insidiis aut explorent iter aut praesidium loco deiciant. Nemo eorum qui exeunt dicit 'male de me imperator meruit', sed 'bene iudicauit'. Idem dicant quicumque iubentur pati timidis ignauisque flebilis: 'digni uisi sumus deo in quibus experiretur quantum humana natura posset pati.' 9. Fugite delicias, fugite eneruantem felicitatem qua animi permadescunt et, nisi aliquid interuenit quod humanae sortis admoneat, <marcent> uelut perpetua ebrietate sopiti. Quem specularia semper ab adflatu uindicauerunt, cuius pedes inter fomenta subinde mutata tepuerunt, cuius cenationes subditus et parietibus circumfusus calor temperauit, hunc leuis aura non sine periculo stringet. 10. Cum omnia quae excesserunt modum noceant, periculosissima felicitatis intemperantia est: mouet cerebrum, in uanas mentem imagines euocat, multum inter falsum ac uerum mediae caliginis fundit. Quidni satius sit perpetuam infelicitatem aduocata uirtute sustinere quam infinitis atque inmodicis bonis rumpi? lenior ieiunio mors est, cruditate dissiliunt. 11. Hanc itaque rationem di sequuntur in bonis uiris quam in discipulis suis praeceptores, qui plus laboris ab iis exigunt in quibus certior spes est. Numquid tu inuisos esse Lacedaemoniis liberos suos credis, quorum experiuntur indolem publice uerberibus admotis? Ipsi illos patres adhortantur ut ictus flagellorum fortiter perferant, et laceros ac semianimes rogant, perseuerent uulnera praebere uulneribus. 12. Quid mirum, si dure generosos spiritus deus temptat? numquam uirtutis molle documentum est. Verberat nos et lacerat fortuna: patiamur. Non est saeuitia, certamen est, quod <quo> saepius adierimus, fortiores erimus: solidissima corporis pars est quam frequens usus agitauit. Praebendi fortunae sumus, ut contra illam ab ipsa duremur: paulatim nos sibi pares faciet, contemptum periculorum adsiduitas periclitandi dabit. 13. Sic sunt nauticis corpora ferendo mari dura, agricolis manus tritae, ad excutienda tela militares lacerti ualent, agilia sunt membra cursoribus: id in quoque solidissimum est quod exercuit. Ad contemnendam patientiam malorum animus patientia peruenit; quae quid in nobis efficere possit scies, si aspexeris quantum nationibus nudis et inopia fortioribus labor praestet. 14. Omnes considera gentes in quibus Romana pax desinit, Germanos dico et quidquid circa Histrum uagarum gentium occurrat: perpetua illos hiemps, triste caelum premit, maligne solum sterile sustentat; imbrem culmo aut fronde defendunt, super durata glacie stagna persultant, in alimentum feras captant. 15. Miseri tibi uidentur? nihil miserum est quod in naturam consuetudo perduxit; paulatim enim uoluptati sunt quae necessitate coeperunt. Nulla illis domicilia nullaeque sedes sunt nisi quas lassitudo in diem posuit; uilis et hic quaerendus manu uictus, horrenda iniquitas caeli, intacta corpora: hoc quod tibi calamitas uidetur tot gentium uita est. 16. Quid miraris bonos uiros, ut confirmentur, concuti? non est arbor solida nec fortis nisi in quam frequens uentus incursat; ipsa enim uexatione constringitur et radices certius figit: fragiles sunt quae in aprica ualle creuerunt. Pro ipsis ergo bonis uiris est, ut esse interriti possint, multum inter formidolosa uersari et aequo animo ferre quae non sunt mala nisi male sustinenti.

1. Adice nunc quod pro omnibus est optimum quemque, ut ita dicam, militare et edere operas. Hoc est propositum deo quod sapienti uiro, ostendere haec quae uulgus adpetit, quae reformidat, nec bona esse nec mala; apparebit autem bona esse, si illa non nisi bonis uiris tribuerit, et mala esse, si tantum malis inrogauerit. 2. Detestabilis erit caecitas, si nemo oculos perdiderit nisi cui eruendi sunt; itaque careant luce Appius et Metellus. Non sunt diuitiae bonum; itaque habeat illas et Elius leno, ut homines pecuniam, cum in templis consecrauerint, uideant et in fornice. Nullo modo magis potest deus concupita traducere quam si illa ad turpissimos defert, ab optimis abigit. 3. 'At iniquum est uirum bonum debilitari aut configi aut alligari, malos integris corporibus solutos ac delicatos incedere.' Quid porro? non est iniquum fortes uiros arma sumere et in castris pernoctare et pro uallo obligatis stare uulneribus, interim in urbe securos esse praecisos et professos inpudicitiam? Quid porro? non est iniquum nobilissimas uirgines ad sacra facienda noctibus excitari, altissimo somno inquinatas frui? 4. Labor optimos citat: senatus per totum diem saepe consulitur, cum illo tempore uilissimus quisque aut in campo otium suum oblectet aut in popina lateat aut tempus in aliquo circulo terat. Idem in hac magna re publica fit: boni uiri laborant, inpendunt, inpenduntur, et uolentes quidem; non trahuntur a fortuna, sequuntur illam et aequant gradus; si scissent, antecessissent. 5. Hanc quoque animosam Demetri fortissimi uiri uocem audisse me memini: 'hoc unum' inquit 'de uobis, di immortales, queri possum, quod non ante mihi notam uoluntatem uestram fecistis; prior enim ad ista uenissem ad quae nunc uocatus adsum. Vultis liberos sumere? uobisillos sustuli. Vultis aliquam partem corporis? sumite: non magnam rem promitto, cito totum relinquam. Vultis spiritum? quidni nullam moram faciam quo minus recipiatis quod dedisti? A uolente feretis quidquid petieritis. Quid ergo est? maluissem offerre quam tradere. Quid opus fuit auferre? accipere potuistis; sed ne nunc quidem auferetis, quia nihil eripitur nisi retinenti.' 6. Nihil cogor, nihil patior inuitus, nec seruio deo sed assentior, eo quidem magis quod scio omnia certa et in aeternum dicta lege decurrere. 7. Fata nos ducunt et quantum cuique temporis restat prima nascentium hora disposuit. Causa pendet ex causa, priuata ac publica longus ordo rerum trahit: ideo fortiter omne patiendum est quia non, ut putamus, incidunt cuncta sed ueniunt. Olim constitutum est quid gaudeas, quid fleas, et quamuis magna uideatur uarietate singulorum uita distingui, summa in unum uenit: accipimus peritura perituri. 8. Quid itaque indignamur? quid querimus? ad hoc parati sumus. Utatur ut uult suis natura corporibus: nos laeti ad omnia et fortes cogitemus nihil perire de nostro. Quid est boni uiri? praebere se fato. Grande solacium est cum uniuerso rapi; quidquid est quod nos sic uiuere, sic mori iussit, eadem necessitate et deos alligat. Inreuocabilis humana pariter ac diuina cursus uehit: ille ipse omnium conditor et rector scripsit quidem fata, sed sequitur; semper paret, semel iussit. 9. 'Quare tamen deus tam iniquus in distributione fati fuit ut bonis uiris paupertatem et uulnera et acerba funera adscriberet?' Non potest artifex mutare materiam: ~hoc passa est~. Quaedam separari a quibusdam non possunt, cohaerent, indiuidua sunt. Languida ingenia et in somnum itura aut in uigiliam somno simillimam inertibus nectuntur elementis: ut efficiatur uir cum cura dicendus, fortiore fato opus est. Non erit illi planum iter: sursum oportet ac deorsum eat, fluctuetur ac nauigium in turbido regat. Contra fortunam illi tenendus est cursus; multa accident dura, aspera, sed quae molliat et conplanet ipse. Ignis aurum probat, miseria fortes uiros. 10. Vide quam alte escendere debeat uirtus: scies illi non per segura uadendum.

Ardua prima uia est et quam uix mane recentes enituntur equi; medio est altissima caelo, unde mare et terras ipsi mihi saepe uidere sit timor et pauida trepidet formidine pectus.
ultima prona uia est et eget moderamine certo;
tunc etiam quae me subiectis excipit undis, ne ferar in praeceps, Tethys solet ima uereri.

11. Haec cum audisset ille generosus adulescens, 'placet' inquit 'uia, escendo; est tanti per ista ire casuro.' Non desinit acrem animum metu territare:

utque uiam teneas nulloque errore traharis, per tamen aduersi gradieris cornua tauri Haemoniosque arcus uiolentique ora leonis.

Post haec ait: 'iunge datos currus: his quibus deterreri me putas incitor; libet illic stare ubi ipse Sol trepidat.' Humilis et inertis est tuta sectari: per alta uirtus it.

VI.

1. ‘Quare tamen bonis uiris patitur aliquid mali deus fieri?’ Ille uero non patitur. Omnia mala ab illis remouit, scelera et flagitia et cogitationes improbas et auida consilia et libidinem caecam et alieno imminentem auaritiam; ipsos tuetur ac uindicat: numquid hoc quoque aliquis a deo exigit, ut bonorum uirorum etiam sarcinas seruet? Remittunt ipsi hanc deo curam: externa contemnunt. 2. Democritus diuitias proiecit, onus illas bonae mentis existimans: quid ergo miraris, si id deus bono uiro accidere patitur quod uir bonus aliquando uult sibi accidere? Filios amittunt uiri boni: quidni, cum aliquando et occidant? In exilium mittuntur: quidni, cum aliquando ipsi patriam non repetituri relinquant? Occiduntur: quidni, cum aliquando ipsi sibi manus adferant? 3. Quare quaedam dura patiuntur? ut alios pati doceant; nati sunt in exemplar. Puta itaque deum dicere: ‘quid habetis quod de me queri possitis, uos quibus recta placuerunt? Aliis bona falsa circumdedi et animos inanes uelut longo fallacique somnio lusi: auro illos et argento et ebore adornaui, intus boni nihil est. 4. Isti quos pro felicibus aspicias, si non qua occurrunt sed qua latent uideris, miseri sunt, sordidi turpes, ad similitudinem parietum suorum extrinsecus culti; non est ista solida et sincera felicitas: crusta est et quidem tenuis. Itaque dum illis licet stare et ad arbitrium suum ostendi, nitent et inponunt; cum aliquid incidit quod disturbet ac detegat, tunc apparet quantum altae ac uerae foeditatis alienus splendor absconderit. 5. Vobis dedi bona certa mansura, quanto magis uersauerit aliquis et undique inspexerit, meliora maioraque; permisi uobis metuenda contemnere, cupiditates fastidire; non fulgetis extrinsecus, bona uestra introrsus obuersa sunt. Sic mundus exteriora contempsit spectaculo sui laetus. Intus omne posui bonum; non egere felicitate felicitas uestra est. 6. “At multa incidunt tristia horrenda, dura toleratu.” Quia non poteram uos istis subducere, animos uestros aduersus omnia armaui: ferte fortiter. Hoc est quo deum antecedatis: ille extra patientiam malorum est, uos supra patientiam. Contemnite paupertatem: nemo tam pauper uiuit quam natus est. Contemnite dolorem: aut soluetur aut soluet. Contemnite mortem: quae uos aut finit aut transfert. Contemnite fortunam: nullum illi telum quo feriret animum dedi. 7. Ante omnia caui ne quis uos teneret inuitos; patet exitus: si pugnare non uultis, licet fugere. Ideo ex omnibus rebus quas esse uobis necessarias uolui nihil feci facilius quam mori. Prono animam loco posui: ~trahitur~ adtendite modo et uidebitis quam breuis ad libertatem et quam expedita ducat uia. Non tam longas in exitu uobis quam intransitibus moras posui; alioqui magnum in uos regnum fortuna tenuisset, si homo tam tarde moreretur quam nascitur. 8. Omne tempus, omnis uos locus doceat quam facile sit renuntiare naturae et munus illi suum inpingere; inter ipsa altaria et sollemnes sacrificantium ritus, dum optatur uita, mortem condiscite. Corpora opima taurorum exiguo concidunt uulnere et magnarum uirium animalia humanae manus ictus inpellit; tenui ferro commissura ceruicis abrumpitur, et cum articulus ille qui caput collumque committit incisus est, tanta illa moles corrui. 9. Non in alto latet spiritus nec utique ferro eruendus est; non sunt uulnere penitus inpresso scrutanda praecordia: in proximo mors est. Non certum ad hos ictus destinaui locum: quacumque uis peruium est. Ipsum illud quod uocatur mori, quo anima discedit a corpore, breuius est quam ut sentiri tanta uelocitas possit: siue fauces nodus elisit, siue spiramentum aqua praecluserit, siue in caput lapsos subiacentis soli duritia comminuit, siue haustus ignis cursum animae remeantis interscidit, quidquid est, properat. Ecquid erubescitis? quod tam cito fit timetis diu!’

The Biography

The Death of Seneca by Luca Giordano, 1684. In 65 AD, Seneca was caught up in the aftermath of the Pisonian conspiracy, a plot to kill Nero. Although it is unlikely that he was guilty, he was ordered by Nero to kill himself. He followed tradition by severing several veins in order to bleed to death, and his wife Pompeia Paulina attempted to share his fate.

INTRODUCTION TO SENECA by John W. Basore

SPRUNG from the rich and talented Spanish family of the Annaei, Lucius Annaeus Seneca, second son of Seneca the rhetorician, became the most important public and literary figure at Rome in the age of Nero. His mother was Helvia, a lady of native intelligence, some culture, and many virtues. An elder brother, Novatus, known after his adoption as Gallio, was governor of Achaia under Claudius, and survives in Christian annals (Acts xviii. 12-17) with undeserved odium as the Roman official before whom the apostle Paul was arraigned. Mela, the younger brother, of more retiring disposition, but rated by his father as the ablest of the three, lives only as the father of a famous son — the epic poet Lucan, whose precocious and flamboyant powers marked him out as the prodigy of his distinguished, but ill-fated, family, of which no chief member survived the catastrophe of the Pisonian conspiracy. Lucan, his father, and both his uncles were all objects of Nero's vengeance.

The career of Seneca himself was marked by spectacular shifts of fortune, amid which he appears a puzzling and at times a pathetic figure — the victim alike of imperial hostility and favour. Born at Corduba about 4 B.C., he was brought to Rome while still a child in arms. There, carefully nurtured and broadly trained in rhetoric and philosophy, he entered upon the senatorial career and gained the quaestorship probably under Tiberius. By his eloquence in the Senate, he is said to have aroused the jealousy of Caligula and to have escaped death only because, it was averred, he was already doomed by ill-health to die. Of his ill-health we hear much in his writings, but he outlived Caligula and missed no opportunity to take pitiless revenge upon him with his pen. Under Claudius he fell upon actual disaster. Through the agency of the empress Messalina, Seneca, now established as a man of letters and, apparently, of fashion, was accused of an intrigue with the notorious Julia Livilla, sister of Caligula, whom her uncle promptly upon his accession had recalled from exile, and both were banished. After he had spent eight weary and fretful years in dismal Corsica, during which, however, he found some solace in writing and study, Agrippina, now the wife of Claudius, seemed his recall in A.D. 49, and raised him to the post of tutor to her young son, the future emperor Nero. A year later he was praetor. From this time Seneca's fortunes were linked with those of Nero. He grew in honour, wealth, and power, and for five years after Nero's accession was, along with Burrus, the virtuous old praetorian, the emperor's acknowledged confidant and guide. But gradually his influence weakened, and after the death of Burrus in A.D. 62 he sought unavailingly for obscurity in retirement. Three years later, charged with complicity in the conspiracy of Piso, he was forced to commit suicide, and met death with dignity and Stoic fortitude.

The special significance of Seneca is, in brief, that he revived the subject of philosophy in Latin literature, spiritualized and humanized Stoicism, and became the exponent of a new style, that exploited the short sentence, rhetoric, and declamation. The artificialities of his pointed style have found many critics, both early and late. Caligula called his speeches — not now extant — “prize declamations, sand without lime,” the archaist Gellius condemns his influence, and Fronto censures his literary affectations. Quintilian with truer discernment indicts more severely his taste than his methods, for it is in the excesses of rhetoric that he most often offends. That he was the most brilliant writer, as well as the most independent thinker, of his day few will now deny.

In philosophy Seneca's interests were purely ethical. He was a bold, but inconsistent, moralist — a preacher rather than an exemplar of Stoic virtue. His discourses are, in the end, Stoic sermons, informal in structure, lacking too often the marks of ordered presentation, but usually effective in the quickness of their appeal. While ostensibly an adherent of Stoic materialism, he shows the independence of an eclectic and becomes particularly noteworthy in his conception of deity and the kindred doctrine of the brotherhood of man, in both of which he went far beyond his times. Although, utilizing the Stoic doctrine of a Unity out of a plurality of gods (as, while there are many virtues, Virtue is one), he causes confusion by his terminology, yet he verges constantly toward the representation of God as a moral and spiritual being, a beneficent Providence, instinct with fatherly regard for the human race. Closely linked with this conception is a bitter condemnation of gladiatorial contests, slavery, and any form of cruelty of man to fellow man.

Seneca was a voluminous writer of both prose and poetry. Besides some epigrams, ten extant tragedies are associated with his name, though one, the Octavia, appears from internal evidence to be unmistakably the work of a later poet. The other nine plays are unique and notable specimens of Roman tragedy adapted from Greek originals, of which, however, they appear to be little more than rhetorical travesties. But their influence upon the dramatic literature of Italy, France, and England, though distorting, was profound. His extant prose works comprise a significant group of writings that are moral in purpose, a quasi-scientific treatise — the Naturales Quaestiones in seven books — and the Apocolocyntosis, a satirical skit on the apotheosis of the emperor Claudius. To the group of moral writings belong the twenty books of the Epistulae Morales, a unit by reason of their form, and a series of more formal compositions, which, developed with vague consciousness of an argumentative second person, are likewise united by a similarity of form. These quasi-dialogues are the twelve treatises grouped together in the Ambrosian manuscript under the title Dialogia and traditionally known as Dialogues, the De Clementia, originally in three books, and the seven books of the De Beneficiis, all of which it has been convenient for the purpose in hand to combine under the comprehensive title of Moral Essays.

The chronology of Seneca's writings is in most cases doubtful. Of the essays included in this volume, the De Providentia and the De Constantia are associated by Waltz with the early years of the exile (A.D. 41-42), but equally wise conjecture will place them later. When Seneca wrote the De Ira, Caligula was undoubtedly dead, and Novatus, to whom it was dedicated, had not yet been adopted by Junius Gallio. It shows bitter hostility to Caligula, and may well have been written when the memory of his excesses was fresh. By reason of the allusion to the age of Nero (i. 9.1), the De Clementia may be definitely assigned to the year A.D. 55 or 56.

Concerning Lucilius, to whom the De Providentia, the Naturales Quaestiones, and the Epistulae are addressed, Seneca himself supplies incidental information. A native, probably, of Naples or Pompeii, by his own energy he attained equestrian rank and was appointed procurator of Sicily. He was a student of philosophy, with a leaning toward Epicureanism, and a writer of both prose and poetry. His name has gained some importance in literary history as the conjectural author of the Aetna, a philosophical poem ascribed in the manuscripts to Virgil. Younger than Seneca, he seems to have maintained with him a long friendship of peculiar loyalty. If, as Waltz supposes, the De Providentia belongs to the early years of the exile, Seneca's own fortunes may well have called forth the questioning of Lucilius concerning the ways of Providence which gave excuse for the essay. In treating his subject Seneca elaborates the thesis that no evils can befall the good man, by interpreting adversities, not as evils, but as wholesome opportunities provided by a beneficent deity for the testing of virtue. The discourse closes with a passage of restrained rhetoric, giving Stoic approval of suicide as a reasonable departure from trials too great.

Annaeus Serenus, the young friend, or relative, of Seneca to whom are addressed the De Constantia and two other treatises, is said to have been prefect of Nero's nightwatchmen (praefectus Neronis vigilum). He is mentioned by Tacitus as an intimate friend of Seneca, who with a show of loyalty screened the indiscretions of Nero in his affair with Acte. Seneca had for him the deepest affection and counselled him in philosophy with fatherly solicitude. He apparently was an Epicurean. Though much younger than Seneca, he died first, probably in A.D. 62. Seneca descants upon his premature death in one of his Letters (lxiii. 14), and refers feelingly to the bitterness of his grief.

The essay itself is exceptional in its orderly arrangement. After affirming the superiority of the Stoics over other schools of philosophy, the author takes as his text the Stoic paradox that the wise man can receive no injury. This he proceeds to relieve by an exposition of the true inwardness of the wise man's fortunes. Setting up a distinction between "injury" and "insult," he shows seriatim the invulnerability of the wise man to both, and after conditioned praise of Epicurus's view, closes the discussion with a justification of the Stoic position.

Of Seneca's brother Novatus, to whom the De Ira is addressed, something has already been said. He was much beloved for his amiability, was an eminent declaimer, if we are to trust Jerome, and at an unknown date was adopted by the rhetorician Junius Gallio. He reached the consulship, was governor of Achaia in A.D. 52, and died by his own hand in 66.

Seneca used authorities assiduously, and for the elaborate disquisition On Anger had several available; Sotion, his master in philosophy, had written περί ὀργῆς, and may well have been one. Though the arrangement of the essay is noticeably faulty, and its style is fervid with rhetoric, the wealth of its illustrative matter gives it unusual interest. Book I. deals with the outward aspects, the harm, and the various definitions of anger; Book II. discusses its origin, its nature, and its remedies; Book III. repeats much that has been said before, and continues with the new topic of how to check the anger of others.

The De Clementia, addressed to the emperor Nero, was written just after the young prince had finished his eighteenth year, and was intended to guide him toward the ideal of a merciful and popular ruler. It gives interesting evidence of Seneca's own public wisdom, of his tendency to flattery, and of his method in dealing with his difficult pupil. Unfortunately, more than half of the work has been lost.

The most important manuscript of the Dialogues is the Codex Ambrosianus, at Milan, belonging to the tenth or the eleventh century. This has been designated A, and the readings of its later correctors, A -. An additional manuscript available for the De Ira is the Codex Laurentianus (designated L) of the twelfth or thirteenth century. The best manuscript of the De Clementia is the Codex Nazarianus (designated N) in the Palatine collection of the Vatican. This belongs to the eighth or ninth century. Two others of the twelfth century are the Codex Amplonianus at Erfurt (designated A), which is not complete, and the Codex Parisinus 8542 (designated T). In the critical notes O is used to designate a consensus of N, A, and other principal manuscripts. For the complete apparatus the editions of Hermes and Hosius may be consulted.

The texts adopted for translation are, for the Dialogues, that of Hermes, Leipzig, 1905, for the De Clementia, that of Hosius, Leipzig, 1900. Except minor changes in punctuation and orthography, divergencies from these have been duly recorded in the critical notes.
